LONDON:

PRINTED FOR GALE AND FENNER, PATERNOSTER ROW.

1816.

W. Flint, Printer, Old Bailey, London.

TO THE PUBLIC.

IN preparing the present Work, the object has been to combine, upon a correspondent scale, and within a moderate compass, an exposition of all the known Terms, and general Principles of Law and Equity, without entering into a diffuse detail of the various abstract points which have arisen from the discussion of those principles, in different cases.

IN the performance of this undertaking, the most ancient and learned Interpreters of the Law, upon whose labours the larger Law Dictionaries are obviously founded, have been minutely examined; the Statutes have also been strictly attended to, and the best Authorities relied on.

UNDER these circumstances, it is presumed, that the volume now offered to public notice, will be found, upon examination, to be eminently useful, as a portable and convenient book of reference; and the more so, as it contains an accurate exposition of a very great variety of words, terms, and rules, not to be found in any other Dictionary on the same subject, now extant.

ABANDONMENT

AB, When the name of a place begins with Ab, it denotes that either the place belonged to some abbey, or that an abbey was founded there: thus Abingdon in Berkshire took that name soon after Cissa king of the West Saxons had founded the abbey there; for before it was called Cloveshoe. Cowel. Blount.

ABACOT, the cap of state used in old time by our English kings, wrought up in the figure of two crowns. Chron. Ang. 1463. Spelman. Cowel.

ABACTORS, (Abactores, ab abigendo,) were stealers of cattle or beasts by herds or great numbers. Blount. Cowel.

ABACUS, (Arithmetic) or the art of numbering, from the abacus or table on which dust was strewed, and whereon the ancients set down their figures: hence also abacista an arithmetician. Cowel. Blount.

ABANDONMENT, (on marine insurances) is the exercise of a right, which the assured has, to call upon the underwriters or insurers to accept of what is saved, and to pay the full amount of the insurance, as if a total loss had happened, where the matter insured is, by some of the usual perils of the sea, become of little value.

Abandonment is as ancient, as the contract of insurance itself, and must be total and not partial of any particular part of the property insured. 1 Ter. Rep. 608. 2 Bur. 697. 1211.

And in all cases the insured has a right to elect whether he will abandon or not. Park. 144. 2 Bur. 697. 1211.

For this purpose as soon as the insured receives accounts of such a loss as entitles him to abandon, and not before, 2 Bur. 1211. he must in the very first instance make his election whether he will abandon or not; and if he abandon, he must give the underwriters notice in a reasonable time, otherwise he will be taken to waive his right to abandon, and can never after recover for a total loss. 1 Ter. Rep. 608.

But if the insured hearing that his ship is much disabled, and has put into port to repair, express his desire to the underwriters to abandon, and be dissuaded from it by them, and they order the repairs to be made, they are liable to the owner for all the subsequent damage occasioned by that refusal, though it amount to the whole sum insured, for they have by their own act superseded the necessity of notice. 2 Ter. Rep. 407.

The insured may abandon to the underwriters, and call upon them for a total loss, if the damage exceed half the value, if the voyage be absolutely lost or not worth pursuing, if further expence be necessary, and the insurer will not engage at all events to bear that expence, though it should exceed the value or fail of success; but he cannot abandon, unless at some period or other of the voyage there has been a total loss. 1 Ter. Rep. 187. Park. c. 9.

Also if neither the thing insured, nor the voyage be lost, and the damage does not amount to a moiety of the value, he shall not be allowed to abandon. 2 Bur. 1211. 3 Atk. 195. 2 Bur. 683.

And the right to abandon, must depend on the nature of the case, at the time of the action brought, or at the time of the offer to abandon: therefore where there was a capture and re-capture, and it was stated that at the time of the offer to abandon, the peril was over, as the ship was safe in port, and had suffered no damage, the court held that the insured had no right to abandon. 2 Bur. 1198. 1 Black. Rep. 276.

When the underwriter has discharged his insurance, and the abandonment is made, be stands in the place of the insured, and is entitled to all the advantages resulting from that situation, in case the ship or property is not totally lost, or is afterwards restored by recapture. Park. c. 9. 1 Vez. 98.

ABANDUN, (Abandonum) any thing sequestered, proscribed: abandon, i. e. in bannum res missa: a thing bann'd or denounced as forfeited and lost: to abandon or desert or forsake as lost and gone. Cowel.

ABARNARE, to detect and discover to a magistrate any secret crime: from the Saxon abarian, to uncover, disclose or make bare. Cowel B.

ABARSTICK, insatiable, from a privative, and the Saxon Berstan, disrumpi.

ABATE, seems to be derived from the French word abattre destruere, prosternere, to fell, break down or destroy, and is used in various senses in the law; as for instance, to abate a castle or fort is to beat it down, old Nat. Brev. 45 St. Westm. 1. c. 17. abattre maison, to ruin or cast down a house and level it with the ground. Cowel. Blount.

ABATEMENT of Freehold. An abatement in this sense is where a person dies seised of an inheritance, and before the heir or devisee enters, a stranger who has no right makes entry and gets possession of the freehold: this entry of him is called an abatement, and he himself is denominated an abator: this expression of abating which is derived from the French, is a figurative expression, and signifies to quash, bear down, or destroy: and in the present sense denotes that the rightful possession or freehold of the heir or devisee is overthrown by the intrusion of a stranger. 3 Black. Com. 168. 1 Inst. 277. Comyns' Dig. Abatement.

This abatement of a freehold is somewhat similar to an immediate occupancy in a state of nature, which is effected by taking possession of the land the same instant that the prior occupant by his death relinquishes it. But this, however agreeable to natural justice, considering man merely as an individual, is diametrically opposite to the law of society, and particularly the law of England; which, for the preservation of public peace, hath prohibited as far as possible all acquisitions by mere occupancy; and hath directed that lands on the death of the present possessor, shall immediately vest either in some person expresely named and appointed by the deceased as his devisee, or, on default of such appointment, in such of his next relations as the law hath selected and pointed out as his natural representative or heir: every entry therefore of a mere stranger, by way of intervention between the ancestor and heir or person next entitled, which keeps the heir or devisee out of possession, is one of the highest injuries to the rights of real property. 3 Black. Com. 168, 9.

ABATEMENT of Nuisances, is a species of remedy allowed by the law to the party injured by a Nuisance, to abate, destroy, remove, or put an end to the same by his own act: thus whatsoever unlawfully annoys or doth damage to another is, in contemplation of law, a nuisance, and such nuisance may be abated, that is, taken away or removed by the party aggrieved thereby, so as he commits no riot in the doing of it: as for instance, if a house or wall is erected so near to mine that it stops my ancient lights, which is a private nuisance, I may enter my neighbour's land and peaceably pull it down: or if a new gate be erected across the public highway, which is a common nuisance, any of the king's subjects passing that way may cut it down and destroy it. And the reason why the law allows this private and summary method of doing one's self justice, is because injuries of this kind, which obstruct or annoy such things as are of daily convenience and use, require an immediate remedy, and cannot wait for the slow progress of the ordinary forms of justice. 5 Rep. 101. 9 Rep. 55. Salk. 459. Cro. Car. 184. 3 Black. Com. 5. 6.

ABATEMENT amongst Legatees. If a man bequeaths specific legacies and pecuniary legacies, and the estate falls short to answer the pecuniary legacies, they shall abate in proportion, but nothing shall be abated from the specific legacies. 2 Fonbl. 369.

And as all legatees are on a deficiency of assets to be paid in proportion, so if the executor pay one of the legatees, yet the rest shall make him refund in proportion: and even if one of the legatees get a decree for his legacy and is paid, and afterwards the assets appear to have been originally deficient, yet the legatee who received shall refund: but if the executor had at first enough to pay all the legacies, and afterwards by his wasting the assets they became deficient, in such case the legatee who has received his legacy shall not be compelled to refund, but shall retain the advantage of his legal diligence, which the other legatees neglected by not bringing their suit in time, before the wasting by the executor: whereas if the other legatees had commenced their suit before such waste committed, they might have met with the like success, et vigilantibus non dormientibus jura, Ibid. 371. 1 Pere. Wms. 595. 2 Pere. Wms. 146. 2 Bro. Ch. Rep. 305.

But though a legatee who has received his legacy may if the assets were originally deficient, be called upon by other legatees to refund, yet he is not bound to refund at the suit of the executor unless the payment by the executor was compulsory. 2 Vern. 205. or the deficiency created by debts which did not appear till after payment of the legacy, 1 Ch. Ca. 136. but the executor will in such case be personally liable. 1 Ch. Rep. 71. but if there be a deficiency to pay debts, a legatee who has received his legacy, is in all cases liable to refund to creditors. 1 Vern. 94. 2 Vent. 360. Anst. 113. 2 Fonbl. 371, 2.

Although specific legatees are not to abate in proportion with other legatees, where there is a deficiency to pay debts, yet they must abate proportionably amongst themselves, if there be a deficiency of general assets. 2 Fonbl. 372. 2 P. W. 381. So where the testator doth bequeath any thing in satisfaction or recompence of some injury by him done; this legacy is not to abate any more than a specific legacy. 2 Fonbl. 373.

But if a man devise specific and pecuniary legacies, and afterwards says that such pecuniary legacies shall come out of all his personal estate, or words tantamount, or if there is no other personal estate than the specific legacies, they must be intended to be subject to the pecuniary legacies, otherwise he must mock the legatees. Ibid.

ABATEMENT, Plea of. This is a plea put in by the defendant, in which he alleges some matter to shew that he ought not to be impleaded; or if impleaded, not in the manner and form in which he is, therefore praying that the writ or plaint do abate, that is, cease against him for that time. 1 Bac. Ab. Comyns' Dig. Co. Lit. 303.

The order of pleading in abatement is, 1*st. To the jurisdiction of the court*; 2*ndly, To the ability of the plaintiff or person impleading*; and 3*dly, To the ability of the defendant or person impleaded. Co. Lit.* 303. Comyn's Dig. tit. Ab.

And as these pleas enter not into the merits of the cause, but merely tend to delay it, it is provided by statute 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16. s. 11. that no dilatory plea shall be received in any court of record, unless the party by affidavit prove the truth of it, or shew some probable matter to induce the court to believe the fact true.

Pleas in abatement must be pleaded within four days (the first and last both inclusive) after the declaration is delivered, if it be in term time; but if in vacation, or within less than four days from the end of the term, it may be pleaded (there being a special imparlance) within the first four days inclusive of the next term, as of the preceding term; and within that time it must be filed, (for it is not sufficient that it be delivered only) whether a rule to plead be given or not: Sunday is reckoned as one of the four days, though it happens to be the last, in which case the plea must be filed on the Saturday. Cro. Jac. 82. 3 Ter. Rep. 185. Imp. K. B. 239. C. P. 319. 1 Ter. Rep. 277. 689. 5 Ter. Rep. 210. 3 Ter. Rep. 642.

It is not an issuable plea within an order for time to plead upon the usual terms, and it is inadmissible after the rule for pleading is expired, or after forfeiture of a bail bond. 1 Bar. 59. Barnes 331. 2 Salk. 519.

I. Plea to the jurisdiction of the court.

The pleas to the jurisdiction are, 1st, that the land is ancient demesne; 2dly, within a county palatine; 3dly, within the cinque ports; 4thly, that the defendant has privilege, 1. as a peer; 2. as baron of the cinque ports; 3d. as officer to a court; 4. as a tinner; 5. as a minter only impleadable before the warden of the mint.

A plea to the jurisdiction of the court must be put in before any imparlance, for by craving leave to imparl, the defendant submits to the jurisdiction. 1 Bac. Abr. Gilb. Hist. C. P. 187. 22 H. 6. 7. Barnes 331.

But after a general special imparlance, that is, an imparlance with a general saving of all manner of exceptions, it seems that it may be pleaded; but the granting of such an imparlance is discretionary in the court, and it cannot be had but by special motion. 2 Black. Rep. 1094. 1 Lut. 46. 12 Mod. 529. Hard. 365. Raym. 84.

The plea must run that the defendant comes in propriâ personâ, and not by his attorney, for he cannot plead by attorney without leave of the court first had, which leave acknowledges the jurisdiction; for an attorney is an officer of the court; and if defendant puts in a plea by an officer of the court, that plea must be supposed to be put in by leave of the court. Bac. Abr. 2.

Every plea to the jurisdiction must state another jurisdiction. Doct. pl. 234. Cowper 172. 1 Ves. 203. 2 Ves. 357.

And the defendant must make but half defence, for if he makes full defence quando et ubi curia consideraverit, he submits to the jurisdiction of the court. Co. Lit. 127. Gilb. Hist. C. P. Vent. 334.

II. Plea to the ability of the plaintiff or person impleading.

(1. Outlawry in the plaintiff.) Outlawry in the plaintiff is a good plea in abatement, for he thereby loses his liberam legem, and is out of the protection of the law; for not having been answerable to the law, he ought not to have any privilege or benefit from it. 1 Bac. Abr. 3.

It cannot be pleaded without concluding prout patet per recordum. 3 Lev. 29. Com. 307.

And an express averment that the plaintiff and person outlawed are the same person is not necessary: it is sufficient if the identity be apparent on the face of the plea. Lut. 40. 2 Mod. 267.

This disability is only pleadable when the plaintiff sues in his own right, for if he sues in right of another, as executor, administrator, or as mayor with his community, outlawry shall not disable him, because the person whom he represents has the privilege of the law. Co. Lit. 128. Gilb. Hist. C. P. 197. 1 Vern. 184.

When outlawry is pleaded in abatement the plaintiff shall not reply that the outlawry is erroneous, for it is good until reversed. Lut. 36. Ord. in Ch. 97.

Outlawry in a court of inferior jurisdiction cannot be pleaded in any of the courts of Westminster, for the party is only ousted of his law within the inferior jurisdiction. Gilb. Hist. C. P. 200. 1 Bac. Abr. 4.

Outlawry in a personal action, it is said goes only to personal actions in respect of the person; but outlawry in felony goes to actions generally. Doct. pl. 397. and see 33 Hen. 6. 19.

But outlawry does not entirely abate the writ, but is only a temporary impediment that disables the plaintiff from proceeding; for upon obtaining a charter of pardon, or reversing the outlawry, he is restored to his law, and can oblige the defendant to plead to the same writ. Co. Lit. 128. Doct. pl. 397. Ord in Ch. 97.

Outlawry may be pleaded always in abatement, but not in bar, unless the cause of action be forfeited. Co. Lit. 128 b. Doct. pl. 395.

And in pesonal actions where the damages are uncertain, outlawry cannot be pleaded in bar; but in actions on the case, where the debt to avoid the wager of law is turned into damages, outlawry may be pleaded in bar; for it was vested in the king by the forfeiture as a debt certain and due to the outlaw, and the turning it into damages, whereby it becomes uncertain, shall not divest the king of what he once lawfully possessed. 2 Lutw. 1604. 3 Lev. 29. 2 Vent. 281. 3 Leon. 197. Cro. Eliz. 204. Owen 22.

And outlawry may be pleaded in bar after it has been pleaded in abatement, because the thing is forfeited, and the plaintiff has no right to recover. 10 Hen. 7. 11. 42 Lutw. 1604.

(2. Excommunication of plaintiff.) It may be pleaded in abatement, that the demandant or plaintiff is excommunicated. Co. Lit. 134. a. 1. Lut. 17.

And it is a good plea, though he sue in the right of another, as an executor, or administrator: for an excommunicate person is excluded from the body of the church, and is incapable to lay out the goods of the deceased to pious uses. Gilb. Hist. C. P. 203. Co. Lit. 134.

But excommunication is no plea to the next friend of an infant. Pr. Reg. Ch. 278.

And excommunication is no plea on a qui tam action, because it is for example, and the statute having given the informer an ability to sue, and not excepted excommunicated or other disabled persons from the liberty of informing, he is enabled to sue by the statute, notwithstanding the censures of the church. 12 Co. 61. Gilb. Hist. C. P. 203.

And the plea of excommunication must state the precise time when the party was excommunicated. Cro. Jac. 82.

A replication that the plaintiff has appealed from the sentence, is bad, for the sentence is in force until it is repealed; and while it is in force the plaintiff cannot appear in any of the courts of justice, but he may reply that he is absolved, for then his disability is taken away: the absolution must, however, appear to have been by the same bishop who excommunicated, or by the archbishop upon appeal. Bro. Excom. 3. 3 Bulst. 72. 20 Hen. 6. 25. Gilb. Hist. C. P. 204. Moor 775.

(3. Attainder of plaintiff.) It may also be pleaded in abatement that the plaintiff is attainted of treason or felony, or attainted in a præmunire, for all such persons are incapable of bringing any action, being wholly out of the protection of the law. Co. Lit. 128, 129, 130, a. Noy 1. Show, 55. Gilb. Hist. C. P. 205. Doct. pl. 10.

(4. Popish Recusancy by plaintiff.) This disability of popish recusancy convict is by virtue of the statute 3 Jac. 1. c. 5. which disables the party to all intents and purposes whatsoever, except when he sues for lands, tenements, leases, annuities, rents, and hereditaments, or the issues or profits thereof, which are not to be seized into the hands of the king, his heirs, or successors: but this cannot be pleadable now against those papists who (see PAPISTS) may conform to statute 18 Geo. 3. c. 60. and statute 31 Geo. 3. c. 32. and take the oaths therein prescribed.

(5. Alien enemy.) An alien enemy cannot have any action real, personal, or mixt, nor can an alien friend have any, except a personal action. Dyer 2. b. 19 Ed. 4. 6. 6 Ter. Rep. 23.

And it may be pleaded in abatement that he is an alien, if he be an alien enemy. Co. Lit. 129. Ast. Entries, 11.

And as he cannot sue directly in his own name, so neither can he sue indirectly in the name of a trustee. 6 Ter. Rep. 23.

But this is to be understood as to cases where he sues proprio jure, for it is said that he may sue en autre droit, as executor or the like: nor is it any exception that the testator was an alien enemy, unless it be shown that he was so at the time of his death: and if he were resident here when he died, the court will intend that he was so with the king's licence. Skin. 370. Lutw. 35.

So if an alien comes here under letters of safe conduct, or resides here by the king's licence, he is to be deemed an alien friend, and the plea of alienage will be unavailable. Ld. Raym. 282. Salk. 46. Lutw. 34.

Therefore in pleading alienage, it is necessary to aver that the plaintiff is an alien enemy, and when so pleaded, the plaintiff, if he has a protection, must state it in his replication whether it be general or special, and should conclude with an averment. 2 Str. 1082. 2 Atk. 397. Fortes. 221. 1 Mod. 150. Lutw. 34. Ld. Raym. 282.

Alienage may be pleaded either in bar or in abatement; but with this difference, that alienage can be only pleaded in abatement to an alien in league, but may be pleaded in bar to an alien enemy, because the cause of action is forfeited to the king, as a reprisal for the damages committed by the dominion in enmity. Bro. Den. 10. Co. Lit. 129 b. 1 Bac. Abr. tit. Ab.

(6. Coverture of plaintiff.) It may also be pleaded to the person of the plaintiff, that she is a feme covert, and, as it seems, that she is the wife of the defendant: and to a plea of coverture the plaintiff may reply that she is sole, which shall be tried by the country. Co. Lit. 132. b. Ast. Ent. 9, 10. 17 Ed. III. 20 b. 1 Bro. Ent. 63.

So in an action by husband and wife, it may be pleaded that she was not covert at the day of the writ purchased; or that they never were married; or that there was a divorce between them, and so she is not his wife; but it is no plea if there be a divorce, though the divorce only be a mensa et thoro. Th. Dig. L. 11. c. 2. s. 8. Sho. 50. 39 Ed. 3. 32. 1 Comyns 12.

So it is no plea if the queen consort sues alone. Co. Lit. 133. a.

Also if a feme sole plaintiff, after the verdict, and before the day in bank, takes husband, she shall have judgment, and the defendant cannot plead this coverture, for he has no day to plead it at. Cro. Car. 132. 1 Buls. 5.

(7. Want of proper parties.) It may be pleaded in abatement to the ability of the demandant or plaintiff, if he sues alone when others ought to join with him in the action, that another who ought to join is not named, such as 1. a coparcener; 2. a joint-tenant; 3. a tenant in common; 4. a joint-contractor, co-obligor, or copartner; 5. an executor suing without naming the others; and 6. the like of administrators.

But if a man plead that the plaintiff hath nothing but jointly with another, who is alive and not named, he ought to shew by his plea where he is living: for the issue shall be joined upon the life, and not upon the death, which comes on the part of the tenant or defendant. 22 Ed. 3. 8. 1 Comyns 13.

It may also be pleaded in abatement to the person of the plaintiff, that there never was any such person in rerum natura, or that there never was one of the plaintiffs in rerum natura, or that there never was such an one in rerum natura as A, who is named another defendant; and no such person in rerum natura as to one abates the whole writ: but that there was no such person at the day of the original purchased, is ill, for it ought to be alleged that he was dead before the original purchased, or that there never was such a person in rerum natura. Bro. 25. 70 Th. Dig. l. 11. Ast. Ent. 10. Bendl. pl. 196. Com. 18, 19.

(8. Misnomer of the plaintiff.) The defendant may also plead misnomer of the plaintiff if his christian name be mistaken, or if his christian name be omitted, though he be known by the name by which he sues: for he can have but one name of baptism, and ought to sue by his true name, and not by the name by which he is known. Th. Dig. L. 3. c. 1. s. 7. but if a bond or other specialty security be given to Elizabeth, and an action is brought in the name of Elizabeth, the defendant shall not plead that the plaintiff's name is Isabel. Bunb. 101.

So if a peer of the realm sue, he ought to sue by his name of baptism as an earl, or the like. Th. Dig. L. 3. c. 1. s. 6.

But a plaintiff may sue by his name of confirmation. Th. Dig. L. 3. c. 1. s. 7. R. 2. Rol. 135. (A.)

And a corporation aggregate shall sue by its name of incorporation, without the name of its chief magistrate. 2 Inst. 666.

And where it appeared that the plaintiffs were incorporated by the name of the mayor and burgesses of Stafford, "in the county of Stafford," and they sued merely in the name of the mayor and burgesses of the borough of Stafford, omitting the words in the county of Stafford: it was held that this misnomer was pleadable in abatement, and that it could not be taken advantage of in any other way. 1 Bos. & Pul. Rep. 40.

So if the surname of the plaintiff be omitted, it may be pleaded in abatement; or if it be mistaken, or if his name of baptism be joined by his name of office, it is not sufficient without his surname, as A. parson of D. Comyns' Dig. tit. Ab.

But if the surname by which he is known is added, it is sufficient. Th. Dig. L. 2. c. 2. s. 1.

And the plaintiff may reply to the plea of misnomer, that he is as well known by one name as the other. Comyns' Dig. tit. Ab.

So if it be said A, the daughter or son or duke, archbishop, or bishop of B, it is good, and not pleadable in abatement. Ibid.

But if the plaintiff has a name of dignity, as an earl, bishop, knight, or the like, and it be omitted or mistaken, it may be pleaded in abatement. Ibid.

But a diguitary of another realm, as of France, or the like, need not be so named. Ibid.

So if the plaintiff sues for any thing relating to his office, such as a sheriff, prebendary, precentor, or the like, he ought to name himself by the name of his office, otherwise it may be pleaded in abatement. Ibid.

So if a plaintiff sues, and to his name of baptism adds a wrong addition, it may be pleaded in abatement. Ibid.

III. Plea to the ability of the defendant or person impleaded.

(1. Plea by defendant of privilege.) The officers of each court enjoy the privilege of being sued only in those courts to which they respectively belong; the reason whereof is because of the duty they are under of attending those courts, and lest their client's cause should suffer if they were drawn to answer to actions in other courts. 2 Mod. 307. Vaughan, 135. 2 Hen. 7. 2. 2 Rol. Abr. 272. 1 Lutw. 44. 639.

Whenever therefore an attorney is sued out of his own court, he may say that he is attorney of another court, but the plaintiff may reply that he is a husbandman, or the like in the country, and traverse his being an attorney. Lutw. 44. 639. Bro. Trover. 27.

But this privilege is not the privilege of the officers, but of the suitors and attendance is the ground and foundation of it: it must therefore be alleged that the officers are actually attendant in their respective courts, otherwise the plea will be disallowed. 2 Wils. 42. 228. 1 Str. 546. 4 Bur. 2109. Andr. 43.

And the plaintiff must have the same remedy against the officer in his own court, as in that where he sues him, for if money be attached by foreign attachment in the sheriff's court of London, he shall not have his privilege; because in that case the plaintiff would be remediless. Saund. 67, 68. Gilb. Hist. C. P. 209, 210. Sid. 362. 2 Keb. 346. pl. 24. 2 Lem. 156. pl. 190.

So if a writ of entry, or other real action, be brought against an attorney of the king's bench, he cannot plead his privilege; because if this should be allowed, the plaintiff would have a right without a remedy, for the king's bench hath not cognizance of real actions. Saund. 67. Gilb. Hist. C. B. 210.

So if an attorney of the common pleas be sued in an appeal, he shall not have his privilege; for his own court hath no cognizance of this action; nor if sued as bail. Rep. and Cas. Prac. C. P. 64. Gilb. Hist. C. P. 110.

The privilege which the courts indulge their officers with is restrained to those suits only which they bring, or which are brought against them in their own right; for if they sue or are sued as executors or administrators, they then represent common persons, and are to have no privilege. Hob. 177. Gilb. Hist. C. P. 211. 17 Viner 517. 1 Bac. Abr. 8.

So if an officer of one court sue an officer of another, the defendant shall not have his privilege; for the attendance of the plaintiff is as necessary in his court, as that of the defendant in his, and therefore the cause is legally attached in the court where the plaintiff is an officer. Gilb. Hist. C. P. 211. Godb. 81. pl. 95. Brownl. 37. 2 Black. Rep. 1325.

So if a privileged person bring a joint action, or if an action be brought against him and others, he shall not have his privilege. Gilb. Hist. 212. Dyer 377. Godbol. 10. 2 Leo. 129.

An officer shall not have his privilege against the king, for as the executive power is lodged in the king, it would be unreasonable that his court, which gives relief to private persons, should protect any subject from being brought to justice for offending against the laws which concern the whole commonwealth. Fortes. 342. Gilb. Hist. C. P. 208.

But in an action qui tam, at the suit of an informer, he shall have his privilege. Lil. Reg. 7. 3 Lev. 398. Lutw. 195.

If an attorney of the common pleas be in custodia mareschi, for want of bail, at the suit of A, he may plead his privilege, but if he be in such custody at the suit of A and B, who declare against him as so; if he has waved his privilege as to A, he cannot take advantage of it against B. 2 Rol. Abr. 275. pl. 7. Salk. 1. pl. 3. 5 Mod. 310. 3 Lev. 343. Ld. Raym. 135.

After a general imparlance, an officer cannot plead his privilege, because by imparling he affirms the jurisdiction of the court. Bro. Priv. 25. 22 Hen. 6. 7. Sid. 29, Hard. 365. Lutw. 46. Salk. 1. Show 522.

He may plead as well to an action on a bill of exchange, as to any other personal action. Doug. 312.

But an attorney has not any privilege to be sued in Middlesex; it is enough that he be sued in his own court. Fortes. 343, 344. 4 Bur. 2027.

(2. Plea by defendant of misnomer and want of addition.) Misnomer is a good plea in abatement; for since names are the only marks and indicia of things which human kind can understand each other by, if the name be omitted or mistaken, there is a complaint against no one. 1 Bac. Abr. 9.

But though a defendant may, by pleading in abatement, take advantage of a misnomer when there is a mistake in the writ or declaration, as to the name of baptism or surname, yet in such a plea he must set forth his right name, so as to give the plaintiff a better writ. Finch. 363. 9 Han. 51. pl. 3.

And it is pleadable only in abatement. 2 Bl. Rep. 1120.

One defendant cannot plead misnomer of his companion, for the other defendant may admit himself to be the person. Lutw. 36.

The defendant, though his name be mistaken, is not obliged to take advantage of it; and therefore if he be impleaded by a wrong name, and afterwards impleaded by his right name, he may plead in bar the former judgment and aver that he is one and the same person. 2 Str. 1218.

In case of felony at common law, if a person were indicted by a wrong name, he could not plead misnomer, but was obliged to plead to the felony; for the fact being sworn against the party present, it was thought that there could be no injury by the misnomer, as there might be, where the party appeared by attorney; and felons generally go by no certain name, nor have they any fixed habitation. Cro. Car. 104. 21 E. 4, 72. 2 Inst. 670. Sid. 40. Lit. Rep. 8.

But now the party accused, may take advantage of misnomer, or the want of addition: however, if he do, he must plead over to the felony; but though such plea be found for him, he is not to be discharged, but must be indicted over again, neither shall such plea, if found against him, be peremptory, but he shall be tried on his plea in chief. 2 Hawk. P. C. 186, 7.

And it is now necessary to set forth the state, place of abode, and dignity of the person impleaded, lest an innocent person suffer, by having the same name with the real defendant; for 1 Hen. 5. c. 5, enacts, that in all personal actions, appeals, and indictments, there shall be added to the names of the defendants, their estates, degrees, mystery, and place of abode.

Additions which are inducements to the action must be made use of; as if one is liable as heir, he must be named heir, so, if as an executor he must be named as such. 1 Bac. Ab. 10.

And mistakes in such additions are good objections in abatement, both at law and in equity. Rast. 324. 11 Hen. 7. 11. Milf. Eq. 192. Pr. Reg. 278.

And if the defendant plead a mistake in the addition, he must set forth his right addition. 2 Str. 816. 10 Mod. 208. 2 Ld. Raym. 1178, 1541.

(3. Plea by defendant of coverture.) Coverture is a good plea in abatement on a writ brought against a feme covert as sole, but it cannot be pleaded after an imparlance. Reg. pl. 290. Lutw. 23, 24. 3 Ter. Rep. 627.

And if a feme covert sued as sole, do not plead her coverture, but neglect to do it, and there be a recovery against her as a feme sole, the husband may avoid it by writ of error, and may come in at any time and plead it. Lutw. 24. Style 254. 2 Rol. Rep. 53.

A feme covert defendant may plead, that she is the wife of the plaintiff. Th. Dig. l. 11. c. 2. s. 7. 12 Ed. 3. 481. Ray. 395.

And she may plead the same, although her husband lives out of the realm, per Lit. 18 Ed. 4. 4. Although she has given a bail bond, for if she be covert, it is not her deed. 1 Sal. 7. Mod. Cas. 311.

So if an action be brought in an inferior court against a feme sole, and pending the suit, she intermarry, and afterwards remove the cause by habeas, and the plaintiff declare against her as a feme sole, she cannot plead coverture at the time of suing the habeas. Barnes 355.

To a plea of coverture, the plaintiff may reply that the defendant was not covert. Cl. Ass. 15. but a replication that the defendant was separated from her husband, and having alimony under a decree of the ecclesiastical court, made the promises on her own account as feme sole, 3 Ter. Rep. 679. or that she was living in adultery, 4 Ter. Rep. 766, or living apart from the husband, carrying on a separate trade is bad. 6 Ter. Rep. 604.

(4. Plea in abatement by defendant for want of proper parties.) A defendant may also plead in abatement, that he is not a person able to answer without another not named, who has equal right with himself. Brac. l. 5. de exceptionibus, c. 26.

As if a parcener be sued, she may plead that there is another co-heir not named. Th. Dig. l. 5. c. 1. s. 2, 3, 5.

So if a joint-tenant be sued, he may plead in abatement that he holds jointly with such a one, who is alive, and not named. Comyns, Dig. tit. Ab.

Also, if a man sue a personal action against a tenant in common, touching the lands held in common, without naming his companion, he shall plead that he held in common the day of the writ purchased. Comyn's Dig. tit. Ab.

So if an action be sued against a husband alone, where the wife ought to be joined, it may be pleaded in abatement, that he holds jointly with his wife not named. Ast. Ent. 10.

So, if there be co-obligors, joint-contractors, or copartners, and one only is sued without the other of them, it may be pleaded in abatement, that the other is alive not named. Ast. Ent. 7. Cro. Eliz. 355. Lutw. 696.

And copartnership must be pleaded in abatement, and cannot be given in evidence to nonsuit the plaintiff on the trial. 5 Burr. 2611.

So, if debt be brought against an heir in gavelkind, it may be pleaded that there is another coheir not named. 11 Hen. 7. c. 12.

But against an heir on the part of the father, and an heir on the part of the mother, the writs ought to be several, 11 Hen. 7. 12; and it is the same against an heir and the executors. 18 Ed. 3. 4.

So if one executor or administrator be sued, it may be pleaded that there is another executor or administrator not named. Rast. Ent. 324, 325.

So if one executor or administrator be misnamed, the other may plead that there is another executor (naming him by his true name) not named. Th. D. l. 11. c. 5. s. 15.

(5. Plea in abatement by defendant in real actions.) So if a real action be sued against several, it may be pleaded in abatement that they hold severally, Lutw. 11; or that one of them holds parcel of the land as tenant in severalty. Th. Dig. 11. c. 31. s. 7.

So in an action against several, the one may take the entire tenancy on himself and demand judgment of the writ, or may take the entire tenancy upon himself as to part, and plead as to the other. Th. Dig. 11. c. 33. s. 5. Sav. 116.

So if the tenant plead non tenure, the writ shall abate. Cro. Eliz. 559. Ast. Ent. 10. Lutw. 37. 581, b.

So if he plead a special non tenure, as that he has common, and puts the cattle into the land as in his common, without that, that he has any other possession, and that such a one is tenant of the freehold. Th. Dig. l. 11. c. 22. s. 48.

Or that he holds only for years, by statute, elegit, or other occupation, and that another is tenant of the freehold. Ibid. s. 48.

But non tenure of parcel shall only abate for that parcel. St. 25 Ed. 3. c. 16.

Upon a plea of non tenure, if it be found for the defendant, judgment shall be, that the defendant go quit: but the demandant may enter. Comyn's Dig. tit. Ab.

So if the tenant disclaims, the writ shall abate; but an action accrues to the demandant by a writ of right upon the disclaimer. Th. Dig. l. 11. c. 34. s. 2.

If the tenant disclaims, the judgment shall be, that the tenant go without day, and after such judgment the defendant may enter. Lit. s. 691.

So the tenant may plead that the demandant himself was seised on the day of the writ purchased; or that he was seised of parcel. Th. Dig. l. 11. c. 35. s. 1—18—4—6; but it is no plea in an action upon the stat. 8 Hen. 6. for a forcible entry. Th. Dig. l. 11. c. 35. s. 16; nor in trespass, that the plaintiff was possessed of the goods taken. Ibid. c. 36. s. 2. nor in replevin. Ibid. c. 36. s. 3.

ABATEMENT, plea of to the count or declaration.) The first act, after the appearance of the parties, and the admittance of the jurisdiction, and the abilities of both parties (plaintiff and defendant) is, that the party suing, counts or declares; and afterwards the party impleaded, that is the deforceant in real, or defendant in personal actions, may demand oyer of the writ: and then if there be any fault or insufficiency in the count or declaration for a cause apparent in itself; or if there be a variance between the count or declaration and the writ, or between the writ and the record, specialty or the like-mentioned in the count or declaration, and the writ, or between the writ and the record, specialty, or like-mentioned in the count or declaration; the party impleaded ought to shew it and plead. Th. Dig. l. 10. c. 1. s. 5. Fitz. Count, 27.

As in real actions, it may be pleaded in abatement, that the lands, tenements, or other things are not demanded by their proper names, or in the proper order in which they ought. Comyn's Dig. tit. Ab. or that the same thing is twice demanded, as if the demand be of a manor and rent, when the rent is parcel of the manor. Th. Dig. l. 8. c. 25. s. 1. So also it may be pleaded in abatement to the demand, that the demand is mistaken, or that the demand is of a manor, whereas the tenements put in view, are two houses, or the like, and not a manor. 6 Ed. 3 242. Th. Dig. l. 8. c. 27. s. 9. Comyn's Dig. tit. Ab.

So also it may be pleaded in abatement, that the plaint is of two several and distinct causes of action; as where the plaint is of two trespasses depending upon two separate and distinct titles. Reg. Pl. 282, 283.

Also it may be pleaded that the plaint is not in a proper action; as that the plaintiff hath declared in an action on the case, when he ought to have an account, Reg. Pl. 283; or that he hath brought an action upon the case, when he ought to have brought trespass. Th. Dig. l. 10. c. 27. s. 3.

But in an action upon the case for money received to his use, it is no plea in abatement, that he received as bailiff. 1 Show. 71.

So also it may be pleaded in abatement, that the count or declaration shews a demand before a cause of action, as in a scire facias by an administrator, tested 12th Feb. the defendant upon oyer of the administration, dated 26th March afterwards, may plead in abatement, that the action was sued before a cause of action. 2 Lev. 197. So in an assumpsit upon a promise to pay within 7 years, if brought before the 7 years expired. Bend. pl. 93, or in debt before the day of payment arrived. Hob. 245. Ast. Ent. 7.

So in an action against an administrator, it may be pleaded in abatement, that the writ was tested before administration granted; or against an executor, that the testator was alive at the time of the writ purchased; or in debt against an heir, that his ancestor was alive the day of the original purchased. Lutw. 8, 14, 15, 16.

So also default of legal form may be pleaded in abatement, as that the count does not pursue the legal form: as in a writ of right, formedon, and the like, that no espleas are alleged. Bro. Count. 7. In prohibition that it is not alleged, that the writ of prohibition was delivered to the defendant, though this is not traversable. Bro. Count. 11.

Upon a plea to the count or declaration, there is no other judgment but quod quer, nil capiat, per breve, and therefore a fault herein abates the writ. Bro. Count. 8, 12, 24. 60. 64, 74.

If the count or declaration varies in form, the defendant may plead the variance in abatement, for the plaintiff has abated his own writ, by prosecuting it in a different manner; but if it varies in substance, the defendant may move it in arrest of judgment, because the court has no authority to proceed, a different matter being prosecuted from that which the writ has given authority to the court to take cognizance of. Cro. Eliz. 722. Cro. Ja. 651. Jones 304.

But the defendant cannot plead a variance between the writ and count or declaration, without praying oyer of the writ, and shewing it to the court. 2 Wils. 85, 395.

The declaration varying from the writ, as by laying the cause of action in the reign of a present king, when the writ supposed it to have been in the reign of a former king, or by giving the defendant a name different from that in the writ, as where the writ calls him A B, of London, Alderman, and the plaintiff declares against him as A B of London, Esquire, or where the declaration is otherwise defective, in not pursuing the writ, or not setting forth the cause of action with that certainty the law requires, or in laying the offence in a different county from that in which the writ is brought; in all such cases, the defendant may plead in abatement. Fitz. Nat. Brev. 219, 230. Yelv. 120. Finch. 357. Latch. 173. Allen 17, 18.

But the writ may in some cases be general, and the declaration special; as, where a statute gives an action, but does not prescribe any form of the writ, the writ framed by the common law will serve, and the special matter may be set forth in the declaration. Doct. pl. 84.

It may also be pleaded in abatement, that there is another action brought for the same thing, for the law abhors multiplicity of actions; and therefore whenever it appears on record, that the plaintiff has sued out two writs against the same defendant for the same thing, the second writ shall abate, for if it were allowed that a man should be twice arrested, or twice attached by his goods, for the same thing, by the same reason he might suffer in infinitum; and it is not necessary that writ should be pending at the time of the defendant's pleading in abatement, for if there was a writ in being at the time of suing out the second, it is plain the second was vexatious and ill, ab initio. 1 Bac. Abr. tit. Ab.

So also may it be pleaded to an information qui tam, 2 Hawk. P. C. 275. but to defeat an informer by a plea of this kind of his right of suing, a defendant must shew a prior right attached in somebody else, and therefore if the pendency of another action, by another person for the same offence brought in the same term, be pleaded in abatement, it must be shewn on what particular day, such other action was commenced, that its priority may be ascertained: so if both actions were commenced on the same day, the defendant, it seems, may shew that the action which he states, was prior in point of time on that day, notwithstanding it was formerly holden, that in that case, the right was attached in neither, and the court could give no judgment. 3 Bur. 1423. 1 Bl. Rep. 437. 2 Lev. 141. 2 Str. 1169.

But it is no good plea in abatement of an indictment, as it is of an appeal or information, that there is another indictment against the defendant for the same offence, but in such a case, the court in discretion, will quash the first indictment. 2 Hawk. P. C. 367.

And on a plea in abatement, of another action pending, it must appear plainly to be for the same thing; for an assise of lands in one county, shall not abate an assise in another county, for these cannot be the same lands. 4 H. 6. 24. Doct. pl. 10.

In general writs as trespass, and the like, where the special matter is not alleged, the defendant cannot plead in abatement another action depending for the same matter, without alleging that the plaintiff, hath declared in it, for without such allegation it cannot be traversed, whether it be for the same matter or not: but it is otherwise when the first is a special writ, and sets forth the particular demand, for there the court can readily see, that it is for the same thing, and therefore the first shall abate the second writ, it being apparently brought for the same thing. Lit. Pr. Reg. 8. 2 Barnard, 143. 5 Co. 61. Doct. pl. 11, 12. Th. Dig. b 11. c. 39. s. 19.

An action depending in an inferior court, cannot be pleaded to an action brought in one of the courts at Westminster, for the same thing, and upon a demurrer to such a plea, the court will give judgment against the defendant quod respondeat ouster. 5 Co. 62. Dyer 92, 93. Fitzgib. 313.

If a second writ be brought, tested the same day the former is abated, it shall be deemed to be sued out after the abatement of the first. Gilb. Hist. C. P. 260.

And if an action pending in the same court, be pleaded to a second action brought for the same thing, the plaintiff may pray that the record may be inspected by the court, or demand oyer of it, which if not given him in convenient time, he may sign his judgment. Dyer 227. Carth. 453. 517. Ld. Raym. 347, 550. 6 Mod. 122.

The pendency of a prior action may be pleaded either in bar or abatement, although it is said in the case of Baines v. Blackbourne, to be pleadable only in bar. 3 Bur. 1423. Sayer's Rep. 216.

To an action of debt on a judgment recovered, the defendant cannot plead a writ of error brought, and pending either in bar or in abatement: but the court on a summary motion, will direct the proceedings to be stayed pending the writ of error. Carth. 136. 1 Bac. Abr. tit. Ab. N.

Abatement by a defect in the writ.] The preceding objections being matters dehors, must be shewn to the court: and must be pleaded in proper time and manner as already observed, but for defects in the writ itself, the court may ex officio abate it. 1 Bacon's Abr. 17.

Herein the law hath been very strict in obliging men to keep to the legal forms it prescribes, and therefore in the writ which is the

But the writ may in some cases be general, and the declaration special; as, where a statute gives an action, but does not prescribe any form of the writ, the writ framed by the common law will serve, and the special matter may be set forth in the declaration. Doct. pl. 84.

It may also be pleaded in abatement, that there is another action brought for the same thing, for the law abhors multiplicity of actions; and therefore whenever it appears on record, that the plaintiff has sued out two writs against the same defendant for the same thing, the second writ shall abate, for if it were allowed that a man should be twice arrested, or twice attached by his goods, for the same thing, by the same reason he might suffer in infinitum; and it is not necessary that both should be pending at the time of the defendant's pleading in abatement, for if there was a writ in being at the time of suing out the second, it is plain the second was vexatious and ill, abinitio. 1 Bac. Abr. tit. Ab.

So also may it be pleaded to an information qui tam, 2 Hawk. P. C. 275. but to defeat an informer by a plea of this kind of his right of suing, a defendant must shew a prior right attached in somebody else, and therefore if the pendency of another action, by another person for the same offence brought in the same term, be pleaded in abatement, it must be shewn on what particular day, such other action was commenced, that its priority may be ascertained: so if both actions were commenced on the same day, the defendant, it seems, may shew that the action which he states, was prior in point of time on that day, notwithstanding it was formerly holden, that in that case, the right was attached in neither, and the court could give no judgment. 3 Bur. 1423. 1 Bl. Rep. 437. 2 Lev. 141. 2 Str. 1169.

But it is no good plea in abatement of an indictment, as it is of an appeal or information, that there is another indictment against the defendant for the same offence, but in such a case, the court in discretion, will quash the first indictment. 2 Hawk. P. C. 367.

And on a plea in abatement, of another action pending, it must appear plainly to be for the same thing; for an assise of lands in one county, shall not abate an assise in another county, for these cannot be the same lands. 4 H. 6. 24. Doct. pl. 10.

In general writs as trespass, and the like, where the special matter is not alleged, the defendant cannot plead in abatement another action depending for the same matter, without alleging that the plaintiff, hath declared in it, for without such allegation it cannot be traversed, whether it be for the same matter or not: but it is otherwise when the first is a special writ, and sets forth the particular demand, for there the court can readily see, that it is for the same thing, and therefore the first shall abate the second writ, it being apparently brought for the same thing. Lit. Pr. Reg. 8. 2 Barnard, 143. 5 Co. 61. Doct. pl. 11, 12. Th. Dig. 11. c. 39. s. 19.

An action depending in an inferior court, cannot be pleaded to an action brought in one of the courts at Westminster, for the same thing, and upon a demurrer to such a plea, the court will give judgment against the defendant quod respondeat ouster. 5 Co. 62. Dyer 92, 93. Fitzgib. 313.

If a second writ be brought, tested the same day the former is abated, it shall be deemed to be sued out after the abatement of the first. Gilb. Hist. C. P. 260.

And if an action pending in the same court, be pleaded to a second action brought for the same thing, the plaintiff may pray that the record may be inspected by the court, or demand oyer of it, which if not given him in convenient time, he may sign his judgment. Dyer 227. Carth. 453. 517. Ld. Raym. 347, 550. 6 Mod. 122.

The pendency of a prior action may be pleaded either in bar or abatement, although it is said in the case of Baines v. Blackbourne, to be pleadable only in bar. 3 Bur. 1423. Sayer's Rep. 216.

To an action of debt on a judgment recovered, the defendant cannot plead a writ of error brought, and pending either in bar or in abatement: but the court on a summary motion, will direct the proceedings to be stayed pending the writ of error. Carth. 136. 1 Bac. Abr. tit. Ab. N.

Abatement by a defect in the writ.] The preceding objections being matters dehors, must be shewn to the court: and must be pleaded in proper time and manner as already observed, but for defects in the writ itself, the court may ex officio abate it. 1 Bacon's Abr. 17.

Herein the law hath been very strict in obliging men to keep to the legal forms it prescribes, and therefore in the writ which is the foundation of the whole proceedings, it requires full certainty and exactness, as that no person be arrested or attached by his goods, unless there appear sufficient grounds to warrant such proceedings, so that if the writ vary materially from that in the register, or be defective in substance, the party may take advantage of it. 9 Hen. 7. 16. 10 Ed. 3. 1. pl. 2. Hob. 1, 51, 57, 84. Carth. 172. Cro. Jac. 376, 7.

But though the writ vary from the register, yet if it be warranted by the modern precedents, this shall not abate it. Hob. 84.

And there is a difference between original and judicial writs, for in the former, matter of form abates them as well as substance, but in the latter it is otherwise, for if the substance be good, the want of form will be aided. 41 Ed. III. 13, 14.

ABATEMENT by demise of the king.] At common law, all patents of justices, commissions civil and military, were determined by the death of the king; and all suits depending in the king's courts were discontinued, so that the plaintiffs were obliged to commence new actions, or to have re-summons or attachment on the former processes, to bring the defendants in, but to prevent the inconvenience, expense, and delay, which this occasioned, were the statutes of 1 Ed. 6. c. 7. and 1 Ann. st. 1. c. 8. s. 1. passed. 1 Bacon's Abr. tit. Ab. which acts are in substance as follows:

By stat. 1 Ed. 6. c. 7. By the death of the king, no action, suit, bill, or plaint depending between party and party in any court of record, shall be discontinued, [and put without day, but the process, pleas, demurrers, and continuances, shall stand good in the same condition as if the king had lived.

But this stat. does not extend to actions in a county court or other court not of record. 7 Co. 30. b. nor to actions in which the original is not returned, for before the return it is not depending. 7 Co. 30. a. 1 And. 44-5. Bend 79.

And now, by stat. 1 Ann. c. 8. it is enacted, that no writ, plea, or process, or other proceeding on any indictment or information, or for any debt or account to her majesty or successors shall be discontinued, and put without day by her or their death, but shall continue in force and may be proceeded upon.

And no original writ, writ of nisi prius, commission, process or proceeding out of any court of equity or upon any office or inquisition, nor any writ of certiorari, or habeas corpus in any cause, criminal or civil, nor any writ of attachment or process for contempt, shall be abated or discontinued by the death of the queen or her successors.

ABATEMENT by the death of parties.] The death of the plaintiff or defendant before interlocutory judgment is an abatement of the suit; but where there are more than two or more plaintiffs, or defendants, the general rule was, before the stat. of 8 & 9 Wil. 3. 9. hereafter noticed, that although the death of one of the parties may happen, pending the writ, and yet the plea is in the same condition, as if such party were living, there such death makes no alteration; for where the death of the parties makes no change of proceedings it would be unreasonable that the surviving parties should make any alteration in the writ; for if such writ and process were changed, it would set rights but in the same condition they were in at the death of the parties, and it would be absurd that what made no alteration should change the writ and the process. 1 Bacon's Abr. tit. Ab.

This rule, however, respecting the non-abatement of a suit, by the death of one of the parties, where there were two or more plaintiffs or defendants, where such death made no alteration in the proceedings laid down as above by the Lord Chief Baron Gilbert, though founded in reason was not uniformly supported by authorities, and the aid of the legislature became requisite for the purpose of enforcing it.

Accordingly it was enacted by stat. 8. and 9. Wil. III. c. 11. that if there be two or more plaintiffs or defendants, and one or more of them shall die, if the cause of action survive to the surviving plaintiff or plaintiffs, or against the surviving defendant or defendants, the writ or action shall not be thereby abated, but such death being suggested on the record, the action shall proceed at the suit of such surviving plaintiff or plaintiffs against such surviving defendant or defendants. s. 7.

Although this statute makes mention only of actions at law, yet it hath been construed to prevent the abatement of a suit in equity, provided that the subject matter of the suit be not affected by it. 1 Atk. 291.

And the formal suggestion of the death need be only on the plea roll; nothing more, is necessary on the nisi prius roll, than merely to point out to the judge what he is try, and between whom. 1 Burr. 362.

By the same stat. 8 & 9 Will. 3. c. 11. it is also enacted, that if any plaintiff happen to die after an interlocutory judgment, and before a final judgment obtained therein, the said action shall not abate by reason thereof, if such action might originally be prosecuted or maintained by the executors or administrators of such plaintiff: and if the defendant die after such interlocutory judgment, and before final judgment therein obtained, the said action shall not abate, if such action might originally be prosecuted or maintained against the executors or administrators of such defendant; and the plaintiff, or if he be dead, after such interlocutory judgment, his executors or administrators shall and may have a scire facias against the defendant if living, after such interlocutory judgment; or if dead after, then against his executors or administrators to shew cause why damages in such action should not be assessed and recovered by him or them; and if such defendant, his executors or administrators shall appear at the return of such writ and not shew or allege any matter sufficient to arrest the final judgment or being returned warned, or upon two writs of scire facias it be returned that the defendant his executors or administrators, had nothing whereby to be summoned, or could not be found in the county, shall make default, that thereupon a writ of inquiry of damages shall be awarded, which being executed and returned, judgment final shall be given for the said plaintiff his executors or administrators, prosecuting such writ or writs of scire facias, or against such defendant his executors or administrators respectively.

And agreeable to the equity of this statute, where the plaintiff died after a rule by consent to refer the matter to the prothonotary, and before the report made, The court allowed his executors to be made a party to the rule, and directed the prothonotary to proceed without the defendant's consent.

Manner of pleading in abatement.] The defendant cannot plead two outlawries or two excommunications in abatement, for this would be duplicity in pleading, and duplicity is a fault in abatement as well as in bar. Carth. 8, 9.

In pleas of abatement which relate to the person there is no necessity of laying a venue, for all such pleas are to be tried where the action is laid. Salk. 4. Carth. 363. 12 Mod. 125, 195.

If a defendant plead matter in abatement, and conclude in bar, this shall be esteemed a plea in bar, and the court will give final judgment thereupon, because by pleading to the action the writ is admitted to be good, and he puts the whole matter upon his plea. 2 Rol. Rep. 64. Lev. 312. Mod. 214. 2 Sand. 128.

So if a man plead in bar and conclude in abatement, this shall be esteemed a plea in bar, because he could have no writ, if he could have no action; and where there could be no action the dispute about the writ would be insignificant. 6 Mod. 103. Lut. 34, 36. 10 Hen. 7. 11.

A plea in abatement may be good though it contains matter in bar; but this is to be understood of such pleas as may be pleaded either in disability or in bar, as outlawry and the like. 6 Mod. 215. 10 Hen. 7. 11.

If a matter which may be pleaded either in abatement or bar, be pleaded in abatement only, if the plaintiff reply or demur in bar, this will be a discontinuance, because the plaintiff does not maintain his writ, and the defendant may have other matter in bar of which he would hereby be excluded. 1 Bac. Abr. tit. Ab. P.

But if the defendant begin such plea in bar, and conclude in abatement, or plead in abatement and conclude in bar, then the plaintiff may reply or demur to it, either as a plea in abatement or in bar; and if he demur or plead to it as a plea in bar, then the judgment is final, for he has closed with the defendant to put the plea to the judgment of the court as a bar to the action. Vent. 136. Lutw. 36. 3 Mod. 281.

All pleas to the jurisdiction conclude to the cognizance of the court, praying judgment whether the court will have further cognizance of the suit; pleas to the disability conclude to the person by praying judgment, if the said A. the plaintiff ought to be answered; and pleas in abatement (when the suit is by original), concludes to the writ or declaration by praying judgment of the writ or declaration, and that it may be quash'd cassetur, made void or abated: but if the action be by bill, the bill must pray judgment of the bill, and not of the declaration, the bill being here the original, and the declaration only a copy of the bill. 5 Mod. 132. 3 Black. Com. 303.

And it is said to be the conclusion of a plea, and not the matter of it, that makes a plea in abatement, so that should a man plead a plea, that for the matter of it might have been pleaded in bar, and concludes petit quod breve cassetur, it would be but a plea in abatement, and the judgment would be no other than a respondeat ouster: so vice versa, a plea in abatement, pleaded in form of a plea in bar, would be a plea in bar though an ill one. 10 Mod. 112. Show. 4.

If a dilatory plea be pleaded, and the plaintiff take issue upon it, he may conclude with a petit judicium et damna, because there final judgment shall be; but if a dilatory plea be pleaded, which the plaintiff does not deny, but confess and avoid, he must conclude in maintenance of his writ; as if the defendant plead an attainder in disability of the plaintiff, and he plead a pardon, he must not conclude with a petit judicium et damna, but in maintenance of his writ: 6 Mod. 236. 3 Mod. 281.

If the defendant demur in abatement, the court will give final judgment, because there can be no demurrer in abatement; for if the matter of abatement be de hors, it must be pleaded, if intrinsic, the court will take notice of it themselves. Salk. 210. pl. 9. 6 Mod. 195, 198.

If on a plea in abatement a respondeat ouster is awarded, and afterwards the defendant pleads in chief, and there is a verdict for the plaintiff, yet if the plea in abatement does not appear to have been entered on the nisi prius record, judgment will be arrested; for it being entered on the plea roll (which was in court) it must be entered on the nisi prius roll, otherwise it does not appear that it was a verdict in the same cause. Carth. 447, 499. Ld. Raym. 329. 5 Mod. 399.

The judgment for the defendant on a plea in abatement is quod breve vel narratio cassetur, and for the plaintiff a respondeat ouster; but if issue be joined on a plea in abatement, and it be found for the plaintiff, it shall be peremptory against the defendant, and the judgment shall be quod recuperet, because the defendant choosing to put the whole weight of his cause on this issue, when he might have had a plea in chief, it is an admission that he had no other defence. Yelv. 112. 2 Show 42. Str. 532. Cath. 138. 1 Wils. 302.

But on a demurrer to a plea in abatement, the judgment against the defendant shall be only to answer over, because the issues in fact are within the conusance of the party: issues in law are not. Th. Dig. l. 16. c. 11. s. 12. 1 Lev. 163.

And the same judgment shall be given, though the defendant join in demurrer to it as to a plea in bar, because the fault originates with the plaintiff. 1 Vent. 135.

And upon a respondeat ouster, no notice need be given of it, for the defendant is supposed to be attending his cause in the paper to maintain his plea. Salk. 7. pl. 18.

And on the filing of a plea in abatement the plaintiff may if he think fit enter a nil capiat per breve. Barnes 257. Salk. 4. pl. 11.

ABATOR, is a person that abateth, that is, intrudeth into a house or land void by the death of the former possessor, and not yet entered or taken up by his heir. Cowel.

ABATUDE, that is diminished, moneta abatuda, is money clipped or diminished in value. Cowel. Blount. Du Cange in verbo.

ABAWED, that is, terrified; from the French echabir; attonitum reddere. Cowel. Blount.

ABBACY, in Latin abbatia or abbathia, is the same as to the government of a religious house and the revenues thereof, subject to an abbot, as a bishoprick is to a bishop.

ABBAT or ABBOT, (in Latin abbas, French abbe, and Saxon abbud,) was before the dissolution of the monasteries in the reign of Henry the eighth, the spiritual lord or governor who had the rule and government of such religious house. Cowel. Blount.

At the time of the dissolution of these religious houses, these spiritual persons consisted of ninety-six mitred abbots and two priors. 1 Black. 155.

Such as were mitred had episcopal authority within their limits, being exempted from the jurisdiction of the diocesan, but the other sort of abbots were subject to the diocesan in all spiritual government. Cowel. Blount.

The mitred abbots were lords of parliament, and called abbots sovereign, and abbots general, to distinguish them from the other abbots. The lords priors also had exempt jurisdiction, and were likewise lords of parliament. Cowel. Blount.

However by statute 27 Hen. 8. cap. 28. all abbeys, monasteries, priories, and other religious houses, not above the value of 200*l. per ann.* were given to the king, who sold the lands at low rates to the gentry. And in 29 Hen. 8. the rest of the abbots made voluntary surrenders of their houses to obtain favour of the king: and anno 31 Hen. 8. a bill was brought into the house to confirm those surrenders; which passing, completed the dissolution, except the hospitals and colleges, which were not dissolved, the first till the 33d, and the last till the 37th of Hen. 8. when commissioners were appointed to enter and seize the said lands and hereditaments.

ABBATIS, an avener or steward of the stables; the word was sometimes used for a common hostler. Cowel. Blount.

ABROCHMENT, (abrocamentum) The buying up of wares before they are exposed to sale in a fair or market, and selling the same by retail; which is a forestalling of a market or fair. Cowel. Blount.

ABBUTTALS, (from the French abluter or aboutir, to limit or bound) are the buttings and boundings of lands, either to the east, west, north, or south, shewing on what other lands, highways, or other places they abut, or are limited and bounded.

ABDICATE, (abdicare) to renounce or refuse any thing. Terms de Ley 5. Cowel. Blount.

ABDICATION, (abdicatio) in general, is where a magistrate or person in office, renounces and gives up the same, before the term of service is expired. And this differs from resignation, in that, abdication is done purely and simply; whereas resignation is in favour of some other person. Chamb. Dict.

It is said to be a renunciation, quitting, and relinquishing, so as to have nothing further to do with a thing; or the doing of such actions as are inconsistent with the holding of it. Ibid.

Thus on king James's leaving the kingdom, the lords and commons met in a convention, and both houses resolved, that he had abdicated the government, and that the throne was thereby vacant. By this vote the government was allowed to subsist, though the executive magistrate was gone, and the kingly office to remain, though king James was no longer king: and thus the constitution was kept entire, which upon every sound principle of government must otherwise have fallen to pieces, had the royal authority been abolished, or even suspended, for that would have levelled all distinctions of honour, rank, offices, and property, would have annihilated the sovereign power, and in consequence have repealed all positive laws, and would have left the people at liberty to have erected a new system. Black. Com. 212, 213.

ABDITORIUM, an abditory or hiding-place, to hide and preserve goods, plate, or money; or a chest in which reliques were kept, as mentioned in the inventory of the church of York. Mod. Aug. p. 173. Cowel. Blount.

ABDUCTION

ABDUCTION (of children) is an injury offered to a person, considered in the relation of a parent, and is of two kinds: but Blackstone states it to be a matter of doubt whether it be a civil injury or not; as before the abolition of the tenures in chivalry it was equally a doubt, whether an action would lie for taking and carrying away any other child besides the heir: some holding that it would not, upon the supposition that the only ground or cause of action was losing the value of the heir's marriage: and others holding that an action would lie, for taking away any of the children, for that the parent hath an interest in them all, to provide for their education (Cro. Eliz. 770); if therefore before the abolition of these tenures it was an injury to the father to take away the rest of his children as well as his heir, (as Blackstone inclines to think it was,) it still remains an injury, and is remediable by a writ of ravishment, or action of trespass vi et armis, de filio, vel filia rapto vel abducto, Fitz. N. B. 90. in the same manner as the husband may have it for the abduction of his wife. 3 Black. Com. 140.

Of a Ward.] Of a similar nature to the last is the abduction of a ward from the guardian: and the like actions, mutatis mutandis, as are given to fathers, the guardian also has for recovery of damages, when his ward is stolen or ravished away from him. Fitz. Na. Br. 139.

And though guardianship in chivalry is now totally abolished, which was the only beneficial kind of guardianship to the guardian, yet the guardian in socage was always (Fitz. Nat. Br. 139) and is still entitled to an action of ravishment, if his ward or pupil be taken from him: but then he must account to his ward or pupil for the damages which he so recovers. Hale on Fitz. N. B. 139.

And as guardian in socage was also entitled at common law to a writ of right of ward, de custodia terræ et hæredis, in order to recover the possession and custody of the infant: so according to the opinion of Blackstone is he at this day still entitled to sue out this antiquated writ. 3 Black. Com. 141.

But a more speedy and summary method of redressing all complaints relative to wards and guardians, hath of late obtained, by an application to the court of chancery, which is the supreme guardian, and has the superintendant jurisdiction of all the infants in the kingdom. Ibid.

And it is expressly provided by statute 12 Car. 2. c. 24. that testamentary guardians may maintain an action of ravishment or trespass for recovery of any of their wards, and also for damages, to be applied to the use and benefit of the infants.

Of an Heiress.] The forcible abduction and marriage of a female, which is vulgarly called stealing an heiress, is an offence punishable by the statute law: for by 3 Hen. 7. c. 2. it is enacted, that if any person shall for lucre take any woman, being maid, widow, or wife, and having substance either in goods or lands, or being heir apparent to her ancestors, contrary to her will; and afterwards she be married to such misdoer; or by his consent to another; or defiled: such person, his procurers and abettors, and such as knowingly receive such, shall be deemed principal felons; and by 39 Eliz. c. 9. the benefit of clergy is taken away from all such felons, who shall be principals, procurers, or accessaries before the fact.

In the construction of this statute it hath been determined, 1st. that the indictment must allege, that the taking was for lucre, for such are the words of the statute: 1 Hawk. P. C. 110. 2dly, in order to shew this, it must appear that the woman has substance either real or personal, or is an heir apparent, 1 Hale P. C. 660. 1 Hawk. P. C. 109: 3dly, it must appear that she was taken away against her will; 4thly, it must also appear, that she was afterwards married or defiled, and though possibly the marriage or defilement might be by her subsequent consent, being won thereunto by flatteries after the taking, yet this is felony, if the first taking were against her will, 1 Hal. P. C. 661. and so vice versa, if the woman be originally taken away by her own consent, yet if she afterwards refuse to continue with the offender, and be forced against her will, she may from that time as properly be said to be taken against her will, as if she never had given any consent at all; for till the force was put upon her, she was in her own power, 1 Hawk. P. C. 110. It is held that a woman thus taken away and married, may be sworn and give evidence against the offender, though he is her husband de facto, contrary to the general rule of law, because he is no husband de jure, in case the actual marriage was also against her will, 1 Hal. P. C. 661; but in cases where the actual marriage is good by the consent of the inveigled woman, obtained after her forcible abduction, Sir Matthew Hale seems to question how far her evidence should be allowed; but other authorities seem to agree, that it should even then be admitted; esteeming it absurd that the offender should thus take advantage of his own wrong, and that the very act of marriage, which is a principal ingredient of his crime, should (by a forced construction of law) be made use of to stop the mouth of the most material witness against him. 4 Black. Com. 208.

An inferior degree of the same kind of offence, but not attended with force, is punished by the statute 4 & 5 Phil. & Mar. c. 8. which enacts, that "if any person above the age of fourteen, unlawfully shall convey or take away any woman-child unmarried, (which is held (2 Str. 1162) to extend to bastards as well as to legitimate children) within the age of sixteen years, from the possession and against the will of the father, mother, guardians, or governors, he shall be imprisoned two years, and still retain the sense and substance. But in law it signifies the making a declaration or count shorter, by subtracting or severing some of the substance from it: for instance, a man is said to abridge his plaint in assise; and a woman her demand in action of dower, where any land is put into the plaint or demand, which is not in the tenure of the defendant; for if the defendant pleads non-tenure, joint-tenancy, or the like, in abatement of the writ, as to part of the lands, the plaintiff may leave out those lands, and pray that the tenant may answer to the rest. The reason of this abridgment of the plaint is, because the certainty is not set down in such writs, but they run in general; and though the demandant hath abridged his plaint in part, yet the writ will be good for the remainder. Brook. tit. Abridgment, vide 21 Hen. 8. c. 3. and Cowel and Blount.

ABROCAMENTUM, the buying goods by the wholesale before they are brought to the market, and selling them again in parcels.

ABROGATE, (abbrogare) to disannul or take away any thing: as to abrogate a law, that is, to lay aside or repeal it. Cowel. Blount.

ABSENTEES, or des absentees, was a parliament so called, held at Dublin 10th May, 3 Hen. 8. And mentioned in letters patent, dat. 29 Hen. 8. 4 Co. Inst. 354. Cowel. Blount.

ABSOLVE, (absolvere) to absolve one excommunicated, or to pardon, or set free from excommunication. Vide ASSOILE.

ABSONIARE. was a word used by the English Saxons in the oath of fealty, and signified to shun or void. Cowel. Blount.

ABSQUE HOC, (without this, that, &c.) are words of exception made use of in a traverse; as the defendant pleads that such a thing was done at B, &c. absque hoc, that it was done at, &c. Mod. Ca. 103.

ACCAPITUM, and accapitare, the same with relief due to lords of manors.—Capitali domino, accapitare, i. e. to pay a relief to the chief lord. Fleta, l. 2. c. 50. Cowel. Blount.

ACCEDAS AD CURIAM, is a writ that lies where a man hath received false judgment in a hundred court or court-baron. It is directed to the sheriff; and issued out of the Chancery, but returnable into B. R. or C. B. And is in the nature of the writ de falso judicio, which lies for him that had received false judgment in the county-court. In the Register of Writs, it is said to be a writ that lies as well for justice delayed, as for false judgment; and that it is a species of the writ recordari, the sheriff being to make record of the suit in the inferior court, and certify it into the king's court. Reg. Orig. 9. 56. F. N. B. 18. Fyer, 169. Cowel. Blount.

ACCEDAS AD VICECOMITEM. This is a writ directed to the coroner, commanding him to deliver a writ to the sheriff; who, having a writ called a pone delivered to him, suppresseth it. Reg. Orig. 83 Cowel. Blount.

ACCEPTANCE, (acceptatio) is the taking and accepting of any thing in good part, and as it were a tacit agreement to a preceding act, which might have been defeated and avoided, if such acceptance had not been. Cowel. Blount.

Thus, where the condition of a bond is to pay money, accceptance of another thing is good. But if the condition is not for money, but a collateral thing it is otherwise. Dyer, 56. 9 Rep. 79. And the acceptance of uncertain things, as customs or the like, made over, may not be pleaded in satisfaction of a certain sum due on bond. Cro. Car. 193. If a woman hath title to an estate of inheritance, as dower, or the like, she shall not be barred by any collateral satifaction or recompence: and no collateral acceptance can bar any right of inheritance or freehold, without some release or the like. 4 Rep. 1. When a man is entitled to a thing in gross, he is not bound to accept it by parcels; and if a lessor distrains for rent, he is not obliged to accept part of it; nor in action of detinue, part of the goods. 3 Salk. 2.

If a man be bound in 200 quarters of corn, with condition to pay 20*l.* the obligor may, by agreement, give the obligee any other thing in satisfaction of the money; but if the condition had been to pay 100 quarters of corn, there the acceptance of money; or any other thing, had not been good, because the contract was not made for money, but for a collateral thing. Peyto's case, 9 Rep. 79. And yet it seems reasonable, if the obligee agrees to accept, and does accept the same in satisfaction and discharge, that the obligor should plead the same, if the agreement is by deed. Morgan.

Debt upon bond, conditioned for the obligor to make an assurance of such lands to such uses as in the condition mentioned: the defendant pleaded, that he had made a feoffment of the same lands to other uses than in the condition expressed, which the obligee had accepted; and upon demurrer it was adjudged an ill plea; for the obligor ought not to vary from the uses set forth in the condition. 1 Brownl. 60.

Acceptance of a less sum may be in satisfaction of a greater sum, if it be before the day on which the money becomes due: for where a lesser sum is paid before it is due, and the payment is accepted, it shall be good in satisfaction of a greater sum. Thus in debt upon bond, conditioned to pay 8*l.* &c.; defendant pleaded payment of 5*l.* before the day mentioned in the condition, which the obligor accepted in satisfaction of the bond; and upon demurrer this was adjudged a good plea. Moor 677. Vide 3 Bul. 301.

But if the defendant plead payment generally, without alleging, that it was in satisfaction of the debt, it is as bad on demurrer. 5 Rep. 117.

But payment after the day of a less sum is not good, as the bond is forfeited, at common law; and there is not any statute to relieve. Thus, debt upon bond, conditioned, that in consideration the plaintiff had paid 12*l.* to the defendant, he became bound to pay the plaintiff 12*l.* if he lived one month after the date of that bond; and if not paid at that time, then to pay to him 14*l.* if he lived six months after the date of the bond; the defendant pleaded, that, after the six months, he paid the plaintiff 8*l.* and then gave him another bond in the penalty of 20*l.* conditioned to pay him 10*l.* on a certain day, in full satisfaction of the other bond, and that the plaintiff did accordingly accept the said bond; upon a demurrer to this plea it was held ill; for admitting that one bond might be given in satisfaction of another, yet it cannot be after the other is forfeited, as it was in this case; because after the forfeiture the penalty is vested in the obligee, and a less sum cannot be a satisfaction for a greater. 1 Lut. 464.

But by the stat. 12 Ann. c. 16. payment after the day specified in the condition, may be pleaded.

It hath been adjudged, that the acceptance of one bond cannot be pleaded in satisfaction of another bond. Cro. Car. 85. Moore 872. Cro. Eliz. 716, 727. 2 Cro. 579. because the acceptance of a new bond to pay money at another day, could not be a present satisfaction for the money due on the day when it was to be paid on the old bond. Hob. 68. But it is otherwise where the second bond is not given by the original obligor, as if a defendant be sued as heir, and he plead that his ancestor, the obligor, died intestate, and that W. R. administered, who gave the plaintiff another bond in satisfaction of the former: there a verdict must be taken for the defendant: and this is the distinction, viz. that if the obligor, who gave the first bond, likewise give the second, it will not discharge the first; but in case the second bond be not given by him who gave the first, but by his administrator, which mends the security, (because he may be chargeable de bonis propriis:) for that reason the second bond will be a discharge of the first. 1 Mod. 225.

ACCESSARY, (particeps criminis) from the Latin word accedo: qui alium accedit in vitio impetrando.) signifies a man that is guilty of a felonious offence, not principally, but by participation, as by command, advice, or concealment, and is of two sorts, 1st, before the offence or fact; 2dly, after the offence.

—— Before the fact.] An accessary before the fact is he, that being absent at the time of the felony committed do by get procure, counsel, command, or abet another to commit a felony, and it is an offence greater than the accessary after; and therefore in many cases clergy is taken away from accessaries before, which yet is not taken away from accessaries after, as in petit treason, murder, robbery, and wilful burning, but by 4 & 5 P. & M. c. 4. 1 Hale's History of the Pleas of the Crown 615 —If the commander or counsellor be present, he is a principal. H. H. P. C. 616. Words which sound in bare permission, make not an accessary, as if A. says he will kill J. S. and B. says, you may do your pleasure for me, this makes not B. accessary, 1 H.H P. C. 616. 21 Hen. 7, 36, 37. Cromp. 41. b. If A. hires B. to mingle or lay poison for C. and B. doth it accordingly, and C. is poisoned; B. though absent, is principal, and A. is accessary; but if A. were present at the mingling or laying of the poison, though both were absent at the taking of it, yet both are principal, for they are both equally acting in the poisoning. But if A. buys the materials of the poison, knowing and consenting to the design, and deliver them to B. to mingle and apply it, or lay it in the absence of A. here it seems A. is only accessary before. H.H. P.C. 616. See 3 Inst. p. 50. State Tr. vol. 1. p. 329.

There cannot be an accessary before the fact in manslaughter, because it is committed of a sudden, and unpremeditated. H. P. C. 317. He who counsels or commands any evil shall be adjudged accessary to all that follows upon it, but not to any thing else. If a person commandeth another to beat such a person, and he beats him so that he dies of his wounds, the person commanding will be accessary to the murder. Ibid.

But if the command had been to beat another person, or to burn such a house, and he burns another, he that commandeth will not be accessary. 3 Inst. 51. If I command a person to do an unlawful act, as to rob A. B. at one place, and he doth it at another; or to rob him on such a day, and he doth it not himself, but procures another to do it; or to kill by poison, and he does it by violence; in all these cases I shall be accessary: but where the command is to kill A. B. and he killeth A. D. this difference in substance will not make the commander accessary. Plowd. 475. If a man counsels a woman to murder the child in her womb, and the woman murder her child after it is born, he is accessary to the murder. Dyer 185.

—— After the fact.] An accessary after the fact is he that receives, assists or comforts any man that hath committed murder or felony, which hath come to his knowledge; but this doth not extend to a woman who receives or assists her husband, though a husband receiving his wife will be accessary: and a servant may be accessary in relieving his master, or assisting him in his escape. 3 Inst. 108.

If the wife alone, the husband being ignorant of it, do knowingly receive a felon, the wife is accessary and not the husband. 1 H. H. P. C. 621.

But if felons come to the house of D. and M. his wife, and M. know them to be felons, though D. doth not, and both D. and M. receive and entertain them, but M. consents not to the felony: adjudged that this makes not M. accessary. 3 Inst. 108. cap. 47. cites Mi. 37 E. 3. Dey's case.

But if the husband and wife both receive a felon knowingly, it shall be judged only the act of the husband, and the wife shall be acquitted. 1 H. H. P. C. 621.

If a felon comes to the house of another, and he permits him to escape without arrest, knowing him to have committed felony, this doth not make a man accessary; but if he takes money of the felon to suffer such escape, it makes him an accessary: and so it is if he shut the fore door of his house, whereby the pursuers are deceived, for here is not a bare omission, but an act done. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 619.

Accessaries after the fact can only be in felonies, and in those felonies where, by the law, judgment of death regularly ought to ensue; and therefore there is no accessary in petit larceny, homicide per infortunium or homicide se defendendo. 1 H. H. P. C. 618.

By statute 3 W. & M. c. 9. s. 4. "Receivers of stolen goods, knowing them to be stolen, are to be deemed accessaries after the fact, and suffer as such." But because these receivers often concealed the principal felons, and thereby escaped being punished as accessaries; therefore by 1 Ann. c. 9. s. 2. it is enacted, that "whosoever shall buy or receive stolen goods, knowing them to be stolen, may be prosecuted for a misdemeanor, and punished by fine and imprisonment, though the principal felon be not convicted;" and this shall exempt them from being punished as accessaries, if the principal shall afterwards be convicted. But by 5 Ann. c. 31. s. 5, it is enacted, that "if any person shall receive or buy knowingly any stolen goods, or knowingly harbour or conceal any felon, he shall be taken as accessary to the felony, and shall suffer as a felon." This statute does not take away the benefit of clergy; but by statute 4 Geo. 1. c. 11. s. 1. such person may be transported for fourteen years. And by this last mentioned statute it is also enacted, that "whosoever shall take a reward under the pretence of helping any one to stolen goods, shall suffer as a felon, as if he himself had stolen them, unless he cause such felon to be apprehended and brought to trial, and give evidence against him."

If any person, knowing another to have committed piracy, shall on the land or sea receive, entertain, or conceal him, or receive or take into their custody any ship, vessel, or goods, which have been piratically taken, he shall be adjudged accessary to the piracy. 11 & 12 W. 3. cap. 7. s. 9, 10.

—— In what Offences.] As to felonies at common law it is said, that accessaries both before and after are included: and as to felonies by act of parliament; regularly if an act of parliament enact an offence to be felony, though it mention nothing of accessaries before or after, yet virtually and consequentially those, who counsel or command the offence, are accessaries before, and those that knowingly receive the offender, are accessaries after; as in the case of rape made felony by the statute of Westminster 2. c. 34. 1 H. H. P. C. 613. 2 Inst. 434. Staundf. P. C. lib. 1. c. 47.

But if the act of parliament, that makes the felony, in express terms comprehend accessaries before, and makes no mention of accessaries after, namely, receivers or comforters, there it seems there can be no accessaries after; for the expression of procurers, counsellors, abettors, (all which import accessaries before,) makes it evident, that the law-makers did not intend to include accessaries after, which is an offence of a lower degree than accessaries before; as the statute of 8 Hen. 6. c. 12. for stealing of records, the statute 33 Hen. 8. c. 8. for witchcraft, &c. 1 H. H. P. C. 614.

In the highest capital offence, namely, high treason, there are no accessaries, neither before nor after; for all consenters, aiders, abettors, and knowing receivers and comforters of traitors are principals. 1 H. H. P. C. 613.

In cases that are criminal but not capital, as in trespass, mayhem, or præmunire, there are no accessaries, for all the accessaries before are in the same degree as principals; and accessaries after by receiving the offenders, cannot be in law under any penalties as accessaries, unless the acts of parliament that induce those penalties, do expressly extend to receivers or comforters, as some do. 1 H. H. C. P. 613. And though generally an act of parliament, creating a felony, renders (consequentially) accessaries before and after within the same penalty, yet the special penning of the act of parliament in such cases sometimes varies the case. Thus the statute of 3 Hen. 7. c. 2. for taking away maidens, &c. makes the offender, and the procuring and abetting, yea, and wittingly receiving also, to be all equally principal felonies, and excluded of clergy. 1 H. H. P. C. 614.

—— Proceedings against.] By the statute 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 24. the accessary is indictable in that county where he was accessary, and shall be tried there, as if the felony had been committed in the same county; and the justices, before whom the accessary is, shall write to the justices before whom the principal is attainted, for the record of the attainder. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 623. This writing is to be by writ in the king's name, under the teste of the justice so sending it. Dyer 253. b. The accessary may be indicted in the same indictment with the principal, and that is the best and most usual way; though he may be indicted in another indictment, but then such indictment must contain the certainty and kind of the principal felony. 1 H. H. P. C. 623.

Formerly it was held, that the accessary might be tried and punished as if the principal had been attainted; and this, although the principal was admitted to his clergy, pardoned, or otherwise delivered before attainder. And if the principal be erroneously attainted, yet the accessary shall be put to answer, and shall not take advantage of the error in that attainder; but the principal reversing the attainder, reverseth the attainder of the accessary. 1 H. H. P. C. 625.

Where the principal is not attainted, but discharged by being burnt in the hand only, the accessary after the fact, ought to be discharged without burning in the hand, on being put to his book. Cro. Car. 366. pl. 3. Hill. 15 Car. B. R. Steven's Case.

But now the accessary shall not be constrained to answer to his indictment, till the principal be tried; yet if he will waive that benefit, and put himself upon his trial before the principal be tried, he may; and his acquittal or conviction upon such trial is good. But it seems necessary in such case to respite judgment till the principal be convicted and attainted; for if the principal be after acquitted, that conviction of the accessary is annulled, and no judgment ought to be given against him; but if he be acquitted of the accessary, that acquittal is good, and he shall be discharged. 1 H. H. P. C. 623, 624.

And it seems to be settled at this day, that if the principal and accessary appear together, and the principal plead the general issue, the accessary shall be put to plead also; and that if he likewise plead the general issue, both may be tried by one inquest; but that the principal must be first convicted; and that the jury shall be charged, that if they find the principal not guilty, they shall find the accessary not guilty. But it seems agreed, that if the principal plead a plea in bar, or abatement, or a former acquittal, the accessary shall not be forced to answer, till that plea be determined; for if it be found for the principal, the accessary is discharged; if against the principal, yet he shall after plead over to the felony, and may be acquitted. 1 H. H. P. C. 624. 2 Hawk. 323. Where there are two principals, the attainder of one of them gives sufficient foundation to arraign the accessary. Jenk. Cent. 76. Hawk. P. C. tit. Accessary.

ACCOLA, an husbandman who came from some other parts or country to till the lands, ex quod adscriptus terræ colat.—And is thus distinguished from Incola, viz. Accola non proprium, propriam colit Incola terram. Du Fresne. Cowel. Blount.

ACCOLADE, (from the French accoller, collum amplecti,) a ceremony used in knighthood, by the king's putting his hand upon the knight's neck. Cowel. Blount.

ACCOMPLICES. Since the course of admitting approvements (see Approver,) hath been damped, all the good that could be expected from the method of approvement, or the confession and appeal of an accomplice, is fully provided for by divers statutes. 4 Black. 330.

Thus by 4 & 5 Will. & Mar. c. 8. in highway robberies—by 6 & 7 Will. 3. c. 17. and 15 Geo. 2. c. 28. in clipping and coining—by 10 & 11 Will. 3. c. 23. and 3 Ann. c. 31. in burglary, house-breaking, horse stealing, and shop lifting, it is enacted, that if any such offender therein, being out of prison, shall discover two or more persons who have committed the like offences so as they may be convicted thereof, he shall in case of burglary or house-breaking, receive a reward of 40*l.* for each, and in general be entitled to a pardon of all capital offences, excepting only murder and treason, and of the latter also in the case of coining.

The foregoing acts relate only to persons who are at large; and to entitle themselves to pardon they must actually convict two offenders at the least, for if their confession be such on their trial, as the jury gives no credit to, they are liable to prosecution. Cowper's Rep. 335.

Also by 5 Geo. 3. c. 14. persons stealing fish out of private waters, surrendering to a justice and convicting one or more of their accomplices—by 12 Geo. 3. c. 48. offenders using stamps, a second time, being out of prison, and convicting one or more of their accomplices—or by 8 Geo. 2. c. 20. destroying locks on navigable rivers, and being out of prison, convicting one or more accomplices, are respectively entitled to a pardon.

Likewise by 6 Geo. 1. c. 28. offenders opposing the execution of process in the mint, not being in prison, discovering and convicting two accomplices are entitled to a reward of 40*l.* for each—by 6 Geo. 1. c. 21. persons to the number of eight and armed, resisting officers of customs, discovering within two months two accomplices, are entitled to a reward of 40*l.* for each, on their conviction—by 8 Geo. 1. c. 18. receivers of foreign goods, who within two months discover two accomplices (the goods recovered to the king's use exceeding 50*l.*) are entitled to a reward of 40*l.* for each on conviction: and by 9 Geo. 2. c. 35. offenders who have assembled armed to be aiding in the removing of goods, being three or more in company, who shall within three months discover two accomplices, are entitled to a reward of 50*l.* for each upon conviction, besides which, all such offenders so discovering such accomplices, are by the said several acts, by such conviction to have a pardon of their own offences therein.

Also by 19 Geo. 2. c. 34. s. 10, 11. persons discovering any person guilty of any of the following offences, viz. in assembling armed, to the number of three, to assist in the illegal exporting or removing of goods, or appearing in disguise with such goods, or who shall resist officers in the execution of their duty, from whom the benefit of clergy is taken, (see Smuggling,) and against whom a proclamation shall have issued for his surrender, shall have a reward of 500*l.* and any accomplice not proclaimed, who shall discover and apprehend any other offender, shall be pardoned, and have a share of the reward; and if any of the said offenders, before proclaimed, discover two or more accomplices, they shall have a reward of 50*l.* for each on conviction, and be moreover entitled to a pardon of his own offence, and all other like offences before committed.

Also by 29 Geo. 2. c. 30. persons stealing lead, iron, copper, brass, bell-metal, or solder, discovering two or more buyers or receivers thereof, or any person to whom it was offered to be sold, pawned, or delivered, without his apprehending of the offender, are on conviction of such persons to be entitled to a pardon.

Also by 2 Geo. 3. c. 28. persons stealing part of the cargo of any vessel in the Thames, convicting two or more buyers or receivers thereof, are entitled to a pardon.

Also by 22 Geo. 3. c. 28. felons without benefit of clergy, under fifteen years of age, who shall convict two buyers or receivers of the stolen goods, are likewise entitled to a pardon.

And it is usual to insert in the acts which establish and regulate state lotteries, a clause, whereby accomplices discovering an offender in counterfeiting lottery orders, are entitled to a pardon.

All such accomplices as are described in the above statutes, and also those persons to whom the king, by special proclamation in the Gazette, or otherwise, has promised his pardon, and who come in under the royal faith and promise, and discover their accomplices according to the terms prescribed, have a right to a pardon. Cowper's Rep. 334.

A practice has also been introduced and adopted in analogy to the old law of approvement, by which an accomplice may be entitled to a recommendation to the king's mercy, but not to a pardon as of legal right; which he may plead in bar, or avail himself on his trial. It is where an accomplice having made a full and fair confession of the whole truth, is in consequence thereof admitted evidence for the crown; and that evidence is afterwards made use of to convict the other offenders: if he act fairly and openly and discover the whole truth, though he is not entitled of right to a pardon, yet the usage, the practice, and the lenity of the court, is to stop the prosecution against him: and he has an equitable title to a recommendation for the king's mercy:—it holds out a kind of hope, that accomplices who behave fairly and disclose the whole truth, and bring others to justice, should escape punishment and be pardoned. Cowper's Rep. 336.

But a justice of the peace cannot pardon the offender, and tell him he shall be a witness against others: he cannot select whom he pleases, to pardon or prosecute, and the prosecutor has even a less pretence to select, than the justice of the peace: however, if the justices deceive the accomplice under a promise or assurance, or hope of pardon from them, which in strictness they have no right to make, yet if he make a full and fair disclosure, at the time of his examination of all he knows, he will be entitled to a recommendation to mercy; and the king's bench will in this case bail him, in order that he may apply for the king's pardon; or the justices of gaol delivery, on all the circumstances relative to the prisoner's claims of indemnity being laid before them, will exercise their discretion in deferring the trial accordingly. Cowper's Rep. 336.

ACCOMPT, (computus) is taken for a writ or action which lies against a bailiff or receiver, who ought to render an account to his lord or master, but refuseth. F. N. B. 116. Cowel. Blount.

If I make J. S. my bailiff or receiver, and he make a deputy, I must have accompt against the bailiff or receiver himself, and not against the deputy, for the receipt of the deputy was to the use of his master. Fitz. N. B. 119. b. 4 Leo. 32.

A bailiff who is understood to be a servant, who hath administration and charge of lands, goods, and chattels to make the best benefit for the owner, may be charged in accompt, for the profits which he hath raised or made, his reasonable charges and expences deducted. Co. Lit. 172. a.

But he cannot be charged as a receiver, (who is one who receiveth money, and is to render an account of it, but is not allowed any charges or expences, except what are agreed on by the parties,) for if such bailiff were to be charged as a receiver, he would lose the allowance of his charges and expences. Co. Lit. 172. a. Rol. Abr. 119.

In assumpsit for money received ad computandum, and verdict for the plaintiff, it was moved in arrest of judgment, that this action did not lie, but accompt; for if a man receives money to a special purpose, as to account, or to merchandize, it is not to be demanded of the party as a duty, till he has neglected or refused to apply it according to the trust, under which he received it; and the declaration must shew a misapplication or a breach of trust: but this objection being taken after verdict, it was holden that such verdict had aided the declaration, and that in such a case it must be intended that there was proof to the jury, that the defendant refused to account, or had done something else that rendered him an absolute debtor. Salk. 9. pl. 2. 2 Show. Rep. 301.

The writ of account de compto, (Fitz. N. B. 116.) commands the defendant to render a just account to the plaintiff, or shew the court good cause to the contrary. 3 Black. 162.

And the process in account is summons, pone, and distress, and upon a nihil returned, the plaintiff may proceed to outlawry. And it is to be observed, that the statute of limitations, 21 Jac. 1. c. 16 doth not bar a man who is a merchant from bringing his action of accompt, for merchandize at any time, though all other actions of accompt are within the statute. Morgan, tit. Ac.

And the defendant cannot in an action of accompt, pay money into court as he may in an assumpsit. Bul. N. P 128.

——Judgment in.] In an action of accompt there are two judgments, the first is quod computet, after which the court assigns auditors, usually two of the officers of the court, who are armed with authority to convene the parties before them, de die in diem at any day or place, that they shall appoint, till the account is determined; the time by which the account is to be settled is prefixed by the court; but if the account be of a long and confused nature, the court, on application, will enlarge the time: if either of the parties think they do them injustice, they may apply to the court, and if the defendant denies any article, or demurs to any demand, it is to be tried and determined in court. Mod. 42 Brown. 24. Co. Ent. 46. Lutw. 49. Rast. 14. Lutw. 50.

Whatever might have been pleaded in bar to this action in the first instance, shall never be allowed of, as a good discharge upon the judgment quod computet before the auditors; as, if the defendant plead that he never was his receiver, or the like: but it is a good discharge before the auditors for a factor to say, that in a tempest the goods were cast overboard, or that he was robbed of the goods, without default or negligence. 1 Bac. Abr. tit. Ac. F.

So it is a good discharge, before the auditors, if the receiver renders back the money delivered to him to make profit of it, and swears that after the time he received it, he found that he durst not buy for fear of loss, for he is not obliged to run any hazard himself. Ibid.

And nothing can be pleaded before auditors contrary to what has been pleaded in the action, and found by the verdict: thus, if the plea of plene computavit be found against the defendant, he shall account before the auditors, for the whole money he is charged with, for this plea admits the receipt of the whole. 1 Lutw. 63.

And where a defendant, charged as surviving bailiff, of goods delivered to him and his co-bailiff, to be merchandized, and to render an account, had gone to issue upon this fact, viz. whether upon his delivering over the goods to the deceased bailiff all his (the defendant's) concerns in the trust, care, and management thereof ceased, and was at an end; which issue was found against him, it was holden that he could not afterwards plead before the auditors, that he delivered the goods over to the co-bailiff, with the consent of the plaintiff: for this matter might have been given in evidence upon the former issue: and the consequence of admitting it, to be put in issue before the auditors, would have been either two verdicts the same way, which would have been nugatory, or two contradictory verdicts, which would have entangled the court so much, that they would not have known what judgment to have given, Godfrey v. Saunders, 3 Wils. 114.

The second or next judgment after the first quod computet, is when the account is finished, that the defendant pay the plaintiff so much as he is found in arrear. 1 Brown 24. Cro. Eliz. 86. 3 Bl. Com. 163.

Upon the first judgment a capias ad computandum lies, and if a non est inventus be returned upon it, an exigent issues. 1 Bac. Abr. tit. Ac. G.

It is usual to bail the defendant, if he be taken on the capias, though by the rigour of the law, he is to account (in vinculis) that is, in prison. Ibid.

If the defendant make default, after the interlocutory judgment, at the day assigned by the auditors, final judgment shall be entered for the sum demanded by the plaintiff. Cro. Eliz. 806. 3 Wils. 117. Co. Lit. 139 b. 11 Co. 39. 27 E. 387. 2 Rol. Abr. 131. pl. 4.

So if there be judgment on demurrer, to an insufficient plea, before the auditors. Ibid.

But if final judgment be entered in the first instance, the court will set it aside, on motion, as irregular. Cas. B. R. H. 394. And. 29.

It seems to be questionable, whether in all cases, damages are recoverable in account: but it is clear, that if the defendant resist the plaintiff's claim, by pleading, or where an increase is received by a receiver ad merchantisandum, there shall be judgment for damages. Jenk. 288. 1 Rol. Abr. 575. 1 Leo. 302. 2 Leo. 118. 3 Wils. 117.

It hath been holden that the first judgment is not such, as can be revived by scire facias, upon the death of the plaintiff, before the accounts taken; or as, a writ of error can be brought upon; and yet the plaintiff cannot be nonsuited after it. 1 Bac. Abr. tit. Ac. G.

After final judgment, the plaintiff ought to pray that the defendant's body may be taken in execution; or he may pray an elegit if he refuses the body: and in the Reg. 137. there is a writ to the gaoler to receive the body of the defendant after final judgment. Lutw. 51. 1 Bac. Abr. tit. Ac. G.

The proceedings in this action being difficult, dilatory, and expensive, it is now seldom used, especially if the party have other remedy, as debt, covenant, case; or if the demand be of consequence and the matter of an intricate nature; for in such case it is more advisable to resort to a court of equity, where matters of accompt are more commodiously adjusted, and determined more advantageously for both parties; the plaintiff being entitled to a discovery of books, papers, and the defendant's own oath; and on the other hand the defendant being allowed to discount the sums paid or expended by him; to discharge himself of sums under 40*s.* by his own oath; and if by answer or other writing he charges himself, by the same to discharge himself, which will be good, if there be no other evidence: further, all reasonable allowances are made to him; and if after the accompt is stated, any thing be due to him upon the balance, he is entitled to a decree in his favour. 1 Bac. Abr. Tit. Ac.

However from the experiment made of this action in the case of Godfrey v. Saunders, 3 Wills. 94. a matter (which had been fruitlessly depending in chancery upwards of twelve years, but was thoroughly examined and finally determined in this form of action in the course of two years,) it may still, notwithstanding its general disuse, be proper to give in this place, the leading principles on which it may be proceeded in.

—— Where it lies.] By the common law account lay only against a guardian in socage, bailiff, or receiver, or by one in favour of trade and commerce, naming himself merchant, against another naming himself merchant, and the executors of a merchant; for between these there was such a privity, that the law presumed them conusant of each others disbursements, receipts, and acquittances. 1 Bac. Abr. tit. Ac.

But the stat. 13 Ed. 3. c. 23. gives an action of account to the executors of a merchant; the stat. 25 Ed. 3. c. 5. to executors, of executors; the stat. 31 Ed. 3. c. 11. to administrators: and by the stat. 3 & 4 Ann. c. 16. actions of account may be brought against the executors and administrators of every guardian, bailiff and receiver, and by one joint-tenant, tenant in common, his executors and administrators against the other as bailiff, for receiving more than his share, and against their executors and administrators.

ACCOMPTANT GENERAL, a new officer in the court of Chancery, appointed by act of parliament, to receive and account for all money belonging to the suitors of the court, in the place of the masters, which monies are to be paid into the Bank, with the privity of such accomptant general, and laid out in the 3 per cent. consols, in trust for the parties, and to be taken out by order of the court; and he shall only keep the account with the Bank, for the Bank is to be answerable for all money received by them, and not the accomptant general. 12 Geo. 1. c. 32. No fees shall be taken by this officer or his clerks, on pain of being punished for extortion; but they are to be paid salaries.

Counterfeiting the hand of the accomptant general is felony without clergy. 12 Geo. 1. c. 32. s. 9.

ACCORD and SATISFACTION. Accord is an agreement between two or more persons, where one is injured by a trespass, or offence done, or on a contract, to give on the one part and receive on the other, some recompence as a satisfaction: this agreement when executed and performed, shall be a good bar in law, if the other party after the accord performed, bring any action for the same. Terms de Ley.

For in all personal injuries, the law gives damages as an equivalent, and when the party accepts of an equivalent, there is no injury or cause of complaint, and therefore accord and present satisfaction is a good plea: but if the wrong doer only promise a future satisfaction, the injury continues till satisfaction is actually made; and consequently there is a cause of complaint in being; and if the trespass were barred by this plea, the plaintiff would have no remedy for the future satisfaction, for that supposes the injury to have continuance. 5 E. 4. 7. Plow. 5 b. Roll. Abr. 129. Raym. 450. 2 Keb. 332. 2 Jones, 158, 168. But if the defendant has promised to pay the plaintiff so much as a satisfaction, in case the plaintiff will not sue for the trespass, assumpsit will lie on that promise. 1 Bac. Abr. tit. Ac.

Accord with satisfaction is a good plea in all personal actions, where damages only are to be recovered; and in all actions which suppose a wrong vi et armis, where a capias and exigent lie at the common law; in trespass and ejectment, detinue, and the like, accord is a good plea: so in an appeal of maihem. But in real actions it is not a good plea. 4 Rep. 1, 9, 70. 9 Rep. 77.

So when a duty in certain accrues by the deed, tempore confectionis scripti, as by covenant, bill, or obligation, to pay a certain sum of money; this certain duty takes its essence originally and only by writing, and therefore ought to be avoided by matter of as high a nature, though the duty be merely in the personalty. 6 Co. 43. Latm. 358. Cro. Jac. 254.

Thus if the debt is certain, on a deed or obligation, the accord and satisfaction must also be by deed and so pleaded, 2 Wils. 86. and for how far the acceptance of one bond in lieu of another, or for a less sum than the sum secured will be good. See title Acceptance.

But if in covenant against a lessee, a breach is assigned, in not repairing the house, the defendant may plead an accord between himself and the plaintiff and execution thereof, in satisfactione, et exoneratione reparationum prædi. for no certain duty accrued by the deed, and the action is founded upon a tort or default subsequent to the deed, and damages are only to be recovered, which are in the personalty. Palm. 110. All. 39. Cro. Jac. 304. Co. Ent. 117. Yelv. 125. 1 Bac. Abr. tit. Ac. B.

It is to be observed, that accord executed only is pleadable in bar, and executory not. 1 Mod. 69. Also in pleading it, it is the safest to plead it by way of satisfaction, and not of accord alone. For if it be pleaded by way of accord, a precise execution thereof in every part must be pleaded: but, by way of satisfaction, the defendant need only allege, that he paid the plaintiff such a sum, in full satisfaction of the accord, which the plaintiff received, 9 Rep. 80. The defendant must plead, that the plaintiff accepted the thing agreed upon in full satisfaction. And if it be on a bond, it must be in satisfaction of the money, mentioned in the condition, and not of the bond; which cannot be discharged but by writing under hand and seal. Cro. Jac. 254, 650.

ACCOUNT in EQUITY.] A court of equity will entertain jurisdiction of a suit, though remedy might perhaps be had in the courts of common law: the ground upon which the courts of equity first interfered in these cases, seems to have been the difficulty of proceeding to the full extent of justice in the courts of common law; or perhaps to prevent multiplicity of suits. Mitford 109-10.

Thus though accounts may be taken before auditors in an action of accompt in a court of common law (see title Accompt) yet a court of equity by its mode of proceeding is enabled to investigate more effectually long and intricate accounts in an adverse way, and to compel payment of the balance which ever way it turns. Ibid. 110.

And the interference of courts of equity is peculiarly effective in correcting errors, or detecting fraud in accounts, relied upon as stated and settled, by allowing the plaintiff, in case of specific error alleged and proved, to surcharge and falsify, and in the case of fraud opening the whole account: and a party who is at liberty to surcharge and falsify, is not merely confined to errors in fact, but may take advantage of errors in law. 2 Atk. 112. 119. 1 Fonbl. 15.

The jurisdiction exercised by courts of equity in matters of account, is however, in many cases bounded by the discovery; as where a suit is instituted for an account of waste of timber, without praying injunction, the plaintiff will have a decree for an account of the timber felled, though he cannot have a decree for relief: so where the bill seeks an account of ore dug, because the working of a mine is a kind of trade. 1 Fonbl. 13, 14.

Neither will equity in all cases decree an account of mesne profits, for "where a man has title to the possession of lands and makes an entry, whereby he becomes entitled to damages at law, for the time that possession was detained from him, he shall not after his entry, turn that action at law into a suit in equity, and bring a bill for an account of the profits, except in the case of an infant, or some other very particular circumstances," which particular circumstances extend to all those cases which involve an equity, which the plaintiff cannot make available at law. Fonbl. 14.

To a bill for an account, a plea of a stated account is a good bar. 1 Vern. 180. 2 Atk. 1. But it must shew that the account was in writing, or at least it must set forth the balance, 2 Atk. 399. And if the bill charges that, the plaintiff has no counterpart of the account, the account should be annexed by way of schedule to the answer, that if there are any errors upon the face of it, the plaintiff may have an opportunity of pointing them out. 3 Atk. 303. Also if error or fraud are charged, they must be denied by the plea as well as by way of answer. Gilb. Ca. 56. And if neither error nor fraud is charged, the defendant must by the plea, aver that the stated account, is just and true to the best of his knowledge and belief. 3 Atk. 70. And the delivering up of vouchers at the time the account was stated seems to be a proper averment in a plea of this nature, Gilb. Ca. if the fact was such. Mitf. 208—9.

ACCROCHE, (from the French accrocher). To hook or grapple unto. It signifies as much as to encroach: thus the accroaching or attempting to exercise royal power (a very uncertain charge,) was in 4 Ed. 3. held to be treason, in a knight of Hertfordshire who forcibly assaulted and detained one of the king's subjects till he paid him 90*l.* The French use it for delay; as, accrocher un procese, to stay the proceedings in a suit. Cowel. Blount. 4 Black. 79—6. 1 Hal. P. C. 80.

ACCUSATION, (accusatio) To charge any person with a crime. By Magna Charta, no man shall be imprisoned or condemned on any accusation, without trial by his peers, or the law. None shall be vexed upon any accusation, but according to the law of the land: and no man may be molested by petition to the king, &c. unless it be by indictment, or presentment of lawful men, or by process at common law. 25 Ed. 3. 28 Ed. 3. c. 3. None shall be compelled to answer an accusation to the king, without presentment, or some matter of record. Stat. 42 Ed. 3. Promoters of suggestions are to find surety to pursue them, and not making them good, shall satisfy damages to the party accused, and pay a fine to the king. 38 Ed. 3. c. 9. In treason there must be two lawful accusers. Stat. 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 11. s. 12. 1 P & M. c. 10. s. 11.

ACEPHALI, the levellers in the reign of king Hen. 1. who acknowledged no head or superior. Leges H. 1. They were reckoned so poor that they had not a tenement by which they might acknowledge a superior lord. Du Cange. Cowel. Blount.

AC ETIAM BILLÆ, the words or a clause added to a writ, where the action requires bail. The statute 13 Car. 2. c. 2. enjoins the cause of action to be particularly expressed in the writ or process, to hold a person to bail, by inserting therein, after the words to answer in a plea of trespass, and also according to the custom of the court in a certain plea of trespass on the case upon promises to the value of 20*l.* &c. but it ought not to be made out against a peer of the realm, or upon a penal statute, or against an executor or administrator, or for any debt under 10*l.* in the superior courts. Nor in any action of account, action of covenant, or the like, unless the damages are 10*l.* or more: nor in trover, action of trespass, or for battery, wounding or imprisonment; except there be an order of court for it, or a warrant under the hand of one of the judges of the court out of which the writ issues. The sum sworn to by the plaintiff, is to be marked on the back of the process: and then the sheriff or like officer, must arrest the body of the defendant, and return the writ with a cepi corpus indorsed thereon. 3 Black. 288.

ACHAT, (French achet) signifies a contract or bargain. Purveyors by statute 36 Ed. 3. were called achators, from their frequent making of bargains. Cowel.

ACHERSET, a measure of corn, conjectured to be the same with our quarter or eight bushels. Cowel.

ACHOLITE, (acholitus) an inferior church servant, who, next under the subdeacon, followed or waited on the priests or deacon, and performed the meaner offices of lighting the candles, carrying the bread and wine, and paying other servile attendance.

This officer, an acholite, was in our old English called a colet, from which appellation came the family of dean Colet founder of St. Paul's School. Cowel.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT MONEY, is a sum paid in some parts of England by tenants on the death of their landlords, as an acknowledgment of their new lords. Cowel. Blount.

ACQUITANDIS PLEGIIS, a writ of justices, lying for the surety against a creditor, who refuses to acquit him after the debt is satisfied. Reg. of Writs, 158. Cowel. Blount.

ACQUIETANTIA DE SHIRIS ET HUNDREDIS, to be free from suits and services in shires and hundreds. Cowel.

ACQUIETARE, is a law word, signifying quietum reddere. Dr. Wilk. Gloss. And it also sometimes signifies to pay. Mon. Angl. tom. 1 fol. 199. Cowel. Blount.

ACQUITTAL, (from the French word acquitter, and the Latin compound acquietare) to free, acquit, or discharge; it most commonly signifies a deliverance and setting free of a person from the suspicion or guilt of an offence; as, for instance, he that on a trial is discharged of a felony, is said to be acquietatus de felonia; and if he be drawn in question again for the same crime, he may plead auter foits acquit; as his life shall not be twice put in danger for the same offence. 2 Inst. 385. And when two are indicted, the one as principal, and the other as accessary, the principal being discharged, the accessary of consequence will be acquitted by law. Staunf. P. C. 168.

And when a person is found Not guilty of the offence by a jury, on verdict, he is acquitted in fact. But in murder, if a man is acquitted, appeal may be brought against him. 3 Inst. 273.

And by statute 3 Hen. c. 1. if either principal or accessary be acquitted on an indictment for murder, the court may remit him to prison or bail him till the year and day (for appeal) be passed.

If one be acquitted on an indictment charging the offence at one time, and be afterwards indicted again in the same county, for such offence as committed at another time; here, notwithstanding that variance, the party may plead auter foits acquit, by averring it to be the same felony: so where a person is indicted a second time, for the felony, but at another vill, &c. 2 Hawk. 370. Where a man is discharged on special matter, found by the grand jury, yet he may be indicted de novo seven years afterwards, and cannot plead this acquittal; as he may upon the special matter found by the petit jury, and judgment given thereon. Ibid. 246.

And if a person is lawfully acquitted on a malicious prosecution, he may bring his action for damages, after he hath obtained a copy of the indictment; but it is usual for the judges of gaol delivery to deny a copy of an acquittal to him who intends to bring an action thereon, when there was probable cause for a criminal prosecution. Carth. Rep. 421.

ACQUITTAL also signifies in another sense, to be free from entries and molestations by a superior lord, for services issuing out of lands: for where there is a lord mesne and tenant, the tenant must do his service to the mesne only, and not to divers lords for one parcel of land. Co. Lit. 100. Cowel. Blount.

ACQUITTANCE, (acquietantia,) signifieth a release or discharge in writing, of a sum of money, or debt due, as, where a man is bound to pay rent, reserved upon a lease, &c. and the party to whom due, on receipt thereof, gives a writing under his hand witnessing that he is paid: this will be such a discharge in law, that he cannot demand and recover the sum or duty again, if the acquittance be produced. Terms de Ley 15. Dyer 6, 25, 51.

An acquittance is a discharge and bar in the law to actions. And if one acknowledges himself to be satisfied by deed, it may be a good plea in bar, without any thing received; but an acquittance, without seal, is only evidence of satisfaction, and not pleadable. L. D. by Morg.

It is observed, that a general receipt or acquittance in full of all demands, will discharge all debts, except such as are on specialty, viz. bonds, bills, and other instruments sealed and delivered; on which account those can be destroyed only by some other specialty of equal force, such as a general release, or the like. There being this difference between that and the general acquittance. Cro. Jac. 650.

But the producing an acquittance will not bar the action, if the plaintiff can by any means shew a mistake, and that he has not been paid, or paid so much as the acquittance is for. L. D. by Mory.

In some cases payment may be refused, unless an acquittance is given. Thus the obligor is not bound to pay money upon a single bond, except an acquittance be given him by the obligee; nor is he obliged to pay the money before he hath the acquittance. But in case of an obligation with a condition, it is otherwise; for there one may aver payment. And by 3 & 4 Ann. c. 16. If an action of debt is brought upon a single bill, and the defendant hath paid the money, such payment may be pleaded in bar of the action.

A servant may give an acquittance for the use of his master, where such servant usually receives his master's money, and a master shall be bound by it. Co. Lit. 112.

ACRE, (from the German acker, i. e. ager) a parcel of land, containing in length forty perches, and in breadth four perches; or in proportion to it, be the length or breadth more or less. By the customs of various countries, the perch differs in quantity, and consequently the acre of land. It is commonly but 16 feet and a half, but in Staffordshire it is 24 feet. According to the statute 34 Hen. 8. concerning the sowing of flax, it is declared that 160 perches make an acre, which is forty multiplied by four; and the ordinance of measuring land, 35 Ed. 1. agrees with this account. Cowel. Blount.——But the word acre formerly meant any open ground or field, as castle-acre, long-acre, west-acre, &c. and not a determined quantity of land. Cowel.—Also acre, or acre-fight, is an old sort of duel fought by single combatants, English and Scotch, between the frontiers of their kingdoms, with sword and lance; and this duelling was called camp-fight, and the combatants champions, from the open field that was the place of trial. Cowel.

ACTION, (actio.) Men in civil society are obliged to have recourse to the law and courts of justice for redress, when injured, and thereby measure their damages; this application is what is generally termed bringing an action, and an action (actio) as defined by Bracton, nihil aliud est quam jus prosequendi in judicio quod sibi debetur; or otherwise, a legal demand of one's right. Co. Lit. 285. 2 Inst. 40.

And actions are divided into criminal or civil: as for instance, criminal actions, are to have judgment of death, as appeals of death, robbery, &c. or only to have judgment for damage to the party, fine to the king, and imprisonment, as appeals of maihem, &c. Co. Lit. 284. 2 Inst. 40.

And civil actions are divided into real, personal, or mixed.

ACTIONS real] or relating unto lands are either droitural or in the right, or possessory: and the distinction between droitural and possessory depends on, whether it seek to recover the property or the possession: if the former, the action is droitural, if the latter, it is possessory, and Finch states this correctly; "real actions," says he, "where a freehold is to be recovered, are possessory or droitural, possessory, which are to recover a possession, as all assises, writs of ayel, besayel, and cosinage—droitural or in the right, which are to recover a possession mixed with the right: and both these may either be of a possession or right in himself, or descended from his ancestors, which we call auncestral. Finche's Law, 257, 8. and 1 Bac. Abr. 47. note by Gwillim, E. 6.

But the proceedings in these real actions being dilatory and expensive, and in many cases concluding the party upon one trial, a more commodious method was contrived to dispute the title of lands, which began in the reign of Hen. 7. in this manner; by forming a term for years; and then the lessees, bringing an ejectment to recover the term, and thereby to assert the title of the lessor of the plaintiff, in which, if they recovered, the courts of law likewise gave an habere facias possessionem to recover the term itself (for this see Ejectment.) Fitz. N. B. 220. 3 Black. 206.

ACTIONS personal] are such whereby a man claims a debt, a personal duty, or damages in lieu thereof; and, likewise whereby a man claims satisfaction in damages for some injury done to his person or property: the former are said to be founded ex contractu, that is, on contract: the latter ex delicto, that is upon torts and wrongs: of the former nature are all actions upon debt or promises: of the latter all actions for trespasses, nuisances, assaults, defamatory words, and the like. 3 Black. 117.

ACTIONS mixed] are suits partaking of the nature of the other two wherein some real property is demanded, and also personal damages for a wrong sustained; as, for instance: an action of waste: which is brought by him who hath the inheritance, in remainder or reversion, against the tenant for life, who hath committed waste therein, to recover not only the land wasted, which would make it merely a real action; but also treble damages; in pursuance of the statute of Gloucester, 6 Ed. 1. c. 5. which is a personal recompence; and so both being joined together, denominate it a mixed action. 3 Black. 118.

Parties to action dying.] Many personal actions die with the person. Thus if a lessee for years commit waste, and dies, action of waste may not be had against his executor or administrator, for waste done by the deceased. And where a keeper of a prison permits one in execution to escape, and afterwards dieth, no action will lie against his executors. But this must be understood, of that kind of keeper, to whom the prison actually belongs, as the marshal, the warden of the Fleet, not of a gaoler who acts as servant to a sheriff, for in such case, the death of the gaoler, is not any bar to an action against the sheriff, to whom in fact, the prison actually belongs.

So in assault, battery, slander, or other personal injuries; if either be that is the aggressor, or the party injured, die, the action is gone. But in other actions it is otherwise, for they survive.

Actions local.] Actions real and mixed, ejectment, waste, trespasses, quare clausum fregit, &c. are to be laid in the same county where the land lieth.

——— transitory.] Personal and transitory actions, as debt, detinue, assault and battery, &c. may be brought in any county, (except it be against officers of places, &c. by statute 21 Jac. 1.) Co. Lit. 282. Or against officers acting under particular acts of parliament, which frequently direct actions against them, to be laid in the respective counties, where the facts happen.

If the defendant is desirous to change the venue in transitory actions he must move the court on affidavit, that if the plaintiff hath any cause of action, such cause accrued in the county of, &c. and not where the plaintiff hath laid it, &c. and such motion must be made before issue joined; for by joining issue, he agrees with the plaintiff, as to the manner of bringing the action, and though the court seldom refuses on such an affidavit to change the venue, yet if, before or after the motion made, the plaintiff will enter into a rule, to offer material evidence, in the county where he laid his action, the cause will be tried there. 1 Sid. 44. 2 Salk. 669, 670.

But though the court, on application, seldom refuses to change the venue, yet there are cases in which the judges have refused; as where a peer of the realm brings an action of scandalum magnatum, the court will not change the venue; because a scandal raised on a peer reflects on him through the whole kingdom. 2 Mod. 215. 1 Lev. 56. S. P. A serjeant at law, barrister, attorney, or any other privileged person, whose attendance is necessary at Westminster-hall, may lay his action in Middlesex, though the cause of action accrued in another county; and the court, on the usual affidavit, will not change the venue. 2 Salk. 668, 670. 2 Show. Rep. 176, 177, 242. S. P.

Limitation of actions.] Actions are likewise limited, and cannot be determined except within a certain time.

Thus by statute 32 Hen. 8. c. 2. A writ of right for recovery of lands is to be brought within sixty years.

By 21 Jac. 1. c. 16. Writs of formedon for any title to lands in esse, are to be sued within twenty years.

Actions of debt, on the case, of account, detinue, trover, and trespass, are to be brought within six years.

Of assault and battery within four years.

And slander within two years.

But the right of action in these cases is saved to infants, feme coverts, and persons beyond sea. And on a fresh promise the time limited may be enlarged; also the taking out and filing of a writ, is a good commencement of an action to avoid the statute of limitations, if continuances be entered, to the time of declaring. 1 Lill. 19.

Joint actions] are where several persons are equally concerned, and the one cannot bring the action, or cannot be sued, without the other.

Several actions] are where persons are to be severally charged, as on trespass committed by many it is several. 2 Leon 77.

Parties to actions.] In all actions there must be a person able to sue; the party sued must be one sueable for the thing laid; and the plaintiff is to bring his right and proper action which the law gives him for relief. 1 Shep. Abr. 20.

A man attainted of treason or felony, convict of recusancy, an outlaw, excommunicated person, convict of præmunire, an alien enemy, &c. cannot bring an action, till pardon, reversal, absolution, &c. But executors or administrators, being outlawed, may sue in the right of the testator or intestate, though not in their own right. A feme covert must sue with her husband; and infants are to sue by guardian, &c. Co. Lit. 128. Actions may be brought against all persons, whether attainted of treason or felony, a convict recusant, outlawed, and excommunicate, &c. and a feme covert must be sued with her husband. 6 Rep. 3. Salk. 3.

Action on the case] is a general action given for redress of wrongs and injuries, done without force, and not particularly provided against by law, in order to have satisfaction for damage: and in actions upon the case, the like process is to be had as in actions of trespass or debt. 19 H. 7, c. 9. Terms de Ley 17.

In all cases where a man has a temporal loss, or damage by the wrong of another, he may have an action upon the case to be repaired in damages. But the particular damage must be specially alleged.

This action lies in a great variety of instances, of which the chief are,

1. Action on the case for words: which is brought for words spoken or written which affect a person's life, reputation, office, or trade, or tend to his loss of preferment, in marriage or service, or to his disinheritance, or which occasion him any particular damage. Comyn's Dig.

2. Action on the case likewise lies upon an assumpsit or undertaking; and such actions are founded on a contract either express or implied by law, and gives the party damages in proportion to the loss he has sustained by the violation of the contract. 4 Co. 92. Moore 667.

3. An action on the case likewise lies against carriers and others upon the custom of England: thus, if a person deliver goods to a common carrier, to carry them to a certain place, and he loseth them, action upon the case lies against him; for by the common custom of the realm he ought to carry them safely: it is the same of a common boyman or lighterman, who is a water-carrier of goods, but goods in this case may be thrown overboard in a tempest, to preserve the passenger's lives in the lighter, &c. and no action lies. 2 Bulst. 280. And if a common carrier is robbed of goods, he is chargeable for them, because he had his hire, and took upon himself the safe delivery of the goods. 1 Danv. 13.

So also a common inn-keeper is chargeable for goods stolen in his house, and though the inn-keeper be not of sound memory, it is said action lies against him: but if the inn-keeper be an infant, no action will lie against such infant; but the owner must be a guest. Moor 177. Latch 127. 8 Rep. 33. And if an inn-keeper refuse to entertain his guest, action on the case may be brought against him. Dyer 159.

This action also lies for deceit in contracts, bargains, and sales: as if a man sell by false weights or measures, or sells wine or other things, knowing the same to be corrupt, as good and not corrupt, though without warranty, action lies. Dyer 75. 4 Rep. 18. Cro. Jac. 276. Danv. 173.

So if a man sells a horse, and warrants him to be sound, if he be not, action on the case lies. But if he hath at the time visible infirmities, which the buyer may see, action on the case will not lie. Yelv. 114. Cro. Jac. 675.

If a surgeon neglects his patient, or applies unwholesome medicines, whereby the patient is injured, this action lieth. 3 Black. 122.

And if a counsel retained to appear on such a day in court, doth not come, by which the cause miscarries, action lies against him: so if after retainer, he become of counsel to the adversary against the plaintiff. 1 H. c. 18.

For stopping up a water-course or way, breaking down a party wall, stopping up ancient lights, and for any private nuisance to a man's water, light, or air, whereby a person is damnified, this action lieth. Cro. Eliz. 527. Yelv. 159. Where a smith promises to shoe my horse well, if he pricks him, action on the case lies; and so when he refuses to shoe him; on which I travel without, and my horse is damaged, action lies: so where goods pawned are not delivered, on offering the money. Ibid.

Where any one personates another, cheats at gaming; or where a surety is not saved harmless, this action lieth. 2 Inst. 193. So for the excessive use of an horse. Cro. Eliz. 14. 8 Rep. 146. For keeping a dog accustomed to bite sheep, if the owner know the vice of the dog. But not if it be without his consent, and he did not know the dog was accustomed to bite. 1 Danv. Abr. 19. Hetl. 171.

Action on the case will lie against a gaoler for putting irons on his prisoner; or putting him in the stocks, or not giving sufficient sustenance to him, being committed for debt. F. N. B. 93. Also masters may have action against servants, stewards or bailiffs, for any special abuse or negligence. Also for taking or enticing them away. Lane 68. Cro. Eliz. 777. 1 Shep. Abr. 52, 59.

If I trust one to buy a lease or other thing for me, and he buyeth it for himself, this action lies against him. Bro. 117.

Where a man is disturbed in the use of a seat in the church; the keeping of his courts; in taking the profits of his office; action on the case will lie. Bendl. 89. Lib. Intr. 5. Moor 987. And for setting up a new mill on a river, to the prejudice of another who hath an ancient mill, an action will lie. Lib. Intr. 9. Action on the case likewise lies for and against commoners, for injuries done in commons; as for surcharging. Style 164. Digging pits or the like. Sid. 106. Cro. Jac. 165. 2 Inst. 474.

Action on the case may likewise be brought for malicious prosecutions: where a suit is without ground, and one is arrested, action on the case lies for unjust vexation: and for falsely and maliciously arresting a person, for more than is due to the plaintiff, whereby the defendant is imprisoned, for want of bail; or if it be on purpose to hold him to bail, action on the case will lie, after the original action is determined. 1 Lev. 275. 1 Salk. 15.

Actions on the case likewise lie for conspiracy, escape, and rescous, nuisances, and the like, which see under their proper titles.

ACTION upon a statute.] Upon every statute made for the remedy of any injury, mischief, or grievance, an action lies by the party grieved, either by the express words of the statute, or by implication; and such action shall be either by an action for a recompence to the party in damages, or by way of prohibition by writ, for that purpose. 2 Inst. 55. 118. 10 Co. 75 b. Comyn's Dig.

And if a statute gives a remedy in the affirmative (without a negative expressed or implied) for a matter which was actionable by the common law, the party may sue at the common law as well as upon the statute, for this does not take away the common law. 2 Inst. 200.

But if a man brings his action at the common law, he waives his remedy by the statute. 4 Rol.

Action upon a statute, qui tam.] Actions qui tam, which are sometimes called popular actions, are such as are given by acts of parliament, which impose a penalty and create a forfeiture for the neglect of some duty, or commission of some crime, to be recovered by action or information, at the suit of him who prosecutes, as well in the king's name as his own. 1 Bac. Abr. tit. Ac. 9 b. But without such penalty be given no person can sue, for the whole penalty goes to the king. 2 Hawk. P. C. 377.

In those actions or informations, the party who prosecutes has, by commencing his suit such an interest in the penalty, that the king cannot suspend or discharge the suit, as to the part, he the plaintiff, is entitled to, 2 Hawk. P. C. 392.

And wherever a statute prohibits a thing, as being an immediate offence against the public good in general, under a certain penalty, and the penalty or part of it, is given to him who will sue for it, any person may bring such action or information and lay his demand qui tam. Co. Ent. 375. Lutw. 133. 138. Dyer 95. 346. and 139.

But an act which gives a remedy only to the party grieved, is not to be considered as a penal act; for the king cannot discharge it, or proceed in it after the death of the party. Cas. temp. Hard. 412. Andr. 115. 2 Ter. Rep. 148. Wood's Inst. 535. Show. 354.

By stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 4. All offences against penal statutes prosecuted by any common informer (except in recusancy, maintenance, customs, transporting gold or silver, or munition wool or leather) shall be determined by action, plaint, bill, information, or indictment before the justices of assise, of nisi prius, of oyer and terminer, gaol delivery, or before justices of the peace having power to hear and determine the same, and shall be laid in the proper county.

Although by the above stat. of 21 Jac. 1. no action of debt or information or other suit whatever can be brought on any penal statute in any of the courts at Westminster Hall for an offence not excepted by the statute, yet when a subsequent statute gives an action of debt or any other remedy for the recovery of a penalty in any court of record, generally, it so far impliedly repeals the restraint of 21 Jac. 1. and consequently leaves the informer at his liberty to sue in the courts of Westminster Hall. 1 Bac. Abr. tit. Ac. 9 t.

Penal actions, though the judgment may in some cases be followed by legal disabilities, are considered as civil proceedings; they are founded upon the implied contract, which every one is under by the fundamental constitution of government, to obey the directions of the legislature, and to pay the forfeiture incurred by his disobedience to such persons as the law requires; therefore the affirmation of a quaker is admissible in them; the proceedings may be amended and a new trial may be had after a verdict for the defendant. 3 Black. 159. 1 Str. 136. 2 Str. 1227. 1 Wils. 124. 4 Ter. Rep. 753.

An informer on a popular statute shall in no case whatsoever have his costs, unless they be expressly given him by such statute, for the common law gives costs in no cases, and the stat. of Gloucester only gives costs where damages are recovered, which a penalty cannot be said to be. 1 Bac. Abr. Ac. g. h.

But wherever a statute gives a certain penalty to the party grieved, he is entitled to his costs by the stat. of Gloucester, otherwise it would be in vain for him to sue, since in many cases the costs would exceed the penalty. Ibid.

But by 18 Eliz. c. 5. and 27 Eliz. c. 10. If any informer shall delay his suit, or discontinue, or become nonsuit, or have the trial passed against him, he shall pay the defendant his costs.

ACTION PREJUDICIAL, (otherwise called preparatory, or principal) is an action which arises from some doubt in the principal; as in case a man sues his younger brother for lands descended from his father, and it is objected against him that he is a bastard; now this point of bastardy is to be tried before the cause can any further proceed: and therefore it is termed prejudicialis, quia prius judicanda. Bract. lib. 3. c. 4. num. 6. Cowel. Blount.

ACTION OF A WRIT, is a phrase of speech used; when one pleads some matter, by which he shews the plaintiff had no cause to have the writ he brought, yet it may be that he may have another writ or action for the same matter. Such a plea is called a plea to the action of the writ; whereas, if by the plea it should appear that the plaintiff hath no cause to have an action for the thing demanded, then it is called a plea to the action. Cowel. Blount. Termes de la Ley.

ACTIONARE, i. e. In jus vocare, or to prosecute one in a suit at law. Thorn's Chron. Cowel. Blount.

ACTON BURNEL. A statute so called, made 13 Ed. 1. ann. 1285. ordaining the statute merchant for recovery of debts: it was so termed from a place named Acton Burnel, a castle in Shropshire, where it was made. Cowel. Blount.

ACTOR, the proctor or advocate in civil courts or causes. Actor dominicus, was often used for the lord's bailiff or attorney. Actor ecclesiæ was sometime the forensic term for the advocate or pleading patron of a church. Actor villæ was the steward or head bailiff of a town or village. Cowel.

ACTS OF PARLIAMENT, are the leges scriptæ, the written and positive laws of the kingdom, which are statutes, acts or edicts made by the king's majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal, and commons in parliament assembled. Cowel. Blount. 8 Rep. 20.

The oldest of these now extant, and printed in our statute books, is the famous magna charta, as confirmed in parliament, 9 Hen. 3: though doubtless there were many acts before that time, the records of which are now lost, and the determinations of them perhaps at present currently received for the maxims of the old common law. 1 Black. 85.

The words of acts of parliament shall be taken in a lawful sense: and some acts extend by equity to other things than are mentioned therein. Co. Lit. 24, 381. For which see title Statutes.

By 33 Geo. 3. c. 13. the clerk of the parliament is to indorse on every act, the time it receives the royal assent, which shall be its commencement, where no other is fixed.

By 41 Geo. 2. sess. 2. c. 90. the statutes of England and Great Britain, printed by the king's printer, shall be conclusive evidence in Ireland, and Irish statutes, prior to the union, so printed there, shall be evidence in Great Britain. s. 9.

By 48 Geo. 3. c. 106. when bills for continuing expiring acts, shall not pass before such acts expire, such continuing acts shall have effect from the date of the expiration of the act intended to be continued.

ACTUARY, (actuarius) a clerk that registers the acts and constitutions of the convocation: also the register in the court christian.

*AD*CREDULITARE, to purge one's self of an offence by oath. Qui in collegio fuerit ubi aliquis occisus est, adcredulitet se quod eum non percussit. Legis Inæ. c. 36. Blount.

ADDITION, (additio) signifies a title given to a man besides his christian and surname, setting forth his estate, degree, trade, and the like. As, for example; additions of estate, are yeoman, gentleman, esquire. Additions of degree, are knight, earl, marquis, and duke: additions of trade, are merchant, clothier, carpenter, or the like. There are likewise additions of place of residence, as London, York, Bristol, &c. And these additions were ordained that one man might not be grieved or molested for another: and that every person might be certainly known, and bear his own burden. And if one be of the degree of a duke, an earl, &c. he shall have the addition of the most worthy dignity. 2 Inst. 669. But the titles of duke, marquis, and earl, are not properly additions, but names of dignity. Terms de Ley 20. And the title of knight or baronet, is a part of the party's name, and ought to be rightly used; but the titles of esquire, gentleman, yeoman, &c. being no part of the name, but additions as people please to call them, may be used or not used, or if varied is not material. 1 Lill. 34. An earl of Ireland is not an addition of honour here in England, but such a person must be written by his christian and surname, with the addition of esquire only: and sons of English noblemen, although they have given them titles of nobility in respect of their families; if you sue them, they must be named by their christian and surnames, with the addition of esquire, as such a one esquire, commonly called lord A. &c. 2 Inst. 596, 666.

And by stat. 1 Hen. 5. cap. 5. it is enacted, that in suits or actions where process of outlawry lies, additions are to be made to the name of the defendant, to shew his estate, mystery, and place of dwelling; and that writs not having such additions shall abate, if the defendant takes exception thereto, but not by the court ex officio.

By pleading to issue, the party passes by the advantage of exception for want of addition; for by the common law it is good without addition, and the statute gives remedy only by exception. Cro. Jac. 610. 1 Roll. 780. And no addition is necessary, where process of outlawry doth not lie. 1 Salk. 5.

ADELING, or ETHLING, (from the Saxon edelan, i. e. nobilis) was a title of honor amongst the Angles; properly belonging to the successor of the crown: for king Edward the Confessor having no issue, and intending to make Edgar, his nephew, the heir of the kingdom, gave him the stile and title of Adeling Spelm. Gloss. Cowel. Blount.

ADEMPTION of a legacy; that is, the taking away of a legacy; and arises from a supposed alteration of a testator's intent, as where a testator applies a sum of money, or gives a security for the same purposes, for which he had before given a legacy, or sells stock or calls in a security specifically bequeathed, if no cause appears for his so doing. Amb. 57. 3 Atk. 68, 183. 1 Atk. 426. Amb. 401.

AD INQUIRENDUM, is a judicial writ commanding inquiry to be made of any thing relating to a cause depending in the king's courts. Reg. Judic. Cowel. Blount.

ADJOURNMENT, (adjournamentum) The same with the French word adjournment, and signifies a putting off until another day, or to another place. Cowel. Blount.

And the substance of the adjournment of courts is to give licence to all parties that have any thing to do in court to forbear their attendance till such a time. Every last day of the term, and every one of a day in term, which is not dies juridicus, or a law day, the court is adjourned. 2 Inst. 96.

The terms may be adjourned to some other place, and there the King's Bench and other courts at Westminster be held: and if the king puts out a proclamation for the adjournment of the term, this is a sufficient warrant to the keeper of the great seal to make out writs accordingly; and proclamation is to be made, appointing all persons to keep their day, at the time and place to which, &c. 1 And. 279. 1 Lev. 176.

Though by magna charta the court of common pleas is to be held at Westminster, yet necessity hath sometimes superseded the law, as in the case of a plague, a civil war, &c. Thus in 1 Car. 1. a writ of adjournment was delivered to all the justices, to adjourn two returns of Trinity term: and in the same year Michaelmas-term was adjourned until crastino animarum to Reading; and the king by proclamation signified his pleasure, that his court should be there held. Cro. Jac. 13, 27. Anno 17 Car. 2. The court of B. R. was adjourned to Oxford, because of the plague; and from thence to Windsor; and afterwards to Westminster again. 1 Lev. 176, 178.

If the judges of the court are divided in opinion, two against two, upon a demurrer or special verdict (not on a motion) the cause must be adjourned into the Exchequer Chamber, to be determined by all the judges of England. 3 Mod. 156. 5 Mod. 335.

If justices or others authorized by commission, sit by force of such commission, and do not adjourn the commission, it is determined. 4 Inst. 265.

ADIRATUS, a price or value set upon things stolen or lost, as a recompence to the owner. Bract. l. 3. tract. 2. cap. 32. Cowel. Blount.

ADJUDICATION, (adjudicatio) a giving or pronouncing by judgment, a sentence or decree. Cowel. Blount.

ADJURA REGIS, a writ brought by the king's clerk presented to a living, against those that endeavour to eject him, to the prejudice of the king's title. Reg. of Writs, 61: Cowel. Blount.

AD LARGUM, at large: and there is title at large, assise at large, verdict at large, to vouch at large. Cowel.

ADLEGIARE, or alejer, in French, is to purge himself of a crime by oath. Brompt. Chron. cap. 4. and cap. 13. Du Cange. Cowel. Blount.

ADMEASUREMENT, (admensuratio) is a writ which lies against such persons as usurp more than their share, to bring them to reason. It lies in two cases; one is termed admeasurement of dower (admensuratio dotis) where a man's widow after his decease holdeth from the heir more land, as dower, than of right belongs to her: and the other is admeasurement of pasture (admensuratio pas- turæ) which lies between those that have common of pasture appendant to their freehold estates, or common by vicinage, where any one or more of them surcharge the common. Reg. Orig. 156, 171.

ADMINICLE, (adminiculum) signifies aid, help, or support; being used to this purpose, in stat. 1 Ed. 4. cap. 1.

ADMINISTRATOR, (Latin) is one that hath the goods of a man dying intestate committed to his charge by the ordinary, for which he is accountable when thereunto required. Cowel. Blount.

Appointment of.] The bishop of the diocese where the party dies, is regularly to grant administration: but when the person dying hath goods in several dioceses, which are bona notabilia, administration must be granted by the archbishop of the province, in his prerogative court, or it will be void. 1 Plowd. 281.

And by statute 31 Ed. 3. cap. 11. (Ad. D. 1357.) Where a man dieth intestate, the ordinaries shall depute the next and most lawful friends to administer his goods, which deputies shall have action to demand and recover as executors, the debts due to the intestate, and shall answer also to others to whom the said dead person was holden and bound, in the same manner as executors, and shall be accountable to the ordinaries as executors.

And it is enacted by the statute 21 Hen. 8. cap. 5. sec. 13. In case any person die intestate, or the executors refuse to prove the testament, then the ordinary shall grant administration to the widow, or next of kin, or to both, by discretion of the ordinary, taking surety for true administration.

Where divers persons be in equality of kindred, the ordinary is to be at liberty to accept one or more, taking nothing for the same, as in probate of testaments, unless the goods of the deceased amount to above the value of an hundred shillings. s. 4.

As the law is now settled administration must be granted, 1st, To the husband, of the wife's goods and chattels. 2. To the wife, of the husband's goods and chattels. 3. If there be no husband or wife, to the children, sons or daughters. 4. If there be no children alive, to the father or mother. 5. Then to a brother or sister of the whole blood, or of the half blood. (And the brother of the half blood shall exclude the uncle of the whole blood; and the ordinary may grant administration to the sister of the half, or the brother of the whole blood, at his own discretion.) 1 Vent. 425. Aleyn. 36. Style, 74. 6. And if there be none such, to the next of kin, as uncle, aunt, or cousin. 7. Then to a creditor of the deceased. 8. Ault for want of all these, to any other person, at the discretion of the ordinary: or the ordinary may grant to a stranger letters ad colligendum bona defuncti, to gather up the goods of the deceased; or may take them into his own hands, to pay the deceased's debts, in such order as an executor or administrator ought to pay them: but it is said, he or the stranger who hath letters ad colligendum, cannot sell them, without making themselves executors of their own wrong, and action lies only against the ordinary, &c. Wood's Inst. 333.

Administration likewise may be granted durante minori ætate of an infant executor or administrator. As if one makes an infant his executor, or dies intestate, and the right of administration devolves upon an infant, in these cases the ordinary is to grant administration during the minority of the infant, i. e. in the first case till he arrives at the age of seventeen, and in the latter till he arrives at the age of twenty-one, because an infant cannot, before his full age, give bond to administer faithfully. Godolph. 102. 5 Co. 29. Heb. 250. Yelv. 198.

And it is discretionary in the ordinary to whom to grant it, and therefore he is not obliged within the statute 21 H. 8. c. 5. to grant it to the next of kin either of the deceased, or the infant. Hob. 250. 1 Vent. 319. 1 Keb. 549. 3 Mod. 24. 1 New Abr. 381.

Administration also may be granted de bonis non, where the first administrator dies, without having administered all the intestate's goods. 2 Bac. Abr. tit. Ex. and Ad.

So if an executor dies intestate, administration de bonis non cum testamento annexo of the testator must be granted by the ordinary, for they are not devolved on his administrator, he having had them in autre droit, but if the executor dies and makes an executor, then the trust is devolved on him, and after payment of the debts and legacies of the first testator, he has an absolute property in the goods. Ibid.

If the executor dies before probate, his executor cannot be executor to the first testator, but instead of an administration de bonis non, an immediate administration is granted. Ibid.

So if an executor refuses, administration with the will annexed, is to be granted to another. Ibid.

Besides all these administrations, there is administration durante absentia extra regnum, where a person is absent abroad; and administration pendente lite, which may be granted by the ordinary as well as durante minori ætate. Ibid.

In these cases administration is to be granted to the next of kin to the first testator or intestate; but if the testator appoints a residuary legatee, such legatee is intitled to administration. Ibid.

Interest of.] An administrator, by virtue of his administration, hath interest in all the chattels, real and personal, of the intestate, and in all the goods and chattels, either in possession or action, in like manner as an executor in the goods of the testator deceased. And all these goods and chattels which belonged to the intestate at the time of his death, and which come to the hand of the administrator, shall be assets, or sufficient goods and chattels, to make him chargeable to the creditors, as executors are to creditors and legatees. Before they come to his hands he is not chargeable. Wood's Inst. 339.

An administrator cannot take advantage by his administration, (unless by paying his own debt first, if it is equal in degree with others, or by taking the goods and chattels as they are appraised) because the surplusage must be distributed amongst the next of kin, if there are any kin, according to the statute of the 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 10. If a debtor takes administration of the goods and chattels of his creditor, this shall not discharge the debtor; but his debt shall be assets; because the intestate did no act to free him from the debt. Whereas, by making a debtor executor, the testator doth thereby release the debt. When an administrator (as well as an executor) hath paid funeral charges, debts, &c. with his own money, he may retain so much of the goods of the intestate, in kind, according to the value, and shall have property in them. For by such payment the property is altered from the intestate to the administrator. Wood's Inst. 339.

As to the power of an administrator, no one, not an executor, can legally do any act, relative to the estate or concerns of the deceased, till an administration is granted to him; but after the administration is granted, his power is almost equal with that of an executor. Yet if there are many administrators, one of them cannot sell goods, release debts, &c. without the other, but they must all join, because they have but one authority. See 30 Car. 2. c. 7. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 24.

With regard to the office and duty of an administrator, it is the same with that of an executor, as to the burial of the deceased and payment of funeral charges, the making of an inventory of his goods and chattels, the payment of debts, and the passing of an account.

But with respect to his distributing the effects of the intestate, that is regulated by the statute of distribution, that is, the 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 10. by which it is enacted, that all ordinaries and ecclesiastical judges (upon granting administration) must take bond of the administrator with two or more sureties, with condition that the administrator shall make a true and perfect inventory of all the goods and chattels of the deceased, and exhibit it into the registry of the ordinary's court by such a day: and to administer according to law, and to make a true and just account thereof, and to make distribution of the surplusage as followeth: viz. one third to the wife of the intestate, the residue among his children, and such as legally represent them if any of them be dead, other than such children (not heirs at law) who shall have any estate by settlement of the intestate in his life-time, equal to the other shares. Children, other than heirs at law, advanced by settlements or portions not equal to other shares, shall have so much of the surplusage as shall make the estate of all to be equal. But the heir at law shall have an equal part in the distribution with the other children, without any consideration of the value of the land which he hath by descent or otherwise from the intestate.

If there be no children, nor legal representatives of them, one moiety shall be allotted to the wife, the residue equally to the next of kindred to the intestate, in equal degree, and those who represent them. s. 5.

No representation shall be admitted among collaterals after brothers and sisters children. And if there be no wife, all shall be distributed amongst the children; and if no child, to the next of kin to the intestate in equal degree, and their representatives. s. 6.

No such distribution shall be made till one year after the intestate's death; and every one, to whom any shares shall be allotted, shall give bond with sureties in the said courts, that, if debts afterwards appear, he shall refund his ratable part thereof, and of the administrator's. s. 7.

In all cases where the ordinary hath used to grant administration cum testamento annexo, he shall continue so to do. s. 8.

But by statute 1 Jac. 2. cap. 17. No administrator shall be cited into court to render an account of the personal estate of his intestate, otherwise than by an inventory thereof, unless at the instance of some person in behalf of a minor, or having a demand out of such estate as a creditor, or next of kin; nor shall be compellable to account before an ordinary or judge empowered by the act of 22 & 23 Car. 2. cap. 10. otherwise than as aforesaid. s. 6.

If after the death of a father, any of his children shall die intestate, without wife or children, in the life-time of the mother, every brother and sister, and their representatives, shall have equal share with her. s. 7.

If after the death of the father the son die intestate, without issue, but leaving a wife, a mother, brother, sisters, and nieces, the intestate's wife shall have but one moiety, and as to the other, the intestate's brothers, sisters, and nieces, shall come in for an equal share thereof with the mother. 2 P. Williams 344.

But if a child dies intestate and unmarried, the father surviving has the child's whole estate at this day, 1 P. Williams 48. And this without taking administration to him. Pr. Ch. 260.

The clause in the act of 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 10. by which it is provided, that that act shall not prejudice the customs of the city of London and province of York, shall not extend to such part of any intestate's estate, which an administrator, by virtue of his being so, by pretence of any custom may claim, to exempt the same from distribution. s. 8.

It has been resolved likewise, that the half blood shall have a share upon a distribution equally with the whole blood. Wood's Inst. 341.

By stat. 29 Car. 2. cap 3. The act of 22 & 23 Car. 2. cap. 10. shall not extend to the estates of feme coverts that die intestate, but their husbands may have administration of their personal estates, and recover and enjoy the same as they might have done before the making of the said act.

And since the stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 10. the ordinary may grant administration to the wife or next a-kin, at his election, also the ordinary may grant administration quoad part to the wife, and as to the other part, to the next of-kin. 1 Sid. 179. Raym. 93. 1 Show. 351. 1 Salk. 36.

If there be grandfather, father, and son, and the father dies intestate, the son shall have the administration, and not the grandfather. 2 Vern. 125.

If a father die intestate, leaving only one son, which son also dies intestate, administration should be granted, to the next of kin, of the son, and not the father. 3 Mod. 58. Shower 26. and 2 Vern. 274.

If a person die intestate, leaving two, who are next a-kin, in equal degree to him, and one of them die intestate within the year, and before distribution; such an interest is vested in him, that his next of kin shall have administration. Show. 25.

Administration may be granted to the grandmother, in preference to the aunt; for she is as near of kin as the aunt, or rather nearer, because she is in the right line ascending. 1 Salk. 38, 39.

——— Suits by and against,] Actions will lie both against and for an administrator in like manner as for and against an executor, and he shall be charged to the value of the goods, and no further; unless it be by his own false plea, or by wasting the goods of the intestate. An executor or administrator shall never be charged de bonis propriis, but where he doth some wrong; as by selling the testator's goods, and converting the money to his own use, concealing or wasting them, or by pleading what is false. Dyer 210. 2 Roll. Rep. 295. But this plea must be of a fact, within his own knowledge. If an administrator plead plene administravit, and it is found against him, the judgment shall be de bonis proprris, because it is a false plea, and that upon his own knowledge. 2 Cro. 191. Contra where he pleads such a plea, and that he hath no more than to satisfy such a judgment, &c. the recovery shall be de bonis testatoris, &c. 2 Rol. Rep. 400. This must mean, where such plea is true in fact. Upon plene administravit pleaded by an administrator, the plaintiff must prove his debt, or he shall recover but a penny damages, though there be assets; because the plea only admits the debt, but not the quantum. 1 Salk. 296.

Special bail is not required of administrators in any action brought against them for the debt of the intestate; except where they have wasted the goods of the deceased: nor shall costs be had against administrators. 2 Bac. Abr. and 1 Comyn's Dig. Ex and Ad. If a stranger that is not administrator, take the goods and administer in his own wrong, he shall be charged and sued as an executor. Terms de Ley 24. And generally an administrator shall be charged by others, for any debt or duty due from the deceased, as he himself might have been charged in his lifetime; so far as he hath any of the intestate's estate, to discharge the same. Co. Lit. 219. Dyer 14.

An administrator's power is given by the administration, therefore he can do nothing until that be granted; and yet as to goods taken away before, the administration shall relate, so as to give the administrator an action for them. Fitzherb. 2. 6. If a man have judgment for land in a real or mixed action, and for damages, and then dies; his executor or administrator, not the heir, shall have execution for the damages; but not for the land. Fits. Admin. 53. March. 9.

——— Grant of administration, how revoked.] The ordinary ought not to repeal letters of admmistration which he hath duly granted; but if they are granted to such persons who ought not by law to have them, he may revoke them. 1 Lill. 38. As where a person is a lunatic, or the like. And if granted where not grantable, they may be repealed by the delegates. 1 Lev. 157, 186. If administration is granted, and afterwards a will is produced and proved, the administration shall be revoked; and all acts done by the administrator are void. 2 Rol. Abr. 907. If a citation is granted against a stranger administrator, and his administration is revoked by sentence, yet all acts done by him bona fide as administrator are good till the revocation; the administration being only voidable. 6 Rep. 18. 8 Rep. 135. But if there is any fraud, a creditor may have relief upon the stat. 13 Eliz. cap. 5. for letters of administration obtained by fraud are void. 3 Rep. 78. 6 Rep. 18, 19. 8 Rep. 143. If an administrator give goods away, and then administration is revoked or repealed, it is said the gift is good; except it be by covin, when it shall be good only against a creditor by statute: and where the administrator, after many goods administered, had his administration revoked, and it was committed to B. who sued the first administrator for goods unduly administered; it was held, that there was no remedy but in chancery. 6 Rep. 19. Clayt. 44. 4 Shep. Abr. 89. See Hob. 266.

But Morgan, the valued and much lamented friend of the editor of this present Dictionary, in the 10th edit. of Jac. Law suggests that in such a case as this, the second administrator might maintain an action at law against the first, for money had and received, or trover for any goods remaining in his possession or by him converted, and not duly administered.

ADMINISTRATRIX, (Lat.) A woman, who hath goods and chattels of an intestate, committed to her charge, in like manner as an administrator. Blount.

ADMIRAL, (admiralius, admirallus, admiralis, capitaneus, or custos maris) is derived of the French amerel, and signifies an high officer or magistrate, that hath the government of the king's navy. Cowel. Blount. This word is also said to have its derivation from the Saxon aen mereal, over all the sea: and in ancient time the office of the admiralty was called custodia maritimæ Angliæ. Co. Lit. 260. It appears that anciently the admirals of England had jurisdiction of all causes of merchants and mariners, happening not only upon the main sea, but in all foreign parts within the king's dominions, and without them, and were to judge them in a summary way, according to the laws of Oleron, and other sea laws. 4 Inst. 75. In the time of king Ed. 1. and king John, all causes of merchants and mariners, and things arising upon the main sea, were tried before the lord admiral; but the first title of admiral of England, expressly conferred upon a subject, was given by patent of king Rich. 2. to the earl of Arundel and Surry. Of late times this high office has been generally executed by commissioners; who by stat. 2 W. & M. cap. 2. are empowered to use and execute the like authorities as lord admiral.

ADMIRALTY, Court of. The high court of Admiralty, 4 Inst. 134, 147. held before the lord high admiral of England, or his deputy stiled the judge of the admiralty; is not only a court of civil, but also a court of criminal jurisdiction. 4 Black. 268.

The court of admiralty hath been time out of mind, and so it was said in the time of Ric. 1. which also appears by several records in the time of Hen. 3. Ed. 1. and other reigns. Co. Lit. 260 b. 4 Inst. 145. 1 Rol. Abr. 528. Seld. Mare Cl. l. 2. c. 14.

This court hath cognizance of all crimes and offences committed either upon the sea or on the coasts out of the body or extent of any English county, and is regulated by the following acts:

By 13 Rich. 2. st. 1, c. 5. "upon complaint of incroachments made by the admirals and their deputies, the admirals and their deputies shall meddle with nothing done within the realm, but only with things done upon the sea."

By 15 Ric. 2. c. 3. all contracts, pleas and quarrels, and other things done within the bodies of counties by land or water, and of wreck, the admiral shall have no conusance, but they shall be tried, by the law of the land; but of the death of the man, and of mayhem done in great ships, being in the main stream of great rivers, beneath the points near the sea, and in no other place of the same river, the admiral shall have conusance; and also to arrest ships in the great flotes, for the great voyages of the king and the realm, saving to the king his forfeitures; and shall have jurisdiction in such flotes during such voyages, only saving to lords, their liberties.

By 2 Hen. 4. c. 11. reciting the 13 R. 2. c. 5. it is enacted, that he that finds himself aggrieved against the form of the statute, shall have his action, by writ grounded upon the case, against him that so pursues in the admiralty, and recover double damages against him, and he shall incur the pain of 10*l. if he be attainted.*

By 28 Hen. 8. cap. 15. "all felonies and robberies upon the sea, or in any haven, creek or place, where the admiral has jurisdiction, shall be tried in such places in the realm, as shall be limited by the king's commission, in like form, as if committed upon the land; and such commissions shall be had under the king's great seal, directed to the admiral or to his lieutenant, or deputies, and to three or four such other substantial persons, as shall be named, or by the lord chancellor for the time being, to hear and determine such offences after the common course of the laws of the land used for felonies and robberies, &c. done and committed upon the land withinthis realm."

"And if any person happen to be indicted for any such offence done upon the seas, or in any other place above limited, then such order, process, judgment and execution, shall be had, as against felons, for felony upon the land, and such as shall be convict, shall suffer such pains of death, losses of lands, goods and chattels, as if they had been attainted, and convicted of such offence, done upon the land; and also, shall be excluded from the benefit of the clergy."

And by 11 & 12 W. 3. cap. 7. "their aiders and comforters, and the receivers of their goods are made accessaries, and to be tried as pirates by 28 Hen. 8. cap. 15."

This is now the only method of trying maritime felonies in the court of admiralty; the judge of the admiralty still presiding therein, as the lord mayor is the president of the session of oyer and terminer in London.

But the jurisdiction of the commissioners appointed under 28 Hen. 8. c. 15. being confined to the offences therein mentioned, The Stat. 39 Geo. 3. c. 15. enacts, "that every offence committed upon the high seas shall be subject to the same punishment, as if it had been committed upon the shore, and shall be tried in the same manner as the crimes enumerated in the 28 Hen. c. 15. are directed to be tried."

And as persons, tried for murder under that statute, could not be found guilty of manslaughter, and where the circumstances made the same manslaughter, were acquitted entirely, the said stat. 39 Geo. 3. cap. 15. enacts, "that where persons tried for murder or manslaughter committed on the high seas, are found guilty of manslaughter only, they shall be subject to the same punishment as if they had committed such manslaughter upon the land.

The jurisdiction of the lord-admiral, therefore, is confined to the main sea, or coasts of the sea, not being within any county. Thus, the admiralty hath cognisance of the death or maim of a man, committed in any ship riding in great rivers, beneath the bridges thereof, next the sea: but by the common law, if a man be killed upon any arm of the sea, where the land is seen on both sides, the coroner is to inquire of it, and not the admiral; for the county may take cognisance of it; and where a county may inquire, the lord admiral has no jurisdiction. 3 Rep. 107.

All ports and havens are infra corpus comitatus, and the admiral hath no jurisdiction of any thing done in them: between high and low water-mark, the common law and admiral have jurisdiction by turns; one upon the water and the other upon the land. 3 Inst. 113.

The admiralty is said not to be a court of record, by reason it proceeds by the civil law. 4 Inst. 135. But the admiralty has jurisdiction, where the common law can give no remedy; and therefore of all maritime causes, or causes arising wholly upon the sea, it hath cognizance. 1 Com. Dig. The admiralty hath jurisdiction in cases of freight, mariners' wages, breach of charter-parties, though made within the realm; if a penalty be not demanded: and likewise in case of building, mending, saving, and victualling ships, so as the suit be against the ship, and not against the parties only. 2 Cro. 216. Mariners' wages are contracted on the credit of the ship, and they may all join in suits in the admiralty; whereas at common law they must all sever: the master of a ship contracts on the credit of the owners, and not of the ship; and therefore he cannot prosecute in the admiralty for his wages. 1 Salk. 33. It is allowed by the common lawyers and civilians, that the lord admiral hath cognisance of seamens' wages, and contracts and debts for making ships; also of things done in navigable rivers, concerning damage done to persons, ships, goods, annoyances of free passage, &c. And of contracts, and other things done beyond sea, relating to navigation and trade by sea. Wood's Inst. 218. But if a contract be made beyond sea, for doing of an act or payment of money within this kingdom; or the contract is upon the sea, and not for a marine cause, it shall be tried by a jury; for where part belongs to the common law, and part to the admiral, the common law shall be preferred. And contracts made beyond sea may be tried in B. R. and a fact be laid to be done in any place in England, and so tried here. 2 Bulstr. 322.

Where a contract is made in England, and there is a conversion beyond sea, the party may sue in the admiralty, or at common law. 4 Leon. 257. An obligation made at sea, cannot be sued in the admiral's court; because it takes its course, and binds according to the common law. Hob. 12.

But if a ship is taken by pirates upon the sea, and the master, to redeem the ship, contracts with the pirates to pay them 50*l.* which he does by money borrowed, and on bond, he may sue in the admiralty for the 50*l.* because the original cause rose upon the sea, and what followeth was but consequential. Hard. 183.

If goods delivered on shipboard are imbezzled, all the mariners ought to contribute to the satisfaction of the party, that lost his goods, by the maritime law, and the cause is to be tried in the admiralty. 1 Lill. 368. By the custom of the admiralty, goods may be attached in the hands of a third person, in causa maritima & civili, and they shall be delivered to the plaintiff after defaults, on caution to restore them, if the debt, &c. be disproved in a year and a day; and if the party refuse to deliver them, he may be imprisoned quousque, &c. March Rep. 204.

The court of admiralty may cause a party to enter into bond in nature of caution or stipulation, like bail at common law; and if he render his body, the sureties are discharged; and execution shall be of the goods, or of the body, &c. not of the lands. Godb. 260. 1 Shep. Abr. 129. 1 Salk. 33. T. Ray. 78. 2 Lord Ray. 1286. Fitzg. 197.

The admiralty court may award execution upon land; though not hold plea of any thing arising on land. 4 Inst. 141. And upon letters missive or request, the admiralty here may award execution on a judgment given beyond sea, where an Englishman flies or comes over hither, by imprisonment of the party, who shall not be delivered by the common law. 1 Roll. Abr. 530. When sentence is given in a foreign admiralty, the party may libel for execution of that sentence here; because all courts of admiralty in Europe are governed by the civil law. Sid. 418. Sentences of any admiralty in another kingdom are to be credited, that ours may be credited there, and shall not be examined at law here; but the king may be petitioned, who may cause the complaint to be examined; and, if he finds just cause, may send to his embassador where the sentence was given, to demand redress; and, upon failure thereof, will grant letters of marque and reprisal. Rayn. 473.

If one is sued in the admiralty, contrary to the statutes 13 R. 2. st. 1. c. 5. & 15 R. 2. c. 3. he may have a supersedeas, to cause the judge to stay the proceedings, and also have action against the party suing. 10 Rep. 75. A ship being privately arrested by admiralty process only, and no suit, it was adjudged a prosecution within the meaning of the statutes; and double damages, recovered. 1 Salk. 31, 32. And if an erroneous judgment is given in the admiralty, appeal may be had, to delegates appointed by commission, out of chancery, whose sentence shall be final. Stat. 8 Eliz. cap. 5.

Appeals may be brought from the inferior admiralty courts to the lord high admiral: but the lord warden of the cinque ports hath jurisdiction of admiralty exempt from the admiralty of England. A writ of error doth not lie upon a sentence in the admiralty, but an appeal. 4 Inst. 135. 339.

ADMISSION of a clerk, (admissio) is when a patron of a church having presented to it, the bishop upon examination admits the clerk, by saying admitto te habilem. Co. L. 344. a. It is properly the ordinary's declaration that he approves of the presentee, to serve the cure of the church to which he is presented. Co. L. 344. a. All persons are to have episcopal ordination before they are admitted to any parsonage or benefice; and if any shall presume to be admitted, not having such ordination, &c. he shall forfeit 100*l.* Stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 4. No person is to be admitted into a benefice with cure of 30*l. per ann.* in the king's books, unless he is a bachelor of divinity at least, or a preacher lawfully allowed by some bishop, &c. Action of the case will not lie against the bishop, if he refuse to admit a clerk to be qualified according to the canons (as for any crime or impediment, illiterature, &c.) but the remedy is by writ quare non admisit, or admittendum clericum brought in that county where the refusal was. 7 Rep. 3.

ADMITTENDO CLERICO, is a writ granted to him who has recovered his right of presentation against the bishop in the common pleas, to admit his clerk. Reg. 32. a. Cowel. Blount.

ADMITTENDO IN SOCIUM, a writ for associating certain persons to justices of assize. Reg. Orig. 206. And knights and other gentlemen of the county are at this day usually associated with judges in holding their assizes on the circuits.

ADNICHILED, signifies annulled, cancelled, or made void. Stat. 28 Hen. 8. Cowel. Blount.

ADQUIETO, the same as acquietare, that is, to pay. Blount.

AD QUOD DAMNUM, is a writ which ought to be issued before the king grants certain liberties, as a fair, market, &c. which may be prejudicial to others: it is directed to the sheriff to inquire what damage it may do, for the king to grant a market, fair, &c. Terms de Ley 25. Blount.

The writ ad quod damnum is also had for the turning and changing of ancient highways; which may not be done without the king's licence obtained by this writ, on inquisition found, that such a change will not be detrimental to the public. Vaugh. 341. Ways turned without this authority are not esteemed highways, so as to oblige the inhabitants of the hundred to make amends for robberies; nor have the subjects an interest therein to justify going there. 3 Cro. 267.

The river Thames is an highway, and cannot be diverted without an ad quod damnum, and to do such a thing ought to be by patent of the king. Noy 105.

If there be an ancient trench or ditch coming from the sea, by which boats and vessels used to pass to the town, if the same be stopped in any part, by outrageousness of the sea, and a man will sue to the king to make a new trench, and to stop the ancient trench, &c. they ought first to sue a writ of ad quod damnum, to enquire what damage it will be to the king or others. F. N. B. 265. E.

And if the king will grant to any city the assise of bread and beer, and the keeping of weights and measures, an ad quod damnum shall be first awarded, and when the same is certified, &c. then to make the grant. F. N. B. 225. E.

ADRECTARE, addressare, i. e. ad rectum ire, recto stare, to do right, satisfy or make amends. Gerv. Dorobern. anno 1170. Cowel. Blount.

AD TERMINUM QUI PRETERIIT, a writ of entry, that lies for the lessor and his heirs, where a lease has been made of lands or tenements, for term of life, or years; and after the term is expired, the lands are withheld from the lessor by the tenant, or other person that possesseth the same: and it likewise lies for the heir of the lessor. F. N. B. 201.

But the modern and most easy way of recovering possession, is by ejectment: after judgment in which, the annual value of the premises, during the wrongful holding, may be recovered, in an action of trespass, for the mesne profits, in which may also be recovered, the costs of ejectment.

And now by statute 4 Geo. 2. c. 28, a tenant wilfully holding over, after demand and notice in writing for delivering possession, shall pay double the yearly value.

ADVENT, (adventus) a time containing about a month preceding the feast of the nativity of Christ. It begins from the Sunday that falls either upon St. Andrew's day, being the 30th of November, or next to it, and continues to the feast of Christ's nativity, commonly called Christmas. Blount.

AD VENTREM INSPICIENDUM. This is a writ at common law, which lies for the heir presumptive, to examine, whether the widow, who is suspected to feign herself with child in order to produce a suppositious heir to the estate, be with child or not; and if she be, to keep her under proper restraint till delivered.

ADVENTURE, a thing sent to sea, the adventure whereof the person, sending it, stands to out and home. Lex Mercat. Vide Adventure.

ADVERTISEMENTS, see Stamps, Stolen Goods, Theft, Bote, and other titles.

AD VITAM AUT CULPAM, (according to the statute 28 Geo. 2. c. 7. on Scotch Jurisdictions. is the same as quamdiu se bene gesserit in England) and imports that the office granted to be so held, can only be determined by the death or delinquency of the possessor.

ADULTERY, (adulterium, quasi ad alterius thorum, anno 1 Hen. 7. cap. 7.) and in divers old authors termed advoutry, is the sin of incontinence between two married persons; and if but one of the persons be married, it is nevertheless adultery: but in this last case it is called single adultery: to distinguish it from the other, which is double. The Julian law, among the old Romans, made it death. And by a law of William the Conqueror, whoever forced a woman was to lose his genitals, the offending parts. But in most countries at this time the punishment is by fine, and sometimes banishment: in England it is punished in the ecclesiastical courts by fine, penance, divorce a mensa et thoro, &c. and in the common law courts, by a compensation in damages to be assessed by a jury, on the trial of an action for crim. con. See Cowel. Bracton. Blount.

If a wife elope from her husband, and live with the adulterer, (without being reconciled to the husband) she shall forfeit her dower. Co. Lit. 36. 2 Inst. 435. And even though with her husband's consent, she live in adultery, yet she shall lose her dower. 2 Inst. 435.

So also in the case of elopement, and living with an adulterer, the ecclesiastical court does not allow alimony. 1 Black. 441, 442.

ADVOCATE, is the same by the civil and ecclesiastical laws as a counsellor by the common law; and who assists his client with advice and pleads for him. Cowel. Blount.

ADVOCATI, were those which we now call patrons of churches, and reserved to them, and their heirs, a liberty to present a person on any avoidance. Blount.

ADVOCATIONE DECIMARUM, a writ that lies for tithes, demanding the fourth part, or upwards, that belong to any church. Cowel. Blount. Reg. Orig. 29.

ADVOW, (advocare, to avow) that is, to justify or maintain an act formerly done. For example: one takes a distress for rent, and he that is distrained sues the replevin: now the distrainer, justifying or maintaining the act is said to advow or avow: and hence comes avowment and avowry. Old Nat. Br. 43.

ADVOWEE, or avowee, (advocatus) is used for him that hath right to present to a benefice: and by 25 Ed. 3. stat. 5. we find advowee paramount is taken for the king, the highest patron.—Advocatus est ad quem pertinet jus advocationis alicujus ecclesiæ, ut ad ecclesiam, nemine proprio non alieno, possit præsentare. Fleta, lib. 5. c. 14.

ADVOWSON, (advocatio) signifies the right of presentation to a church or benefice: and he who hath this right to present, is stiled patron: because they that originally obtained the right of presentation to any church, were maintainers of, or benefactors to, the same church. When the christian religion was first established in England, kings began to build cathedral churches, and to make bishops; and afterwards in imitation of them, several lords of manors founded particular churches on some part of their own lands, and endowed them with glebe, reserving to themselves and their heirs a right to present a fit person to the bishop, when the same should become void: and this is called an advowson, and he that hath this right of presentation is termed the patron, it being presumed that he who founded the church, will avow and take it into his protection, and be a patron to defend it in its just rights. Cowel. Blount. 1 Nels. Abr. 184. 2 Black. Com. 21—3.

And advowsons are of two kinds, namely, appendant and in gross.

Advowson appendant] Is a right of presentation dependant upon a manor, lands, or the like, and passes in a grant of the manor as incident to the same; and when manors were first created, and lands set apart to build a church on some part thereof, the advowson or right to present to that church became appendant to the manor. 1 Comyn's Dig. tit. Ad.

Advowson in gross] Is a right subsisting by itself, belonging to a person, and not to a manor, lands, or the like. So that when an advowson appendant is severed by deed or grant from the corporeal inheritance to which it was appendant, then it becomes an advowson in gross. Co. Lit. 121, 122. 2 Black. 22, 23.

And the law in this case, of a common person, is thus set down by Rolle, out of the antient books: if a man seised of a manor to which an advowson is appendant, aliens that manor, without saying with the appurtenances (and much more without naming the advowson) yet the advowson shall pass; for it is parcel of the manor. 2 Rol. Abr. 60.

But with respect to the king, by the statute de prærogativa regis, 17 Ed. 2. c. 15. When the king giveth or granteth land or a manor with appurtenances; without he make express mention in his deed or writing, of advowson of churches when they fall, belonging to such manor or land, at this day the king reserveth to himself such advowsons, albeit that among other persons it hath been observed otherwise.

Advowsons are also either presentative, collative, or donative.

Advowson presentative] Is, where the patron hath a right to present or offer his clerk to the bishop or ordinary of the diocese, and moreover to demand of him to institute his clerk, if he finds him canonically qualified, and this is the most usual advowson. Co. Lit. 120. 2 Black. 22.

Advowson collative] Is that advowson which is lodged in the bishop; for collation is the giving of a benefice by a bishop, when he is the original patron thereof, or he gains a right by lapse: in which case the bishop cannot present to himself, but he does by an act of collation, or conferring the benefice the whole that is done in common cases by both presentation and institution. 2 Black. 22. For institution is given by the bishop upon a presentation of a patron; but collation is an immediate institution, because the bishop is both patron and ordinary. Institution and collation are in effect (for the most part) the same, and are terms made use of to distinguish the persons, who have the power to bestow the benefice. Cowel. 157.

Advowson donative] Is, when the king or other patron (in whom the advowson of the church is lodged) does, by a single donation in writing, put the clerk into possession, without presentation, institution, or induction. Donatives are either of churches parochial, chapels, prebends, &c. and may be exempt from all ordinary jurisdictions, so that the ordinary cannot visit them, and consequently cannot demand procurations. If the true patron of a church or chapel donative doth once present to the ordinary, and his clerk is admitted and instituted, it becomes a church presentative, and shall never have the privilege of a donative afterwards. Yet if a stranger presents to such a donative, and institution is given, all is void. Id. 158.

The right of donation descends to the heir (the ancestor dying seised, where the church became void in his life-time) and not to the executor, which it would had it been a presentative benefice. 3 Wilson Rep. 150, 1.

There is not any case in the books to exclude the heir of a donative from his turn in this case. And a patron of a donative can never be put out of possession by an usurpation. Ibid.

ADVOWSON OF THE MOIETY OF THE CHURCH, (advocatio medietatis ecclesiæ) Is where there are two several patrons and two several incumbents in one and the same church, the one of the one moiety, and the other of the other moiety thereof. Co. Lit. 17 b. Medietas advocationis, a moiety of the advowson, is where two must join in the presentation, and there is but one incumbent; as where there are two parceners: and though they agree to present by turns, yet each of them hath but the moiety of the church. Co. Lit. 17 b. But by 7 Ann. c. 18. where coparceners, joint-tenants, or the like, are seised of an advowson, and a partition is made to present by turns, each of them shall be seised of his separate estate.

ADVOWSON OF RELIGIOUS HOUSES, where any persons founded any house of religion, they had thereby the advowson or patronage thereof, like unto those who built and endowed parish churches. Kennet's Paroch. Antiq 147, 163.

AERIE, (aerie accipitrum) airy of gos-hawks, is the proper term for hawks, for that which of other birds we call a nest Stat. 9 H. 3. c. 12. and is said by Spelman to come from the French word aere, a hawk's nest. Cowel. Blount.

ÆSTIMATIO CAPITIS, (pretium hominis) king Athelstane ordained that fines should be paid for offences committed against several persons according to their degrees and quality, by estimation of their heads. Cress. Ch. Hist. 834. Leg. Hen. 1. Cowel. Blount.

ÆTATE PROBANDA, a writ that lay to inquire, whether the king's tenant holding in chief by chivalry, was of full age to receive his lands into his own hands. It was directed to the escheator of the county; but is now disused, since wards and liveries are taken away by the statute. Reg. Orig. 294. Cowel. Blount.

AFFEERERS, (afferatores) from the Fr. affier, to affirm. They are those that in courts-leet, upon oath, settle and moderate the fines and amercements, imposed on such persons as have committed faults, arbitrarily punishable, viz. that have no express penalty appointed by statute: and they are also appointed for moderating amercements, in court baron. The persons nominated to this office affirm upon their oaths what penalty they think in conscience ought to be inflicted on the offenders. This word is used stat. 25 Ed 3. c. 7. Where mention is made, that the justices before their rising in every sessions shall cause the amerciaments to be affeered. And this seems to be agreeable to magna charta, by which it is ordained, that persons are to be amerced after the manner of the fault; and the amerciaments shall be assessed by the oath of honest and lawful men of the vicinage. 9 Hen. 3. cap. 14. Com. Dig. 4 V. tit. Leet, (O. 2.) Cowel. Blount. 4 Black. 380.

AFFIANCE, the plighting of troth between a man and a woman, upon agreement of marriage: it is derived from the Latin word affidare, and signifies as much as fidem ad alium dare. Lit. sect. 39.

AFFIDARE, to plight one's faith, or give or swear fealty. Blount.

AFFIDATIO DOMINORUM, an oath taken by the lords in parliament, anno 3 Hen. 6. Rot. Parl. Blount.

AFFIDATUS, signifies a tenant by fealty, also a retainer. Blount.

AFFIDARI, seu affidari ad arma, to be mustered and inrolled for soldiers upon an oath of fidelity. Dom de Farendon MS. 55.

AFFIDAVIT, (the perfect tense of the verb affido) signifies in law an oath in writing; and to make affidavit of a thing, is to testify it upon oath. An affidavit generally speaking, is an oath in writing, sworn before some judge, or officer of a court, or other person who hath authority to administer such oath, to evince the truth of certain facts therein contained; and the true place of habitation, and true addition of every person who shall make an affidavit, is to be inserted in his affidavit. 1 Lil. Abr. 44. 46. 3 Black. 304.

And an affidavit must set forth the matter positively, and all material circumstances attending it, that the court may judge whether the deponent's conclusion be just or not. As, for instance, on motion to put off a trial for want of a material witness, it must appear that endeavours were made use of to have him at the time appointed, and that he cannot possibly be present, though he may on further time given. Farres. 121. Comb. 421, 422. 1 Bac. Abr. tit. Aff.

Affidavits are usually for holding persons to bail, certifying the service of process, or other matters touching the proceedings in a cause; or in support of, or against motions, in cases, where the court has to determine matters in a summary way.

Affidavit annexed to a Bill of Interpleader.] In bills of interpleader, the party who prefers it must make affidavit that he does not collude with either of the other parties. Mitford 49.

——— To a bill to perpetuate the testimony of witnesses.] To avoid objection to a bill framed on the ground, that before the facts can be investigated in a court of law, the evidence of a material witness is likely to be lost by his death or departure from the realm, it seems proper to annex to it an affidavit of the circumstances by which the evidence intended to be perpetuated is in danger of being lost. 1 Peere Wms. 117. 3 Peere Wms. 77. 1 Atk. 450. Mitford 51.

And unless such an affidavit be annexed to the bill a demurrer will hold. Mitford 131.

The principle on which it is required in these cases to annex to the bill an affidavit of the circumstances, which render the examination of witnesses proper in a court of equity, though the matter is capable of being made immediately the subject of a suit at law, seems to be this; namely, that the bill tends to alter the ordinary course of the administration of justice which ought not to be permitted, upon the bare allegation of a plaintiff in his bill. Mitford 132.

——— to a Bill for a discovery of a Deed and Relief.] If a person exhibits a bill in equity for the discovery of a deed, and prays relief thereupon, he must annex an affidavit to his bill, that he has not such deed in his possession or power, and that he knows not where they are unless in the hands of the defendant; for otherwise he takes away the jurisdiction of the common law courts, without shewing any probable cause why he should sue in equity. 1 Chan. Ca. 11, 231. 1 Vern. 59, 180, 247. Mitford 52.

But if he seeks discovery of the deed only, or that it may be produced at a trial at law, he need not annex such affidavit to his bill; for it is not to be presumed that in either of these cases, he would do so absurd a thing, as exhibit a bill, if he had the deed in his possession. 1 Vern. 180, 147. Mitford 53.

It is also unnecessary in the case of a bill for the discovery of a cancelled instrument, and to have another deed executed, for if the plaintiff had the cancelled instrument in his hands, he could make no use of it at law, and indeed the relief prayed is such as a court of equity only can give. Mitford 113.

——— To obtain leave to file a bill of review.] If the object of a bill of review be to reverse a decree signed and inrolled upon discovery of some new matter, the leave of the court must be first obtained, and this will be not granted, but upon allegation upon oath, that the new matter could not be produced or used by the party claiming the benefit of it, at the time when the decree was made. Mitford 78 79.

And as the office of a supplemental bill, in nature of a bill of review, is to supply the defect which occasioned the decree on the former bill; it is also necessary to obtain the leave of the court to bring a supplemental bill of this nature, and the same affidavit is required for this purpose, as is necessary to obtain leave to bring a bill of review on discovery of new matter. Mitford 82.

AFFINAGE, (Fr. affinage) refining of metal, purgatio metalli; inde, fine and refine. Blount.

AFFIRM, (affirmare) signifies to ratify or confirm a former law or judgment. Cowel. Blount.

AFFIRMATION, The people called quakers, are in cases, where an oath is required from others, allowed to make a solemn AFFIRMATION that what they say is true; and if they make a false affirmation, they are subject to the penalties of perjury: but this relates only to oaths to the government, and in civil matters; for quakers may not give testimony on affirmation, in any criminal cause. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 34. and 22 G. 2. c. 46.

AFFORARE, to set a value or price on a thing. Charta anno 1316. apud. Thorn. Du Cange. Blount.

AFFORATUS, appraised or valued, as things vendible in a fair or market. Cartular Glaston. MS. f. 58. Cowel. Blount.

AFFORCIAMENT, (afforciamentum) a fortress, strong hold, or other fortification. Pryn Animad. on Coke, fol. 58. Cowel. Blount.

AFFORCIARE, to add, increase, or make stronger. Bract. lib. 4. c. 19. vis. Let the witnesses be increased. Blount.

AFFOREST, (afforestare) to turn ground into a forest. Chart. de Forest. c. 1.

AFFRAY, is derived from the French word effrayer, to affright, and it formerly meant no more; as where persons appeared with armour or weapons not usually worn, to the terror of others. Stat. 2 Ed. 3. c. 3. But now it signifies a fighting between two or more in some public place, to the terror of his majesty's subjects: for if the fighting be in private it is no affray but an assault. 4 Black. 145. and there must be a stroke given, or offered, or a weapon drawn, otherwise it is not an affray. 3 Inst. 158. And sir Edward Coke emphatically says, that an affray is a public offence to the terror of the king's subjects, and so called, because it affrighteth and maketh men afraid. 3 Inst. 158.

From this it is said, that no quarrelsome or threatening words whatsoever shall amount to an affray. But yet it seems certain, that in some cases, there may be an affray, where there is no actual violence; as where a man arms himself with dangerous and unusual weapons, in such a manner, as will naturally cause a terror to the people; which is said to have been always an offence at the common law, and is strictly prohibited by statute 2 Ed. 3. c. 3. 1 Hawk. P. C. 135.

A constable may require affrayers to depart, and if they resist, he may call others to his assistance; who, if they refuse to assist him, may be fined and imprisoned: and a private person, or stander-by, may put a stop to an affray, and seize the offenders, where persons are assembled in a tumultuous manner to break the peace. 3 Inst. 158. H. P. C. 135. And in case a person be dangerously wounded, any man may apprehend the offender, and carry him before a justice, in the same manner as a constable. Dalt. 35. In a very dangerous affray, a constable can justify commitment, till the offenders find sureties for the peace. Lamb. 139. He may likewise put the affrayers in the stocks till he can procure proper assistance to convey them to gaol. Dalt. 38.

If an affray be in an house, the constable may break open the doors to preserve the peace; and if affrayers fly to an house, and he follow with fresh suit, he may break open the door to take them. 1 Hawk. 137.

But in cases of affray, the constable must apprehend the persons offending before the affray is over, or else he may not do it without a warrant from a justice, except it be in an extraordinary case; as where a person is wounded dangerously Dalt. 36. In the case of a sudden affray, through passion or excess of drinking, the constable may put the persons in prison, if there be one in the vill, until the heat of their passion and intemperance is over, though he deliver them afterwards; or till he can bring them before a justice of peace, and that to avoid the present danger. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 90, 95. If a constable is hurt in an affray, he may have his remedy by action of trespass, and have damages; but the affrayers, if they are hurt, shall have no remedy. Lamb, 141. And where any other persons receive harm from the affrayers, they may have remedy by action against them. Dalt. 35.

A justice of peace may commit affrayers, until they find sureties for the peace But he cannot without a warrant authorize the arrest of any person for an affray out of his own view; yet he may make his warrant to bring the offender before him, to compel him to find sureties for the peace. 1 Hawk. 137.

It is inquirable in the court-leet; and punishable by justices of peace in their sessions, by fine and imprisonment. And it differs from assault, in that, it is a wrong to the public; whereas assault is of a private nature. Lamb. lib. 2. yet indictment lies, as being a breach of the public peace.

And the measure of punishment for affrays must be regulated by the circumstances of each case: for where there is any material aggravation, the punishment proportionably encreases: as where two persons coolly and deliberately engage in a duel, this being attended with an apparent intention and danger of murder, and being a high contempt of the justice of the nation, is a strong aggravation of the affray, though no mischief has ensued.—So also another aggravation is, when thereby the officers of justice are disturbed in the due execution of their office: or where a respect to the particular place ought to restrain and regulate men's behaviour, as in the king's courts, palaces, and the like, or a church or churchyard. 4 Black. 145.

AFFREIGHTMENT, (affretamentum) the freight of a ship, from the French fret, which signifies the same. Cowel. Blount. See Charter-Party.

AFFRI, vel affra, bullocks, or horses or beasts of the plough. Spel. Gloss. Cowel. Blount.

AFRICAN TRADE. See Slave Trade.

AGALMA, the impression or image of any thing on a seal. Cowel. Blount.

AGE, (ætas, French age,) generally signifies from his birth to any certain time, or the day of his death: it also hath relation to that æra or period of time wherein men live.

But in the law it is particularly used for those special times which enable persons of both sexes to do certain acts, which before through want of years and judgment they are prohibited to do. Co. Lit. 78.

And the ages of male and female are different for different purposes. 1 Black. 463. As for example; a man at twelve years of age ought to take the oath of allegiance to the king: at fourteen, which is his age of discretion, he may consent to marriage, and choose his guardian.—And if his discretion be actually proved, may make his testament of his personal estate; at seventeen he may be an executor; and at twenty-one he may alien his lands, goods, and chattels. Co. Lit. 78. 4 Black. 463

A woman at seven years of age may be betrothed or given in marriage; at nine is dowable: at twelve she may consent or disagree to marriage; and if proved to have sufficient discretion may bequeath her personal estate: at fourteen she is at years of discretion, and may chuse a guardian: at seventeen may be an executrix: and at twenty-one she may alienate her lands, &c. Co. Lit. 78.

The age of twenty-one is the full age of man or woman; which enables them to contract and manage for themselves, in respect to their estates, until which time they cannot act, with security to those who deal with them; for their acts in most cases are either void or voidable. Perk. But a person under twenty-one may contract for necessaries suitable to his quality; and it shall bind him Co. Lit. 171.

The full age in males and females being twenty-one years, that age is considered to be completed on the day preceding the anniversary of a person's birth, who till that time is an infant, and so stiled in law. 1 Black. 403.

Thus if the party be born on the first of January, he is of age to do any legal act on the morning of the last day of December, though he may not have lived twenty-one years by nearly forty-eight hours: the reason assigned is, that in law there is no fraction of a day: and if the birth were on the first second of one day, and the act on the last second of the other, then twenty-one years would be complete: and in the law it is the same, whether a thing is done upon one moment of the day or another. 1 Black. Com. 463. 4 Mod. Cas. 260.

The law of England does in some cases privilege an infant, under the age of twenty-one, as to common misdemeanors; so as to escape fine, imprisonment, and the like: and particularly in cases of omission; as not repairing a bridge, or a highway, and other similar offences: for not having the command of his fortune till twenty-one, he wants the capacity to do those things which the law requires. Hale's P. C. 20, 21, 22.

But where there is any notorious breach of the peace, as a riot, battery, or the like, (which infants when full grown are at least as liable as others to commit) for these an infant above the age of fourteen is equally liable to suffer, as a person of the full age of twenty-one. 4 Black. 22.

Persons under the age of fourteen are not generally punishable for capital crimes. Co. Lit. 247 2 Roll. Abr. 547.

But this general rule, however, as to capital crimes, hath its exceptions founded on the nature of the case, and the judgment of the infant. For, although under the age of fourteen, if he display a discretion to discern between good and evil, the maxim of the law as it now stands, and has stood ever since the reign of Ed. 1. is that malitia supplet ætatem: and it would be absurd to measure the capacity of doing ill, or contracting guilt, rather by years and days, than the strength of the delinquent's judgment. 4 Black. 22, 23.

Thus a girl of thirteen has been burnt for killing her mistress; and one boy of ten and another of nine years old, who had killed their companions, have been sentenced to death; and he of ten years actually hanged, because it appeared upon their trials, that the one hid himself, and the other hid the body he had killed; which hiding manifested a consciousness of guilt, and a discretion to discern between good and evil. 1 Hale P. C. c. 26, 27.

Thus also in very modern times, a boy of ten years old was convicted on his own confession of murdering his bedfellow: there appearing in his whole behaviour a variety of acts done with that deliberation, which shewed his judgment sufficiently ripe to render him accountable for his actions: and as the sparing of this boy merely on account of tender years might be of dangerous consequence to the public, by encouraging a notion that children might commit such atrocious crimes with impunity, it was unanimously agreed by all the judges, that he was a proper subject of capital punishment. Forster 70-2.

However, under seven years of age, an infant cannot be guilty of felony; for then a felonious discretion is almost an impossibility in nature: but at eight years old he may be guilty of felony. Mir. c. 4. s 16. 1 Hale P. C. 27. Dalt. Just. 147. 4 Black 23.

And there was an instance in the last century, where a boy of eight years old was tried at Abingdon, for firing two barns; and it appearing that he had malice, revenge, and cunning, he was found guilty, condemned, and hanged accordingly. Emlyn. 1 Hale P. C. 25

As to how far infants may be admitted to give evidence, it is to be observed, that all persons may be witnesses who appear to have a competent knowledge of the nature and consequences of an oath: and that therefore infants of very tender years, may be witnesses. Co. Lit. 6. 1 Bac. Abr. tit. Evidence.

Thus an infant of nine years has been allowed to give evidence. 1 Hale P. C. 463.

And an infant under the age of seven years may be a witness in a criminal prosecution, provided such infant appears, upon examination, to possess a sufficient knowledge of the nature and consequences of an oath, for there is no precise or fixed rule, as to the time, within which infants are excluded from giving evidence: their admissibility depends, upon the sense they entertain of the danger and impiety of falsehood, which is to be collected from their answers to questions propounded to them by the court: but if they are found incompetent to take an oath, their testimony cannot be received. Leach's C. L. 104, 180.

And to prevent a want of due justice, Mr. Justice Rooke, in a criminal prosecution that was coming on to be tried before him at Gloucester, finding that the principal witness was an infant, who was wholly incompetent to take an oath, postponed the trial till the following assizes, and ordered the child to be instructed in the mean time by a clergyman, in the principles of her duty, and the nature and obligation of an oath: at the next assizes the prisoner was put upon his trial, and the child was produced as witness; and being found by the court upon examination, to have a proper sense of the nature of an oath, was sworn: and upon her testimony, the prisoner was convicted and afterwards executed: this was afterwards mentioned by Rooke, J. at the Old Bailey, 1795, in the case of Patrick Murphy for a rape on a child of seven years: and he said that upon a conference with the other judges, upon his return from the circuit, they had unanimously approved of what he had done. Gwillim on Bac. Abr. tit. Ev. 577.

AGE-PRIER, (ætatem precari, or ætatis precatio) is, when an action being brought, against a person under age, for lands which he hath by descent, he by petition or motion shews the matter to the court, and prays that the action may stay till his full age, which the court generally agrees to. Terms de Ley 30. Cowel. Blount. This is called parol demurrer, i. e. a staying or delaying of the plea or suit. Parol signifies the plea or suit, demurrer to stay or abate. See Parol Demurrer.

AGENFRIDA, the true lord or owner of any thing. Cowel. Blount.

AGENHINE, a guest at an inn after three nights, who was then accounted one of the family. Cowel. Blount.

AGENT. An agent is a person employed to enter into contracts, manage property, or transact business for another; and whatever acts he may do in such capacity, are to be taken to have been done for the use and benefit of his principal.

Therefore where an agent has been employed, his principal has, in equity, in many cases, a right to a discovery of his transactions, and to demand the property with which he has been entrusted, or the value of it, against those with whom the agent has had dealings: and therefore where a merchant, who had employed a factor to sell his goods, filed a bill against the persons to whom the goods had been sold, for an account, and to be paid the money for which the goods had been sold, and which had not been paid to the factor, a demurrer was over-ruled. Mitf. 142.

But if an agent or factor sell goods at a less price than he is commissioned, the sale will bind the principal for the convenience of trade. Ambler, 498.

But a trustee or particular agent, shall not be allowed to become the purchaser, of that which he holds in trust, and thereby raise an interest in himself opposite to that of his principal. 2 Fonbl. Eq. 187.

And notice to the agent or purchaser for another, is a good notice to the principal, because it is a presumptive notice to the party. 2 Fonbl. 153.

Where a man acts in execution of the authority given him by another, either expressly or impliedly; that it is, by relation, the act of that other, and he acquires no right, nor brings any obligation on himself: yet if a verdict is obtained against an agent or trustee, equity will not relieve against such verdict, but will decree that he shall be reimbursed by his principal, and stand in the place of the creditor. 1 Fonbl. 296-7.

And the difference is, where the agent undertaking for, or on the behalf of another, has an authority so to do, and where he has not. If he has not, then it is a fraud; and he ought himself to be liable: but where there is such an authority given, it is only acting for another, like the case of a factor or broker, acting for their principals, who were never held to be personally liable: but to protect themselves from being so personally bound, they must strictly preserve their authority. 4 Bur. 2108. 6 Ter. Rep. 411.

AGENT AND PATIENT, The agent is doer of a thing, and the patient the party suffering the thing to be done: as where a woman endows herself of the best part of her husband's possessions, this being the sole act of herself to herself, makes her agent and patient. Also if a man be indebted unto another, and afterwards he makes the creditor his executor, and dies, the executor may retain so much of the goods of the deceased as will satisfy his debt; and by this retainer he is agent and patient, that is, the party to whom the debt is due, and the person that pays the same. But a man shall not be judge in his own cause, quia iniquum est aliquem suæ rei esse judicem. 8 Rep. 138. Cowel. Blount.

AGILD, from the Saxon a priv. and seldan selvert, quasi sine mulcta, signifies to be free from penalties, not subject to the customary fine or imposition. Cowel. Blount. Agilde was also taken to be a person so vile, that whoever killed him was to pay no mulct for his death. Ibid.

AGILER, from the Saxon a gile, observer or informer. Ibid.

AGILLARIUS, an hey-ward, herd-ward, or keeper of cattle in a common field. Towns and villages had their hey-wards, to supervise and guard the greater cattle, or common herd of kine or oxen, and keep them within due bounds; and if these were servile tenants, they were privileged from all customary services to the lord, because they were presumed to be always attending their duty, as a shepherd on his flock. And lords of manors had likewise their hey-wards, to take care of the tillage, harvest work, &c. and see that there were no encroachments made on their lordships. Cowel, Blount, and others. This is now in most places the business of bailiffs: yet in many manors the custom continues.

AGIST, (from the French giste, a bed or resting-place,) signifies to take in and feed the cattle of strangers in the king's forest, and to gather up the money due for the same. Chart. de Foresta, 9 Hen. 3. c. 9. The officers appointed for this purpose are called agisters, or gist-takers, and are made by the king's letters patent: there are four of them in every forest wherein the king hath any pawnage. Manw. For. Laws 80. They are also called, according to Cowel, agistators, to take an account of the cattle agisted.

AGISTMENT, (agistamentum,) is where other men's cattle are taken into any ground, at a certain rate per week: it is so called, because the cattle are suffered agiser, that is, to be levant and couchant there: and many great farms are employed to this purpose. 2 Inst. 643.

Our graziers call cattle which they thus take into keep, guisements; and to guise or juice the ground, is when the occupier thereof feeds it not with his own stock, but takes in the cattle of others to agist or pasture it. Cowel. Blount.

Agistment is likewise the profit of such feeding in a ground or field: and extends to he depasturing of barren cattle of the owner, for which tithes shall be paid to the parson. Ibid.

There is agistment of sea-banks, where lands are charged with a tribute to keep out the sea. Terræ agistatæ are lands whose owners are bound to keep up the sea-banks. Ibid. Spelm. on Romney-Marsh.

AGITATIO ANIMALIUM IN FORESTA, the drift of beasts in the forest. Leg. Forest. Cowel. Blount.

AGIUS, (Gr. i. e. holy.)—Ego triumphalem trophæum agiæ crucis impressi. Mon. Angl. p. 15, 17.

AGNUS DEI, a piece of white wax in a flat oval form, like a small cake, stamped with the figure of a lamb, and consecrated by the pope. Cowel.

And by 13 Eliz. c. 2. "to import any agnus dei, crosses, beads, or other superstitious things, pretended to be hallowed by "the bishop of Rome, and tender the same "to be used, or to receive the same with "such intent, and not discover the offender, "or if a justice of the peace knowing there-"of, shall not within fourteen days disclose "it to a privy counsellor, they all incur a "præmunire." See Papists.

AGNATI, the relations by the father, who were preferred by the Roman laws to the cognati, or relations by the mother: till the edict of the emperor Justinian, Nov. 118, abolished all distictions between them. 2 Black. 235.

AGRARIA LEX, a law made by the Romans for the distribution of lands among the common people. Cowel.

AGREEMENT, is the consent of two or more persons, concerning, the one in parting with, and the other receiving some property, right, or benefit. 1 Bac. Abr. tit. Agr.

And it is defined to be aggregatio mentium in re aliqua facta vel faciendâ, and it ought to be so certain and complete, that each party may have an action upon it. Plow. Com. 5, a. 6. a.

To an agreement or contract, there is not any prescribed form of words, but such words as shew the assent of the parties are sufficient, so as the agreement be certain and complete, and therefore it is not material by which of the parties the words of the agreement or contract are used, if the assent of the other appears.

And there are three sorts of agreements: 1st. An agreement executed already at the beginning, as where money is paid for the thing agreed, or other satisfaction made at the time of the execution: 2dly, where an assent subsequent is given to an act precedent; as where one doth such a thing, and another person agrees or assents to it afterwards, and by such assent the agreement is also executed: 3dly, an agreement executory, is an agreement to execute a deed, pay a sum of money, or perform some act at a future day. Plowd. Com. 8 9. Terms de Ley. 31.

How enforced.] In many cases the party injured by breach of an agreement may either have a remedy by action at common law, or by recourse to a court of equity; but here a general rule must be observed, that wherever the matter put in question by the bill is merely in damages, there the remedy is at law; because the damages cannot be ascertained by the conscience of the chancellor; and therefore must be settled by a jury. 1 Bac. Abr. tit. Agr. b.

For it is the rule of courts of equity not to entertain the suit unless the plaintiff wants the thing in specie, and cannot have it in any other way. Therefore in general they will not allow a bill for a specific performance of contracts of stock, corn, hops, or other articles of merchandize, but will leave the party to his remedy at law. 2 Bro. Ch. Rep. 343. 1 Pere Wms. 570. 3 Vin. Abr. 538—540. Bunb. 135. 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 161.

But if there be matter of fraud mixed with the damages, and a bill is filed for an injunction upon this equitable suggestion, that the covenant was obtained by fraud, and then the defendant files his cross bill for relief upon the covenant, the court will retain it, because the validity of the covenant is disputed in that court, and on an head properly cognizable there; and therefore if the validity of the deed be established, the court will direct an issue for the quantum of the damages. Ch. Rep. 158. Abr. Eq. 17.

So where the agreement is to do something in specie, as to convey lands, execute a deed, or the like, there it will be proper to apply to a court of equity for a specific execution, to which the party is entitled, if the agreement be good and sufficiently proved, when otherwise, he could only recover damages at law. Ch. Cas. 42.

And it is now by a series of decisions established, that courts of equity may decree a contract to be performed in specie at least, wherever a court of law would give damages, for the non-performance of it; but which damages would not be an adequate compensation for the non-performance, the party wanting the thing in specie. 1 Fonbl. 30.

However, though equity will in general enforce the specific performance of contracts, if the party wants the thing in specie, and cannot have it in any other way, yet if the breach of contract can be or was intended to be compensated in damages, courts of equity will not interpose. 2 Bro. Rep. 341: 1 Pere Wms. 570. Bunb. 135.

And in the exercise of this equitable jurisdiction, the court may either direct the master to enquire, what damage the plaintiff hath sustained by the defendant's non-performance of his agreement, and upon the report, decree satisfaction; or, otherwise, send it to be tried at law upon a quantum damnificatus; when the bill prays a specific performance of such agreement, which cannot be decreed, as where the defendant has by sale of the estate, or the like, put it out of his power. Abr. Eq. Cas. 18. pl. 7. 1 Fonbl. 389.

But here it must be observed, that agreements, out of which an equity can be raised, for a decree in specie, ought to be obtained with all imaginable fairness, and without any mixture tending to surprize or circumvention, and that they be not unreasonable in themselves. Abr. Eq. 17. 1 Bac. Abr. 109.

But inadequacy of price simply and of itself, independently of any other circumstances, is not a ground with the court to annul an agreement, though executory, still less is it a ground to rescind one already executed: and in Heathcote v. Paignon, 2 Bro. Ch. Rep. 167. Lord Thurlow admitted, that mere inadequacy of price was scarcely sufficient, but said, that there was a difference between that and evidence arising from in- adequacy: if there is such inadequacy as to shew that the person did not understand the bargain he made, or was so oppressed that he was glad to make it, knowing its inadequacy, it will shew a command over him, which may amount to fraud. 1 Fonbl. 128.

And where agreements are endeavoured to be set aside for supposed weakness of understanding, for breach of confidence, or other substantive reason, the inequality of the terms may be a material ingredient in the case as evidence of imposition. 3 Woodes 453.

It is also to be observed, that where an agreement appears to be very unequal, the courts will lay hold of very slight circumstances, to avoid enforcing the execution of it; as where the plaintiff had not made out his title by the time stipulated; a circumstance which in general has not any weight with them. 2 Bro. Ch. Rep. 396. 1 Atk. 12.

But as these cases, and all others on this head, depend so much upon circumstances, and are to stand or fall, according to the degrees of fraud or circumvention attending them, and proved in the cause, or by what appears unreasonable on the face of them; it is only to be observed, that a court of equity will much more easily be prevailed on, to dismiss a bill which prays a specific execution of an unreasonable agreement, than set aside an agreement, though not strictly fair on a bill for that purpose, for this deprives the party of what he had a right to by law; and that when such agreements are set aside, it must be on refunding what was bona fide paid, making allowances for improvements. 1 Bac. Abr. 111.

Thus the court will not compel a purchaser to take a title which is at all doubtful. 1 Br. Ch. Rep 75. 4 Br. Ch. Rep. 80. Nor will they interpose where a party has forborne to insist upon an agreement for several years, unless the delay can be accounted for, by special circumstances: nor in case of a written agreement afterwards discharged by parol: nor in the case of a sale by auction, where an accident has happened to cast a damp upon the sale; as where the vendor's agent, known to be such to the company present, bid for the purchase: nor if the agreement be to do a thing which would tend to extortion or promote inebriety: nor if damages be stipulated, though in general they will in the case of a penalty, designed merely as a medium for securing the performance of the contract: nor will they interpose if the agreement be founded on an illegal consideration, as that of stifling a prosecution for felony or for fraud Ibid.

And as solemn conveyances, releases, and agreements by parties are not slightly to be blown off and set aside, oquity will not void a reasonable and fair agreement, though founded on mistake; or though the party were intoxicated, or in prison, at the time he entered into it, or some paternal authority were exerted, and some benefit accrue to the father under it: nor will the court decree a forfeiture after an agreement, in which, if it were a mistake, it was a mistake of all the parties to it. Ibid.

As to voluntary agreements.] It is laid down that as men have a right to their acquisitions, so may they dispose of them at their pleasure, and without valuable consideration; but if a man promises to convey lands, or to give goods, without valuable consideration, or without delivering possession of them, this alters no property, nor has the party any remedy at law or equity, it being nudum pactum unde non oritur actio. 3 Co. 81. b. 2 Black. Com. 443. Dy. 336. b. 2 Buls. 225.

But if it be done, by deed duly executed under seal, this is good in law, though there be no consideration, or no delivery of possession, because a man is estopped to deny his own deed, or affirm any thing contrary to the manifest solemnity of contracting. Plow. 308, 309. Yelv. 196. Cro. Jac. 270. Brown 111. 3 Bur. 1637. 2 Bl. 446. 1 Fonbl. 335.

And equity will not carry a merely voluntary contract beyond the letter of it. 2 Vern. 692. And in decreeing the execution of agreements, it regards the intent of the parties, and does not confine itself, to the strictly legal operation of the words; where therefore marriage articles, literally, taken would give the husband or wife an estate tail, it decrees a strict settlement; for otherwise the provisions for the issue, the object of the settlement, might be defeated. 1 Bac. Abr. 113.

Also in contracts, proper for a specific performance, equity considers them often as actually performed, from the time they are entered into: thus money agreed to be laid out in land, it considers as land, and it will go to the heir and not to the executor. 1 Pere Wms. 483. Pr. Ch. 540. 2 Pere Wms. 171. 3 Pere Wms. 221. And land agreed to be sold, it treats as money, which thus circumstanced, will be deemed as part of the personal estate. 2 Vern. 295. 1 Br. Ch. Rep 236, 368. thus investing each with the qualities of the other. 1 Bac. Abr. 113.

Parol agreements.] By statute 29 Car. 2. c. 3. "no action shall be brought whereby "to charge any executor or administrator, "upon any special promise to answer damages out of his own estate, or whereby "to charge the defendant, upon any special "promise to answer for the debt, default, or "miscarriages of another person, or to "charge any person upon any agreement, "made upon consideration of marriage, or "upon any contract or sale of lands, tene-"ments or hereditaments, or any interest in "or concerning them, or upon any agree"ment that is not to be performed, within "the space of one year, from the making "thereof, unless the agreement upon which "such action shall be brought, or some "memorandum or note thereof shall be in "writing, signed by the party to be "charged therewith, or some other per-"son by him thereunto lawfully authorised." s. 4.

In the construction of this statute, the following points have been resolved.

1st. That if there be a parol agreement for the purchase of lands, and a bill brought for a specific execution thereof, and the substance of the agreement set forth in the bill be confessed by the defendant's answer, without insisting on any fraud, that in such case the court will decree a specific execution, because there is no danger of perjury, which was the principal thing the statute intended to prevent, and he has thereby taken away the necessity of proof. Abr. Eq. 19. and 1 Treatise on Eq. 178.

Upon this point Mr. Fonblanque admits, that if a defendant confess the agreement charged in the bill, there is no danger of fraud or perjury in decreeing the performance of such agreement; but he very judiciously observes, that it is of considerable importance to determine, whether the defendant be bound to confess or deny a merely parol agreement, not alleged to be in any part executed, or if he do confess it, whether he may not insist on the statute in bar of the performance. 1 Fonbl. 178. n. d.

2d. That if a parol agreement be carried into execution by one of the parties as by delivering possession, and such execution be accepted by the other, he that accepts it must perform his part; for where there is a performance, the evidence of the bargain does not lie merely upon the words, but upon the fact performed, and it is unconscionable, that the party, that has received the advantage, should be admitted to say that such contract was never made. 1 Fonbl. B. 1. c. 3. s. 8.

And the general rule is, that the acts must be such as could be done with no other view, or design than to perform the agreement, and not such as are merely introductory or ancillary: the giving of possession, is therefore, to be considered, as an act of part performance, but giving directions for conveyances, and going to view the estate are not. Payment of money is also said to be an act of part performance: but it seems that payment of a sum by way of earnest is not. 1 Fonbl. 186. Amb. 586. 1 Bro. Rep. 412. 3 Ves. Jun. 34, 379. 1 Atk. 12.

3d. That if a parol agreement is agreed to be reduced into writing, and signing and reducing the same into writing, be prevented by fraud, it may be decreed in equity; as if upon a marriage treaty, instructions are given by the husband to draw a settlement, and by him privately countermanded, and afterwards he draws in the woman by professions, and assurances of such settlement to marry him. Abr. Eq. 19. Fonb. 184. Pr. Ch. 526. 5 Vin Abr. 521. 1 Vern. 296.

And although parol agreements are bound by the statute, and agreements are not to be part parol and part in writing; yet a deposit or collateral security for the performance of the written agreement, is not within the purview of the statute. Treatise of Eq. 186.

4th. That where in consideration of a parol agreement the plaintiff had expended great sums of money about the premises, and charged, that part of the agreement was, that the agreement should be put into writing, there the lord keeper over-ruled a plea of the statute of frauds. 2 Ch. Cas. 135.

And the want of such circumstance in another case was held fatal to the agreement, though the plaintiff alleged that he had expended considerable sums, on the premises, on the faith of it. 1 Vern. 151.

But in the case of Seagood v. Meale, Pr. Ch. 561. it is said, that "where a man on "promise of a lease to be made to him, "lays out money on improvements, he "shall oblige the lessor afterwards to exe-"cute the lease, because it was executed on "the part of the lessee," and upon this dictum, Mr. Fonblanque justly observes, that it is sanctioned by the spirit of equity, and seems to do away the decisions, which require, even under the circumstance of the premises being improved, an averment of its being part of the parol agreement, that it should be reduced into writing. 1 Fonb. 187.

So where the plaintiff pursuant to a parol agreement for a building lease, proceeded to pull down part, and build part, and before any lease executed, the owner of the soil died, equity decreed a building lease to be made, according to the agreement. 2 Vern. 456.

And when this court, does assist the common law, and enforce the performance of the agreement in specie, in these cases, it does it, upon important reasons, viz. because otherwise there would be a great burthen and penalty upon the party, if, having performed part, by which he himself has a loss, and the other a benefit, he should not have a reciprocal performance. Treatise of Eq. c. 1. s. 5. c. 3. s. 1—9.

But there is a difference to be taken where the money is laid out in lasting improvements, and where for fancy and humour: for it is clear that a bill would hold, so far as to be restored to the consideration money, expended in valuable improvements; for a lease, though void for want of legal ceremonies, is yet a sufficient colour to possess: and the difficulty seems to be, that the act makes void the estate, but does not say that the agreement itself shall be void, so that possibly, a man may recover damages for the non-performance of it, and then there is no doubt to decree it in equity. Treatise of Eq. 187—8.

AGRI, in our law, denotes arable land in the common fields. Fortescue.

AID, (auxilium) is all one with the French aide, and in general acceptation is understood to be a subsidy granted to the crown. By the ancient or rather feudal law of the land, the king and any lord of the realm might lay an aid upon their tenants, for knighting an eldest son, or marriage of a daughter; but these tenures were abolished by 12 Car. 2. c. 24.

And by stat. 34 Ed. 1. c. 1. It is ordained that the king shall levy no aid or tax without his parliament.

AID OF THE KING, (auxilium regis) If a man be impleaded, and cannot make a defence, he may petition or pray in aid of the king; and aid of the king shall be granted in all actions, where the king may have prejudice; as in all real actions where the title of the king appears to be, and also in all personal actions where the interest of the king may be concerned, as in ejectment against the king's lessee, trespass, replevin, case, debt or other personal action against the king's farmer or officer. Rol. Abr. Comyn's Dig.

In these cases, the proceedings are stopped till the king's council are heard to say what they think fit, for avoiding the king's prejudice: and this aid shall not in any case be granted after issue; because the king ought not to rely upon the defence made by another. Jenk. Cent 64. Terms de Ley 35. Stat. 4 Ed. 1. and 14 Ed. 3.

AID-PRAYER of a common person (auxilium petere) a word anciently made use of in pleading, for a petition in court to pray in aid from the reversioner or remainderman, or other having interest, when the title of the inheritance is in question. Comyn's Dig. tit. Aid.

But this ancient mode of praying aid has long since been disused, and a more convenient course introduced, by the practice of letting parties into the liberty of filing bills of interpleader in a court of equity.

AIEL, (of the French aieul, i. e. avus, the grandfather) was a writ, now in disuse, which anciently lay where a man's grandfather being seised of lands, a stranger abated and dispossessed the heir. Fits. N. B. 221.

ALIAMENTA, includes any liberty of passage, open way, water-course, &c. for the ease and accommodation of tenants. Kitch.

ALBUM, is a word made use of for whit rent, paid in silver. Rot. Parl. 6 H. 3.

ALDER, signifies the first; as alder best is the best of all; alder liefest, the mos dear. Blount.

ALDERMAN, (Saxon ealdorman, Latin aldermannus.) This was one of the three degrees amongst the Saxons. Ætheling was the first, and Thane the lowest, but alderman was the same as our earl; the word was disused in the latter ages of the Saxons, and in its place the word earl was introduced. It is certain that it was used in the reign of Æthelstan. Cowel. Blount.

It literally imports no more than elder, but among the Saxons it signified a duke, an earl, a nobleman; but then he was called Heretoga, viz. Merena Heretoga, that was, alderman of Mercland; which title he had in relation to his military power: but the title alderman shewed his civil jurisdiction, which title afterwards was applied to a judge, as in the reign of Edgar, Alwin, the son of Æthelstane is called aldermanus totius Angliæ, that is according to Spelman, Justiciarius Angliæ. Ibid.

There was likewise aldermanus hundredi, which dignity was first introduced in the reign of Hen. 1. among whose laws we find, præsit autem singulis hominum nominis decimus et toti simul hundredo unus de melioribus et vocetur aldermannus, qui dei leges et hominum jura, vigilante studiat observantia promovere. Du Cange. Cowel. Blount.

But at this day, and long since, these are called aldermen who are associates to the chief civil magistrate of a city or town corporate. Stat. 24 H. 8. cap. 13. Spelman.

And an alderman ought to be an inhabitant of the place, and resident where he is chosen; and if he removes, he is incapable of doing his duty in the government of the city or place, for which he may be disfranchized. Mod. Rep. 36.

ALEHOUSES, By 5 Ed. 6. c. 25, no person shall keep an alehouse, unless licensed in sessions; or by two justices (one of the quorum) on pain of three days imprisonment, and a fine to be imposed by the quarter sessions. The justices have power to put them down, and to take recognizances for keeping good order; but this act shall not restrain the selling of malt liquors in fairs.

By 1 Jac. 1. c. 9 alehouse-keepers permitting townsmen to sit tippling, are liable to ten shillings penalty, and on non-payment to be imprisoned till paid; and persons tippling therein, are to forfeit three shillings and fourpence, or sit in the stocks four hours.

By 4 Jac. 1. c. 4. selling ale to an unlicensed alehouse-keeper, except for his own private use, incurs a penalty of six shillings and eight-pence for every barrel, to be recovered at the quarter-sessions.

By 4 Jac. 1. c. 5. persons convicted of drunkenness are to forfeit five shillings, or be put in the stocks six hours.

If convicted a second time, to be bound over to their good behaviour; but the prosecution must be within six months. Ibid.

By 7 Jac. 1. c. 10. an alehouse-keeper, convicted under either of the two last acts, is disabled to keep an alehouse for three years.

By 21 Jac. 1. c. 7. one witness, or the party's own confession, shall be sufficient; and the oath of the party confessing shall convict others.

By 1 Car. 1. c. 14. alehouse-keepers permitting any person whatsoever to sit tippling, shall incur the penalty of 1 Jac. 1. c. 9. Vintners, keeping inns or victualling houses, to be also liable.

By 3 Car. 1. c. 4. persons, keeping alehouses without licence, are to forfeit twenty shillings to the poor, or be whipped; and for the second offence, to be committed to the house of correction for a month; but any person may, during a fair, sell malt liquors in booths.

By 7 & 8 Will. 3. c. 19. alehouse-keepers were restrained from using plate; but by 9 Geo. 3. c. 11. that part of the act was repealed.

By 2 Geo. 2. c. 28. and 26 Geo. 2. c. 31. no licence shall be granted, but at a general meeting of justices, on September the first, or within twenty days after, and the same shall be made but for one year; notice is likewise to be given of the time and place for granting them; and persons selling brandy are to be licensed, and subject to the same rules as common alehouse-keepers.

By 17 Geo. 2. c. 17. victuallers having a licence to retail spirits shall not, during the time of that licence, exercise the trade of a distiller, grocer, or chandler, or keep a brandy-shop for sale of any spirits, upon pain of forfeiting the licence, and also 10*l.* for every offence. Persons selling a less quantity than two gallons shall be deemed retailers. And the licence shall not extend to any other than the house mentioned in it.

By 26 Geo. 2. c. 13. justices being brewers, inn-keepers, distillers, victuallers, or maltsters are prohibited from granting of licences for selling of ale, beer, or spirits. s. 12.

But by 39 Geo. 3. c. 86. if in cities and towns any justice shall be incapable by reason of his dealing in spirits, a justice of the county at large may act. s. 3.

By 26 Geo. 2. c. 31. justices licensing alehouses are to take a recognizance in the sum of 10*l.* for the maintenance of good order; which recognizance must be sent to the clerk of the peace, on penalty of 3*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* s. 1.

Licences are to be granted to none, unless they were licensed the year preceding, or can produce certificates (except in cities and towns corporate, s. 16) of their good fame. s. 2.

Where a justice shall adjudge the recognizance to be forfeited, he is to summon the party to the quarter sessions, and the jury finding him guilty, the recognizance is to be estreated, and he is to be disabled from selling beer or spirits for three years. Ibid.

Where a justice shall suspect that any victualler sells ale or the like, without a license, he may summon him and the officer who surveys him, and examine such officer upon oath. Ibid.

A justice, upon information that any person is reasonably suspected of selling ale, without a license, is to summon the party and evidence before him; and persons summoned not appearing are to forfeit 10*l.* Ibid.

The rights of the universities to grant licenses are reserved. The times of granting licences for common inns and alehouses in any city or town corporate are not altered. Parishioners are likewise declared to be competent witnesses. Ibid.

By 30 Geo. 2. c. 24. publicans permitting journeymen, servants, or apprentices to game in their houses, are to forfeit 40*s.* and for the second and every subsequent offence 10*l.* which penalties are to be levied by distress and sale.

By 9 Geo. 3. c. 6. the powers, directions, and penalties, provided and established by any act made since 8 Geo. 2. as to selling spirituous liquors, without licence, may be exercised, but transporting and whipping are to cease.

By 43 Geo. 3. c. 69. retailers of wine and

By 30 Geo. 3. c. 38. the licences are to continue in force till Oct. 10, ensuing the granting thereof, and if granted between the 5th of April and Oct. 10, a rateable proportion only to be charged. s. 8.

The licences are to be renewed annually, and persons retailing without a licence, or not renewing it, forfeit 50*l*. s. 9.

On death or removal of licenced persons, the commissioners of excise may authorise the executors or assignees to carry on the trade, for the remainder of the term: one licence is sufficient for a partnership in a house; and the licence is not to authorise the party to retail in any other house, than that for which it was granted. s. 10.

This is not to prejudice the privileges of the two universities, nor the company of vintners, or any town corporate; but freemen of the vintners' company by redemption are to take out licences: and the letters patent for licencing taverns at St. Albans are confirmed. s. 11, 12, 13.

Persons selling foreign wine in less quantities, than equal to the measure first imported, or British made wines, in the quantity of twenty-five gallons or under, or spirits in less than two gallons, shall be deemed retailers. s. 15.

By 48 Geo. 3. c. 143. the stamp duties on licences to retail ale shall after Oct. 10 cease, and in lieu thereof the alehouse-keeper, or victualler, shall take out an excise licence for the purpose, and pay for the same a licence duty of 2*l*. 2*s*.

Which licences shall be taken out from the excise within ten days next after the date of the justices' licence, and shall continue in force until the 10th of October ensuing, and no longer; and such licence is to be renewed annually within ten days after the expiration of the former, and no one shall retail ale, beer, or the like, without such annual excise licence on pain of 50*l*. s. 3, 4, 5.

On death or removal, the executors or assignees may sell under the licence. s. 6.

Excise licences are not to be granted, except to such persons only, as have been previously licenced by the justices, and this act does not affect any former regulations, as to licences to be granted by the magistrates; and clerks to justices are entitled to the same fees as heretofore. s. 10.

If persons be disabled by conviction to keep an alehouse, they are to forfeit this licence, and cannot afterwards sell any liquors thereunder. s. 11.

By 52 Geo. 3. c. 59. if alehouse-keepers die, or remove, before the expiration of their licences, new ones may be granted to the executors, or new tenants, till the next licencing day, obtaining within thirty days after such death or removal, the usual certificate, and entering into the recognizances; which certificates and recognizances are to be sent to the clerk of the peace to be renewed. s. 1.

In Middlesex and Surry, the justices at the general licencing meetings, are to appoint special ones, not less than six nor more than eight, in each year: at which they may grant, on the removal of licenced persons, a continuance of the licence, or a new one to the succeeding occupier, producing the certificate and entering into the recognizance. s. 3.

But no new licences are to be granted, at the petty sessions, to houses not licenced at the general licencing day. s. 4.

Nothing herein is to extend to alter the times of granting licences; or oblige persons, licenced the year preceding to produce certificates. s. 5.

Persons entering into licenced houses, without the authority of the justices, are liable to the penalty, for retailing without licence. s. 6.

But persons, obtaining the necessary certificates, are indemnified till the petty sessions. s. 7.

Clerk of the peace is to record the continuance of licences. s. 8.

No person shall sell wine by retail, to be drank in his own house without having a beer licence, and justices are to have the same jurisdiction over such retailers of wine, as they have over sellers of beer, who are to be subject for retailing wine without a licence to the same penalties as for retailing ale without licence. s. 9.

This act is not to extend to the vintners' company, the universities, or St. Albans; but freemen of the vintners' company by purchase since October 11, 1792, are not exempted. s. 11.

By 35 Geo. 3. c. 113. persons selling, or permitting to be sold, in their houses, excisable liquors by retail without a licence shall forfeit 20*l.* and the costs of conviction. s. 1.

Any justice may determine complaints; and if the penalties are not paid on conviction, if the party is present, or if absent, within three days after notice thereof, the same may be levied by distress. s. 2.

The officers are to execute their warrants agreeably to 27 Geo. 2. c. 20: the provisions of which, and of 33 Geo. 3. c. 55. (see Distress), as to execution of warrants, are to extend to this act. Ibid.

Distress may be sold within four days, and the officer to be allowed not exceeding 5*s.* per day, and his assistants 2*s.* s. 3, 4.

Half of the penalty to be to the informer, and the other half to the poor of the parish; and if sufficient distress cannot be found, the justice may commit the offender for not exceeding six, nor less than three calendar months. s. 5.

The leaving a summons at the place where the offence is committed, and affixing a copy thereof at the door, is sufficient to compel persons to answer informations for selling liquors by retail without licence. s. 6.

Retailers, are to make previous entry at the excise, office of all places used for laying beer, ale, cyder, perry, and other exciseable liquors, on pain of 50*l.* and places not entered to be deemed concealed places. s. 7.

Such liquors, and goods, and chattels, found where any offence is committed, to be liable to distress. s. 8.

Persons making entry to be deemed retailers: justices may summon excise officers, to produce entries, and stock books, and may examine them on oath; and may summon retailers to produce licences; and for not producing them may adjudge the defaulters guilty. s. 9.

Penalty of 10*l.* on witnesses not attending summonses, to be levied by distress, and if sufficient cannot be found, the party may be committed for not exceeding six months: the penalty to be applied to the use of the poor of the parish. s. 10.

Goods liable to seizure may be distrained whatever found, and justices may indorse warrants for seizing goods removed into their jurisdictions. s. 11.

Appeals are allowed to the next quarter sessions, unless held within six days after convictions, and then to the next subsequent sessions, which may finally determine such appeals, and adjudge costs. s. 12.

Justices may mitigate penalties, in the case of a first offence, but not to less than 10*l.* Inhabitants may be witnesses, and penalties are to be determined in six months. s. 13, 14, 15.

The act is not to prohibit the selling ale, or beer, at fairs. s. 17.

By 36 Geo. 3. c. 94. the penalty in the last act is not to extend to beer, or ale, sold in casks containing not less than five gallons, or in bottles not less than two dozen quarts. s. 13.

ALER SAN JOUR, (French) to go without day, viz. to be finally dismissed the court, because there is no further day assigned for appearance. Kitch. 146. Cowel. Blount.

ALE-SILVER, a rent or tribute annually paid to the lord-mayor of London, by those that sell ale within the liberty of the city. Antiq. Purven. 183. Cowel. Blount.

ALESTAKE, a may-pole called alestake, because the country people drew much ale there: but it is not the common may-pole, but rather a long stake drove into the ground, with a sign on it, that ale was to be sold. Cowel.

ALE-TASTER, is an officer appointed in every court leet, sworn to look to the assize and goodness of ale and beer, &c. within the precincts of the lordship. Kitch. 46. In London there are ale-comers, who are officers appointed to taste ale and beer, &c. in the limits of the city. Cowel. Blount.

ALFET, (Saxon alfæeln) a cauldron or furnace, wherein boiling water was put for a criminal to dip his arm in up to his elbow, and there hold it for some time. Du Cange. Cowel. Blount.

ALIAS, a second or further writ, issued from the courts at Westminster, after a capias, &c. sued out without effect. Cowel. Blount.

ALIAS DICTUS, (or otherwise called) is the manner of description of a defendant in pleadings, better omitted as a variance may be fatal.

ALIEN, (alienus, alienigena) an alien is, one born in a strange country, out of the allegiance of the king: but a man born out of the land, if it be within the limits of the king's obedience beyond sea; or born of English parents out of the obedience of the king, if the parents at the time of the birth were of such obedience, is no alien. 1 Bac. Abr. tit. Al. a.

If an English merchant goes beyond sea, and takes an alien wife, the issue shall inherit him; but it is not so, if an English woman goes beyond sea, and takes an alien husband, the children there born shall not inherit her. Cro. Car. 601, 602. Str. Rep. 22, 24. 1 Sid. 198. 4 Ter. Rep. 300. 1 Bac. Abr. tit. Al. a.

An alien cannot hold land by descent or purchase, or be tenant by the curtesy, or in dower. 5 Rep. 502. In case an alien purchase land, the king upon office found shall have it. Co. Lit. 2. So if an alien purchase any estate of freehold in houses, lands, tenements or hereditaments, the king upon office found shall have them. If an alien be made denizen and purchase and, and die without issue, the lord of the fee shall have the escheat, and not the king. But as to a lease for years, there is a difference between a lease for years of a house for the habitation of a merchant stranger being an alien, whose king is in league with ours: and a lease for years of lands, meadows, pastures, woods, and the like. For if he take a lease for years of lands, upon office found the king shall have it. But of a house for habitation, he may take a lease for years as incident to commerce, for without an habitation he cannot merchandize or trade. But if he depart or relinquish the realm, the king shall have the lease. So if he die possessed thereof, neither his executors or administrators shall have it, but the king: for he had it only for habitation, as necessary to his trade or traffic, and not for the benefit of his executor or administrator. But if the alien be no merchant, then the king shall have the lease for years, though it were for his habitation, and so it is if he be an alien enemy. Co. Lit. 2 b.

Aliens may obtain goods and personal estate, by trade, &c. And may maintain actions for the same, they may also have actions of assault and battery, and for support of their credit. 2 Bulst. 134. But they cannot bring any real action, unless it be for an house for necessary habitation, being for the benefit of trade. 7 Rep. Calvin's Case. And an alien enemy cannot maintain any action whatsoever, nor get any thing lawfully within this realm. Terms de Ley 6.

An alien friend may be an administrator, and shall have administration of leases, as well as personal things, because he hath them in another's right, and not to his own use. Cro. Car. 8. 1 Vent. 417. S. C. cited.

But it has been long doubted, whether an alien enemy should maintain an action as executor; for on the one hand it is said, that by the policy of the law, alien enemies shall not be admitted to actions to recover effects, which may be carried out of the kingdom, to weaken ourselves and enrich the enemy; and therefore public utility must be preferred to private convenience; but on the other hand it is said, that these effects of the testator are not forfeited to the king by way of reprisal, because they belong not to the alien enemy, for he is to recover them for others; and if the law allows such alien enemies, to possess the effects, as well as an alien friend, it must allow them power to recover, since in that there is no difference, and by consequence he must not be disabled to sue for them; if it were otherwise it would be a prejudice to the king's subjects, who could not recover their debts, from the alien executor, by his not being able to get in the assets of the testator. Cro. Eliz. 683. Molloy 870. Carter 49, 191. Skin. 370.

An alien enemy coming into this kingdom, and taken in war, shall suffer death by the martial law; and not be indicted at the common law. Molloy de jur. Marit. 417.

But an alien whilst he resides here is generally subject to our laws, and owes a local and temporary allegiance to the sovereign, by whose authority those laws are administered, and by whom his person and property are protected: consequently if during such residence he commit an offence, which in the case of a natural born subject would amount to treason, he may be dealt with as such; and this whether his sovereign be in amity, or at enmity with us. 1 Woodes 379. Post. 185. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 17. s. 5. 32 Hen. 8. c. 16. s. 9.

Aliens are subject to and shall have the benefit of the statutes against bankrupts. 21 Jac. 1. c. 19. s. 15.

The property of an alien resident abroad, consisting of stock in the public funds, or other personal effects in this country, is subject to the control of the court of chancery. 1 Atk. 19.

But if an alien, resident abroad, dies intestate, his whole property here is distributable according to the laws of the country where he so resided; but the residence must be stationary, not occasional, else the municipal institutions will not attach upon the property. Ambl. 25, 415.

No alien shall be returned on any jury, nor be sworn for trial of issues between subject and subject, &c. but where an alien is party in a cause depending, the inquest of jurors are to be half denizens, and half aliens: but in cases of high treason, this is not allowed. 2 Inst. 17. An alien shall not have any vote in choice of knights of the shire, or burgesses to parliament. Hob. 270. And persons that are aliens, or born out of the realm, are incapable to be members of parliament, enjoy offices, &c. Stat. 12 W. 3, cap. 2.

ALIENATION, (from alienare, to alien) is the act whereby one man transfers the property and possession of lands or tenements, or other things to another.

ALIMONY, (alimonia,) signifies nourishment or maintenance: and in a legal sense, is taken for that allowance which a married woman sues for either in the chancery or spiritual court, and is entitled, except in the cases of elopement or adultery, to recover from her husband, during any separation, Terms de Ley 38. Co. Lit. 335. a.

The spiritual court is, however, the proper court to sue in for alimony. 12 Rep. 30. Moor 874.

But if there is a trust fund, equity will interpose: for in Williams v. Callow, the court appear to have decreed the wife a separate maintenance out of a trust fund, on account of the cruelty and ill behaviour of the husband, though there was no evidence of a divorce or agreement that the fund in dispute should be so applied. 2 Vern. So where the husband had quitted the kingdom, lord Hardwicke decreed the wife the interest of a trust fund, till he should return and maintain her as he ought. 2 Atk. 96.

ALLAY, (French, in Latin allaya,) signifies what used for the tempering and mixing other metals with silver or gold. This allay is to augment the weight of the silver or gold, so as it may defray the charge of coinage, and to make it the more fusile. Lowndes's Essay upon Coins, page 19, & 9 H. 5. St. 1. c. 11.

ALLEGIANCE, allegiantia, (formerly called ligemece, from the Latin alligare and ligare, i. e. ligamen fidei) is the allegiance, or faith and obedience, which every subject owes to his prince. It is either perpetual, where one is a subject born; or where one hath the right of a subject by naturalization, &c. or is temporary, by reason of residence in the king's dominions. Co. Lit. 2. 509. 2 Inst. 741.

The duty of allegiance arising from birth is perpetual and unalienable, and it is not in the power of any private subject to shake off his allegiance, and transfer it to a foreign prince: who cannot by naturalizing, or employing a subject of Great Britain, dissolve the bond of allegiance between that subject and the crown: but when by treaty, especially if ratified by act of parliament, the king cedes any island or region to another state, the inhabitants of such ceded territory, though born under the allegiance of our king, or being under his protection whilst it appertained to his crown and authority; become effectually, aliens, or liable to the disabilities of alienage in respect to their future concerns with this country. Fost. 59. Dy. 298. b. 300. b. 1 Woodes 382.

All persons above the age of twelve years are to be required to take the oath of allegiance in courts-leet. And there are several statutes requiring the oath of allegiance and supremacy, &c. to be taken under penalties.

ALLEGIARE, to defend or justify by due course of law. Cowel. Blount.

ALLER GOOD, the word aller is used to make what is added to signify superlatively; as aller good is the greatest good. Cowel. Blount.

ALLEVIARE, signifies to levy or pay an accustomed fine. Brady's Pref. Cowel. Blount.

ALLOCATION, (allocatio) in a legal sense, is an allowance made upon account in the exchequer; or more properly a placing or adding to a thing. Ibid.

ALLOCATIONE FACIENDA, a writ directed to the lord treasurer, and barons of the exchequer, upon complaint of some accountant, for allowing to such accountant such sums of money as he hath lawfully expended in his office. Reg. Orig. 206.

ALLOCATO COMITATU, is a new writ of exigent allowed, before any other county court holden, on the former not being fully served, or complied with, &c. Fitz. Exig. 14.

ALLODIAL. This is where an inheritance is held without any acknowledgment to any lord or superior; and therefore is of another nature from that which is feodal. Allodial lands are free lands, which a man enjoys without paying any fine, rent, or service to any other. Cowel. Blount. 2 Black. 47, 60, 105.

ALLUMINOR, (from the French allumer, to lighten, or kindle,) is used for one who coloureth or painteth upon paper or parchment, and the reason is, because he gives light and ornament by his colours to the letters or other figures. The word is used, in stat. 1 R. 3. c. 9. at this day he is called a limner. Cowel. Blount.

ALLUVION, is where land is gained from the sea side by the washing up of sand and earth, so as in time to make terra firma. 2 Black. 261.

ALMANACKS. The courts must take notice of the almanacks as part of the law of England, in respect to the returns of writs, and otherwise; but the almanack to go by is that annexed to the book of Common Prayer. Mod. Cas. 41, 81.

Whether such a day of the month was on a Sunday or not, and so not a dies juridicus, is triable by the country or the almanack. Dyer 182. pl. 55.

And the court may judicially take notice of almanacks, and be informed by them. 1 Leo. 242. pl. 328. Cro. Eliz. 227.

ALMARIA, for armaria: the archives of a church, a library. Cowel. Blount.

ALMNER, or ALMONER, (eleemosinarius,) an officer of the king's house, whose business it is, to distribute the king's alms, every day. Fleta, lib. 2. cap. 22. Cowel. Blount.

ALMSFEOH, or a'mesfeoh, Saxon for alms money: it has been taken for what we call Peter pence, first given by Ina king of the West Saxons, and anciently paid in England on the first of August. It was likewise called romefeoh, romescot, and heorthpenning. Selden's Hist. Tithes 217.

ALMUTIUM, a garment which covered the head and shoulders of priests. Cowel. Blount.

ALNAGER, or aulnager, (French aulner, Latin ulniger) is properly a measure by the ell; and the word aulne in French signifieth an ell. Cowel. Blount.

ALNETUM, a place where alders grow; or a grove of alder trees. Cowel. Blount.

ALODIUM, or allodium, in domesday signifies a free manor: and alodarii lords of free manors, or lords paramount. Co. Lit. 1, 5. Cowel. Blount.

ALOVERIUM, a purse. This word is mentioned in Fleta, lib. 2. c. 82. par. 2.

ALTARAGE, (altaragium,) the offerings made upon the altar, and also the profit that arises to the priest by reason of the altar, obventio altaris. Terms de ley 39. 2 Cro. 516.

And where altaragium is mentioned in old endowments, and supported by usage, it will extend to small tithes, but not otherwise. Bunb. 79.

ALTERATION, (alteratio,) is the changing of a thing: and when witnesses are examined upon exhibits, &c. they ought to remain in the office, and not to be taken back into private hands, by whom they may be altered. Hob. 254.

ALTERATION of a deed: a deed may be avoided, if there be any rasure, interlining, or other alteration in any material part; unless a memorandum be made thereof at the time of the execution and attestation. 11 Rep. 27. 2 Black. 308.

ALTO ET BASSO. By this is meant the absolute submission of all differences. Cowel. Blount.

AMABYR, vel AMVABYR, a custom in the honour of Clun, belonging to the earls of Arundel: Precium virginitatis domino solvendum LL. eccl. Gul. Howeli Dha, regis Walliæ. Puella dicitur esse desertum regis, & ob hoc regis est de ea amvabyr habere. This custom Henry earl of Arundel released to his tenants. Anno 3 & 4 P. & M. Cowel.

AMBACTUS, a servant or client. Cowel.

AMBASSADOR, (legatus.) An ambassador is a person sent by one sovereign prince to another, to transact in the place of his sovereign such matters as relate to both states. The manner of appointing and receiving public ministers, and their duty, power, and privileges, are chiefly regulated by the civil law or law of nations, and our law pays the greatest regard to the rules thereof. 1 Bac. Abr. 141.

Ambassadors are either ordinary, or extraordinary; the ordinary ambassadors are those who reside in the place whither sent; and the time of their return being indefinite, so is their business uncertain, arising from emergent occasions; and commonly the protection and affairs of the merchants is their greatest care: the extraordinary ambassadors are made pro tempore, and employed upon some particular great affairs, as condolements, congratulations, or for overtures of marriage, or the like. Their equipage is generally very magnificent; and they may return without requesting of leave, unless there be a restraining clause in their commission. Molloy 144.

By the laws of nations, none under the quality of a sovereign prince can send any ambassador: a king that is deprived of his kingdom and royalty, hath lost his right of legation. 4 Inst. 53.

Ambassadors may, by a precaution, be warned not to come to the place where sent; and if they then do it, they shall be taken for enemies; but being once admitted, even with enemies in arms, they shall have the protection of the laws of nations, and be preserved as princes. Mall. 146.

An ambassador, guilty of treason against the king's life, may be condemned and executed; but for other treasons, he shall be sent home, with demand to punish him, or to send him back to be punished. 4 Inst. 152. 1 Roll. Rep. 185.

If a foreign ambassador commits any crime here, which is contra jus gentium, as treason, felony, &c. or any other crime against the law of nations, he loseth the privilege of an ambassador, and is subject to punishment as a private alien; and he need not be demanded to his sovereign, but of curtesy. Dany. Abr. 327. But if a thing be only malum prohibitum by an act of parliament, private law, or custom of the realm, and it is contra jus gentium, an ambassador shall not be bound by them. 4 Inst. 153. And it is said ambassadors may be excused of practices against the state where they reside, (except it be in point of conspiracy, which is against the law of nations) because it doth not appear whether they have it in mandatis; and then they are excused by necessity of obedience. Bac. Max. 26.

By the civil law, the person of an ambassador may not be arrested; and the movable goods of ambassadors, which are accounted an accession to their persons, cannot be seized on, as a pledge, nor for payment of debts, though by leave of the king or state, where they are resident; but on refusal of payment, letters of request are to go to his master, &c. Molloy 157. Dany. 328.

Also by Ann. 7. c. 12. "an ambassador, or "public minister, or his domestic servants, "registered in the secretary's office, and "thence transmitted to the sheriff's office of "London and Middlesex, are not to be ar-"rested: if they are, the process shall be "void, and the persons suing out and execut-"ing it, shall suffer such penalties and cor-"poral punishments, as the lord chancellor or "either of the chief justices shall think fit." Also the goods of an ambassador, or of his servants, shall not be distrained.

The privilege of a public minister is annexed to his situation: it is the privilege of the state that sends him out, and not that of the individual: he cannot therefore waive it or forfeit it by becoming a trader; but a consul or any person acting in an office of that kind it seems is not entitled to privilege. Cas. temp. Talb. 281.

AMBIDEXTER, (Latin,) one that can use his left hand as well as his right; or that plays on both sides. But in a legal sense, it is taken for a juror or embraceor, who takes money of both parties for giving his verdict; and such a one shall be imprisoned, never more be of a jury, and further punished at the king's pleasure. 5 Ed. 3. c. 10. Crompt. Just. 156.

AMBRA, (Saxon amber, Latin amphora,) a vessel among the Saxons: it contained a measure of salt, butter, meal, beer, &c. Leg. Inæ West Saxon. Cowel. Blount.

AMBRY, the place where the arms, plate, vessels, and every thing which belonged to housekeeping were kept; and probably the ambry at Westminster is so called, because formerly set apart for that use: or rather the almonery, from the Latin eleemosynaria, an house adjoining to an abbey, in which the charities were laid up for the poor. Cowel. Blount.

AMENABLE, (French amener,) in our ancient law books is commonly applied to a woman, that is governable by her husband. But in the modern sense, it signifies to be responsible, or subject to answer within the jurisdiction of a court of justice. Cowel. Blount.

AMENDMENT, (emendatio) AT LAW: the correction of an error committed in any process, which may be amended after judgment; and if there be any error in giving the judgment, the party is driven to his writ of error; though where the fault appears to be in the clerk who writ the record, it may be amended. Terms de Ley 39.

At common law there was little room for amendments, which appears by the several statutes of amendments and jeofails. Brit. 2. 8 Co. 156. 4 Inst. 235.

Original writs are not amendable at common law, for if the writ be not good, the party may have another: judicial writs may and have been often amended. 8 Rep. 157.

Whatever at common law might be amended in civil cases, was at common law amendable in criminal cases, and so it is at this day; resolved by Holt Ch. J. Powell and Powis J. 1 Salk. 51. pl. 14.

The statutes of amendment are the following: By Statute 14 Ed. 3. c. 6. It is asserted, that "by the misprision of a clerk "in any place wheresoever it be, no "process shall be annulled or discontinued, by mistaking in writing one syllable or one letter too much or too "little; but as soon as the thing is perceived, by challenge of the party, or in other "manner, it shall be hastily amended in due "form, without giving advantage to the "party that challengeth the same, because "of such misprision."

This statute is confirmed by statute 4 Hen. 6. c. 3. with an exception, that it shall not extend to process on outlawry, or to records or processes in Wales. But according to 2 Sand. 48. this last exception; and the like exception in 8 Hen. 6. c. 15. seem to be annulled by the statute 27 Hen. 8. c. 26. by which it is enacted, that the laws of England shall be used, practised and executed in Wales.

The statute 8 Hen. 6. c. 12. gives power to judges to amend what they shall think in their discretion to be the misprision of their clerks in any record, process, and plea, warrant of attorney, writ, panel, or return.

By statute 8 Hen. 6. c. 15. "The king's "justices, before whom any misprision shall "be found, be it in any records or processes "depending before them, as well by way of "error as otherwise, or in the returns of the "same, by sheriffs, coroners, bailiffs of "franchises, or any other, by misprision of "the clerks of any of the said courts, or of "the sheriffs, coroners, their clerks, or other "officers clerks, or other ministers whatsoever, in writing one letter or one syllable "too much or too little, shall have power to "amend the same."

A declaration grounded on an original writ may not be amended, if the writ be erroneous: though if it be on a bill of Middlesex or a latitat, it is amendable. 1 Lill. Abr. 67. Declarations upon any penal statutes, qui tam, &c. may not be amended after issue joined. 2 Mod. 144. And indictments of treason, and felony, writs of appeal, &c. are excepted out of the statutes of amendments; though some things are amendable at common law. Mod. Cas. 269.

A plaintiff may amend his declaration in matter of form after a general issue pleaded, before entry thereof, without payment of costs: if he amend in substance, he is to pay costs, or give imparlance; and if he amend after a special plea, though he would give imparlance, he must pay costs. 1 Lill. 58. A declaration in ejectment laid the demise before the time; this was not amendable, for it would alter the issue, and make a new title in the plaintiff. 1 Salk. 48. The plaintiff declared on the statute of Winton for a robbery done to himself, when it should have been of his servants; he had leave to amend. 3 Lev. 347. If a defendant pleads a plea to the right, or in abatement, the plaintiff may amend his declaration; but not where he demurs, for this fault may be the cause of the demurrer. 1 Salk. 50. A demurrer may be amended, after the parties have joined in demurrer, if it be only in paper. Style 48.

As to the amendments of records, &c. an issue entered upon record, with leave of the court may be amended; but not in a material thing, or in that which will deface the record. 1 Lill. Abr. 61. A record may be amended by the court in a small matter, after issue joined, so as the plea be not altered. Dany. Abr. 338.

If on a writ of error a record is amended in another court, in affirmance of the judgment, it must be amended in the court where judgment was given. Hardr. 505.

Where the record of nisi prius does not agree with the original record, it may be amended after verdict, provided it do not change the issue: but a record shall not be amended to attaint the jury, or prejudice the authority of the judge. A general or special verdict may be amended by the notes of the clerk of assise in civil causes; but not in criminal actions. 1 Salk. 47.

The issue roll shall be amended by the imparlance roll, which is precedent: but a roll may not be amended after verdict, when there is nothing to amend it by; though surplusage may be rejected, and so make it good. Cro. Car. 92. 1 Sid. 135.

AMENDMENT IN EQUITY.] If any necessary parties are omitted, or unnecessary parties are inserted in a bill, the court, upon application, will in general permit the proper alterations to be made. Mitford, 39.

And a bill may be amended before or after appearance and answer, and new parties added even after publication passed, where there are not proper parties. Ibid.

But after the parties are at issue, and witnesses have been examined, no part of the pleadings can be amended, but under very special circumstances; but if no witness has been examined, an amendment may be permitted, though publication may have passed. Mitford 258.

Also after a demurrer to a whole bill, it seems not to be strictly regular to permit an amendment of the bill in part. Mitford 13. nor where it is dismissed upon the merits. 2 Pere. Wms. 401.

The plaintiff may amend at any time after the defendant has appeared and taken an office-copy of the bill without costs, undertaking to amend the defendant's office-copy of the bill: but if he would amend, and require an answer to the amendment after answer filed, it is on payment of 20*s.* costs, which he must pay before he proceeds, otherwise he is irregular. Ibid.

Where an improper submission was made in the bill of an infant, the court allowed it to be amended on the hearing of the cause. 2 Pere. Wms. 586.

There are no certain rules, respecting the amendment of answers, but they are in the discretion of the courts: the admission of a fact is never suffered to be struck out, but on an affidavit of surprize, or the defendant being ill-advised: but where an amendment is admitted in the bill; where, through inadvertency a mistake is made as to a fact or date; where there is no danger of perjury; where the case depends upon old documents, lies pretty much in the dark, and new matter discovered, which affords the defendant a good defence; the courts have allowed amendments to be made either by striking out passages, or making new facts, and this after issue joined, or upon the hearing of the cause. 1 Eq. Cas Abr. tit. Am.

If new matter has arisen, the practice is to add it by way of supplemental answer: for the defendant will not be permitted to take the old answer off the file. Ibid.

An answer shall not be amended after an indictment for perjury preferred, or threatened: yet if there were circumstances extremely strong, to shew that it was only a mere mistake, it might be otherwise. 1 Br. Ch. Rep. 419.

An infant may amend his answer, when he comes of age, and therefore no exceptions can be taken to it. Bunb. 338.

Where it appears, that either the examiner is mistaken in taking a deposition, or the witness in making it, it may be amended after publication. 2 Pere. Wms. 646.

A mistake in the title of an order. was allowed to be amended, though it was for the purpose of charging a surety, who had entered into a recognizance to abide the order of hearing. 2 Vern 376. 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. tit. Am.

But where there was a mistake in the title of the interrogatories, neither the depositions were permitted to be read, nor the title to be amended, though most of the witnesses were gone abroad. 1 Eq. Cas. Abr tit. Am.

AMERCIAMENT, amerciamentum, (from the French merci) signifies the pecuniary punishment of an offender against the king, or other lord in his court, that is found to be in misericordia, i. e. to have offended, and to stand at the mercy of the king or lord. Cowel. Blount. Amerciament is properly a penalty assessed by the peers or equals of the party amerced, for the offence done; for which he putteth himself at the mercy of the lord. Terms de Ley 40. And by the statute of Magna Charta, a freeman is not to be amerced for a small fault, but proportionable to the offence, and that by his peers. 9 H. 3. c. 4. The difference between amerciaments and fines, is this; fines are said to be punishments certain, and grow expressly from some statute; but amerciaments are such as are arbitrarily imposed. Kitch. 78. Also fines are imposed and assessed by the court: amerciaments by the country: and no court can impose a fine, but a court of record: other courts can only amerce. 8 Rep. 39, 41.

A court-leet can amerce for public nuisances only. 1 Saund. 135. For a fine and all amerciaments in a court-leet, a distress is incident of common right: but for amerciament in a court baron, distress may not be taken but by prescription. 11 Rep. 43. When an amerciament is agreed on, the lord may have an action of debt, or distrain for it, and impound the distress, or sell it at his pleasure: but he cannot imprison for it. 8 Rep. 41, 45. 1 Wils. Rep. 248. In courts baron the amerciaments ought to be affeered; but it is otherwise of fines imposed by a court of record. 2 Inst. 27. An amerciament of a freeholder must be affeered by freeholds of the manor, or debt will not lie for it. 1 Wils. Rep. 2—20. In the court baron, tenants not doing suit of court, persons making any incroachments, not performing what is ordered, or for other misdemeanors there punishable, are to be amerced: these amerciaments are made upon presentment of the jury; and if they are grounded upon a void presentment, the amerciaments are also void. 1 Lill. Abr. 72.

There is also amercement in pleas in the courts of record, when a defendant delays to tender the thing demanded by the king's writs, on the first day. Co. Lit. 116. And in all personal actions without force, as in debt, detinue, &c. if the plaintiff be nonsuited, barred, or his writ abate for matter of form, he shall be amerced: but if on judicial process, founded on a judgment and record, the plaintiff be nonsuited, barred, &c. he shall not be amerced. 1 Nels. Abr. 206. And an infant, if nonsuited, is not to be amerced: it is otherwise when at age. Jenk. Cent. 258. But now the capias pro fine is taken away, by 2 W. & M. c. 12.

Sheriffs are to be amerced for the faults of their officers; and clerks of the peace are amerceable in B. R. for gross faults in indictments removed thither. Hill. 21 Car. The amerciament of the sheriff, or other officer of the king, is called amerciament royal. Terms de Ley. A town shall be amerced for the escape of a murderer, in the day-time: and if the town be walled, it is said, it shall be subject to amercement, whether by day or night. 3 Inst. 53.

AMICIA, (the same with almutium) a cap made with goats or lambs skins: that part whereof which covered the head was square, and one part of it hung behind, and covered the neck. Monasticon, 3 tom. p. 36.

AMICTUS, was the uppermost of the six garments worn by priests, tied round the neck, and it covered the breast and heart. Amictus, alba, cingulem, stola, manipulus, & planeta, were the six garments of the priests. Cowel.

AMICUS CURIAE, if a judge is doubtful or mistaken in matter of law, a stander-by may inform the court, as amicus curiæ. 2 Co. Inst. 178.

AMITTERE LEGEM TERRÆ, to lose and be deprived of the liberty of swearing in any court: or according to Coke to become infamous, and incapable of being an evidence. Glanvil, lib. 2.

AMMOBRAGIUM, a service.—in com. Flint. conjectured to be the same as CHEVAGE by Spelm.

AMNESTY, (amnestia, oblivio) an act of pardon or oblivion.

AMNITUM INSULÆ, isles upon the west coast of Britain. Blount.

AMORTIZATION, (amotizatio, French amortissement) is an alienation of lands or tenements in mortmain, viz. to any corporation or fraternity, and their successors, &c. see Mortmain.

AMORTIZE, (French amortir) is to alien lands in mortmain. See Mortmain.

AMPLIATION, (ampliatio) an enlargement, but in sense of law it is a referring of judgment, till the cause is further examined. Cowel.

AMY, (amicus) A prochein amy is the next friend suing for an orphan or infant. And infants are to sue by prochein amy (i. e. next friend) or guardian: and defend by guardian. Alien amy is a foreigner here subject to some prince in friendship with us.

AN, JOUR ET WASTE, (French) years day and waste; a forfeiture of lands to the king incurred by tenants committing felony, afterwards the lands escheat, to the lord.

ANCESTOR, (antecessor) one that has gone before in a family: and the law makes a difference between an ancestor and a predecessor; the one being applied to a natural person and his ancestors, and the other to a corporation and their predecessors. Co. Lit. 78 b.

ANCESTREL, as homage ancestrel, what relates to or hath been done by one's ancestors. Cowel. Blount.

ANCHOR, is a measure of brandy, &c containing ten gallons. Lex. Mercat.

ANCHORAGE, (ancoragium) a duty taken of ships for the use of the haven where they cast anchor. MS. Arth. Trevor, Ar. The ground in ports and havens belonging to the king, no person can let any anchor fall there on, without paying therefore to the king's officers appointed by patent. Cowel. Blount.

ANCIENTS, gentlemen of the inns of court. In Gray's inn the society consists of benchers, ancients, barristers, and students under the bar; and here the ancients are of the oldest barristers. In the Middle Temple, such as have gone through, or are past their readings, are termed ancients; the inns of Chancery consist of ancients and students or clerks; and from the ancients one is yearly chosen the principal or treasurer. Cowel. Blount.

ANCIENT DEMESNE, (vetus patrimonium domini) all those lands which were in possession of Edward the confessor, and afterwards came to William the conqueror, and were by him set down in a book called domesday, about the 28th year of his reign, under the title de terra regis, are ancient demesne lands. Kitch. 98.

But the lands which were in the possession of Edward the confessor, and were given away by him, are not at this day ancient demesne, nor any others, except those writ down in the book of domesday; and therefore, whether such lands are ancient demesne or not, is to be tried only by that book. 1 Salk. 57. 4 Inst. 269. Hob. 188. 1 Brownl. 43.

But if the question is, whether lands be parcel of a manor which is ancient demesne, this shall be tried by a jury. Salk. 56, 774. 1 Com. Dig. tit. Abatement.

Tenants in ancient demesne had many immunities and privileges granted to them; as to try the right of their property in a peculiar court of their own, called a court of ancient demesne, by a peculiar process, called a writ of right close; not to pay toll or taxes, not to contribute to the expenses of the knights of the shire; not to be put on juries and the like. 2 Black. 99.

Lands holden by this tenure are a species of copyhold, and as such preserved and exempted from the operations of the stat. of Car. 2. and they cannot be conveyed from man to man by the general common law conveyances; but must pass by surrender to the lord, or his steward, in the manner of common copyholds, yet with this distinction, that in the surrender of these lands in ancient demesne, it is not used to say to hold at the will of the lord in their copies, but only to hold according to the custom of the manor. Kitchen 194. 2 Black. 100.

ANCIENTY, (French ancienete, Latin antiquitas) eldership or seniority. Cowel. Blount.

ANCILIARY: courts of equity in many cases will act as anciliary to the administration of justice in other courts by removing impediments to the fair decision of a question. Thus if an ejectment be brought to try a right to land, in a court of common law, a court of equity will restrain the party in possession, from setting up any title which may prevent the fair trial of the right; as a term for years, or other interest in a trustee, lessee, or mortgagee. Mitf. 121.

But this will not be done in every case; for as the court proceeds, upon the principle, that the party in possession ought not in conscience, to use an accidental advantage to protect his possession against a real right in his adversary, if there is any circumstance which meets the reasoning upon this principle, the court will not interfere. Ibid. 122.

Therefore if the possessor is a purchaser for a valuable consideration, without notice of the title of the claimant, this is a title in conscience equal to that of the claimant, and the court will not restrain the possessor, from using any advantage he may be able to gain to defend his possession. It can hardly appear upon the face of a bill, that the defendant is in such a situation, and therefore the benefit of this defence, must generally be taken by plea: but if the case should be so stated, the defendant might demur; because the case stated would appear to be such in which a court of equity ought not to assume jurisdiction. Ibid. 122.

So if the matter suggested in a bill as an impediment to the determination of a question in a court of ordinary jurisdiction, in fact is not so, the defendant may also demur, for then there is no pretence for the interference of a court of equity: therefore, where a bill was filed for a discovery of the value of the respective real estates of the inhabitants of a parish, in which a church rate had been assessed, and of the application of the money collected, a demurrer was allowed, because the ecclesiastical court, to which the ordinary jurisdiction belonged, was capable of compelling the discovery. 1 Atk. 288. 1 Ves. 205. 2 Ves 451. Mitf. 122, 151.

So also if a bill is brought to aid by a discovery, the prosecution or defence of any proceeding, not merely civil, in any other court, as an indictment or information (or an action by a common informer for the recovery of money, won at play, under the statute against gaming. Helloways' case, Anstr. Rep.) A court of equity will not exercise its jurisdiction to compel a discovery, and the defendant may demur. 2 Ves. 398. Mitf. 150.

ANDENA, a swath in mowing: it likewise signifies as much ground as a man can stride over at once. Ibid.

ANELACIUS, a short knife or dagger.

ANFELDTYHDE, or anfealtihle, according to the Saxon law, a simple accusation. Cowel. Blount.

ANGARIA, (from the French angarie) personal service which tenants were obliged to pay to their lords. Cowel. Blouni.

ANGELICA VESTIS, a monkish garment which laymen put on a little before their deaths, that they might have the benefit of the prayers of the monks. Monasticon, 1 tom. p. 632.

ANGEL, signifies in the computation of money, ten shillings of English coin.

ANGILD, (angildum) the bare single valuation or compensation of a criminal; from the Saxon an one, and gild, payment, mulct, or fine; twigild was the double fine, and trigild the treble, according to the rated ability of the person. Law of Ina, c. 20. Spelm. Cowel. Blount.

ANHLOTE, a single tribute or tax, such as pay his part and share, as scot and lot. Leg. W. 1. c. 64. Cowel. Blount.

ANIENS, (French) void, being of no force. F. N. B. 214.

ANNALES, yearlings, or young cattle of the first year. Cowel. Blount.

ANNATS, (annates) this word has the same meaning with first-fruits. Cowel. Blount.

ANNEALING OF TILE, (anno 17 Ed. 4.) from the Saxon onælan accendere, signifies the burning or hardening of tile.

ANNIENTED, (from the French anneanter) abrogated, frustrated, or brought to nothing. Lit. c. 3. sect. 741.

ANNIVERSARY DAYS, (dies anniversarii) solemn days appointed to be celebrated yearly, in commemoration of the death or martyrdom of saints; or the days whereon, at the return of every year, men were wont to pray for the souls of their deceased friends, according to the custom of the Roman Catholics, mentioned in the statute of 1 Ed. 6. cap. 14. and 12 Car. 2. cap. 13. This was in use among our ancient Saxons. See Lib. Rames. sec. 134.

ANNI NUBILES, (Latin) when a woman is under 12 years of age, her age to marry, she is said to be infra annos nubiles, and unmarriageable; so that it signifies the marriageable age of a woman. 2 Co. Inst. 434.

ANNO DOMINI, the computation of time from the incarnation of Jesus Christ, which is generally inserted in the dates of all public writings, with an addition of the year of the king's reign. The Romans began their æra of time from the building of Rome: the Grecians computed by olympiads; and the Christians reckon from the birth of Jesus Christ. Cowel. Blount.

ANNOISANCE, ANNOYANCE, or noisance, is a word used for any hurt done to a place, as a highway, bridge, river, or the like, or to any private place, by laying any thing therein that may breed infection, by incroachments, or such like means; and it is also taken for the writ brought upon such a transgression. This word is mentioned anno 22 H. c. 5. Cowel. Blount.

ANNUA PENSIONE, an ancient writ now disused, for providing the king's chaplain unpreferred, with a pension. It was brought where the king had due to him an annual pension from an abbot or prior, for any of his chaplains whom he should nominate, (being unprovided of livings) to demand the same of such abbot or prior. Reg. Orig. 165, 307.

ANNUALE, the yearly rent or income of a prebendary. Cowel. Blount.

ANNUALIA, a yearly stipend assigned to a priest for celebrating an anniversary, or for saying continued masses one year, for the soul of a deceased person. Cowel. Blount.

ANNUITY. An annuity strictly taken, is a yearly payment (annui redditus) of a certain sum of money granted to another in fee-simple, fee-tail, for life or years, charging the person of the grantor only. 1 Bac. Abr. tit. An.

If payable out of lands, it is properly called a rent charge, but if both the person and estate be made liable, as they most commonly are, then it is generally called an annuity. Ibid.

A rent charge is, where the owner of the rent hath no future interest or reversion expectant in the land: as where a man by deed maketh over to others his whole estate in fee-simple, with a certain rent payable thereout; and adds to the deed a covenant or clause of distress, that if the rent be in arrear or behind, it shall be lawful to distrain for the same: in this case the land is liable to distress, not of common right, but by virtue of the clause in the deed, and therefore it is called a rent charge, because in this manner, the land is charged with a distress for the payment of it, and if the grant be without clause of distress, then it is a rent seck, redditus siccus, or barren rent. 2 Black. 41. 1 Bac. Abr. tit. An.

And if the annuitant die before the quarterly day of payment arrives, nothing is due for the intermediate time that may have elapsed since the last quarterly day of payment and the day of his death, unless it is otherwise provided by the deed creating the annuity. 3 Atk. 260.

There are now very few, if any, grants of annuities, without a covenant for payment, and therefore, where a distress cannot be made, or is not approved of, the grantee may bring an action of covenant, and recover the arrears in damages, with costs of suit. And that action is now usually brought, real actions and writs of annuity being much out of use. Morgan.

ANNUITIES FOR LIVES. The practice of purchasing annuities for lives at a certain price or premium, instead of advancing the same sum on an ordinary loan, arises usually from the inability of the borrower to give the lender a permanent security, for the return of the money borrowed at any one period of time; he therefore stipulates (in effect) to repay annually during his life, some part of the money borrowed; together with legal interest, for so much of the principal, as annually remains unpaid, and an additional compensation for the extraordinary hazard run, of losing that principal entirely, by the contingency of the borrower's death: all which considerations being calculated and blended together, will constitute the just proportion or quantum of the annuity, which ought to be granted. 2 Black. 461.

The real value of that contingency must depend on the age, constitution, situation and conduct of the borrower, and therefore the price of such annuities, cannot, without the utmost difficulty, be reduced to any general rules: so that if, by the terms of the contract, the lender's principal is bona fide (and not colourably, Carth. 67.) put in jeopardy, no inequality of price will make it an usurious bargain; though under some circumstances of imposition, it may be relieved against in equity. Ibid.

To throw, however, some check upon improvident transactions of this kind, which are usually carried on with privacy, it is enacted, by 17 Geo. 3. c. 26. that "a memorial of all "deeds, bonds, or other instruments for "granting life annuities, shall within twenty "days after the execution thereof, be inrolled "in the court of chancery; which shall con- "tain the date, names of the parties, and wit- "nesses; otherwise every such deed, bond "or the like, shall be void." s. 1.

"Before judgment shall be entered of "record, upon any warrant of attorney, for "recovering any annuity already granted, "and before execution shall be sued out, on "any judgment already entered, a memo- "randum shall be enrolled as aforesaid." s. 2.

"All future deeds, bonds and instruments "for granting of annuities, shall contain the "consideration, and the names of the parties "at length, and if any part of the considera- "tion shall be returned, or any notes shall "not be paid when due, the court where the "action is brought, may stay the proceed- "ings, and order the deeds, bonds, and other "instruments to be cancelled." s. 3, 4.

"The clerk of the enrolments in chancery "shall keep a particular roll for annuities,

"wherein he shall specify the time of enrol-"ment. His fees are, one shilling for the "first 900 words, sixpence for each 100 "words after, and one shilling for a search." s. 5.

"All contracts for the purchase of annui-"ties, with any person under the age of "twenty-one years of age shall be void; and "any person procuring or soliciting any "minor, to grant an annuity, or any solici-"tor, scrivener, or broker taking more than "10*l. per cent.* for procuring money for an-"nuities, shall be punished by fine and im-"prisonment." s. 6, 7.

"Act not to extend to annuities, or rent "charges by will, marriage settlement, or "for advancement of a child; nor, if se-"cured on lands of equal or greater value, if "the grantor is seised in fee or tail, or if "secured by stocks actually transferred, if "the dividend is of greater value; nor to "voluntary annuities without a pecuniary "consideration, nor if granted by corpora-"tions, or by authority of act of parliament, "or if under 10*l. per ann.* unless there be "more than one from the same grantor to, "or in trust for the same grantee." s. 8.

A deed not registered according to the directions of the above act is absolutely void, and not merely voidable. 2 Ter. Rep. 603. 4 Ter. Rep. 463, 494, 500, 694, 790, 824. And if the security be set aside for want of complying with the formalities of the act, the consideration if fair and legal may be recovered back by the grantee in an action of assumpsit against the person actually receiving such consideration money, but not against a surety. 1 Ter. Rep. 732. 2 Ter. Rep. 366.

ANNULUM ET BACULUM, the ancient mode of granting the investitures of bishopricks, was per annulum et baculum, by the prince delivering to the prelate a ring and pastoral staff, and crosier. 1 Black. 378—9.

ANNUM LUCTUS. The civil law ordained, that no widow should marry infra annum luctus, to prevent, amongst other inconveniences, that which arises from a man's dying, and his widow soon after marrying again, and having a child born within such a time, as that by the course of nature it may be the child of either husband: in which case it is said to be more than ordinarily legitimate, inasmuch as he may when he arrives at years of discretion, choose which of the fathers he pleases. Co. Lit. 8. 1 Black. 456.

ANTEJURAMENTUM, and præjuramentum. By our ancestors called juramentum calumniæ; in which both the accuser and the accused were to make this oath before any trial or purgation, viz. the accuser was to swear, that he would prosecute the criminal; and the accused was to make oath on the very day, that he was to undergo the ordeal, that he was innocent of the crime of which he was charged. Leg. Athelstan. apud Lambard 23. If the accuser failed to take this oath, the criminal was discharged; and if the accused did not take his, he was intended to be guilty, and not admitted to purge himself. Leg. Hen. 1. c. 66.

ANTISTITIUM, a word used for monastery in our old histories. Blount.

ANTITHETARIUS, signifies where a man endeavours to discharge himself of the fact of which he is accused, by recriminating and charging the accuser with the same fact. Cowel. Blount.

APATISATIO, an agreement or compact made with another. Ibid.

APORIARE, to be brought to poverty. It hath been used sometimes to signify shun or avoid. Ibid.

APOSTACY, a total renunciation of Christianity, by embracing either a false religion, or no religion at all: this offence could only take place in such as had once professed the true religion, and the perversion of a Christian to Judaism, Paganism, or other false religion, was punished by the emperors Constantius and Julian with confiscation of goods, to which the emperors Theodosius and Valentinian added capital punishment, in case the apostate endeavoured to pervert others to the same iniquity: the zeal of our ancestors also induced them to adopt the same severity in this country: for we find by Bracton l. 3, c. 9. that in his time apostates were burnt to death. 4 Black. 43,

This punishment, however, has long since become obsolete; and the offence of apostacy, was for a long time cognizable only in the ecclesiastical courts, where the offender might be corrected, pro salute animæ. Ibid.

But about the close of the seventeenth century, the civil liberties to which we were then restored, being used as a cloak of maliciousness, and the most horrid doctrines, subversive of all religion, being publicly avowed, both in discourse and writing, it was thought necessary again for the civil power to interpose, by not admitting the professors of such doctrines to the privileges of society, who maintained principles, so destructive of all moral obligation. Ibid.

To this end it was enacted by stat. 9 & 10 Wil. c. 32. that if any person educated in, or having made profession of the Christian religion, shall by writing, printing, teaching, or advised speaking, deny the Christian religion to be true, or the holy Scriptures to be of divine authority, he shall upon the first offence be rendered incapable to hold any office or place of trust; and for the second be rendered incapable of bringing any action, being guardian, executor, legatee, or purchaser of lands, and shall suffer three years imprisonment without bail: but (to give room for repentance as Judge Blackstone observes, 4 Com. 44.) if within four months after the first conviction, the delinquent will in open court, publicly renounce his error, he is discharged for that once from all disabilities.

APOSTARE, to violate: wilfully to break or transgress the laws. Cowel. Blount.

APOSTATA CAPIENDO, a writ, now out of use, that formerly lay against one who, having entered and professed some order of religion, broke out again, and wandered up and down the country, contrary to the rules of his order: it was directed to the sheriff for the apprehension of the offender, and delivery of him again to his abbot or prior. Reg. Orig. 71, 267.

APOTHECARIES, are exempted from serving offices, by 6 Will. 3. c. 4.

APPARATOR, or APPARITOR, a messenger that serves the process of the spiritual court. His duty is to cite the offenders to appear; to arrest them; and to execute the sentence or decree of the judges, &c. Cowel. Blount.

APPARATOR COMITATUS, an officer formerly called by this name; for which the sheriffs of Buckinghamshire had a considerable yearly allowance; and in the reign of queen Elizabeth, there was an order of court for making that allowance: but the custom and reason of it are now altered. Hale's Sher. Accn. 104.

APPARLEMENT, (from the French pareillement, i. e. in like manner) signifies a resemblance or likelihood, as apparlement of war. 2 R. 2. Stat. 1. c. 6.

APPARURA, furniture and implements. Carrucarum apparura is plough-tackle, or all the implements belonging to a plough. Cowel. Blount.

APPEAL, appellum. [From the French appeller: the verb active, which signifies to call upon, summon or challenge one, and not the verb neuter which signifies the same, as the ordinary sense of appeal in English. 4 Black. 312. n. i.] An appeal in the general use of the word, signifies any complaint to a superior court of an injustice done by an inferior one; but it here means an original suit at the time of its first commencement. 3 Black. 362. 4 Black. 312.

But an appeal, when spoken of as a criminal prosecution (as it is here) is the party's private action, seeking revenge for the injury done him, and at the same time prosecuting for the crown, in respect of the offence against the public. 1 Bac. Abr. tit. Ap.

Though this be a legal suit, and therefore to be carried on in a reasonable way, yet as none of the statutes of amendment or jeofail extend to it, the utmost exactness is required in the proceedings: and in modern times, from the great difficulty, attendant upon a prosecution of this kind, and the little encouragement given to it by the judges, from its vindictive nature, it is a course of proceeding now rarely resorted to.

This private process, for the punishment of public crimes, had probably its original in those times when a private pecuniary satisfaction, called a weregild, was constantly paid to the party injured, or his relations, to expiate enormous offences: as, therefore, during the continuance of this custom, a process was certainly given, for recovering the weregild, by the party to whom it was due, it seems that when these offences by degrees grew no longer redeemable, the private process was still continued, in order to insure the infliction of punishment upon the offender, though the party injured was allowed no pecuniary compensation for the offence. 4 Black. 313.

Of these appeals, there were anciently several kinds, which seem obsolete at this day; as appeals of treason, within the realm which might be sued by courts of law, or before parliament. 2 Inst. 152. Bruct. 118. 2 Hawk. P. C. 161.

But that in the first was virtually abolished by 5 Ed. 3. c. 9. s. 2. 5 Ed. 3. c. 22. and in the second, expressly by 1 Hen. 4. c. 14. 4 Black. 314.

However, the jurisdiction of the constable and marshal, in relation to appeals of treasons committed out of the realm, seems to continue still in force; for so late as 7 Car. 1. an appeal of treason, supposed to be committed beyond sea, was actually commenced before the constable and marshal; who, for want of sufficient proof to clear the truth, awarded that a duel should be fought between the parties, for the final determination of the matter. Rushworth's Collect. part 2. vol. 1. p. 112.

Appeals de pace, de plagis, and de imprisonamento, are out of use, and have been turned to actions of trespass for many hundred years past; also the whole learning of appeals of arson seems obsolete at this day. Co. Lit. 288. a.

The only appeals, therefore, that may be brought at this day, seem to be those of death, larceny, and rape, which are capital appeals, and that of mayhem, which is considered as a trespass. 1 Bac. Abr. 190. vide 6 E. 6. c. 4.

APPEAL OF DEATH, which is now chiefly in use, is a vindictive action which the law gives a wife against her husband's murderer, and to the male heir at law, against one who kills his ancestor, which, being the suit of the subject, the king cannot pardon. Ibid.

At the common law, before magna charta, 9 Hen. 3. c. 34. a woman as well as a man might have had an appeal of death of any of her ancestors. But by magna charta, c. 34. a woman cannot sue an appeal for the murder of any one, but her husband. 2 Inst. 68.

The wife is to be a wife de facto to be intitled to appeal; and if she marries again, before the appeal is brought, or whilst the same is depending, her appeal will be gone. 2 Inst. 68, 317.

The husband shall not have an appeal for the death of his wife, but the heir only.

Dano. Abr. 488. An heir shall not have appeal for the death of a man married, except the wife kill the husband; in which case the heir may prosecute the appeal. 1 Leon. 326. Co. Lit. 33.

And if the wife dies within the year, the heir shall have no appeal. Keilw. 120.

And by the stat. Glocester, 6 Ed. 1. c. 9. all appeals of death must be sued within a year and a day, after the completion of the felony, by the death of the party, which according to 4 Black. 314. seems to be only declaratory of the common law.

These appeals may be brought, previous to any indictment; and if the appellor be acquitted thereon, he cannot afterwards be indicted for the same offence. 4 Black. 314.

But if a murderer be acquitted upon indictment, or found guilty, and pardoned by the king, the wife or heir may bring appeal. Wood 629. 4 Black. 314.

And therefore when a person is indicted for murder, and acquitted thereupon, he is to be bailed till the year and day is past, allowed for bringing the appeal, if an appeal be intended. 3 Hen. 7. cap. 1.

But if he hath been found guilty of manslaughter on an indictment, and hath had the benefit of clergy, and suffered the judgment of the law, he cannot be afterwards appealed; for it is a maxim of the law that nemo bis punitur pro eodem delicto. 4 Black. 315.

If the appellee be found guilty, he shall suffer the same judgment, as if he had been convicted by indictment: but with this remarkable difference, that in an indictment, which is at the suit of the king, the king may pardon and remit the execution: but on an appeal, which is at the suit of a private subject, to make an atonement for the private wrong, the king can no more pardon it, than he can remit the damages on an action of battery: an appeal being for retribution or satisfaction as far as the law can give it, that is, life for life. 4 Black. 316. 3 Inst. 131. Staund. 147—8.

However, the punishment of the offender may be remitted and discharged, by the concurrence of all parties interested; and as the king by his pardon may frustrate an indictment, so the appellant by his release may discharge an appeal nam quilibet potest renunciare juri pro se introducto. 4 Black. 316.

APPEAL OF MAIHEM, is the accusing one that hath maimed another: but this being generally no felony, it is in a manner but an action of trespass; and nothing is recovered by it but damages. 3 Inst. 63.

APPEAL OF RAPE, lies where a rape is committed on the body of a woman. 3 Inst. 39. A feme covert, without her husband, may bring appeal of rape: and the stat. 11 Hen. 4. cap. 13. gives power where a woman is ravished, and afterwards consents to it, for a husband, or a father, or next of kin, there being no husband, to bring appeal of rape: also the criminal, in such case, may be attainted at the suit of the king. 3 Inst. 131. 6 R. 2. cap. 6.

Appeal of Rape may be brought in any reasonable time. H. P. C. 186. And though formerly the defendant might have his clergy, it is taken away by the stat. 18 Eliz. cap. 17. Dyer 201.

APPEAL OF ROBBERY, a remedy given by the common law, where a person is robbed of his goods, &c. to have restitution of the goods stolen: as they could not be restored on indictment at the king's suit, this appeal was judged necessary. 3 Inst. 242. If a man robbed make fresh pursuit after, and apprehend and prosecute the felon, he may bring appeal of robbery at any time afterwards. Staundf. 62.

For the party robbed, shall not be bound to bring it within a year and a day, as he must do in appeal of murder. 4 Leon. 16.

APPEAL TO ROME. By the stat. 24 Hen. 8. c. 12. and 25 Hen. 8. c. 19, 21. to appeal to Rome from any of the king's courts, to sue to Rome for any licence of dispensation, or to obey any process from thence, are made liable to the pains of præmunire.

APPEARANCE to actions, signifieth the defendant's filing common or special bail, when he is served with a copy of, or arrested on any process out of the courts at Westminster. Show 165.

For the time and manner of entering, which appearances, see the practice of the respective courts, as detailed under the proper titles relative thereto, in this Dictionary.

APPENDANT, (appendens) is a thing of incorporeal inheritance, belonging to another inheritance that is more worthy. As an advowson, common, court, or the like, which may be appendant to a manor: common of fishing, appendant to a freehold: land appendant to an office: a seat in a church to a house. But land is not appendant to land, both being corporeal, and one thing corporeal may not be appendant to another that is corporeal; but an incorporeal thing may be appendant to it. Co. Lit. 121. 4 Rep. 86. Dano. Abr. 500.

A way thus may be quasi appendant to the house or land, and as such pass by grant thereof. Co. Lit. 172. b. Cro. Jac. 190.

APPENDITIA, the appendages or pertinences of an estate. Hence our pentices or pent-houses, are called appenditia domus, &c. Cowel. Blount.

APPENNAGE, or apennage, (French) is derived from appendendo; or the German word apanage, signifying a portion. It is used for a child's part or portion; and is properly the portion of the king's younger children in France, where by a fundamental law, called the law of apennages, the king's younger sons have duchies, countries, or baronies granted to them and their heirs, &c. the reversion being reserved to the crown, and all matters of regality as to coinage, and levying taxes in such territories. Spelm. Gloss. Cowel. Blount.

APPENSURA, the payment of money at the scale or by weight. Ibid.

APPODIARE, is a word used in old historians, and signifies to lean on, or prop up any thing. Ibid.

APPOINTMENT. An appointment generally considered in this place, as one of the common law conveyances, is a deed or instrument of a derivative nature, relative to or dependant on some precedent deed or assurance, in which a power to appoint to certain uses, has been created or reserved to the party thereby granting or appointing: the person taking under an appointment must therefore be considered as taking, under the power, by which the appointment is authorised, precisely in the same manner as if his name had been inserted in the original instrument by which the power was granted; with this difference, that if the appointment be made by DEED, the estate appointed will, by force of the statute of uses, immediately vest in the appointee, in like manner as if he had been named in the instrument creating the power; but if the appointment be made by will the appointee will be considered in all respects as a devisee, and subject to the same chance of lapse, in case of his death in the life time of the devisor, as is incident to the ambulatory nature of a will. Co. Lit. 80. 2 Ter. Rep. 241, 251, 787. See titles Powers, Uses.

APPONERE, to pledge or pawn. Acceptâ à fratre Guliehmo summâ non modicâ Normannum illi apposuit. Neubrigensis, lib. 1. c. 2.

APPORTIONMENT, (apportionamentum) is a dividing of rent into parts, according as the land out of which it issues, is divided among two or more. As if a stranger recovers part of the land, a lessee shall pay, having regard to that recovered, and what remains in his hands. Where the lessor recovers part of the land, or enters for a forfeiture into part thereof, the rent shall be apportioned. Co. Lit. 148. So if a man leases three acres, rendering rent, and afterwards grants away one acre, the rent shall be apportioned. Co. Lit. 144. So lessee for years, leases for years, rendering rent, and after devises this rent to three persons, this rent may be apportioned. Danv. Abr. 505.

But as rent is not due till the last minute of the natural day, if the lessor dies after sun-set and before midnight, the rent shall go to the heir and not to the executor, and so there can be no apportionment. Co. Lit. 202. 2 Saund. 287. 1 Salk. 578. Prec. Ch. 555.

Before the stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. by the death of a tenant for life in an intermediate quarter; such quarter was lost, for the law would not suffer his representatives to bring an action for the use and occupation, much less if there was a lease, and the remainderman had no right because the rent was not due in his time; nor could equity relieve against his hardship by apportioning the rent. 1 Pere. Wms. 392.

But now by stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. if any tenant for life shall die before or on the day on which any rent shall become due, his executors or administrators may recover from the undertenant if he died on the day when the rent became due, the whole, or if before such day then a proportion of such rent. s. 15.

And by an equitable construction of the above statute, its provisions have been extended to tenants in tail, where leases are determined by their deaths. Amb. 198. 2 Bro. Ch. Rep. 659.

But though the executor of tenant for life is now entitled to an apportionment of the rent, yet the dividends of money directed to be laid out in lands, and in the mean time to be invested in government securities, and the interest, and dividends to be applied as the rents and profits would, in case it were laid out in land, were held not to be apportionable, though tenant for life died in the middle of the half year. 3 Atk. 502. Ambl. 279, 2 Ves. 672. 3 Atk. 260.

However, where the money was laid out in mortgage, till a purchase could be made, the interest was held to be apportionable under this distinction, that interest on a mortgage was in fact due from day to day, and so not properly an apportionment; whereas the dividends accruing from the public funds are made payable on certain days, and therefore not apportionable. 2 Pere. Wms. 176, 501.

Regularly at law a rent-charge, issuing out of land, may not be apportioned: nor shall things entire, as if one holds lands by service to pay yearly to the lord, at such a feast, a horse, &c. Co. Lit. 149. But if part of the land, out of which a rent-charge issues, descends to the grantee of the rent, this shall be apportioned. Danv. 507.

So if a grantee of rent releases part of the rent to the grantor, this doth not extinguish the residue, but it shall be apportioned: for here the grantee dealeth not with the land, only the rent. Co. Lit. 148. On partition of lands, out of which a rent is issuing, the rent shall be apportioned. Danv. Abr. 507.

A man purchases part of the land where he hath common appendant, the common shall be apportioned: of common appurtenant it is otherwise, and if by the act of the party, the common is extinct. 8 Rep. 79. If where a person has common of pasture sans number, part of the lands descends to him, this being intire and uncertain cannot be apportioned: but if it had been common certain, it should have been apportioned. Co. Lit. 149.

APPORTUM, (from the French apport) the revenue or profit which a thing brings in to the owner: and it was commonly used for a corody or pension. Cowel. Blount.

APPOSAL OF SHERIFFS, the charging them with money received upon their accounts in the exchequer. Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2.

APPRAISEMENT, commission of,] anciently in the case of the seizure of treasure trove, wrecks, waifs, and estrays, by the king's officer for his use, an information was usually filed in the king's exchequer, and thereupon a proclamation was made for the owner (if any) to come in and claim the effects; and at the same time there issued a commission of appraisement to value the goods in the officer's hands; after the return of which, and a second proclamation had, if no claimant appeared, the goods were supposed derelict and condemned to the use of the crown. Gilb. Ex. cap. 13. 3 Black. 262.

And since, in later times, forfeitures of goods, as well as personal penalties have been inflicted by act of parliament for transgressions against the laws of the customs, the same process has been adopted in order to secure the forfeited goods for the public use, though the offender himself escape the reach of justice. 3 Black. 362.

APPRAISERS of goods are to be sworn to make true appraisement; and, valuing the goods too high, shall be obliged to take them at the price appraised. Stat. 11 Ed. 1. Stat. Acton Burnel.

APPRENDRE, (French) a fee or profit apprendre, is fee or profit to be taken or received. Anno 2 & 3 Ed. 6. cap. 8. Cowel. Blount.

APPRENTICE, (from apprendre, to learn) signifies a young person bound for a term of years, by deed indented, or indentures, to serve some masters, and be maintained and instructed by him. 1 Black. 245.

This is usually done to some tradesman or artificer, who upon certain covenants is to teach him his mystery or trade: and these apprentices are servants by covenant, and for a term, usually seven years. Smith's Rep. Angl. lib. 3. cap. 8.

And an apprentice must, by 5 Eliz. c. 4. s. 25. be by deed, and cannot be discharged without deed, and he must be retained therein by the name of an apprentice expressly, otherwise he is no apprentice, though bound. 4 Bac. Abr. tit. Mas. & Ser.

And as an apprentice can only be bound by deed, so it is necessary, according to the custom of some places, that such deed or indenture be inrolled; as in London, (except with the Waterman's company, which is only a voluntary society,) if the indentures be not inrolled before the chamberlain within a year, upon a petition to the mayor and aldermen, &c. a scire facias shall issue to the master, to shew cause why not inrolled; and if it was through the master's default, the apprentice may sue out his indentures, and be discharged: otherwise, if through the fault of the apprentice; as if he would not come to present himself before the chamberlain, &c. for it cannot be inrolled, unless the apprentice be in court and acknowledge it. 2 Rol. Rep. 305. Palm. 361. 1 Mod. 271. 6 Mod. 69. Salk. 68.

And as an apprenticeship by 5 Eliz. c. 4. s. 25. can only be created by indenture, where the writing, by which one person agreed to serve another for seven years, began, this indenture witnesseth, but was in fact a deed poll, and not indented or cut out at the head scallopwise, it was holden that the master could not maintain any action upon it, against a person for enticing away and detaining his apprentice. 1 Sess. Cas. 222.

Who may bind themselves apprentices.] By the common law infants, or persons under the age of twenty-one years, cannot bind themselves apprentices, in such a manner as to intitle their masters to an action of covenant, or other action against them for departing from their service, or other breaches of their indentures; which makes it necessary, according to the usual practice, to get some of their friends, to be bound for the faithful discharge of their offices, according to the terms agreed on. 11 Co. 89. b. 2 Inst. 379, 580. 3 Leon. 63. Fared. 15. And notwithstanding the 5 Eliz. c. 4. s. 43. enacts, that although persons bound apprentices shall be within age at the time of making their indentures, they shall be bound to serve for the years in their indentures contained, as if they were at full age at the time of making them; it hath been held, that although an infant may voluntarily bind himself an apprentice, and, if he continue an apprentice for seven years, he may have the benefit to use his trade; yet neither at the common law, nor by any words of the abovementioned statute, can a covenant or obligation of an infant, for his apprenticeship, bind him; but if he misbehave himself, the master may correct him in his service, or complain to a justice of peace, to have him punished according to the statute: but no remedy lieth against an infant upon such covenant. Cro. Car 179. Cro. Jac. 194. S. P. 4 Bac. Abr. tit. M.

But although an infant cannot bind himself apprentice, so as to entitle his master to an action of covenant, for breach of any of the clauses of the indenture, yet it should seem, though the point has never been directly determined, that if in fact he does bind himself, he is not afterwards at liberty to avoid a contract which is so notoriously for his benefit. 2 Str. 1066. Burr. Sett. Cas. 91. Cas. Temp. Hard. 323. Cald. 26. 6 Ter. Rep. 557. 652.

And it has been determined that an indenture of apprenticeship to an infant is not void, but only voidable. 4 Ter. Rep. 196.

By the custom of London an infant unmarried, and above the age of fourteen, may bind himself apprentice to a freeman of London, by indenture with proper covenants; which covenants, by the custom of London, shall be as binding as if he were of full age Mocr. 134. 2 Bulst. 192. 2 Rol. Rep. 305. Palm. 361. 1 Mod. 271. 2 Keb. 687.

Jurisdiction of justices of the peace.] By 5 Eliz. c. 4. "if any person under the age "of 21 years, shall be required by any "householder having and using half a "plough land in tillage, to be an appren-"tice, and to serve in husbandry, or in any "other kind of art, mystery, or science in "the act mentioned, and shall refuse, then "upon complaint to one justice, of the coun-"ty, mayor, bailiff, or head officer of the "city or place, they shall have authority "to send for the person refusing, and if "they think him fit to serve, they shall, if "he refuse to be bound as an apprentice, "commit him into ward until he will be "bounden to serve." s. 35.

"And if any such master shall misuse or "evil entreat his apprentice, or the said "apprentice shall have any just cause to "complain, or the apprentice do not his "duty to his master: then the said master "or apprentice, being grieved, shall repair "unto one justice or the chief magistrate, "who shall take such order and direction "between them, as the equity of the cause "shall require, and if for want of good con-"formity in the master, the justice or ma-"gistrate cannot compound and agree the "matter between them, then they shall take "bond of the master to appear at the next "sessions, and upon his appearance at the "sessions, and hearing of the matter, before "the five justices there, or four of them at "the least, (1 qu.) in counties; and in cities "or towns corporate before the chief magis-"trate and three others; they shall have au-"thority by writing under their hands and "seals to pronounce and declare that they "have discharged the said apprentice, and "the cause thereof, and the said writing "being so made and inrolled with the clerk "of the peace or town clerk, shall be a suf-"ficient discharge for the said apprentice; "and if the default shall be found to be in "the apprentice, then the said justices and "magistrates shall cause such due correction "and punishment to be ministered unto "him, as by their discretion shall be thought "meet." Ibid.

"The justices are authorized to grant war-"rants to apprehend apprentices who shall "abscond from service, and to imprison "them until they demean themselves pro-"perly." s. 47.

An apprentice apprehended under this act, cannot object in his defence, that he had been bound contrary to the directions of the act, and had therefore run away to avoid the indenture. Cald. 26.

For if the indentures be executed, contrary to the provisions of the act, they are not absolutely void, but only voidable, and the apprentice cannot, while they remain unvacated, set up a criminal act (which his abscooding is) as a rightful act of avoidance; if, therefore, it should become under any circumstances necessary to avoid the indentures for any informality, or on the ground that the apprentice is above the age of 21, the proper course to be taken, is to sue out an habeas corpus, directed to the master to bring up the body of the apprentice, in order to his being discharged: in which case the court above, will take all the circumstances into consideration, and if they see fit, order the apprentice to be discharged and the indentures delivered up to be cancelled; but till then he is subject to all the covenants, into which he has entered, and all the statutes made in relation to apprentices. Editor.

By 20 Geo. 2. c. 19. "any two justices "may upon complaint of any parish ap-"prentice, or of any other apprentice, up-"on whose binding no larger sum than 5*l.* "was paid, summon the master and upon "satisfactory proof of ill-usage, they may "discharge the apprentice: and the justices "upon the complaint of masters against "such apprentices, and proof upon oath "may commit the offender to the house of "correction for not exceeding one calendar-"month, or may discharge such person, "but parties aggrieved, may appeal to the "next quarter general sessions."

By 6 Geo. 3. c. 25. "if any apprentice, ex-"cept such with whom 10*l.* were paid, shall "absent himself during the term, he shall "serve for so long as he shall absent him-"self, over and beyond the term of his ap-"prenticeship, unless he make satisfaction "to his master, and if he refuse, one justice "on complaint of the master (at any time "within seven years after the expiration of "the apprenticeship, s. 5.) may determine "the satisfaction that shall be made. If "the apprentice do not conform, the justice "may commit him to the house of correc-"tion for not exceeding three months; but "the parties grieved may appeal to the next "general or quarter sessions, giving six days "notice, but the privileges of the stanna-"ries, the chamberlain of London and the "courts in the city are saved."

The order of discharge need not be mutual; therefore if the justices order that the apprentice shall be discharged from his master, they need not discharge the master from his covenants, for where the apprentice is discharged, the other is no longer master. 5 Mod. 139. 2 Salk. 471. But the particular cause of the discharge must be stated, and appear on the face of the order. 2 Str. 704. Cas. Tem. Hard. 101. 2 Str. 1014.

A person after three years service, plainly appearing to be a natural ideot was discharged, and the order affirmed. Str. 114. but a master cannot send an apprentice away on account of his being sick, or so lame as to be unable to work, or having the king's evil to such a degree as to be incurable. 1 Str. 99. neither can the sessions discharge an apprentice on general allegations of unkind usage by the master, and the declaration of the master, that he will not take his apprentice again. 2 Str. 704. Cas. Temp. Hard. 101. But a neglect on the part of the master to instruct his apprentice in the mysteries of that trade he was bound to learn, is a sufficient cause of discharge. 1 Const. 515.

Formerly it was held that an order on the master to return money had with an apprentice was good. 2 Barn. K. B. 244, 296. Sess. Cas. 190. 1 Const. 515. but in the K. v. Vandeleer, it was decided that the justices cannot order monies to be returned on discharge of an apprentice. 1 Str. 69. Which last case is only affected in some degree by the subsequent statute of 32 Geo. 3. c. 57. infra.

By 43 Eliz. c. 2. "the churchwardens and "overseers, by the assent of two justices, "may bind poor children apprentices when "they shall see convenient, till such man-"child shall come to the age of (twenty-one "years 18 Geo. 3. c. 4) and such woman-"child also to the age of twenty-one years, "or the time of her marriage: the same to "be as effectual as if the child was of full "age, and by indenture or covenant bound "him or herself." s. 5.

By 21 Jac. 1. c. 28. all persons to whom the churchwardens and overseers of the poor (according to 43 Eliz. c. 2.) bind any poor children apprentices, may take and keep them as apprentices.

And by 8 & 9 Will. 3. c. 30. if the person to whom such poor children shall be appointed to be bound, shall refuse to receive and provide for them, and execute the other part of the indentures, on oath thereof by one of the churchwardens or overseers before two justices, he shall forfeit 10*l.* to be levied by distress, and applied to the use of the poor of the parish, saving to the party to whom the child shall be appointed to be bound, if he think himself aggrieved thereby, his appeal to the next general or quarter sessions.

By 32 Geo. 3. c. 57. "covenants for the "maintenance of parish apprentices, with "whom no more than 5*l.* shall be given, "shall continue in force no longer than "three months after the death of the mas-"ter, and a proviso to this effect is to be in-"troduced in the indenture, and if omitted, "the covenants shall nevertheless continue "no longer in force." s. 1.

"Within three months after the death of "a master, two justices may order such ap-"prentices, to serve the residue of their "time, with the widow, husband, son, or "daughter, brother or sister, or executor or "administrator, on application by them for "that purpose." s. 2.

"And the said provisions, which are to take "place on the death of the original master, "are to extend to subsequent ones." s. 3.

"If no such application be made, or the "justices should not think fit, that the ap-"prenticeship should be continued, it shall "be at an end." s. 4.

"This act is to extend, to such parish ap-"prentices only, as shall be living with the "master." s. 5.

"And instead of bringing actions on the "covenant, two justices may order the ne-"cessary sums for maintenance and cloth-"ing of such apprentices, to be levied by "distress." s. 6.

"Masters may assign over parish appren-"tices, with the consent of two justices: "and the justices may discharge such ap-"prentices, whose masters cannot employ "or maintain them: but nothing herein is "to extend to any parish apprentice, with "whom more than 5*l.* shall be given." s. 9.

Justices discharging any apprentice, un-"der 20 Geo. 2. c. 19. may order his clothes "to be delivered up, and a sum not exceed-"ing 10*l.* to be paid the parish officers, for "placing him out again, and may compel "the parish officers to enter into a recogni-"zance to prosecute masters, for ill treat-"ment of apprentices." s. 11.

"Justices may order any master, con-"victed under the last act, when liable to "take a parish apprentice, to pay to the "parish officers a sum not exceeding 10*l.* "nor less than 5*l.* for the purpose of binding "out the child." s. 12.

"Masters may appeal to quarter sessions, "and on notice of such appeal, no distress is "to be made till after the quarter sessions, "and the penalty for not appearing to sup-"port the appeal is 40*s.*" s. 12.

"Apprentices discharged for ill behaviour, "may be sent to the house of correction, for "not exceeding three calendar months. s. 13.

"And all persons aggrieved may appeal "to the quarter sessions." s. 14.

And by 33 Geo. 3. c. 55. justices may impose fines not exceeding 40*s.* on masters for ill-usage of an apprentice, whether bound by the parish or otherwise, where not more than 10*l.* was paid on the binding, to be applied for the benefit of the apprentice, and levied by distress, and for want of distress to be committed for not exceeding ten days, but the party may appeal to the quarter sessions.

As by the above statute of Eliz. the justices of the peace have a power of imposing an apprentice on a master, of whatever trade, occupation, or profession he may be: in consequence thereof an indictment lies for disobedience to their orders, either in not receiving, or receiving and after turning off, or not providing for such apprentice; for though an act of parliament may prescribe an easier way of proceeding by complaint, yet that does not exclude the remedy by indictment. 6 Mod. 163. 1 Salk. 381.

And a person occupying lands in a parish, although he reside out of it, is compellable to receive a parish apprentice: for it is one of the modes by which the poor are to be relieved. And the words occupier and inhabitant are for this purpose synonimous. 5 Ter. Rep. 107. 1 Const. 549. 13 Ter. Rep. 523.

With regard to the assigning of apprentices, it is clear, that except in the case of a parish apprentices by the above statute 32 Geo. 3. c. 57. an apprentice is not assignable. He cannot be bound nor discharged without deed. 1 Salk. 68. pl. 7. Mich. 13. W. 3. B. R.

But though an apprentice is not assignable, yet if he be made a party to the assignment, a contract between him and the two masters, that he shall serve the latter may be valid. Ed.

And neither a parish indenture nor a common indenture, though voidable, can be avoided, except by the consent of all the parties to it. Bur. Set. Cas. 249.

Therefore an infant apprentice and his master, with the consent of the parish officers and two justices, may vacate the indentures. Cald. 126.

Parish indentures must be assented to by two justices in the presence of each other, for if it be done by them separately, or the one in the absence of the other, the indenture is void. 3 Ter. Rep. 380. And the justices cannot order, nor can the indentures covenant, that the master at the end of the term, shall give his apprentice two suits of cloaths, one for holidays and the other for working days or the like, for this sounds like wages, and they can only order maintenance, and not even that after the term ended. Foley 225. And after the master has signed the counter part of the indenture, he cannot appeal to the sessions. 1 Const. 555.

Whatever an apprentice gains, is for the use of his master; and whether he was legally bound or no, is not material, if he was an apprentice de facto. Salk. 68. If an apprentice marries, without the master's privity, that will not justify his turning him away, but he must sue on his covenant. 2 Vern. 492. By the custom of the city of London a freeman may turn away his apprentice for gaming. Ibid. 241. But if a master turns an apprentice away on account of negligence, &c. who himself has been guilty of laches, such as not inrolling the indentures, equity may decree him to refund part of the money given with him. 1 Vern. Rep. 460. And in the case of bankruptcy of the master, before the expiration of the term, the apprentice may have a proportion of the premium paid, deducting for the time which he has served. 1 Atk. 149. and an apprentice is not obliged to serve his master's executors for the remainder of his term. 2 Vez. 35.

Apprenticeship necessary to the exercising of a trade.] At common law every person might follow what lawful trade he pleased, which being inconvenient in many instances, and a detriment to the public, in permitting persons to exercise trades in which they had little or no skill or experience; to prevent this mischief, and the better to train up and inure persons to labour and industry from their youth, and thereby make them more skilful and expert. 11 Co. 53. 2 Buls. 191. Skin. 135. Sand. 312. It is enacted by the 5 Eliz. c. 4. s. 31. "That it shall not be lawful for any person "to set up, occupy, use, or exercise any "craft, mystery or occupation, now used or "occupied within the realm of England or "Wales, except he shall have been brought "up therein seven years, at the least, as an "apprentice; nor to set any person on "work in such my tery, art or occupation, "except he shall have been apprentice, as is "aforesaid; or else having served as an ap- "prentice, as is aforesaid, shall or will be- "come a journeyman, or hired by the year; "upon pain that every person willingly offend- "ing, or doing the contrary, shall forfeit and "lose forevery default forty shillings for every "month, one half to the king and the other "half to the prosecutor.

But the resolutions of the courts have in general rather confined than extended the provision contained in this restrictive clause, for under the words now used, it hath been held that no trades are within the statute but such as were exercised at the time of making it. 2 Salk. 611. Palm. 528. 1 Sid. 175. and for trading in a country village apprenticeships are not requisite. Carth. 163. 1 Vent. 51. 2 Keble. 589. also the following a trade for seven years without any effectual prosecution (either as a master or a servant) is sufficient without an actual apprenticeship; for the words are, having served as an apprentice, and there can be no doubt but the legislature intended that the tradesman should have served an actual apprenticeship, but from the words as an apprentice, this being a penal statute, the judges have determined, that he serves as an apprentice, who for seven years has been working as a master, or as the master's wife. 2 Wils. 168. 1 Barnard 367. For more on the subject of apprentices, see Williams's Justice.

APPROPRIATION, (appropriatio,) from the French approprier, i. e. apta e accomodare. A parson has, during his life, the freehold in himself of the parsonage house, the glebe, the tithes, and other dues: but these are sometimes appropriated; appropriation therefore signifies the severance of a benefice ecclesiastical, (which originally and in nature is juris divini et in patrimonio nullius,) to the proper and perpetual use of some bishoprick, prebend, college, or other spiritual corporation, either sole or aggregate: and it is so called, because parsons, not being ordinarily accounted domini, but usu fructuarii, having no right of fee simple, are by reason of their perpetuity accounted owners of the fee simple, and therefore called proprietarii, 1 Black. 383. Cowel. Blount.

These appropriations could be originally made to none but to such spiritual corporation as was patron of the church, the whole being nothing else but an allowance for the patrons to retain the tithes and glebe in their own hands, without presenting any clerk, they themselves undertaking to provide for the church. Plow. 496, 500. 1 Black. 384.

Before the time of Ric. 2. it was lawful (as it seems) to appropriate the whole fruits of a benefice. But that king ordained that in every licence of appropriation made in chancery, it should be expressly contained, that "the diocesan of the place should provide a convenient sum of money to be "yearly paid out of the fruits towards the "sustenance of the poor in that parish, and "that the vicar should be well and sufficiently endowed." See 15 Ric. 2. c. 6.

To make an appropriation (after licence obtained of the king in chancery) the consent of the diocesan patron and incumbent was necessary when the church was full: and it is even said the diocesan and the patron might conclude it. Plow. 496. And the priest of every parish in which these appropriations have been made is called vicar quasi vice fungens rectores. Cowel. Blount.

When the appropriations were thus made, the appropriators and their successors became perpetual parsons of the church, and they must sue and be sued in all matters concerning the rights of the church by the name of parsons. 1 Black. 385. Hob. 307.

Before the dissolution of the monasteries and other religious houses in the reign of Hen. 8. the appropriations belonging to such houses amounted to more than one third of all the parishes in England. Seld. c. 9. Spelm. 35. and these at their dissolution by the statutes 27 Hen. 8. c. 28. and 31 Hen. 8. c. 13. would by the rules of the common law have been disappropriated; had not a clause in those statutes intervened to give them to the king in as ample a manner as those houses held the same at the time of their dissolution. 1 Black. 386. for by the common law if the corporation which has the appropriation is dissolved, the parsonage becomes disappropriate: because the perpetuity of parson is gone, which is necessary to support the appropriation.

From these two roots have sprung all the lay appropriations or secular parsonages which we now see in the kingdom, they having been afterwards granted out from time to time by the crown. 1 Black. 386. and according to Spelm. on Tithes, c. 29. the latter are now called impropriations, as being improperly in the hands of laymen.

This appropriation (besides being subject to severance by the dissolution of the corporation to which it is annexed, as above mentioned) may be also severed and the church become disappropriate, if the patron or appropriator presents a clerk to the diocesan, and he institutes and inducts him to the parsonage: for that once done, the benefice returns to its former nature, the incumbent so instituted and inducted is to all intents and purposes complete parson; and the appropriation being thus severed, can never be reunited again, unless by a repetition of the original solemnities. Fitz. N. B. 35. Co. Lit. 7. 1 Black. 385.

APPROPRIARE COMMUNIAM, to discommon, and inclose any parcel of land, that was before open common. Paroch. Antiq. 336. Cowel. Blount.

APPROVE, (approbare,) to augment a thing to the utmost: to approve land is to make the best benefit of it, by increasing the rent, &c. 2 Inst. 474.

APPROVEMENT, (an ancient expression signifying the same as improvement,) is where the lord makes an inclosure of part of the waste for himself, leaving sufficient common with egress and regress for the commoners. Reg. Jud. 8, 9. And any person who is seised in fee of part of a waste, may approve besides the lord of the manor, provided he leaves a sufficiency of common for the tenants of the manor. 4 Ter. Rep. 445.

APPROVER or PROVER, (approbator) If a person indicted of treason or felony, not disabled to accuse, upon his arraignment, before any plea pleaded, and before competent judges, confesseth the indictment, and takes an oath to reveal all treasons and felonies that he knoweth of; and therefore prays a coroner to enter his appeal, or accusation against those that are partners in the crime contained in the indictment; such a one is an approver. 3 Inst. 129. H. P. C. 192.

This ancient course of admitting the approver thus to appeal, hath been long since discontinued, and the doctrine on the subject is now become a matter of more curiosity than use: it is therefore only necessary to observe, 1st, that it was entirely in the discretion of the court to suffer one to be an approver or not; 2dly, that if he failed to convict the appellee, he was to receive judgment, to be hanged upon his own confession of the indictment; and lastly, that all the good which could be expected to be derived from approvements, is now obtained from the admitting of accomplices to give evidence under the statutes and circumstances mentioned under the title Accomplices.

APPROVERS, anno 9 H. 6. Bailiffs of lords in their franchises are called their approvers. And in the stat. 1 Ed. 3. c. 8. Sheriffs are called the king's approvers.

APPRUARE, to take to his own use or profit. Cowel. Blount.

APPURTENANCES, (pertinentia) derived from the French appartenir, to belong to, signify things both corporeal and incorporeal appertaining to another thing as principal: as hamlets to a chief manor; and common of pasture, piscary, &c. Also liberties and services of tenants. Brit. cap. 39. Outhouses, yards, orchards, and gardens are appurtenant to a messuage. 1 Lill. Abr. 91. Lands cannot, in the true sense of the words cum pertinentiis, be appurtenant to the house. Plowd. 170. Cro. El. 704.

Therefore lands will not pass by the word appurtenances, but only such things which do properly belong to the house. Godb. 352. 8. C. Cro. Car. 57. Hutt. 85. Lill. Rep. 8. 8. C.

Grant of a manor, without the words cum pertinentiis, it is said, will pass all things belonging to the manor. Owen's Rep. 31. A turbary may be appurtenant to a house; so a seat in a church, but not to land: for the things must agree in nature and quality. 3 Salk. 40. Plo. Com. 103 b. 104 b. 170.

ARABANT, (ad curiam domini) was intended of those who held by the tenure of ploughing and tilling the lord's lands within the manor. Cowel. Blount.

ARACE, (angl.) to rase, from the French arracher, evellere. Ibid.

ARAHO, in araho conjurare, i. e. to make oath in the church, or some other holy place; for, according to the Ripuarian laws, all oaths were made in the church upon the relics of saints. Cowel. Blount.

ARATRUM TERRÆ, as much as can be tilled with one plough. Aratura terræ is the service which the tenant is to do for his lord in ploughing his land. Cowel. Blount.

ARBITRAMENT, (arbitrium or award, which see) is the sentence or determination pronounced by arbitrators, and published when they have heard all parties. 8 Rep. 98.

ARBITRATOR, is a person indifferently chosen by third persons, between whom there are any matters in dispute, to determine all such matters in controversy, according to his own judgment, whether they relate to matters of law or fact. See title AWARD.

ARCA CYROGRAPHICA, sive cyrographorum judæorum, this was a common chest with three locks and keys, kept by certain Christians and Jews, wherein all the contracts, mortgages, and obligations belonging to the Jews were kept, to prevent fraud; and this by order of K. Rich. I. Hoveden's Annals, p. 745. Cowel. Blount.

ARCHBISHOP, (archiepiscopus) is the chief of the clergy in his province, and is that spiritual secular person, who hath supreme power under the king in all ecclesiastical causes. An archbishop is said to be inthroned, when a bishop is said to be installed. 3 Salk. 72. 1 Roll. Rep. 328. 2 Roll. 440.

And archbishops have also the titles and style of Grace and Most Reverend Father in God. The bishops have Lord and Right Reverend Father in God by divine permission.

And at this day, the ecclesiastical state of England and Wales is divided only into two provinces or archbishopricks; to wit, Canterbury and York. Each archbishop hath within his province bishops of several dioceses. The archbishop of CANTERBURY hath under him within his province, of ancient foundations, Rochester, London, Winchester, Norfolk, Lincoln, Ely, Chichester, Salisbury, Exeter, Bath and Wells, Worcester, Coventry and Litchfield, Hereford, Landaff St. David's, Bangor and St. Asaph; and four founded by king Henry 8. erected out of the ruins of dissolved monasteries viz. Gloucester, Bristol, Peterborough and Oxford.—The archbishop of YORK hath under him four, viz. the bishop of the county palatine of Chester, newly erected by king Henry 8, and annexed by him to the archbishoprick of York; the county palatine of Durham, Carlisle and the isle of Man, annexed to the province of York by king Henry 8. but a greater number this archbishop anciently had, which time hath taken from him. Co. Lit. 94.

The archbishop of Canterbury is now stiled metropolitanus & primus totius Angliæ; and the archbishop of York styled primus & metropolitanus Angliæ. They are called archbishops in respect of the bishops under them; and metropolitans, because they were consecrated at first in the metropolis of the province. 4 Inst. 94. Both the archbishops have distinct provinces, wherein they have suffragan bishops of several dioceses, with jurisdiction under them. And each hath two concurrent jurisdictions, one as ordinary, or the bishop himself within his diocese; the other has superintendance throughout his whole province of all ecclesiastical matters, to correct and supply the defects of other bishops. The archbishop of Canterbury hath the privilege to crown all the kings of England, and to have prelates to be his officers; as for instance, the bishop of London is his provincial dean; the bishop of Winchester, his chancellor; the bishop of Lincoln, his vice-chancellor; the bishop of Salisbury, his precentor; the bishop of Worcester, his chaplain, &c. It is the right of the archbishop to call the bishops and clergy of his province to convocation, upon the king's writ: he hath a jurisdiction in cases of appeal, where there is a supposed default of justice in the ordinary; and hath a standing jurisdiction over his suffragans: he confirms the election of bishops, and afterwards consecrates them, &c. And he may appoint coadjutors to a bishop that is grown infirm. He may confer degrees of all kinds; and censure and excommunicate, suspend or depose, for any just cause, &c. 2 Roll. Abr. 223. And he hath power to grant dispensations in any case, formerly granted by the see of Rome, not contrary to the law of God; but if the case is new and extraordinary, the king and his counsel are to be consulted. Stat. 25 H. 8. c. 21, 28. H. 8. c. 16. § 6. He may retain eight chaplains: and, during the vacancy of any see, he is guardian of the spiritualties. Stat. ibid. and 21 H. 8. c. 13

The archbishop of Canterbury hath the precedency of all the clergy; next to him the archbishop of York; next to him the bishop of London; next to him the bishop of Durham; next to him the bishop of Winchester; and then all the other bishops of both provinces after the seniority of their consecration; but if any of them be a privy counsellor, he shall take place next after the bishop of Durham. Co. Lit. 94. 1 Ought. Ord. Jud. 486.

The archbishop of York hath the privilege to crown the queen consort, and to be her perpetual chaplain. Chamberlain's Present State, 65.

The archbishop of Canterbury is the first peer of the realm, and hath precedence, not only before all the other clergy, but also (next and immediately after the blood royal) before all the nobility of the realm: and as he hath the precedence of all the nobility, so also of all the great officers of state. God. 13.

The archbishop of York hath the precedence over all dukes, not being of the blood royal; as also before all the great officers of state, except the lord chancellor. God. 14.

ARCHDEACON, (archidiaconus) is one that hath ecclesiastical dignity, and jurisdiction over the clergy and laity next after the bishop throughout the diocese, or in some part of it only. An archdeacon is now allowed to be an ordinary, as he hath a part of the episcopal power lodged with him. He visits his jurisdiction once every year: and he hath a court, (which he may hold in person or before a judge appointed by himself to set in his absence, who is called his official. 3 Black. 64.) where he may inflict penance, suspend, or excommunicate persons, prove wills, grant administrations, and hear causes ecclesiastical, &c. subject to appeal to the court of the bishop of the diocese. It is one part of the office of an archdeacon to examine candidates for holy orders, and to induct clerks within his jurisdiction, upon receipt of the bishop's mandate. 2 Cro. 556. 1 Lev. 195. Wood's Inst. 30. 24 Hen. 8. c. 12.

Archdeaconries are commonly given by bishops, who therefore prefer to the same by collation: but if an archdeaconry be in the gift of a layman, the patron presents, to the bishop, who institutes; and then the dean and chapter induct him, that is, after some ceremonies, place him in a stall in the cathedral church. Wats. c. 15.

Archdeacons, by 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 4. are to read the Common Prayer and declare their assent thereunto, and also subscribe the same before the ordinary; but they are not obliged by 13 Eliz. c. 12. to subscribe and read the thirty-nine articles. Wats. c. 15. And they are to take the oaths as other persons qualifying for offices.

It hath been held, that where the archdeacon hath a peculiar jurisdiction, he is totally exempt from the power of the bishop, and the bishop cannot enter there, and hold court; and in such case, if the party who lives within the peculiar be sued in the bishop's court, a prohibition shall be granted; for the statute intends that no suit shall be per saltum: but if the archdeacon hath not a peculiar, then the bishop and he have a concurrent jurisdiction, and the party may commence his suit either in the archdeacon's court or the bishop's, and he hath election to choose which he pleaseth: and if he commence in the bishop's court, no prohibition shall be granted; for if it should, it would confine the bishop's court to determine nothing but appeals, and render it incapable of having any causes originally commenced there. L. Raym. 123.

ARCHERY, a service of keeping a bow, for the use of the lord to defend his castle. Co. Litt. sect. 157.

ARCHES COURT, (curia de arcubus) The chief and most ancient consistory court belonging to the archbishop of Canterbury for debating of spiritual causes. It is so called from the church in London, commonly called St. Mary le Bow, (where it was formerly held) which church is named Bow Church from the steeple, which is raised by pillars, built arch wise, like so many bent bows. Cowel.

The judge of this court is styled the Dean of the Arches court: he hath extraordinary jurisdiction in all ecclesiastical causes, except what belong to the prerogative court; also all manner of appeals from bishops, or their chancellors or commissaries, deans and chapters, archdeacons, &c. first or last are directed hither: he hath ordinary jurisdiction throughout the whole province of Canterbury, in cases of appeals; so that upon any appeal made, he, without any further examination of the cause, sends out his citation to the appellee, and his inhibition to the judge from whom the appeal was made. 4 Inst. 337. But he cannot cite any person out of the diocese of another, unless it be on appeal, &c. 23 Hen. 8. c. 9.

In another sense the dean of the arches has a peculiar jurisdiction of thirteen parishes in London, called a deanery, (being exempt from the authority of the bishop of London) of which the parish of Bow is the principal. The persons concerned in this court are the judge, advocates, registers, proctors, &c. And the foundation of a suit in these courts is a citation for the defendant to appear; then the libel is exhibited, which contains the action, to which the defendant must answer; whereupon the suit is contested, proofs are produced, and the cause determined by the judge upon hearing the advocates on the law and fact; when follows the sentence or decree thereupon.

This court (as also the court of peculiars, the admiralty court, the prerogative court, and the court of delegates for the most part) is now held in the hall belonging to the college of Civilians, commonly called Doctors Commons. Plog. 21.

From this court the appeal is to the king in Chancery; by the 25 Hen. 8. c. 19.

ARCHIVES (archiva, from arca, a chest) The Rolls, or any place where ancient records, charters, and evidences, belonging to the crown and kingdom, are kept; also the Chancery, Exchequer Office, &c. And it hath been sometimes used for repositories in libraries. Cowel. Blount.

ARENTARE, To rent out, or let at a certain rent. Ibid.

ARERIESMENT, Surprise, affrightment. Ibid.

ARGENTUM ALBUM, Silver coin, or pieces of bullion that anciently passed for money. Spelm. Gloss. Cowel. Blount.

ARGENTUM DEI, God's penny. Money given in earnest upon the making of any bargain; hence comes arles, earnest. Cowel. Blount.

Until this day, upon bargains in the north, the purchasers of cattle and the like in fairs, or elsewhere, claim from the vendors what they call God's penny. Editor.

ARGIL, or ARGOIL, Clay, lime, and sometimes gravel; also the lees of wine, gathered to a certain hardness. Law Fr. Dict. Cowel. Blount.

ARGUMENTOSUS, a word which signifies ingenious, mentioned by Neubrigensis, lib. 1. c. 14. Cowel. Blount.

ARIERBAN. The edict of the king, commanding all his tenants to come into the army: if they refuse, then to be deprived of their estates. Ibid.

ARIETUM LEVATIO, an old sportive exercise, supposed to be the same with running at the quintal. Cowel.

ARISTOCRACY, is that form of government which is lodged in a council, composed of select members. 1 Black. 49.

ARMA DARE, to dub or make a knight. The word arma, in these places, signifies only a sword; but sometimes a knight was made by giving him the whole armour. Cowel. Blount.

ARMA DEPONERE, was enjoined when a man had committed an offence. Cowel. Blount.

ARMA LIBERA, a sword and a lance, which were usually given to a servant when he was made free. Leg. Will. cap. 65.

ARMA MOLUTA, sharp weapons that cut, opposed to such as are blunt, which only break or bruise. Bract. lib. 3. Cowel. Blount.

ARMA REVERSATA, this was a punishment when a man was convicted of treason or felony. Cowel. Blount.

ARMIGER (Esquire), a title of dignity, belonging to such gentlemen that bear arms: and these are either by courtesy, as sons of noblemen, eldest sons of knights, &c. or by creation, such as the king's servants, &c. The word armigeri has been also applied to the higher servants in convents. Paroch. Antiq. 576. Cowel.

ARMISCARA, was an ancient mode of punishment decreed or imposed on an offender, by the judge, to carry a saddle at his back as a token of subjection. Cowel.

ARMS, in the understanding of law, are such things as a man wears for his defence, or takes into his hands, or useth in anger to strike or cast at another. Crompt. Inst. 65.

By the common law, it is an offence for persons to go or ride armed with dangerous and unusual weapons: but gentlemen may wear common armour according to their quality, &c. 3 Inst. 160, &c. But by Stat. 2 Ed. 3. c. 3, none shall come with force and arms before the king's justices, nor ride armed in an affray of the peace, on pain to forfeit their armour, and suffer imprisonment, &c.

ARMS, (insignia,) are also in heraldry ensigns of honour; the origin of which was to distinguish commanders in war; who being in a coat of mail, which covered their persons, could not be distinguished but by a certain badge painted on their shields, which was called their arms.

ARNALDIA, arnoldia; a sort of disease that makes the hair fall off, like the alopecia, or like unto a distemper in foxes. Rog. Hoveden, p. 693. Cowel.

ARNALIA, arable grounds, in Domesday, tit. Essex.

AROMATARIUS, (Lat.) a word often used for a grocer. 1 Vent. 142.

ARPEN, or arpent, signifies an acre or furlong of ground: and according to Domesday-book 100 perches make an arpent. Cowel. Blount.

ARPENTATOR, a measurer or surveyor of land. Ibid.

ARQUEBUSS, (Fr. arquebuse,) a short hand-gun, a caliver or pistol; mentioned in some of our ancient statutes. Law Fr. Dict.

ARRAIATIO PEDITUM, is used in Pat. 1. Ed. 2, for the arraying of foot-soldiers, Cowel. Blount.

ARRAIERS, (arraiatores,) officers who had the care of the soldiers armour, and whose business it was to see them duly accoutred. Cowel. Blount.

ARRAIGN, (from the Fr. arraisonner, i. e. ad rationem ponere, to call a man to answer in form of law). To arraign a prisoner is nothing else but to call the prisoner to the bar of the court to answer the matter charged upon him in the indictment; the mode of doing which is as follows: The prisoner is to be called to the bar by his name, and during his arraignment may stand at the bar of the court in irons, for the court has no authority to order them to be taken off till the prisoner has pleaded, and the jury are charged to try him. 4 Black. 322. Leach. 34.

When he is brought to the bar he is called upon by name to hold up his hand, which, though it may seem a trifling circumstance, yet it is of this importance, that by the holding up of the hand constat de personâ, and he owns himself to be of that name by which he is called: however it is not an indispensable ceremony, for being calculated merely for the purpose of identifying the person, any other acknowledgment will do as well; therefore, if the prisoner obstinately and contemptuously refuses to hold up his hand, but confesses he is the person named, it is fully sufficient. 2 Hal. P. C. 219. Raym. 408.

After his arraignment, as above, his fetters are to be taken off, and he is to be treated with all the humanity imaginable: But the prisoner is to hold up his hand only in treason and felony. 2 Inst. 315.

Upon his arraignment the indictment is to be read to him distinctly, and he is then to be asked whether he be guilty of the crime whereof he stands indicted, or not; and in this stage of the proceedings against him he either stands mute, or confesses the fact, or else he pleads to the indictment 4 Black.,323,324.

ARRAY, (arraya sive arraiamentum,) an old French word, signifying the ranking or setting forth of a jury of men empanelled upon a cause. 18 H. 6. c. 14. And when we say to array a panel, that is, to set forth the men empanelled one by another. F. N. B. 157. To challenge the array of the panel is at once to except against all persons arrayed or empanelled, in respect of partiality, or some default in the sheriff. Co. Lit. 156. If the sheriff be of affinity to either of the parties, or if any one or more of the jurors are returned at the nomination of either party, or for any other partiality, the array shall be quashed.

ARRAY (commission of). Previous to the reigns of H 8. and Eliz. to protect the realms from domestic insurrection and from invasion, it was usual for our princes to issue, under the authority of certain acts of parliament, (the whole of which were repealed by stat 1 Jac. 1. c. 25. 21 Jac. 1. c. 28.) Commissions of array, and send into every county officers in whom they could confide, to muster and array (or set in military order) the inhabitants of every district; and the form of the commission of array was settled in parliament in the reign of 5 Hen. 4. so as to prevent the insertion therein of any new penal clauses. 1 Black. 410.

But it was provided that no man should be compelled to go out of the kingdom at any rate, nor out of his shire, but in cases of urgent necessity; nor to provide soldiers, unless by consent of parliament. Stat. 1 Ed. 3. stat. 2. c. 5, 7. 1 Black. 411. Afterwards about the reign of king Hen. 8. or some of his immediate successors, the lieutenants of counties began to be introduced, as standing representatives of the crown, to keep the counties in military order. 1 Black. 411.

The introduction of these commissions of lieutenancy, which contained in substance the same powers as the old commissions of array, caused the latter to fall into disuse. Ibid.

ARREARAGES, (arreragia, from the French arriere, retro, behind,) is money unpaid at the due time, as rent behind; the remainder due on an account, or a sum of money remaining in the hands of an accountant. Cowel. Blount.

ARRECTATUS, one suspected of any crime. Spelm. Gloss. Hence arrected, reckoned, or considered. 1 Inst. 153. b.

ARRENATUS, arraigned, accused. Rot. Parl. 21. Ed. 1.

ARRENTATION, (from the Spanish arrendar,) signifies the licensing the owner of lands in the forest to inclose them with a low hedge and small ditch, according to the assise of the forest, under a yearly rent: saving the arrentations is a saving power to give such licences. Ordin. Foreste, 34 Ed. 1.

ARREST or JUDGMENT. To move in arrest of judgment is to show cause why judgment should not be staid, notwithstanding the verdict given; for in many cases, though there be a verdict, no judgment can be had. And the causes of arrest of judgment are, 1st, where the declaration varies totally from the original writ; 2dly, where the verdict materially differs from the pleadings, and issue thereon, or 3dly, if the case laid in the declaration is not sufficient in point of law to found an action: and this is an invariable rule with regard to arrests of judgment upon matter of law, that whatever is alleged in arrest of judgment must be such matter as would upon demurrer have been sufficient to overturn the action or plea; but if a declaration or plea omits to state some particular circumstance, without proving of which at the trial, it is impossible to support the action or defence, this omission after a verdict shall be aided; for the court must conclude that after a verdict under the inspection of a judge, those circumstances were proved. 3 Black. 393, 394.

Four days are allowed to move in arrest of judgment; and the defendant hath all the term wherein the verdict was given to speak any thing to arrest it, if the plaintiff hath not given his four day rule, and signed his judgment: after which defendant is put to his writ of error. 2 Lill. 93.

On motion in arrest of judgment, if the court be divided, two judges against two, the plaintiff must have his judgment; unless a rule be made at first to stay all proceedings until the court otherwise order, &c. which rule is now always made. 2 Lill. Abr. 118.

Judgment may be also arrested in criminal cases as well as civil, if the indictment be insufficient. 3 Inst. 210. Therefore whenever a party appears in person, either upon a capital or inferior conviction, he may at this period offer any exceptions to the indictment in arrest or stay of judgment; as for want of sufficient certainty in setting forth either the person, the time, the place or the offence; and if the objections be valid, the whole proceedings shall be set aside; but the party may be indicted again. 4 Black. 374.

ARREST OF INQUEST, is to plead in arrest of taking the inquest upon the former issue, and to show cause why an inquest should not be taken. Bro. tit. Replead.

ARREST in civil actions. An arrest is the beginning of imprisonment, where a man is first taken, and restrained of his liberty, by power of a lawful warrant, in execution of the command of some court, or officer of justice. 2 Shep. Abr. 299. Wood's Inst. 575.

And arrests are either in civil or criminal cases; and there is this difference between arrests in civil and criminal cases, that none shall be arrested for debt, trespass, or the like, or other cause of action, but by virtue of a precept or commandment, out of some court: but for treason, felony, or breach of the peace, any man may arrest without warrant or precept. Terms de Ley 54.

The arrest must be a corporal seizing or touching the defendant's body; after which the bailiff may justify breaking open the house in which he is, to take him if he escape. 3 Bl. 288.

When a person has committed treason or felony, doors may be broke open to arrest the offender. Plowd. 5 Rep. 91. But if a bailiff find an outer door open he may open the inner door to make an arrest. Comber. 327. And so also he may break open the inner door to arrest an inmate or lodger, if he gain peaceable entrance at the outer door, for the lodger's door is not to be considered as an outer door, and so protected. Gansell's Case, Comp. Rep. 1.

The bailiff's fee for an arrest in civil actions is by an ancient statute, but fourpence, and the sheriff's twenty pence: and bailiffs cannot legally take any thing but what is allowed by this statute and other subsequent acts. For taking fees not warranted by law they shall render treble damages to the party grieved, and incur a forfeiture of 40*l.* Stat. 23 H. 6. cap. 10. But now the master allows for arrests on mesne process, within the bills of mortality, 10*s.* 6*d.* and without, 1*l.* 1*s.* and 1*s.* per mile. Imp. Sheriff 122.

Every warrant to issue upon any writ to arrest any person shall have the same day and year set down thereon as on the writ, under the penalty of 10*l.* 6 Geo. 1. c. 21.

And an arrest in the night as well as the day is lawful. 9 Rep. 66.

But by Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 7, no writ, process, warrant, &c. (except in cases of treason, felony, or for breach of the peace) shall be served on a Sunday, on pain that the person serving them shall be liable to the suit of the party grieved, and answer damages, as if the same had been done without writ. But a person may be retaken on a Sunday, where arrested the day before, &c. Mod. Cas. 231. And a man may be taken on a Sunday on an escape warrant: when he goes at large out of the rules of the King's Bench or Fleet prison, &c. Stat. 5 Ann. c. 9. Also bail may take the principal on a Sunday, and confine him till Monday, and then render him. 1 Nels. 258. But a party cannot be arrested on a Sunday on an attachment for non-performance of an award, it being only in the nature of a civil execution. 1 Ter. Rep. 266.

Also to restrain the abuses of gaolers and sheriffs officers in arrests it is provided by Stat. 32 Geo. 2. c. 28, "that the officer shall not "carry his prisoner to any tavern, alehouse, "or the like, without his consent; nor charge "him for any liquor but such as he shall "freely call for, nor demand for caption or "attendance any other than his legal fee, "nor exact any gratuity-money, nor carry "his prisoner (not being in execution) to gaol "within twenty-four hours after his arrest, "unless the prisoner refuse to go to some "safe house (not his own) of his own choosing: "nor shall any officer take for the diet, lodging, or expences of his prisoner, more than "shall be allowed by order of sessions. Bailiffs are also to show a copy of the writ to "prisoners, and permit perusal thereof; "and prisoners may send for their own victuals, bedding, and the like."

Persons privileged from arrests.] Peers of the realm — Members of parliament — Peeresses by birth — Peers of Scotland or Ireland sitting in parliament, or peeresses by marriage; but not if they afterwards intermarry with commoners; — Members of convocation actually attending thereon — Bishops, Ambassadors, or the domestic servants of an Ambassador, really and bonâ fide in that capacity — The king's servants — Marshal of B. R. — Warden of the Fleet — Clerks, attornies, and all other persons attending the courts of justice — Clergymen during the performance of divine service, and not merely staying in the church with a fraudulent design—Suitor's witnesses subpœna'd, and other persons necessarily attending any court of record upon business — Bankrupts coming to surrender, or within 42 days after their surrender — Witnesses properly summoned before commissioners of bankrupt, or other commissioners under the great seal, but not creditors going to prove their debts — Heirs, executors, and administrators, unless it be on their own personal contracts — Sailors and soldiers, unless the debt is 20*l.* — Members of corporations aggregate, and hundredors, cannot be arrested in their corporate capacity; nor femes covert.

By 11 & 12 Will. 3. c. 9, no person is to be held to bail in Wales on process out of the courts at Westminster for less than 20*l.*

By 12 Geo. 1. c. 29, and 5 Geo. 2. c. 27, made perpetual by 21 Geo. 2. c. 3, on writs out of a superior court, where the cause of action is under 10*l.* the defendant shall not be arrested, but only personally served with a copy of the process; and if he doth not appear at the return, the plaintiff may enter appearance for him, and proceed.

And no person shall be arrested or held to bail where the cause of action is for 10*l.* or upwards, unless an affidavit of the amount of debt be made and filed, and specified on the back of the writ. Ibid.

By 19 Geo. 3. c. 70, no person shall be arrested upon any process issuing out of inferior courts, where the cause of action doth not amount to 10*l.* but the like copy of process may be served, for 2*s.* 6*d.* and the like proceedings had thereupon as directed by 12 Geo. 1. c. 29. s. 1.

Proceedings in inferior courts (having jurisdiction) in causes of 10*l.* or upwards, shall be the same as by the 12 Geo. 1. c. 29, are ordered in cases of 40*s.* or upwards. s. 2.

So much of all acts for recovery of small debts, as authorizes imprisonment of defendants for less than 10*l.* are repealed. s. 3.

By 43 Geo. 3. c. 46, no person shall be arrested on process of any court in England or Ireland for a cause of action not originally sufficient to require bail. s. 1.

Persons arrested on mesne process, instead of giving bail may deposit with the sheriff the sum indorsed on the writ, with 10*l.* to answer costs: which deposit shall be paid into court, and on the defendant's perfecting bail be repaid him: or on bail not being put in, be paid over to the plaintiff by order of the court. s. 2.

Wherever the plaintiff shall not recover the amount of the sum for which the defendant was held to bail (without probable cause,) defendant shall be entitled to costs under a rule of court. s 3.

In actions on judgments plaintiffs are not entitled to costs unless by rule of court.

On mesne process, after return thereof, defendants in custody may in vacation justify bail before one of the judges. s. 6.

ARREST in criminal cases.] To this arrest, in all treasons, felonies, &c. all persons whatsoever are, without distinction, liable: but no man is to be arrested unless charged with such a crime as will at least justify holding him to bail when taken; and in general an arrest may be made in all criminal cases four ways: 1. by warrant: 2. by an officer without warrant; 3. by a private person, also without a warrant; 4. by an hue and cry (for which see title Hue and Cry). 4 Black. 289.

1. Arrest by warrant.] A warrant may be granted in extraordinary cases by the privy council, or secretaries of state, but ordinarily by justices of the peace; this they may do in any cases where they have a jurisdiction over the offence, in order to compel the person accused to appear before them. 2 Hawk. P. C. 84. And this extends to all treasons, felonies, and breaches of the peace; and also to all such offences as they have power to punish: for Sir Matthew Hale, with invincible authority, maintains, 1. That a justice of peace hath power to issue a warrant to apprehend a person accused of felony though not yet indicted: and, 2. That he may also issue a warrant to apprehend a person suspected of felony, though the original suspicion be not in himself but in the party that prays his warrant, because he is a competent judge of the probability offered to him of such suspicion. 2 Hale P. C. 108.

But in both cases it is fitting to examine upon oath the party requiring the warrant, as well to ascertain that there is a felony or other offence actually committed, without which no warrant should be granted; as also to prove the crime and probability of suspecting the party against whom the warrant is prayed. 2 Hal. P. C. 108.

This warrant ought to be under the hand and seal of the justice; should set forth the time and place of making, and the cause for which it is made; and should be directed to the constable or other peace officer (or, it may be, to any private person by name, Salk. 176) requiring him to bring the party either generally before any justice of the peace for the county, or only before the justice who granted it; the warrant in the latter case being called a special warrant 2 Hawk. P. C. 82.

But a general warrant to apprehend all persons suspected, without naming or particularly describing any person in special, is illegal, and void for its uncertainty, for it is the duty of the magistrate, and ought not to be left to the officer, to judge of the ground of suspicion. 1 H. P. C. 580. 2 Hawk. P. C. 82.

And a warrant to apprehend all persons guilty of a crime therein specified is no legal warrant: for the point upon which its authority rests is a fact to be decided upon by a subsequent trial; namely, whether the person apprehended thereupon be really guilty or not: it is therefore in fact no warrant at all, for it will not justify the officer who acts under it: whereas a warrant properly framed, (even though the magistrate who issues it should exceed his jurisdiction) will by stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 44, at all events indemnify the officer who executes the same ministerially. 4 Black. 290, 291.

And when a warrant is received by the officer he is bound to execute it so far as the jurisdiction of the magistrate and himself extends. Ibid.

A warrant from the chief or other justice of the court of king's bench extends all over the kingdom, and is tested or dated England, not any particular county. Ibid.

But the warrant of a justice of the peace in one county cannot be executed in any other county until it be backed, that is, signed by a justice of the peace in such other county, such rising its execution there. 4 Black. 292, and 23 Geo. 2. c. 26. 24 Geo. 2. c. 55. and 15 Geo. 3. c. 31.

2. Arrests by officers without warrant.] These may be executed, 1, By a justice of the peace, who may himself apprehend, or cause to be apprehended by word of mouth only, any person committing a felony or breach of the peace in his presence. 2. The sheriff, and 3, the coroner may apprehend any felon within the county without warrant. 4. The constable also hath great original and inherent authority with regard to arrests: he may without warrant arrest any one for a breach of the peace committed in his view, and carry him before a justice of the peace. 4 Black. 292.

And in case of felony actually committed, or a dangerous wounding, whereby felony is likely to ensue, he may upon probable suspicion arrest the felon; and for that purpose is authorized (as upon a justice's warrant) to break open doors, and even to kill the felon if he cannot be otherwise taken; and if he or his assistants be killed in attempting such arrests, it is murder in all concerned. 2 Hale P. C. 88. 96. 5, Watchmen, viz. either those appointed by the Stat. of Winchester, 13 Ed. 1. c. 4, to keep watch and ward in all towns from sun-setting to sun-rising, or such as are mere assistants to the constables, may, virtute officii, arrest all offenders, and particularly night-walkers, and commit them to custody till the morning. Ibid. 98.

3. Arrests by private persons without warrant.] Any private person (and a fortiori, a peace officer,) that is present when any felony is committed, is bound by the law to arrest the felon, on pain of fine and imprisonment, if he escapes through the negligence of the by-standers. 2 Hawk. P. C. 74. And they may justify breaking open doors upon following such felon; and if they kill him, provided he cannot be otherwise taken, it is justifiable: though if they are killed in endeavouring to make such arrest it is murder. 2 Hale's. P. C. 77.

Also, where a felony has been actually committed, a private person acting with a good intention, and upon such information as amounts to a reasonable and probable ground of suspicion, is justified in apprehending the suspected person without a warrant, in order to carry him before a magistrate. Cald. 291.

But if a private person deliver another into the custody of a constable upon a suspicion, which appears afterwards to be unfounded, as to their party; the person so arrested may maintain an action of trespass for an assault and false imprisonment against such private person, although a felony may have been actually committed. 6 Ter. Rep. 315. And yet a peace officer upon a reasonable charge of felony may, as already mentioned, justify an arrest without a warrant, even where no felony has been committed. Doug. 343.

But a private person cannot justify breaking open doors to arrest upon a reasonable suspicion; and if either party kill the other in the attempt it will be manslaughter. 2 Hale P. C. 82, 83. and it is no more than manslaughter, because there is no malicious design to kill: but it amounts to so much, because it would be of most pernicious consequence, if under pretence of suspecting felony any private person might break open a house, or kill another: and also because such arrest upon suspicion is barely permitted by the law, and not enjoined, as in the case of those who are present when a felony is committed. 4 Black. 293.

ARRESTANDIS BONIS NE DISSIPENTUR. A writ which anciently lay for a man whose cattle or goods were taken by another, who during the contest did or was like to make them away, not being of ability to render satisfaction. Reg. Orig. 126.

ARRESTANDO IPSUM QUI PECUNIAM RECEPIT, &c. An ancient writ that lay for apprehending a person who had taken the king's prest-money to serve in the wars, and hid himself when he should go. Reg. Orig. 24.

ARRESTO FACTO SUPER BONIS MERCATORUM ALIENIGENORUM, an ancient writ that lay for a denizen against the goods of aliens found within this kingdom, in recompense of goods taken from him in a foreign country, after denial of restitution. Reg. Orig. 129. Cowel. Blount.

ARRETTED, arrectatus, quasi, ad rectum vocatus, is where a man is convened before a judge, and charged with a crime. Staundf. Pl. Co. 45. Littleton, cap. Remitter. Bract. lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 10. Cowel. Blount.

ARROWS. By an ancient statute all heads for arrows shall be well brazed, and hardened at the points with steel, on pain of forfeiture and imprisonment: and to be marked with the mark of the maker. Stat. 7 H. 4. c. 7.

ARRURA, in the black book of Hereford, De Operationibus Arruræ, signifies days work of ploughing; for anciently customary tenants were bound to plough certain days for their lord. Una arrura, one day's work at the plough: and in Wiltshire, earing is a day's ploughing. Paroch. Antiq. p. 41. Cowel. Blount.

ARSER IN LE MAIN, burning in the hand, is the punishment of criminals that have the benefit of clergy. Terms de Ley.

ARSON, (from ardeo, to burn) is the maliciously, voluntarily, and actually burning of the house, or out-house of another man, not putting fire only into a house, or any part of it, without burning; though if part of the house is burnt; or if the fire doth burn, and then goeth out of itself, it is felony. 2 Inst. 188. H. P. C. 85. 4 Black. 220. and not only the bare dwelling-house, but all out-houses that are parcel thereof, though not contiguous thereto, nor under the same roof, as barns and stables, may be the subject of arson. 1 Hale P. C. 567.

But if a house is fired by negligence or mischance, it cannot amount to arson. 3 Inst. 67. H. P. C. 85.

However by 6 Annæ, c. 31, servants, through negligence or carelessness setting on fire any dwelling-house, or out-house, shall forfeit 100*l.* to be levied by warrant of two justices, and paid to the churchwardens of the parish, to be distributed to the sufferers by the fire, or on default shall be sent to the house of correction, and there kept to hard labour eighteen months.

Formerly great niceties and distinctions prevailed concerning what should or should not be considered as amounting to arson, and previous to 43 Geo. 3. c. 58. it seems to have been settled, 1st. That one seised in fee of a house standing by itself at a distance from all others, does not commit felony in burning the same. 1 Hawk. c. 39. s. 3.

2dly, That a man possessed of a house for a term of years, or being a bare tenant from year to year, was not, in wilfully burning the house of his landlord, guilty of arson. 1 Hawk. c. 39. s. 3. Cro. Car. 376. Leach's Cro. Law 217, 219, 238. Cald. 397.

But by 43 Geo. 3. c. 58. (Lord Ellenborough's act) it is now enacted that "if any "person shall wilfully, maliciously, and unlawfully set fire to any house, barn, granary, hop-oast, malt-house, stable, coach-house, out-house, mill, warehouse, or shop, whether the same shall then be in the possession of the person so setting fire to the same, or in the possession of any other person, or of any body corporate, with intent thereby to injure or defraud his majesty, or any of his subjects, or any body corporate, then the person so offending, his counsellors, aiders, and abettors, knowing of and privy to such offence, shall be felons, and suffer death without benefit of clergy."

For the punishment of other offences by wilfully burning stacks of corn, ships, &c. which do not come under the denomination of arson, see title FELONY.

ARSURA, the trial of money by fire, after it was coined. Cowel. Blount.

ART AND PART, is a term used in Scotland and the north of England; when one charged with a crime, in committing the same was both a contriver of and acted his part in it. Cowel. Blount.

ARTHEL, a British word, and more truly written arddel, signifying to avouch; as if a man were taken with stolen goods in his hands, he was to be allowed a lawful arthel (or vouchee) to clear him of the felony. The privilege of arthel occasioning a delay and exemption of criminals from justice, provision was made against it by Stat. 26. H. 8. c. 6. Cowel. Blount.

ARTICLES of the NAVY. The method of ordering seamen in the royal fleet, and keeping up a regular discipline there, is directed by certain express rules and articles enacted by the authority of parliament: in these articles of the navy almost every possible offence is set down, and the punishment thereof annexed; in which respect the seamen have much the advantage over their brethren in the land-service, whose articles of war are not enacted by parliament, but framed from time to time at the pleasure of the crown. 1 Black. 420.

The acts of parliament here referred to, and by which these articles are established, are Stat. 22 Geo. 2. c. 33. and stat. 19 Geo. 3. c. 17.

The Stat. 22 Geo. 2. c. 33. contains the articles and orders following:

1. Officers are to cause public worship, according to the liturgy of the church of England, to be solemnly performed in their ships, and take care that prayers and preaching by the chaplains be performed diligently, and that the Lord's day be observed.

2. Persons guilty of profane oaths, cursing, drunkenness, uncleanness, &c. to be punished as a court martial shall think fit.

3. If any person shall give or hold intelligence to or with an enemy without leave, he shall suffer death.

4. If any letter or message from an enemy be conveyed to any in the fleet, and he shall not in twelve hours acquaint his superior officer with it, or if the superior officer, being acquainted therewith, shall not reveal it to the commander in chief, the offender shall suffer death, or such punishment as a court martial shall impose.

5. Spies and persons endeavouring to corrupt any one in the fleet, shall suffer death, or such punishment as a court martial shall impose.

6. No person shall relieve any enemy with money, victuals or ammunition, on like penalty.

7. All papers taken on board a prize shall be sent to the Court of Admiralty, &c. on penalty of forfeiting the share of the prize, and such punishment as a court martial shall impose.

8. No person shall take out of any prize any money or goods, unless for better securing the same, or for the necessary use of any of his Majesty's ships, before the prize shall be condemned; upon penalty of forfeiting his share, and such punishment as shall be imposed by a court martial.

9. No person on board a prize shall be stripped of his cloaths, pillaged, beaten, or ill-treated, upon pain of such punishment as a court martial shall impose.

10. Every commander, who, upon signal or order of fight, or sight of any ship which it may be his duty to engage, or who, upon likelihood of engagement, shall not make necessary preparations for fight, and encourage the inferior officers and men to fight, shall suffer death, or such punishment as a court martial shall deem him to deserve. And if any person shall treacherously or cowardly yield or cry for quarter, he shall suffer death.

11. Every person who shall not obey the orders of his superior officer, in time of action, to the best of his power, shall suffer death, or such punishment as a court martial shall deem him to deserve.

12. Every person, who, in time of action, shall withdraw or keep back, or not come into the fight, or do his utmost to take or destroy any ship which it shall be his duty to engage, and to assist every ship of his Majesty or his allies, which it shall be his duty to assist, shall suffer death,—or such punishment as a court martial shall deem him to deserve. 19 Geo. 2. c. 17.

13. Every person, who through cowardice, &c. shall forbear to pursue the chase of any enemy, &c. or shall not assist to relieve a known friend in view, to the utmost of his power, shall suffer death,—or such punishment as a court martial shall deem him to deserve. 19 Geo. 2. c. 17.

14. If any person shall delay or discourage any action or service commanded, upon pretence of arrears of wages, or otherwise, he shall suffer death, or such punishment as a court martial shall deem him to deserve.

15. Every person who shall desert to the enemy, or run away with any ship, ordnance, &c. to the weakening of the service, or yield up the same cowardly or treacherously to the enemy, shall suffer death.

16. Every person who shall desert, or entice others so to do, shall suffer death, or such punishment as a court martial shall think fit. If any commanding officer shall receive a deserter, after discovering him to be such, and shall not with speed give notice to the captain of the ship to which he belongs, or if the ship is at a considerable distance, to the secretary of the Admiralty, or commander in chief, he shall be cashiered.

17. Officers and seamen of ships appointed for convoy of merchant ships, or of any other, shall diligently attend upon that charge according to their instructions; and whosoever shall not faithfully perform their duty, and defend their ships in their convoy, or refuse to fight in their defence, or run away cowardly and submit the ships in their convoy to hazard, or exact any reward for convoying any ship, or misuse the master or mariners, shall make separation of damages, as the court of Admiralty shall adjudge; and be punished criminally by death, or other punishment, as shall be adjudged by a court martial.

18. If any officer shall receive or permit to be received on board any goods or merchandize, other than for the sole use of the ship, except gold, silver, or jewels, and except goods belonging to any ship which may be shipwrecked, or in danger thereof, in order to the preserving them for the owners, and except goods ordered to be received by the lord high Admiral, &c. he shall be cashiered, and rendered incapable of further service.

19. Any person making or endeavouring to make any mutinous assembly, shall suffer death. Any person uttering words of sedition or mutiny shall suffer death, or such punishment as a court martial shall deem him to deserve. If any officer, mariner, or soldier, in or belonging to the fleet, shall behave himself with contempt to his superior officer, being in the execution of his office, he shall be punished according to the nature of his offence by the judgment of a court martial.

20. Any person concealing any traiterous or mutinous practice or design, shall suffer death, or such punishment as a court martial shall think fit. Any person concealing any traiterous or mutinous words, or any words, practice, or design, tending to the hindrance of the service, and not forthwith revealing the same to the commanding officer, or being present at any mutiny or sedition, shall not use his utmost endeavours to suppress the same, shall be punished as a court martial shall think he deserves.

21. Any person finding cause of complaint of the unwholesomeness of victuals, or upon other just ground, shall quietly make the same known to his superior, who, as far as he is able, shall cause the same to be presently remedied; and no person upon any such or other pretence shall attempt to stir up any disturbance, upon pain of such punishment as a court martial shall think fit to inflict.

22. Any person striking any his superior officer, or drawing or offering to draw or lift up any weapon against him, being in the execution of his office, shall suffer death. And any person presuming to quarrel with any his superior officer, being in the execution of his office, or disobeying any lawful command of any his superior officer, shall suffer death or such other punishment as shall be inflicted upon him by a court martial.

23. Any person quarreling or fighting with any other person in the fleet, or using reproachful or provoking speeches or gestures shall suffer such punishment as a court martial shall impose.

24. There shall be no wasteful expence or embezzlement of any powder, shot, &c. upon penalty of such punishment as by a court martial shall be found just.

25. Every person burning or setting fire to any magazine, or store of powder, ship,

&c. or furniture thereunto belonging, not then appertaining to an enemy, shall suffer death.

26. Care is to be taken that through wilfulness or negligence no ship be stranded, run upon rocks or sands, or split or hazarded; upon pain of death, or such punishment as a court martial shall deem the offence to deserve.

27. No person shall sleep upon his watch, or negligently perform his duty, or forsake his station, upon pain of death, or such punishment as, &c.

28. Murder,

29. And buggery or sodomy, shall be punished with death.

30. Robbery shall be punished with death, or otherwise as a court martial shall find meet.

31. Every person knowingly making or signing, or commanding, counselling, or procuring the making or signing, any false muster, shall be cashiered and rendered incapable of further employment.

32. Provost marshal refusing to apprehend or receive any criminal, or suffering him to escape, shall suffer such punishment as a court martial shall deem him to deserve. And all others shall do their endeavours to detect and apprehend all offenders, upon pain of being punished by a court martial.

33. If any flag officer, captain, commander or lieutenant, shall behave in a scandalous, infamous, cruel, oppressive or fraudulent manner, unbecoming his character, he shall be dismissed.

34. Every person in actual service and full pay, guilty of mutiny, desertion, or disobedience, in any part of his Majesty's dominions on shore, when in actual service relative to the fleet, shall be liable to be tried by a court martial, and suffer the like punishment as if the offence had been committed at sea.

35. Every person in actual service and full pay, committing upon shore, in any place out of his Majesty's dominions, any crime punishable by these articles shall be liable to be tried and punished as if the crime had been committed at sea.

36. All other crimes not capital, not mentioned in this act, shall be punished according to the laws and customs at sea.

No person to be imprisoned for longer than two years.—Court martial not to try any offence (except the 5th, 34th, and 35th articles) not committed upon the main sea, or in great rivers beneath the bridges, or in any haven, &c. within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty, or by persons in actual service and full pay, except such persons and offences, as in 5th article;—nor to try a land officer or soldier on board a transport ship.

The lord high Admiral, &c. may grant commissions to any officer commanding in chief any fleet, &c. to call courts martial, consisting of commanders and captains. And if the commander in chief shall die or be removed, the officer next in command may call courts martial. No commander of chief in a fleet, &c. of more than five ships, shall preside at any court martial in foreign parts, but the officer next in command shall preside.

If a commander in chief shall detach any part of his fleet, &c. he may empower the chief commander of the detachment to hold courts martial during the separate service.

If five or more ships shall meet in foreign parts, the senior officer may hold courts martial and preside thereat.

Where it is improper for the officer next to the commander in chief to hold or preside at a court martial, the third officer in command may be empowered to preside at or hold a court martial.

No court martial shall consist of more than thirteen, nor less than five persons.

Where there shall not be less than three, and yet not so many as five of the degree of post captain or superior rank, the officer who is to preside may call to his assistance as many commanders under the degree of a post captain, as, together with the post captains, shall make up the number five, to hold the court martial.

After trial begun, no member of a court martial shall go on shore, until sentence, except in case of sickness, upon pain of being cashiered.

Proceedings shall not be delayed, if a sufficient number remain to compose the court, which shall sit from day to day (except Sunday) till sentence be given.

Nor shall the proceedings of courts martial be delayed by the absence of any members, if enough remain to make a court, but no members shall be absent except on some extraordinary occasion. 19 Geo. 3. c. 17. s. 1, 2.

The judge advocate, and all officers constituting a court martial, shall be upon oath.—Persons refusing to give evidence may be imprisoned.—Sentence of death within the narrow seas (except in case of mutiny) shall not be put in execution till a report be made to the lord high admiral, &c.—Sentence of death beyond the narrow seas, shall not be put in execution but by order of the commander in chief of the fleet, &c.—Sentence of death in any squadron, detached from the fleet, shall not be put in execution (except in case of mutiny) but by order of the commander of the fleet, or lord high admiral, &c.—And sentence of death passed in a court martial, held by the senior officer of five or more ships met in foreign parts (except in case of mutiny) shall not be put in execution but by order of the lord high admiral, &c.

The powers given by the said articles shall remain in force with respect to crews of ships wrecked, lost, or destroyed, until they be discharged or removed into another ship, or a court martial shall be held to inquire of the causes of the loss of the ship. And if upon inquiry it shall appear, that all or any of the officers and seamen did their utmost to save the ship, and behaved obediently to their superior officers, their pay shall go on: as also shall the pay of officers and seamen taken by the enemy, having done their best to defend the ship, and behaved obediently. If any officer shall receive any goods on board, contrary to the 18th article, he shall further forfeit the value of such goods, or 500*l.* at the election of the informer; one moiety to the informer, the other to Greenwich chest.

ARTICLES of WAR. The crown, with regard to military offences, has almost an absolute legislative power; for his majesty, by the annual mutiny act, "may form articles "of war, and constitute courts martial, with "power to try any crime by such articles; "and inflict penalties by sentence or judg- "ment of the same, not extending to life or "limb, except for crimes expressly declared "to be so punishable by the act."

ARTICULI CLERI, (articles of the clergy) are statutes containing certain articles relating to the church and clergy, and causes ecclesiastical. 9 E. 2. Stat. 1. c. 14. 9 E. 3. Stat. 1.

ARTICULUS, an article, or complaint, exhibited by way of libel, in a court christian. Cowel. Blount.

ARTIFICERS, or workmen, are taken for such as are masters of their art, or whose calling and employment doth consist chiefly of manual labour. For the acts relating to artificers or workmen, see title Manufactures.

ARUNDINETUM, a ground or place where reeds grow. 1 Inst. 4.

ARVIL-SUPPER, a feast or entertainment made at funerals, in the north part of England: arvil bread is the bread delivered to the poor at funeral solemnities. Cowel.

ASCESTERIUM, (architsterium, arcisterium, acisterium, alcisterium, archisterium) is a Greek word, and signifies a monastery. It often occurs in old histories. Du Cange.

ASPORTATION, the carrying away of goods; thus in all felonies there must not only be a taking, but a carrying away: cepit et asportavit was the old law Latin: and a bare removal from the place in which he found the goods, though the thief does not quite make off with them, is a sufficient asportation, or carrying away. 4 Black. 231.

ASSACH, or assath, was a custom of purgation used of old in Wales, by which the party accused did clear himself by the oaths of 300 men. It is mentioned in ancient MSS. and prevailed till the time of Henry 5. when it was abrogated. 1 H. 5. c. 6.

ASSART, (assartum) Fr. essartir, to make plain. Manwood, in his Forest Laws, says it is an offence committed in the forest, by pulling up the woods by the roots that are thickets and coverts for the deer, and making the ground plain as arable land; this is esteemed the greatest trespass that can be done in the forest to vert or venison, as it contains in it waste and more; for whereas waste of the forest is but the felling down the coverts, which may grow up again, assart is a plucking them up by the roots, and utterly destroying them, so that they can never afterwards spring up again. Manwood, part 1, p. 171. Cowel. Blount.

ASSAULT (assultus). At this day no words whatsoever, be they ever so provoking, can amount to an assault. 1 Hawk. P. C. 134.

To strike a man, though he be not hurt with the blow, is an assault: and to strike at a person, notwithstanding he be neither hurt nor hit, hath been so adjudged. 22 Lib. Ass pl. 60. For assault doth not always necessarily imply a hitting, or blow; because in trespass for assault and battery a man may be found guilty of the assault, and excused of the battery. 25 Ed. 3. c. 4. If a person in anger lift up or stretch forth his arm, and offer to strike another or menace any one with any staff or weapon, it is trespass and assault in law; and if a man threaten to beat another person, or lie in wait to do it, if the other is hindered in his business, and receives loss thereby, a special action on the case, laying the damages with a per quod, may be brought for the injury. Lamb. lib. 1. 22 Ass. pl. 60.

In many cases a man may justify an assault; thus, to lay hands gently upon another, not in anger, is no foundation of an action of trespass and assault: the defendant may justify molliter manus imposuit in defence of his person or goods, or of his wife, father, mother, or master; or for the maintenance of justice. Bract. 9 E. 4. 35 H. 6. c. 51.

But a master cannot justify an assault in defence of a servant. L. Raym. 62.

If an officer, having a warrant against one who will not suffer himself to be arrested, beat or wound him in the attempt to take him, he may justify it; so if a parent in a reasonable manner chastise his child, or master his servant, being actually in his service at that time, or a schoolmaster his scholar, or a gaoler his prisoner, or even a husband his wife (for reasonable and proper cause); or if one confine a friend who is mad, and bind and beat him in such manner as is proper in his circumstances; or if a man force a sword from one who offers to kill another; or if a man gently lays his hand on another, and thereby stay him from inciting a dog against a third person; if I beat one (without wounding him, or throwing at him a dangerous weapon) who wrongfully endeavours with violence to dispossess me of my lands or goods, or the goods of another delivered to me to be kept for him, and who will not desist upon my laying my hands gently on him, and disturbing him; or if a man beat, wound, or maim one who makes an assault upon his person, or that of his wife, parent, child, or master; or if a man fight with, or beat one who attempts to kill any stranger, if the beating was actually necessary to obtain the good end proposed, or rendered necessary in defence of the person so laying his hands on, by an assault from the other; in these cases it seems the party may justify the assault and battery. 1 Hawk. P. C. 130.

And on an indictment the party may plead Not Guilty, and give special matter in evidence; but in an action he must plead it specially. 6 Mod. 172.

For an assault the wrong-doer is subject both to an action at the suit of the party, wherein he shall render damages, and also to an indictment at the suit of the king, wherein he shall be fined according to the heinousness of the offence. 1 Hawk. 134.

But if both are depending at one time, unless in very particular cases, the attorney general will, on application, grant a nolle prosequi, if the party will not discontinue his action.

By 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11, it is enacted that "where there are several defendants to any action of assault, &c. and one or more acquitted, the person so acquitted shall recover costs of suit, unless the judge certify that there was a reasonable cause for making such person a defendant or defendants to such action."

And where the jury who try the action shall give less damages than 40*s.* the plaintiff shall be allowed no more costs than damages, unless the judge before whom the cause is tried shall certify under his hand on the back of the record that an actual battery (and not an assault only) was proved. 21 Jac. 1. c. 16.

ASSAY of weights and measures, (from the Fr. essay, i. e. a proof or trial) is the examination of weights and measures by clerks of markets, &c. Cowel. Blount.

ASSAYER OF THE KING, (assayator regis) an officer of the king's mint, for the trial of silver; he is indifferently appointed between the master of the mint and the merchants that bring silver thither for exchange. Cowel. Blount.

ASSAYERS of plate made by goldsmiths. The assaying and marking gold and silver plate is regulated by statute.

ASSAYSIARE, a word used in old charters for to take fellow judges. Cowel. Blount.

ASSECURARE, (adsecurare) to make secure by pledges, or any solemn interposition of faith. Hoveden, anno 1174. Cowel. Blount.

ASSEMBLY UNLAWFUL, (from the Fr. assembler, i. e. aggregare) to flock together. It is the meeting of three or more persons to do an unlawful act, although they do it or not: as to assault or beat any person; enter into houses, or lands, &c. West. Symb. part. 2. sect. 65. 3 Inst 9. See Riots.

ASSENT, or consent, when necessary in Law. See Agreements, Executors, Legacies, and other proper titles.

ASSESSORS, those that assess public taxes, for which see title Taxes.

ASSETS, (Fr. asses, i. e. satis) signifies goods and chattels in the hands of the executor or administrator sufficient or enough to discharge that burden which is cast upon the executor or administrator in satisfying the debts and legacies, so far as such goods and chattels extend. 2 Black. 510.

Assets by descent, or real, is where a man hath lands in fee simple, and dies seised thereof, the lands which come to his heir are assets real: and where the ancestor is bound in an obligation, such lands shall be assets, and the heir shall be charged as far as the land to him descended will extend. Terms de Ley. Cowel. Blount.

But by stat. 3 Will. and Mar. c. 14. "the heir is made liable to the value of the land by him sold, in action of debt brought against him by the obligee, who shall recover to the value of the said land, as if the debt was the proper debt of the heir; but the land which is sold or aliened bona fide before the action brought shall not be liable to execution upon a judgment recovered against the heir in any such action"

By Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. Lands of cestui que trust shall be assets by descent; s. 1. and estates pur autre vie shall be assets in the hands of the heir, if it come to him by reason of a special occupancy, and if it be not devised, and there is no special occupant, it shall go to the executors or administrators of the party that had the estate thereof by virtue of the grant, and shall be assets in their hands. Sec. 12. And in such last case, viz. if there is no special occupant thereof, or it be not devised by 14 Geo. 2. c. 20. such estates pur autre vie, after payment of debts, shall be distributed in the same manner as the personal estate of the testator or intestate.

Lands by descent in ancient demesne will be assets in debt. But a copyhold estate descending to an heir is not assets: nor is any right to an estate assets, without possession, &c. till recovered and reduced into possession. Dano. 377.

An annuity is no assets, for it is only a chose en action. Br. Assets per Descent, pl. 26.

Equity of redemption of an estate mortgaged, and a term for years to attend the inheritance are assets. 3 Leon. 32.

ASSEWIARE, to draw or drain water from marsh grounds. Cowel. Blount.

ASSIDERE, or assedare, to tax equally. Ibid.

ASSIGN, (assignare) hath two significations, one general, as to set over a right to another, or appoint a deputy, &c. And the other special, to set forth or point at, as we say, to assign error, assign false judgment, nude, &c. F. N. B 19. 112. Reg. Orig. 72. Cowel. Blount. Also justices are said to be assigned to take assises. Stat. 11 H. 6. c. 2.

ASSIGNEE, (assignatus) one that is assigned or appointed by another to do any act, or perform any business. It also signifies one that taketh any right, title, or interest in things by assignment from an assignor. These assignees may be by deed, or in law: assignee by deed is when a lessee of a term sells and assigns the same to another, that other is his assignee by deed: assignee in law is he upon whom by law the property devolves, without any appointment of the person; thus an executor is assignee in law to the testator. Dyer 6.

ASSIGNMENT, (assignatio) is the transferring and setting over to another of some right, title, or interest.

But a possibility, right of entry, title for condition broken, a trust, or thing in action, or cause of suit, cannot be granted or assigned over. Co. Lit. 214.

Yet though a bond, being a chose in action, cannot be assigned over so as to enable the assignee to sue in his own name, yet he has by the assignment such a title to the paper and wax that he may keep or cancel it. Co. Lit. 232.

Also in equity a bond is assignable for a valuable consideration paid, and the assignee alone becomes entitled to the money; so that if the obligor, after notice of the assignment, pays the money to the obligee, he will be compelled to pay it over again. 2 Vern. 595.

But the assignee must take it subject to the same equity that was in the hands of the obligee. 2 Vern. 428.

An office of trust is not grantable or assignable to another; Dyer 7, neither can a personal trust which one man reposes in another, such as a trusteeship, executorship, or the like, be assigned over, however able such assignee may be to execute it. 1 Bac. Abr. tit. As. Nor can the full pay or the half pay of an officer in the army be assigned. 1 Hen. Black. 627. 4 Ter. Rep. 248. 3 Ter. Rep. 681. And by Stat. 1 Geo. 2. st. 2. c. 14. s. 7, all assignments of seamens wages are declared void.

Arrears of rent, and the like, as choses in action, are not assignable. Skin. 6.

ASSIMULARE, to put highways together: it is mentioned in Leg. Hen. 1. c. 8. Cowel. Blount.

ASSISA CADERE. This word signifies to be nonsuited; as when there is such a plain and legal insufficiency in a suit that the complainant can proceed no further on it. Fleta, lib. 4, cap. 15. Bracton, lib. 2, cap. 7. Cowel. Blount.

ASSISA CADIT IN JURATAM, is where a thing in controversy is so doubtful that it must necessarily be tried by a jury. Fleta, lib. 4. c. 15.

——————— in modum assisæ, is when the defendant pleads to the assise without taking any exception to the count, declaration, or writ. Cowel. Blount.

ASSISA CONTINUANDA, an ancient writ directed to the justices of assise for continuation of a cause, when certain records alleged could not be produced in time by the party that had occasion to use them. Reg. Orig. 217. Cowel. Blount.

ASSISA PANIS ET CEREVISÆ, the power or privilege of assising or adjusting the weights and measures of bread and beer; Cowel.

ASSISA PROROGANDA, is a writ directed to the justices assigned to take assises for the stay of proceedings, by reason of the party's being employed in the king's business, Reg. Orig. 208. Cowel. Blount.

ASSISE (Fr. assis). This word is properly derived from the Latin verb assideo, to sit together; and is also taken for the court, place, or time when and where the writs or processes of assise are handled or taken. And in this signification assisé is general, as when the justices go their several circuits with commission to take all assises; or special, where a special commission is granted to certain persons (formerly oftentimes done) for taking an assise upon one or two disseisins only. Bract. lib. 3. 1 Inst. 153. 3 Black. 185.

At this day all the counties in England are divided into six circuits; and the court of Assise and Nisi prius at this day in each county are composed of two judges, who are assigned by the king's special commission for every circuit, and hold their assises twice a year in every county, except London or Middlesex, where the king's courts of Nisi prius do sit in and after every term, before the chief or some other judge of the respective courts at Westminster. 3 Black. 57.

These judges upon their circuits sit by virtue of five several commissions. 3 Blac. 58.

1. The commission of the peace, in every county of the circuits; and all justices of the peace of the county are bound to be present at the assises; and sheriffs are also to give their attendance on the judges, or they shall be fined. Bacon's Elem. 15, 16, &c. 3 Black. Com. 58.

2. Of oyer and terminer, directed to them and many other gentlemen of the county, by which they are empowered to try treasons, felonies, &c. and this is the largest commission they have. Ibid.

3. Of gaol delivery, directed to the judges and the clerk of assise associate, which gives them power to try every prisoner in the gaol, committed for any offence whatsoever, but none but prisoners in the gaol; so that one way or other they rid the gaol of all the prisoners in it. Ibid.

4. Of assise, directed to themselves only and the clerk of assise, to take assises, and do right upon writs of assise brought before them by such as are wrongfully thrust out of their lands and possessions: which writs were heretofore frequent, but now mens possessions are sooner recovered by ejectments, &c. Ibid.

5. Of nisi prius, directed to the judges and clerk of assise, by which civil causes grown to issue in the courts above, are tried in the vacation by a jury of twelve men of the county where the cause of action arises; and on return of the verdict of the jury to the court above, the judges there give judgment. Ibid.

In Wales there are but two circuits, North and South Wales; for each of which the king appoints two persons learned in the laws to be judges. Stat. 18 Eliz. c. 8.

ASSISE, Writ of, is a remedy which the law hath appointed for the restitution of a freehold, of which the party has been disseised, and appears to have been in the nature of a commission to put the disseisee in possession by trial at the assises. Bac. Abr. Ass.

The word assise is derived by sir Ed. Coke, 1 Inst. 153, from the Latin assideo, to sit together; and it signifies originally the jury who try the cause, and sit together for that purpose; and the reason, saith Littleton, (Co. Lit. 159,) why such writs at the beginning were called assises was, for that in these writs the sheriff is ordered to summon a jury or assise, which is not expressed in any other original writ. F. N. B. 195.

This mode of proceeding is now seldom made use of except for the recovery of offices, being supplied by other actions less perplexed, and which yield a more expeditious remedy. Bac. Abr. tit. Ass.

It is therefore here only necessary to observe, that this remedy by writ of assise is only applicable to two species of injury by ouster, viz. abatement, and a recent or novel disseisin as follows. 3 Black. 185.

ASSISE of Mort d'ancestor. If the abatement happened upon the death of the demandant's father or mother, brother or sister, uncle or aunt, nephew or niece, the remedy is by an assise of mort d'ancestor, or the death of one's ancestor; and the general purport of this writ is, to direct the sheriff to summon a jury or assise, to view the land in question, and to recognize whether such ancestor were seised thereof on the day of his death, and whether the demandant be the next heir. F. N. B. 195. Finch L. 290. And in a short time after the judges usually come down by the king's commission to take the recognition of assise; when, if these points are found in the affirmative, the law immediately transfers the possession from the tenant to the demandant. If the abatement happened on the death of one's grandfather or grandmother, then an assise of mort d'ancestor no longer lies, but a writ of ayle, or de avo: if on the death of the great grandfather or great grandmother, then a writ of besayle, or de proavo; but if it mounts one degree higher, to the tresayle or grandfather's grandfather; or if the abatement happened upon the death of any collateral relation, other than those before mentioned, the writ is called a writ of cosinage, or de consanguineo. Finch L. 266, 267. And the same points shall be inquired of in all these actions ancestrel, as in an assise of mort d'ancestor, they being of the very same nature. Stat. West. 2. 13 Ed. 1. c. 20. Though they differ in this point of form, that these ancestrel writs, (like all other writs of præcipe) expressly assert the demandant's title, (viz. the seisin of the ancestor at his death, and his own right of inheritance) the assise asserts nothing directly, but only prays an inquiry whether those points be so. 2 Inst. 399. There is also another ancestrel writ, denominated a nuper obiit, to establish an equal division of the land in question, where on the death of an ancestor who has several heirs, one enters and holds the others out of possession. F. N. B. 197. Finch L. 293. But a man is not allowed to have any of these possessory actions for an abatement consequent on the death of any collateral relation, beyond the fourth degree. Hale on F. N. B. 221. though in the lineal ascent he may proceed ad infinitum. Fitzh. Abr. tit. Coinage, 15. For the law will not pay any regard to the possession of a collateral relation, so very distant as hardly to be any at all. 3 Black. 185, 186.

It was always held to be law, Bract. l. 4. de assis. mort antecessoris, c. 13. s. 3. F. N. B. 196. that where lands were devisable in a man's last will by the custom of the place, there an assise of mort d'ancestor did not lie. For, where lands were so devisable, the right of possession could never be determined by a process which inquired only of these two points, the seisin of the ancestor, and the heirship of the demandant. And hence it might be reasonable to conclude, that when the statute of wills, 32 Hen. 8. c. 1, made all socage lands devisable, an assise of mort d'ancestor no longer could be brought of lands held in socage; (see 1 Leon. 267.) and that now, since the statute 12 Car. 2. c. 24, which converts all tenures, a few only excepted, into free and common socage, it should follow, that no assise of mort d'ancestor can be brought of any lands in the kingdom; but in case of abatements recourse must be properly had to the more ancient writs of entry.

ASSISE of novel disseisin, is so called because the justices in eyre went their circuits from seven years to seven years; and no assise was allowed before them, which commenced before the last circuit, which was called an ancient assise: and that which was upon a disseisin since the last circuit, an assise of novel disseisin. Co. Lit. 153. b.

This ASSISE of novel disseisin is an action of the same nature with the assise of mort d'ancestor before mentioned, in that herein the demandant's possession must be shown. But it differs considerably in other points, particularly in that it recites a complaint by the demandant of the disseisin committed, in terms of direct averment; whereupon the sheriff is commanded to reseise the land and all the chattels thereon, and keep the same in his custody till the arrival of the justices of assise (which, since the introduction of giving damages, as well as the possession, is now omitted). Booth. 262. And in the mean time to summon a jury to view the premises, and make recognition of the assise before the justices. F. N. B. 177. And if, upon the trial the demandant can prove, first, a title, next, his actual seisin in consequence thereof; and, lastly, his disseisin by the present tenant; he shall have judgment to recover his seisin, and damages for the injury sustained. 3 Black. 187.

The first process in this action is an original writ issued out of chancery, directed to the sheriff, commanding him to return a jury, who are called the recognitors of the assise. An assise is to be arraigned on the day the writ is returnable, on which day the defendant is to count, and the tenant is to appear and plead instantly, unless the court thinks proper to allow him an imparlance, which it is said cannot be without showing good cause. Style's Reg. 88.

But by 32 Hen. 8. c. 2, no manner of person shall sue, have, or maintain any assise of mort d'ancestor, cosinage, ayle, writ of entry upon disseisin done to any of his ancestors, or any other action possessory upon the possession of any of his ancestors, but only of the seisin of the ancestor within fifty years next before the teste of the writ. s. 2. Nor shall any person sue any action of or upon his own seisin or possession above thirty years next before the teste of the original writ. s. 3.

The process of assises in general is called by statute West. 2. 13 Ed. 1. c. 24, festinum remedium, in comparison of that by a writ of entry, in not admitting of many dilatory pleas and proceedings, to which other real actions are subject. Booth. 262. Costs and damages were annexed to these possessory actions by the statute of Gloucester, 6 Ed. 1. c. 1, before which the tenant in possession was allowed to retain the intermediate profits of the land to enable him to perform the feudal burdens incident thereunto. And, to prevent frequent and vexatious disseisins, it is enacted by the statute of Merton, 20 H. 3. c. 3, that if a person disseised recover seisin of the land again by assise of novel disseisin, and be again disseised of the same tenements by the same disseisor, he shall have a writ of re-disseisin; and, if he recover therein, the re-disseisor shall be imprisoned; and, by the statute of Marlbridge, 52 Hen. 3. c. 8, shall also pay a fine to the king. And by stat. Westminster 2. 13 Ed. 1. c. 25. In this suit, if the defendant fail to make good the exception which he pleads, he shall be adjudged a disseisor, without taking the assise; and shall pay the plaintiff double damages, and be imprisoned a year.

In like manner, by the same statute of Merton, when any lands or tenements are recovered by assise of mort d'ancestor, or other jury, or any judgment of the court, if the party be afterwards disseised by the same person against whom judgment was obtained, he shall have a writ of post-disseisin against him, which subjects the post-disseisor to the same penalties as a re-disseisor. The reason of all which, as given by sir Edward Coke, 2 Inst. 83, 84. lib. 4. c. 49, is because such proceeding is a contempt of the king's courts, and in despite of the law. See also Bracton, lib. 4. c. 49. 3 Black. 187, 188.

ASSISE OF THE FOREST, (assisa de foresta) is a statute touching orders to be observed in the king's forest. Manwood 35.

ASSISE also signifies an ordinance or statute of assise, setting down and appointing a certain measure, rate, or order for the things they concern, as the stat. de assisa panis et cervisia, and other ancient statutes.

ASSISORS, (assisores) Sunt qui assisas conducunt aut taxationes imponunt.—In Scotland (according to Skene) they are the same with our jurors. Cowel. Blount.

ASSISUS, rented or farmed out for such an assise, or certain assessed rent in money or provisions. Cowel. Blount.

ASSITHMENT, a weregeld, or compensation, by a pecuniary mulct: from the preposition ad, and the Sax. vithe, vice: quod vice supplicii ad expiandum delictum solvitur. Cowel. Blount.

ASSOCIATION, (associatio) is a writ or patent sent by the king, either at his own motion, or at the suit of a party plaintiff, to the justices appointed to take assises, or of oyer and terminer, &c. to have others associated unto them. And this is usual where a justice of assise dies: and a writ is issued to the justices alive to admit the person associated: also where a justice is disabled this is practised. F. N. B. 185. Reg. Orig. 201. 206. 223. The clerk of the assise is usually associate of course; in other cases some learned serjeants at law are appointed. Br. Assis. 386. Mich. 32 H. 6.

ASSOILE, (absolvere) to deliver from excommunication. Staundf. Pl. Cr. 72.

ASSUMPSIT, (from the Lat. assumo) is taken for a promise, by which a man assumes or takes upon him to perform or pay any thing to another: and it comprehends any verbal promise, made upon consideration. Terms de Ley.

And the law gives an action of assumpsit to a party injured by the breach or non-performance of a contract legally entered into: it is founded on a contract either express or implied by law, and gives the party damages in proportion to the loss he has sustained by the violation of the contract. 1 Bac. Abr. tit. Ass.

And in every action upon assumpsit there ought to be a valuable and meritorious, and not an idle or insignificant consideration, promise, and breach of promise. 1 Leon. 405. Dyer 336. 2 Bulst. 269.

But the law distinguishes between a general indebitatus assumpsit, and a special assumpsit: for though they come under the denomination of actions on the case, and the party is to be recompensed in damages alike in both, yet the first seems to be of a superior nature. and where debt will lie; for an action of assumpsit will lie in many cases where debt lies, and in many where it does not lie; but for a particular undertaking, or collateral promise to discharge the debt or duty of another, a special assumpsit must be brought. Salk. 23. 6 Mod. 128. 4 Co. 92. 2 Bur. 1008.

And a promise, according to sir William Blackstone, is in the nature of a verbal covenant, and wants nothing but the solemnity of writing and sealing to make it absolutely the same. If therefore it be to do any explicit act, it is an express contract, as much as any covenant; and the breach of it is an equal injury. The remedy indeed is not exactly the same: since, instead of an action of covenant, there only lies an action upon the case, for what is called the assumpsit, or undertaking of the defendant; the failure of performing which is the wrong or injury done to the plaintiff, the damages whereof a jury are to estimate and settle. Thus if a builder promises, undertakes, or assumes to C. that he will build and cover his house within a time limited, and fails to do it, C. has an action on the case against the builder, for this breach of his express promise, undertaking, or assumpsit; and shall recover a pecuniary satisfaction for the injury sustained by such delay. So also in the case before mentioned, of a debt by simple contract, if the debtor promises to pay it and does not, this breach of promise entitles the creditor to his action on the case, instead of being driven to an action of debt. Thus, likewise, a promissory note, or note of hand not under seal, to pay money at a day certain, is an express assumpsit; and the payee at common law, or by custom and act of parliament the indorsee, may recover the value of the note in damages, if it remains unpaid. Some agreements indeed, though ever so expressly made, are deemed of so important a nature, that they ought not to rest on verbal promise only, which cannot be proved but by the memory (which sometimes will induce the perjury) of witnesses.

To prevent which, the statute of frauds and perjuries, 29 Car 2. c. 3, enacts, that in the five following cases no verbal promise shall be sufficient to ground an action upon, but at the least some note or memorandum of it shall be made in writing, and signed by the party to be charged therewith: 1. Where an executor or administrator promises to answer damages out of his own estate. 2. Where a man undertakes to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another. 3. Where any agreement is made upon consideration of marriage. 4. Where any contract or sale is made of lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or any interest therein. 5. And, lastly, Where there is any agreement that is not to be performed within a year from the making thereof. In all these cases a mere verbal assumpsit is void. 3 Black. 157, 158.

Besides these express contracts there are others that are only implied by law.

This class of implied contracts are such as do not arise from the express determination of any court, or the positive direction of any statute, but from natural reason, and the just construction of law: which class extends to all presumptive undertakings or assumpsits, which, though never perhaps actually made, yet constantly arise from this general implication and intendment of the courts of judicature, that every man hath engaged to perform what his duty or justice requires. 3 Black. 161.

1. Thus if I employ a person to transact any business for me, or perform any work, the law implies that I undertook, or assumed to pay him so much as his labour deserved: And if I neglect to make him amends he has a remedy for this injury, by bringing his action on the case upon this implied assumpsit, wherein he is at liberty to suggest that I promised to pay him so much as he reasonably deserved, and then to aver that his trouble was really worth such a particular sum, which the defendant has omitted to pay. But this valuation of his trouble is submitted to the determination of a jury, who will assess such a sum in damages as they think he really merited. This is called an assumpsit on a quantum meruit. Ibid.

2. There is also an implied assumpsit on a quantum valebant, which is very similar to the former, being only where one takes up goods or wares of a tradesman without expressly agreeing for the price. There the law concludes that both parties did intentionally agree that the real value of the goods should be paid; and an action on the case may be brought accordingly, if the vendee refuses to pay that value. Ibid.

3. A third species of implied assumpsits is when one has had and received money belonging to another, without any valuable consideration given on the receiver's part; for the law construes this to be money had and received for the use of the owner only; and implies, that the person so receiving promised and undertook to account for it to the true proprietor. And if he unjustly detains it, an action on the case lies against him for the breach of such implied promise and undertaking: and he will be made to repay the owner in damages equivalent to what he has detained in such violation of his promise. This is a very extensive and beneficial remedy, applicable to almost every case where the defendant has received money, which ex æquo et bono he ought to refund. It lies for money paid by mistake, or on a consideration which happens to fail, or through imposition, extortion, or oppression, or where undue advantage is taken of the plaintiff's situation. 4 Burr. 1012. 3 Black. 162.

4. Where a person has laid out and expended his own money for the use of another, at his request, the law implies a promise of repayment, and an action will lie on this assumpsit. Cart. 446. 2 Keb. 99. 3 Black. 162.

5. Likewise, fifthly, upon a stated account between two merchants, or other persons, the law implies that he against whom the balance appears has engaged to pay it to the other, though there be not any actual promise. And from this implication it is frequent for actions on the case to be brought, declaring that the plaintiff and defendant had settled their accounts together, insimul computassent, (which gives name to this species of assumpsit) and that the defendant engaged to pay the plaintiff the balance, but has since neglected to do it. But if no account has been made up, then the legal remedy is by bringing a writ of account de computo, F. N. B. 116. (for which see title Account) commanding the defendant to render a just account to the plaintiff, or show the court good cause to the contrary. 3 Black. 162.

ASSUMPTION, the day of the death of a saint, so called. Quia ejus anima in cœlum assumitur. Du Cange. Cowel.

ASSURANCE, the legal evidences of the translation of property are called the common assurances of the kingdom; whereby every man's estate is assured to him, and all controversies, doubts, and difficulties, are either prevented or removed. 2 Black. 294.

There is also an assurance of ships, goods, and merchandise, for which see Insurance.

ASTER, and Homo Astar, a man that is resident. Britton. 151.

ASTRARIUS HÆRES, (from Astre, the hearth of a chimney) is where the ancestor by conveyance hath set his heir apparent and his family in a house in his life-time. Co. Lit. 8. Cowel. Blount.

ASTRUM, a house, or place of habitation, also from astre. Ibid.

ATHEGAR, a weapon among the Saxons, which seems to have been a hand-dart, from the Sax. aeton, to fling, or throw, and gar, a weapon. Spelm. Cowel.

ATH, ATHA, ATHE, an oath. Cowel. Blount.

ATHES, ADAA, a power or privilege of exacting and administering an oath in some cases of right and property; from the Sax. ath, othe, juramentum. Cowel. Blount.

ATIA, see odio & atia, an ancient writ of inquiry whether a person be committed to prison on just cause of suspicion. Cowel. Blount.

ATILIA, utensils or country implements. Cowel. Blount.

ATRIUM, signifies a court before the house, and sometimes a church-yard. Ibid.

ATTACH, (attachiare, from the French attacher) signifies to take or apprehend by commandment of a writ or precept. Lamb. Eiren. lib. 1. cap. 16. It differs from arrest, in that he who arresteth a man carrieth him to a person of higher power to be forthwith disposed of, but he that attacheth keepeth the party attached, and presents him in court at the day assigned. Another difference there is, that arrest is only upon the body of a man, whereas an attachment is oftentimes upon his goods. Kitch. 279.

ATTACHIAMENTA bonorum, a distress formerly taken upon goods or chattels, which was sued for personal estate, or debt, by the legal attachiators, or bailiffs, as security to answer an action. Cowel. Blount.

——————— de spinis et boscis a privilege granted to the officers of a forest to take to their own use thorns, brush, and windfalls, within their precincts. Ibid.

ATTACHMENT, (from attach) is a process that issues at the discretion of the judges of a court of record against a person for some contempt, for which he is to be committed, and may be awarded by them upon a bare suggestion, or on their own knowledge, without any appeal, indictment or information; for though by the statute of Magna Charta none are to be imprisoned sine judicio parium vel per legem terræ, yet this summary method of proceeding being absolutely necessary to the furtherance and execution of justice, seems to have been long practised, and is certainly now established as part of the law of the land. Lamb. Eiren. lib. 1. c. 16. 1 Buc. Abr.

If any contempt arise in the face of the court, as by rude and contumelious behaviour, by obstinacy, perverseness, or prevarication, by breach of the peace, or any wilful disturbance whatsoever, the commitment is by rule of court, not on process, unless the party escape out of court before he is secured. Jacob, tit. Attachment. 4 Black. 285.

All courts of record have a discretionary power over their own officers, and are to see that no abuses be committed by them which may bring disgrace on the courts themselves; therefore if a sheriff or other officer shall be guilty of a corrupt practice in not serving a writ, as if he refuse to do it unless paid an unreasonable gratuity from the plaintiff, or receive a bribe from the defendant, or give him notice to remove his person or effects, in order to prevent the service of any writ, the court which awarded it may punish such offences in such manner as shall seem proper by attachment. Dyer 216 2 Hawk. P. C. 142. 1 Bac. Abr. tit. Attachment.

But if there be no palpable corruption, nor extraordinary circumstance of wilful negligence or obstinacy, the judgment whereof is to be left to the discretion of the court, it seems not usual to proceed in this manner, but to leave the party to his ordinary remedy against the sheriff, either by action, or by rule to return the writ, or by an alias and pluries, which if he have no excuse for not executing, an attachment goes of course. Hob. 62. 264. Noy 101. F. N. B. 38. Finch 237. 5 Mod. 314, 315.

Abuses committed by attornies and solicitors, who are also officers of the respective courts, by gross instances of fraud and corruption, injustice to their clients, or other dishonest practice, may be punished by attachment. 4 Black. 283.

Those committed by jurymen in collateral matters relating to the discharge of their office, such as making default when summoned, eating or drinking without the leave of the court, and especially at the cost of either party, and other misbehaviour, or irregularities of a similar kind; but not in the mere exercise of their judicial capacities, as by giving a false or erroneous verdict, may be punished by attachment. 4 Black. 284.

Those committed by witnesses; by making default when summoned, refusing to be sworn or examined, or prevaricating in their evidence when sworn, may likewise be punished by attachment. 4 Black. 284.

For contempts against the king's writs, using them in a vexatious manner, altering the teste, or filling them up after sealed, &c. attachment lies. And for contempts of an enormous kind, in not obeying writs, &c. attachment may be issued against peers. 2 Hawk. 152, 153. For persuading jurors not to appear on a trial, attachment lies against the party for obstructing the proceedings of the court. 1 Lill. 121. The court of B. R. may award attachments against any inferior courts usurping a jurisdiction, or acting contrary to justice; as for proceeding after a habeas corpus issued, and a supersedeas to stay proceedings. And attachments may be granted against justices of peace for proceeding on an indictment after a certiorari delivered to them to remove the indictment. 1 Lill. 121. Salk. 207. So attachment lies against a lord that refuses to hold his court, after a writ issued to him for that purpose, so that his tenant cannot have right done him. New Nat. Br. 6. 27.

An attachment is also the proper remedy for disobedience to the rules of court; as of those made in ejectment and arbitrament. So where a defendant in account, being adjudged to account before the auditors, refuses to do it unless they will allow matter disallowed by the court before, or where one refuses to pay costs taxed by the master, whose taxation the law looks upon as a taxation by the court. 1 Mod. 21. 1 Salk. 71.

But an attachment is not granted for disobedience of a rule of Nisi prius, unless it be first made a rule of court; nor for disobedience of a rule made by a judge at his chamber, unless it be entered; nor for disobedience of any rule without personal service. 1 Salk. 84.

Also an attachment is proper for abuses of the process of the court; as for suing out execution where there is no judgment, bringing an appeal for the death of one known to be alive, making use of the process of a superior court, as a stale to bring a defendant within the jurisdiction of an inferior court, and then dropping it, using such process in a vexatious, oppressive, or unjust manner, without colour of serving any other end by it. 2 Hawk. P. C. 154.

Attachments for contempts (not committed in the face of the court) are usually granted on a rule to show cause, unless the offence complained of be of a flagrant nature, and positively sworn to; in which last case the party is ordered to attend, which he must do in person, as must every one against whom an attachment is granted; and if he shall appear to be apparently guilty, the court in discretion, on consideration of the nature of the crime, and other circumstances, will either commit him immediately, in order to answer interrogatories to be exhibited against him concerning the contempt complained of, or will suffer him to enter into recognizance to answer such interrogatories; which if they be not exhibited within four days, the party may move to have the recognizance discharged; otherwise he must answer them, though exhibited after the four days; but in all cases, if he fully answer them, he shall be discharged as to the attachment, and the prosecutor shall be left to proceed against him for the perjury, if he thinks fit; but if he deny part of the contempts only, and confess other part, he shall not be discharged as to those denied, but the truth of them shall be examined, and such punishment inflicted as from the whole shall appear reasonable; and if his answer be evasive as to any material part, he shall be punished in the same manner as if he had confessed it. 2 Hawk. P. C. 141. 1 Salk. 84. 6 Mod. 73. 2 Jones 178.

ATTACHMENT in courts of equity, see Chancery, and other proper titles.

ATTACHMENT, foreign, is an attachment of the goods of foreigners found in some liberty, to satisfy their creditors within such liberty. Cath. Rep. 66. And by the custom of London, and some other places, a man may attach money or goods in the hands of a stranger, if there be no suit depending in any of the courts at Westminster concerning the same. Cro. Eliz. 691.

Foreign attachments in London upon plaint of debt are made after this manner, either in the court of the mayor or sheriff: A. oweth B. 100*l.* and C. is indebted to A. 100*l.* B. enters an action against A. of 200*l.* and by virtue of that action a serjeant attacheth 100*l.* in the hands of C. as the money of A. to the use of B. which is returned upon that action. The attachment being made, and returned by the serjeant, the plaintiff is immediately to see an attorney before the next court holden, or the defendant may then put in bail to the attachment, and nonsuit the plaintiff: four court days must pass before the plaintiff can cause C. the garnishee, in whose hands the money was attached, to show cause why B. should not condemn the 100*l.* attached in the hands of C. as the money of A. the defendant in the action (though not in the attachment) to the use of B. the plaintiff: and the garnishee C. may appear in court by his attorney, wage his law, and plead that he hath no money in his hands of the defendant's, or other special matter; but the plaintiff may hinder his waging of law, by producing two sufficient citizens to swear that the garnishee had either money or goods in his hands of A. at the time of the attachment, of which affidavit is to be made before the lord mayor, and being filed may be pleaded by way of estoppel: then the plaintiff must put in bail, that if the defendant come within a year and a day into court, and he can discharge himself of the money condemned in court, and that he owed nothing to the plaintiff at the time in the plaint mentioned, the said money shall be forthcoming, &c. if the garnishee fail to appear by his attorney, being warned by the officer to come into court to show cause as aforesaid, he is taken by default for want of appearing, and judgment given against him for the goods and money attached in his hands, and he is without remedy, either at common law, or in equity; for if taken in execution he must pay the money condemned, though he hath not one penny, or go to prison; but the garnishee appearing to show cause why the money or goods attached in his hands ought not to be condemned to the use of the plaintiff, having feed an attorney, may plead as aforesaid, that he hath no money or goods in his hands of the parties against whom the attachment is made, and it will then be tried by a jury, and judgment awarded, &c. but after trial, bail may be put in, whereby the attachment shall be dissolved, but the garnishee, &c. and his security will then be liable to what debt the plaintiff shall make out to be due upon the action: and an attachment is never thoroughly perfected till there is a bail, and satisfaction upon record. Privileg. Lond. Comyns' Dig. tit. Attachment.

ATTAINDER. (attinctu and attinctura.) When sentence is passed on a man who hath committed treason or felony, the immediate inseparable consequence from the common law is attainder. 4 Black. 380.

For when it is now clear beyond all dispute that the criminal is no longer fit to live upon earth, but is to be exterminated as a monster and a bane to human society, the law sets a note of infamy upon him, puts him out of its protection, and takes no further care of him than barely to see him executed. He is then called attaint, attinctus, stained or blackened. 4 Black. 380.

This is after judgment and sentence pronounced, for there is a great difference between a man convicted and attainted, though they are frequently through inaccuracy confounded together. Ibid.

After conviction only, a man is liable to none of these disabilities: for there is still in contemplation of law a possibility of his innocence: something may be offered in arrest of judgment: the indictment may be erroneous, which will render his guilt uncertain, and thereupon the present conviction may be quashed: he may obtain a pardon, or be allowed the benefit of clergy, both which, suppose some latent sparks of merit, which plead in extenuation of his fault. Ibid.

But when judgment is once pronounced, both law and fact conspire to prove him completely guilty, and there is not the remotest possibility left of any thing to be said in his favour. Ibid.

Upon judgment therefore of death, and not before, the attainder of a criminal commences: or upon such circumstances as are equivalent to judgment of death, as judgment of outlawry on a capital crime pronounced for absconding or flying from justice, which tacitly confesses the guilt: and therefore either upon judgment of outlawry, or of death for treason or felony, a man shall be said to be attainted. 4 Black. 380.

The consequences of attainder are forfeiture and corruption of blood. 4 Black. 381. For which see titles Forfeitures and Corruption of Blood.

ATTAINDER, Acts of.] Also persons may be attainted by act of parliament. Acts of attainder of criminals have been passed in several reigns, on the discovery of plots and rebellions, from the reign of king Charles II. when an act was made for the attainder of several persons guilty of the murder of king Charles I. to this time; among which, that for attainting Sir John Fenwick, for conspiring against king William, is the most remarkable; it being made to attaint and convict him of high treason on the oath of one witness, just after a law had been enacted, that no person should be tried or attainted of high treason where corruption of blood is incurred, but by the oath of two lawful witnesses, unless the party confess, stand mute, &c. Stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. cap. 3 But in the case of Sir John Fenwick there was something extraordinary; for he was indicted of treason, on the oaths of two witnesses; though but one only could be produced against him on his trial. It was pretended Sir John had tampered with and prevailed on one of the witnesses to withdraw.

The 8 W. 3. c. 5. also required Sir George Barclay, major general Holmes, and other persons to surrender themselves to the lord chief justice, or secretaries of state; or to be attainted. By the 13 W. 3. c. 3. the pretended Prince of Wales was under attainder of treason, &c. And by 1 Geo. 1. c. 16. the late Duke of Ormond and others are attainted. And besides these acts of attainder, we have had bills for inflicting pains and penalties, as those against the late bishop of Rochester, &c. Stat. 9 Geo. 1. c. 17. See Evidence.

ATTAINT, (attincta) is a writ that lieth after judgment in any court of record, in an action real or personal, (where the debt or damages amount to above 40*s.* Stat. 5 & 34 Ed. 3. c. 7.) to inquire whether the jury gave a false verdict: that so, the judgment following thereupon may be reversed: and this must be brought in the life-time of him for whom the verdict was given, and of two at least of the juries who gave it. Finch. L. 484. 3 Black. 402.

This lay, at the common law, only upon verdicts in actions for such personal injuries as did not amount to trespass: for in real wrongs, the party injured had redress by writ of right; but after verdict against him in personal suits, he had no other remedy; and it did not lie in actions of trespass for a very extraordinary reason; because if the verdict was set aside, the king would lose his fine. Bro. Abr. tit. Att. But by stat. Westm. 1. 3 Ed. 1. c. 38. it was given in all pleas of land, franchise, or freehold, and by several subsequently in the reign of Ed 3. viz. 1 Ed. 3. c. 6. 5 Ed. 3. c. 7. 28 Ed. 3. c. 8. 34 Ed. 3. c. 7. and 9 Ric. 2. c. 3, it was allowed in almost every action, except in a writ of right, for there no attaint lay, either by common law or statute, because it was determined by the grand assise, consisting of sixteen jurors. Bro. Abr. Att. 42. 3 Black. Com. 403.

The jury who are to try this false verdict must be twenty-four, and are called the grand jury; for the law wills not that the oath of one jury of twelve men should be attainted, or set aside by an equal number, nor by less indeed than double the former. 3 Black. 403.

He that brings the attaint can give no other evidence to the grand jury than what was originally given to the petit; for as their verdict is now trying, and the question is whether or no they did right upon the evidence that appeared to them, the law judged it the highest absurdity to produce any subsequent proof upon such trial, and to condemn the prior jurisdiction for not believing evidence which they never heard: but those against whom it is brought are allowed in affirmance of the first verdict to produce new matter; Finch L. 486, because the petit jury may have formed their verdict upon evidence of their own knowledge, which never appeared in court; and because very terrible was the judgment which the common law inflicted upon them if the jury found the verdict a false one. 3 Black. 403.

The judgment was, 1 That they should lose their liberam legem, and become for ever infamous. 2. That they should forfeit all their goods and chattels. 3. That their lands and tenements should be seized into the king's hands. 4. That their wives and children should be thrown out of doors. 5. That their houses should be rased and thrown down. 6. That their trees should be rooted up. 7. That their meadows should be ploughed. 8. That their bodies should be cast into gaol. 9. That the party should be restored to all that he lost by reason of the unjust verdict. Glanv. lib. 2. 3 Black. 403.

But as the severity of this common law punishment had the effect of preventing the law from being executed, therefore by Stat. 11 Hen. 7. c. 24, revived by 23 Hen. 8. c. 3, a more moderate punishment was inflicted upon attainted jurors, viz. perpetual infamy; and if the cause of action were above 40*l.* value a forfeiture of 20*l. a-piece by the jurors,* or if under 40*l. then* 5*l. a-piece, to be divided between the king and the party injured.* So that a man may now bring an attaint either upon the statute, or at common law, at his election; and in both of them may reverse the judgment. 3 Inst. 264. 3 Black. 404.

But the practice of setting aside verdicts upon motion, and granting New Trials, has so far superseded the use of both sorts of attaints, that there is no instance of an attaint in our books since the reign of Eliz. (see Cro. Eliz. 309. 3 Black. 404.) And therefore it is unnecessary in this place to enlarge any further upon the subject.

ATTEGIA, (from the Lat. ad and tego) a little house. It is mentioned in Ethelward, lib. 4. Hist. Angl. cap. 3.

ATTENDANT, (attendens) signifies one that owes a duty or service to another, or in some sort depends on him. Where a wife is endowed of lands by a guardian, &c. she shall be attendant on the guardian, and on the heir at his full age. Terms de Ley.

ATTERMINING, (from the Fr. attermine) is used for a time or term granted for payment of a debt. Ordinatio de libertatibus perquirendis, anno. 27 Ed. 1. And in the stat. N. B.* 156. Every person that owes suit to the county-court, court-baron, &c. may make an attorney to do his suit. Stat. 20 H. 3. c. 10.

ATTORNEY, (attornatus) is one set in the place of another man, and who has authority given him to act in the place and stead of him by whom he is delegated, in private contracts and agreements, which authority must be by deed, that it may appear that the attorney has pursued his commission, and this is in general done by a power or letter of attorney executed under seal, though such a power may be and very frequently is contained in other deeds. 1 Bac. Abr. tit. Attorney.

Of this power all persons are capable, and therefore the same may be executed by infants, femes covert, persons attainted, outlawed, excommunicated, aliens, and others; for this being only a naked authority, the execution of it can be attended with no manner of prejudice to the persons under such incapacities or disabilities or to any other person who by law may claim any interest of such disabled persons after their death. Ibid.

ATTORNIES AT LAW. An attorney at law is a person duly admitted in the king's courts, and who is appointed by another person, usually denominated his client, to prosecute, or defend some suit on his behalf: and he is considered as a public officer belonging to the courts of justice in which he may be admitted.

And the following is the substance of the several acts relating to attornies.

By stat. Merton, 20 Hen. 3. c. 10. freemen owing suit to the county, tithing, hundred, wapentake, or to a court-baron, may do the same by an attorney.

By stat. of York, 12 Ed. 2. c. 1, tenants in assise may make attornies, and may plead by their bailiffs as heretofore.

By stat. of Carlisle, 15 Ed. 2. stat. 1, parties to fines shall appear personally. The lord chancellor, judges, and barons, may admit attornies in their respective courts, but such power is denied to their clerks and servants.

By 7 Ric. 2. c. 14, persons out of the realm, by the king's license, may make general attornies in writs of præmunire, and those attornies may make attornies under them.

By 4 Hen. 4. c. 18, all attornies shall be examined by the justices, and by their discretions be inrolled; and being of good fame, shall be sworn truly to serve in their office, and especially to make no suit in a foreign county; and if any attorney be found notoriously in fault, he shall forswear the court, and never after be received in any court of the king.

No officer of a lord of a franchise shall be attorney in any plea within the same. Ibid.

By 7 Hen. 4. c. 13, impotent persons may make attornies to traverse an erroneous outlawry.

By 29 Eliz. c. 5, defendants in suits on penal statutes, being bailable, may appear by attorney.

But by 31 Eliz. c. 10, this extends only to subjects, and free denizens, and not to aliens.

By 3 Jac. 1. c. 7, attornies or solicitors shall not be allowed fees to counsel without they produce tickets thereof signed by counsel; and they are to give in true bills to their clients. If they delay the client's suit, or demand more than fees and disbursements, they are to pay costs and treble damages, and be disabled. None shall be admitted attornies or solicitors in any court but persons brought up in that court, or well skilled. And no attorney shall permit another to follow a suit in his name under the penalty of 20*l.*

By 12 Geo. 1. c. 29, attornies or solicitors, convicted of forgery, perjury, or common barratry, acting in any court of record, are to be transported as felons in a summary way. s. 4.

By 2 Geo. 2. c. 23, attornies shall be sworn and admitted by the judges, who are to examine into their capacity before admission.

None shall act as a solicitor unless he take the oath, and be inrolled in the court of equity, where he must be previously examined. Ibid.

None shall act as an attorney or solicitor unless he has served a clerkship of five years, and been admitted, but he may with the consent of an attorney of another court sue out writs in such court. Ibid.

Clerks on the deaths of their masters may be turned over; and attornies and solicitors before admission are to take an oath to de-

No attorney shall have more than two articled clerks at one time: but the prothonotaries and secondary may have three. Ibid.

Sworn attornies, permitting others who are not, to issue out writs in their names, are disabled to practise. Attornies and solicitors are to be inrolled in the proper courts, and a sworn attorney may be admitted a solicitor, and a sworn solicitor in one court of equity may be admitted into any other court. Ibid.

The name of the attorney retained shall be written on every writ; attornies and solicitors shall not bring any action for fees till a month after delivery of bills; and parties may get them taxed in the mean time, and if reduced a sixth part the attorney is to pay the costs of taxation. Ibid.

Any person suing any process as an attorney or solicitor, without being admitted and inrolled, forfeits 50*l.* and is disabled to bring any action to recover his disbursements. Ibid.

This act shall not extend to the six clerks office in chancery, cursitors, the filazers, attornies and clerks in the exchequer, duchy court, or solicitors of the treasury. Ibid.

By 6 Geo. 2. c. 27, attornies of the superior courts, being qualified, may be admitted in inferior courts.

By 12 Geo. 2. c. 13, the not indorsing the attorney's name on warrants upon writs, shall not vitiate the same, for officers may indorse the attornies names upon writs

Attornies and solicitors may use abbreviations in their bills, and the act of 2 Geo. 2. is not to extend to any bill of fees between one solicitor and another. Ibid.

Persons unqualified acting in county courts forfeit 20*l.* and Quakers may be inrolled as attornies on their affirmation. Ibid.

No attorney, while he is in prison, or within the rules of one, shall commence any suit in his own name or another's, on pain of being struck off the roll, and incapacitated to act in future, and any person permitting him to sue in his name shall likewise be struck off the roll, and in like manner incapacitated. But he may carry on suits commenced before his confinement. Ibid.

By 22 Geo. 2. c. 46, persons bound to serve as clerks to attornies or solicitors, are to cause affidavit to be made within three months of the execution of such contracts, which affidavit is to be filed with the proper officer in the respective courts, whose fee thereon is half a crown. None are to be admitted before such affidavit be produced, and openly read in the court where such person shall be admitted an attorney or solicitor.

No attorney or solicitor shall take a clerk after discontinuing business; and clerks shall be employed in their proper business during the time of their contract. Ibid.

But if a clerk is turned over he may serve the remainder of his time, if an affidavit is made of the execution of the second contract, and filed according to the above directions as to the first. Ibid.

Clerks before they are admitted are to make affidavit of having served five years. Sworn attornies or solicitors acting for persons not qualified are to be struck off the roll, and to be committed. Ibid.

Unqualified persons are not to act as attornies, or in the name of one, at sessions, under the penalty of 50*l.* The attornies of the duchy of Lancaster, the great sessions of Wales, or of Chester, Lancaster, or Durham, are excepted. Ibid.

No clerk of the peace, or under-sheriff, shall act as attorney at the quarter sessions for the county, under the penalty of 50*l.* Ibid.

Persons admitted sworn clerks in the six clerks office, or having served five years to one, may be admitted solicitors. Clerks may likewise be turned over, but no sworn clerk may have more than two clerks. Ibid.

By 23 Geo. 2. c. 26, solicitors in the courts of equity may be admitted attornies without fees or stamp.

By 24 Geo. 2. c. 42, attornies and solicitors are to be subject to the processes of the court of conscience for Westminster.

By 34 Geo. 3. c. 14, (which first imposed the duties on articles of clerkship) no clerk shall be admitted unless the indenture be inrolled with an affidavit within six months after the date, and every such clerk, previous to his being permitted to practise, shall make an affidavit of the payment of the duty. s. 2, 3.

If any person not admitted in one of the courts of great sessions in Wales, or counties palatine, shall in his own or any other name, sue out any writ in the courts at Westminster, without being admitted in one of them, he shall forfeit 100*l.* s. 4.

Persons admitted in any court at Westminster, who shall have paid the duty on the articles of clerkship, may be admitted in any of the other courts without payment of any further duty. s. 5.

And persons admitted in any one of the courts of great sessions in Wales, or counties palatine, who shall have paid the duty on articles of clerkship there, may be admitted in any other of the said courts without payment of further duty. s. 6, 7.

Articled clerks having paid the duty shall not be liable again on any new contracts with other masters. s. 8.

Parchment and paper for contracts to be stamped prior to being ingrossed; but only one part need be then stamped, and the duplicate shall be stamped after execution on proof of payment of duty. s. 11.

The usual allowance is to be made for prompt payment of the duty.

See also STAMPS.

An attorney, solicitor, &c. having fees due to him, may detain writings until his just fees are paid: but if there be no fees due to him, the court, on motion, will compel the delivery of them. 1 Lill. 148. Any papers may be detained by an attorney till the money is paid for drawing them; but he cannot detain writings which are delivered to him on a special trust, for the money due to him in that very business, &c. if he doth, a rule may be obtained that he shall deliver them by such a day, or an attachment shall issue against him. Mod. Cas. in Law and Equity 306. The court will make a rule for delivery of writings, when they come to the attorney's hands by way of his business; and when they come to him in any other manner the party must bring his action. 1 Salk. 87.

Attornies have the privilege to sue and be sued only in the courts at Westminster, where they practise: they are not obliged to put in special bail, when defendants; but when they are plaintiffs they may insist upon special bail in all bailable cases. 1 Vent. 299. Wood's Inst. 450. But an attorney of one court may in that court hold an attorney of another court to bail; and attornies shall not be chosen into offices against their will. See Privilege. Stamps.

ATTORNEY OF THE DUCHY COURT OF LANCASTER, is the second officer in that court; and seems for his skill in law to be there placed as assessor to the chancellor, and chosen for some special trust reposed in him, to deal between the king and his tenants. Cowel. Blount.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL. This officer is made by letters patent, and his duty is to exhibit informations, and prosecute for the crown in matters criminal; and to file bills in the Exchequer for any thing concerning the king in inheritance or profits; and others may bring bills against the king's attorney. His proper place in court, upon any special matters of a criminal nature, wherein his attendance is required, is under the judges, on the left hand of the clerk of the crown; but this is only upon solemn and extraordinary occasions; for usually he does not sit there, but within the bar, in the face of the court. Mich. 22 Car. B. R.

ATTORNMENT, (attornamentum, from the Fr. tourner) the acknowledgment of a new lord on the alienation of lands, and the assent or agreement of the tenant to attorn; as, I become tenant to the purchaser. It may be made by payment of a penny rent to the grantee, or assent in writing. Co. Lit. 309.

But by 4 Ann. c. 16, it is enacted, that all grants and conveyances of manors, lands, rents, reversions, &c. by fine, or otherwise, shall be good without the attornment of the tenants of such lands, or of the particular tenant upon whose estate any such reversion, &c. shall be expectant or depending; but notice must be given of the grant to the tenant; before which he shall not be prejudiced by payment of any rent to the grantor, or for breach of the condition for non-payment. s. 9. And by 11 Geo. 2. c. 19, attornments of lands, &c. made by tenants to strangers shall be void, and their landlord's possession not affected thereby: though this shall not extend to vacate any attornment made pursuant to a judgment at law, or with consent of the landlord, or on a forfeited mortgage, &c.

ATTRAPER, (Fr.) taken, or seised. Law Fr. Dict.

AVAGE, or aviage, a rent or payment by tenants of the manor of Writtle in Essex, upon St. Leonard's day, 6th November, for the privilege of pawnage in the lord's woods, viz. for every pig under a year old, an halfpenny; for every yearling pig, one penny; and for every hog above a year old, twopence. Blount.

AUDIENCE COURT, (curia audientiæ Cantuariensis) is a court belonging to the archbishop of Canterbury, having the same authority with the court of arches, though inferior to it in dignity and antiquity. It is held in the archbishop's palace; and in former times the archbishops were wont to try and determine a great many ecclesiastical causes in their own palaces; but before they pronounced their definitive sentence they committed the matter to be argued by men learned in the law, whom they named their auditors: and so in time it grew to one special man, who at this day is called causarum negotiorumque audientiæ Cantuariensis auditor officialis. And to the office of auditor was formerly joined the chancery of the archbishop, which meddleth not with any point of contentious jurisdiction; that is, deciding of causes between party and party, but only such as are of office, and especially as are voluntaria jurisdictionis, as the granting the custody of spiritualties, during the vacancy of bishoprics, institutions to benefices, dispensations, &c. but this is now distinguished from the audience. The auditor of this court anciently by special commission was vicar-general to the archbishop, in which capacity he exercised ecclesiastical jurisdiction of every diocese becoming vacant within the province of Canterbury. 4 Inst. 337. But now the three great offices of official principal of the archbishop, dean or judge of the peculiars, and official of the audience are and have been for a long time past united in one person, under the general name of Dean of the Arches, who keepeth his court in Doctors Commons hall. Johns. 254.

The archbishop of York hath in like manner his court of audience. Johns. 255.

AUDIENDO ET TERMINANDO, a writ, or rather a commission to certain persons, when any insurrection or great riot is committed in any place, for appeasing and punishment thereof. F. N. B. 110. See Oyer and Terminer.

AUDITA QUERELA, is a writ that lies where a defendant against whom judgment is reversed, and who is therefore in danger of execution, or perhaps actually in execution, may be relieved upon good matter of discharge, which has happened since the judgment. 3 Black. 404.

This writ is granted by the lord chancellor to the justices of either bench, willing them to grant summons to the county where the creditor lives, for his appearance before them at a certain day. F. N. B. 102; upon which the justices shall hear the complaint, and do right. 1 Mod. 111.

Thus if the plaintiff hath given the defendant a general release, or if the defendant hath paid the debt to the plaintiff, without entering satisfaction on the record, in these and the like cases, wherein the defendant hath good matter to plead, but hath had no opportunity of pleading it, (either at the beginning of the suit, or since the last continuance) an audita querela lies in the nature of a bill in equity to be relieved against the oppression of the party. Ibid.

It also lies for bail when judgment is obtained against them by scire facias to answer the debt of their principal, and it happens afterwards that the original judgment against their principal is reversed; for here the bail, after judgment had against them, have no opportunity to plead this special matter, and therefore they shall have redress by audita querela. 1 Rol. Abr. 308, which is a writ of a most remedial nature, seems to have been invented, lest in any case there should be an oppressive defect of justice, where a party has a good defence, but by the ordinary forms of law had no opportunity to make it. 3 Black. 405.

But the indulgence now shown by the courts in granting a summary relief upon motion in cases of such evident oppression, has almost rendered useless the writ of audita querela, and driven it quite out of practice. Ibid.

If a statute be acknowledged to two, of which one is an infant, and they make a defeasance, and after sue execution contrary to it, an audita querela shall be brought against both; for it does not appear within the deed that he was an infant; also the deed of an infant is only voidable, and peradventure he will affirm it. 1 Rol. Abr. 312.

AUDITOR, (Lat.) is an officer of the king, or some other great person, who examines yearly the accounts of all under-officers, and makes up a general book, which shows the difference between their receipts and charge, and their several allowances, commonly called allocations; as the auditors of the exchequer take the accounts of those receivers who collect the revenues. 4 Inst. 106. Receivers-general of fee-farm rents, &c. are also termed auditors, and hold their audits for adjusting the accounts of the said rents at certain times and places appointed. And there are auditors assigned by the court to audit and settle accounts in actions of account, and other cases, who are proper judges of the cause, and pleas are made before them, &c. 1 Brownl. 24.

AUDITOR OF THE RECEIPTS, an officer of the exchequer, that files the teller's bills, and having made an entry of them gives the lord treasurer, &c. weekly, a certificate of the money received; he makes debentures to the tellers, before they pay any money, and takes their accounts: he also keeps the black book of receipts, and the treasurer's key of the treasury, and seeth every teller's money locked up in the treasury. 4 Inst. 107.

AUDITORES, is the same with audientes, i. e. the catechumens, or those who were newly instructed in the mysteries of the christian religion before they were admitted to baptism; and auditorium is that place in the church where they stood to hear, and be instructed. It is what we now call navis ecclesia: and in the primitive times the church was so strict in keeping the people together in that place, that the person who went from thence in sermon time was excommunicated. Blount.

AUDITORS OF THE IMPREST, are officers in the exchequer, who have the charge of auditing the great accounts of the king's customs, naval and military expenses, of the mint, &c. and any money imprested to men for his majesty's service. Pract. Excheq. 83.

AUDITORS in Accompt: see Accompt.

AVENAGE, (from the Lat. avena) a certain quantity of oats paid by a tenant to his landlord as a rent, or in lieu of some other duties. Cowel. Blount.

AVENOR, (avenarius, from the Fr. avoine, i. e. oats) is an officer belonging to the king's stables, that provides oats for his horses: he is mentioned 13 Car. 2. cap. 8.

AVENTURÆ, Adventures, or trials of skill at arms, and signifies military exercises on horseback. Cowel. Blount.

AVENTURE, (properly adventure) a mischance causing the death of a man: as where a person is suddenly drowned, or killed by any accident, without felony. Co. Lit. 391.

AVERA, (quasi opera, from the Fr. œuvre and ouvrage, velut operagium) signifies a day's work of a ploughman, formerly valued at 8*d*. It is found in Domesday. 4 Inst. 269.

AVERAGE, (averagium) is commonly used for a contribution that merchants and others make towards their losses, who have their goods cast into the sea for the safety of the ship, or of the other goods and lives of those persons that are in the ship, during the tempest. It is in this sense called average, because it is proportioned and allotted after the rate of every man's goods carried. By the laws of the sea, in a storm, when there is an extreme necessity, the goods, wares, guns, or whatsoever else is on board the ship, may (by consulting the mariners) be thrown overboard by the master, for the preservation of the ship; and it shall be made good by average and contribution. Mod. 297. But if the master takes in more goods than he ought, without leave of the owners and freighters, and a storm ariseth at sea, and part of the freighters goods are thrown overboard, the remaining goods are not subject to average, but the master is to make good the loss out of his own estate: and if the ship's gear or apparel be lost by storm, the same is not within the average. Leg. Rhod.

If goods are cast overboard before half the voyage is performed they are to be estimated at the price they cost; but if they are ejected afterwards, then at the price as the rest are sold at the port of arrival. Leg. Oleron. Where goods are given to pirates by way of composition to save the rest, there shall be average, by the civil law. Moor 297.

There is another species of average called small, or petty average; petty average consists in such charges and disbursements as according to occurrences, and the custom of every place the master necessarily furnishes for the benefit of the ship and cargo, either at the place of loading or unloading, or on the voyage: these charges are ledemanage, or the hire of a pilot for conducting the vessel from one place to another; towage, pilotage, light-money, beaconage, anchorage, bridge-toll, quarantine, river-charges, signals, instructions, passage-money by castles, expenses for digging a ship out of ice when frozen up, that it may be brought into a proper harbour; and at London a custom, the fee paid at Dover pier. 4 Bac. Abr. 621.

A third species of average is that we are accustomed to meet with in bills of lading, paying so much freight for the said goods, with primage or average accustomed: in this sense it signifies a small duty which merchants who send goods in the ships of other men pay to the master, over and above the freight, for his care and attention to the goods so intrusted to him. Ibid.

AVERAGE OF CORN FIELDS, the stubble or remainder of straw and grass left in corn-fields after the harvest is carried away. In Kent it is called the gratten, and in other parts the roughings, &c. Cowel. Blount.

AVER CORN, is a reserved rent in corn, paid by farmers and tenants to religious houses, and signifies, by Somner, corn drawn to the lord's granary by the working cattle of the tenant. It is supposed that this custom was owing to the Saxon cyriac sceat, church-seed, a measure of corn brought to the priest annually on St. Martin's day, as an oblation for the first-fruits of the earth, under which title the religious had corn-rent paid yearly, as appears by an inquisition of the estate of the abbey of Glastonbury, A. D. 1201. Cowel. Blount.

AVER LAND seems to have been such lands as the tenants did plough and manure, cum averiis suis, for the proper use of a monastery, or the lords of the soil. Mon. Angl. Cowel. Blount.

AVER PENNY, (or average penny) money paid towards the king's averages or carriages, or to be freed thereof. Rastal.

AVER SILVER, a custom or rent formerly so called. Cowel.

AVERIA, cattle. Spelman deduces the word from the Fr. ouvrer, to work, as if chiefly working cattle; though it seems to be more probably from avoir, to have or possess; the word sometimes including all personal estate, as catalla did all goods and chattels. This word is used for oxen or horses of the plough; and in a general sense any cattle.

AVERIIS CAPTIS IN WITHERNAM, a writ for the taking of cattle to his use who hath cattle unlawfully distrained by another, and driven out of the county where they were taken, so that they cannot be replevied by the sheriff. Reg. Orig. 82. If the cattle are put into any strong place in the same county, the sheriff may take the posse comitatus and break into it, to make the replevin: but when they are driven out of the county he hath no authority to pursue them. Vide 1 & 2 Ph. & Mar. c. 12.

AVERIUM, the best live beast, due to the lord as an heriot on the death of his tenant.

AVERMENT, (verificatio, from the Fr. averer, i. e. verificare, testari,) is an offer of the defendant to make good or justify an exception pleaded in abatement or bar of the plaintiff's action: and it signifies the act, as well as the offer of justifying the exception; and not only the form, but the matter thereof. Co. Lit. 362. Averment is either general, or particular; general, which concludes every plea, &c. or is in bar, or in a replication, or other pleadings, containing matter affirmative, and ought to be with these words, 'and this he is ready to verify,' &c. Particular averment is when the life of tenant for life, or of tenant in tail, &c. is averred. Ibid.

AVERRARE, to carry goods in a waggon, or upon loaded horses, a duty required of some customary tenants. Cowel. Blount.

AUGEA, a cistern for water. Cowel. Blount.

AUGMENTATION, (augmentatio) the name of a court erected 27 H. 8. for determining suits and controversies relating to monasteries and abbey lands. The intent of this court was, that the king might be justly dealt with touching the profits of such religious houses as were given to him by act of parliament. It took its name from the augmentation of the revenues of the crown by the suppression of religious houses; and the office of augmentation, which hath many curious records, remains to this day, though the court hath been long since dissolved. Terms de Ley 68.

AVISAMENTUM, advice, or counsel. Cowel. Blount.

AULA, i. e. a court-baron. Aula ecclesiæ is that which is now termed navis ecclesiæ. Ibid.

AULNAGE. See ALNAGE.

AUMONE, (Fr. aumosne, alms) Tenure in aumone is where lands are given in alms to some church, or religious house, upon condition that a service or prayers shall be offered at certain times for the repose of the donor's soul. Brit. 164. Cowel. Blount.

AUNCEL-WEIGHT, (quasi hand sale weight, or from ansa, the handle of the balance) an ancient manner of weighing, by the hanging of scales or hooks at each end of a beam or staff, which by lifting up in the middle with one's finger or hand, discovered the equality or difference between the weight at one end, and the thing weighed at the other. This weighing, being subject to great deceit, was prohibited by several statutes, and the even balance commanded in its stead. 25 Ed. 3. st. 5. c. 9. 27 Ed 3. st. 2. c. 10. 34 Ed. 3. c. 5. And see 8 H. 6. c. 5, and 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 12, though in some parts of England the steelyards are still used.

AUNCIATUS, a word signifying antiquated. Cowel. Blount.

AVOIDANCE, in the general signification, is when a benefice is void of an incumbent, in which sense it is opposed to plenarty. Avoidances are either in fact, as by death of the incumbent, or in law, and may be by cession, deprivation, resignation, &c. In the first case,

Where the avoidance is by the death of the incumbent, or by his being made a bishop, in such cases the patron is to take notice of it at his peril; and the six months in which he is to present another shall be accounted from the death of the one, and the creation of the other; but if the avoidance be by resignation, which is the act of the party himself, or by deprivation, which is the act of the law, in both these cases the patron must have notice, and the six months shall be accounted from the time of the notice, and not from the resignation or deprivation. Dyer 327.

Where the patron himself took notice of a deprivation, which was obtained at his own prosecution, for not reading the thirty-nine articles; yet in such case lapse shall not incur without an actual notice of the deprivation given to him by the bishop: for it is he, and no other person, who is required by the law to give notice, and it must not be a general notice, but it must be particular, and the cause be expressed for which he was deprived. 6 Rep. 29.

Where the bishop refuseth to institute a clerk he must give notice of such refusal to the patron himself, if he is within that county where the church is become void; but if he is not in that county, then notice must be given at the door of that church; but where it is doubtful who is patron, and upon jus patronatus awarded it is found that such a one is patron, though it may happen he is not the true patron, yet if he gives him notice, and no presentation is made within six months after such notice, the bishop may collate to the church; and though that collation shall not bind the true patron, yet the bishop shall be excused from being a disturber. 1 Leon. 32.

There are avoidances by act of parliament, wherein there must be a judicial sentence pronounced to make the living void. If a man hath one benefice, with cure, &c. and take another with cure, without any dispensation to hold two benefices, in such case the first is void by the act 21 Hen. 8. c. 13, if it was above the value of 8*l.* During an avoidance it is said that the house and glebe of the benefice are in abeyance: but by stat. 28 Hen. 8. cap. 11, the profits arising during an avoidance, are given to the next incumbent towards payment of the first fruits; though the ordinary may receive the profits to provide for the service of the church, and shall be allowed the charges of supplying the cure, &c. for which purpose the churchwardens of the parish are usually appointed. The next avoidance of a church may be granted by deed, where the church is full: if a grant be made of the next avoidance when it shall happen, and the church is void at that time, this will make the grant void as to that very avoidance, but it may be good for the next turn after that.

And the distinction which hath obtained is this: if it come in question whether the church be full of an incumbent or not, the same shall be tried by the certificate of the bishop, who best knows of the institution; but if the issue to be tried be, whether the church be void or not, the same shall be tried by a jury at the common law, unless the issue to be tried be upon some special act of avoidance, for then the same shall be tried by the certificate of the bishop, so as the special cause of the avoidance be spiritual. Gib. 793. Hughes, c. 13. 1 Burn E. L. 78. And see 25 Ed. 3. st. 3. c. 8.

If a clerk is instituted to a benefice of the yearly value of 8*l.* and before induction accepts another benefice with cure, and is instituted, the first benefice is void by the statute 21 H. 8. c. 13. for he who is instituted, only, is properly said to have accepted a benefice within the words of the act. 4 Rep. 78.

The patron granted the next avoidance to two jointly and severally; adjudged, that this grant is not good, because an interest cannot be divided; so where there was a grant of the next avoidance to three; habendum to them and to each of them jointly and severally, the first presented the third, and adjudged good; but if the bishop had refused to admit the presentee, he might have failed in a quare impedit, because the severance in the habendum is void in law; but it is otherwise in case of an authority, for that may be divided. Golds. 142.

But if he is inducted into a second benefice, the first is void in facto et jure, and not voidable only, quoad the patron, and until he presents another; and in such case the patron ought to take notice of the avoidance at his peril, and present within the six months. Cro. Car. 253.

A grant of the next avoidance is no more than a chattel, and goes to executors. Right Cle g. 64.

AVOIRDUPOIS, or averdupois, (Fr. avoir du poids, i. e. habere pondus, aut justi esse ponderis) signifies a weight different from that which is called troy weight, which contains but twelve ounces in the pound, whereas this hath sixteen ounces: and in this respect it is probably so called, because it is of greater weight than the other. It also signifieth such merchandizes as are weighed by this weight; and is mentioned in divers statutes, as 9 Ed. 3. 27 Ed. 3. c. 10. 2 R. 2. c. 1. Averium ponderis, full weight, or avoirdupois. Cart. 3 Ed. 2.

AVOWEE, of a church benefice. See Advowee.

AVOWRY, (Fr. advouerie) is where a man takes a distress for rent or other thing, and the party on whom taken sues forth a replevin, then the taker shall justify his plea for what cause he took it; and if in his own right, he must shew the same, and avow the taking; but if he took it in right of another, he must make cognizance of the taking, as bailiff or servant to the person in whose right he took the same. Terms de Ley 70. 2 Lill. 454.

The avowant shall recover his damages and costs, for by 21 Hen. 8. c. 19. it is enacted, that "if in any replegiare for rents, &c. the "avowry, cognizance, or justification be found "for the defendant, or the plaintiff be non-"suit, &c. the defendant shall recover such "damages and costs as the plaintiff should "have had, if he had recovered. And by "17 Car. 2. c. 7. When a plaintiff shall "be nonsuit before issue in any suit of replevin, &c. removed or depending in any "of the courts at Westminster, the defendant making suggestion in the nature of an "avowry for rent, the court on prayer shall "award a writ to inquire of the sum in arrear, and the value of the distress, &c. "Upon return whereof the defendant shall recover the arrears, if the distress amounts "to that value, or else the value of the distress with costs; and where the distress is "not found to the value of the arrears, the "party may distrain for the residue. And "if the plaintiff be nonsuit, discontinue, or "have judgment against him, the defendant "shall recover double costs." 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. s. 22.

AURES, a punishment by the Saxon laws of cutting off the ears, inflicted on those who robbed churches, or were guilty of any other theft. Fleta, lib. 1. c. 38. par. 10. And this punishment also extended to many other crimes as well as theft. Upton de Militari Officio, page 140.

AURICULARIUS, a secretary, Mon. Angl. p. 120.

AURUM REGINÆ, the queen's gold, a duty anciently imposed to augment the queen's income. 1 Black. 221.

AUSCULTARE. Formerly, persons were appointed in monasteries to hear the monks read, and direct them how, and in what manner they should do it with a graceful tone or accent, to make an impression on their hearers, which was required before they were admitted to read publicly in the church; and this was called auscultare, viz. to read or recite a lesson.—Quicunque lecturus vel cantaturus est aliquid in monasterio, si necesse habeat, ab eo, (viz. Cantore) priusquam incipiat, debet auscultare. Lanfrancus in Decretis pro ordine Benedict. c. 5.

AUSTURCUS, and Osturcus, a goshawk; from whence we usually call a faulkoner, who keeps that kind of hawks, an ostringer. In ancient deeds there has been reserved, as a rent to the lord, unum austurcum. Cowel. Blount.

AUTER DROIT, is where persons sue or are sued in another's right; as executors, administrators, &c. 2 Black. 177.

AUTERFOITS ACQUIT, is a plea by a criminal that he was heretofore acquitted of the same treason or felony. 3 Inst. 213. There is also plea of auterfoits attaint, and auterfoits convict; that he was heretofore attainted or convicted of the same felony. But in appeal of death, auterfoits acquit, or auterfoits attaint, upon indictment of the same death, is no plea. H. P. C. 244. But in other cases where a person is attainted, it is to no purpose that he should be attainted a second time. And conviction of manslaughter, where clergy is admitted thereon, will bar any subsequent prosecution for the same death. 2 Hawk. P. C. 377.

AUTER VIE, tenant pur, where a man holds an estate by the life of another, he is usually called tenant pur auter vie. 2 Black. 120.

AUTHORITY, that power of acting which one man has, being transferred to another, is called an authority; and this the law allows of, for as a contract is no more than the consent of a man's mind to a thing, if such consent or concurrence appears; it would be very unreasonable to oblige him to be present at the execution of every contract, since it may be as well performed by any other person delegated for that purpose. 1 Bac. Ab. tit. Auth.

But such delegation or authority must be by deed, that it may appear that the attorney or substitute, had a commission or power to represent the party; also that it may appear that the authority was well preserved. Co. Lit. 48. b. 2 Rolls. Abr. 8. Salk. 96.

An authority may be delegated by deed indented, though the attorney be not party to the deed; because the attorney takes nothing by the deed, but has only a naked authority delegated to him; and therefore, since a man may take an estate in remainder, though he is no party to the deed, a fortiori one not party to the deed may receive a naked authority or power by it. 2 Rol. Abr. 8, 9.

One, who has an authority to do any act for another, must execute it himself, and cannot transfer it to another; for this being a trust and confidence reposed in the party cannot be assigned to a stranger whose ability and integrity were not so well thought of by him for whom the act was to be done. 9 Co. 77. b. 1 Rol. Abr. 330.

The authority given by letter of attorney must be executed during the life of the person that gives it; because the letter of attorney is to constitute the attorney by representative for such a purpose, and therefore can continue in force only during the life of me that am to be represented. 2 Rol. Abr. 9. Co. Lit. 52.

But if any corporation aggregate, as a mayor and commonalty, or dean and chapter, make a feoffment and letter of attorney to deliver seisin, this authority does not determine by the death of the mayor or dean, but the attorney may well execute the power after their death: because the letter of attorney is an authority from the body aggregate, which subsists after the death of the mayor or dean, and therefore may be represented by their attorney; but if the dean or mayor be named by their own private name, and die before livery, or be removed, livery after seems not good. Co. Lit. 52. 2 Rol. Abr. 12.

And where an interest is coupled with an authority, there it cannot be countermanded or determined. And. 1 Dyer 190.

If a man devise that his executors shall sell his land, this gives but a naked authority; and the lands, till the sale is made, descend to the heir at law; and in this case all must join in the sale; and if one die, it being a bare authority, cannot survive to the rest. Co. Lit. 112. b. 113. a. 181. b.

But if a man by will give land to executors to be sold, and one of them die, the survivors may sell; for the trust being coupled with an interest, shall survive together with it. Co. Lit. 113. b. 181. b.

AUTUMN, is the decline of the summer. And Lindewood tells us, in the following lines, when the several seasons of the year begin. Cowel. Blount.

Dat Clemens Hiemem, dat Petrus ver Cathedratus,

AUTUMNALIA, those fruits of the earth which are ripe in autumn or harvest.

AUXILIUM AD FILIUM MILITEM FACIENDUM ET FILIAM MARITANDAM, an ancient writ formerly directed to the sheriff of every county where the king or other lord had any tenants, to levy of them an aid towards the knighting of a son, and the marrying of a daughter. F. N. B. 82. See Aid.

AUXILIUM CURIÆ, a precept or order of court for the citing or convening of one party, at the suit and request of another, to warrant some thing. Kennet's Paroch. Antiq. 477.

AUXILIUM FACERE ALICUI IN CURIA REGIS. To be another's friend and solicitor in the king's court; an office undertaken by some courtiers for their dependants in the country. Paroch Antiq. 126.

AUXILIUM REGIS, the king's aid, or money levied for the king's use, and the public service; as where taxes are granted by parliament. Cowel. Blount.

AUXILIUM VICECOMITI, a customary aid or duty anciently payable to sheriffs, out of certain manors, for the better support of their offices. Cowel. Blount.

AWAIT, seems to signify what we now call way-laying, or lying in wait to execute some mischief. Stat. 13 R. 2. Stat. 2. c. 1. It is ordained that no charter of pardon shall be allowed before any justice for the death of a man slain by await, or malice prepensed, &c.

AWARD, (from the Fr. agard) An award is the judgment and arbitration of one or more persons, at the request of two parties who are at variance, for ending the matter in dispute without public authority: and may be called an award, because it is imposed on both parties to be observed by them. Dictum quod ad custodiendum seu observandum partibus imponitur. Spelm.

The submission to an award may be by bond, covenant, or by an assumpsit or promise; or without all this, by a bare agreement to refer the matter to such a person or persons. 10 Rep. 131. Dyer 270.

If the submission be without deed, it may be revoked without deed, and the party shall lose nothing, for ex nuda submissione non oritur actio. 1 Bac. Ab. tit. Arb.

If the submission be by deed, it is of its own nature countermandable, though made irrevocable by the express words of the deed, for the arbitrators being constituted and put in the place of the parties by their consent to act for them, they can no longer act, than while they have such consent. Ibid.

But where a man obliges himself to stand to an award, if the party revokes it, according to his power, he hath forfeited his obligation, for the making the award becomes impossible by his own default, and therefore the obligation is simple; but if it be without obligation, he forfeits nothing. Ibid.

There is, however, an instance in 2 Keb. 10, 20, 24. and 231. of an action on the case, being maintained for the countermand of a parol submission; and there can be no doubt but that a parol submission amounts to a promise to perform.

If several plaintiffs or defendants submit themselves to an award, one cannot revoke the submission without the other, for joint acts are considered as the acts of one person, and there can be no revocation without the act of that person that made the submission. 28 Hen. 6. c. 6. Brownl. 62.

If a feme sole submits to arbitration, and afterwards marries, this is a revocation of the submission, and if it be by bond, the bond is forfeited. 2 Keb. 865. Jones 388.

And a submission may be made a rule of court, pursuant to the statute 9 & 10 Will. 3. c. 15. and it is said, that although the submission be by bond, yet the party may have it made a rule of court; in which case it is said he may proceed on the bond, and likewise have an attachment for not performing the award. Salk. 73. pl. 12. Sid. 54. Raym. 85.

By this stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 13. it is enacted, that "submissions to awards, by "agreement of the parties, may be made a "rule of any of his majesty's courts of record; "and on a rule of court thereupon, the par-"ties shall be finally concluded by such ar-"bitrament: and, in case of disobedience "thereto, the party refusing to perform the "same, shall be subject to the penalties of "contemning a rule of court, &c. unless it "appears on oath that such award was pro-"cured by corruption or other undue means, "when it shall be set aside: so as complaint "thereof be made to the court before the last "day of the next term, after made and pub-"lished."

The limitation under this stat. to the second term is confined merely to such objections as affect the conduct of the arbitrators: but objections which arise on the face of the award itself, may be made at any time. 2 Burr. 701. Burnet 56, 57.

Where the submission limits no time for the making of the award it shall be understood to be within convenient time, and if in such a case the party request the arbitrators to make an award, and they do not, a revocation afterwards will be no breach of the submission. 3 Keble 745.

An award can only be binding and effectual amongst those who are parties, therefore if a man submit for himself and partner all matters in difference between the partnership and another, the partner submitting shall be bound to perform the award, but the other shall not, because he is a stranger to the award. 2 Mod. 228.

So if the parson on the one hand, and some of the parishioners on the other, in behalf of themselves, and the rest of the inhabitants of the parish, but without the authority of the rest, submit to arbitration by bond, the parishioners submitting, shall alone be answerable for a breach of the award by any of the other parishioners. Lit. 30. Hetl. 4.

But if several persons on the one part, and several on the other, submit generally to any award, the arbitrators have not only power to determine matters between them jointly, but severally and distinctly also; and an award between one only, of the one side, and another on the other side, is good, for this is not doing less than the commission warrants, since there is an authority in it to determine matters distinctly between them for the submission is of all matters, so that it contains as well all things severally between each of them, as jointly between them all, and perhaps there may be no cause of award between the others. 1 Bac. Abr. tit. Arb. (C.)

—— Of the award itself.] If an award be made of any other thing than what is contained in the submission, it is void; for no acts are my own, or binding to me, unless done by me or by commission from me. Plow. 396. Dyer 242.

If arbitrators award to do an act to a stranger, this is good; for the stranger is put by the arbitrators in the place of the party, and they have power to award this act, since it is not impossible or unequal, and it is relating to the submission. Mo. 3, 359. 10 Co. 131. 3 Leon. 62. 1 Rol. Abr. 248. Hard. 46. 1 Leon. 316.

But an award that an act should be done by a stranger, is void; because he is not within the submission. Hard. 46.

An award may be good, though made of less than is contained in the submission; as if the submission be of all actions, trespasses, demands and controversies, and the award be made of some only, this is good; for no more shall be supposed to be made known to the arbitrator: and if there be other causes of action in being, and they be made known to the arbitrator, they must be shewn on the other side; and this as well where the submission is conditional by ita quod, as where it is absolute; for the award being made de præmissis shall be supposed to settle all things. Hob. 49. 8 Co. 98. Cro. Jac. 278. 1 Sand. 32. 1 Brownl. 63. 2 Brownl. 310. 1 Sid. 12. Dyer 216, 242. Hard. 45.

An award of one particular thing for the ending of an hundred matters in difference, is sufficient; as of a specific sum of money for arrears of rent, and for repairs. 1 Lev. 132. 1 Keb. 738.

The awarding of costs is incidental to the power of an arbitrator: the provision therefore on the reference, that the costs shall abide the event of the award, is a restriction of the power which he necessarily hath of giving costs at his election. 2 Term Rep. 644.

And the award of costs to be taxed by the proper officer, doth not include the costs of the reference, but is merely confined to the costs of the action. 1 Hen. Black. 213.

As an award is in nature of a judgment, it ought to be wholly decisive, for if it doth not determine the matter, it becomes a new controversy; therefore if the arbitrators award a bond for quiet enjoyment of lands, without appointing a certain sum, or direct one party to give to the other a good security for a certain sum of money, without saying what security, or to pay for so many quarters of malt sold according to the market price or without ascertaining what that price was, this is a void award, and the party is not obliged to give bond to the value of the land; for then the sense of the award must be supplied by averment; now if it hath the credit of a judgment, there can be no interpretation made of the award, but by the words of the award itself; for if it receives its meaning from any matters out of the award, the mind of the arbitrators is only guessed at, and not expressed; but the parties intended to be obliged only by what the arbitrators themselves declare to be their award, and the bond to be according to the value, they cannot assign their power to any person to assess the value. 5 Co. 77. Cro. Eliz. 432. 1 Rol. Abr. 263. Moor 359. 1 Rol. Rep. 271. Dyer 242. Yelv. 78.

But an award in the alternative, that the party shall do one thing or another, is not liable to the objection of uncertainty for which he has domain of the things he has performed the award; as if the award be, that he shall deliver up to the other party a certain deed, or pay him 50*l.*; and such an award in the alternative seems to be the best mode of compelling a party to exert himself to procure the performance of what is not immediately in his power. Kyd, 137.

An award made only on one side, without any thing on the other, is void in law: as that one shall pay or give bond for money to the other party, and he do nothing for it: but if it be to give bond to pay, or to pay a debt, and that the other shall be discharged of the debt, &c. this is good: so where it is that one party shall pay money to the other, and then the other shall release all actions to him. 8 Rep. 72, 98.

Thus in case of a trespass submitted, the arbitrators award that one shall pay the other 3*l.* this is void, because only on one side; for it is not said for what, and so the trespass is not discharged, and then the other party hath no advantage by the award; but if it were awarded de et super præmissis, it would be well enough; likewise if the award had been that he shall pay 3*l.* for a trespass, it had been good, and yet one only was to do an act, but then the trespass by that award had been discharged. 1 Rol. Abr. 253, 254. Hob. 49.

If the arbitrators award a thing impossible ex natura rei, it is void: as if they award a sum of money to be paid at a day past, it is void, 8 Ed. 4. 1. b. But if they award a thing which cannot be done, but is not in the nature of the act itself contradictory or repugnant; this may be a good award; for there is no construction to be made of the award, but by the words thereof. 1 Rol. Abr. 248.

An award to levy a fine is good; for though it is an act of the court, yet, by the law and public justice of the kingdom, it is not to be refused to any man; but if the award be to command the justices to do it, this is no good award; for the parties in effect pray leave to agree from the king himself, which is quite different from the nature of a command. 1 Rol. Abr. 249.

An award to pay so much apud domum J. S. good; for he is not bound to pay it in the house, but as near as he can to it, or it shall be intended a common inn; and if the party will not let him pay there, it has been said that the endeavour is sufficient; for they cannot award any thing that will make the party a trespasser. 1 Rol. Abr. 249. 1 Rol. Rep. 6. Cro. Car. 226. 2 Bulst. 39. 3 Lev. 153. An award that one of the parties shall do a thing out of his power, as to deliver up a deed which is in the custody of J. S. is void. 12 Mod. 585. If an arbitrator awards a thing against law, this is void. 1 Rol. Abr. 249. And a party is not to be made a judge in his own cause by award. 1 Salk. 71. And the award must be final. 1 Bac. Ab. tit. Ar.

——— how enforced.] The submission to arbitrators being made a rule of court, an attachment is granted against the party refusing to perform the award, as for a contempt of that court of which the submission is a rule. 1 Bac. Ab. tit. Arb. (H.)

The attachment in this case is in the nature of a civil execution, and therefore cannot be executed on a Sunday, but it is so far criminal, that the motion for it cannot be grounded on the affirmation of a quaker. Ibid.

But if the party dies, there is no remedy by attachment against his representatives, for the contempt dies with him. 2 Vern. 444.

The course of proceeding in order to obtain an attachment, is this: the award must be tendered to the party against whom it is intended to move, and if he refuse to accept it, affidavit of the due execution of the award, and of such tender and refusal must be made, and on that, an application to the court to make the order of nisi prius a rule of court; a copy of this rule must then be served on the party refusing to accept the award: if he still refuse to accept it, an affidavit must be made of personal service of the rule and of the disobedience to it, and then upon application grounded upon that affidavit, an attachment will be entered. Kyd. 216.

But it seems that where a reference is submitted to, under an order of the court of Chancery, the proper motion is not for an attachment, but that the party refusing to perform the award should stand committed: and notice of such motion must be served personally, and not on the clerk in court. 3 Bro. Ch. Rep. 361.

Where the award is to pay a sum of money, it is said that a bill in equity to compel performance, is improper, but where it is to do any thing in specie, as for the conveyance of an estate, or the like, a court of equity will sometimes lend the aid of its decrees to enforce the execution of it. And a bill in general, will lie for performance, either where the award hath been made, under a submission entered into by order of the court, or where, though the submission be voluntary, or the award defective in circumstances, the parties have long acquiesced in it, or it has been in part executed. 3 Peere Wms. 189, 190. 1 Ch. Rep. 86. 1 Atk. 62.

But a bill in equity, will not lie to carry into execution, an award in a voluntary submission, unless there has been an acquiescence in it by the parties to the submission on an agreement by them afterwards to have it executed. 1 Atk. 62.

When an award is put in suit at law, no extrinsic circumstances, nor any matter of fact dehors can be given in evidence to impeach it; if it be open therefore to any objection of this kind, the defendant must apply for relief, either to a court of equity by bill, or if the submission has been made a rule of any court of law, to the summary and equitable jurisdiction of that court, of which such submission has been made a rule. 2 Wils. 148.

These objections being in general founded on the mistakes or misconduct of the arbitrators who are judges chosen by the party himself, are received by the courts at first with a degree of caution and reserve, though if made out to their satisfaction, relief is certainly afforded. 2 Vez. 315. 1 Atk. 64. 1 Salk. 731.

Therefore if it appears, on a bill in equity to set aside an award, that the arbitrators went upon a plain mistake, either as to the law or the fact, the same is an error appearing on the face of the award, and is sufficient to set it aside. 2 Vern. 705.

So if the arbitrators have been guilty of gross fraud, partiality, or corruption, a bill may be filed in equity to set aside the award. 2 Atk. 64, 155. 2 Vern. 251, 315, 485, 514. Amb. 245.

If a bill to set aside an award for partiality or corruption, be filed against the arbitrators, those charges must not only be denied by way of averment in pleading the award, but such plea must be also supported by an answer, shewing the arbitrators to have been incorrupt and impartial. 2 Atk. 396, 50. Mitf. 209.

If a bill is filed to have the benefit of, or to impeach an award, and the arbitrators are made parties, not charged with partiality, they may demur to the whole bill, as well to discovery as relief, for the plaintiff can have no decree against them, nor can he read their answer against the other defendants. 2 Vern. 380. Mitf. 142.

But where an award has been impeached, on the ground of gross misconduct in the arbitrators, and they have been made parties to the suit, the court has gone so far as to order them to pay the costs, and therefore in such a case, it seems probable that a demurrer to the bill would not have been allowed. Mitf. 209.

A bill in equity will not lie against an arbitrator for a discovery of the grounds upon which he made his award, or of any fact which may have come to his knowledge from the confidence reposed in him as such arbitrator. 3 Atk. 644.

On a bill in equity to set aside an award, the court will not let the party go into any legal objections, except for partiality and corruption: but if the bill is for an account, and prays to set aside an award, there in order to let in such account, the plaintiff may make legal objections. Amb. 245.

AWM or AUME, (Teut. ohm. i. e. cadus vel mensura) a measure of Rhenish wine, containing forty gallons; mentioned in 1 Jac. 1. c. 36. and 12 Car. 2. c. 4. Cowel. Blount.

AXE and AXEN, comes from the Saxon verb axian, to demand, and from hence we have our English word ask. Cowel.

AYEL and BESAIEL. See titles Aile and Besayle.

AZALDUS, signifies a poor horse or jade. Cowel. Blount.

BACA, a hook or link of iron, or staple. Cowel. Blount.

BACCINIUM, or BACINA, a bason or vessel to hold water to wash the hands Ibid.

BACHELERIA, the commonalty as distinguished from baronage. Ibid.

BACHELOR, the most probable derivation of the feudal word bachelor, is from bas and chevalier, an inferior knight, and thence latinized into the barbarous word baccalaureus. Ducange. Buc.

And it is somewhat remarkable, that whilst this feudal word has long been appropriated to single men, another feudal term of higher degree, viz. baron, should in legal language, be applied to those who are married. Christian's note on 1 Black. 404.

The word bachelor is used in 13 R. 1. and signifies the same with knight-bachelor, which is the most ancient, though the lowest order of knighthood amongst us. Cowel. Blount. 1 Black. 404.

By 3 E. 4. c. 5. it is a simple knight, and not knight banneret, or knight of the Bath.

Also in the universities, the lowest graduates, are styled bachelors of arts, which is the first degree taken by students, before they come to greater dignity.

BACKBERINDE, (Sax.) signifieth bearing upon the back, or about a man. Bracton useth it for a sign or circumstance of theft apparent, which the civilians call furtum manifestum; for, dividing furtum into manifestum & non manifestum, he defineth the former thus; furtum vero manifestum est, ubi latro deprehensus est seisitus de aliquo latrocinio, scil. handhabend, & backerind, & insecutus fuerit per aliquem cujus res illa fuerit. Bract. lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 32. Cowel. Blount

BACKING OF WARRANTS, is the signing of an authority on the back thereof, by a magistrate of a different county from that mentioned in the body thereof, empowering the officer to execute the same in such other county. see 23 Geo. 2. c. 26. 24 Geo. 2. c. 55. and 13 Geo. 3. c. 31. under title ESCAPE.

BACTILE, a candlestick properly so called, when formerly made ex baculo of wood, or a stick. Cowel. Blount.

BADGER, (from the Fr. bagage, a bundle, and thence is derived bagagier, a carrier of goods) signifies with us one that buys corn or victuals in one place, and carries them to another to sell and make profit by them. Cowel. Blount,

BAG, an uncertain quantity of goods and merchandize, from three to four hundred. Lex Mercat'.

BAGA, a bag or purse. Cowel. Blount.

BAGAVEL, the citizens of Exeter had granted to them by charter from K. Edw. 1, a collection of a certain tribute or toll upon all manner of wares brought to that city to be sold, towards the paving of the streets, repairing of the walls, and maintenance of the city, which was commonly called in old English begavel, bethugavel, and chippinggavel. Ibid.

BAHADUM, a chest or coffer; it is mentioned in Fleta, lib. 2. c. 21.

BAJARDOUR, (Lat. bajulator) a bearer of any weight or burden. Cowel. Blount.

BAIL, ballium, (from the Fr bailler, which comes of the Greek Βάλλειν, and signifies to bail or to deliver into hands) is used in our common law for the freeing or setting at liberty of one arrested or imprisoned upon action, either civil or criminal, on surety taken for his appearance at a day and place certain. Bract. lib. 3. tract 2. cap. 8.

The person bailed, is supposed to continue in their friendly custody, instead of going to gaol, and therefore the bail may keep the person committed to them in their custody, for their indemnity. 4 Inst. 178, 179.

Or if he be at large, they may re-seize him, and bring him before a justice, to find new bail, or to be committed to prison, and this they may do upon a Sunday, so they may detain him in safe custody, remaining with him there, until by render, or habeas corpus, he can be turned over to the proper prison. Hale P. C. 96. Mod. Cas. 231, 247.

1. Bail in civil cases.] With respect to bail in civil cases it is to be observed, that there is both common and special bail: common bail is in actions of small concern (under the amount of 10*l.*) and it is called common, because any sureties in that case are taken; whereas in causes of greater weight, as actions upon bonds, or specialty, or other matters where the debt amounts to 10*l.* special bail or surety may be taken. 4 Inst. 179.

By stat. 23 Hen. 6. c. 9. sheriffs are to let to bail persons by them arrested by force of any writ, in any personal action, upon reasonable sureties, having sufficient within the county to keep their days in such place, &c. as the writs require.

And where the defendant has been arrested and discharged out of custody, upon giving a bail bond to the sheriff, he must at the return of the writ to discharge such bond, appear thereto, by putting in special bail, or as it is termed, bail above, so called in contradistinction to the sheriffs bail, or bail below, nor can he render himself in discharge of such bond after the return of the writ, without first putting in bail above. 5 Burr. 2689. But he may voluntarily surrender himself to the sheriff before the return of the writ.

If at the return of the writ the plaintiff dislike the security taken by the sheriff, and does not take an assignment of the bail bond, he may have the defendant brought up, by ruling the sheriff in the first instance to return the writ, and upon a return of cepi corpus, by ruling him in the next place to bring in the body: the intent of which is, to compel the sheriff to put in good bail above, which if not done in due time, the court on motion will grant an attachment against the sheriff, the consequence of which is, generally payment by the sheriff of the debt and costs, who seeks his remedy over against the officer, by whom the defendant was arrested, or his sureties, who have their remedy over against the principal and his bail.

But if the plaintiff take an assignment of the bail bond, though the bail is insufficient, yet the sheriff is not to be amerced. 1 Salk. 99. And by stat. 4 Ann. c. 16. s. 20. the plaintiff may now, under such assignment, sue in his own name.

By 43 Geo. 3. c. 46, persons arrested on mesne process, instead of giving bail, may deposit with the sheriff, the sum indorsed on the writ, with 10*l.* to answer costs, which deposit shall be paid into court, and on the defendant's perfecting bail be re-paid to him; or on bail not being put in, be paid over to the plaintiffs by order of the court. s. 3.

By stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 4. The judges of the courts at Westminster have power to appoint commissioners in every county to take recognisances of bail, in causes depending in their courts; and to make such rules for justifying the bail as they shall think fit, and the cognizees, unless they live in London or Westminster, or within 10 miles, may justify before commissioners; in the country, also, any judge of assise in his circuit, may take bails.

And by 43 Geo. 3. c. 46. defendants in custody on mesne process, after the return thereof, may on notice, justify bail before one of the judges in vacation. s. 6.

By 21 Jac. 1. cap. 26. enacts, that it is felony without benefit of clergy, to acknowledge, or procure to be acknowledged, any bail in the name of another person, not privy or consenting thereto, provided that it shall not corrupt the blood, or take away dower.

Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. cap. 4. s. 4. enacts, that any person representing or personating another before commissioners appointed to take bail, shall be adjudged guilty of felony.

By 12 Geo. 1. c. 29. 5 Geo. 2. c. 27. and 19 Geo. 3. c. 70. none shall be held to special bail on process out of any court, where the cause of action doth not amount to 10*l.* or upwards; and an affidavit is to be made of the cause of action. And by 43 Geo 3. c. 46. no person shall be arrested on process of any court for a cause of action not originally sufficient to require bail. s. 1.

In actions of battery, trespass, slander, trover, or the like, though the plaintiff is like to recover large damages, special bail is not to be had, unless by order of the court, or one of the judges thereof, and the process is marked for special bail: nor is it required in actions of account, or of covenant, except it be to pay money; nor against heirs or executors, or administrators, for the debt of the testator, unless they have wasted the testator's goods. 1 Danv. Abr. 681. Nor against an attorney or officer of the court. Mod. Rep. 10.

Neither is an executor, administrator, or heir, upon the removal of a cause out of an inferior court, obliged to put in bail. 2 Lev. 204. 1 Sid. 418. 1 Lev. 945, 268. 2 Jones 82. 1 Salk. 98. S. P. cont. Lit. Rep. 81.

But if there be a devastavit suggested, which can only be on an action of debt on a judgment, they must find special bail. 1 Lev. 145. 1 Sid. 63. 1 Salk. 98.

If baron and feme are sued, the husband must put in bail for both, but if the husband does not appear upon the arrest, the wife must file common bail, before she can be discharged; for otherwise the plaintiff could not proceed to obtain judgment. Golds. 127. Cro. Eliz. 370. Cro. Jac. 445. Style 475. 1 Mod. 8. 6 Mod. 17, 105.

In all actions brought in B. R. upon any penal law, the defendant is only to put in common bail, except otherwise directed by the statute. Yelv. 53.

In audita querela, if the plaintiff is in execution, a recognizance of bail may be acknowledged, upon a writ commanding the justices to let him to mainprize. Jenk. Cent. 129.

For one taken on a writ of execution is not bailable by law; except an audita querela be brought. 1 Nels. Abr. 331.

Also if a writ of error is brought after verdict, bail must be put in, 3 Jac. 1. c. 8. 16 & 17 Car. 2. c. 8. s. 3. also in actions of debt on bond for payment of money only, debt for rent; and in ejectment, in which case the plaintiff in error may either become bound himself or find sureties. Coke's Rep. 142. But it is not necessary in actions on a bail bond. Ib. 7. Nor in error brought by executors or administrators.

On a ca. sa. against the defendant being returned non est inventus, a scire facias is to issue against the bail, or an action may be brought. Where a defendant renders his body in discharge of the bail, the plaintiff is by the rules of the court to make his choice of proceeding in execution, whether he will charge body, goods, or lands. 1 Lill. 183. And if the principal after judgment renders not himself in discharge of his bail, it is at the election of the plaintiff to take out execution either against him, or proceed against his bail: but if he takes the bail in execution, though he hath not full satisfaction, he shall never after take the principal; and if the principal be taken, he may not after meddle with the bail. Ibid.

There must be an exoneretur entered, to discharge the bail. If the defendant dies before a ca. sa. against him returned and filed, the bail will be discharged. 1 Lill. 177.

Before a scire facias taken out against bail, the principal may render his body in discharge of the bail: and if the bail bring in the principal before the return of the second sci. fac. against them, they shall be discharged. 1 Roll. Abr. 250. 1 Lill. 471.

If bail surrender the principal at or before the return of the second scire facias, it is good, although there be not immediate notice of it to the plaintiff, and if through want of notice he is at further charge against the bail, that shall not vitiate the surrender, but the bail shall not be delivered till they pay such charges: if at any time, after the return of the capias, the bail surrender the principal at a judge's chamber, and he thereupon is committed to the tipstaff, from whom he escapes, &c. this will not be a good surrender; but if it be before or on a capias returned, it is otherwise, the one being an indulgence, and the other matter of right. Mod. Cas. 238.

But the bail upon a writ of error cannot render the party in their discharge; because they are bound in a recognisance that the party shall prosecute the writ of error with effect, and pay the money if judgment be affirmed. 1 Lill. Abr. 173.

Neither an attorney nor his clerk shall be bail for any defendant in any civil action, nor any sheriff's officer or other person concerned in the execution of process, nor persons outlawed after judgment. Reg. M. 1656. Comp. 228. Doug. 466. Reg. 14 Geo. 2.

A bail cannot be witness for the defendant at the trial; but the court, on motion, will discharge the bail, upon giving other sufficient bail. Wood's Inst. 582. For the practice of the courts in respect to bail in civil actions. See PRACTICE.

2. Bail in criminal cases.] Regularly for all offences, either against the common law, or act of parliament, that are below felony, the offender ought to be admitted to bail, unless it be prohibited by some special act of parliament. 4 Black. 297. 2 Hal. P. C. 127.

But by the stat. 4 Westm. 1. 3 Ed. 1. c. 15. 23 Hen. 6. c. 9, and 1 & 2 Ph. & Mar. c. 13, at this day no justice of the peace can bail, 1, upon an accusation of treason; nor 2, of murder, nor, 3. in case of manslaughter, if the prisoner be clearly the slayer, and not barely suspected to be so; nor, 4, such as, being guilty of felony, have broken prison, because it not only carries a presumption of guilt, but is superadding one felony to another; 5, persons outlawed. 6, such as have abjured the realm; 7, approvers, and persons by them accused; 8. persons taken under the mainour, or in the fact of felony; 9, persons charged with arson; 10, excommunicated persons, taken by writ de excommunicato capiendo, all of which are clearly not bailable: But 1, As to thieves openly defamed and known; 2, persons charged with other felonies, or manifold and enormous offences, not being of good fame; and, 3, accessaries to felonies, that labour under the same want of reputation; which are of a more dubious nature than the first ten, it is in the discretion of the justices whether they bail or not.

And in the following cases the justices must admit offenders to bail upon offering sufficient surety, viz. 1, persons of good fame, charged with a bare suspicion of manslaughter, or other inferior homicide; 2, such persons being charged with petty larceny, or any felony not before specified; or, 3, with being accessary to any felony.

But where persons are arrested for manslaughter or felony, being bailable by law, they are not to be let to bail by justices of peace but in open sessions, or where two justices (quorum unus) are present; and the same is to be certified with the examination of the offender, and the accusers bound over to prosecute, &c. 3 Hen. 7. c. 3. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 13. § 3.

Although a person under an actual arrest for any crime declared to be irrepleviable, cannot be bailed by any justice; yet if a person at large be only accused of any such crime, on a slight suspicion, before a justice of the peace, it seems that the justice of the peace ought not to commit him, but ought to take surety from him to appear before a proper court. 2 Hawk. P. C. 153.

And if there is no felony done he ought to be discharged. Hal. P. C. 98. 106.

Justices of gaol-delivery, not being within the restraint of the stat. of Westm. 1, which extends only to inferior magistrates, may bail persons convicted before them of homicide by misadventure, or self-defence, the better to enable them to purchase their pardon. Cromp. 154. a. H. P. C. 101. F. N. B. 246. S. P. C. 15.

Also it seems that in discretion they may bail a person convicted before them of manslaughter, upon special circumstances, as if the evidence against him were slight,- or if he had purchased his pardon. H. P. C. 101. Cromp. 153.

The court of B. R. also bails in all cases, and may bail even in murder by the coroner's inquest, after examination into the depositions taken by the coroner. 1 Salk. 104. But if a criminal be indicted of murder, the court will not bail him; nor when a person is found guilty of any crime by the grand jury, because they cannot have notice of what evidence was before the jury. 1 Salk. 104.

But although this court is not tied down by the rules prescribed by the stat. West. 1. yet it will in discretion pay a due regard to those rules, and not admit a person to bail, who is expressly declared to be irreplevisible, without some particular circumstances in his favour. 2 Inst. 185, 186, 189. H. C. P. 104. 1 Salk. 61. 3 Bulst. 113. 2 Hawk. P. C. 113, 114. 5 Mod. 454.

The courts of King's Bench, Common Pleas and Exchequer, in term time, and the Chancery in the term or vacation, may bail persons by the habeas corpus act; but not such as are committed for treason, or felony specially expressed in the warrant of commitment, unless it be where a sessions is past from the time of commitment of the prisoner, without any prosecution, when he may be bailed. 2 Hawk. P. C. 107, 109, and stat. 16 Car. 1. cap. 10.

The House of Lords may also bail a peer committed upon an indictment for murder, if the indictment be removed before them by certiorari. Skin. 683.

Upon an impeachment for high crimes and misdemeanors the recognizance of bail is taken by order of the house of peers, at their lordships bar, the bail being previously approved by a committee, to whom it is referred to consider of their sufficiency; and the condition of the recognizance in such case is, that the criminal shall appear personally before the lords in parliament, and from day to day until the further order of the house. Dr. Sacheverel's case, 13th June 1709. Warren Hastings' ditto, 21st May 1787.

No person shall be bailed for felony by less than two; and it is said not to be usual for the King's Bench to bail a man on a habeas corpus, on a commitment for treason or felony, without four sureties; the sum in which the sureties are to be bound ought to be never less than 40*l.* for a capital crime; but it may be higher in discretion, on consideration of the ability and quality of the prisoner, and the nature of the offence; and the sureties may be examined on oath concerning their sufficiency, by him that takes the bail; and if a person be bailed by insufficient sureties, he may be required either by him who took the bail, or by any other who hath power to bail him, to find better sureties, and on his refusal may be committed; for insufficient securities are as none. H. P. C. 97. 2 Hawk. P. C. 88.

BAILIFF. (ballivus) Baily or bailiff (a word, according to Dr. Johnson, of doubtful etymology in itself, and borrowed from the French baili). But my Lord Coke, (Co. Lit. 61. b.) saith that it is an old Saxon word, which signifies a keeper or protector; and though there be several officers called bailiffs, whose offices and employments seem quite different from each other, yet doth something of keeping or protection belong to them all. 1 Bac. Abr. 361.

Hence the sheriff is considered as bailiff to the crown; and his county, of which he hath the care, and in which he is to execute the king's writs, is called his bailiwick; and the officers who by his precept execute writs and other process are called his bailiffs. Ibid.

There are likewise bailiffs of liberties, who are officers under lords who have franchises exempt from the jurisdiction of the sheriff. Ibid.

There are likewise bailiffs of lords of manors, who collect their rents, and levy their fines and amerciaments. Ibid.

Also he is called a bailiff, who hath the administration, or charge of lands, goods, or chattels, to make the best benefit for the owner, against whom an action of account doth lie for the profits which he hath raised or made, or might by his industry and care reasonably have made, his reasonable charges and expences deducted. Ibid.

There are likewise those termed bailiffs, to whom the king's castles are committed, as the bailiff of Dover castle. Ibid.

The chief magistrates in divers ancient corporations are also called bailiffs, as in Ipswich, Yarmouth, Colchester, and other places. Ibid.

Besides these there are also bailiffs of the forest, of which you may read in Manwood, part 1, p. 113.

BAILIWICK, (ballivia) is not only taken for the county, but signifies generally that liberty which is exempted from the sheriff of the county over which the lord of the liberty appointeth a bailiff, with such powers within his precinct as an under-sheriff exerciseth under the sheriff of the county; such as the bailiff of Westminster, &c. Stat. 27 Eliz. cap. 12. Wood's Inst. 206.

BAILMENT, properly so called, from the French bailer, to deliver, is a delivery of goods in trust, upon a contract expressed or implied, that the trust shall be faithfully executed on the part of the bailee, and the goods re-delivered as soon as the time or use for which they were bailed shall have elapsed, or be performed. 2 Black. 451. Law of B. 117.

In all cases of bailment the bailee is responsible to the bailor, if the goods are lost or damaged by his wilful default or gross negligence, or if he do not deliver up the chattels on lawful demand. 2 Black. 453.

And he hath therefore, such a special qualified property transferred from the bailor to himself in the goods, that he may, as well as the bailor, maintain an action against any stranger or third person who may injure or take away such goods; and this is reasonable, in order that he may thereby be always ready to answer the call of the bailor. Ibid.

And the degree of neglect which every bailee is answerable for is limited by Sir Wm. Jones, in his "Essay on the Law of Bailments," to three kinds; viz.

1. Ordinary neglect; which is the omission of that care which every man of common prudence, and capable of governing a family, takes of his own concerns.

2. Gross neglect; which is the want of that care, which every man of common sense, how inattentive soever, takes of his own property.

3. Slight neglect; which is the omission of that diligence which any circumspect and thoughtful persons use in securing their own goods and chattels.

The doctrine upon this subject is most learnedly, and elegantly treated of, by Sir William Jones in his essay, and is also exceedingly well exemplified in the case of Coggs and Bernard, Ld. Raym. 909, which was as follows: the defendant did undertake to remove a quantity of brandy from Brook's Market to Water Lane, and by reason of his neglect, one of the casks broke; and on Not guilty, a verdict was for the plaintiff: and in arrest of judgment two exceptions were taken: 1. Because in the declaration he was not alleged to be a common porter. 2. Because it was not averred that he had a reward.

Ld. Ch. Ju. Holt, in his argument on this case, enumerated six species of bailment:

1st. A bare and naked bailment to another, to keep for the use of the bailor, which is called depositum.

2dly. A delivery of goods to another which are in themselves useful to keep, and these are to be restored again in specie, which is called accommodation.

3dly. A delivery of goods for hire, which is called locatio, or conductio.

4thly. A delivery by way of pledge, which is called vadium.

5thly. A delivery of goods to be carried for a reward.

6thly. Such a delivery as here in the case at bar, where the goods are delivered to do some act about them, as the carrying, and without a reward, which is called mandatum by Bracton, lib. 3. 100. In English an acting by commission

As to the first, if a person out of kindness keeps the goods of another, he shall not be answerable if they be stolen, without there be a particular default in him: and secondly, such a bailee is not chargeable for a common neglect, for it must be a gross neglect for which he shall be liable.

As to the second bailment, a lending gratis to use for his advantage; there the borrower is strictly bound to keep it, for if he be guilty of the least neglect he shall be answerable; as if I lend a horse to go to the North of England, and he goes to the West, and the horse is stole, he shall in that case be chargeable; for if he had gone as I directed, the horse, perhaps, would not have been stolen; this sort of bailment is mentioned in Bracton 90. but in this case, if the horse had been in the stable of the bailee, and stolen thence without his default, as perhaps the thieves might first have bound the bailee, and then have taken the horse, he shall not be answerable; but if he left the stable door open, he shall for that neglect be answerable: Bracton says he ought to take the utmost care, but in no place says he shall be charged where no default was in him.

As to the third bailment, where goods are hired out for a reward, Bracton 62, says, the hirer is to take all imaginable care, and to restore them at the time, and he is bound to such a care as a diligent master of a family useth to his family, which care, if he so useth, he shall not be bound; now the most diligent man is liable to be robbed, and therefore I collect, that if he be so careful, as according to Bracton's definition, and be robbed, he shall not be liable.

As to the fourth bailment, if goods be pawned, the pawnee has a special property, which is in nature of a security to compel the pawner to pay; and if the goods be the worse for using, the pawnee must not use them; as clothes, &c. but if they be not the worse for using, he may use them at his peril; as jewels pawned to a lady, and she keeps them in a box, and they are stolen, she shall not be charged; but if she goes abroad with them to a play, and there they are stolen, she shall be answerable. 2dly, If the pawnbroker be at charge in keeping of them, as if it were a horse, and he gives it meat, he may use it for the reasonable charge he has been at. Bracton 99. If a creditor takes a pawn, he is bound to restore it upon payment; but if he, notwithstanding all his diligence, lose it, he shall howsoever recover his debt, 29 Ass. pl. 28. for the law does not lay upon him an obligation to keep against all accidents; but if the money be tendered, and he afterwards detains, and then it is lost, he shall then be liable, for he is then a wrong-doer, and his keeping it after, is the occasion of its being stolen, and he is then answerable at all events.

As to the fifth bailment, goods to be carried for a reward. 1. If you deliver them to a public or common carrier, and they are stolen, he must be liable, for the law charges him at all events; yet the act of God, or the enemies of the queen, may excuse, and this is a political institution by the laws of England, that people may be safe in their dealing; for otherwise carriers, that are frequently trusted with things of greatest value, would be often tempted to confederate with thieves. 2dly, But he who has a particular private employment, though he has a reward, yet he is not bound against all events, as a factor or a bailiff, if they do to the best of their power; and that is Southcott's case, and he is bound no otherwise than as his master himself should do; for it were unjust to charge him with what he cannot prevent.

As to the sixth bailment, to this point; here is a man not intrusted to keep, but to carry, and not to have any thing for his pains, and through his negligence miscarries, though he be to have nothing, yet it appears there was a neglect, and for that reason he is chargeable; but if the goods had been misused by a third person in the way, as he carried them, and without any neglect of his, I hold that he would not then be liable, because he had nothing for a reward. In this case the court resolved that the plaintiff should have judgment. 1 Bac. Abr. 243. Comyn. 153. S. C. 2 Ld. Raym. 909. S. C. Vide also 2 Inst. 89. 4 Rep. 83. 1 Rol. Abr. 338. *Co. BALCANIFER, or baldakinifer, i. e. a standard bearer. Cowel. Blount.

BALE, (Fr.) a pack, or certain quantity of goods or merchandize; as a bale of silk, cloth, &c. This word is used in the statute 16 R. 2. and is still in use. Ibid.

BALENGER, by the stat. 28 H. 6. c. 5, seems to have been a kind of barge, or water vessel. But elsewhere it rather signifies a man of war. Cowel. Blount.

BALEUGA, a territory or precinct. Ibid.

BALISTARIUS, a balister or cross-bow man. Ibid.

BALIVA, is expounded to signify jurisdiction. Co. Lit. 105.

BALIVO AMOVENDO, a writ which anciently lay to remove a bailiff from his office, for want of sufficient land in the bailiwick. Reg. Orig. 78.

BALKERS, are derived from the word balk, because they stand higher, as it were on a balk or ridge of ground, to give notice of something to others. Shep. Epitom. vide Conders.

BALLARE, signifies scopis expurgare. It is mentioned in Fleta, lib. 2. cap. 87. Cowel. Blount.

BALLAST, signifies gravel, stones, or whatever else is used to poise ships, and make them go steady. Cowel. Blount.

BALLIUM, a sort of fortress or bulwark. Cowel. Blount.

BAN, or ban, (from the Brit. ban. i. e. clamor) is a proclamation, or public notice; any public summons or edict, whereby a thing is commanded or forbidden. It is a word ordinary among the feudists; and there is both bannus and bannum which signify two several things. This word bans we use here in England, especially in publishing matrimonial contracts, which is done in the church before marriage, to the end that if any man can speak against the intention of the parties, either in respect of kindred, precontract, or for other just cause, they may take their exception in time, before the marriage is consummated: and in the canon law, bannæ sunt proclamationes sponsi & sponsæ in ecclesiis fieri solitæ. But there may be a faculty or licence for the marriage, and then this ceremony is omitted; and ministers are not to celebrate matrimony between any persons without a licence, except the bans have been first published three several times; upon pain of suspension, &c. Can. 62. See MARRIAGE.

BANCALE, a covering of ease and ornament for a bench, or other seat. Cowel. Blount.

BANE, (from the Sax. bana, a murderer) signifies destruction or overthrow: as, I will be the bane of such a man, is a common saying; so when a person receives a mortal injury by any thing, we say it was his bane: and he who is the cause of another man's death, is said to be le bane, i. e. a malefactor. Bract. lib. 2. tract. 8. cap. 1.

BANERET, (banerettus, miles vexilarius) is a knight made in the field, with the ceremony of cutting off the point of his standard, and making it as it were a banner, and accounted so honourable that they are allowed to display their arms in the king's army as barons do, and may bear arms with supporters. They are next to the barons in dignity, and take place of all baronets; as we may learn by the letters patent for creation of baronets. Cowel. Blount.

But in order to entitle himself to this rank, he must have been created by the king in person in the field, under the royal banners, in time of open war, else he ranks after baronets. 4 Inst. 6. 1 Black. 403.

BANISHMENT, (Fr. bannissement) Exilium, abjuratio, is a forsaking or quitting of the realm; and a kind of civil death, inflicted on an offender: there were two kinds of it, one voluntary and upon oath, called abjuration; and the other upon compulsion for some offence. Staundf. Pl. Cr. f. 117. By magna charta, none shall be outlawed or banished his country, but by lawful judgment of his peers, or according to the law of the land. 9 H. 3. c. 29. And by the common law no person shall be banished, but by the authority of parliament; or in case of abjuration for felony, &c. but this is taken away by statute, 3 Inst. 115. Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 28. See ABJURATION.

BANK, (Lat. bancus, Fr. banque) in our common law, is usually taken for a seat or bench of judgment; as Bank le Roy, the King's Bench, Bank le Common Pleas, Bench of Common Pleas, or the common Bench; called also in Latin Bancus Regis, and Bancus Communium Placitorum. Cromp. Just. 67. 91.

There are, in each of the terms, stated days, called days in bank, dies in banco, that is, days of appearance in the court of Common Pleas. They are generally at the distance of about a week from each other, and regulated by some festival of the church. On some one of these days in bank, all original writs must be made returnable; and therefore they are generally called the returns of that term. 3 Black. Com. 277.

BANK also signifies a place where a great sum of money is to let out to use, returned by exchange, or otherwise disposed of to profit: and the Bank of England, managed by a governor and directors, was established by parliament, by stat. 5 & 6 Will. & Mar. c. 20.

BANKERS, are those persons in whose hands money is deposited and lodged for safety, to be drawn out again as the owners have occasion for it. And the monied goldsmiths were the first who got the name of bankers in the reign of K. Charles the Second.

BANKRUPT, (bancus ruptus) is so called, because when the bank or stock is broken or exhausted, the owner is said to be a bankrupt. Cowel.

Summary of all the statutes relating to Bankrupts.] By 13 Eliz. c. 7. if any merchant, or other person using trade, bartery, or otherwise, in gross or by retail, or seeking his living by buying and selling, subject or denizen, shall depart the realm, keep his house, absent himself, suffer himself to be arrested for a debt not due, or to be outlawed, or yield himself to prison, or depart from his dwelling-house, with intent to defraud or hinder a just creditor, he shall be deemed a bankrupt.

The lord chancellor, on complaint in writing, may appoint commissioners, under the great seal, who are authorized to order the body, goods, and lands, freehold or copyhold, to be sold for satisfaction of creditors in equal portion. Ibid.

But the person to whom any copyhold shall be sold, shall compound with the lord of the manor for his fine, before he enters or takes any profit. Ibid.

The commissioners, on request, shall declare to the bankrupt, how they have bestowed his estate, and pay him the overplus. Ibid.

The commissioners may summon and examine all persons suspected of knowing or concealing a bankrupt's goods, debts, or effects. Ibid.

If such person refuse to swear, or to discover the truth, or if any persons fraudulently claim, or detain any goods, debts or tenements, they shall forfeit double the value concealed, to be levied and distributed by the commissioners amongst the creditors: and if there be an overplus, one moiety of such forfeitures shall be paid to the crown, the other to the poor. Ibid.

If the bankrupt doth not surrender himself, after five proclamations made near the place of his abode, he shall be out of the queen's protection, and if any persons conceal him, they shall be fined by the lord chancellor. Ibid.

A creditor, not satisfied his whole debt, shall have his remedy for the residue, as before this act. Ibid.

The commissioners may sell lands that come to the bankrupt before satisfaction is made to the creditors. Ibid.

This act does not extend to lands sold bona fide, before bankruptcy, and not to the use of the bankrupt himself.

By 1 Jac. 1. c. 15. any person using trade or the like, that shall fraudulently procure himself to be arrested, or his goods to be attached, or make any fraudulent grant of his estate, whereby his creditors may be defeated or delayed, or being arrested, shall thereon lie in prison six months shall be adjudged bankrupt.

Any creditors may share with the rest, within four months after the commission sued, and until distribution, contributing to the charges. Ibid.

Estates of a bankrupt conveyed to any of his children, or other persons, or debts transferred into other names, unless upon marnage, or for some valuable consideration, may be sold by the commissioners. Ibid.

The bankrupt not appearing on three notices left at his house, may be proclaimed a bankrupt, and not appearing on five proclamations, he may be apprehended. Ibid.

The commissioners may examine the offender, as to his estates, upon interrogatories. On refusal to answer fully, they may commit him, until he shall conform, and for perjury to the value of 10*l.* he is to stand on the pillory. Ibid.

Such persons as refuse, on summons, to appear and answer to interrogatories, may be committed until they submit; and witnesses sent for are to be allowed their charges, and shall be liable to the penalties of 5 Eliz. for perjury. Ibid.

Forfeitures by force of this act are to be recovered by creditors only. Ibid.

Debts due to the bankrupt may be assigned, but no debtor of the bankrupt is to be prejudiced on account of paying any debt to him, before he knew that he was become bankrupt. Ibid.

The commissioners in any action brought against them, may plead the general issue, and give the statute in evidence. Ibid.

If the bankrupt dies, after the commission is sued and dealt in, the commissioners may notwithstanding proceed in execution. Ibid.

By 21 Jac. 1. c. 19. all former statutes against bankrupts shall be largely and beneficially construed for the aid of the creditors.

Every person using trade, by bargaining, exchange, bartering, chevisance, or otherwise, in gross or by retail, or seeking his living by buying and selling, or using the trade or profession of a scrivener, who shall obtain any protection, other than lawful privilege of parliament, or exhibit any bill, to compel his creditors to accept less than their just debts, or procure longer days of payment, or upon any arrest for debt shall lie in prison two months or more, or being arrested for a debt of 100*l.* shall escape out of prison, or procure his enlargement by common or bired bail, shall be a bankrupt from the time of the first arrest. Ibid.

The commissioners may examine the bankrupt's wife for discovery of his estates, and on refusal, she is liable to the same penalties, as others are in like cases. Ibid.

If a bankrupt conceals goods to the value of 20*l.* fraudulently, or does not shew casual loss, whereby he became disabled, on indictment and conviction, he shall be set on the pillory. Ibid.

The commissioners may authorize persons to break open the bankrupt's house, doors, or chests, and to seize and order the body, goods and money as before appointed. Ibid.

The bankrupt's goods shall be divided rateably, notwithstanding any judgment bond, or attachment in London, so that execution was not executed before he became bankrupt. Ibid.

His goods shall be liable notwithstanding an extent, where the bankrupt was not originally debtor to the king. Ibid.

Goods in a bankrupt's possession, by consent of the owner, and whereof he is the reputed owner, may be sold. Ibid.

The commissioners, by deed inrolled, within six months, may sell the bankrupt's estates in tail, in possession, reversion or remainder, unless the remainder is in the king by his grant. Ibid.

Conditional estates granted by a bankrupt, may be redeemed by the commissioners and sold. Ibid.

No purchaser for valuable consideration, shall be impeached, unless the commission be sued within five years after the bankruptcy. Ibid.

All statutes against bankrupts shall extend equally to aliens as denizens, or natural born subjects. Ibid.

By 10 Ann. c. 15. the discharge of a bankrupt shall not extend to his partner, or one jointly bound with him.

By 7 Geo. 1. c. 31. creditors of a bankrupt, whose debts are payable at a future day, shall be admitted to a proportionable dividend, discounting at the rate of 5 per cent. and the bankrupt shall be discharged in the same manner, as if such debts had been due before he became bankrupt.

By 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. made perpetual by 37 Geo. 3. c. 124. if a bankrupt does not, within forty-two days after notice left at his house, or personal notice in case he is in prison, and notice in the London Gazette, surrender himself, and conform to the statutes by discovering his estate and effects, or if he embezzles goods to the value of 20*l.* or conceals books of account fraudulently, he shall suffer as a felon, without benefit of clergy, and his estate shall be divided amongst the creditors. s. 1.

The commissioners within the forty-two days, shall appoint not less than three meetings, the last to be on the forty-second day, whereof three weeks notice is to be given in the London Gazette. s. 2.

The lord chancellor may enlarge the time for a bankrupt's surrendering, not exceeding fifty days from the end of the forty-two days, by order made six days at least before the time he was to have surrendered. s. 3.

The bankrupt shall deliver up his accounts which are not seized, upon oath or affirmation, and upon notice he shall attend and assist the assignees. s. 4.

The bankrupt may inspect the accounts, and shall be free from arrests during the said forty-two days, or such further time as is allowed him to surrender, unless he was in custody at the time of his submission. If arrested within that time, on producing the notice or summons, he shall be discharged; and the officer detaining him shall forfeit 5*l.* a day to such bankrupt. s. 5.

Bankrupt in custody at the time of his surrender, shall be brought before the commissioners at the expence of the estate, and if in execution, they shall take his examination in prison. s. 6. But see 49 Geo. 3. c. 121. s. 13. infra.

Bankrupts discovering their estate and effects, shall, if the creditors are paid 10*s.* in the pound, be allowed 5*l.* per cent. out of the neat proceeds, so that it does not exceed 200*l.* and if they are paid 12*s.* 6*d.* in the pound, the bankrupt shall be allowed 7*l.* 10*s.* per cent. not exceeding 250*l.* in the whole, and if the creditors are paid 15*s.* in the pound, he shall be allowed 10*l.* per cent. not exceeding 300*l.* and such bankrupt shall be discharged from all debts due at the time he became bankrupt s. 7.

If the neat produce of the estate discovered by the bankrupt does not amount to 10*s.* in the pound, he shall be allowed what the assignees and the commissioners think fit, not exceeding 3*l.* per cent. s. 8.

The future effects of bankrupts who shall have been discharged by any insolvent act, compounding with creditors, or by becoming bankrupt, shall be liable, unless the effects are sufficient to pay 15*s.* in the pound. s. 9.

No discovery shall entitle the bankrupt to the benefit of this act, unless the commissioners certify his conformity, and such certificate must be signed by [three parts in five, 49 Geo. 3. c. 121. s. 18.] in number and value of the creditors, whose respective debts are not less than 20*l.* The bankrupt must make oath or affirmation, that he did not obtain the signing thereof by fraud; and if he gives any securities, to induce creditors to sign the certificate, such securities shall be void. s. 10—11.

No bankrupt shall have any benefit under this act, who has given above 100*l.* on the marriage of any of his children, unless he can prove that he had sufficient effects to pay all his debts at that time; or that he has not lost at gaming 5*l.* in one day, or 100*l.* in one year, before he became bankrupt. s. 12.

The bankrupt after his certificate is allowed, shall be discharged from any execution, or detention in prison, for debt due at the time he became bankrupt. s. 13.

Judges, or justices of the peace, may grant warrants to apprehend bankrupts, who do not conform; when apprehended the gaolers are to give notice to the commissioners; and bankrupt's goods, books, and effects may be seised in any prison; but the bankrupt, so apprehended, on his conforming, may have the benefit of this act. s. 14, 15.

Bankrupt and others not answering the interrogatories of commissioners, may be imprisoned until they submit, but the warrant of commitment shall specify the question. s. 16, 17.

If an habeas corpus is brought on such commitment, the judge may recommit the prisoner, until he shall conform, though the form of the warrant is insufficient, unless it appear that he had answered all lawful questions; and the gaoler suffering the bankrupt to escape, or to go out of prison, shall forfeit 500*l.* for the benefit of the creditors, and if he refuses to shew his prisoner to a creditor, who has proved his debt, he shall in like manner forfeit 100*l.* s. 18, 19.

Persons discovering effects concealed by bankrupts, are to be allowed 5 per cent. thereout; and persons concealing the same are to forfeit 100*l.* and double the value to the creditors. s. 20, 21.

Creditors on bonds, notes, or bills, payable at a future day, may petition for commissions, and no commission shall be granted, unless the debt of a single petitioner amounts to 100*l.* of two creditors petitioning to 150*l.* or of three creditors to 200*l.* which must be sworn to or affirmed, and bonds must be given to prove the bankruptcy. s. 22, 23.

Where creditors have made a collusive composition with the bankrupt, to have more than the rest, they shall forfeit their whole debts, and pay back what they have received to the creditors; and the commission in such case, shall be supersedod, and another granted to the other creditors. s. 24.

The charge of suing the commission shall be paid by the petitioners, and reimbursed out of the bankrupt's effects, and creditors shall be admitted without contributing. s. 25.

After the party is declared a bankrupt, the commissioners shall give notice in the Gazette, of the meetings; and creditors living remote may prove their debts by affidavit, or affirmation made before a master extraordinary; and, by letter of attorney, may vote in the choice of assignees, who shall keep accounts for the inspection of creditors. But no creditors shall vote for assignees, whose debt does not amount to 10*l.* s. 26, 27.

Mutual credits with the bankrupt, shall be settled according to the balance of account. s. 28.

Persons swearing to debts falsely, are to forfeit double the sum to the other creditors, and be liable to the statutes made against perjury. s. 29.

The commissioners may appoint assignees for securing the bankrupt's effects, who may be removed by the creditors at their meeting, and others chosen, and for not delivering up the effects to the new ones, after ten days notice, the first assignees shall respectively forfeit 200l. to the creditors. And notice of the removal of assignees, and appointment of others, in whom the effects are vested, shall be given in the Gazette. s. 30, 31.

Creditors, before the choice of assignees, may appoint the manner of paying the monies got in. s. 32. See also 49 Geo. 3. c. 121. s. 3. infra.

After four, and within twelve months, from the commission, assignees shall give twenty-one days notice in the Gazette, and creditors may come and prove their debts, and a dividend shall be directed. s. 33.

Assignees with the consent of creditors, may submit disputes to arbitration, and compound debts. s. 34, 35.

A bankrupt, after certificate allowed, shall attend and assist the assignees in settling his accounts, for 2*s.* 6*d.* a day; and if he refuses, may be committed till he shall conform. s. 36.

A final dividend shall be made within eighteen months, unless there is a suit depending, or some effects outstanding. s. 37.

No suit in equity shall be commenced without consent of a majority of the creditors. s. 38.

Bankers, brokers, and factors, shall be liable to the bankrupt laws; but no farmer, grazier, or drover of cattle, or receiver general of taxes, shall be liable thereto. s. 39, 40.

Proceedings may be entered on record, by direction of the lord chancellor, and may be searched, and copy of such record and of certificate allowed, shall be evidence to discharge bankrupts from actions, unless the creditor proves it was fraudulently obtained. s. 41.

No schedule shall be annexed to any assignment of the bankrupt's personal estate from the commissioners to the assignees: and if a commissioner takes above 20*s.* for each meeting, or orders any expence, he shall be disabled. s. 42.

Commissioners are to take an oath to act impartially, and enter a memorial thereof amongst the proceedings. s. 43, 44.

Commissions shall not abate by demise of the king, but if necessary to renew the same, through the death of the commissioners, the same shall be done for half fees. s. 45.

Fees of solicitors employed under commissions, are to be settled by a master in chancery, who is to have 20*s.* for so doing. s. 46.

By 19 Geo. 2. c. 32. creditors of bankrupts shall not be liable to refund to the assignees, monies, bona fide received in the course of trade, before notice of insolvency. s. 1.

Creditors on bottomree bonds, policies of insurance, and the like, shall be admitted to prove, as if the contingency had happened, and the bankrupt shall be discharged from the debt accordingly. s. 2.

By 24 Geo. 2. c. 57. certificates signed by fictitious creditors, unless the bankrupt discloses the fraud, shall be void. s. 9.

Letter of attorney from a creditor in foreign parts, attested by a notary public, shall be sufficient evidence to authorise his signing the certificate. s. 10.

By 4 Geo. 3. c. 33. the creditors of any merchant within the description of the laws relating to bankrupts, having privilege of parliament, may, upon affidavit made of the debt, and filed in any of the courts at Westminster, sue out a summons, or original bill, against such debtor: and if he shall not, within two months, pay, secure, or compound for the debt, he shall be adjudged a bankrupt; and a commission may be accordingly sued out against him. s. 1, 2.

But persons entitled to privilege are not to be arrested, except in cases made felony in the bankrupt laws. s. 3.

By 36 Geo. 3. c. 90. upon bankrupts refusing to transfer stock standing in their own right, the lord chancellor may order it to be transferred to the assignees.

By 45 Geo. 3. c. 124. traders having privilege of parliament, shall, within two months after summonses, under 4 Geo. 3. c. 33. enter an appearance, or be adjudged bankrupt. s. 1.

And traders having the privilege of parliament, disobeying the orders of the court of chancery or exchequer, and refusing to pay money according to the tenor thereof, shall be deemed bankrupts. s. 7.

But the personal liberty of members during privilege is saved.

By 46 Geo. 3. c. 135. all conveyances by, all payments to, and all contracts with, a bankrupt, made bona fide two months before the date of the commission of bankrupt shall be good. s. 1.

Bona fide creditors shall be admitted to prove debts, notwithstanding any secret act of bankruptcy. s. 2.

Mutual debts and credits may be set off, notwithstanding a secret act of bankruptcy. s. 3.

Certificates shall discharge bankrupts of debts provable under this act. s. 4.

And commissions of bankruptcy shall not be avoided by any secret act of bankruptcy, committed before the contracting of the petitioning creditor's debt. s. 5.

By 49 Geo. 3. c. 121. in all cases executions and attachments against the lands or goods of bankrupts levied more than two months before the commission, shall be valid, notwithstanding any prior act of bankruptcy, provided the party had no notice of such prior act of bankruptcy, and the issuing of a commission grounded upon an act of bankruptcy, though afterwards superseded, shall be deemed notice. s. 2.

If the creditors do not, before they proceed to the choice of assignees, direct how and with whom and where the monies arising from the bankrupt's estate, shall be paid, until the dividend takes place, the commissioners immediately after the choice of assignees, and at the same meeting, shall give directions thereon, and the assignees are to conform to such directions as often as 100*l.* shall be got in: but the monies are not to be directed to be paid to the commissioners or the solicitor, or into any banking house or other house of trade or business in which the commissioners or solicitor are interested or concerned: the assignees disobeying such directions are to be charged 20*l.* per cent. on the money retained or employed contrary thereto: s. 3—4.

The commissioners are not to declare a dividend till a true statement in writing be made upon oath by the assignees of their receipts and payments, to ascertain what dividend ought to be made, and what sum retained in hand. s. 5.

After Jan. 1. 1810, if assignees become bankrupt, having 100*l.* of the bankrupt's estate, their certificates shall not discharge their future effects in respect of so much thereof, with lawful interest, as shall not be paid by the dividends. s. 6.

The commissioners may direct the money paid in on bankrupt's estate, to be invested in exchequer bills, and also with whom and where they shall be deposited, until the dividend. s. 7.

Sureties and persons liable for the debts of the bankrupt, not paying until after the commission, may prove under the commission, after having paid such debts, not disturbing former dividends; and the persons hereby enabled to prove will be barred by the certificate in like manner as other creditors. s. 8.

Debts not payable at the time of the bankruptcy may be proved, deducting a rebate of interest. s. 9.

In actions brought by assignees, and also in suits in equity, by assignees, the commission and proceedings under it shall be sufficient evidence of the petitioning creditor's debt, and the trading and act of bankruptcy, unless notice in writing be given that those matters are to be disputed. s. 10—11.

No action shall be brought against assignees for dividends, but the remedy shall be by petition to the lord chancellor. s. 12.

Bankrupts in custody in execution may be brought before the commissioners by their warrant to be examined. s. 13.

Proving a debt under a commission, shall be deemed an election not to proceed against the bankrupt by action in respect of such debt. s. 14.

Persons effecting policies of insurance with under-writers, who become bankrupts, may prove the loss, though not interested in the policy, if the insured is not in that part of the kingdom. s. 16.

Annuity creditors may be admitted to prove the value under any commission, such value being ascertained by the commissioners. s. 17.

The signature and consent of three parts in five in number and value of the creditors of the bankrupt, to the allowance of his certificate and discharge, shall be sufficient to authorize all acts to be done by the lord chancellor and commissioners for his benefit. s. 18.

Bankrupts entitled to leases, or agreements for leases, delivering up the same to assignees are not liable afterwards for the rent nor in respect of the covenants. s. 19.

Practical summary of the subsisting bankrupt laws.] Who may be made bankrupts.—Under the above statutes, any merchant or other person using the trade of merchandize by way of bargaining, exchange, re-change, bartery, chevisance, or otherwise, in gross or retail, or seeking his trade or living by buying or selling, may be bankrupt. Also bankers, brokers, factors, dealers in coals, scriveners, vintners, brickmakers, butchers, bakers, brewers, clothiers, goldsmiths, iron manufacturers buying the same and working it up into goods, locksmiths, milliners, mailors, plumbers, salesmen, shoemakers, smiths, tanners, and indeed any person seeking his living by buying or selling any thing, though his dealing may not come under the denomination of any particular trade, may be a bankrupt as a dealer and chapman. 1 Cooke B. L. 37.

Persons exercising mere handicraft trades, where nothing is bought or sold, cannot by such trading become bankrupts; but where they purchase commodities, upon which bodily labour is afterwards bestowed in order to render them fit for sale, thereby enhancing their value, they may become bankrupts. Ib. 37.

Clergymen, barristers, and attornies, as such, are not liable to the bankrupt laws; but if they enter into a trade they are liable in that character. Infants and married women cannot be bankrupts, but a feme covert sole trader in the city of London may, according to the custom, be bankrupt. 1 Cooke B. L. 26.

Acts of bankruptcy] Must be committed with an intent to defraud or delay creditors from recovering their just debts; and among these, are to be reckoned:

1. Departing the realm, by which a man withdraws himself from the reach of the law, which is an act of bankruptcy if done with a view to defraud his creditors, or if in fact they are delayed by such absence. Buck N. P. 39.

2. Beginning to keep house or otherwise to absent himself, is an act of bankruptcy; keeping house without a denial to a creditor is not. 5 T. R. 575. And a mere denial may be explained by circumstances, such as sickness, company, business, or a lawful hour. 1 Coke 79. A mere order to deny, without an actual denial, is not sufficient. Ib. The denial must be to a creditor who has a debt due at the time. Ib. 82.

3. Departing from his dwelling house, if with a view of defrauding or delaying his creditors, is an act of bankruptcy. Ib. 85.

4. Suffering himself to be outlawed, is an act of bankruptcy, if suffered with an intent to defraud his creditors. Ib. 85.

5. Yielding himself to prison for debt, is an act of bankruptcy, where done voluntarily, if it can be ascertained that the person imprisoned is capable of paying. 1 Cooke B. L. 85.

6. Willingly or fraudulently procuring his goods or effects to be attached or sequestered, is an act of bankruptcy, being of course an attempt to prejudice the rest of his creditors. 2 Com. 478.

7. Making fraudulent grant or conveyance of his lands, tenements, goods, or chattels, is an act of bankruptcy; but it must be by deed; and must be of all his effects; a mere colourable reserve of part of the effects will not prevent the deed being deemed fraudulent; and it is fraudulent though made to a bona fide creditor, or even to trustees for the benefit of all the creditors except one. 1 Burr. 477. An assignment for the benefit of all the creditors has been held an act of bankruptcy unless they all concur in the deed. 1 Cooke 89.

8. Procuring protection from arrests, other than is afforded by privilege of parliament, is an act of bankruptcy, and also

9. Lying in prison for two months or more upon arrest or other detention for debt: the months are lunar months. Ib. 97.

10. Escaping from prison after an arrest for a just debt of 100*l.* or upwards, is an act of bankruptcy; and also

11. Neglecting to make satisfaction for any just debt of 100*l.* or upwards within two months, after process served upon him, having privilege of parliament. 4 Geo. 2. c. 33.

Petitioning creditor's debt.] No commission shall be granted unless the debt upon the petition of one creditor amounts to 100*l.*; of two, to 150*l.*; of three or more, to 200*l.* 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. s. 23.

The debt must be a legal and not an equitable one; therefore, the assignee of a bond cannot take out a commission. A debt at law, notwithstanding the statute of limitations has incurred will support a commission. 1 Coke 13. And also a solicitor's bill for fees notwithstanding an order has been obtained for taxing. Ib. 17. So also attornies or solicitors' bills, though not delivered a month, signed, the act requiring same, applying only to actions at law. A debt due from a partnership will support a separate commission against one of the partners. Ex parte Crisp, 1 Atk. 134. Creditor by bond, bill, or security for money payable at a future day, may sue out commission. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. s. 22. Also indorsee of a bill or note after an act of bankruptcy. 2 Wils. 135. Creditor having debtor in execution cannot petition. 1 Cooke 25. Petitioning creditor has not the election of proceeding at law. Ib. 25.

Striking a docket] is done by applying to the clerk in the secretary of bankrupts office, for a bond to the lord chancellor, in the penalty of 200*l.* to prove the party a bankrupt, (which the clerk will fill up) this bond the petitioning creditor must execute, and likewise make an affidavit of his debt before a master in chancery if in town; or a master extraordinary in the country: in the latter case, such affidavit must not be sworn before the solicitor to the commission, or any of the intended commissioners; and, in a country commission, the bond is prepared and executed in the country and transmitted with the affidavit, and the bond should be executed in the presence of two witnesses, one the master extraordinary who takes the affidavit.

This bond being executed, and affidavit sworn, the clerk will prepare a petition to the lord chancellor, on behalf of the petitioning creditor, and get the commission sealed.

When the commission is sealed, the messenger being informed of the commissioners' names, will summon three of them to meet at some tavern, coffee-house, or other convenient place.

But if the commission is to be executed in the country, which can only be when the bankrupt resides above forty miles from London, the petitioning creditor names the commissioners; and by the lord chancellor's order of 19th August, 1800, these should be two barristers and three attornies in such commission.

If a creditor strikes a docket and does not proceed to seal a commission within four days after, exclusive, any other creditor may strike a new docket and obtain commission. Lord chancellor's order, 12 Feb. 1774. And any commission of bankrupt to be executed in the city of London, and not prosecuted within fourteen days from the date thereof, shall be supersedable; if in the country, twenty-eight days; but one day must elapse before supersedeas shall issue, and any solicitor first applying that day, for a new commission, shall be preferred to the former solicitor. Lord chancellor's order, 26 June, 1793.

Renewed commissions are granted where the original commissioners are dead, so that the original commission cannot be proceeded in, and is directed to new commissioners: it is obtained upon petition to the chancellor, stating the deaths of the commissioners and verified by affidavit.

Private meeting.] This meeting is had for the commissioners to find by proof an act of bankruptcy committed, to see the petitioning creditor's debt proved, and to declare the party a bankrupt accordingly; for this purpose the solicitor attends with the commission and witnesses.

The commissioners being met, and the commission produced, the three commissioners present administer an oath to each other for the faithful execution of their trust; and then proceed to take the proof of the petitioning creditor's debt, the trading, and acts of the bankruptcy, which are to be reduced into the form of depositions.

If the party is found to be a bankrupt, the commissioners sign proper warrants for seizing the bankrupt's effects, advertising the bankruptcy in the Gazette, and for the bankrupt to appear and surrender himself, &c. This first meeting, and till the seizure, is usually carried on with great secresy, to prevent any suspicion, and concealing or carrying away of the bankrupt's effects, by himself or others. And sometimes at this sitting, where an extent is expected on the bankrupt's effects, a provisional assignment is required to be made, which is only a temporary assignment, and usually made to the messenger until assignees are chosen in order to take place of an extent; but should only be executed when necessary.

First meeting.] At the first public meeting there is seldom any thing more to be done than the taking depositions of creditor's debts; if the bankrupt appears, a memorandum is made of it, and thereby further time is given him to make his examination; so there is if he does not.

At this meeting it is prudent for the bankrupt to surrender for the sake of protection, but it is doubtful whether a surrender at the private meeting will protect him. 2 Cooke, p. 21.

Debts are proved by the deposition of the creditors themselves, if in town, their clerks or servants not being allowed to prove for them; but if absent, any person may attend and make a claim of such debts, which the creditors must afterwards attend and substantiate. Claims should in strictness be struck out before the first dividend, though it is usual to let them remain until the final dividend, when they are struck out of course if not established. 2 Cooke 24. If any creditor resides in the country, his affidavit must be prepared, sworn before a master extraordinary, and then sent up to be exhibited to the commissioners at one of their public meetings; and care should be taken that such affidavit state the consideration upon which the debt arose, and also the security or securities (if any) which the creditor may have in his hands for the same, which must be sent up with the affidavit to be exhibited.

Second meeting.] At the second public meeting, after taking depositions of such creditors debts as appear, the creditors who have proved their debts to be 10l. or above (for no other has a vote for choice of assignees) consult among themselves and chuse one or more, usually of the greatest creditors, to be assignee or assignees of the bankrupt's effects, which choice is determined by the major part in value of those who vote; and such creditors set their names to a memorandum of their making such choice, and thereby request the commissioners to assign the same to him or them accordingly; and the assignee or assignees signs his or their names thereunder, of their acceptance of such trust; if the bankrupt then appears to surrender, he must sign his surrender, and request further time to the last sitting to make his final examination and discovery.

Country creditors, who mean to vote in the choice of assignees, must execute a letter of attorney for that purpose to some person in town, which must be sent up, together with an affidavit of the execution thereof.

At this second meeting, the solicitor has an assignment of the bankrupt's effects ready ingrossed, to be executed by the commissioners. And it is also necessary for the solicitor who sued out the commission, to make out his bill of costs (inclusive of this sitting) that the same may be settled and allowed by the commissioners, and paid on behalf of his client, before he parts with the commission out of his hands; for the assignees may afterwards employ some other attorney to act for them under the commission; and, as the petitioning creditor is obliged to prosecute the commission until assignees are chosen, therefore the commissioners are empowered to settle and allow his bill, and to order the assignees to pay the same out of the first effects that shall come to their hands. Subsequent bills are settled by a master in chancery.

Before the creditors proceed to the choice of assignees, they are to direct how, with whom, and where the monies arising from the bankrupt's estate shall be paid or deposited, and if they do not, the commissioners, after the choice of the assignees, shall give proper directions in that behalf. 49 Geo. 3. c. 121. s. 3.

Third meeting.] The last or third public sitting is for the bankrupt to finish his examination and discovery of his effects; and the creditors to assent to or dissent from the allowance of his certificate; but depositions are still to be prepared for such creditors who come to prove their debts. Green's B. L.

The bankrupt, upon finishing his examination, must surrender up what money he has in his pocket, watch, silver-buckles, &c. to the assignees; they are seldom so strict as to keep all his money, but will return in proportion to the quantity; at this sitting it may be prudent for him to have a proper person to attend with his certificate, to request such of his creditors to sign it, as have proved debts to the value of 20*l.* or upwards respectively; and to witness their signing; which may save the trouble of going round to all of them separately afterwards, and forward the same so that he may get it allowed. Green's Bank. L.

One or more further meetings of the commissioners are often requisite to be had, either for making a dividend, or other purpose; notice is to be published in the Gazette, and 21 days notice given of the meeting (if it be for a dividend); if the bankrupt has occasion for the commissioners to certify the great seal of his conformity, he must have a meeting on purpose at his own expense. Ibid.

Dividends.] Persons chosen assignees shall, after the expiration of four months and within twelve months from the time of issuing such commission, cause 21 days notice to be given in the Gazette of the time and place the commissioners and assignees intend to meet and make a dividend; at which time the creditors who have not before proved their debts, shall be at liberty to prove the same; which meeting for the city of London, and all places within the bills of mortality, shall be at Guildhall; and upon every such meeting the assignees shall produce an account of their receipts and payments, and of what shall remain outstanding; and shall (if the creditors present require the same) be examined upon oath or solemn affirmation, touching the truth of such account, and the assignees shall be allowed all just allowances; and the commissioners shall order such part of the neat produce of the said bankrupt's estate, in the hands of the assignees, as they shall think fit, to be divided amongst the creditors, and shall make such order for a dividend in writing, and shall cause one part of such order to be filed amongst the proceedings under the commission, and shall deliver unto each of the assignees a duplicate of such order, which order shall contain an account of the time and place of making such order, and the sum total of the debts proved, and the sum total of the money remaining in the hands of the assignees; and how much in the pound is then ordered to be paid, and the assignees in pursuance of such order, and without any deed of distribution, shall forthwith make such dividend, and take receipts from each creditor. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. s. 33. Atk. Rep. 88, 91. ca. 39. id. 107, 209.

Within eighteen months after the issuing forth of any such commission, the assignees shall make a second dividend, in case the estate was not wholly divided upon the first, and shall cause notice to be inserted in the Gazette, of the time and place the said commissioners intend to meet to make a second dividend, and for the creditors who shall not have before proved their debts, to come and prove the same; and at such meeting every assignee shall produce upon oath or affirmation his accounts; and what upon the balance shall appear to be in his hands shall by like order of the commissioners be forthwith divided, which second dividend shall be final, unless any suit shall be depending, or any part of the estate standing out, or unless some future estate of the bankrupt shall afterwards come to the assignee, in which case the assignees shall, as soon as may be, convert such future estate into money, and shall within two days after, by the like order of the commissioners, divide the same. Same stat.

Creditors not having proved their debts in time to receive the first dividend, may, upon obtaining an order for that purpose, be permitted to prove at a second or further dividend, and be paid equally with the creditors under the former dividend, and it is now the practice to permit such proof without any order, and the commissioners will direct that such creditors be paid, in the first place, equal to those who have proved before, and then direct an equal distribution of the residue. 1 Cooke 521.

Formerly a creditor might recover his dividend from the assignees by action of assumpsit, and the proceedings before the commissioners was conclusive evidence of the debt. Doug. 592. But now by 49 Geo. 3. c. 121. s. 12. No action can be brought against the assignees for any dividend, but the party must apply for payment by petition to the lord chancellor.

Assignees should make a dividend as early as possible after the time given by the statute, as they will otherwise become liable to interest in case they unnecessarily retain the money. 1 Cooke 273.

In case they do not make a dividend in due time, the commissioners ought to summon them to do it. Atk. Rep. 91. ca. 39.

The Commissioners.] The lord chancellor, &c. upon complaint in writing against a bankrupt, by petition, as before prescribed, must, by commission, appoint such persons as to him shall seem good; who, or the major part of them, may at their discretion take such order with the body of such person by imprisonment, also with his lands as well copyhold as freehold, which he had in his own right before he became a bankrupt; and also with such lands as such person hath purchased for money, or other recompence, jointly with his wife or child, or to the only use of such offender; or for such use or title as such offender then shall have in the same, which he may depart withal; or with any person of trust to any secret use of such offender; and also with his money, goods, merchandize, and debts; and cause the said lands, &c. to be appraised to the best value, and by deed indented to be inrolled sell the said lands; and of all deeds touching the same, belonging to such offender; and also of all fees, offices, goods and chattels; or otherwise to order the same for satisfaction of the creditors, to every of the creditors a portion rate like according to their debts; and every direction, and other thing done, by the person so authorised, shall be good against the said offender, his wife, heirs, children, and such persons as by such joint purchase with the offenders shall have any estate or interest in the premises, and against all other persons claiming by, from, or under such offender; or by acts done after such person shall become bankrupt; and also against the lords of manors, whereof the said copyhold lands are holden, provided that every person, to whom such sale of copyhold lands shall be made, shall, before they take any profit of the same, agree with the lords of manors for such fines, as have been accustomed to be paid; and upon such agreement the lords at the next court are to admit, &c. 13 Eliz. c. 30. s. 3.

The commissioners may examine the bankrupt upon interrogatories, touching the lands, goods, debts, books of account; and such other things as may tend to disclose his estate, or secret grants, and sloining of his lands, goods, money, and debts, as they think meet. 1 Jac. c. 15. sect. 9. 5 Geo. 3. c. 30.

They may examine, as well by word of mouth as on interrogatories in writing, every bankrupt, touching all matters relating to his trade, dealings, and effects, and reduce into writing his answers had or taken before them as aforesaid, which examination, so reduced into writing, he shall sign and subscribe. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30 sect. 16.

They have power to examine his wife upon oath, for the discovery of his estate, goods, and chattels; and such wife refusing to appear, or to answer interrogatories, shall incur the same penalties, as are provided against such persons in like cases. 21 Jac. c. 19. sect. 6.

But she cannot be examined against her husband touching his bankruptcy, or whether he had committed any act of bankruptcy, or as to how and when he became bankrupt. P. W. Rep. 610. 12 Vin. Abr. 11. pl. 28.

The commissioners may examine, as well by word of mouth as on interrogatories in writing, all and every person, duly summoned before or present at any of their meetings, touching any act or acts of bankruptcy committed by him; and also take down, or reduce into writing, the answers of verbal examinations of every such person had or taken before them as aforesaid, which examination so taken down, or reduced into writing, the party examined shall sign or subscribe. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. sect. 16.

In case any such person shall refuse to answer, or shall not fully answer to their satisfaction all lawful questions put to him by them, or the major part of them, as well by word of mouth as by interrogatories in writing, or shall refuse to sign and subscribe his examination, so taken or reduced into writing as aforesaid (not having a reasonable objection either to the wording thereof, or otherwise, to be allowed by the commissioners) they may, by warrant under their hands and seals, commit him to such prison as they shall think fit, there to remain without bail or mainprize, until such time such person shall submit himself to the commissioners, and full answer make to their satisfaction to all such questions as shall be put to him as aforesaid, and sign and subscribe such examination as aforesaid, according to the true intent and meaning of this act. See Ld. Raym. 100. 2 Bur. Rep. 1125.

In case any person shall be committed by the commissioners for refusing to answer, or not fully answering any question put to him by them, by word of mouth, or on interrogatories, they shall in their warrant of commitment specify such questions. Same act, sect. 17. Atk. Rep. 209.

The commissioners may commit a bankrupt refusing to be examined, &c. till he does submit himself to be examined. Salk. 151. See Perrot's Case in 2 Bur. Rep. 1122, 1216.

The commissioners have power to examine others as to what they know of any person's carrying away any part of the bankrupt's estate. 5 Mod. 309. Comb. 391. Ld. Raym. 467. Com. Rep. 80. Ses. Cas. 335. 2 Stra. 980. See Miller's Case in Green, 235.

The commissioners have power to sell, grant, and assign the bankrupt's estate, and effects; but they cannot bring an action; for their assigns must generally bring all actions. Mod. 30.

Formerly all the goods and chattels of a bankrupt, which he was possessed of at the time of his becoming a bankrupt might be sold by the commissioners, notwithstanding the bankrupt sold them in market overt; for the sale of the commissioners only had a relation to the first act of bankruptcy: but now by 46 Geo. 3. c. 135. s. 1. all contract with a bankrupt in bona fide made two months before the date of the commission are declared to be good, and no debtor of a bankrupt shall be in danger for paying a debt due to a bankrupt before he had notice that he was a bankrupt. 1 Jac. 1. c. 15. 2 Show. Rep. 522. 7 Vin. Abr. 108. 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 396. pl. 2. Atk. Rep. 127, 157.

The creditors have a right to the bankrupts goods by the act of bankruptcy, and thereby they are bound: though until assignment by the commissioners the property is not transferred out of the bankrupt. Salk. 108. Therefore a creditor being in possession of the bankrupt goods by virtue of a Fi. fa. upon a judgment entered up after an act of bankruptcy proved, must waive the same, and come in under the commission.

The commissioners are to sell all the bankrupt lands in fee, for life, or years, and it will be binding against the bankrupt and his issue.

If a bankrupt hath lands in right of his wife, they may be sold during the coverture; but the dower of a bankrupt's wife cannot be sold, nor an estate settled to the separate use of wife and children.

They may sell all entailed lands in possession, reversion, or remainder; except entailed in the crown, of the gift of the king; and this shall bind the issue in tail, and all others which a common recovery might cut off. Stat. 21 Jac. c. 19. s. 12.

If a bankrupt grants his lands or goods in the names of other persons, the commissioners notwithstanding may make sale of them, but not lands, &c. conveyed bona fide two months before the date of the commission c. 7. s. 12 Mo. 594. pl. 805. Mar. 34. pl. Stat. 13 El. 67. 46 Geo. 3. c. 135. s. 1.

Lands held by a bankrupt in jointenancy, may be sold as to the moiety. Atk. Rep. 93. ca. 41. See Bur. Rep. 472. also lands devised to a bankrupt may be sold.

The commissioners have power to sell lands mortgaged, on tender and payment of the mortgage money. 2 Rep. 25. Com. Dig. 530. Cro. Car. 550.

Offices of inheritance may be sold, but not offices of trust annexed to the person for life. Atk. Rep. 210. ca. 217. id. 213.

If a bankrupt commits felony, his lands shall not escheat, but the commissioners may sell; and his creditors shall have his goods, not the king. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30.

The sale of bankrupt lands by the commissioners must, according to the statute, be by deed of bargain and sale inrolled.

And no purchase of lands bona fide sold, nor conveyances by bankrupts, made two calendar months previous to the date of commission, shall be impeached notwithstanding any previous act of bankruptcy, provided the person so contracting or dealing with bankrupt had no notice of any prior act of bankruptcy. 46 Geo. 3. c. 135. s. 1.

A man makes a bill of sale of some lands, and personal estate, to another, in trust to pay his debts; the trustee takes the whole into his possession, and becomes a bankrupt; his estate is not liable to the bankruptcy, either in law or equity. P. Will. Rep. 314. pl. 81.

Assignees.] The commissioners, after they have declared the person a bankrupt, are to cause notice thereof to be given in the Gazette, and appoint a time and place for the creditors to meet and chuse assignees; at which meeting the commissioners are to admit the proof of any creditor's debt, that lives remote from the place of meeting, by affidavit or affirmation; and also permit any person duly authorized by letter of attorney (oath or affirmation being made of the execution of it before a master in chancery ordinary or extraordinary, or viva voce before the commissioners, and in case of creditors residing in foreign parts, on affidavit or affirmation made before a magistrate, and which shall, together with his letter of attorney, be attested by a notary public) to vote in the choice of assignees, in the place of such creditor, and the commissioners are to assign the estate to such persons, as the major part in value of such creditors, according to the debts then proved, shall chuse; and the assignees are to keep books of account of all money and effects which they shall receive; to which book the creditors are to have free resort; no creditor or person in his behalf to vote in the choice of assignees whose debt does not amount to 10*l.* 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. sec. 26, 27.

Assignees are to pay and reimburse the petitioning creditor. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30.

Where there hath been mutual credit given, or mutual debts between the bankrupt and any other person, before the bankruptcy, the commissioners or assignees shall state the account, and one debt may be set off against another, and the balance only of such account claimed or paid. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. sect. 28.

In case of mutual credit given by the bankrupt and any other person, or mutual debts between the bankrupt and any other person, one debt or demand may be set off against another, notwithstanding any prior act of bankruptcy committed before such credit was given to bankrupt, provided it was given two calendar months before issuing commission and creditor had no notice of such act. 46 Geo. 3. c. 135. s. 3.

They may, with the consent of the major part in value of the creditors, at any meeting, pursuant to notice in the Gazette, submit any difference to arbitration. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. sect. 34.

They may, with the consent of the creditors, compound debts. s. 35.

They may, with the consent of the major part in value of the creditors, at any meeting, pursuant to notice in the Gazette, commence a suit in equity, but not without such consent. 2 Black. Com. 487. 1 Atk. Rep. 91. ca. 39. id. 107, 253.

As often as 100*l.* shall be received, they are to pay in the same in such manner and place, as the major part in value of the creditors present at the choice of assignees shall direct; and they are indemnified for what they shall do in pursuance of such direction of the creditors. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. sect. 32.

And if the creditors do not before the choice of assignees, appoint how the monies shall be paid, the commissioners shall give directions in respect thereof, see 49 Geo. 3. c. 121. s. 3. supra.

They may discharge the solicitor to the commission, and employ whom they please, and therefore the former one is to deliver up all papers, &c. on being paid his bill. 7 Vin. Abr. 117. pl. 2.

They are to reward discoverers of bankrupt's effects 5*l.* per cent. and such further reward as the major part of creditors in value, at any meeting, shall think fit. 5 Geo. 2. c. 20. sect. 20.

The assignees after assignment, may bring actions for debts due to the bankrupt in their own names. The statute of limitations will run against the assignees from the time of the original promise made to bankrupt. 1 Cooke 275.

Assignees have the benefit of covenants of re-entry into lands.

Under the assignment of the bankrupt's estate, the assignees have power to do every act, the commissioners themselves might do, for the better enabling them to recover and get in the same, for the benefit of themselves and the rest of the creditors.

They may give notice in writing to the bankrupt, after he has obtained his certificate, and the same be confirmed, to attend them to settle accounts of his estate, or to attend any court of record to be examined touching the same, or for any other business the assignees judge necessary, for getting in his estate; for which attendance the assignees must allow the bankrupt 2*s.* 6*d.* a day; and if he neglects to attend, or refuses to assist in such discovery, without good cause shewn to, and allowed by the commissioners (the assignees proving such notice, and neglect, or refusal, on oath before the commissioners) the commissioners may issue their warrant for apprehending him, and commit him to the county gaol till he does conform, and he by the commissioners or order of lord chancellor or due course of law be discharged. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. s. 36. 1 Atk. Rep. 148. pl. 8.

By virtue of the commissioners warrant they may break open chests, chambers, houses, shops, doors, &c. where he or his goods or estate shall be reputed to be, and seize upon and order the body, goods, money, &c. as to the commissioners shall be thought meet. 21 Jac. 1. c. 19. s. 8.

It is most justifiable for the assignees to act publicly in their office; as where a lease of the bankrupt's house is to be sold, to advertise the same, and sell by public sale; so of his goods and fixtures, &c. rather than by a private sale.

Assignees or solicitor to commission ought on no account to purchase, or be concerned in the purchase of any part of the bankrupt's property.

Creditors.] Every creditor of a bankrupt must prove his debt before the commissioners by himself, or by an affidavit sworn before a master, ordinary or extraordinary, in chancery, to be exhibited to and allowed by them. Stat. 21 Jac. c. 19. s. 9. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. s. 29. 1 Atk. Rep. 77.

A plaintiff that hath a defendant's body in execution who becomes bankrupt, shall not come in to be relieved by the statutes. Stone 130, 131. pl. 50. 2 Black. Com. 487. 1 Atk. Rep. 262. ca. 142. Bunb. Rep. 33. pl. 50. 202. pl. 279. 7 Vin. Abr. 104. pl. 1.

But if the plaintiff recover damages against the defendant, and hath judgment, and then the defendant becomes bankrupt, the plaintiff is a creditor; for it is a debt due to him, and action of debt lies on the judgment. Cro. Car. 166. pl. 12. If defendant becomes bankrupt before judgment, the plaintiff shall not add his costs at law to his debt. Atk. Rep. 140. ca. 81.

Costs have relation to the verdict or interlocutory judgment, therefore if there be a verdict or interlocutory judgment before bankruptcy, costs may be proved though not taxed or ascertained until after. 1 Cooke 184.

Sureties, or bail, when they have paid the debt, may come in as creditors. Com. Dig. 527. Atk. Rep. 135, 238. ca. 130. 262. ca. 141. Cro. Jac. 127. pl. 17. But mortgagees, or persons that have a pledge of the bankrupt's goods, having security for their debts in their hands, are not creditors within the statute. 2 Black. Com. 487. Com. Dig. 527.

Those that attach goods of the bankrupt are to come in as creditors.

If an executor becomes bankrupt, a legatee is to be a creditor. Com. Dig. 527. See Atk. Rep. 102. ca. 51.

Aliens, as well as denizens, may come in as creditors; for all statutes concerning bankrupts extend to aliens, who shall be subject to the laws against bankrupts. 2 Black. Com. 474, 475.

A creditor having proved his debt under a commission, has nothing further to do than to wait for an order of a dividend to be made, and to receive the same.

In the distribution of the bankrupt's estate, no respect is to be had to debts upon judgments, recognizances, or specialities, beyond other debts. 1 Atk. Rep. 183, 229, 233. 1 Bur. Rep 476, 477. After four months and distribution made, no creditor can come in to disturb it; but he may come in for the residue of which no distribution is made. Hob. Rep. 287. pl. 375.

But the court of chancery, hath sometimes allowed creditors, to come in after distribution, upon particular circumstances which have happened. And now generally, where one dividend has been made, and at the meeting for making a further or final dividend, other creditors come in and prove their debts, (as they may) the commissioners will order such creditors to be first paid a proportion, equal to the first dividend, and then the remainder of the bankrupt estate, if any, to be divided amongst all the creditors, as is just and equitable, for otherwise where such creditors debts are small, or the dividend so, such creditors had better go without, than apply to the court for payment of a proportion to be made them.

If a debtor to a bankrupt pay him his debt voluntarily, he must pay it over again; but it is otherwise in case of payment by compulsion of law. 2 Vern. 258. 3 Keb. Rep. 232. Vern. 94.

And by statute 19 Geo. 2. c. 32. no person who is bona fide a creditor of any bankrupt for or in respect of any goods bona fide sold to such bankrupt; or of any bill of exchange bona fide drawn, negociated, or accepted by such bankrupt, in the usual and ordinary course of trade, shall be liable to re-pay to the assignee any money which before the suing forth of the commission was bona fide, and in the usual course of trade, received by such person of such bankrupt, before the person receiving the same shall have notice that he is become bankrupt, or is in insolvent circumstances. Bur. Rep. 32. 7 Vin. Abr. 69. pl. 6.

If creditor receives money or bills of exchange after act of bankruptcy committed, if no notice, and bills received before commission, payment is good. 2 Ves. 550.

Creditor lending money to bankrupt after commission, was excluded from coming in, being bound to take notice of issuing of commission. See Green 132. in notes. But lending money to tradesmen, knowing them to be in distressed or dubious circumstances, on mortgages or for lives, is not fraudulent, nor the contract, in case of bankruptcy, void. Green 102. in notes.

Rent due to a landlord is a debt of the highest nature, and affects the goods, chattels, and stock of the tenant upon the premises; and (if there is no seizure made by the landlord) in the case of an execution, a year's rent is to be reserved for him, by stat. 8 Ann. c. 14. s. 1.

But in commissions of bankruptcy, it is otherwise, and no commission can remove or carry away any goods belonging to the bankrupt, if the landlord seizes for the rent before the goods are removed, and he is to be first discharged, even if there are several years rent in arrear; and even after assignment and sale by the assignees under the commission. 1 Atk. Rep. 103. ca. 54. but if the landlord does not seize before the commission of bankruptcy carries away the goods from off the premises, he must then come in as a creditor for his rent, with the rest of the bankrupt's creditors. Dav. 314 Atk. Rep. 104. ca. 55. id. 105. 2 Black. Com. 487. See Atk. Rep. 102. ca. 52, 103. ca. 53, 54. id. 104. ca. 55.

Also if there are not sufficient goods upon the premises to pay the landlord's rent, he can then only take what goods there are upon the premises, and after they are appraised and sold, as the law, in cases of distress for rent, directs; then the landlord may come in as a creditor for the rent remaining due to him, with the rest of the creditors under the commission. Ibid.

Apprentices, where the master becomes bankrupt, have no right of preference to other creditors, but the commissioners generally recommend it to the creditors, to allow a gross sum, out of the estate, for the purpose of binding them to another master. 1 Cooke 144.

Debts bearing interest,] For debts on specialty, the creditors shall have interest as well between the act of bankruptcy as before. 7 Vin. Abr. 110.

Where a bankrupt's estate is sufficient to pay every debt, with a large surplus left, creditors, whose debts carried interest, shall be allowed interest for their respective debts, from the time the computation of it was stopt by the commissioners, and the bankrupt or his representatives will be chargeable therewith: but such as are creditors by bond, not beyond their penalties. 1 Atk. Rep. 75. ca. 29.

There is no such rule, "that all interest on debts carrying interest shall cease from the time of issuing the commission." 1 Atk. Rep. 79, 244. ca. 132.

Where there is mutual credit between bankrupt and creditor, the commissioners ought to stop interest on both sides at the time of the bankruptcy, or compute interest on both till settling the account. 1 Atk. Rep. 80.

Interest on debts that carry interest shall be carried down to the date of the commission; but on a special deposit of goods or stock, interest stops from the time of the deposit, and a calculation shall be made of the value of the whole entire thing deposited, both principal and interest, be it stock or goods, according to the market price at the time of the deposit. Atk. Rep. 259. ca. 139.

If a trader, being indebted on simple contract, pledges goods for the payment, and promises interest, such creditor shall have interest, even between the act of bankruptcy and the commission. 7 Vin. Abr. 110.

A mortgagee shall have his interest run on, upon a bankrupt estate, because he hath a right in rem, but as to other interest it ceaseth on the bankruptcy. Id. ib. If mortgage is not adequate to payment of principal and interest, the mortgagee must apply by petition to have the security sold, and to be admitted a creditor for deficiency, but the interest is only to be calculated up to the date of commission. 1 Cooke 181.

The Bankrupt.] If a bankrupt shall not within forty-two days after notice in writing, left at his usual place of abode, or personal notice if he be in prison, and notice in the London Gazette, surrender himself to the commissioners, and subscribe the surrender, and submit himself to be examined upon oath, or affirmation, and discover all his effects, how he has disposed thereof (and all books, papers, and writings relating to the same) of which he was possessed, or interested, or whereby he has, or may expect, any possibility of advantage, (except such part as shall have been bonâ fide disposed of in the way of his trade, and except such money as shall have been laid out in the ordinary expense of himself and family) and also deliver up to the commissioners such part of his effects, and all books and writings relating thereto, as shall be in his power, (except the necessary wearing apparel of himself, his wife and children) and if he conceals or embezzles his estate to the value of 20*l.* or any books of account relating thereto, with intent to defraud his creditors, being convicted thereof by judgment or information, he is guilty of felony without clergy, and his goods and estate shall go among his creditors; and the commissioners are to appoint, within the 42 days, not less than three meetings, the last to be on the 42d day limited for his appearance, and three weeks notice is to be given in the Gazette of the time and place of such meeting. The lord chancellor, &c. may enlarge the time for such surrender and discovery, not exceeding 50 days from the end of the said 42 days (so as the order for enlarging the time be made in six days before the time on which the bankrupt is to surrender himself). 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. s. 1, 2, 3.

The act says 50 days, but the lord chancellor's order is for 49 days, because the 50th day may happen to fall on a Sunday; and is made on the bankrupt's petition.

Where a bankrupt did not surrender himself in due time, and there did not appear to be any intention of defrauding his creditors, lord chancellor Macclesfield, in several instances, superseded the commission in order to prevent such a prosecution Atk. Rep. 222.

And lord chancellor Hardwicke would not order the clerk of the commission to attend at the Old Bailey, with the proceedings upon a prosecution against the bankrupt for felony, in not surrendering himself according to the directions of the act of parliament. 1 Atk. Rep. 221. ca. 123.

Also if by an innocent default of the bankrupt he has neglected to surrender himself upon the day appointed, the lord chancellor may, upon petition, make order for the commissioners to be at liberty to appoint a new day for taking the examination. 1 Cooke, 434.

If a bankrupt is fearful of being arrested, on coming to surrender himself, he may apply to the commissioners for a warrant of protection for his person, which they will grant him, and which will secure his person from arrest and imprisonment till the time of his last examination, whether within the forty-two days or forty-nine days.

If the commissioners adjourn the last examination, the bankrupt's protection continues. 1 Cooke, 115. Bankrupt is protected against an attachment for non-payment of money, but not against being rendered by his bail. Ib. 119.

Bankrupt has no right to be maintained out of his effects during examination. 1 T. R. 157.

Upon the certificate of the commissioners that the commission is issued, and the person proved a bankrupt, the justices of K. B. C. P. and the barons of the exchequer and justices of the peace in England, Wales, or Berwick upon Tweed, on application, are to grant warrants for apprehending such person, and commit him to the gaol of the county where apprehended, there to remain until he be removed by order of the commissioners. And the gaoler must give notice to one of the commissioners of his being in custody, and the commissioners may seize the effects of such bankrupt (except the necessary apparel of himself, wife and children), and his books and writings which shall be then in his custody, or of any person in prison; and if any person so apprehended shall, within the time allowed, submit to be examined and conform as if he had surrendered, he shall have the same benefit as if he had voluntarily come in. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. s. 14, 15.

If the bankrupt be in custody at the time of issuing the commission, and is willing to submit to be examined, and can be brought before the commissioners and creditors, the expence thereof shall be paid out of the bankrupt estate: and whether he is in custody on mesne process only, or in execution, he may now be brought before the commissioners by their warrant, in order to make his discovery. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. s. 6. 49 Geo. 3. c. s. 13.

And the assignees are to appoint persons to attend such bankrupt in prison, and to prepare his books and writings in order to prepare his discovery; a copy whereof the assignees shall apply for, and the bankrupt shall deliver the same to their order ten days before the last examination. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. s. 6.

Bankrupt having surrendered, may at seasonable times, before the expiration of the forty-two days, or such further time as shall be allowed him to finish his examination, inspect his books and writings in the presence of some person to be appointed by the assignees, and bring with him for his assistance such persons as he shall think fit, not exceeding two at a time, and make extracts and copies, to enable him to make discovery of his effects. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. s. 5.

A bankrupt is free from arrests in going and coming to surrender himself to the commissioners, and from actual surrender for forty-two days, or such further time as shall be allowed him to finish his examination, provided he was not in custody at the time of surrender; and if he be arrested for debt, or on any escape warrant, coming to surrender, or after his surrender within that time, then on producing the summons or notice under the hands of the commissioners or assignees, and giving the officer a copy thereof, he shall be discharged; and if any officer detain such bankrupt he shall forfeit to the bankrupt, for his own use, 5*l.* for every day he detains him; and if any commission of bankruptcy, shall issue against any person, who shall have been discharged by virtue of this act, or shall have compounded with his creditors, or delivered to them his effects, and been released by them, or been discharged by any act of insolvency, then the body only of such person shall be free from arrest and imprisonment. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. s. 9.

If a bankrupt, upon examination, be found to have fraudulently conveyed his goods, lands, or other estate to the value of 20*l.* to hinder the execution of the statutes, or to defraud creditors, and shall not upon examination discover, and if in his power deliver, to the commissioners, all the estate so conveyed or detained, or that he cannot make appear, that he has had some casual loss, whereby he is disabled to pay what he owed, he may be indicted for such fraud or abuse at the assizes or sessions of peace, and if convicted set in the pillory for two hours, and have one of his ears nailed to the pillory, and cut off. 21 Jac. 1. c. 19. sec. 7.

For an encouragement to bankrupts duly to submit and conform, an allowance is appointed them out of their estate, viz. 5*l.* per cent. if the net produce that shall be received after such allowance is sufficient to pay 10*s.* in the pound, so as such allowance does not amount to above 200*l.* and if the net produce be sufficient to pay 12*s.* 6*d.* in the pound, to be allowed 7*l.* 10*s.* per cent. so as such allowance does not amount to above 250*l.* and if the net produce be sufficient to pay 15*s.* in the pound, to be allowed 10*l.* per cent. so as such allowance does not amount to above 300*l.* and every such bankrupt, to be discharged from all debts, owing at the time he became a bankrupt; and if he be impleaded for any debt due before he became a bankrupt, he shall be discharged upon common bail, and may plead in general that the cause of action accrued before he became bankrupt, and the certificate of his conforming, and the allowance thereof, shall be sufficient evidence of the trading, bankruptcy, commission, and other proceedings precedent to the obtaining such certificate, unless the plaintiff can prove the said certificate was obtained unfairly, or make appear any concealment by such bankrupt to the value of 10*l.* But if the net produce does not amount to 10*s.* in the pound, he is to be allowed, so much only, as the assignees and commissioners think fit, not exceeding 8*l.* per cent. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. s. 7, 8.

But no discovery entitles the bankrupt to the benefits of this act unless the major part of the commissioners certify to the lord chancellor that he has made a full discovery, and in all things conformed himself, and that there is no doubt of the truth of such discovery, and unless (three parts in five, both in number and value, of the creditors, 49 Geo. 3. c. . s. 18.) who must be creditors for not less than 20*l.* respectively, or some other person by them duly authorized, sign such certificate: but the commissioners are not to certify till they have proof, by affidavit or affirmation in writing, of such creditors signing the said certificate, and of the power by which any person is authorized to sign for any creditor, (which affidavit or affirmation, together with such authority to sign, shall be laid before the lord chancellor, &c. with the said certificate) and unless such bankrupt make oath or affirmation in writing that such certificate was obtained without fraud; and unless such certificate be allowed by the lord chancellor, &c. or by such two of the justices of K. B. and C. P. or barons of the exchequer, to whom the consideration of such certificate is referred by the lord chancellor, and any of the creditors are to be heard, if they think fit, against the making the certificate, and against the confirmation thereof. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. s. 10.

Formerly the judges had the cognizance of certificates, but being found inconvenient, the great seal hath taken it to itself, 1 Atk. Rep. 87.

If a bankrupt who has obtained commissioners certificate of his conformity be taken in execution, or imprisoned on account of any debt, owing before he became a bankrupt, by reason, that judgment was obtained before certificate allowed, a judge of the court, wherein judgment was obtained, on the bankrupt's producing the certificate allowed, may order any sheriff or gaoler to discharge him without fee. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. sec. 13.

But the discharge of a bankrupt, from debts owing by him when he became a bankrupt, shall not discharge him, who was his partner in trade, or stood jointly bound, or had made any joint contract with such bankrupt. 10 An. c. 15. s. 3.

Certificate.] In order, for a bankrupt to obtain his certificate, he should apply to the solicitor under the commission, or some other solicitor, to prepare his examination, and likewise draw up, and ingross his certificate, which three parts in five of his creditors (who are creditors for not less than 20*l.*) both in number and value must sign; for which purpose it is advisable for him to have some person to attend with the certificate at the third sitting, who with himself may request such creditors, as then appear to sign the same; this person must see them sign it, because he must make an affidavit thereof, before the commissioners will sign it; when he has got all the hands he can at this sitting, the same or any other person, may go round with him to the rest, and the persons who saw the same signed must make an affidavit thereof before a master in chancery, which being produced to the commissioners, they will compute the number of creditors, and the amount of their debts, and those who have signed; and if it appears that three parts in five, both in number and value, have signed the certificate, they will also then sign it; the bankrupt ought to have a meeting of the commissioners, at his own expense, on purpose to have it signed by them; though upon application to the commissioners, and on payment of their fees, when sitting at Guildhall, they will sign it; the affidavit or affidavits of seeing the creditors sign, as also any letter of attorney to authorize any one to sign for them, must be exhibited to the commissioners.

The bankrupt having his certificate signed by his creditors, and certified by the commissioners, by their signing thereof, is then to make an affidavit before a master in chancery of his having obtained the same fairly and without fraud; and the certificate, with the several affidavits and letters of attorney (if any), must be left at the secretary of bankrupts, who gives an authority for inserting the allowance of the certificate in the Gazette; and at the expiration of 21 days after, the lord chancellor will (if no cause shown) allow the certificate.

If it is intended to oppose the allowance of a certificate, a petition for that purpose must be lodged at the secretary of bankrupts before the time appointed for the allowance, and the bankrupt must also be served with the same, that he may have an opportunity of answering it, and the certificate is thereupon stayed until the hearing of the petition; and if an order is made to stay certificate, such order must be drawn up within three months, or the certificate will be allowed. Lord Chancellor's Order, 22 March, 1796.

A creditor only can petition; and any one may, though his debt is under 20*l.* 1 Cooke, 463.

All affidavits in support of petition to stay certificate shall be brought into the office, together with the petition, except such as shall be necessary in reply to affidavits in answer to it. Lord Chancellor's Order, 16 Nov. 1805.

Future effects.] If any person, declared a bankrupt by virtue of this act, shall at any time after purchase lands or chattels, or any lands or chattels shall descend or come to such bankrupts before their debts shall be fully satisfied or agreed for, the said lands and chattels shall by the commissioners be bargained, sold, extended, delivered and used for the payment of the said creditors, in like manner as other the lands and chattels of the said bankrupts. 13 Eliz. c. 7. sec. 11.

In case any commission of bankruptcy shall issue against any person, who after the 24th of June, 1732, shall have been discharged by virtue of this act, or shall have compounded with his creditors, or delivered to them his estate or effects, and been released by them, or discharged by any act for the relief of insolvent debtors, after the time aforesaid, then his future estate and effects only shall remain liable to his creditors, (his tools of trade, necessary household goods and furniture, and his necessary wearing apparel, and of his wife and children, only excepted) unless his estate shall produce clear, after all charges, sufficient to pay every one of his creditors 15*s.* in the pound for their respective debts. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. sec. 9.

Upon motion for a new trial, the court held, that though, under the said statute, the future effects of a bankrupt, against whom two commissions had issued, were liable to be seized for the benefit of creditors, yet the bankrupt, had in the mean time such a property in them, as enabled him, to transact and sell to a bonâ fide purchaser. Askley v. Kell, 2 Stra. 1207.

Supersedeas.] In order to supersede a commission of bankruptcy with the assent of the creditors, a petition must be ingrossed, and signed by all the bankrupt's creditors (be the debt ever so small) then lodged at the secretary of bankrupt's office: this petition requires no attendance, it is only to be served (with the lord chancellor's, &c. order thereon) upon all parties concerned.

The bankrupt must sign the prayer of the petition, and there must likewise be an affidavit of seeing the bankrupt sign, as also of the creditors signing their consent to the prayer of the bankrupt's petition.

But a commission of bankrupt cannot be superseded before the bankrupt has surrendered. 11 Vesey, jun. 409.

Solicitor.] All bills of fees or disbursements demanded by any solicitor employed under any commission of bankrupts, (that is, after the choice of assignees) shall be settled by one of the masters in chancery, and the master who shall settle such bill shall have for his care in settling the same, as also for his certificate thereof, 20*s* 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. s. 46.

The clerk to a commission may be discharged by the assignees, for they are trustees for the creditors, and may employ whom they please; and therefore the former clerk was ordered to deliver up all papers on being paid his bill. 7 Vin. Abr. 117. pl. 2.

BANKS, no town or freeman shall be distrained to make banks or bridges, but such as of old time have been used to make them. Stat. 9 H. 5. c. 15. See also Bridges and Felony.

BANNIMUS, the form of an expulsion of any member from the University of Oxford, by affixing the sentence in some public places, as a denunciation or promulgation of it. And the word banning is taken for an exclamation against, or cursing of another. Cozel. Blount.

BANNITUS, an outlaw, or banished man. Ibid.

BANNIATUS FORTIS, is used in the same sense as bannitus, signifying one outlawed or judicially banished.

BANNUM VEL BANLEUGA, the utmost bounds of a manor, or town, so used 47 Hen. 3. Rot. 44, &c. Banleuga de Arundel is taken for all that is comprehended within the limits or lands adjoining, and so belonging to the castle or town. Seld. Hist. of Tythes, p. 75. Cozel. Blount.

BARATRY. See Barratry.

BARBERS, were incorporated with the surgeons of London; but not to practise surgery, except drawing of teeth, &c. 32 H. 8. c. 42. but separated by 18 Geo. 2. c. 15.

BARBICAN, (barbicanum) a watch-tower, or bulwark. Cowel. Blount.

BARBICANAGE, (barbicanagium) money given for the maintenance of a barbican, or watch-tower; or a tribute towards the repairing or building a bulwark. Cowel. Blount.

BARCA, a barque: navis mercatorum & quæ merces exportat. Gloss. Sax. Ælfrici, a flotship. Ibid.

BARGAIN AND SALE of lands. A bargain and sale in this respect is a contract in consideration of money, passing an estate in lands, tenements, and hereditaments, by deed indented and involled. 2 Inst. 672.

This mode of conveying lands is created and established by the 27 Hen. 8. c. 10. which executes all uses raised: but as this introduced a more secret mode of conveyancing, than that known to the policy of the common law, namely, the conveyance by feoffment with livery and seisin, the enrolment of the deed of bargain and sale, was made necessary by the 16th chapter of the same statute.

The stat. 27 Hen. 8. c. 10. enacts, that "where "any person is seised of, or in any lands to the "use, confidence or trust of any other person "or body politic, by reason of any bargain, "sale, feoffment or the like, such persons that "have any such use, shall be deemed in lawful seisin, estate, and possession thereof, to "all intents and purposes, of or in such like "estates, as they have in the use, and the "estate, right and possession of him so "seised to any use, shall be deemed and adjudged in him or them, which have the "use after such quality, manner, &c. as "they had before in or to the use."

But by 27 Hen. 8. c. 16. "no manors, "lands, tenements, or other hereditaments, "shall pass from one to another, whereby "any estate of inheritance of freehold shall "be made or take effect, or any use thereof "to be made by reason only of any bargain and "sale, except by writing indented, sealed, "and enrolled in one of the courts at West"minster, or else within the county where "the lands lie, before the custos rotulorum, and "two justices of the peace, and clerk of "the peace or two of them, whereof the "clerk of the peace to be one; the same in"rolment to be made within six months [of "28 days, Dyer 907.] after the date of the "same writing indented. Provided this act "extends not to any lands lying within any "city, borough, &c. wherein the mayors, "&c. or other officers have used to enrol "deeds within their limits."

And by 5 Eliz. c. 26. "bargains and "sales of lands being within six months en"rolled in the courts of the counties pala"tine of Lancaster, Chester, or Durham, shall "be as effectual as if enrolled in any of the "courts at Westminster."

The six months limited by these statutes for the enrolment of bargains and sales, are to be reckoned as lunar months, viz. after 28 days to the month, the day of the date taken exclusively. Dyer 90. 7 Rep. 40. 2 Bu's. 8.

But the general method now used to convey estates, (except where it is otherwise directed by act of parliament, as in the case of the sale of lands to redeem land-tax, and the like) is by lease and release, whereby the possession and fee immediately pass without inrolment.

BARGAIN AND SALE of goods. There is a bargain and sale also, where a man makes a contract with another for the sale of goods or chattels and at the same time makes the sale of them. Com. Dig. tit. Bar. and Sale, for which see Bills of sale.

BARGAINS, catching. See Catching Bargains.

BARKARY, (barkaria, corticulus) a tan-house, or place to keep bark in for the use of tanners. Cowel. Blount.

BARON, hath divers significations here in England. First, it is taken for a degree of nobility next to a viscount. Bracton, lib. 1. cap. 8.

There are also barons by office; as the barons of the Exchequer, barons of the Cinque Ports, &c. for which see the proper heads.

BARONY, (baronia) is that honour and territory which gives title to a baron; comprehending not only the fees and lands of temporal barons, but of bishops also, who have two estates; one as they are spiritual persons, by reason of their spiritual revenues and promotions: the other grew from the bounty of our English kings, whereby they have baronies and lands added to their spiritual livings and preferments. The baronies belonging to bishops are by some called regalia, because ex sola liberalitate regum eis olim concessa, & a regibus in feudum tenenter. Blount. Barony. Bracton, says (lib 2. cap. 34.) is a right indivisible, and therefore, if an inheritance be to be divivided, among coparceners, though some capital messuages may be divided, yet, si capitale messuagium, si caput comitatus, vel caput baroniæ, they may not be parcelled. In antient times thirteen knight fees and a quarter made a tenure per baronium, which amounted to 400 marks per annum.

BARONET, (baronettus) is a dignity or degree of honour, of inheritance, created by letters patent, and usually descendible to the issue male: it hath precedency before all knights, except bannerets, made sub vexillis regiis in exercitu regali in aperto bello, & ipso rege personaliter præsente. (See Banneret.) This order of baronets was instituted by king James I. in the year 1611, with such precedency as aforesaid, and other privileges, in order to raise a competent sum for the reduction of the province of Ulster, and 100 gentlemen advanced each 1000*l.* for the grant of this title to them: for this reason, all baronets have the arms of Ulster, viz. a hand gules, or a bloody hand in a field argent, superadded to their family coat. Their number at first was to be but two hundred; but now they are without limitation. Cowel. Blount. 1 Black. 404.

BARON AND FEME, are husband and wife by our law; and they are adjudged but one person: that is, the very being or legal existence of the woman, is suspended during the marriage, or at least is incorporated and consolidated into that of the husband: under whose wing, protection, and cover, she performs every thing, and is therefore called in our law French, a feme covert; fœmina viro co-operta: she is said to be covert-baron or under the protection and influence of her husband, her baron or lord, and her condition during her marriage, is called her coverture. 1 Black. 442.

And professor Christian in a note hereon, observes, that whatever may be the origin of feme covert, it is not perhaps wholly unworthy of notice, that it nearly corresponds in its signification to the Latin word nupta; derived a nubendo, i. e. tegendo, because the modesty of the bride, it is said, was so much consulted by the Romans, upon that delicate occasion, that she was led to her husband's home covered with a veil. 1 Black. 442. n. 15.

Upon this principle of an union of person in husband and wife, a man cannot grant any thing to his wife, or enter into covenant with her, for the grant would be to suppose her separate existence, and to covenant with her, would be only to covenant with himself. Co. Lit. 112.

But the husband may grant to the wife by the intervention of trustees, and he may surrender a copyhold to her use. Co. Lit. 30. 4 Co. 29.

Upon this principle, it is also generally true, that all contracts and agreements made between husband and wife, while single, are avoided by the intermarriage. Cro. Car. 551.

A woman may, however, be attorney for her husband, for that implies no separation, but is rather a representation of her baron or lord. Fitz. N. B. 27. and a husband may also bequeath any thing to his wife by will, for that cannot take effect till the coverture is determined by his death. Co. Lit. 112.

Power of the husband.] The husband hath, by law, power and dominion over his wife, and may keep her by force within the bounds of duty: and he may correct or beat her, but not in a violent or cruel manner, for in such case, or if he but threaten to beat her outrageously, or use her barbarously, she may make him find surety of the peace, by suing a writ of supplicavit out of Chancery, or by preferring articles of the peace against him in the court of King's Bench, or before the justices of the peace, or she may apply to the spiritual court for a divorce propter sæviliam. Crom. 28, 136. F. N. B, 80. Hetl. 149. cont. 1 Sid. 113, 116. Dalt. c. 68. Lamb. 78. Crom. 133. 1 Hawk. P. C. 253.

But a wife cannot, either by herself or her prochein amy, bring a homine replegiando against her husband, for he has by law a right to the custody of her, and may, if he think fit, confine her, but he must not imprison her: if he does, it will be a good cause for her to apply to the spiritual court for a divorce propter saevitiam; and the nature and proceedings in the writ de homine replegiando shew that it cannot be maintained by the wife against her husband. Prec. in Ch. 492.

However in cases of unreasonable and improper confinement, the court will relieve the wife on habeas corpus, Ld. Ferrers' case, 1 Bur. 634. and if upon the return of an habeas corpus sued out by the husband, to bring up the wife, it appears that he hath used her ill, and she exhibit articles of the peace against him, the court will not order her to be delivered to him. 4 Bur. 1991. And a wife separated by articles, in consideration of money received by the husband, with covenants from him, cannot be seized by him or forced to live with him. Bur. 542. 1 Str. 478.

From the time of the intermarriage, the law looks upon the husband and wife, but as one person, and where one alone but of one will between them which is placed in the husband, as the fittest and aptest to provide for and govern the family, and for this reason, the law gives the husband an absolute power of disposing of her personal property, no act of hers being of any force, to affect, or transfer that, which by the intermarriage she hath resigned to him. 2 Rol. Abr. 347. 10 Co. 42. 2 Inst. 510. Sid.

Thus, all the personal estate, as money, goods, cattle household furniture, and the like, that were the property and in the possession of the wife at the time of the marriage, are actually vested in the husband; so that of these he may make any disposition in his life time without her consent, or may by will, bequeath them, and they shall without any such disposition go to the executors or administrators of the husband, and not the wife, though she survive him. Dr. & Stud. Di. 1. c. 7. Co. Lit. 351.

And so it is of all chattels real, as a term for years, mortgages, estates by statute merchant, statute, staple, elegit and the like, of which he may in like manner dispose. 7 H. 62. Roll. Abr. 341. Co. Lit. 351. 2 Atk. 208. 1 Peere Wms. 407, 8.

But the freehold and inheritance of the wife is subject to other rules and regulations: for the husband, by the marriage, does not become absolute proprietor of the inheritance; but as the governor of the family, is so far the master of it, as to receive the profits of it during her life: therefore if a man marries a woman seized in fee, he gains a freehold in right of his wife during her life, but hath no power to make an absolute sale of it, without her consent. Co. Lit. 351. Doug. 329.

The law gives him the same right also over any real estate accruing to the wife during coverture, as if she were seised of it before marriage; so of chattels real accruing to the wife: it also gives him an absolute power over any personal estate or interest accruing to the wife by gift, devise or her labour. Co. Lit 351. Salk 115. Carth. 251.

And where an executor paid a legacy to a feme covert, who lived separate from her husband, on a bill filed against the executor, he was decreed to pay it over again with interest. Salk. 115. Vern. 261.

Debts contracted by the wife before marriage.] In general, the husband is liable to the wife's debts, contracted before marriage, whether he had any portion with her or not; and this the law presumes reasonable, because, by the marriage, he husband acquires an absolute interest, in the personal estate of the wife, and has the receipt of the rents and profits of her real estate, during coverture; and that no person's act should prejudice another the law makes the husband liable to those debts with which he took her attached. F. N. B. 265. 20 Hen. 6. 22 b. Moor 468. 1 Rol. Abr. 352. 3 Mod. 186.

But the debts must be recovered against the husband during the life of the wife, and therefore if a feme sole indebted, marries, and dies, the husband shall not be charged with her debts afterwards. 10 H. 6. 10, 12. 20 H. 6 22. Roll Abr. 351.

So, though there be a judgment in debt, against a feme sole, and she afterwards marry and die; the baron shall not be charged therewith, for he is not liable to her debts before coverture, unless recovered in her life time. 3 Mod. 186.

If baron and feme are sued on the wife's bond, entered into by the feme before marriage, and judgment is had thereupon, and his wife dies before execution, yet the husband is liable; for the judgment has altered the debt. 1 Sid. 337.

And if there is any of the wife's personal property, which he did not reduce into possession before her death, which he must afterwards recover as her administrator, he will to the extent of the value of that property, be liable to pay his wife's debts dum sola, which remain undischarged during the coverture. 1 Peere Wms. 468.

Maintenance.] The husband is obliged to maintain his wife in necessaries: yet they must be according to his degree and his estate, to charge him; and necessaries may be suitable to a husband's degree of quality, but not to his estate; also they may be necessaries, but not ex necessitate to charge the husband. 1 Mod. 129. 1 Nels. Abr. 354. If a woman buys things for her necessary apparel, though without the consent of her husband, yet the husband shall be bound to pay it. Brownl. 47. And if the wife buys any thing for herself, children, or family, and the baron does any act precedent or subsequent whereby he shews his consent, he may be charged thereupon. 1 Sid. 120. Though the wife is very lewd, if she cohabits with her husband, he is chargeable for all necessaries for her, because he took her for better for worse: and so he is if he runs away from her, or turns her away: but if she goes away from her husband, or lives in adultery with another man, then as soon as such separation or adultery is notorious, whoever gives her credit doth it at his peril, and the husband is not liable even for necessaries, unless he take her again. 1 Salk. 119. 1 Lev. 5.

And Ld. Kenyon has held at nisi prius, that if a husband gives notice to a particular tradesman, not to deal with his wife, unless she brings ready money, that tradesman cannot maintain an action against the husband, even for necessaries. 1 Black. 442. n. 17. And what are necessaries must be ascertained by a jury from the rank and circumstances of the husband. Ibid.

But a prohibition in general, by putting her in the newspapers, is no legal notice not to trust her. 1 Vent. 42.

Although a husband be bound to pay his wife's debts for her reasonable provision, yet if she parts from him, especially by reason of any misbehaviour, and he allows her a maintenance, he shall never be charged with her debts, till a new cohabitation. Mod. Cas. 147, 171.

Where this is a separation by consent, and the wife hath a separate allowance, those who trust her, knowing of such separation and maintenance, do it upon her own credit. 1 Salk. 116. If a husband makes his wife an allowance for clothes, &c. which is constantly paid her, it is said he shall not be charged. 1 Sid. 109.

Crimes committed by the wife.] The will of the wife is subject to that of the husband; so that if they commit a felony together, she shall be neither principal nor accessary, for it shall be presumed, that this was by the coercion of the husband. F. N. B. 188.

But if husband and wife commit treason or murder, they shall be both found guilty, and the wife shall not be discharged, on presumption that it was by coercion of the husband. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 47. So if she commit a theft of her own voluntary act, or by the bare command of her husband, she is punishable as much as if she was sole, for a wife for her own personal crimes may be indicted without her husband. 9 Rep. 72. H. P. C. 65. Dalt. 27, 104. Ass. pl. 40. Fitz. Coron. 199.

And a feme covert, generally shall answer, as much as if she were sole, for any offence not capital against the common law or statute; and if it be of such nature, that it may be committed by her alone, without the concurrence of her husband, as by keeping a bawdy-house or the like, she may be punished for it without the husband by way of indictment, which being a proceeding grounded merely on the breach of the law, the husband shall not be included in it, for any offence to which he is no way privy. 9 Co. 71. Hawk. P. C. 3. See Moor 813. Hob. 93. Noy 103. Savil. 25. Cro. Jac. 482. 11 Co. 61.

Where a wife shall be considered as a feme sole.] A husband who has abjured the realm, or who is banished, is thereby civiliter mortuus; and being disabled to sue or be sued in right of his wife, she must be considered as a feme sole; for it would be unreasonable that she should be remediless on her part, and equally hard on those who had any demands on her, that not being able to have any redress from the husband, they should not have any against her. Bro. Baron and Feme, 66. Co. Lit. 133. 1 Rol. Rep. 400. Moor 851. 3 Bulst. 188. 1 Bulst. 140. 2 Vern. 104.

Where a married man is transported for any felony, the wife may be sued alone, for any debt contracted by her, after the transportation. So determined in a case before Mr. Justice Yates, at Carlisle, and afterwards in another case, before Lord Mansfield, in Kent, and both determinations acquiesced in. Morgan's Ed. of Jac.

And by the custom of London, if a feme covert trades by herself, in a trade with which her husband does not intermeddle, she may sue and be sued as a feme sole 10 Mod. 6.

In the case of a divorce, á mensa et thoro of which alimony is a consequence, the wife, it seems, becomes solely responsible to creditors. Co. Bank. L. 32.

And it hath been holden, that a wife who had a copyhold estate to her separate use, and lived separate from her husband, could surrender the same without her husband, he having, upon the separation, covenanted to join in the necessary conveyance of such estates, and to such uses as she should appoint. 1 Hen. Black. 334.

But it is in a court of equity where a feme covert is usually, and where, perhaps only, she can be properly considered as a feme sole; it being competent to this court to act upon her property in the hands of her trustees, and therefore to treat her as having interests and obligations distinct from those of her husband: if therefore, she claims any rights in opposition to those claimed by her husband, or if she lives separate from him, or disapproves the defence he wishes her to make, she may, in equity, obtain an order to defend a suit separately. If a husband is plaintiff in a suit and makes his wife a defendant, he is considered as thereby renouncing his marital right over her, and she is allowed to answer separately, without an order of the court for that purpose, and as she may defend a suit against her husband, so she may institute a suit against him But the bill must be exhibited in her name, by her prochein amy or next friend, though she may defend without such protection, and the court will not permit a bill to be filed by any one without her consent. 1 Bac. Abr. Ed. 1807. p. 506, 7.

The general grounds upon which equity allows a wife to institute a suit against her husband, are where any thing is given to her separate use; or the husband refuseth to perform marriage articles, or articles for a separate maintenance; or where the wife having been deserted by her husband, hath during his absence acquired by her labour a separate property, of which he hath plundered her: and it will decree a specific performance of articles at the suit of the wife, though the husband offer to take her back again, if it appear that a perpetual separation was intended by the parties: but not so, where the separation is merely temporary, or there hath been a subsequent cohabitation: nor is it any answer to such a suit that his wife hath been guilty even of adultery: however in most cases where a wife comes into equity to support her possession independent of her husband, it must be a meritorious ground to entitle her to relief; and therefore the court will not decree maintenance where there is full proof of elopement and adultery. Ibid. 506.

When the property of a wife is in the power of a court of equity, it will not part with it, unless the husband make a proper settlement, or the wife upon examination in court, consent to his receiving it; and it will even prevent him from receiving the interest, that it may accumulate for her benefit, and it hath gone so far, as to restrain him. from proceeding in the spiritual court, for the wife's portion arising out of personal estate, because that court cannot oblige him to make an adequate provision on her. Finch. 143. 2 Pere Wms. 639. 3 Pere Wms. 12, 205. 1 Sh. 238. 1 Vern. 538. 3 Atk. 22.

And courts of equity will not allow a feme covert to part with her separate personal estate, without a previous examination and consent in court, in analogy to the caption of a fine at law, and such is the course of the court, where the trustees put the parties to file a bill. 1 Pere Wms. 768. 2 Atk. 67, 448, 452. 1 Anst. 277. 2 Vez. Jun. 448.

And in all instances, where the wife's examination and consent are taken, it must be personally in court, or if she is abroad by dedimus, as in the case of a fine. 2 Vez. 60. 3 Bro. Ch. Ca. 237.

However, if trustees pay the wife's separate fortune to the husband, it is irrecoverable. Pr. Ch. 414. 4 Br. Ch. Rep. 326.

BAR, or BARR, (Lat. barra, and in Fr. barre) in a legal sense, is a plea or peremptory exception of a defendant, sufficient to destroy the plaintiff's action. And it is divided into bar to common intendment, and bar special; bar temporary, and perpetual: bar to a common intendment is an ordinary or general bar, which usually is a bar to the declaration of the plaintiff: bar special is that which is more than ordinary, and falls out upon some special circumstance of the fact, as to the case in hand. Terms de Ley.

Bar temporary is such a bar that is good for the present, but may afterwards fail: and bar perpetual is that which overthrows the action of the plaintiff for ever. Plowd. 26. But a plea in bar, not giving a full answer to all the matter contained in the plaintiff's declaration is not good. 1 Lill. Abr. 211. If one be barred by plea to the writ, or to the action of the writ, he may have the same writ again, or his right action: but if the plea in bar, be to the action itself, and the plaintiff is barred by judgment, &c. it is a bar for ever in personal actions. 6 Rep. 7. And a recovery in debt is a good bar to action on the case for the same thing: also a recovery on assumpsit in case, is a good bar in debt, &c. Cro. Jac. 110. 4 Rep. 94.

In all actions personal, as debt, account, &c. a bar is perpetual, and in such case the party hath no remedy, but by writ of error or attaint; but if a man is barred in a real action, or judgment, yet he may have an action of as high a nature, because it concerns his inheritance; as for instance, if he is barred in a formedon in descender, yet he may have a formedon in the remainder, &c. 6 Rep. 7. It has been resolved, that a bar in any action real or personal by judgment upon demurrer, verdict, or confession, is a bar to that action, or any action of the like nature for ever: but, according to Pemberton chief justice, this is to be understood, when it doth appear that the evidence in one action would maintain the other; for otherwise the court shall intend that the party hath mistaken his action. Skin. 57, 58.

Bar to a common intent is good: and if an executor be sued for his testator's debt, and he pleadeth, that he had no goods left in his hands, at the day the writ was taken out against him, this is a good bar to a common intendment, till it is shewn, that there are goods; but if the plaintiff can shew by way of replication, that more goods have fallen into his hands since that time, then, except the defendant allege a better bar, he shall be condemned in the action. Plowd. 26. Kitch. 215. Bro. tit. Barre.

There is a bar material, and a bar at large: bar material may be also called special bar; as when one, in stay of the plaintiff's action, pleadeth some particular matter, viz. a descent from him that was owner of the land, &c. a feffment made by the ancestor of the plaintiff, or the like: a bar at large is, when the defendant, by way of exception, doth not traverse the plaintiff's title, by pleading, nor confess, nor avoid it, but only makes to himself a title in his bar. Kitch. 68. 5 H. 7. 29.

This word bar is likewise used for the place where serjeants and counsellors at law stand to plead the causes in court; and where prisoners are brought to answer their indictments, &c. whence our lawyers, that are called to the bar, are termed barristers. 24 H. 8. c. 24.

See Abatement, Action, Judgment, Pleading, &c.

BARRASTER, BARRISTER, (barrasterius) is a counsellor learned in the law, admitted to plead at the bar, and there to take upon him the protection and defence of clients. Fortesc. The time before they ought to be called to the bar, by the ancient orders, was eight years, now reduced to five; and the exercises done by them (if they were not called ex gratia) were twelve grand moots performed in the inns of Chancery in the time of the grand readings, and twenty-four petty moots in the term times, before the readers of the respective inns: and a barrister newly called was to attend the six (or four) next long vacations the exercise of the house, viz. in Lent and Summer, and was thereupon for those three (or two) years stiled a vacation barrister. Also they are called utter barristers, i. e. pleaders outer the bar, to distinguish them from benchers, or those that have been readers, who are sometimes admitted to plead within the bar, as the king, queen, or prince's counsel are. Barristers, who constantly attend the King's Bench, &c. are to have the privilege of being sued in transitory actions in the county of Middlesex. But a counsel cannot maintain any action for his fees, for a counsellor's fee is honorarium quiddam, non mercenariam, as that of an attorney or solicitor. 2 Inst. 213, 214, &c. Wood's Inst. 448.

BARRATOR, or BARRETOR, (Lat. barractator, Fr. barrateur) a common mover exciter or maintainer of suits and quarrels, either in courts or elsewhere in the country, and this offence consisting in all kinds of disturbances of the peace, and the spreading of false rumours and calumnies, whereby discord and disquiet may grow among neighbours, it is not material whether the suits commenced, be in a court of record, or not, or whether their quarrels relate to a disputed title of possession or not. Co. Lit. 368. a. b. 8 Co. 36. 6 Hawk. P. C. B. 1. c. 21.

But no one can be a barretor in respect of one act only; nor shall a man be adjudged a barretor for bringing any number of suits in his own right, though they are vexatious, especially, if there be any colour for them; for if they prove false, he shall pay the defendant costs. 1 Rol. Abr. 355. 3 Mod. 98.

Also an attorney, is in no danger of being convicted of barretry, in respect of his maintaining another, in a groundless action; to the commencing whereof he was no way privy. 3 Mod. 97.

A common solicitor, who solicits suits, is a common barretor, and may be indicted thereof, because it is no profession in law. 1 Danv. Abr. 725.

And a barrister at law entertaining a person in his house, and bringing several actions in his name, where nothing was due, was found guilty of barretry. 3 Mod. 97.

Barretors are punished by fine and imprisonment, and binding to the good behaviour, &c. And if they belong to the profession of the law, they ought to be further punished by disability to practice. 34 Ed. 3. c. 1. Hawk. P. C. 244.

And by 12 Geo. 1. c. 29. if an attorney or solicitor is convicted of barretry, he shall be transported as a felon in a summary way.

BARRATRY. In marine insurances, one of the risks insured against, is the barratry of the master or mariners.

And any act of the master or mariners which is of a criminal nature, such as a deviation for the purpose of smuggling or making capture, or which is grossly negligent, tending to their own benefit, to the prejudice of the owners of the ship, without their consent or privity, is barratry. 1 Str. 581. 2 Str. 1173. Coup. 143. 1 Ter. Rep. 323.

And whatever is done by the captain to defeat or delay the performance of the voyage is barratry in him, it being to the prejudice of the owners. 6 Ter. Rep. 379.

But if the act of the captain be done, with a view to the benefit of his owners, as by deviation for the purpose of saving the ship or the like, and not to advance his own private interest, it is no barratry. Coup. 154.

And an act of the captain, with the knowledge of the owners of the ship, though without the privity of the owner of the goods insured, is not barratry. 1 Ter. Rep. 323.

Neither can the master of the ship, if he be also owner be guilty of barratry, for no man shall be allowed to derive a benefit from his own crime, and which he would do, if he were permitted to recover against the insurers for a loss occasioned by his own act. 4 Ter. Rep. 33.

BARREL, (barillum) is a measure of wine, ale, oil, &c. Of wine it contains the eighth part of a tun, the fourth part of a pipe, and the moiety of a hogshead; that is, thirty-one gallons and a half. 1 R. 3. c. 13. Of beer, it contains thirty-six gallons; and of ale, thirty-two gallons. Anno 23 H. 8. c. 4. and 12 Car. 2. c. 23. It is declared, that the assise of herring barrels is thirty-two gallons wine measure, containing in every barrel usually a thousand full herrings. Anno 13 El. c. 11. The eel barrel contains thirty gallons. 2 H. 6. c. 13.

BARRIERS, (Fr. barrieres) palæstra, a martial exercise of men armed and fighting together with short swords, within certain bars or rails which separated them from the spectators, now disused in England. There are likewise barrier towns, or places of defence on the frontiers of kingdoms. Cowel. Blount.

BARROW, (from the Sax. boerg, a heap of earth) a large hillock or mount, raised or cast up in many parts of England, which seem to have been a mark of the Roman tumuli, or sepulchres of the dead. The Sax. beorg was commonly taken for a grove of trees on the top of a hill. Kennet's Glos. Cowel. Blount.

BARTER, (from the Fr. baretre, circumvenire) signifies to exchange one commodity for another, or truck wares for wares. Anno 1 R. 3. c. 9. And the reason may be, because they that exchange in this manner do endeavour, for the most part, one to overreach and circumvent the other. Cowel. Blount.

BARTON, is a word used in Devonshire, for the demesne lands of a manor; sometimes the manor-house itself; and in some places for out-houses and fold-yards. In the stat. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 12. barton lands, and demesne lands, are used as synonyma. See Berton.

BAS CHEVALIERS, low or inferior knights by tenure of a bare military fee, as distinguished from bannerets, the chief or superior knights: hence we call our simple knights, viz. knights bachelors, bas chevaliers. Kennet's Glos. to Paroch. Antiq. Cowel. Blount.

BASE COURT, (Fr. cour basse) is any inferior court, that is not of record, as the court baron, &c. Kitch. fol. 95, 96.

BASE ESTATE, (Fr. bas estat) is that estate, which base tenants have in their lands. And base tenants according to Lambert, are those who perform villainous services to their lords; Kitchen, fol. 41., makes base tenure and frank tenure to be contraries, and puts copyholders in the number of base tenants; where it may be gathered that every base tenant holds at the will of the lord: but there is a difference between a base estate and villenage; for to hold in pure villenage is to do all that the lord will command him; and if a copyholder have but a base estate, he not holding by the performance of every commandment of his lord, cannot be said to hold in villenage: copyholders are by the customs of manors, and continuance of time, grown out of that extreme servitude wherein they were first created. Cowel. Blount.

BASE FEE, is a tenure in fee at the will of the lord, distinguished from socage free tenure: but according to lord Coke, a base fee is what may be defeated by limitation, or on entry, &c. Co. Lit. 1, 18. Basa tenura, or base tenure, was a holding by villenage, or other customary service, opposed to alta tenura, the higher tenure in capite or by military service, &c. Consuetud. Domus de Forendon, MS. 44.

BAS VILLE, the suburbs or inferior town, as used in France. Cowel. Blount.

BASELS, (basseli) a kind of coin abolished by king Hen. 2. anno 1158. Hollingshed's Chron. p. 67.

BASELARD, or BASILLARD, in the stat. 13 R. 2. c. 6. signifies a weapon, which Mr. Speight, in his exposition upon Chaucer, calls pugionem vel sicam, a poniard, arrepto basillardo transfixit, &c. Cum alio basillardo penetravit latera ejus, &c. Knighton, lib. 5. pag. 2731.

BASILEUS, from the Greek Βασιλευς, Rex. (Vide Gr. Lexicon) a word mentioned in several of our historians signifying the king, and seems peculiar to the kings of England. Monasticon, tom. 1. p. 65. Ego Edgar totius Angliæ basileus confirmavi. Cowel. Blount.

BASKET TENURE of lands. See Canestellus.

BASNETUM, a basnet, or helmet. Cowel. Blount.

BASSINET, a skin with which the soldiers covered themselves. Ibid.

BASTARD, (bastardus) from the Brit. bastaerd, i. e. nothus or spurius, is one that is born of any woman not married, so that his father is not known by the order of law; and therefore is called filius populi, the child of the people.—But if a woman be with child by a man, who afterwards marries her, and then the child is born, this child is no bastard: but if a man hath issue by a woman before marriage, and after they marry, the issue is a bastard by our law; but legitimate by the civil law. 2 Inst. 96, 97.

So if a man marries a woman grossly big with child by another, who shortly after is delivered, in our law the issue is no bastard. 1 Danv. Abr. 729. And where a child is born within a day after marriage between parties of full age, if there be no apparent impossibility, that the husband should be the father of it, the child is no bastard, but supposed to be the child of the husband. 1 Rol. Abr. 358. But if the husband be but eight or nine years of age, or if he be within the age of fourteen, the issue is a bastard: so where a husband is gelt, or hath lost his genitals, &c. which shews an impossibility to get a child, the issue of his wife, though born within marriage is a bastard. Co. Lit. 244. 1 Danv. 728.

Hence we perceive, that by the law of the land a person cannot, in general, be a bastard who is born after espousals, unless it be by a special matter. And it was formerly held, that if a woman eloped from her husband, and the husband was within the four seas, so that by intendment he might converse with his wife, and the wife had issue, the child was not to be a bastard: though it would be a bastard if born of a woman whose husband, at and from the time of the begetting to the birth, was extra quatuor maria. Co. Lit. 244. 2 Salk. 483.

But this strange doctrine has for some time been overruled, and now not only proof of being out of the kingdom; but also every other kind of evidence tending to prove the impossibility or even improbability of the husband's being the father is admitted. 2 Str. 925. 3 Peere Wms. 365. 1 Black. Com. 457. 2 Str. 940, 1076. Cas. Temp. Hard. 379. And. 8. 4 Ter. Rep. 251, 356.

A divorce causâ precontractus, causâ affinitatis, causâ frigiditatis, &c. bastardises the issue, not for cause subsequent to the marriage; but if the man and woman continue husband and wife for all their lives, the issue cannot be a bastard, by divorce after their death. 1 Danv. 730. Where a woman, on divorce a mensa & thoro, lives in adultery with another, her children by such other are bastards, for children born in adultery are born out of the limits of matrimony. Though if husband and wife consent to live separate, the children born after such separation shall be taken to be legitimate, because the access of the husband may be presumed; but if it be found there was no access, then they are bastards. 1 Salk. 122.

Where a man hath issue a son by a woman before marriage, and afterwards marries the same woman, and hath issue a second son born after the marriage, the first of these is termed in law a bastard eigne, and the second a mulier; by the common law, such bastard eigne is as incapable of inheriting as if the father and mother had never married; but yet there is one case in which his issue was let into the succession, and that was by the consent of the lord and person legitimate; as if upon the death of the father the bastard eigne enters, and the mulier during his whole life never disturbs him, he cannot upon the death of the bastard eigne, enter upon his issue. Lit. sec. 399. Co. Lit. 245.

But to exclude the mulier from the inheritance there must not only be an uninterrupted possession of the bastard eigne during his life, but a descent to his issue. Co. Lit. 244. 1 Rol. Abr. 624.

If a woman hath a child forty weeks and eight days after the death of her husband, it shall be legitimate; the law having appointed no exact certain time for birth of legitimate issues. 1 Danv. 726. 2 Lill. Abr. 236.

If a man or woman marry a second wife or husband, the first being living, and have issue by such second wife or husband, the issue is a bastard. 39 Ed. 3. cap. 14. &c.

Bastard is terminus a quo, he is the first of his family, for he hath no relation, of which our law takes any notice; yet this must be understood as to civil purposes, there being a relation as to moral purposes; for he cannot marry his own mother, or bastard sister. 3 Salk. 66, 67.

A bastard cannot inherit land as heir to his father; nor can any person inherit lands as heir to him but one that is heir of his body. Lit. sec. 401.

But though he cannot inherit to any ancestor, yet when he hath gotten a name of reputation he may purchase by it; for all surnames were originally acquired by reputation. Co. Lit. 36. 6 Co. 65. But if a remainder be limited to the eldest issue of T. S. whether legitimate or illegitimate, and T. S. hath issue a bastard, he shall not take this remainder, for it is not vested in T. S. but is in contingency, and the certain time is not defined when this contingency shall happen; for the bastard at his birth does not acquire the reputation of being the issue of T. S. and since the bastard, when first in being, cannot take by virtue of this limitation, he can never take it; for he cannot be understood to be the person designed and marked out by these words, if after his birth it depends on the uncertainty of popular reputation, whether he should take the remainder or not; and such a designation of the person as contains no certainty in itself, or no relation to any other certain matter, that may reduce it to certainty, is a void limitation. Co. Lit. 3 b. 6 Co. 65.

But where a remainder is limited to the eldest son of Jane S. whether legitimate or illegitimate, and she hath issue, a bastard shall take this remainder, because he acquires the denomination of her issue by being born of her body; and so it was never uncertain who was designed by this remainder. Noy 35.

If a man, in consideration of natural affection and love, covenants to stand seised to the use of a bastard, this is not good, for he is not de sanguine patris; but it is said that a woman may give lands in frank-marriage with her bastard, because he is of the blood of the mother; but he hath no father but from reputation only. Dyer 374. And. 79. 6 Co. 77. Noy 35.

A court of equity, will not supply the want of a surrender, of a copyhold estate, in favour of a bastard, as it will for a legitimate child. Preced. Chan. 475.

A bastard by the common law is made incapable of any ecclesiastical benefice: for the sacraments ought not to be committed to infamous persons. Fortescue 88, 89.

How provided for by statute.] By stat. 18 Eliz. c. 3, and 3 Car. 1. c. 4, "a woman "with child of a bastard must be first exa- "mined by a justice of peace, and the fact "of her being with child proved by her oath, "and then the justice is to send his warrant "for the reputed father; when the party is "brought before the justice he must enter "into a recognizance with sufficient sure- "ties for his appearance at the next ses- "sions, &c. and he may be continued on "the recognizance till the woman is deliver- "ed of the child: after the child is born, "two justices (quorum unus) residing near" est the place, are to examine the matter " by witnesses, &c. and make their order " for relief of the parish from the bastard; " and if the two justices cannot agree they " may refer it to the sessions; also the " putative father may appeal from the order " of the two justices, or may give security " to the parish," &c.

" The two next justices of peace (one be- " ing of the quorum) may make orders for " punishing the mother and father of a bas- " tard child; and by order of the justices, " the churchwardens and overseers of the " poor may seize goods, and receive the " annual rents of lands, &c. of the father " and mother to discharge the parish; and " justices of the peace have power to com- " mit lewd women having bastards to the " house of correction for one year, &c. or " for a second offence, till she give security " for her good behaviour." 18 Eliz. c. 3. 13 and 14 Car. 2. c. 12. 7 Jac. 1. c. 4.

" If a single woman declares herself to be " with child of a bastard, and on oath before " a justice charge any person with getting it, " he may grant his warrant to apprehend " the person charged, and for bringing him " before any justice, &c. who may commit " him to gaol, or the house of correction, " unless he give security to indemnify the " parish, or enter into recognizance with " sureties, to appear at the next quarter- " sessions, and perform such order as shall be " made, pursuant to the statute 18 Eliz. c. 3.

" Unless two justices shall have certified in " writing to the next, or where such woman " shall not have been delivered, then to the " immediately next sessions, that an order " of filiation hath been already made on the " person charged; or that such order was " not then requisite to be made, on account " of the death of the child, or for other suf- " ficient reason, in each of which first cases, " the sessions may respite the recognizance " to the next sessions; and in either of the " two last cases wholly discharge the recog- " nizance." 49 Geo. 3. c. 68. s. 2.

" But no justice may send for or com- " pel any woman before she is delivered, " and one month after, to answer ques- " tions, &c." Stat. 6 Geo. 2. c. 31.

Upon these statutes it has been decided, 1. That the putative father shall be discharged if the justices at the sessions, upon hearing all the circumstances of the case, shall be of opinion that he is not the father of the child. 1 Black. 458.

2. That although by the 6 Geo. 2. c. 31, one magistrate may compel the person on whom the child is filiated to indemnify the parish by a bond, with two sufficient sureties, yet the parish cannot take a gross sum of money, as 40*l.* or the like, to discharge the putative father totally: they can only take a security to indemnify themselves by weekly or other payments during the time the child remains chargeable; and all securities contrary hereto are void. 6 East's Rep. 192.

3. That under the statute of Eliz. the sessions have no power to compel the putative father to give security for the performance of the order of filiation, and maintenance; but that if the party do disobey such order, or the order by two justices out of sessions, he may be punished by indictment for such disobedience. 6 Term Rep. 147.

And so it is if the party under 6 Geo. 2. c. 31, instead of giving bond to indemnify the parish in the first instance, enter into a recognizance to appear at, and abide by the order of, the next sessions, he cannot even then be compelled to give security for the performance of the order of sessions; and the parish can only take their common law remedy by indictment, in case the order of filiation is disobeyed. Ibid.

But now by 49 Geo. 3. c. 68. " if the re- " puted father or mother on whom any order " of filiation or maintenance shall have been " made, shall neglect or refuse to pay, any " justice on comp'aint thereof by the over- " seers, and proof thereof, may issue his " warrant to apprehend the party, and un- " less some reasonable cause for the neglect " be shewn, he may commit them to the " house of correction, or common gaol, to " be kept to hard labour for three [lunar] " months, unless the money shall be sooner " paid. s. 3."

4. It has been held at Nisi prius that the heir of the principal, or the heir of the surety, inheriting lands from his ancestor, may at any distance of time be sued upon the bond, for the damages which the parish sustains, by maintaining the bastard in his old age, or his children, who have not obtained settlements in another parish or township. 1 Black. Com. 458.

By the 49 Geo. 3. c. 68. " the reputed " fathers of bastard children shall be charge- " able with the expences incident to the " birth, with the costs of apprehending and " of the order of filiation not exceeding 10*l.* " to be ascertained by the justices or court " of quarter sessions who shall make the " order of filiation." s. 1, 4.

" But persons aggrieved may appeal to " the quarter sessions, on giving 10 days " notice to the justices or one of them, and " also to the churchwardens and overseers, " and entering into a recognizance within " three days after such notice with sufficient " surety, to try the appeal, abide by the " order of sessions, and pay the costs award- " ed." s. 5.

" And no appeal shall in future be allow- " ed in any bastardy case without like no- " tice, and entering into a like recogni- " zance." s. 7.

Settlement of bastards.] Bastard children gain a settlement in the parish where they are born. But if a woman big with child, pending an order of removal appealed against, be delivered, the child's settlement must follow that of the mother. 1 Bac. Abr. tit. Bas.

So it will be settled in the mother's parish, if she is apprehended for vagrancy, 17 Geo. 2. c. 5. So if born in gaol, 1 Sess. Cas. 94, or in a licensed lying-in hospital, or in any house of industry, 10 Geo. 3. c. 36; or under a certificate. Bur. Set. Cas 187. 264. 650. or during the suspension of an order of removal by reason of illness. 35 Geo. 3. c. 101. s. 6.

And where a bastard having a different settlement from its mother, lives with her for nurture, the parish where the bastard's settlement is must maintain it. Doug. 7, 9. n. 2. And if the parents neglect to provide for the sustenance of a bastard child, the parish where it is born must do it, though the justices make no order for that purpose. 1 Hen. Black. Rep. 253. Doug. 9.

If a woman be with child, and any one gives her a potion to destroy the child within her, and she takes it, and it works so strongly that it kills her, this is murder; for it was not given to cure her of a disease, but unlawfully to destroy the child within her, and therefore he that gives her a potion to this end must take the hazard, and if it kills the mother it is murder. 1 Hal. P. C. 429, 430.

And by 43 Geo. 3. c. 58. "Persons administering medicines to women, though "not quick with child, to procure miscarriage, are guilty of felony, and to be "punished by fine and imprisonment, the "pillory, or public or private whipping, or "to be transported for not exceeding 14 "years." s. 2.

If a man counsel a woman with child to destroy her infant when born, and the child being born, the woman in pursuance of that counsel kill the infant, this is murder in the mother, and the procurer is accessary. 1 Hale's H. P. C. 433.

And by 43 Geo. 3. c. 58, the trials of women for the murder of bastards shall proceed as in other cases of murder, sec. 3. And women acquitted of such murder, on the jury finding them to have been guilty of concealment of the birth, shall be imprisoned in the common gaol or house of correction for not exceeding two years. sec. 4.

BASTARDY, (bastardia) signifies a defect of birth, objected to one born out of wedlock. Bract. lib. 5. c. 19.

BASTARD-EIGNE, (Fr.) is where a man hath issue a son by a woman before marriage, and afterwards hath another son by the same woman in wedlock, the first of which is in the law termed a bastard-eigne.

BASTON, (Fr.) a staff, or club; and by our statutes, it signifies one of the warders of the Fleet's servants or officers who attend the king's courts with a red staff, for taking such into custody, who are committed by the court. 1 R. 2. c. 12. 5 Eliz. c. 23. See Tipstaff.

BASTUS, per basum tolnetum cavere, to take toll by strike, and not by heap. Cowel. Blount.

BATABLE GROUND, is taken for the land that lay between England and Scotland, heretofore in question, when they were distinct kingdoms, to which it belonged. It seems to mean, as if we should say, litigious or debatable ground, i. e. land about which there is debate; and by that name Skene calls ground that is in controversy. Cam. Britan. Tit. Cumberland. Cowel. Blount.

BATH, (Lat. bathon, called by the Britons badiza) has been termed the city of sick men: it is a place of resort in Somersetshire, famous for its medicinal waters. Cowel. Blount.

BATITORIA, a fulling-mill. Ibid.

BATTLE, (Fr. bataille) signifies a trial by combat, which was anciently allowed of in our laws, where the defendant in appeal of murder or felony might fight with the appellant, and make proof thereby whether he were culpable or innocent of the crime. Glanv. lib. 14. c. 1.

This trial by battle was before the constable and marshal, but, with all its ceremonies, is now disused. See Glanv. lib. 14. Bracton, lib. 3. Britton, c. 22. Smith de Rep. Angl. lib. 2. Co. Lit. 294, &c. 3 Black. 339.

BATTERY, (from the Fr. battre, to strike, or Sax, batle, a club) is an injury done to another in a violent manner, as by striking or beating of a man, pushing, jolting, filliping upon the nose, &c. And it is also defined by our law to be a trespass committed by one man upon another, vi et armis et contra pacem, &c. This offence is punishable by action and indictment; and on action for the injury at the suit of the party, the defendant shall render damages, &c. On indictment at the suit of the king, for a breach of the peace, he shall be fined according to the heinousness of the offence. Dalt. 282. 1 Hawk. P. C. 134.

But a man may beat another, who first assaults him, in his own defence, and justify in an action by special pleading, as that the battery was occasioned by his own assault; or the defendant may give that in evidence upon not guilty, to an indictment: and the record of the conviction of the offender by indictment may serve afterwards for evidence in action of trespass for the same assault and battery. Terms de Ley. 2 Rol. Abr. 546.

BAUBELLA, (baubles) a word mentioned in Rhoades in R. 1, and signifies jewels or precious stones. Ibid.

BAUDEKIN, (baldicum, and baldekinum) cloth of baudekin, or gold: it is said to be the richest cloth, now called brocade, made with gold and silk, or tissue, upon which figures in silk, &c. were embroidered. Ibid.

BAWDY-HOUSE, (lustanar, fornix) a house of ill fame, kept for the resort and commerce of lewd people of both sexes. The keeping of a bawdy-house comes under the cognizance of the temporal law, as a common nuisance, not only in respect of its endangering the public peace by drawing together dissolute and debauched persons, and promoting quarrels, but also in respect of its tendency to corrupt the manners of the people, by an open profession of lewdness. 3 Inst. 205. 1 Hawk. P. C. 196. Those who keep bawdy-houses are punished with fine and imprisonment; and also such infamous punishment, as pillory, &c. as the court in discretion shall inflict: and a lodger who keeps only a single room for the use of bawdry is indictable for keeping a bawdy-house. 1 Salk. 382. Persons resorting to a bawdy-house are punishable, and they may be bound to the good behaviour, &c. But if one be indicted for keeping or frequenting a bawdy-house, it must be expressly alleged to be such a house, and that the party knew it, and not by suspicion only. Pupl. 208. And it is said that a constable, upon information that a man and woman are gone to a lewd house, or about to commit fornication or adultery, may, if he finds them together, carry them before a justice of peace without any warrant, and the justice may bind them over to the sessions. Dalt. 214.

It seems always to have been the better opinion, that a man may be bound to his good behaviour for haunting bawdy-houses with women of bad fame, as also for keeping bad women in his own house. 1 Hawk. 132.

Constables in these cases may call others to their assistance, enter bawdy-houses, and arrest offenders for breach of the peace: in London they may carry them to prison; and by custom of the city whores and bawds may be carted. 3 Inst. 206.

A wife may be indicted together with her husband, and condemned to the pillory with him for keeping a bawdy-house, for this is an offence as to the government of the house, in which the wife has a principal share; and also such an offence as may generally be presumed to be managed by the intrigues of her sex. 1 Hawk. 2.

But it is said a woman cannot be indicted for being a bawd generally, for that the bare solicitation of chastity is not indictable. 1 Hawk. 196. 1 Salk. 382.

It was always held infamous to keep a bawdy-house, yet some of our historians mention bawdy-houses publicly allowed here in former times, till the reign of Hen. 8. and assign the number to be eighteen, thus allowed, on the Bank-side in Southwark.

"If two inhabitants, paying scot and lot, "shall give notice to a constable of any "person keeping a bawdy-house, the constable shall go with them before a justice "of peace, and shall, (upon such inhabitants "making oath that they believe the contents of such notice to be true, and entering into a recognizance of 20*l.* each "to give material evidence of the offence) "enter into a recognizance of 30*l.* to prosecute with effect such person for such "offence at the next sessions; the constable shall be paid his reasonable expenses "by the overseers of the poor, to be ascertained by two justices; and if the offender "be convicted, the overseers shall pay to "the two inhabitants 10*l.* each. On the "constable's entering into such recognizance as aforesaid, the justice shall bind "over the person accused to the next sessions, and, if he shall think proper, demand security for such person's good behaviour in the mean time. A constable "neglecting his duty forfeits 20*l.* Any person appearing as master or mistress, or "as having the care or management of any "bawdy-house, shall be deemed the keeper "thereof, and liable to be punished as "such." Stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 56.

BAY, or pen, is a pond-head, made up of a great height, to keep in water for the supply of a mill, &c. so that the wheel of the mill may be driven by the water coming thence, through a passage or flood-gate. A harbour where ships ride at sea, near some port, is also called a bay: and this word is mentioned anno 27 Eliz. c. 19. Cowel. Blount.

BEACON, (from the Sax. beacen, i. e. signum) a signal well known, being a fire maintained on some eminence near the coasts of the sea, to prevent invasions, &c. 4 Inst. 148. 8 Eliz. c. 13. Hence beaconage (beaconagium) money paid towards the maintenance of beacons; and we still use the word becken to give notice unto. See Stat. 5 Hen. 4. &c. The king hath an exclusive power by commission under the great seal to appoint them. Black. Com. 1 V. 265. They are usually vested by letters patent in the office of lord high admiral. Ibid.

BEAD, or bede, (Sax. bead, oratio) a prayer, so that to say over beads is to say over one's prayers. They were most in use before printing, when poor persons could not go to the charge of a manuscript book; though they are still used in many parts of the world, where the Roman catholic religion prevails. They are not allowed to be brought into England, or any superstitious things to be used here under the penalty of præmunire, by stat. 13 Eliz. c. 2. Cowel. Blount.

BEAM, is that part of the head of a stag where the horns grow, from the Sax. beam, i. e. arbor, because they grow out of the head as branches out of a tree. Beam is likewise used for a common balance of weights in cities and towns. Ibid.

BEARERS, signify such as bear down or oppress others, and is said to be all one with maintainers.—Justices of assise shall inquire of, hear, and determine maintainers bearers, and conspirators, &c. Stat. 4 Ed. 3. c. 11.

BEASTS OF CHASE, (ferœ campestres) are five, viz. the buck, doe, fox, marten, and roe. Manw. part 1, pa. 342. Beasts of the forest (ferœ silvestres) otherwise called beasts of venary, are the hart, hind, boar, and wolf. Ibid. par. 2. c. 4. Beasts and fowls of the warren are the hare, coney, pheasant, and partridge. Ibid. Reg. Orig. 95. 96, &c. Co. Lit. 233.

BEAU-PLEADER, (pulchre placitando, Fr. beauplaider, i. e. to plead fairly) is a writ upon the statute of Marlbridge, 52 H. 3. c. 11. whereby it is enacted, that neither in the circuits of justice, nor in counties, hundreds, or courts-baron, any fines shall be taken for fair-pleading, viz. for not pleading fairly or aptly to the purpose; upon which statute this writ was ordained, directed to the sheriff, bailiff, or him who shall demand such fine, and it is a prohibition not to do it: whereupon an alias and pluries and attachment may be had, &c. New Nat. Brev. 596, 597. And beau-pleader is as well in respect of vicious pleadings, as of the fair pleading, by way of amendment. 2 Inst. 122. Cowel. Blount.

BEDEL, (bedellus, Sax. bydel) a crier or messenger of a court, that cites men to appear and answer: and is an inferior officer of a parish, or liberty, very well known in London, and the suburbs. There are likewise university-bedels, and church-bedels, now called summoners and apparitors; and Manwood in his Forest Laws saith there are forest-bedels, that make all manner of garnishments for the courts of the forest, and all proclamations, and also execute the process of the forest, like unto bailiffs-errant of a sheriff in his county. Cowel. Blount.

BEDELARY, (bedelaria) is the same to a bedel as bailiwick to a bailiff. Lit. lib. 3. cap. 5.

BEDEREPE, alias biderepe, (Sax.) is a service which certain tenants were anciently bound to perform, viz. to reap their landlord's corn at harvest, as some yet are tied to give them one, two, or three days work, when commanded. This customary service of inferior tenants was called in the Latin precaria bedrepium, &c. See Magna Præcaria. Cowel. Blount.

BEDEWERI, those which we now call banditti, profligate and excommunicated persons. The word is mentioned in Mat. Paris ann 1258. Cowel. Blount.

BEER. See ALEHOUSES and EXCISE.

BEGGARS. See Vagrants.

BEHAVIOUR of persons. Vide SURETY.

BELGÆ, the inhabitants of Somersetshire, Wiltshire, and Hampshire. Blount.

BENEFICE, (beneficium) is generally taken for any ecclesiastical living or promotion, and all church preferments and dignities are benefices, but they must be given for life, not for years, or at will. 3 Inst. 155.

BENEFICIO PRIMO ECCLESIASTICO HABENDO, a writ directed from the king to the chancellor, to bestow the benefice that shall first fall in the king's gift, above or under such a value, upon such a particular person. Reg. Orig. 307.

BENEFIT OF CLERGY. See CLERGY.

BENEFIT CLUBS. By 33 Geo. 3. c. 54, any number of persons may form themselves into a society, and raise among themselves a fund for their mutual benefit, and may make rules, and impose fines; but the rules of such societies are to be exhibited to the justices in quarter sessions, who may annul or confirm them: the rules are to be signed by the clerk of the peace, and deposited with him; and no society is to be within the meaning of this act, till their rules have been confirmed. s. 1, 2.

No confirmed rule to be altered but at a general meeting of the society; and the alterations of the rules, are to be subject to the review of the quarter sessions. s. 3.

The societies may appoint officers, and securities are to be given for offices of trust, if required: and every such bond from treasurers or trustees, is to be given to the clerk of the peace; and from other persons to the treasurers or trustees; which bonds are not chargeable with stamp-duty. s. 4.

Powers of standing committees to be declared in the rules of the society; and if particular ones, entered in a book; and all committees are to be controllable by the society. s. 5.

Treasurers or trustees are to lay out the surplus of the contributions either in private securities to be approved of, or in the public funds, and to bring the proceeds to account for the use of the society. s. 6, 7.

Treasurers and trustees are to render accounts, and pay over balances; and in case of neglect, application may be made in a summary way, by petition to the court of chancery or exchequer, or great sessions s. 8.

And no fee is to be taken for any proceedings in such courts. s. 9.

Executors and administrators, are to pay money due to societies, before any other debt. s. 10.

The effects of societies to be vested in the treasurers or trustees for the time being, who may bring and defend actions. s. 11.

Societies are to declare the purpose of their establishment, before the confirmation of their rules by the quarter sessions, and may inflict penalties for misapplication of money. The consent of five sixths at a general meeting is necessary for the dissolution of societies; and the stock is not to be divisible, but for the general purposes of the society. s. 12.

Their rules are to be entered in a book, and received in evidence. s. 13.

Societies may also receive donations in support of their stock. s. 14.

When members think themselves aggrieved, two justices on complaint may summon the officers, and on hearing of the parties they may make such order as shall seem just, which is not removable by certiorari. s. 15.

No member of any such society producing a certificate thereof, shall be removable from where he resides; till actually chargeable to the parish; but the signing of such certificate must be authenticated, by the oath of a witness, before a justice of peace. s. 17, 18.

And, on complaint of parish officers, any justice may summon persons bringing such certificates, to be examined, and make oath of their settlement; and copies of the examination, are to be given to the parties, which shall exempt them from future examination. s. 19.

Justices may declare, by an order in writing, the place of settlement of persons so examined, without issuing a warrant for removal; and copies of such orders, and of examinations, are to be returned to the parish officers; and persons aggrieved herein may appeal to the quarter sessions. s. 20, 21.

No person who shall reside in any parish, under this act, shall thereby acquire a settlement; nor for paying rates; nor any apprentice or servant to such persons. st 22, 23, 24.

Bastards are to have their mother's settlement. s. 25.

Charges of maintaining or removing residents under this act to be reimbursed by the parish to which the parties belong. s. 26.

By 35 Geo. 3. c. 111. governors of institutions for the relief of the widows, orphans, and families of the clergy, and others in distressed circumstances, may frame rules, and present them for confirmation. s. 2.

Institutions where rules shall be confirmed may appoint treasurers; and be entitled to the benefit of this act. s. 3.

By 49 Geo. 3. c. 125. all societies established before Michaelmas 1796, whose rules have been since exhibited, or shall at any time hereafter be exhibited, to the justices at sessions, and approved of, shall be deemed to be within the benefit of 33 Geo. 3. c. 54. s. 2.

Two justices on complaint may enforce the observance of the rules of benefit societies, and in the case of the adjudication of monies in arrear, levy the same by distress, and sale of the goods, of the person on whom the order is made. s. 1.

On complaint of members, of relief refused, such justices may summon the proper officer, and on proof upon oath, order the money to be paid with costs, not exceeding 10*s.* which, if not forthwith paid in the presence of the justice, shall be levied on the monies and effects of the society, with the further costs of the distress and sale: and in default of distress on society monies or effects, the same shall be levied on those of the treasurer or other proper officer, and repaid out of the society's funds. s. 3.

The orders of the justices, upon the officers, shall be made out in the proper names of such officers, and served either personally, or by leaving the same at their dwelling houses. s. 4.

And all orders of the justices under this act shall be final, and not removed into any court of law, or restrained by injunction in equity. s. 5.

BERBIAGE, (berbiagium) Nativi tenentes manerii de Cudstoke reddant per ann. de certo redditu vocat. berbiag. ad le Hokeday XIX. s. MS. Survey of the Duchy of Cornwall. Cowel. Blount.

BERBICARIA, a sheep-down, or ground to feed sheep. Ibid.

BERCARIA, (berchery, from the Fr. bergerie) a sheep-fold, or other inclosure for the keeping of sheep. Ibid.

BEREFELLARII: There were seven churchmen so called, anciently belonging to the church of St. John of Beverly. Cowel. Blount.

BERGHMASTER, (from the Sax. berg, a hill, mons quasi, master of the mountains) is a chief officer among the Derbyshire miners, who also executes the office of a coroner. Cowel. Blount.

BERGMOTH, or BERGHMOTE, comes from the Sax. berg, a hill, and gemote, an assembly, and is as much as to say, an assembly or court upon a hill, which is held in Derbyshire for deciding pleas and controversies among the miners. Ibid.

BERIA, Berie, Berry, a large open field; and those cities and towns in England which end with that word, are built in plain and open places, and do not derive their names from boroughs, as Sir Henry Spelman imagines. Most of our glossographers in the names of places have confounded the word berie with that of bury and borough, as if the appellative of ancient towns; whereas the true sense of the word berie is a flat wide champaign, as is proved from sufficient authorities by the learned Du Fresne, who observes that Beria Sancte Edmundi, mentioned by Mat. Par. sub. ann. 1174, is not to be taken for the town, but for the adjoining plain. To this may be added, that many flat and wide meads, and other open grounds, are called by the name of beries, and berryfields: the spacious meadow between Oxford and Isley was in the reign of king Athelstan called Bery. B. Twine, MS. As is now the largest pasture ground in Quarendon in the county of Buckingham, known by the name of Beryfield. And though these meads have been interpreted demesne or manor meadows, yet they were truly any flat or open meadows that lay adjoining to any vill or farm; as Laleham Burway. Cowel. Blount.

BERRA, a plain open heath. Berras exsartare, to grub up such barren heaths. Ibid.

BERNET, incendium, comes from the Sax. byran, to burn. It is one of those crimes which by the laws of Hen. 1. cap. 15, emendari non possunt. Sometimes it is used to signify any capital offence. Leges Canuti apud Brompt. c. 20. Leg. Hen. 1. c. 12. 47.

BERSA, (Fr. bers) a limit or bound. A park pale. Cowel. Blount.

BERSARE, (Germ. bersen, to shoot) bersare in foresta mea ad tres arcus. Chart. Ranulph. Comit. Cestr. ann. 1218. viz. to hunt or shoot with three arrows in my forest. Bersarii were properly those that hunted the wolf. Ibid.

BERSELET, (berseletta) a hound. Ibid.

BERTON, or BARTON, (bertona) is that part of a country farm, where the barns and other inferior offices stand, and wherein the cattle are foddered, and other business is managed. See Claus. 32 Ed. 1. m. 17. It also signifies a farm distinct from a manor: in some parts of the west of England they call a great farm a berton, and a small farm a living. Bertonarii were such as we now call farmers or tenants of bertons, husbandmen who held lands at the will of the lord. Cowel. Blount.

BEREWICHA, or BERWICA, villages or hamlets belonging to some town or manor. Cowel. Blount.

BERWICK. By Stat. 20 Geo. 2. c. 42, sec. 3, Wales and Berwick upon Tweed shall be included in all acts of parliament wherein the kingdom of England, or that part of Great Britain called England, shall be mentioned.

BERY, or BURY, the vill or seat of habitation of a nobleman, a dwelling, or mansion-house, being the chief of a manor, from the Sax. beorg, which signifies a hill or castle, for heretofore noblemens seats were castles, situate on hills, of which we have still some remains; as in Herefordshire there are the beries of Stockton, Hope, &c. It was anciently taken for a sanctuary. Cowel. Blount.

BESAILE, (from the Fr. bisayeul, proavus) i. e. the father of the grandfather) was a writ, now in disuse, which anciently lay at the common law, where the great grandfather was seised the day that he died, of any lands or tenements in fee-simple; and after his death a stranger entered the same day upon them and kept out the heir. F. N. B. 222.

BESCHA, (from the Fr. bescher, fodere, to dig) a spade or shovel. Hence perhaps, una bescata terra inclusa—Mon. Ang. tom. 2. fol. 642. may signify a piece of land usually turned up with a spade, as gardeners fit and prepare their grounds; or may be taken for as much land as one man can dig with a spade in a day. Cowel. Blount.

BETACHES. Laymen using glebe lands. Parl. 14 Ed. 2. Ibid.

BEVERCHES, bed-works, or customary services done at the bidding of the lord by his inferior tenants. Ibid.

BEWARED, an old Saxon word signifying expended; for before the Britons and Saxons had plenty of money, they traded wholly in exchange of wares. Ibid.

BIDALE, or BIDALL, (precaria petaria, from the Sax. biddan, to pray or supplicate) is the invitation of friends, to drink ale at the house of some poor man, who thereby hopes a charitable contribution for his relief: it is still in use in the West of England: and is mentioned 26 Hen. 8. c. 6. And something like this seems to be what we commonly call house warming, when persons are invited and visited in this manner on their first beginning house-keeping. Ibid.

BIDDING OF THE BEADS, (bidding from the Sax. biddan) was anciently a charge or warning given by the parish-priest to his parishioners at some special times to come to prayers, either for the soul of some friend departed, or upon some other particular occasion. And at this day our ministers, on the Sunday preceding any festival or holiday in the following week, give notice of them, and desire and exhort their parishioners to observe them as they ought; which is required by our canons. See Stat. 27 Hen. 8. c. 26. Cowel. Blount.

BIDENTES, two yearlings or sheep of the second year. Cowel. Blount.

BIDUANA, a fasting for the space of two days. Ibid.

BIGA, bigæ, a cart or chariot drawn with two horses, coupled side to side; but it is said to be properly a cart with two wheels, sometimes drawn by one horse; and in our ancient records it is used for any cart, wain or wagon. Ibid.

BIGAMUS, is a person that hath married two or more wives, successively after each other, or a widow; for the canonists account a man that hath married a widow, to have been twice married. It is mentioned in the statutes 18 Ed. 3. c. 2. 1 Ed. 6. c. 12. and 2 Inst. 273.

BIGAMY, (bigamia) signifies a double marriage, or marriage of two wives; one after another, and not the having of two together; more properly called polygamy.

And by 1 Jac. 1. c. 11. if any person on being married, do afterwards marry again, the former husband or wife being living, it is felony. Except 1, where either party has been continually abroad for seven years, whether the party in England hath notice of the other's being living or no; 2, where either of the parties hath been absent from the other seven years within this kingdom, and the remaining party hath had no knowledge of the other's being alive within that time; 3, where there is a divorce, (or separation a mensâ et thoro, 1 Hawk. 174.) by sentence in the ecclesiastical court;* 4, where the first marriage is declared absolutely void by any such sentence, and the parties loosed à vinculo matrimonii; or 5, where either of the parties was under the age of consent at the time of the first marriage.

And by 33 Geo. 3. c. 67. persons convicted under 1 Jac. 1. c. 11. in England of bigamy, are made subject to the penalties inflicted for larceny, i. e. transportation, and returning before the expiration of the term for which they are transported, to be guilty of felony without benefit of clergy, and may be tried in the county where convicted or found at large.

If one of the parties only be under the age of consent, the exception in 1 Jac. 1. extends as well to the party above the age, as to the other; because the power of disagreeing was equal on both sides. 4 Black. Com. 163.

In these cases, the first and true wife is not an admissible witness against her husband, but the second woman is competent to prove the marriage, for she is not his wife so much as de facto. 1 Hale 692, 3.

BIGOT, is a compound of several old English words, and signifies an obstinate person; or one that is wedded to an opinion, in matters of religion, &c. Cowel. Blount.

* In these three first cases, however, though the parties are excepted from felony, the second marriage is void.

BILAGINES, (Lat.) by-laws of corporations, &c. See By-laws.

BILANCIIS DEFERENDIS, a writ anciently directed to a corporation, for the carrying of weights to such a haven, there to weigh the wool that persons by our ancient laws were licensed to transport. Reg. Orig. 270.

BILINGUIS, signifies generally a double tongued man; or one that can speak two languages; but it is used in our law for a jury that passeth between an Englishman and a foreigner, whereof part ought to be English, and part strangers. Though this is properly a jury de medietate linguæ. 28 Ed. 3. c. 13. Cowel. Blount.

BILL, (billa) is diversly used: thus, in law proceedings, it signifies the declaration in writing, expressing either the wrong the complainant hath suffered by the party complained of, or else some fault committed against some law or statute of the realm. Terms de Ley 86. Cowel. Blount.

Also in criminal cases, when a grand jury upon a presentment or indictment find the same to be true, they indorse on it billa vera; and thereupon the offender is said to stand indicted of the crime, and is bound to make answer unto it: and if the crime touch the life of the person indicted; it is then referred to the jury of life and death, viz. the petty jury, by whom if he be found guilty, then he shall stand convicted of the crime, and is by the judge condemned to death. Terms de Ley 86. 3 Inst. 30.

BILL SINGLE, or PENAL: is a writing under seal, wherein one man is bound to another, to pay a sum of money on a day that is future: or presently on demand, according to the agreement of the parties at the time it is entered into, and the dealings between them, and is divided into several sorts, viz. a bill single, without a penalty, and a bill penal, under a penalty. Cro. Eliz. 548. 3 Keb. 176. Rol. Abr. 148. 2 Rol. 146. 22 E. 4. c. 22.

The first of these bills hath long since fallen into disuse, from the introduction of bills of exchange, and the latter are seldom taken, the security by bond being preferable, and more generally resorted to.

BILL IN EQUITY. Different kinds of bills are used in the courts of equity to answer the several purposes of instituting an original suit, of adding to, continuing or obtaining the benefit of a suit, of instituting a cross suit, of impugning the judgment of the court on a suit brought to a decision, and of carrying a judgment into execution. Mitf. 31.

The several kinds of bills have been usually considered as capable of being arranged under three general heads: 1st, original bills; 2d, bills not original; 3d, bills in the nature of original bills. Ibid.

1. Original bills] are such as relate to some matter, not before litigated in the court, by the same persons, standing in the same interests, and these may pray relief against an injury suffered, or only seek the assistance of the court, to enable the plaintiff to defend himself, against a possible future injury, or to support or defend a suit in a court of ordinary jurisdiction. Ibid 32.

Original bills are therefore again divided into 1st, bills praying relief, 2*dly*, bills not praying relief.

I. Original bills praying relief,] may be 1st, a bill praying the decree or order of the court, touching some right claimed by the person exhibiting the bill, in opposition to some right, claimed by some person against whom the bill is exhibited. Ibid.

This bill must shew the rights of the plaintiff, or person exhibiting the bill; by whom and in what manner he is injured; or in what he wants the assistance of the court; and that he is without remedy, except in a court of equity, or at least is properly relievable, or can be more effectually relieved there: having thus shewn the plaintiff's title to the assistance of the court, the bill may pray, that the defendant or person against whom the bill is exhibited, may answer upon oath the matters charged against him, and it may also pray the relief or assistance of the court, which the plaintiff's case entitles him to: for these purposes the bill must pray that a writ called a writ of subpœna, may issue under the great seal, which is the seal of the court, to require the defendant's appearance and answer to the bill; unless the defendant has privilege of peerage as a lord of parliament, or is made a defendant as an officer of the crown: Milf. 37.

In the case of a peer or peeress, or lord of parliament, the bill must first pray the letter of the person holding the great seal, called a letter missive, requesting the defendant to appear to and answer the bill, and the writ of subpœna only in default of compliance with that request: and if the attorney-general is made a defendant, as an officer of the crown, the bill must pray instead of the writ of subpœna, that he being attended with a copy, may appear, and put in an answer. Ibid 38.

It is usual to add to the prayer of the bill, a general prayer for that relief which the circumstances of the case may require; that if the plaintiff mistakes the relief to which he is entitled, the court may yet afford him that relief to which he has a right. 2 Atk. 3. Milf. 38.

Indeed it has been said, that a prayer of general relief, without a special prayer of the particular relief, to which the plaintiff thinks himself entitled, is sufficient; and that the particular relief which the case requires, may at the hearing, be prayed at the bar. But this relief must be agreeable to the case made by the bill, and not different from it; and the court will not in all cases be so indulgent, as to permit a bill framed for one purpose to answer another, especially if the defendant may be surprized or prejudiced: if therefore the plaintiff doubts his title to the relief he wishes to pray, the bill may be framed with a double aspect; that if the court determines against him in one view of the case, it may yet afford him assistance in another. 2 Atk. 325. Milf. 39.

All persons concerned in the demand, or who may be affected by the relief prayed, ought to be parties, if within the jurisdiction of the court: but if any necessary parties are omitted, or unnecessary parties are inserted, the court upon application, will in general permit the bill to be amended, and the proper alteration made. Milf. 39.

It is the practice to insert in a bill, a general charge, that the parties named in it combine together, and with several other persons unknown to the plaintiff, whose names, when discovered, the plaintiff prays he may be at liberty to insert in the bill. This practice is said to have arisen from an idea that without such a charge, parties could not be added to the bill by amendment; and in some cases, perhaps, the charge has been inserted with a view to give the court jurisdiction: but from whatever cause the practice has arisen, it is still adhered to, except in the case of a peer, who was never charged with combining with others to deprive the plaintiff of his right, either from respect to the peerage, or perhaps from apprehension, that such a charge might be construed a breach of privilege. Milf. 40.

The rights of the several parties, the injury complained of, and every other necessary circumstance, as time, place, manner, or other incidents ought to be plainly, yet succinctly alleged. And whatever is essential to the rights of the plaintiff, and is necessarily within his knowledge, ought to be alleged positively, and with precision, and not by way of stating that he has been so informed, which is cause of demurrer. 1 Ver. 56; but the claims of the defendant may be stated in general terms; and if a matter essential to the determination of the plaintiff's claims, is charged to rest in the knowledge of the defendant, or must of necessity be within his knowledge, and is consequently the subject of a part of the discovery sought by the bill, a precise allegation is not required. Milf. 41.

As the bill must be sufficient in substance, so it must have convenient form, and consist of those several parts which long practice has prescribed for such form.

After a bill is filed, for the purpose of preserving the property in dispute, or to prevent the evasion of justice, the court will, where necessary, make a special order on the subject, or issue a provisional writ; such as the writ of injunction, to restrain the defendant from proceeding at common law against the plaintiff, or from committing waste, or doing any injurious act:* the writ of ne exeat regno, if the suit is in Chancery, or an order in the nature of such writ, if it is in the Exchequer, to restrain the defendant from avoiding the plaintiff's demands by quitting the kingdom; and other writs of a similar nature: and where a bill seeks to obtain the special order of the court, or a provisional writ for any of these purposes, it is usual to insert in it, immediately before the prayer of process, a prayer for the order or particular writ, which the case requires: and the bill is then commonly called, from the writ so prayed, an injunction bill, or a bill for a writ ne exeat regno. Mitf. 46.

The form of every kind of bill bears a resemblance to that of an original bill; but there are necessarily some variations either arising from the purposes for which the bill is framed, or the circumstances under which it is exhibited, as will be shewn hereafter. Mitf. 47.

Every bill must be signed by counsel; and if it contains matter criminal, impertinent, or scandalous, such matter shall be expunged, and the counsel shall pay costs to the party aggrieved, but nothing relevant is considered as scandalous. Rules and orders of Ch. 93. 1 Ch. Rep. 194. 2 Vez. 24. Mitf.

2. A bill of interpleader, is where the person exhibiting the bill, claims no right, in opposition to the rights claimed by the persons, against whom the bill is exhibited, but prays the decree of the court, touching the rights of those persons, for the safety of the person exhibiting the bill. Ibid.

Where two or more persons, claim the same thing, by different or separate interests, and another person, not knowing to which of the claimants he ought of right to render a debt or duty, or to deliver property in his custody, fears he may be hurt by some of them, he may exhibit a bill of interpleader against them: in this bill, he must state his own rights, and their several claims, and pray that they may interplead, so that the court may adjudge to whom the thing belongs, and he may be indemnified: if any suits at law are brought against him, he may also pray that the claimant may be restrained from proceeding, till the right is determined. Mitf. 47, 8.

As the sole ground on which the jurisdiction of the court in this case is supported, is the danger of injury to the plaintiff, from the doubtful titles of the defendants, the court will not permit the proceeding to be used collusively to give an advantage to either party, nor will it permit the plaintiff to delay the payment of money, due from him by suggesting a doubt to whom it is due; therefore to a bill of interpleader the plaintiff must annex an affidavit that there is no collusion, between him and any of the parties; and if any money is due from him he must bring it into court, or at least offer so to do by his bill. Mitf. 49.

3. Bill praying the writ of certiorari to remove a cause from an inferior court of equity. Ibid 33.

When an equitable right is sued for, in an inferior court of equity, and by means of the limited jurisdiction of the court, the defendant cannot have complete justice, or the cause is without the jurisdiction of the inferior court; the defendant may file a bill in Chancery, praying a special writ, called a writ of certiorari, to remove the cause into the court of chancery. This species of bill, having no other object than to remove a cause from one inferior court of equity, merely states the proceedings in the inferior court, shews the incompetency of them, and prays the writ of certiorari; it does not pray that the defendant may answer, or even appear to the bill, and consequently it prays no writ of subpœna. Mitf. 49.

The proceedings upon the bill are peculiar, and are particularly mentioned in the books which treat of the practice of the court. In case the court of Chancery removes the cause from the inferior court, the bill exhibited in that court is considered as an original bill in the court of Chancery, and is proceeded upon as such. Mitf. 50.

II. Original bills not praying relief, may be, 1, a bill to perpetuate the testimony of witnesses; 2nd, a bill for the discovery of facts resting within the knowledge of the person against whom the bill is exhibited, or of deeds, writings, or other things in his custody or power. Ibid.

1. A bill to perpetuate the testimony of witnesses must state the matter touching which the plaintiff is desirous of giving evidence, and must shew that he has some interest in the subject, and pray leave to examine witnesses touching the matter so stated, to the end that their testimony may be preserved and perpetuated. Mitf. 50, 51.

The bill ought also to shew, that the facts to which the testimony of witnesses proposed to be examined, is conceived to relate, cannot be immediately investigated in a court of

* Under this rule the bill quia timet falls, which is founded upon the maxim, that equity prevents mischief, and such bills are proper in cases, where a person is entitled to any thing after a certain period, which in the interim is to be enjoyed by another, by whom it may be wasted or destroyed, or where a person is entitled to a thing after another's death, who is to have the use of that thing for life. 1 Ch. Cas. 223. or where one may be injured by another's neglecting or refusing to do what in conscience he was bound to do. 1 Vern. 190.

law, as in the case of a person in possession without disturbance; or that before the facts can be investigated in a court of law, the evidence of a material witness is likely to be lost, by his death or departure from the realm. Ibid 51.

To avoid objection to a bill framed on the latter ground, it seems proper to annex to it an affidavit of the circumstances, by which the evidence intended to be perpetuated is in danger of being lost; a practice adopted in other cases, of bills which have a tendency to change the jurisdiction of a subject, from a court of law to a court of equity: it seems another requisite to a bill of this kind, that it should shew an interest in the defendant to contest the title of the plaintiff in the subject of the proposed testimony. Mitf. 51.

2. Bill of discovery. Every bill is in reality, a bill of discovery, but the species of bill usually distinguished by that title, is a bill for discovery of facts, resting in the knowledge of the defendant, or of deeds or writings, or other things in his custody or power, and seeking no relief in consequence of the discovery: this bill is commonly used in aid of the jurisdiction of some other court, as to enable the plaintiff to prosecute or defend an action at law, or proceeding before the king in council, or any other legal proceeding of a nature merely civil, before a jurisdiction, which cannot compel a discovery on oath; except that the court has in some instances refused to give this aid to the jurisdiction of inferior courts. A bill of this nature must state the matter, touching which a discovery is sought, the interest of the plaintiff and defendant in the subject, and the right of the first to require the discovery from the other. Mitf. 52.

If a bill seeking a discovery of deeds or writings, also prays such relief, as might be obtained at law, if the deeds or writings were in the custody of the plaintiff, he must annex to his affidavit, that they are not in his custody or power, and that he knows not where they are, unless they are in the hands of the defendant: but a bill for a discovery merely, or which only prays the delivery of deeds or writings, or equitable relief grounded upon them, does not require such an affidavit. Mitf. 52, 53.

III. Bills not original.] A suit imperfect in its frame, or become so, by accident, before its end has been obtained, may in many cases be rendered perfect by a new bill, which is not considered as an original bill, but merely as an addition to, or continuance of the former bill, or both. And a bill of this kind may be, 1, a supplemental bill; 2, a bill of revivor; 3, a bill of revivor and supplement.

1. Supplemental bills] are used where the imperfection of a suit arises from a defect in the original bill, or in the proceedings upon it, and not from any subsequent event. Thus a supplemental bill will lie for a further discovery, to put new matter in issue, or to add new parties, where it is too late to amend the original bill, and this may be done either before or after the decree, for it may be used either to aid or impeach the decree; but where an original bill may be amended, a supplemental bill will not lie. Mitf. 59.

So upon an event subsequent to the original bill, which gives a new interest to any one, not a party to the suit, as the birth of a tenant in tail; or a new interest to the party, as the happening of some other contingency; or upon an event which occasions an alteration in the interest of any of the parties to the suit, and does not deprive the plaintiff, suing in his own right, of his whole interest in the subject; or if one, not the sole plaintiff, is entirely deprived of his interest, the defect may be supplied by a supplemental bill. Ib. 60.

It is not accurately ascertained, how a suit becomes defective without abatement, and in what cases it abates, as well as becomes defective; but it may be collected, that if the interest of a party to the suit becomes vested in another, the proceedings are rendered defective in proportion, and though the parties to the suit may remain, the object in question cannot be obtained; and if such a change is the consequence of a party's death, whose interest is not determined by that event, or by the marriage of a female plaintiff, the proceedings become likewise abated or discontinued, either in part or in all. So, upon the death of one defendant, all proceedings abate as to him, but they do not abate upon the marriage of a defendant, though her husband must be named in the subsequent proceedings. Ib. 55.

Where the proceedings in the supplemental and original bills are in equal forwardness, one replication may be filed, and the causes consolidated; or where a replication may be filed in each cause, then, upon giving a rule to pass publication, the causes become consolidated, and are proceeded in as one. 1 Fowl. Prac. in Exch. 68.

2. Bills of revivor] must state the original bill, the proceedings, and the abatement; it must shew a title to revive, and charge that the cause ought to be revived, and stand as the original bill did at the time of abatement, praying that the suit may be revived accordingly; and in some cases, as a requisite admission of assets, it may be necessary to pray that defendant may answer the bill of revivor; and if defendant admits assets, the cause may proceed upon an order of revivor only; but if he does not admit them, the cause must be heard, in order to obtain the accounts of the deceased's estate to answer the demands against it; and therefore, if the bill should extend to the taking of the accounts, in case defendant does not admit assets, so far this is in nature of an original bill. Mitf. 70.

If the defendant to the original bill dies before he has put in a complete answer, though the bill of revivor may not require an answer, yet it should pray that the defendant in revivor should answer so much as remains unanswered, as well in the case of amendments as exceptions. Ib. 71.

3. Bills of revivor and supplement] are merely a compound of the two former sorts of bills, upon which, in their separate parts, they must be framed. If a suit is abated by any event, except the immediate cause of abatement, the rights of the parties are affected, as by a settlement or a devise, though a bill of revivor may continue the suit, yet to bring the whole matter before the court, the parties must add a supplemental bill to their bill of revivor, to shew how their rights are affected. So if any other cause of abatement is accompanied by any matter which ought to be stated to the court, to shew the rights of the parties, or to obtain the full benefit of the suit, that matter must be set forth by way of supplemental bill added to the bill of revivor. Mitf. 65.

IV. Bills in the nature of original bills.] Bills for the purposes of cross litigation of matters already depending before the court, of controverting, suspending, avoiding or carrying into execution a judgment of the court, or of obtaining the benefit of a suit, which the plaintiff is not entitled to add to or continue; or for the purpose of supplying any defect in it, have been generally considered under the head of bills in the nature of original bills, though occasioned by or seeking the benefit of former bills, and are, 1st, a cross bill; 2, a bill of review; 3, a bill in nature of a bill of review; 4, a bill to impeach a decree on the ground of fraud; 5, a bill to suspend or avoid the execution of a decree; 6, a bill to carry a decree into execution; 7, a bill in the nature of a bill of revivor; 8, a bill in nature of a supplemental bill.

1. Cross bills] are usually brought by a defendant, against a plaintiff in a former suit depending, either to obtain a necessary discovery or full relief to all parties: if a question arises between two defendants to an original bill, on which the court cannot make a complete decree without a cross bill; to bring every matter before the court, it is necessary for some or one of the defendants to the original bill to file a bill against the plaintiff and the other defendants in the original bill, and bring the point litigated properly before the court. A cross bill should state the original bill and proceedings, and the rights of the complainant, or the ground on which he resists the original plaintiff's claim, if such be the object of the cross bill; but if the cross bill be only intended as a defence, or to procure a determination of the matter already litigated, the complainant need not shew his equity to support the jurisdiction of the court. Mitf. 75.

Also bills may be filed by direction of the court, and they are brought where the suit already instituted is insufficient to bring all matters so before the court, as to enable it to decide on the rights of all the parties; and this frequently happens where persons in opposite interests, are original co-defendants, and the determination of their interests, is necessary to a complete decree: in such case, if a difficulty appears upon the hearing, which a cross bill has not been exhibited to remove, the court will direct a bill to be filed, to bring all the rights of the parties before the court, and will reserve the directions until the hearing of the new bill. Jones v. Jones, T. 1744; 3 Atk. 110. Mitf. 77.

2. Bills of review] are preferred to procure an examination and reversal of a decree, signed, and inrolled. It may be brought for error in the decree, or for new matter discovered. If for error of law, as where the person decreed against, is an infant, it can only be reversed upon that apparent ground, and such a bill may be brought without the previous leave of the court; but if to reverse a decree, signed and inrolled, upon discovery of new matter, leave of the court must be first obtained, and that cannot be had, but upon allegation upon oath, that the new matter could not be produced by the claimant, when the decree was made. If the court is satisfied that the new matter is material, and such as might have occasioned a different determination, a bill of review will be allowed. Mitf. 78.

It is a rule that a bill of review shall not prevent the execution of the decree impeached; and if money is directed to be paid, it ought to be paid before the bill of review is filed, though afterwards refunded. Ib. 80.

This bill should state the former bill and proceedings, the decree and matter of grievance thereby, and the ground of law or new matter, upon which the decree is sought to be impeached. On the ground of new matter, it seems, leave to file the bill should be obtained, though it is doubtful whether the fact of discovery is traversable, after leave given; the bill may pray simply that the decree may be reviewed, and reversed in the point complained of, if not carried into execution. Ib. 80.

A bill to review the reversal of a former decree, may pray that the original decree may stand; and it may also be made a bill of revivor, if the original suit has become abated; and if any event has happened since, a supplemental bill may be added; and particularly if any one, not a party to the original suit becomes interested, he must be made a party to the bill of review by way of supplement. Ib. 81.

To render a bill of review necessary, the original decree must be signed and inrolled; and where that has not been done, a decree may be examined and reversed upon a supplemental bill in nature of a bill of review, upon any new matter discovered. Ib. 82.

As a decree not signed and inrolled may be altered upon a re-hearing, so the office of the supplemental bill, in nature of a bill of review, is to supply the defect which occasioned the former decree. Ib.

It is necessary, in bringing this sort of supplemental bill, to make the same affidavit as in bringing a bill of review on discovery of new matter, and to obtain the leave of the court. The bill, in its frame, nearly resembles a bill of review, excepting, that instead of praying a review and reversal of the former decree, it prays that the cause may be heard; and with respect to the new matter, made the subject of a supplemental matter, to be reheard upon the original bill, and that plaintiff may be relieved as the supplemental bill requires. Ib.

3. Bills in nature of bills of review] may be brought for relief against error in a decree made against a person who had no interest, or not such, as to render the decree binding upon a claimant; as where a decree is made against a tenant for life only, a remainder man cannot defeat the proceedings against him, but by a bill, shewing the error in the decree, the incompetency of the tenant for life to sustain the suit, and the accruer of his own interest; whereupon he prays that the original proceedings may be reviewed, that the other party may appear and answer, and that the rights of the parties may be ascertained. Mitf. 83.

This bill may be brought without leave of the court. Ib.

4. Bills to impeach a decree on the ground of fraud] may be brought without leave of the court; the fraud used in obtaining the decree being the principal point in issue, and necessary to be proved before the decree can be investigated; and where a decree has been so obtained, the court will restore the parties to their original situation whatever their rights may be.—Besides cases of direct fraud, it seems, that where a decree is made against a trustee, the cestuy que trust not being before the court, and the trust not discovered, or against a person who has made some conveyance or incumbrance not discovered, or in favour or against an heir, where the ancestor, by his will, has disposed of the subject matter of the suit; the concealment of the trust, conveyance, or will, in such cases, is a fraud. So where a decree has been made against an infant, without actual fraud, it may be impeached by original bill. Mitf. 84.

This bill must state the decree and proceedings, and the circumstances of the fraud, and according to the nature of the fraud, and its operation, in obtaining an improper decree, so must the prayer of this bill be varied. Ib. 85.

5. Bills to suspend or avoid the execution of a decree.] For these matters a new bill may be brought; as where a mortgagor was obliged to quit the kingdom after the death of Charles I. to avoid the effects of his engagements with the royal party, upon a decree of foreclosure in case of non-payment of principal, interest, and costs; and having requested the mortgagee to sell the estate to the best advantage and pay himself, which the mortgagee acquiesced in: the court, on a new bill, enlarged the time for performing the decree, upon the ground of inevitable necessity, and made a new decree grounded on subsequent matter. Mitf. on Plead. 85. Cocker v. Bevis, H. 1666; 1 Ch. Ca. 61. Venables v. Foyle, T. 1663; 1 Ch. Ca. 3. Whorewood v. Whorewood, H. 1675; 1 Ch. Ca. 250. Wakelin v. Walthell, M. 1679; 2 Ch. Ca. 8.

6. Bills to carry decrees into execution] are generally necessary, where the parties have neglected to execute the decree, and their rights become afterwards so embarrassed, as to require the aid of the court in settling and ascertaining them. Such a bill is sometimes preferred by a person, not a party to the original suit, but claiming in a similar interest, or unable to obtain a determination of his own rights till the decree is executed; or it may be brought by or against an assignee.—The court, in these cases, only enforces the decree, and seldom varies it, unless on mistake; it has even refused to enforce the decree, though in other cases, the court, and the house of lords, have considered that the law of the decree ought not to be examined on these sorts of bills.—These bills may be brought to execute the judgment of an inferior court of equity, as a decree in Wales; and the court will, in such case, examine the justice of the decision, though affirmed in the lords. Mitf 86.

This bill, though not strictly original, partakes of it; sometimes also of revivor or supplement, and sometimes of both, and it must be framed accordingly. Ib. 87.

7. Bills, in the nature of bills of revivor,] are proper where the interest of a party dying is transmitted to another, to be litigated in equity; as in case of a devise, where the suit cannot be revived by, or against the person, to whom the interest is so transmitted, but who, if he succeeds to that interest, is entitled to the benefit of the former suit. This bill must state the original bill and proceedings, the abatement and the transmission of interest; the validity of which must be charged, stating the rights that have accrued by it.—The bill is called original, for the want of that privity of title, between the parties to the former and the latter bill, though claiming the same interest, as would have permitted a revivor; therefore, when the validity of the transmission is established, the party to the new bill shall be equally bound or benefited by the original bill, as if there had been such a privity; and the suit is considered as pending from the filing of the original bill, so as to have every advantage attending the institution of the original suit, or the continuance of it by revivor. Mitf. 88.

8. Bills, in nature of supplemental bills,] are preferred to obtain the benefit of the former proceedings, where the interest of a plaintiff or defendant, in his own right, wholly determines, and the same property becomes vested in another not claiming under him, and where the suit cannot be continued by bill of revivor, and its defects must be supplied by a supplemental bill. Mitf. 89.

This bill must state the original bill and proceedings, and the event which has determined the interest of the original plaintiff or defendant, and the manner in which the property has become vested in the person entitled. It must then shew the ground for granting the benefit of the former suit, and pray a decree adapted to the case of the plaintiff in the new bill. This bill, though in nature of a supplemental bill, is not an addition to the original bill, for an original bill draws to itself the advantages of the former proceedings. Ib.

BILLS, by way of information, in every respect follow the nature of other bills except in their style. When they concern the rights of the crown only, or those who take under its protection, they are exhibited in the name of the attorney or solicitor general as informant. Mitf. 92.

If the right of the queen is in question, the bill must be exhibited in the name of her attorney general. Ib.

But if the suit does not immediately concern the crown, its prosecution depends on some person as a relator, in whose name and under whose direction the suit is carried on, and he is considered answerable for the propriety and conduct of it. Ib.

Where there are several relators the death of one of them does abate the suit; but if all die, the court will stay proceedings till a new one be appointed; for there must be one person to sustain the suit, and if it be improperly brought, to pay the costs. 1 Vez. 72. 2 Vez. 327. Mitf. 91.

The proceedings upon an information can only abate by the defendant's death; or the determination of his interest, and an information by the attorney general alone, is not dismissible for want of prosecution, though it is otherwise if by a relator. 1 Fowl. 118.

And where a man prays a debt decreed by an English information to be due to the crown, he shall stand in its place, and have the aid of the crown in recovering it. Ib. 119.

Defence to bills in equity.] To a bill in equity, unless the sole object of it, is to remove a cause from an inferior court of equity, it is necessary for the person complained of, either to make defence, or to disclaim all right to the matters in question by the bill: for as the bill calls upon the defendant to answer the several charges it contains, he must do so; unless he can dispute the right of the plaintiff, to compel such an answer, either from some impropriety in requiring the discovery sought by the bill, or for some objection to the proceeding, to which the discovery is proposed to be assistant; or unless by disclaiming all right to the matters in question by the bill, he shews a further answer from him to be unnecessary. Mitf. 10, 11.

The grounds on which a defence may be made to a bill, either by answer, or by disputing the right of the plaintiff to compel the answer, which the bill requires, are various. The subject of the suit may not be within the jurisdiction of a court of equity: or some other court of equity may have the proper jurisdiction: the plaintiff may not be entitled to sue, by some personal disability: if he has no such disability, he may not be the person he pretends to be: he may have no interest in the subject, or if he has an interest, he may have no right to call upon the defendant concerning it: the defendant may not be the person he is alleged to be by the bill: or he may not have that interest in the subject, which can make him liable to the claims of the plaintiff: and finally if the matter is such as a court of equity ought to interfere in, and no other court of equity has the proper jurisdiction, if the plaintiff is under no personal disability, if he is the person he pretends to be, and has a claim of interest in the subject, and a right to call upon the defendant concerning it, if the defendant is the person he is alleged to be, and also claims an interest in the subject which may make him liable to the demands of the plaintiff: still the plaintiff may not be entitled, in the whole or in part, to the relief or assistance he prays; or if he is so entitled, the defendant may also have rights in the subject, which may require the attention of the court, and call for its interference to adjust the rights of all parties; the effecting complete justice, and finally determining as far as possible all questions concerning the subject, being the constant aim of courts of equity: some of these grounds may extend, only to entitle the defendant, to dispute the plaintiff's claim to the relief prayed by the bill, and may not be sufficient to protect him from making the discovery sought by it; and where there is no ground for disputing the right of the plaintiff to the relief prayed, or if no relief is prayed, yet if there is any impropriety in requiring the discovery sought by the bill, or if the discovery can answer no purpose, the impropriety or immateriality of the discovery, may protect the defendant from making it. Mitf. 12, 13.

The defence which may be made on these several grounds may be founded on matter apparent on the bill, or on a defect either in its frame, or in the case made by it, and may on the foundation of the bill itself demand the judgment of the court whether the defendant shall be compelled to make any answer to the bill, and consequently whether the suit shall proceed; or it may be founded in matter not apparent on the bill, but stated in the defence, and may on the matter so offered, demand the judgment of the court, whether the defendant shall be compelled to make any other answer to the bill, and consequently whether the suit shall proceed, except to try the truth of the matter so offered; or it may be founded on matter in the bill, or on further matter offered, or on both, and submit to the judgment of the court on the whole case made on both sides, and it may be more complex, and apply several defences, differently founded, to distinct parts of the bill. Milf. 13.

The form of making defence varies, according to the foundation, on which it is made, and the extent in which it submits to the judgment of the court; if it rests on the bill, and on the foundation of matter there apparent demands the judgment of the court whether the suit shall proceed at all, it is termed a demurrer: if on the foundation of new matter offered, it demands the judgment of the court, whether the defendant shall be compelled to answer further, it assumes a different form, and is termed a plea; if it submits to answer generally the charges in the bill, demanding the judgment of the court on the whole case made on both sides, it is offered in a shape different, and is simply called an answer: if the defendant disclaims all interest in the matters in question by the bill, his answer to the complaint made is again varied in form, and is termed a disclaimer. Milf. 13, 14.

And all these several forms of defence, and disclaimer, or any of them, may be used together, if applying to separate and distinct parts of the bill. Ibid.

BILL OF EXCEPTIONS. At common law a writ of error lay for an error in law, apparent on the record, or for error in fact, where either party died before judgment; yet it lay not for an error in law, not appearing on the record; and therefore, where the plaintiff or demandant, tenant, or defendant, alleged any thing ore tenus, which was over-ruled by the judge, this could not be assigned for error, not appearing within the record, nor being an error in fact, but in law; and so the party grieved was without remedy. 2 Inst. 426. And therefore, by the stat. Westm. 2. 13 Ed. 1. c. 31. if the judge either in his directions or decisions misstates the law by ignorance, inadvertence or design, the counsel on either side may require him publicly to seal a bill of exceptions, stating the point wherein he is supposed to err, and this he is obliged to seal, for if he refuses so to do, the party may have a compulsory writ against him, (2 Inst. 427) commanding him to seal it, if the fact alleged, be truly stated: and if he returns that the fact is untruly stated, when the case is otherwise, an action will lie against him for making a false return. 3 Black. 372.

The exceptions ought to be put in writing sedente curia, in the presence of the judge who tried the cause, and signed by the counsel on each side; and then the bill must be drawn up and tendered to the judge that tried the cause, to be sealed by him; and when signed, there goes out a scire facias to the same judge ad cognoscendum scriptum, and that is made part of the record, and the return of the judge with the bill itself, must be entered on the issue-roll; and if a writ of error be brought, it is to be returned as part of the record. 1 Nels. Abr. 373.

These bills of exceptions, are to be brought before a verdict given, and extend only to civil actions, not to criminal. Sid. 85. 1 Salk. 288.

This bill of exceptions is in the nature of an appeal, examinable, not in the court out of which the record issues for the trial, at nisi prius, but in the next immediate superior court upon a writ of error after judgment given in the court below.

BILL OF EXCHANGE. A bill of exchange is a security, originally invented among merchants in different countries, for the more easy remittance of money from the one to the other, which has since spread itself into almost all pecuniary transactions. 2 Black. 466.

It is an open letter of request, from one man to another, desiring him to pay a sum mentioned therein, either to his own order, or to a third person, on his account; by which means a man at the most distant part of the world may have money remitted to him from any trading country. Ibid.

In common speech, such a bill is frequently called a draft, but a bill of exchange is the more legal as well as mercantile expression. Ibid 467.

The person, however, who writes this letter, is called in law the drawer, and he to whom it is written, the drawee; and the third person, or negotiator to whom it is payable (whether specially named, or the bearer generally) is called the payee. Ibid.

These bills are either foreign or inland, foreign when drawn by a merchant residing abroad upon his correspondent, or vice versa, and inland where both the drawer and drawee reside within the kingdom. Ibid. 467.

Promissory notes, or notes of hand are a plain and direct engagement in writing, to pay a sum specified at the time therein limited to a person therein named, or sometimes to his order, or often to the bearer at large. Ibid.

I. Bills and notes in general.] The person who makes a bill is called the drawer, the person to whom it is addressed, the drawee; and the person in whose favour it is made, the payee; if the drawee accepts the bill, he is called the acceptor.

The person who signs a promissory note, is called the maker; and the person to whom it is payable the payee.

When a bill or note is indorsed, the person indorsing it, is called the indorser; and the person to whom it is indorsed, the indorsee.

A promissory note while in the hands of the payee resembles a bill of exchange, inasmuch as it is for the payment of a sum of money absolutely, and at all events; and when transferred, it is exactly similar to a bill of exchange. Bayl. 3. Burr. 669. 1234. 4 Ter. Rep. 148. 5 Ter. Rep. 488.

No particular words are necessary to make a bill of exchange or promissory note; any order or promise, which from the time of making it cannot be complied with, or performed without the payment of money is a bill or note. Ld. Raym. 1397. Str. 699. 8 Mod. 304.

Thus an order or promise to deliver, or that J. S. shall receive money, or to be accountable or responsible for it to him or order is a good bill. Ibid.

A note was in these words, "borrowed of J. S. 50*l.* which I promise not to pay;" and per lord Macclesfield the word not shall be rejected, for a man shall never say I am a cheat, and have defrauded. 2 Atk. 32.

But bills and notes must be for the payment of money only: and therefore an order, or promise to pay money, and do some other act, is not a bill or note. Bull. N. P. 272.

And they must be for the payment of money in specie: therefore an order or promise to pay money in good East Indian bonds, is not a bill or note.

Also by 48 Geo. 3. c. 88. "all promissory "and other notes, bills of exchange, or drafts "or undertakings in writing, for money or "goods, for less than 20*s.* in the whole, shall "be absolutely void, and persons uttering any "such shall forfeit, not exceeding 20*l.* nor "less than 5*l.* half to the informer, and half "to the poor; to be recovered, by a summary "conviction, before one justice: on which "parishioners may be evidence."

And by 17 Geo. 3. c. 30. made perpetual by 27 Geo. 3. c. 16. "all negotiable notes, "bills or drafts for more than 20*s.* and less "than 5*l.* issued in England, and the in-"dorsements thereon shall specify the names "and places of abode of the persons to whom "payable, and shall bear date when given "and be made payable within 21 days, and "the signing of every such bill or note and "indorsement thereof, shall be attested by "one witness, or else void.—Persons pub-"lishing or negotiating any such bills or "notes contrary to the method prescribed by "this act shall be subject to a penalty, of "not more than 20*l.* nor less than 5*l.* recon-"verable as under the first mentioned act."

But by 37 Geo. 3. c. 32. so much of the stat. 17 Geo. 3. c. 30. as relates to the making void notes under 5*l.* *payable on demand to bearer is suspended until two years after the expiration of the restriction upon payment in cash by the Bank of England (56 Geo. 3. c. 21.) And if such notes are not paid within seven days after demand, the justices of peace may enforce payment thereof with costs.

A bill or note must be payable absolutely and at all events: and if it depend on any uncertainty, the instrument is not a bill or note. Bayl. 8.

Therefore an order or promise to pay money, provided the terms mentioned in certain letters shall be complied with, provided J. S. shall not be surrendered to prison within a limited time; provided J. S. shall not pay the money by a particular day; provided J. S. shall leave me sufficient, or I shall otherwise be able to pay it; or when J. S. shall marry, is no bill or note, on account of the contingency to which the payment is subjected. Bay. 8. 3 Ld. Raym. 67. 8 Mod. 363. 4 Vin. 240. Burr. 323. Str. 1161.

So an order or promise to pay out of my growing subsistence or fifth payment when due, or out of money when received, is no bill or note, on account of the uncertainty whether the subsistence or payment will become due, or the money be received. Fort 281. 10 Mod. 294, 316. Ld. Raym. 1563. Black. 782. 3 Wills. 207.

So an order, to pay a sum of money, out of rents, or other money in the hands of the person, to whom it is addressed, is no bill, because it may be, that he has not rent or other money in his hands sufficient to discharge it. Ld. Ray. 1362. Str. 592. Fort. 282.

So an order from the owner of a ship to the freighter, to pay money on account of freight is no bill, because the quantum due for freight may be open to litigation; but such an order from the freighter is, because it is an admission that so much at least is due. Str. 1211. Coup. 571.

And an order to pay money, as the drawer's quarter's half pay by advance, before the pay will be due, is a good bill; because it will be payable, though the half pay shall never become due. Ld. Raym. 1481. Str. 762. Barnard. 12.

So an order or promise to pay money when J. S. shall come of age, specifying the day when that event is to happen, is a good bill or note, because it is payable, though J. S. die in the interim. Burr. 220.

And an order or promise to pay within a limited time after a man's death, is a good

* But if payable to order or otherwise than on demand, the rules must be observed.—Ed.

bill or note, because it must become payable at some time or other, though the exact period is uncertain. Str. 1217.

So an order or promise, to pay within a limited time, after the payment of money due from government, is a good bill or note, because it is morally certain that such payment will be made. Str. 24. 1 Wils. 262.

A bill or note payable to J. S. or order, is payable to order; a bill or note payable to J. S. or bearer, is payable to bearer, and in the latter case J. S. is a mere cypher. Bayl. 11. Burr. 1516.

It was for some time unsettled whether it was not essential, that a bill or note should be payable either to order, or to bearer, but it is now decided that it is not. 6 Ter. Rep. 123.

It was also for some time a matter of controversy whether it was not necessary that a bill or note should not express on the face of it to have been made for value received; but it is now settled, that it is not necessary. Bayl. 13. Ld. Raym. 1418.

The name of the person making it must be inscribed in the body, or subscribed at the bottom of every bill or note; and every bill must be written or signed by the person making it, or some one authorized by him for that purpose. Bayl. 13. Ld. Raym. 1484, 1542.

If any person signs his name, upon a blank paper, stamped with a bill stamp, and delivers it to another person to draw such bill as he may choose thereon, he is the drawer of any bill to which the stamp is applicable, which such person shall draw thereon 1 Hen. Black. 313.

Bills are either inland or foreign: inland, when made and payable within this kingdom; and foreign when made or payable abroad—inland bills and notes seldom consist of more than one part: foreign bills in general consist of several, and the several parts of a bill are called a set: and each part contains a condition, that it shall be payable only so long, as all the others remain unpaid: in other respects, all are of the same tenor. Bayl. 14, 15.

This condition should be inserted in each part, and should in each, mention every other part of the set, for if a man with an intention to make a set of three parts, should omit the condition in the first, and make the second with a condition mentioning the first only, and in the third alone take notice of the other two (which by the way, is the mode pointed out by Molloy, b. 2. c. 10. s. 24. Malyne's b. 3. c. 5. s. 261, 2, and Marius, p. 7.) he might, perhaps, in some cases be obliged to pay each; for it would be no defence to an action on the second, that he had paid the third, nor to an action on the first that he had paid either of the others: but the omission is not perhaps material, which upon the face of the condition must necessarily have arisen from mistake, as if in the enumeration of the several parts one of the intermediate ones were to be omitted, as for instance, "pay this my first of exchange, second and fourth not paid." Bayl. 15.

Where a bill consists of several parts, each ought to be delivered to the person in whose favour it is made (unless one is forwarded to the drawee for acceptance, and in that case, the rest must be so delivered) otherwise there may be difficulties in negotiating the bill, or obtaining payment. Ibid.

Bills and notes are also unavailable both at law and in equity, unless written on paper, duly stamped according to the stat. 55 Geo. 3. c. 184. by which the following stamp duties have been imposed, viz.

Bill of exchange, viz inland bill of exchange, draft, or order, for payment to the bearer, or to order, either on demand, or otherwise, not exceeding two months after date, or sixty days after sight, of any sum of money,

Exceeding 3000*l.*	1	10	0

These notes are not to be re-issued after having been once paid.

By 31 Geo. 3. c. 25. All unstamped, or improperly stamped, bills or notes shall be void and unavailable: and it shall not be lawful for the commissioners to stamp the same at any time after they shall have been drawn. s. 19.

And by 55 Geo. 3. c. 184. If any person shall sign or issue, or accept or pay any unstamped bill or note, he shall forfeit 50*l.* * s. 11.

Also if any person shall issue any bill or note for payment of money after date or sight, which shall bear date subsequent to the day when issued, so that it shall not in fact become payable in two months after date, or sixty days after sight, unless stamped as a bill or note, exceeding such two months or sixty days, he shall forfeit 100*l.* s. 12.

If any person shall issue any bill, draft, or order, payable to bearer on demand, upon any banker or firm, acting as such, which shall be dated on a subsequent day, or which shall not specify the place where issued, or which shall not fall within the exemption, as above mentioned, unless stamped as a bill, such person shall forfeit 100*l.* and any person knowingly receiving the same, 20*l.* and if any banker pay the same, he shall forfeit 100*l.* and moreover, not be allowed the money so paid in his account against the party. s. 13.

Any banker who shall have issued promissory notes for payment to bearer on demand, of any sum not exceeding 100*l.* may reissue the same as often as he thinks fit. s. 14. And that notwithstanding any alteration in the firm, or any alteration therein, as to any house or place, where the same were first made payable. s. 15.

Reissuable notes in circulation before or upon 31st August, 1815, are allowed to be reissued for three years only from their date; and if any banker or other person shall after 31st of August, 1815, issue any note, bearing date before or upon that day he shall forfeit 50*l.* s. 16. Notes issued with printed dates upon or before the same 31st of August, may be also reissued for three years from their date: but if any such notes with printed dates, be first issued after that day, the penalty is 50*l.* s. 17.

And after the said 31st of August, 1815, no banker shall issue any promissory note for payment of money to bearer on demand with the date printed thereon, on pain of 50*l.* s. 18.

If any person shall reissue any note, bill, draft or order, not allowed to be reissued:

* But by 37 Geo. 3. c. c. 136. The holder thereof, may in certain cases get them stamped upon paying certain Penalties.—See title STAMPS.

or after payment thereof, shall refuse or neglect to cancel the same, such person shall forfeit 50*l.* and in case of the same being reissued, he is also chargeable with a further duty, as if the same had been then first issued, and persons knowingly receiving the same, shall forfeit 20*l.* s. 19.

Reissuable notes are not to be issued by bankers or others without annual license of 30*l.* for each town or place where they are issued. s. 30.

Promissory notes payable to bearer on demand, made out of Great Britain shall not be circulated or paid in Great Britain, unless stamped, on pain of 20*l.* for each: but this does not extend to notes made and payable only in Ireland. s. 29.

A bill payable at sight, is not payable on demand, but the usual days of grace are to be allowed from the sight or demand. Bayl. 24.

If a bill or note is altered, although with the consent of all parties, after it has once issued, or after the time when it was originally payable, it requires a new stamp. Ibid. 5 Ter. Rep. 537.

No bill or note can properly be made or indorsed by, nor can a bill be properly addressed to any person incapable of making himself responsible for the payment. Bayl. 24.

Therefore an infant cannot make himself responsible for the payment, unless it be given for necessaries. Carth. 169. 3 Salk. 197. 1 Ter. Rep. 40. nor a feme covert, except in those instances in which she is considered as having an existence independent of her husband. Bayl. 25.

And a feme covert resident in this kingdom is considered as having an existence independent of her husband, where the husband is under a civil incapacity of being here as in cases of attainder and the like: and there are cases, in which it has been decided that she is to be considered as having an independent existence where she lives apart from her husband, and has a separate maintenance; but in the latter case in all actions brought against her, the husband must be joined for the sake of conformity. Ld. Raym. 147. Bayl. 25, 26.

But a feme covert is not to be so considered, though she may be, by particular custom, permitted to trade on her separate account. Black. 1081. 4 Ter. Rep. 361.

It has also been held, that no person, except an actual merchant, could draw a bill, but the contrary is now settled. Lutw. 891. 1585.

A bill may be drawn by the drawer at one place and addressed to himself at another place, but this in legal operation is rather a note than a bill. Carth. 509. Burr. 1077.

A bill or note, cannot be made payable to any person who is incapable of suing for its payment—such as a feme covert, who cannot sue for payment: but an infant can. Bay. 26.

But a bill may be made payable to the drawer. Salk. 130. And if a bill or note is made payable to a fictitious person not in esse, or his order, and is issued with an indorsement in blank, purporting to be made by him thereon, it is as against the drawer or maker to be considered as a bill or note payable to bearer, and so is the bill as against the acceptor, if he know at the time of the acceptance, that the payee was a fictitious person. 1 Hen. Black. 313. 3 Ter. Rep. 174.

If a note be signed by several persons, but begins, I promise, it is several as well as joint. Peake 130.

The act of drawing bills implies an undertaking for the drawer to the payee, and every other person to whom the bill may afterwards be transferred, that the drawer is a person capable of making himself responsible for its payment, that he shall, if applied to for the purpose, express in writing upon the bill an undertaking to pay it, when it shall become payable, and that he shall then pay it, and subjects him, on a failure in any of these particulars, to an action at the suit of the payee or holder. Bayl. 29.

And the making of a note is an express engagement to the payee or person to whom it shall be transferred, to pay the money therein mentioned according to its tenor. Ibid.

II. Indorsement of bills and notes.] Bills or notes payable to order or to bearer, or containing any words to make them transferrable, may be indorsed or assigned over, so as to give the assignee a right against all the antecedent parties, whose names appear upon the bill or note: and bills or notes containing no words to make them negociable, may be indorsed or assigned over, so as to give such indorsee or assignee, a right upon them, against the immediate indorser, but not so as to give him a right against any of the antecedent parties. Bay. 30. Salk. 132.

Bills and notes are passed, either by delivery only, or by indorsement and delivery: thus bills and notes payable to order, are transferrable by the latter mode only; but bills and notes payable to bearer, may be by either. Bayl. 31, 32.

On a transfer by delivery, the person making it, ceases to be a party to the bill or note: but on a transfer by indorsement, he is to all intents and purposes chargeable as a new drawer. ib. and Ld. Raym. 449, 724, 929.

Upon bills and notes for the payment of less than 5*l.* the indorsement must be attested by one subscribing witness, and such indorsement must mention the place of abode of the indorsee, and bear date at or before the making of it. 17 Geo. 3. c. 30. s. 1.

But no particular words are essential to the indorsement of either bills or notes: the mere signature of the indorser is in general sufficient. Holt. 117. Ld. Raym. 176, 810 12 Mod. 192. 244. Salk. 126, 128, 130. Ld. Raym. 444.

An indorsement, which mentions the name of the person, in whose favour it is made, is called a full indorsement; an indorsement which does not, a blank one—a blank indorsement, so long as it continues blank, makes a bill or note payable to the bearer; and as long as the first indorsement continues blank, the bill or note, as against the payee, the drawer and acceptor, is assignable by mere delivery, notwithstanding it may have upon it subsequent full indorsements. Bay. 31. Doug. 611, 633 Peake 225.

A full indorsement may specially restrain the negotiability of a bill or note: and an indorsement is restrictive, which either has express words making it so, or is made in favour of a person who cannot make a transfer: thus an indorsement in these words, pay the contents to J. S. only, to J. S. for my use, or (at least when addressed to the drawee) the within must be credited to J. S. is restrictive. Bay. 33. Burr. 1227. Black. 229. Doug. 615, 637.

But the mere omission of the words, or to his order, to give a power of transfer will not make an indorsement restrictive. Com. 311. Str. 557. Bull. N. P. 275. Black. 295. Burr. 1216.

A restrictive indorsement precludes the person in whose favour it is made from making a transfer, so as to give a right of action against the person making it, or any of the antecedent parties, and (where the restriction is expressed upon the bill or note) from retaining a payment to their prejudice. Doug. 615, 637.

An indorsement cannot be made for a part of, or less than the full sum, appearing to be due upon the bill or note, otherwise it would subject the party to a variety of actions. Carth, 466. 12 Mod. 213. Ld. Raym. 360. 2 Wils. 262. Salk. 65.

A transfer by indorsement will convey no title, except against the person making it, unless it is made by him who has a right to make the indorsement: therefore in case of a loss by theft or accident, if the bill or note be only transferrable by indorsement, the thief or finder cannot confer a title against the antecedent parties, for, unless the indorsement be made by the person, to whom the bill is payable, it is a forgery and can confer no title: but if such bill or note be payable to bearer, and therefore assignable by mere delivery, the thief or finder may confer a title against the antecedent parties, by transferring it. And consequently, an innocent holder thereof, for a fair and valuable consideration, may recover the amount thereof, though the party from whom he took it, having no title, cannot. 4 Ter. Rep. 28. Ld. Raym. 738. Salk. 126. 3 Salk. 71. Burr. 452, 1516.

And by 9 & 10 Will. 3. c. 17. "if any inland bill be lost, or miscarry within the "time limited for its payment, the drawer "shall on security given, upon request, to "indemnify him, if such bill shall be found "again, give another bill of the same tenor "with the first." s. 3.

The right to transfer a bill or note, is in the payee, or in the person to whom it has been transferred from him: therefore an indorsement by a person of the same name, with the person entitled to transfer it, is void (except against the person indorsing it, and the subsequent indorsers) though the person entitled to indorse it, was not particularly described upon the bill or note. 4 Ter. Rep. 28.

On a bill or note payable to A. for the use of B the right to indorse is in A. Carth. 5. 2 Vent. 307. Skin. 264.

On a bill or note payable to several persons, not in partnership, the right to indorse is in all collectively, and not in any individually, Doug. 653. n. 134. If a right to indorse a bill or note be in a feme sole, and she marry, it devolves upon her husband. Str. 516. 3 Wils. 5. If the person who has a right to indorse a bill or note, die, it devolves upon his personal representative, and, if he becomes bankrupt, on his assignees. 3 Wils. 1. Str 1260 2 Barnes 137.

But if an executor or administrator indorse, he binds himself personally, and not the assets in his hands. 1 Ter. Rep. 487.

The indorsement of a bill or note may be made, either before the expiration of the time limited for its payment, or (unless the sum payable thereby be under 5*l.* 17 Geo 3. c. 30. s. 1.) at any time afterwards. 1 Show. 163. Ld. Raym. 575.

But where a bill or note is indorsed over after the time appointed for its payment, if there is any fraud in the transaction, it ought to be left to the jury, upon the slightest circumstance to presume that the indorsee knew of such fraud. 3 Ter. Rep. 83. n. And though he was ignorant of the fraud, any objection which might have been taken against the indorsee may be taken against him, if the bill or note appeared upon the face of it, when he took it, to have been dishonoured. 3 Ter. Rep. 80.

A bill or note dishonoured, cannot be indorsed or negotiated after it has been paid by the drawer, or first payee, for when it comes back to the drawer or first payee, and is taken up by him, its negotiability ceases. 1 Hen. Black. 89. n.

If a man indorse his name on a copper plate, bill or note, made in blank, without any sum, date, or time of payment expressed therein, he will be precluded from saying, that his indorsement was prior to the completion or issuing of the bill or note, even against a person who knew when he took it, in what state the bill was, at the time of the indorsement. Doug. 496, 514.

Upon the transfer of a bill drawn in sets, each part must be delivered to the person, in whose favour the transfer is made; otherwise the same inconveniencies may follow, which would ensue upon a neglect to deliver each of them to the payee. Bay. 41.

The indorsement of a bill or note, implies an undertaking from the indorsor, to the person in whose favour it is made, and every other person to whom the bill or note may afterwards be transferred, exactly similar to that which is implied by drawing a bill, except that in the case of a note, the stipulation with respect to the drawer's responsibility and undertaking, does not apply; and a transfer by delivery only, if made on account of an antecedent debt, implies a similar undertaking from the person making it, to the person in whose favour it is made. Ibid.

III. Acceptance of bills of exchange.] An acceptance is an engagement to pay a bill according to the tenor of the acceptance, and a general acceptance is an engagement to pay according to the tenor of the bill. Bay. 42.

This engagement is usually made by the person, on whom the bill is drawn, but on his refusal, it may be by some other person, expressing it to be for the honor of the drawer, and in either case, the acceptor will be bound. Ld. Raym. 575. 12 Mod. 410. Com. 76. Burr. 1672, 1674. Comp. 571. Doug. 284, 297. 1 Atk. 611.

This acceptance, or engagement to pay, may be made before the bill is drawn, or afterwards, and it may be either verbally or in writing, and is either absolute or conditional; and when made after the drawing of the bill, is according to, or varying from its tenor. Bay. 44.

Thus a verbal promise, that if the bill came back he would pay it, was held a good acceptance. Ann. 75. And in a variety of other cases, parol acceptances have been held good. Ann. 74. 2 Wils. 9. 1 Atk. 612. Burr. 1662. 1 Ter Rep. 182.

Also a conditional acceptance to pay when goods consigned were sold. Str. 1152. When in cash for the cargo of a ship. 2 Wils. 9. And that the bill would not be accepted till a navy bill was paid, Comp. 572. have been deemed good acceptances.

So also a bill may be accepted, as already observed, varying from its tenor, as for instance, to pay 100*l.* instead of 127*l.* Str. 214. to pay at a date different from the time required by the bill, 11 Mod. 190. or to pay half in money and half in bills, Comb. 452. and the acceptor will be bound, if the holder, who may totally reject the same, acquiesce in such acceptances. Comb. 452.

An acceptance is seldom made, before the bill is drawn, by any other person than the drawee: afterwards for the purpose either of promoting the negotiation of a bill, when the drawee's credit is suspected, or to save the reputation, and prevent the prosecution of some of the parties, where the drawee cannot be found, is not capable of making himself responsible, or refuses acceptance, it is not uncommon; and it is called an acceptance for the honor of the person, on whose account it is made, and enures to the benefit of all the parties subsequent to such person. Bayl. 45.

Such of these acceptances, as are made with the former view, are considered as made, on account of the previous possession of the bill, at the time they are made; and such as are made with the latter, unless they declare the contrary, on account of the drawer. Ibid.

If a bill is drawn on several persons, not connected in co-partnership, an acceptance by one will bind him, but him only. Bull. N. P. 279. But in the case of two joint-traders, the acceptance of one, will bind both. Mar. 16. Beawes 228. Molloy, c. 10. s. 18.

A general acceptance of a bill drawn upon a man, by the description of servant, will bind him personally. Ann. 1. Str. 955.

An acceptance after the bill is drawn, may be made even after the time appointed for its payment. Ld. Raym. 364, 574. Salk. 127, 9. Com. 75. 12 Mod. 212, 410. And in such case, an acceptance to pay according to the tenor, will be considered as a general acceptance to pay on demand. Ld. Raym. 364, 574.

A written acceptance is either made upon the bill or elsewhere: and on a written acceptance by the drawee, his name need not appear; it is sufficient if he write upon the bill, not putting a direct negative upon its request, as, 'accepted' 'presented' 'sum' 'the day of the month' or 'a direction to a third person to pay it:' all these are prima facie complete acceptances. Comb. 401. 1 Atk. 611. Bull. N. P. 270.

An express refusal to accept, written on a bill, is not an acceptance, though if the drawee intend it as a surprize upon the party, and to make him consider it as an acceptance, it seems that it may be otherwise. Bayl. 48.

A promise to accept, if made upon an executed consideration, or if it influences any person, to take or retain the bill, is a complete acceptance, as to the person to whom the promise is made, in the one case, and the person influenced in the other, and all the subsequent parties in each. Ibid.

Thus, a promise to accept such bills as B. should, after the expiration of a month, draw on account of a debt from C. to B. was held a complete acceptance. Burr. 1663.

But a promise to accept, made upon an executory consideration, such as when a credit is given to the party, by another house, is not binding so long as such consideration remains executory, unless it influences some person to take or retain the bill. Burr. 1666. Bayl. 49.

So a verbal promise to accept, though the party expressly defer a written acceptance, as where he says leave the bill and I will accept it, is a complete acceptance. Molloy, b. 2. c. 10. s. 20. So a verbal promise to accept a returned bill, when it shall come back, is binding if it do come back. Ann. 75.

An answer by the drawee when a bill is called for, "there is your bill, it is all right," is no acceptance. Espin. 27.

But an acceptance to pay when remitted for, is a conditional acceptance. Str. 1211. So an answer by a drawee who lived in London, that a ship was consigned to him and a person in Bristol, and that till he should know to which port the ship would come, he could not accept, connected with a subsequent answer that the bill was a good one, and would be paid, though the ship should be lost, was held a conditional acceptance only; it being clear that the drawee looked for an opportunity of reimbursing himself, and had three events in contemplation, the ship's arrival at Bristol, her arrival at London, and her loss: in the two latter, he should have the opportunity, and therefore accepted; on the former he should not, and did not accept it. 1 Ter. Rep. 182.

But an answer by the drawee, that he would pay, if J. S. would not, but that he must first apply to him, not that he thought he would pay, but because he judged it right to put him to the trial, with an assurance to the holder, that he might rest satisfied of the payment, was held an absolute acceptance. Str. 648.

If a man intends to make a conditional acceptance only, and gives that acceptance in writing, he should be careful to express the conditions therein, for, of any verbal condition he may annex to the acceptance, he will not be at liberty to avail himself, against any subsequent party, if either such party, or any intermediate one, between him and the person, to whom the acceptance was given, took the bill without notice of such condition, and gave a valuable consideration for it, and at all events the onus of proving such condition, will be upon the acceptor. Bay. 51.

But if an agreement to accept is conditional, and a third person takes the bill, knowing of the conditions, he takes it subject to them. Doug. 286, 299.

A conditional acceptance becomes absolute, as soon as its conditions are performed: thus an answer by the drawee, that he could not accept until a navy bill should be paid, was thought to operate as an absolute acceptance upon the payment of the navy bill. Burr. 1663. But if the drawee says he cannot accept without further directions from J. S., and J. S. afterwards desires him to accept, and draw upon A. B. for the amount, the mere drawing upon A. B. will not make this an acceptance, although the actual payment of the bill on him may. 1 Ter. Rep. 269.

An acceptance varying from the tenor, differs from it either in the sum, the time, the place, or mode of payment. Bayl. 52. But though any of these varied acceptances, bind the person making them, yet the holder of the bill is entitled, from the undertaking of the drawer and indorsors, to expect an absolute acceptance by the drawee. Marius 22. or if there be several not connected in partnership by each. Molloy, b. 2. c. 10. s. 18, 19. for the payment of the full sum of money, Ibid s. 20. mentioned therein, Ibid, s. 28. according to its tenor, specifying, Ld. Raym. 575. if none be mentioned for the purpose, a place for its payment, and expressing, Beawes 452. if the bill be payable within a limited time after sight, the time of its presentment for acceptance, and may reject any other. Bayl. 53.

And if upon the offer of any other acceptance the holder does any act expressing a non-acquiescence therein, as if he gives notice to any of the antecedent parties generally, that acceptance is refused, or notes the bill for non-acceptance, the offer is not binding. 1 Ter. Rep. 182.

There is a case however, in Beawes, s. 222. in which it has been supposed to have been decided, that if the holder strikes out an acceptance which varies from the tenor of the bill, and substitutes an acceptance according to the tenor, he may afterwards restore the acceptance he struck out, and that such acceptance will continue binding; but it has been doubted, 4 Ter. Rep. 350. whether the determination went further, than to decide, that the alteration in the acceptance (though it annulled the acceptance, and discharged the acceptor), did not destroy the bill as to other parties. Bayl. 54.

The obligation of a complete acceptance may be waived, and this waiver may be either express or implied. Ibid.

An agreement to consider an acceptance as at an end, Doug. 236, 237, 248, 249. or a message, ibid. to the acceptor upon an accommodation bill, that the business was settled with the drawer, and he need not give himself any further trouble, is an express waiver: the receipt of the known consideration of the acceptance an implied one. Doug. 284, 297.

If the holder of the bill receives a part of the money, from the drawer, and takes a promise from him upon the back of the bill, for the payment of the residue, at an enlarged time, it is for a jury to say whether this is not a waiver of the acceptance; but it ought to be left to them with strong observations to shew that it is. Doug. 250.

But a neglect to call upon an acceptor, or the receiving a part from the drawer, or other indulgence shewn to any of the other parties, though for ever so long a time, shall not be considered as a waiver of the remedy against the acceptor. Doug. 235, 247.

IV. Presentment of bills and notes.] The party taking a bill or note, impliedly undertakes to the antecedent parties, who would be entitled to bring an action on paying it, to present in proper time the one, where necessary, for acceptance, and each for payment: to allow no extra time for payment, and to give notice without delay to such persons, of a failure in the attempt to procure a proper acceptance or payment; and a default in any of these respects will discharge such persons from all responsibility, on account of a non-acceptance or non-payment, and make the bill or note operate as a satisfaction of any debt or demand for which it was given. Bayl. 57. Str. 649, 792.

And by 3 & 4 Ann. c. 9. s. 7. (which also places promissory notes on the same footing as bills of exchange, s. 1.) it is enacted, that "if any person doth accept any such "bill of exchange, for and in satisfaction of "any former debt, the same shall be es- "teemed compleat payment of such debt, if "such persons, accepting of any such bill "for his debt, doth not take his due course "to obtain payment thereof, by endeavour- "ing to get the same accepted and paid, and "make his protest either for non-acceptance "or non-payment."

The presentment is to be made where the bill or note is payable. Bayl. 58. And if the drawee or maker cannot be found at the place, where the bill or note is payable, and it appears that he never lived there or has absconded, the bill or note is to be considered as dishonoured. Ld. Raym. 743. If he has only removed, the holder must endeavour, to find out, to what place he has removed, and make his presentment there. Str. 1087.

If on a presentment, it appears that the drawee or maker is dead, the holder should inquire after his personal representative, and, if he lives within a reasonable distance, present the bill or note to him. Molloy, b. 2. c. 10. s. 34.

If a bill or note is made payable at a banker's, it is sufficient to present it for payment at the banker's, and if the banker is himself the holder, it is sufficient for him to see whether he has effects in hand. 2 Hen. Black. 509.

A presentment should be made at a seasonable time, Bayl. 59, and if by the known custom of any place, bills and notes are only payable within limited hours, a presentment there out of those hours, is unreasonable. Ibid. And so is a presentment out of the hours of business to a person of a particular description, in a place, where, by the known custom of that place, all persons of his description, begin and leave off business at stated hours. Ibid.

A presentment for acceptance is not absolutely necessary, except upon bills payable within a limited time after sight. Molloy, b. 2. c. 10. s. 16. Beawes, s. 266.

No certain time is fixed, within which this presentment must be made, but it should be made within a reasonable time. 2 Hen. Black. 569, 570. And what shall be deemed a reasonable time, must depend upon the particular circumstances of each case, and it must always be left to the jury to say whether there has been an improper delay. 1 Hen. Black. 569.

No delay, warranted by the common course of business, is improper, nor is any delay, which is occasioned by keeping the bill in circulation, at a great distance from the place, where it is payable: but a delay by locking it up for any length of time is. Hen. Black. 565.

If a bill payable abroad at a certain time after sight, is taken in a course of negotiation, it is not necessary, to send it by the first opportunity, to the place where it is payable: and if a bill is payable in India 60 days after sight, it is not necessarily a neglect, to omit presenting it for acceptance for 26 days after its arrival. 2 Hen. Black. 565.

Upon a presentment for acceptance, the bill should be left with the drawee 24 hours, unless in the interim, he either accepts or declares a resolution not to accept. Ld. Raym. 281. But a bill or note must not be left, (unless it is paid) on a presentment for payment; if it be, the presentment is not considered as made until the money is called for. Strange 550.

A bill or note payable on demand, is payable immediately on presentment, and a bill payable at sight, is either payable immediately upon presentment, or within the days of grace afterwards, and each must be presented within a reasonable time after the receipt, or put into a course of negotiation. Bayl. 24, 62.

Upon bills or notes given by way of payment, or paid into a banker's, any time beyond that which the common course of business warrants, is unreasonable. Str. 416.

Upon a bill or note of this kind, given by way of payment, the course of business seemed formerly to allow the party to keep it, if it was payable in the place where it was given, until the morning of the next day of business after its receipt, and till the next post, if payable elsewhere, but not longer. Ld. Raym. 928. Str. 415, 416, 910, 1248. Str. 508, 1175.

Thus where a note of this kind, payable in London, was given there in the morning, a presentment the next morning was held sufficiently early: a presentment at two the next afternoon, too late. Ld. Raym. 928. Str. 415, 1248, 1175.

But in a very modern case, Appleton v. Sweetapple, B. R. Mic. Ter. 23 Geo. 3. where a similar note was given at one, and not presented till the next morning, two juries held the delay unreasonable; this, however, was against the opinion of the court, but being a second verdict upon a new trial they refused to interfere. Bayl. 65.

A bill or note of this kind given by way of payment to a banker, must be presented by him, as soon as if it had been paid into his hands, by a customer. Black. 1. And a bill or note of this kind paid into a banker's, if payable at the place where the banker lives, must be presented the next time the banker's clerk goes his rounds. Ibid.

A bill or note importing to be payable within a limited time, or at sight, is not in fact payable, until the third day after the expiration of that time, unless it happens that the last of the three days is a Sunday or great holiday, such as Christmas day, upon which no money is used to be paid; in which case the party ought to demand the money upon the second day, otherwise it will be at his own peril. 1 Barnard. 303. 4 Ter. Rep. 148. Bayl. 66. Ld. Raym. 743.

And by 39 & 40 Geo. 3. c. 42. "where "bills of exchange and promissory notes, "become due on Good Friday, the same shall "be payable on the day before, and the "holders thereof may protest the same, for "non-payment on such preceding day."

And a presentment on the second day, where the third is not a day of rest, is a nullity. Espin. 261.

These extra days are called days of grace; but different countries, vary in the number of days, allowed by way of grace. Beawes, s. 260.

Upon the last day of grace, and within a reasonable time, before the expiration of that day, a bill or note must be presented for payment. Bayl. 67.

But if the holder makes a second presentment on that day, the drawer or maker is entitled to insist on paying it, when such presentment is made, without paying the fees of noting or protesting, notwithstanding such presentment is made, after the banking hours, and for the purpose of noting and protesting. 4 Ter. Rep. 170.

Upon a bill payable within a limited time after sight, the time must be computed from its presentment for acceptance. Beawes, s. 252. And upon a bill or note payable within a limited time after the date, where it has no date, from the day it issued. Ld. Raym. 1076.

Where the time, after the expiration of which, a bill or note imports to be payable, is limited by months, it is to be computed by calendar not lunar months. Marius 19. Thus on a bill or note payable one month after date, and dated the 1st of Jan. the month will not expire till the 1st of Feb. Beawes, s. 253.

Where the time is computed by days, the day on which the event happens, is to be excluded: thus on a bill or note payable 10 days after date, dated the 1st of Jan. the time does not expire till the 11th. Ld. Raym. 280, Lutw. 1591. 1 Barnard 303.

The bankruptcy or known insolvency of the drawee, or maker, is no excuse for a neglect to make a presentment, or to give notice. Doug. 497, 515.

Notice must be given of a failure, in the attempt to procure an acceptance, though the application for such acceptance, might have been unnecessary. Burr. 2670. 1 Ter. Rep. 712.

So if the drawee offer a partial or conditional acceptance, or an acceptance at an extended period, or if any other person offer an absolute one, though the holder may be willing to acquiesce in such acceptance, he must give notice. Bayl. 71. In that case, however, if he wishes to have the power of availing himself of it, he should mention in his notice, the acceptance offered: for a notice generally of non acceptance, shews he did not acquiesce in such offer. 1 Ter. Rep. 182.

A neglect to give notice, upon the refusal of any thing more, than a conditional acceptance, is done away by the completion of those conditions before the bill becomes payable; and a neglect upon the refusal of any thing more, than a partial acceptance, discharges the persons intitled to it only from their responsibility, on account of the non-payment of the residue. Bayl. 71.

The notice must come from the holder, and though there is no prescribed form for it, ought to import, that the holder looks on the person, to whom it is given, as liable, and expects payment from him. 1 Ter. Rep. 167.

To give this notice, in the case of a foreign bill, effect, it is necessary that a minute of the non-acceptance or non-payment, and a solemn declaration on the part of the holder, against any loss to be sustained thereby, (which minute and declaration is called a protest, and must on an action against the drawer, be proved. 2 Ter. Rep. 713. 5 Ter. Rep. 239.) should be made out by a notary public, or if there be no such notary, in or near the place, when the bill is payable, an inhabitant, in the presence of two witnesses, and that a copy, or some other memorial of it should accompany the notice. Bayl. 72,3.

And by 48 Geo. 3. c. 149. the following stamp duties are payable on the protest of bills or notes, viz.

Bills or notes not amounting to 20*l.*	0	2	0
Amounting to 20*l.* and not 100*l.*	0	3	0

Such protest may also be made on the non-acceptance of an inland bill, if such bill is for the payment of 5*l.* or upwards, within a limited time after date, and the value is expressed therein to have been received, 3 & 4 Ann. c. 9. s. 46. or after an acceptance written on such a bill for its non-payment, 9 & 10 Will. 3. c. 17. s. 1. but a protest cannot properly be made on any other inland bills 4 Ter. Rep. 170. And a protest upon an in land bill is never necessary, where the bill is for the payment of less than 20*l*. 3 & 4 Ann. c. 9. s 6. And on such as are for the payment of more, a neglect to procure it, only precludes the holder, from recovering against the drawer or indorsors, entitled to notice, any special damages, costs, or interest, occasioned by the non-acceptance, or non-payment. Str. 649, 910.

To such of the parties as reside in the place where the presentment was made, the notice must be given at the furthest, by the expiration of the day following the failure; to those who reside elsewhere by the next post. 1 Ter. Rep. 167. 2 Hen. Black. 565. Malynes, b. 3. c. 6. s. 1.

Sending notice by the post is sufficient; though there is no proof that it was received, and where there is no post, it is sufficient to send by the ordinary mode of conveyance. 2 Hen. Black. 509. Therefore in the case of a foreign bill, it is sufficient to send it by the first regular ship, bound for the place to which it is to be sent; and it is no objection, that if sent by a ship bound elsewhere, it would by accident have arrived sooner, though the owner wrote other letters by that ship to the place to which the notice was to be sent. 2 Hen. Black. 565.

The drawer of a bill, and (where the acceptance appoints the payment to be made elsewhere than at the acceptor's house) the acceptor, and every person who transfers a bill or note is, primâ facie, to be presumed entitled to bring an action on paying it, and therefore entitled to insist on a want of notice, or on a neglect to make a proper presentment, but the contrary may be proved. 1 Ter. Rep. 405. 2 Ter. Rep. 713. 1 Ter. Rep. 712. and payment of part, Str. 1246. or a promise to pay, 2 Ter. Rep. 713. Buller 276. after full notice of the default, sufficiently evinces the contrary; but a payment or promise without such notice, does not. Burr. 2670.

Proof that the drawer had no effects in the hands of the drawee from the time the bill was drawn until it became payable is sufficient, at least primâ facie, to shew, that the drawer would be entitled to bring no action on paying the bill, and has therefore no right to insist on notice, for in such case he cannot be injured by the want of notice. 2 Ter. Rep. 713. 1 Ter. Rep. 712.

If the payee of a note lends his name, merely to give it credit, and to enable the maker to raise money upon it, and knows at the time that the maker is insolvent, he is not entitled to notice, nor is it any defence to him, that the note was not properly presented for payment; for under such circumstances, the payee guarantees the payment, and no loss could happen to him, from the want of notice. 2 Hen. Black. 336. So if the payee lends his name to secure a composition from the drawer to a creditor, and takes effects of the drawer to answer it, he is not entitled to notice. Espin. 302.

But it is no excuse for not having presented a note in time for payment, that the defendant indorsed it to guarantee a debt from the maker, or that the defendant knew before it was due, that the maker could not pay it, and had desired a banker, at whose house it was made payable, to send it to him, and he would pay it: for, though the justice of such a case may be with the plaintiff, yet an indorsement by way of guarantee only, is liable to all the legal consequences of an indorsement, and the undertaking to pay, can only be taken to extend to such notes as are duly presented. 2 Hen. Black. 609.

Nor is it any excuse for not giving notice to the drawer of a bill, if he had effects in the hands of the drawee, that the drawee represented to the drawer when the bill was drawn, that he should not be able to provide for it, and that the drawer thereby understood that he should have to provide for it. Espin. 332.

Each party, immediately upon the receipt of notice, ought to give a fresh one to such of those persons, who are liable over to him, against whom he must prove notice. Bayl. 83.

V. Remedies for non-acceptance or non-payment.] Upon non-acceptance or non-payment, the holder of a bill or note may sue all the persons liable to him, on account of such non-acceptance or non-payment, either at the same time, or successively one after the other. Bayl. 84.

An indorsor, an acceptor for the honor of an indorsor or drawer, or the drawer, is, after payment by him, holder; but he holds in his original capacity, not as upon a transfer from the person he has paid. 10 Mod. 36. 1 Wils. 185. 4 Bro. P. C. 604.

So the bail of any of the parties who are sued, or any persons who pay the bill or note, on account of any of the parties, become, on payment, holders; and they hold as upon a transfer from the person for whom they made the payment, not as upon a transfer from the person they have paid. 4 Ter. Rep. 470. Espin. 112.

Thus if the maker of a note, or the acceptor of a bill, be sued by the indorsee, and the bail pay the debt and costs, this absolutely discharges the indorser, as much as if the principal had paid the note or bill, and the bail cannot afterwards recover against the indorsor in the name of the indorsee. 1 Wils. 46.

An action may be brought upon a non-acceptance against the drawer before the expiration of the time limited by the bill for its payment. Bull. N. P. 269. Doug. 55.

And all the antecedent parties are liable to the holder, on account of a non-acceptance or non-payment, and if the bill or note was transferred to him for a precedent consideration by delivery, the person who delivered it is also liable. Bayl. 86.

If the holder sues all the persons liable at the same time, it has been supposed that the court or a judge would not stay proceedings in one action, but upon payment of the money recoverable in that, and the costs in such of the rest in which judgment has not been obtained. Black. 749. But it has been recently determined in the case of a bill, that the acceptor is the only person against whom the plaintiff is entitled to the costs of all the actions, and that each of the other parties is entitled to a stay of proceedings upon paying the debt and costs in the action against him. 4 Ter. Rep. 691.

But though he may recover judgment in all the actions, he can only once recover the sum payable by the bill or note, and the costs; and if he rejects a tender of such sum and costs, the court will make an order to restrain him from taking out execution. 2 Ves. 115. Str. 515.

If the holder at first sue only some of the persons liable, he may at any time before satisfaction, sue all or any of the rest. Bayl. 87.

Obtaining a judgment is no satisfaction even as to the parties subsequent to him, against whom the judgment is obtained, for where to an action against the indorser of a bill, the defendant pleaded that the plaintiff had recovered a judgment against the drawer, still in force, the court of King's Bench on demurrer, held the plea good; but the court of Exchequer chamber, on a writ of error, held otherwise, and the judgment was reversed. 2 Show. 441, 494. Lutw. 882.

And the actual taking of a man in execution, and discharging him upon a letter of licence, is no satisfaction as to any of the antecedent parties. Black. 1235.

Nor is it a satisfaction, that one of the parties has been charged in execution, on the bill or note, and discharged as an insolvent, except as to the party at whose suit he was so charged. 4 Ter. Rep. 825.

Receiving dividends under a commission of bankrupt, is a satisfaction pro tanto only. Bayl. 88.

If more than one of the persons liable on account of the non-acceptance or non-payment of a bill or note become bankrupt, the holder may prove, under the separate commissions of each, the full amount of the money due to him upon the bill or note, at the time he makes his proof, and receive dividends under each upon the sums proved, until he shall in the whole have received such amount. 1 Atk. 109. 2 Ves. 113. Cooke's B. L. 170. But after the receipt of a dividend under one commission, he cannot prove under any of the rest, more than the sum remaining due, after deducting such dividend. Ibid. 1 Atk. 106. 2 Peere Wms. 89, 499.

So after a partial satisfaction, the holder must not in an action take a verdict for more than the sum remaining due; if he do, the court will either make him correct the verdict, and pay any expence the mistake may have occasioned, or grant a new trial. 1 Hen. Black. 88. Coup. 571.

In an action upon a bill or note, the plaintiff is entitled to recover the money payable thereby, with interest in some cases, from the date of the note, as where it appears on the face of it to be for money lent, or is expressed to be payable with interest: but in general, the holder is entitled to interest, from the time it became due, or ought to have been regularly paid, down to the time of final judgment, together with all incidental expences occasioned by the non-acceptance or non-payment. Black. 761. Pr. Reg. 357. Burr. 1077. 1 Wils. 105. 2 Ter. Rep. 52.

Thus upon a bill or note payable on presentment or demand, interest must be computed from the presentment or demand. Black. 761. Pra. Reg. 357. 9 Mod. 138.

But a neglect to procure a protest upon any inland bill, for the payment of 20*l.* upon which a protest might have been made, will, as it seems, preclude the holder from recovering such interest or expences from any person entitled to notice of the non-acceptance or non-payment, from any other person not. 3 & 4 Ann. c. 9. s. 5. Ld. Raym. 992. 6 Mod. 80. Salk. 131. Str. 910. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 17.

The only incidental expence, in the case of the person who made the presentment, is the charge of the notice: in the case of any antecedent party, that of the return of the bill or note must be added Bayl 92.

Upon a foreign bill, the re-exchange forms a part of the expence of the return, and let the bill be returned through ever so many hands, the drawer is liable for the re-exchange upon each return. 2 Hen. Black. 378.

And the drawer is liable for the re-exchange, and every other expence arising from the non-acceptance or non-payment, notwithstanding the dishonour of the bill is expresly ordered by the country on which it is drawn. Ibid.

On the return of a bill drawn here, for the payment of pagodas in the East Indies, the practice is to allow for the sum payable by the bill, interest, and all incidental charges, after the rate of 10*s.* for each pagoda, and 5*l.* per cent. thereon, from the expiration of 30 days after the bill's dishonour; and it has been determined that this practice was lawful, even where the price allowed for each pagoda, on the discount of the bill, was only 6*s.* 6*d.* 1 Ter. Rep. 52.

Under a commission of bankrupt, the holder of a bill or note is not entitled to any interest or charges accrued or incurred after the commission issued, nor where the act of

BILL OF LADING, is a memorandum signed by masters of ships, acknowledging the receipt of the merchants goods, &c. Vide Lex Mercatoria.

BILL OF SALE, is a solemn contract under seal, whereby a man passes the right or interest that he hath in goods and chattels; for if a man promises or gives any chattels without valuable consideration, or without delivering possession, this doth not alter the property, because it is nudum pactum unde non oritur actio; but if a man sells goods by deed under seal duly executed, this alters the property between the parties, though there be no consideration, or no delivery of possession, because a man is estopped to deny his own deed, or affirm any thing contrary to the manifest solemnity of contracting. Yelv. 196. Cro. Jac. 270. 1 Brown. 111. 6 Co. 18. 1 Bac. Abr. tit. Bill of Sale.

But by stat. 13 Eliz. cap. 5. it is enacted "that all fraudulent conveyances of lands, "&c. goods and chattels, to avoid the debt "or duty of another, shall (as against the "party only, whose debt or duty is so endeavoured to be avoided) be utterly void, except grants made bona fide, and on a "good (which is construed a valuable) consideration." And by the latter clause of that statute it is provided, "that all parties to "such fraudulent conveyance, who, being "privy thereunto, shall wittingly justify the "same to be done bona fide and on good consideration, or shall alien or assign any "lands, lease or goods so to them conveyed "as aforesaid, shall forfeit one year's value "of the lands, lease, rent, common or other "profit out of the same, and the whole value "of the goods; and being thereof convicted "shall suffer half a year's imprisonment "without bail; the forfeiture to be divided "between the queen and the party grieved."

BILL OF STORE, a kind of licence granted at the custom-house to merchants, to carry such stores and provisions as are necessary for their voyage, custom free. A BILL OF SUFFERANCE is a licence granted to a merchant, to suffer him to trade from one English port to another, without paying custom. An. 14 Car. 2. c. 11.

BILLUS, a stick or staff, which in former times was the only weapon for servants. Cowel. Blount.

BINNARIUM, binna, benna, stews or water penned up for feeding and preserving of fish. Ibid.

BIOTHANETUS, one who deserves to come to an untimely end. Ibid.

BIRETTUM, a thin cap fitted close to the shape of the head: and is also used for the cap or coif of a judge, or serjeant at law. Spelm.

BISACUTUS, an iron weapon double edged, so as to cut on both sides. Fleta, lib. 1. c. 33. Cowel. Blount.

BISANTIUM, besantine, or besant, an antient coin first coined by the Western emperors at Bizantium or Constantinople. It was of two sorts gold and silver; both which were current in England. Cowel. Blount.

BI-SCOT, at a session of sewers, held at Wigenhale in Norfolk, 9 Ed. 3. it was decreed, that if any should not repair his proportion of the bauks, ditches and causeys by a day assigned, 12*d.* for every perch unrépaired should be levied upon him, which is called a bilaw: and if he should not, by a second day given him, accomplish the same, then he should pay for every perch 2*s.* which is called bi-scot. Hist. of Imbanking and Draining, f. 254.

BISHOP, (episcopus) is the chief of the clergy in his diocese, and the archbishop's suffragan or assistant. He is elected by the king's conge d' elire, or licence to elect the person named by the king, directed to the dean and chapter; and if they fail to make election in twenty days, they incur the penalty of a præmunire, and the king may nominate, &c. by letters patent. Stat. 25 H. 8. c. 20. This was to avoid the power of the see of Rome. The dean and chapter having made their election, certify it to the king, and the archbishop, &c. And then the king gives the royal assent under the great seal, directed to the archbishop, commanding him to confirm and consecrate the bishop elect: and, on confirmation, a bishop hath jurisdiction in his diocese; but he hath not a right to his temporalities till consecration. The consecration of bishops, &c. is confirmed by act of parliament. Palm. Rep. 473.

It is held that a bishop hath three powers; 1st, his power of ordination, which is gained on his consecration, and not before; and thereby he may confer orders, &c. in any place throughout the world. 2. His power of jurisdiction, which is limited and confined to his see. 3. His power of administration and government of the revenues; both which last powers he gains by his confirmation: and some are of opinion, that the bishop's jurisdiction, as to ministerial acts, commences on his election. Palm. Rep. 473, 474, 475.

A bishop hath his consistory court, to hear ecclesiastical causes; and is to visit the clergy, &c. He consecrates churches, ordains, admits, and institutes priests; confirms, suspends, excommunicates, grants licences for marriage, makes probates of wills, &c. Co. Lit. 96. 2 Rol. Abr. 230. He hath his archdeacon, dean and chapter, chancellor, and vicar-general, to assist him: may grant leases for three lives, or twenty-one years, of land usually letten, reserving the accustomed yearly rents. Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 28. And by 1 El. c. 19. s. 5. Leases otherwise made are void.

BISSEXTILE, (bissextilis) leap year, so called because the sixth day before the calends of March is twice reckoned, viz. on the 24th and 25th of February; so that the bissextile year hath one day more than the others, and happens every fourth year. This intercalation of a day was first invented by Julius Cæsar, to make the year agree with the course of the sun. And, to prevent all doubt and ambiguity that might arise thereupon, it is enacted by the statute de anno bissextili, 21 H. 3. That the day increasing in the leap year, and the day next before, shall be accounted but one day. Brit. 209. Dyer 17. The new stile to be used by Stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 23.

BLACK ACT, by 9 Geo. 1. cap. 22. persons hunting armed and disguised, and killing or stealing deer, or robbing warrens, or stealing fish out of any river, &c. or any persons unlawfully hunting in his majesty's forests, &c. or breaking down the head of any fish-pond, or killing, &c. of cattle, or cutting down trees, or setting fire to house, barn, or wood, or shooting at any person, or sending anonymous letters, or signed with fictitious name, demanding money, &c. or rescuing such offenders, are guilty of felony without benefit of clergy: made perpetual by 31 Geo. 2. c. 42. See also Felony.

BLACK-BOOK, is a book lying in the Exchequer. Stat. Annals 154.

BLACK-LEAD. By 25 Geo. 2. c. 10. entering mines of black-lead, with intent to steal, is made felony; and by the same act offenders committed or transported for entering mines of black-lead with intent to steal, escaping, or breaking prison, or returning from transportation, are excluded from clergy.

BLACK-MAIL, (Fr. maille, a link of mail, or small piece of metal or money) signifies in the north of England, in the counties of Cumberland, Northumberland, and that quarter, a certain rent of money, (of baser quality than silver, reditus albi, 2 Black. 42.) corn, or other thing, anciently paid to persons inhabiting upon or near the borders, being men of name and power, allied with certain robbers within the said counties; to be freed and protected from the devastations of those robbers. Anno 43 Eliz. cap. 13. These robbers were called moss troopers, and several statutes have been made against them. The 9 Ed. 3. c. 4. mentions black money: and black rents are the same with black mail; being rents formerly paid in provisions and flesh. And by 18 Car. 2. c. 3. Notorious thieves, or spoil-takers in Northumberland or Cumberland are excluded clergy, or may be transported at the discretion of the judge.

BLACK-ROD, the gentleman usher of the black rod, is chief gentleman usher to the king; he belongs to the garter, and hath his name from the black rod, on the top whereof sits a lion in gold, which he carrieth in his hand. He is called in the Black-book, fol. 255. Lator virgæ nigræ, & hostiarius; and in other places virgæ bajulus. His duty is ad portandum virgam coram domino rege ad festum sancti Georgii infra castrum de Windsore: and he hath the keeping of the chapter-house door, when a chapter of the order of the garter is sitting; and in the time of parliament, he attends on the house of peers. His habit is like to that of the register of the order, and garter king at arms; but this he wears only at the solemn times of the festival of St. George, and on the holding of chapters. The black rod he bears, is instead of a mace, and hath the same authority; and this officer hath anciently been made by letters patent under the great seal, he having great power; for to his custody all peers, called in question for any crime, are first committed. *Cowel. BLACKWELL-HALL. See London.

BLADE, (bladum) in the Saxon signifies generally fruit, corn, hemp, flax, herbs, &c. Ibid.

BLANCH FIRMES, in ancient times the crown-rents were many times reserved in libris albis, or blanch firmes: reditus albi in contradistinction to rents reserved in work, grain, or base money, which were called reditus nigri, or black mail. Lowndes's Essay upon Coins, p. 5. 2 Black. 42.

2. Blanch farm, according to Cowel and Blount, was also a white farm; that is, where the rent was paid in silver, and not in cattle. Blanks, being a kind of white money coined by Hen. 5. in those parts of France which were then subject to England, the value whereof was 8*d*. Stow's Annals, p. 586. These were forbidden to be current in this realm. 2 Hen. 6. c. 9.

BLANHORNUM, a little bell, or rather ticinium. Cowel. Blount.

BLANK-BAR, is used for the same with what we call a common bar, and is the name of a plea in bar, which, in an action of trespass, is put in, to oblige the plaintiff to assign the certain place where the trespass was committed. 2 Cro. Rep. 594.

BLANKS, in judicial proceedings, certain void spaces sometimes left by mistake. A blank (supposing some thing material wanting) in a declaration, abates the same, 4 Ed. 4, 14. 20 H. 6, 18. And such a blank is a good cause of demurrer. Blanks in the imparlance roll aided after verdict for the plaintiff. Heb. 76. Parker v. Parker.

BIASARIUS, is a word used to signify an incendiary. Cowel. Blount.

BLASPHEMY, (blasphemia) is an injury offered to God, by denying that which is due and belonging to him, or attributing to him what is not agreeable to his nature. Lindw. cap. 1. And blasphemies of God, as denying his being, or providence, and all contumelious reproaches of Jesus Christ, &c. are offences by the common law, punished by fine, imprisonment, pillory, &c. 1 Hawk. P. C. 87. And by statute, if any one shall by writing, speaking, &c. deny any of the persons in the Trinity, to be God; assert there are more Gods than one, &c. he shall be incapable of any office; and for the second offence, be disabled to sue any action, to be executor, &c. and suffer three years imprisonment, 9 & 10 W. 3. cap. 32.

Likewise by 3 Jac. 1. c. 21. persons jestingly or prophanely using the name of God, or of Jesus Christ, or of the Holy Ghost, or of the Trinity, in any stage play, &c. incurs a penalty of 10*l.*

BLE, signifies sight, colour, &c. And blee is taken for corn: as to Boughton under the Blee, &c. Cowel. Blount.

BLENCH, a sort of tenure of land; as to hold land in blench, is by payment of a sugar-loaf, a couple of capons, a beaver-hat, &c. if the same be demanded in the name of blench, i. e. Nomine albæ firmæ. Ibid.

BLENCH-HOLDING, the white-rents, or blanch-farms, reditus albi; this small kind of payment is called in Scotland blench-holding, or reditus albæ firmæ. 2 Black. 42. n.

BLETA, (Fr. bleche) peat or combustible earth dug up and dried for burning. Cowel. Blount.

BLINKS, boughs broken down from trees, and thrown in a way where deer are likely to pass. Ibid.

BLISSOM, corruptly called blossom, is when a ram goes to the ewe, from the Teuton. Blets, the bowels. Ibid.

BLODEUS, (Sax. blod) deep red colour; from whence comes bloat and bloated, vis. sanguine and high coloured, which in Kent is called a blousing colour: and a blouse is there a red-faced wench. Cowel. Blount.

BLOOD, (sanguis) is regarded in descents of lands; for a person is to be the next and most worthy of blood, to inherit his ancestor's estate. Co. Lit. 13. See Jenk. Cent. 203.

Blood, Corruption of. See Attainder, Forfeitures, and Pardon.

BLOODWIT, or Bloudwit, compounded of the Sax. blod, i. e. sanguis and wyte, an old English word signifying misericordia, is often used in ancient charters of liberties for an amerciament for bloodshed. Skene writes it bloudveit; and says veit in English is injuria; and that bloudveit is an amerciament or unlaw (as the Scotch call it) for wrong or injury, as bloodshed is: for he that hath bloudveit granted him, hath free liberty to take all amerciaments of courts for effusion of blood. Fleta saith, quod significat quietantiam misericordiæ pro effusione sanguinis. Lib. 1. cap. 47. And, according to some writers, blodwite was a customary fine paid as a composition and atonement for shedding or drawing of blood; for which the place was answerable, if the party was not discovered; and therefore a privilege or exemption from this fine or penalty, was granted by the king, or supreme lord, as a special favour. So king Henry II. granted to all tenants within the honour of Willingford, ut quieti sint de hidagio & bloderwite, &c. Paroch. Antiq. 114. Cowel. Blount.

BLOODY-HAND, is one of the four kinds of circumstances by which an offender is supposed to have killed deer in the king's forest: and it is where a trespasser is apprehended in the forest, with his hands or other parts bloody, though he be not found chasing of hunting of the deer. Manwood. In Scotland, in such like crimes, they say taken in the fact, or with the red hand. See Backberind. Cowel. Blount.

BLUBBER, is whale-oil before it is thoroughly boiled and brought to perfection. Ibid.

BOCK-HORD, or book-hoard (librorum horreum) a place where books, evidences, or writings are kept. Ibid.

BOCKLAND, (Sax. quasi bookland) a possession or inheritance held by evidence in writing. Bockland signifies deed-land; and it commonly carried with it the absolute property of the land, wherefore it was preserved in writing, and possessed by the thanes or nobler sort, and was the same as allodium, descendable unto all the sons, according to the common course of nations and of nature, and therefore called gavelkind; devisable also by will, and thereupon termed terræ testamentales. Spelm. of Feuds. This was one of the titles which the English-Saxons had to their lands, and was always in writing. There was but one more, and that was folkland, i. e. terra popularis, which passed from one to another without any writing. See Charter-land. Cowel. Blount.

BOIA, chains or fetters, properly what we call bernicles. Ibid.

BOILING TO DEATH. The killing by poisoning was by stat. 22 Hen. 8. c. 9, made treason, and the delinquent subject to a more grievous and lingering death, than the common law allowed, namely, boiling to death.

This extraordinary punishment, seems to have been adopted by the Legislature, from the peculiar circumstances of the crime, which gave rise to it: for the preamble of the statute informs us, that John Roose, a cook, had been lately convicted, of throwing poison into a large pot of broth, prepared for the bishop of Rochester's family, and for the poor of the parish; and the said John Roose was by a retrospective clause of the same statute ordered to be boiled to death. And Ld. Coke mentions several instances of persons suffering this horrid punishment. 3 Inst. 48. Christian in n. 3. 4 Black. 196.

BOIS, (Fr.) wood, and sub-bois, underwood. Bracton. Cowel. Blount.

BOLHAGIUM, or boldagium, a little house, or cottage. Ibid.

BOLT. A bolt of silk or stuff seems to have been a long narrow piece; in the accounts of the priory of Burcester, it is mentioned. Paroch. Antiq. p. 574.

BOLTING, a term of art used in our inns of court, whereby is intended a private arguing of cases. The manner of it at Gray's-Inn is thus: An ancient and two barristers sit as judges, three students bring each a case; out of which the judges choose one to be argued, which done, the students first argue it, and after them the barristers. It is inferior to mooting, and may be derived from the Sax. bolt, a house, because done privately in the house for instruction. In Lincoln's-Inn, Mondays and Wednesdays are the bolting-days, in vacation time, and Tuesdays and Thursdays the moot-days. Dugdale. Cowel. Blount.

BONA FIDE. We say that is done bonâ fide which is done really, with a good faith, without any fraud or deceit. Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 5. 12 Car. 2. c. 18, &c.

BONA GESTURA, good abearing, or good behaviour. See Surety.

BONAGHT, or bonaghty, was an exaction in Ireland, imposed on the people at the will of the lord, for relief of the knights called bonaghti, who served in the wars. Antiq. Hibern. p. 60.

BONA NOTABILIA. Where a person dies having at the time of his death goods in any other diocese, besides his goods in the diocese where he dieth, amounting to the value of 5*l.* at least, he is said to have bona notabilia, and then probate of his will, or granting administration, belongs to the archbishop of the province: but this doth not prejudice those dioceses where, by composition or custom, bona notabilia are rated at a greater sum. Can. 92, 93. Perkins, sec. 489. And in the city of London bona notabilia are 10*l.* by composition. 4 Inst. 335. One that hath a debt upon bond or specialty, &c. in another diocese, hath bona notabilia. 1 Rol. Abr. 908. Though if a person happens to die in another diocese than that wherein he lives, on a journey, what he hath about him above the value of 5*l.* &c. shall not be bona notabilia. Can. 93.

There must be several administrations where a person dies leaving bona notabilia in each province of Canterbury and York; for administration granted in one province doth not extend to goods in the other, because the archbishops have distinct supreme jurisdictions; but then there is to be bona notabilia in several dioceses in each province. Dyer 305. 2 Lev. 86. If a man dies in one diocese without any goods, and leaves to the value of 5*l.* in another diocese, the archbishop of that province may grant administration, as he hath a general jurisdiction there; though such administration is voidable by sentence. Cro. Eliz. 457. But where a bishop grants administration, and there are bona notabilia, such administration is merely void, for he hath no jurisdiction out of his diocese. 5 Rep. 30. 1 Nels. Abr. 381. Vide Black. Com. 2 V. 509, 510.

BONA PATRIA, an assise of countrymen or good neighbours. It is sometimes called assisa bonæ patriæ, when twelve or more men are chosen out of any part of the country to pass upon an assise, otherwise called juratores, because they are to swear judicially in the presence of the party, &c. according to the practice of Scotland. Skene. See Assisors.

BONA PERITURA, goods that are perishable. See Wreck.

BONCHA, a bunch, is derived from the old Lat. bonna, or bunna, a rising bank for the bounds of fields; and hence bown is used in Norfolk for swelling or rising up in a bunch or tumour, &c. Cowel. Blount.

BOND, is a deed or obligatory instrument in writing, whereby one doth bind himself and his heirs, executors, and administrators, to another, to pay a sum of money, or do some other act; as to make a release, surrender an estate, for quiet enjoyment to stand to an award, save harmless, perform a will, or the like. It contains an obligation, with a penalty: and a condition, which expressly mentions what money is to be paid, or other thing to be performed, and the limited time for the performance thereof; for which the obligation is peremptorily binding. It may be made upon parchment or paper, though it is usually on paper, and be either in the first or third person; and the condition may be either in the same deed, or in another, and sometimes it is included within, and sometimes indorsed upon the obligation; but it is commonly at the foot of the obligation. Bro. Obl. 67. And a memorandum on the back of a bond may restrain the same by way of exception. Moor 67.

This security is also called a specialty; the debt being therein particularly specified in writing, and the party's seal, acknowledging the debt or duty, and confirming the contract; rendering it a security of a higher nature than those entered into, without the solemnity of a seal; and therefore bonds or specialties shall be preferred to simple contracts in a course of administration; and from its being a higher security it is held that for a breach or non-performance an action of debt only will lie. 1 Bac. Abr. tit. Oblig. But if in a bond the obligor binds himself, without adding his heirs, executors and administrators, the executors and administrators shall nevertheless be bound, but not the heir. Shep. Touch. 369.

A bond is a chose in action which cannot be assigned over, so as to enable the assignee to sue in his own name; yet he has by the assignment such a title to the paper and wax that he may keep or cancel it. Co. Lit. 232.

Also in equity, a bond is assignable, for a valuable consideration paid, and the assignee alone becomes entitled to the money; so that if the obligor, after notice of the assignment, pays the money to the obligee, he will be compelled to pay it over again. 2 Vern. 595. Abr. Eq. 44.

But the assignee must take it subject to the same equity that it was subject to in the hands of the obligee. Ibid.

If a man enters into a bond of such a sum, on condition to be void on payment of a lesser sum, or if a man bind himself in the penalty of 100*l.* that he will pay 50*l.* by such a day; after the day of payment is past, the penalty or sum of 100*l.* is the legal debt; and for so much it hath been resolved, an executor of an obligor of such forfeited bond may cover the assets of his testator. Cro. Car. 490. 1 Vent. 354. 3 Lev. 368. Hill. 9 Geo. 2, in B. R. The Bank of England v. Morris. Annaly's Rep. temp. Hardwicke, 219, &c.

And as the penalty, by the bond's being forfeited, becomes the legal debt, so there was no remedy against such penalty, but by application to a court of equity, which relieves in those cases, on payment of principal, interest, and costs; also, though at law there can be no remedy beyond the penalty, because in that the obligee seems to have taken up his security, yet as it is on the foundation, of doing equal justice to both parties, that equity proceeds, it will, on any application for a favour from the obligor, compel him to pay the principal, interest, and costs, though exceeding the penalty. Show. Par. Ca. 15. Abr. Eq. 91, 92. 1 Salk. 154. 1 Vern. 342. 350. 2 Vern. 509.

And this rule of compelling the party to do equity, who seeks equity, seems to be the reason why an obligee shall have interest, after he has entered up judgment; for though in strictness it may be accounted his own fault, why he did not take out execution, and therefore not entitled to interest, yet, as by the judgment he is entitled to the penalty, it does not seem reasonable, that he should be deprived of it, but upon paying him principal and the interest, incurred as well before as after the entering up of the judgment. Abr. Eq. 92. 288.

It is said that there are only three things essentially necessary to the making a good obligation, viz. writing on paper or parchment, sealing and delivery. 2 Co. 5. a. Noy 21. 85. Moor 28. Stil. 97. 2 Salk. 462. 5 Mod. 281.

And the name of the obligor subscribed, it is said, is sufficient, though there is a blank for his christian name in the bond. Cro. Jac. 261. Vide Cro. Jac. 558. 1 Mod. 107.

An obligation is good though it wants a date, or hath a false or impossible date; for the date is not of the substance of the deed; and the day of the delivery of a deed or obligation is the day of the date, though there is no day set forth. 2 Co. 5. Noy 21. 85, 86. Hob. 249. Stil. 97. Cro. Jac. 136. 264. Yelv. 193. 1 Salk. 76.

A bond dated on the same day on which a release is made of all things usque diem datus, &c. is not thereby discharged. 2 Rol. Rep. 255.

If A and B enter into a bond, and set but one seal to it, and A execute it for himself and B, with the authority and in the presence of B, it is obligatory on both. Sir W. Jones, 268. 4 Term Rep. 313.

It is to be observed, that the condition of a bond must be to do a thing lawful; and therefore bonds restraining trade in general in any part of the kingdom, are unlawful and void, for they are against the good of the public, and the liberty of a freeman, and tend to a monopoly; but a condition, restraining a man from exercising a particular trade in a certain place, or within certain limits, if done fairly, and upon a good and lawful consideration, is good. 1 Bac. Abr. tit. Ob. (K.)

Conditions of bonds are to be not only lawful but possible; and when the matter or thing to be done, or not to be done by a condition, is unlawful, or impossible, or the condition itself repugnant, insensible or uncertain, the condition is void, and in some cases the obligation also. 10 Rep. 120. But sometimes an obligation may be single, to pay the money, where the condition is impossible, repugnant, &c. 2 Mod. 285. If a thing be possible at the time of entering into the bond, and afterwards becomes impossible by the act of God, the act of the law, or of the obligee, it is become void; as if a man be bound to appear next term, and dies before, the obligation is saved. Co. Lit. 206.

Thus a condition of a bond was, that A. L. should pay such a sum upon the 25th of December, or appear in Hilary term after in the court of B. R. he died after the 25th of December, and before Hilary term, and had not paid any thing: in this case the condition was not broken for non-payment, and the other part is become impossible by the act of God. 1 Mod. Rep. 265. And when a condition is doubtful it is always taken most favourably for the obligor, and against the obligee; but so as a reasonable construction be made as near as can be according to the intention of the parties. Dyer 51.

If no time is limited in a bond for payment of the money, it is due presently, and payable on demand. 1 Brownl. 53.

The obligor or his servant, &c. may tender the money to save the forfeiture of the bond, and it shall be a good performance of the condition, if made to the obligee, though refused by him; yet if the obligor be afterward sued, he must plead that he is still ready to pay it, and tender the money in court. Co. Lit. 208.

And in case the condition of a bond is not performed, the bond becomes forfeited, or absolute at law, and charges the obligor while living, and after his death the obligation descends upon his heir, who on defect of personal assets is bound to discharge it, provided he has real assets by descent as a recompense; so that it may be called though not a direct, yet a collateral charge upon the lands. 2 Black. 340. And yet a bond does not seem properly to be called an encumbrance upon land, for it does not follow the land like a recognizance and a judgment; and even if the heir at law aliens the land, the obligor in the bond, by which the heir is bound, can have his remedy only against the person of the heir, to the amount of the value of the land; but he cannot follow it when it is in the possession of a bona fide purchaser. Bul. N. P. 175.

And by 4 Ann. c. 16, "if at any time "pending an action upon any bond with a "penalty, the defendant shall bring into "court where the action is depending, all "principal money and interest due on such "bond, and also all such costs as have been "expended in any suit or suits in law or "equity upon such bond, the said money "so brought in, shall be deemed and taken "to be in full satisfaction and discharge of "the said bond; and the court shall and "may give judgment to discharge every "such defendant of and from the same, ac-"cordingly." sec. 14.

BONDAGE, is slavery, and bondmen, in Domesday, are called servi, but rendered different from villani. Cowel. Blount.

BOND-TENANTS, copyholders, and customary tenants, sometimes called bond-tenants. For, according to Calthorpe on copyholds, 51, 54, all those kinds of tenants agree in substance and kind of tenure; all their lands being holden in one general kind, that is by custom and continuance of time; and the diversity of their names doth not alter the nature of their tenure. 2 Black. 147, 148.

BONO ET MALO, writ de. It was anciently the course to issue special writs of gaol-delivery, for each particular prisoner, which were called the writs de bono et malo, but these being inconvenient and oppressive, a general commission for all the prisoners has long been established in their stead. 2 Inst. 43. 4 Black. 270.

BONIS NON AMOVENDIS, a writ directed to the sheriffs of London, &c. where a writ of error is brought, to charge them, that the person against whom judgment is obtained, be not suffered to remove his goods till the error is tried and determined. Reg. Orig. 131.

BOOKS. By 25 Hen. 8. c. 15, none shall buy, to sell again, printed books, ready bound, imported from beyond sea, under penalty of 6*s.* 8*d.* a book, and none shall buy any books by retail, imported by any stranger, under the like penalty.

By 3 and 4 Ed. 6. c. 10, popish books, missals, legends, and antiphoners, shall be abolished.

By 17 Car. 2. c. 4, a printed copy of every book shall be sent to the king's library, and to each of the two universities.

University printers shall deliver one copy of books printed there to the king's library, and to the vice-chancellor of each university, and two others for the public libraries there, on pain of 5*l.* each book. Ibid.

By Stat. 7 Ann. c. 14, sec. 10, if any book shall be taken, or otherwise lost out of any parochial library, any justice may grant his warrant to search for it; and if it shall be found, it shall by order of such justice be restored to the library.

By 8 Ann. c. 19, authors of books and their assigns shall have the sole right of printing them for fourteen years from the day of publishing; and others printing the same without their consent, shall forfeit the books, and one penny for every sheet.

The titles of copies shall be entered before publication, in the register-book of the company of Stationers, for inspection; the clerk of the company shall give a certificate thereof for sixpence. Ibid.

Nine copies of each book shall be delivered to the warehouse-keeper of the company of Stationers, for the use of the royal library, the libraries of Oxford and Cambridge, the libraries of the four universities in Scotland, of Sion college, and the library of the advocates at Edinburgh, within ten days after demand, on pain to forfeit the value of the books, and 5*l.* Ibid.

This act shall not restrain the importing of books in Greek, Latin, or any foreign language, printed beyond sea; nor extend to the right of the universities. Ibid.

The general issue may be pleaded by defendants, having acted under this act. Ibid.

After the first fourteen years the right of printing shall return to the author, if living for other fourteen years. Ibid.

The author of any pamphlet shall lose all property therein if the stamp-duties are not paid; and they shall have the printer or publisher's name thereon, on pain of 20*l*. Ibid.

By 12 Geo. 2. c. 36, the penalty of 5*l.* and double the value is inflicted on persons importing for sale books first written and printed in this kingdom, and re-printed abroad; but books not printed or re-printed in this kingdom within twenty years are excepted.

This shall not extend to books printed in England, and inserted in other larger tracts printed abroad. Ibid.

This act, by the last continuance of 22 Geo. 3. c. 13. was to continue in force till the year 1788, and is now expired, other provisions having been made by subsequent statutes.

By 15 Geo. 3. c. 53, the two universities in England, and four in Scotland, and the colleges of Eton, Westminster, and Winchester, shall have the sole right, for ever, of printing books which have or (not having been published or assigned) shall be bequeathed, or otherwise given by authors to any of the said universities, unless given for a term of years, or other limited time; and others printing such books forfeit the same, with one penny per sheet, half to the king, and the other to the prosecutor: but this act shall not give an exclusive right, longer than such book is printed at the universities or college press; and they are not to grant away their right, but may sell the copy, as authors can by 8 Ann. c. 19.

None are subject to penalty for printing books already given to the universities, unless entered at Stationers hall before 24th June 1775, and if hereafter given they are to be entered in two months after bequest known, and sixpence paid for each entry, which is to be inspected gratis, and sixpence for the certificate. The whole title to be entered. Ibid.

By 41 Geo. 3. (u. k.) c. 107, authors of books and their assigns shall have the sole right of printing them for 14 years, and booksellers in any part of the united kingdom, or British European dominions, who shall print, re-print, or import any such books, without the consent of the proprietor, shall be liable to an action for damages, and shall also forfeit the books to the proprietor, and 3*d. per* sheet, half to the king, and half to the informer; and authors shall have a second 14 years term if living at the end of the first. sec. 1.

Trinity-college, Dublin, shall for ever have the sole right of printing books given or bequeathed to them, unless they are given for a limited time only; and persons printing such books are liable to the same penalty as in the last clause; but this is to extend only to books printed at the college press; and the college may sell their copy-rights. sec. 3.

Booksellers shall not be liable to the penalty of 3*d.* per sheet unless the title to the copy-right be entered by the proprietor at Stationers' hall, London, nor if the consent of the proprietor be so entered, of which entries the clerk of the company is to give certificates, and make a half-yearly list of the books so entered for the use of Trinity-college. s. 4.

If the clerk refuses to make entries, parties may give notice in the London Gazette, and the clerk shall forfeit 20*l.* s. 5.

Two additional copies of books entered at Stationers' hall shall be delivered there for the use of the libraries of Trinity-college, and the king's Inns, Dub'in. s. 6.

No person shall import into any part of the united kingdom, for sale, any book first composed and printed within the united kingdom, and re-printed elsewhere; and persons importing, selling, or keeping for sale, any such books, are to forfeit the same, and also 10*l.* and double the value, which books may be seized by officers of customs or excise, and made waste paper of, and the commissioners may reward them with not exceeding their value; but this clause is not to extend to books not printed in the united kingdom for 20 years, or books re-printed abroad, and inserted in larger works. s. 7.

BOOK OF RATES, the book declaring the duties of customs.

BOOTING, or BOTING CORN, rent-corn anciently so called. Cowel. Blount.

BORDAGIUM, the tenure called bordlands. Ibid.

BORDARIA, a cottage, from the Sax. bord, domus. Ibid.

BORDARII, or BORDVANNI, these words often occur in Domesday, and some think they mean boors, husbandmen, or cottagers. In the Domesday inquisition, they were distinct from the villani, and seemed to be those of a less servile condition, who had a bord or cottage, with a small parcel of land allowed to them, on condition they should supply the lord with poultry and eggs, and other small provisions for his board or entertainment. Some derive the word bordarii from the old Gall. bords, the limits or extreme parts of any extent, as the borders of a country, and the borderers inhabitants in those parts, quasi borderers. Spelman. Cowel. Blount.

BORD-HALFPENNY, signifies a small toll, by custom paid to the lord of the town for setting up boards, tables, booths, &c. in fairs and markets. It is derived from three Saxon words, bræd, i. e. board, helve, in behalf of, and penning, a toll; which in the whole makes a toll for or in behalf of boards. Cowel. Blount.

BORDLANDS, the demesnes which lords keep in their hands for the maintenance of their board or table. Bract. lib. 4. tract 3. c. 9. Cowel. Blount.

BORDLODE, was a service required of tenants to carry timber out of the woods of the lord to his house; or it is said to be the quantity of food or provision which the bordary or bordman paid for the bord-lands. The old Scots had the term of burd, and meet-burd for victuals and provisions; and burden-cart for a sack full of provender, from whence, it is probable, came our burden. Cowel. Blount.

BORD-SERVICE, a tenure of bord-lands, by which some lands in the manor of Fulham in com. Mid. and elsewhere, are held of the bishop of London; and the tenants do now pay six-pence per acre in lieu of finding provision anciently for their lord's board or table. Blount.

BORD-BRIGCH, borg-bryce, or burg-brych, (Sax.) a breach or violation of suretyship, pledge-breach, or of mutual fidelity. Ibid.

BOROUGH, (Fr. burg. Lat. burgus. Sax. borhoe) signifies a corporate town, which is not a city, and also such a town or place as sends burgesses to parliament. Verstegan saith that borg, or burgh, whereof we make our borough, metaphorically signifies a town having a wall, or some kind of inclosure about it: and all places that in old time had among our ancestors the name of borough, were one way or other fenced or fortified. Lit. sect. 164. And why these were called free burghs, and the tradesmen in them free burgesses, was from a freedom to buy and sell without disturbance, exempt from toll, &c. granted by charter. Parliament boroughs are said to be either by charter, or towns holden of the king in ancient demesne. Brady. It is conjectured that borhoe, or borough, was also formerly taken for those companies consisting of ten families, which were to be pledges for one another. Bract. lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 10. Lamb. Duty of Const. p. 8. Vide Squire's Anglo-Saxon Government, 236, 247, 251, 254, 258, 262, 264. Trading boroughs were first formed in the time of Alfred. Squire 247, 251. 1 Black. Com. 114. and 2 Bl. Com. 82.

BOROUGH COURTS, arose originally from the favour of the crown to those particular districts wherein we find them erected, upon the same principle that hundred courts, and the like, were established, for the convenience of the inhabitants, that they might prosecute their suits, and receive justice at home; and for the most part the courts at Westminster-hall have a concurrent jurisdiction with these, as also a superintendency over them; and the proceedings in these special courts ought to be according to the course of the common law, unless otherwise ordered by parliament; for though the king may erect new courts he cannot alter the established course of law. 3 Black. 80.

BOROUGH-HOLDERS, or BURSE-HOLDERS, quasi bourhoe-ealders, are the same officers with borough-heads, or head-boroughs, who, (according to Lambert) were the head men, or chief pledges of boroughs, chosen by the rest to speak and act in their names in those things that concerned them. See Headborough. 1 Black. Com. 114,356,406.

BOROUGH-ENGLISH, (Sax. borhoe Englise) so called, because, as some hold, it first prevailed in England, Co. Lit. 110, b.) is a customary descent of lands, in some ancient boroughs, and copyhold manors, that estates shall descend to the youngest son, or, if the owner hath no issue, to his younger brother, as in Edmunton, &c. Kitch. 102. It has been observed, that the original of this old custom, proceeded from the lords of certain lands, having the privilege to lie with their tenants wives, the first night after marriage; wherefore in time the tenants obtained this custom, on purpose that their eldest sons (who might be their lord's bastards,) should be incapable to inherit their estates. Præf. 3 Mod. Rep.

But the reason of the custom of borough-English (Littleton says) is because the youngest is presumed in law to be least able to provide for himself. Lit. 165. This custom goes with the land, and guides the descent to the youngest son, although there be a devise to the contrary. 2 Lev. 138. If a man seised in fee of lands in borough-english, makes a feoffment to the use of himself, and the heirs male of his body, according to the course of the common law, and afterwards die seised, having issue two sons, the youngest son shall have the lands by virtue of the custom, notwithstanding the feoffment. Dyer 179.

If a copyhold in borough-english be surrendered to the use of a person and his heirs, the right will descend to the youngest son according to the custom. 1 Mod. 102. And a youngest son shall inherit an estate in tail in borough-english. Noy 106. But an heir at common law shall take advantage of a condition annexed to borough-english land, though the youngest son shall be entitled to all actions in right of the land, &c. 1 Nels. Abr. 396. And the eldest son shall have tithes arising out of land borough-english; for tithes, of common right, are not inheritances, descendable to an heir, but come in succession from one clergyman to another. Ibid. 347.

Borough-English land being descendable to the youngest son, if a younger son dies without issue male, leaving a daughter, such daughter shall inherit jure repræsentationis. 1 Salk. 243. It hath been adjudged where a man hath several brothers, the youngest may inherit lands in borough-english; yet it is said where a custom is, that land shall go to the youngest son, it doth not give it to the youngest uncle for customs shall be taken strictly; and those which fix and order the descents of inheritance can be altered only by parliament. Dyer 179. 4 Leon. 384. Jenk. Cent. 240.

By the custom of borough-english the widow shall have the whole of her husband's lands in dower, which is called her free-bench; and this is given to her the better to provide for the younger children, with the care of whom she is intrusted. Co. Lit. 39. 111. F. N. B. 150. Mo. pl. 566.

BOROUGH GOODS are devisable, as before the statutes of 33 Hen. 8. c. 1. and 34 Hen. 8. c. 5.

BORREL-FOLK, i. e. country people, from the Fr. boure, floccus, because they covered their heads with such stuffs. Blount.

BORROWING. If a man borrows money, corn, or such things of another; he may not expect the same again, but the like, or so much; but if one lend me a horse, &c. he must have the same restored. If a thing lent for use be used to any other end or purpose than that for which it was borrowed, the party may have his action on the case for it, though the thing be never the worse; and if what is borrowed be lost, although it be not by any negligence of mine, as if I be robbed of it; or where the thing is impaired or destroyed by my neglect, admitting that I put it to no more service than that for which borrowed, I must make it good: so where I borrow a horse, and put him in an old rotten house ready to fall, which falls on and kills him, I must answer for the horse. But if such goods borrowed perish by the act of God in the right use of them, as where I put the horse, &c. in a strong house, and it fall and kill him, or it dies by disease, or by default of the owner, I shall not be charged. Co. Lit. 89. 29 Ass. 28. 2 H. 7. 11. 2 Black. Com. 453. See also BAILMENT.

BORSHOLDERS. See Borough-holders.

BOSCAGE, (boscagium) is that food which wood and trees yield to cattle; as mast, &c. from the Ital. bosco, silva; but Manwood observes, to be quit de boscagio, is to be discharged of paying any duty of wind-fall wood in the forest. Cowel. Blount.

BOSCARIA, wood houses, from boscus; or ox houses from bos. Mon. Angl. tom. 2. fol. 302. Cowel. Blount.

BOSCUS, an ancient word used in our law, signifying all manner of wood: the Italians make use of bosco in the same sense; as the French do bois. Boscus is divided into high-wood or timber, haut-bois, and coppice or under-woods, sub-bois: but the high-wood is properly called saltus, and in Fleta we read it maeremium. Cowel. Blount.

BOSINNUS, a certain rustical pipe, mentioned in ancient tenures. Ibid.

BOTE, (Sax.) signifies a recompense, satisfaction, or amends: hence comes manbote, compensation, or amends for a man slain, &c. Lamb cap. 99. From hence likewise we have our common phrase to-boot, i. e. compensationis gratia. There are house-bote, plough-bote, &c. privileges to tenants in cutting of wood, &c. 2 Black. Com. 35.

BOTELESS, sine remedio, in the charter of H. 1. to Tho. archbishop of York, it is said, that no judgment or sum of money shall acquit him that commits sacrilege; but he is in English called boteless, viz. without emendation Lib. Albus penes Cap. de Suthnet. Int. Plat. Trin. 12 Ed. 2. Ebor 48. We retain the word still in common speech; as it is booteless to attempt such a thing; that is, it is in vain to attempt it. Cowel. Blount.

BOTELLARIA, a buttery or cellar, in which the buts and bottles of wine, and other liquors are reposited. Ibid.

BOTHA, a booth, stall, or standing in a fair or market. Ibid.

BOTHAGIUM, boothage, or customary dues paid to the lord of the manor or soil, for the pitching and standing of booths in fairs or markets. Ibid.

BOTHNA, or BUTHNA, seems to be a park where cattle are inclosed and fed. Bothena, also signifies a barony, lordship, &c. Ibid.

BOTILER OF THE KING, (pincernes regis) is an officer that provides the king's wines, who (according to Fleta) may by virtue of his office take out of every ship laden with sale wines, unum dolium eligere in proia navis ad opus regis, & aliud in puppe, si pro qualibet pecia reddere tantum 20 solid. mercatori. Si autem plura inde habere voluerit, bene licebit, dum tamen pretium fide dignorum judicio pro rege apponatur. Fleta, lib. 2. cap. 21. This officer shall not take more wine than he is commanded, of which notice shall be given by the steward of the king's house, &c. on pain of forfeiting double damages to the party grieved; and also to be imprisoned and ransomed at the pleasure of the king. Stat. 25 Ed. 3. cap. 21. 45 Ed. 3. c. 3.

BOTTOMRY, or BOTTOMREE, (fœnus nauticum) is in the nature of a contract or mortgage, where the master of a ship borrows money upon the keel or bottom of his ship, and binds the ship itself, that if the money be not paid by the day assigned, the creditor shall have the ship. But it is generally where a person lends money to a merchant, who wants it to traffick, and is to be paid a greater sum at the return of the ship, standing to the hazard of the voyage; in regard to which, though the interest be greater than five per cent. or what is allowed by law, it is not usury. For money lent on a sea risque, is allowed a larger interest than money advanced on land, by reason it is furnished at the hasard of the lender, and if the ship perishes, the lender shares in the loss, and loses his whole money; so that there is no real security, as in case of lands, &c. And the greater the danger is, the greater may be the profit reasonably required for the money advanced. Lex Mercat. 122.

Money lent on bottomree is either on the bare ship (the usual way) or upon the person of the borrower, and sometimes upon both: the first is where a man takes up money, and obliges himself, that if such a ship shall arrive at such a port, then to repay perhaps in long voyages near double the sum lent; but if the ship happens to miscarry, then nothing. But when money is lent at interest, it is delivered at the peril of the borrower, and the profit of this, is merely the price of the loan; whereas the profit of the other, is a reward for the danger and adventure of the sea, which the lender takes upon himself and makes the interest lawful. See Laws 206, 207.

When the ship and tackle are brought home, they are liable as well as the person of the borrower for the money lent: but when the loan is not made upon the vessel, but upon the goods and merchandizes laden therein, which from their nature, must be sold or exchanged in the course of the voyage; then the borrower only is personally bound to answer the contract; who therefore, in this case is said to take up money at respondentia. 2 Black. 458.

In this, consists the difference between bottomree and respondentia, that the one is a loan upon the ship, the other upon the goods: in the former, the ship and tackle are liable, as well as the person of the borrower; in the latter for the most part, recourse must be had to the person only of the borrower. Ibid.

Another observation is, that in a loan upon bottomree, the lender runs no risk though the goods should be lost; and upon respondentia the lender must be paid his principal and interest, though the ship perish, provided the goods are safe; but in all other respects the contract of bottomry and that of respondentia are upon the same footing. 2 Black. 458.

By the Stat. 19 Geo. 2. c. 37. every sum lent on bottomree or at respondentia, upon any subject's ships to or from the East Indies, shall be lent only on the ship, or the merchandise laden on board her, and so expressed in the condition of the bond, and the benefit of salvage shall be allowed to the lender, who alone shall have right to make assurance on the money lent. And no borrower of money, on bottomree or at respondentia, as aforesaid, shall recover more on any assurance than the value of his interest exclusive of the money borrowed. And if the value of his interest doth not amount to the money borrowed, he shall be responsible to the lender for the surplus, notwithstanding the ship and merchandise be totally lost.

By 19 Geo. 2. c. 32. obligees in bottomree bonds are admitted to claim, and after the loss or contingency shall have happened, to prove their debts, in cases of bankruptcy, in like manner, as if the loss or contingency had happened, before the time of the issuing of the commission of bankruptcy against the obligor.

BOVATA TERRÆ, as much land as one ox can plough. Cowel. Blount.

BOVERIUM, or BOVERIA, an ox-house. Ibid.

BOVETTUS, a young steer or castrated bullock. Ibid.

BOVICULA, an heifer or young cow; which in the east riding of Yorkshire is called a whee, or whey. Ibid.

BOUCHE OF COURT, commonly called budge of court, was a certain allowance of provision from the king, to his knights and servants, that attended him in any military expedition. The French avoir bouche a court, is to have an allowance at court, of meat and drink: from bouche a mouth. But sometimes it extended only to bread, beer, and wine Ibid.

BOUGH OF A TREE, seisin of land given by it, to hold of the donor. 1 Mad. Exch. 62.

BOUND, or BOUNDARY, (bunda) the utmost limits of land, whereby the same is known and ascertained. 4 Inst. 318. Cowel. Blount.

BOUND-BAILIFFS, are sheriffs officers, for executing of process. The sheriffs being answerable for their misdemeanors, the bailiffs are usually bound in a bond, for the due execution of their office, and thence are called bound-bailiffs, which the common people have corrupted into a much more homely appellation. 1 *Black. BOWYERS, one of the ancient companies of the city of London.

BRACELETS, hounds, or rather beagles of the smaller and slower kind. Cowel. Blount.

BRACENARIUS, (Fr. braconnier) a huntsman, or master of the hounds. Ibid. Rot. 10. in Dorso.

BRACETUS, a hound: brachetus is in Fr. brachet, braco canis sagax, indagator leporum: so a braco was properly the large fleet hound; and brachetus, the smaller hound; and brachete the bitch of that kind. Ibid.

BRACINUM, a brewing: the whole quantity of ale brewed at one time, for which tolsestor was paid in some manors. Brecina, a brew-house. Ibid.

BRANDING in the hand, or face, was a punishment inflicted by law, for various offences, by burning, with a hot iron, after the offender had been allowed clergy. 4 Black. Com. 360, 370. now repealed by 5 Ann. c. 6. 19 Geo. 3. c. 74. and 39 Geo. 3. c. 45. by which two last acts whipping or imprisonment is substituted.

BRASSUM, signifies malt: in the ancient statutes brasiator is taken for a brewer, from the Fr. brasseur; and at this day is used for a maltster or malt-maker. Cowel. Blount.

BREACH OF CLOSE, every unwarrantable entry on another's soil, the law calls a trespass, by breaking his close, the words of the writ of trespass. 3 Black. Com. 209.

BREACH OF COVENANT, the not performing of any covenant, expressed or implied in a deed, or the doing an act, which the party covenanted not to do. 2 Black. Com. 155, 6.

BREACH OF PEACE, offences against the public peace, are either such as are an actual breach of the peace, or constructively so, by aiding to make others break it. 4 Black. Com. 142. &c.

BREACH OF POUND, the breaking any pound or place where cattle or goods distrained are deposited, to rescue such distress. 3 Black. Com. 146.

BREACH OF PRISON. Breach of prison, by the offender himself, when committed for any cause, was felony at the common law. 1 Hal. P. C. 607. So was conspiring to break it. Bract. l. 3. c. 9. But this severity is mitigated by the statute de frangentibus prisonam. 1 Ed. 2. But to break prison when lawfully committed for treason or felony, remains still felony at the common law: if on any inferior charge, it is still punishable, as an high misdemeanor, by fine and imprisonment. 2 Hawk. P. C. 128

BREACH OF PROMISE, (violatio fidei) is a breaking or violating a man's word. Breach also signifies where a person commits any breach of the condition of a bond, or covenant entered into. See Action, Assumpsit, Bond. Condition, and Covenant.

BREAD AND BEER, the assize of bread, beer, and ale, &c. is granted to the lord mayor of London and other corporations: bakers, &c. not observing the assise to be set in the pillory. Stat. 51 H. 3. St. 1. ord. Pistor. & 51 H. 3. St. 6. Vide 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 15.

BREAD OF TREET, or TRITE, (panis tritici) this is also mentioned in the statute 51 Hen. 3. of assise of bread and ale; wherein are particularised wastel bread, cocket bread, and bread of treet, which answer to the three sorts of bread now in use, called white, wheaten, and household bread. In religious houses they heretofore distinguished bread by these several names, panis armigerorum, panis conventualis, panis puerorum, & panis famulorum. Antiq. Not. Cowel. Blount.

The modern acts relating to the assise of bread are in substance and effect as follows:

By 31 Geo. 2. c. 29. the assise of bread shall be regulated by the price the grain, meal, or flour bears in the market, allowing sufficient profit to the baker.

Where an assise shall be set, no sort of bread (wheaten and household excepted) other than what is thereby allowed, is to be made for sale: under penalty of not more than 40*s.* nor less than 20*s.* and the assise shall be set according to the table annexed to the act. Ibid.

Returns shall be made weekly to the court of mayor and aldermen of London, by the meal weighers, of the prices which the several kinds of grain, meal and flour, fit for bread, publicly sell for in the markets of the city; the prices to be entered by them on a certain day in a book to be kept in the town clerk's office; and the assize and price of bread to be set the next day; and to take place according to order, and continue till a new assize be set; and to be published forthwith. Before any advance or reduction be made in the price of bread, the meal weighers are to leave at Baker's hall a copy of the returns made that day, that the company may have time to object thereto, before the assize be set. Ibid.

The court of mayor and aldermen, and magistrates in other cities, towns, and boroughs, may, in like manner, cause returns to be made them of the prices, which the several sorts of grain, meal and flour, fit for bread, shall be publicly sold at in the markets, within their jurisdictions. The prices to be entered and certified in a proper book; and the assize and price of bread, to be set within two days after; and to take place, and continue (not more than seven days) and to be published, as the court or magistrates shall direct. Ibid.

Two or more justices within their jurisdictions may set an assize of bread, and cause returns to be made by the clerks of the neighbouring markets of the price at which grain, meal and flour, shall be there sold; the returns to be made on a certain day, and to be entered and signed in a book to be kept for that purpose; the assize and price of bread to be set within two days after, and to continue (not more than fourteen days) and to commence and be published as shall be ordered. Ibid.

Bakers may see the returns, the day after the same shall be made, that they may have time to object to the advance or reduction to be made in the price of bread, before the assize be set, and bakers are not liable to pay fees on account of the assize of bread. Ibid.

Half peck and quartern loaves are to weigh, and be sold, in due proportion to the peck loaf. Magistrates shall direct how the assize of rye, barley, or mixed bread, when ordered to be made, shall be published. Ibid.

Where bread of a certain denomination and value shall be ordered, or allowed to be made, no bread of a different denomination is to be sold at the same time, upon pain of not more than 40*s.* nor less than 20*s.* Ibid.

The justices at a general or quarter sessions may fix the jurisdiction of any hundred or place within a certain district, so as the assize of bread set for the same may extend there to. Ibid.

Entry shall be made by every clerk of the market in proper books, of the returns made by him; and of the rate at which the assize and price of bread shall be set from time to time, the said books to be open to the inspection of any inhabitant. Ibid.

No alteration is to be made in assize of bread, unless the price of wheat, or other grain, shall vary three-pence in the bushel from the last return. Ibid.

Any meal weigher, or clerk of the market, who shall neglect his duty, or make a false return, and any peace officer who shall disobey the warrant of any magistrate, or justice, or otherwise neglect his duty, is to forfeit not more than 5*l.* nor less than 20*s.* Ibid.

Any buyer, seller, or dealer, who shall refuse to disclose to the meal weighers in London, or clerks of the markets, in other places, the true prices, the several sorts of grain, meal, and flour, shall be bought or sold at in the public market, or shall give in a false price, is to forfeit not more than 10*l.* nor less than 40*s.* Ibid.

Where any false return shall be suspected to be made, the court, magistrate, or justice, may within three days summon any buyer, seller, or other person, likely to give information; and examine them upon oath, touching the prices of grain, meal, and flour, within seven days before, and any person not appearing thereto, or refusing to give evidence, forfeits not more than 10*l.* nor less than 40*s.* and forswearing himself, incurs the penalties of perjury; but the party summoned is not obliged to go above five miles from home. Ibid.

When an order shall be made for making bread for sale, of any other grain than wheat, or of mixed meal or flour, bakers shall conform to such order, and make the bread of such weight and goodness and at such price, as shall betherein directed, on pain of forfeiting not more than 5*l.* nor less than 40*s.* Ibid.

The several sorts of bread made for sale are to be always well made, and in their degrees, according to the goodness of the meal the same ought to be made of, without any adulteration or mixture, except the genuine meal, salt, water, eggs, milk, and yeast, or such leaven as shall be occasionally allowed; upon penalty of the offender (not being the servant) forfeiting not more than 10*l.* nor less than 40*s.* or being imprisoned not more than one month, nor less than ten days. If the offender be a servant he is to forfeit, not more than 5*l.* nor less than 20*s.* or be imprisoned for the like time; and the magistrate may, out of the money of the forfeiture, publish in some newspaper the offender's name, place of abode, and offence. Ibid.

The penalty for adulterating corn, meal, or flour, whether at the time of the grinding, dressing, or bolting, or for selling the meal of one sort of corn for another sort; or any thing mixed which shall not be of the genuine meal of the grain the same is so'd for; is not to exceed 5*l.* or be less than 40*s.* Ibid.

Where bread shall be of a different mixture of corn, than what it is imported to be of, or is allowed, or where the mixture allowed of shall not be duly observed, or where any thing shall be sold as flour, which is not genuine, the penalty is the same as last mentioned. Ibid.

Where bread shall be made under weight, the offender forfeits not more than 5*s.* nor less than 1*s.* for every ounce deficient, and if under one ounce, not more than 2*s.* 6*d.* nor less than 6*d.* provided such bread complained of, if in any city, town corporate, or borough, be weighed before the justice, within twenty-four hours after the same shall be baked or sold: and if in any other place within three days after the baking, or sale thereof; unless such deficiency arose by accident, or through some contrivance. Ibid.

Wheaten bread made for sale is to be marked W. and household H. in order to ascertain under what denomination it was made and ought to be weighed; upon penalty of not more than 20*s.* nor less than 5*s.* Ibid. and also 3 Geo. 3. c. 11.

Bakers demanding or taking more than the assize price, or refusing to sell any of the sorts allowed or ordered, when he has more than enough for the use of himself or customers, forfeit not more than 40*s.* nor less than 10*s.* Ibid.

Bread of an inferior quality to wheaten, is not to be sold for more than household, on penalty of 20*s.* Ibid. and also 3 Geo. 3. c. 11.

Magistrates and justices, or peace officers by them authorised, may in the day-time, enter the houses and shops of bakers, and search for and weigh the bread therein, and may seize such as shall be defective in goodness, due baking, or weight, or not properly marked, or of any different sort than is allowed of, and dispose thereof at their discretion. Ibid. and also 3 Geo. 3. c. 11.

Where any miller, mealman, or baker, shall be suspected of adulterating meal, the magistrate may, upon information on oath, enter the premises of such suspected person himself, and make search, or may grant a search warrant to some peace officer, and such meal as shall be deemed to have been adulterated, may be seized, together with the mixtures: if seized by a peace officer it is to be carried before a magistrate; if seized by the magistrate, or adjudged by him adulterated, he may dispose thereof as he thinks fit. Ibid.

The miller, mealman, or baker in whose premises such mixtures shall be found, shall forfeit not more than 10*l.* nor less than 40*s.* unless it be made appear that the same were not intended for adulteration, but for some other lawful purpose; and part of the forfeiture may be applied in publishing the offender's name, abode, and offence. Ibid.

Opposing any search or seizure incurs a penalty of not more than 5*l.* nor less than 20*s.* and no miller, mealman, or baker shall act as a justice under this act, on pain of 50*l.* to the informer. Ibid. and also 3 Geo. 3. c. 11.

Where any baker shall, on complaint, make it appear, that the offence wherewith he was charged, and paid the penalty of, arose from the wilful default of his servant, the magistrate shall cause the party to be apprehended, and on conviction, shall decree a recompence to the master, and on non-payment thereof shall commit the offender, for any time not exceeding one month, unless payment is sooner made. Ibid. and also 3 Geo. 3. c. 11.

Offences against this act, are to be determined in a summary way, before a magistrate, with appeal to sessions, and all prosecutions must be commenced within three days after the offence. Ibid.

This act is not to extend to any custom in London, the privilege of any lords of leet, or the rights of the dean and high steward of Westminster, or of the universities of Oxford, or Cambridge. Ibid.

By 32 Geo. 2. c. 18. the unappropriated penalties and forfeitures under the above act, shall be distributed, one moiety to the prosecutor, where the offender shall be convicted by oath, or self confession; and the other moiety with the penalties on weighing, trying, or seizure of bread, by a magistrate, to such purposes as the magistrate shall think fit.

By 3 Geo. 3. c. 11. no assized bread, and priced bread shall be made at the same time in the same place, viz. no assize loaves of the price of three-pence and priced loaves called half quartern loaves, no twelve-penny loaves, and half peck loaves, nor assize loaves of eighteen-pence and priced loaves called peck; upon pain of forfeiting not more than 40*s.* nor less than 10*s.*

Justices at sessions, may appoint which of the sorts of assize or priced loaves, and what other sorts of bread, and of what grain shall be made for sale; they causing an entry to be made of such orders (which may be inspected) and a copy thereof shall be set up in some market or other public place, or published in the country newspapers. Ibid.

A like proportion, as to weight, is to be kept between the white and wheaten bread, and the wheaten and household assize bread, viz. wheaten assize loaves shall weigh three parts in four of the weight of household assize loaves, on pain of forfeiting not more than 40*s.* Ibid.

A proportion in the price is to be kept in the peak loaf, and half peck, and its other subdivisions, both in the wheaten, and the household bread, and the household bread is to be one fourth cheaper than the wheaten; on penalty of not more than 40*s.* nor less than 10*s.* Ibid.

Bread not made of wheat, shall be marked with such letters as the justices shall order, and where they neglect to make such order, the maker is to mark every such loaf with two distinct letters, on penalty of not more than 40*s.* nor less than 5*s.* for every unmarked loaf. Ibid.

By 13 Geo 3. c. 62. standard wheaten bread shall weigh three fourths of the wheat whereof made, and be marked S. W. The peck loaf to weigh 17 pound 6 ounces avoirdupoise, and lesser loaves in proportion; seven standard loaves equal to eight wheaten, and six household.

Standard wheaten bread shall not be sold as priced loaves at the same time. Magistrates may, whenever they think proper, set the price and assize of standard wheaten bread, according to the table to the act, and bakers are liable to the same penalties as for offences concerning wheaten or household bread by the laws in being. Ibid.

If a baker informed against for making, marking, baking, or selling standard wheaten bread, not the whole produce of the wheat, except bran, and weighing three fourths of the wheat, shall prove that he bought the flour of miller or mealman, and discover his place of abode, the baker is to be acquitted, and the miller or mealman become subject to the penalties in 31 Geo. 2. c. 29. Ibid.

Where the magistrates have set the price of standard wheaten bread, they may omit other sorts, and justices at the sessions may prohibit, for three months, the making or selling other than standard wheaten bread on one month's public notice; but the Baker's company of London may object to such prohibition; and penny and two-penny loaves may be sold as by 31 Geo. 2. and coarser bread subject to the same act, but if sold as priced bread, subject to the same penalties, and magistrates shall have all powers by any law in being, and the same privileges, but this act is not to extend to the custom of London or Westminster, or right of the universities of Oxford and Cambridge, and all laws concerning bread shall remain; in corporations where there are two bailiffs, one is to set the assize of bread.

By 33 Geo. 3. c. 37. the proviso limiting the time of conviction in s. 41. of 31 Geo. 2. c. 29. is repealed, and the prosecution may be commenced within seven days.

By 36 Geo. 3. c. 22. loaves may be made of wheat, deducting only 5lb. of bran per bushel, or mixed with other grain or potatoes, and sold at such prices as shall be deemed reasonable. s. 1.

If such bread be deficient in weight according to the assize prescribed by 31 Geo.

2. c. 29. or be not marked, the offender shall be liable to the penalties of that act. s. 3.

By 41 Geo. 3. (u. k.) c. 12. any person may make and sell loaves made of flour of the whole produce of the wheat, or with the bran taken therefrom at any price less than the assize price of the place. s. 1.

Household bread to be marked H and mixed, with an X. and persons who shall not mark such bread, or not well make it, or adulterate it, or make it deficient in weight, shall be liable to the present penalties with respect to bread. s. 3, 4.

Acts in force to extend to this act. s. 5.

Half quartern loaves may be made, on which an assize and price shall be set, and the provisions of former acts are extended to such loaves. s. 6.

The rights of the city of London and Baker's company are reserved. s. 7.

By 37 Geo. 3. c. 98. within London, and ten miles of the Royal Exchange, corn meters are to make entries at the corn meter's office every Monday of the wheat worked in the preceding week: and the meal weighers are also to make their returns according to 38 Geo. 3. c. 55. (see title Corn), and corn factors are to deliver on demand true accounts in writing, of the quantities and prices of the wheat sold and delivered by them; and corn factors are to take an oath, that they will make such returns conformable to this act, and carrying on business without such oath, is a penalty of 50*l.* s. 1—6.

Bills of parcels are to be made of meal and flour sold and delivered, on pain of 40*s.* on both buyer and seller, and the prices are to be fixed at the time of sale, and before the delivery, on pain of 20*l.* on both buyer and seller. s. 7, 8.

Buyers and sellers upon request by the meal-weighers, are to disclose the true prices, and the court of mayor and aldermen, or lord mayor or justices, may order bills of parcels of meal or flour to be produced, and the same shall be so produced, on pain of 5*l.* s. 11, 12.

The weekly returns hereby directed to be made, shall be in lieu of so much only of those as are required by 31 Geo. 2. as relate to wheat, and meal and flour of wheat, and the returns of other grain shall be discontinued, and the quantities shall be computed by the Winchester bushel, and sack of 280lbs. weight. s. 13, 14.

The assize of bread shall be set every Tuesday, either from the price of wheat or from that of flour, and to take place from the following Thursday, within ten miles from the Royal Exchange (Westminster and Southwark, and the bills of mortality in Surry excepted): but before any advance or reduction can be made, the meal-weighers are to leave at Baker's hall a copy of the last returns. s. 15.

Six-penny, twelve-penny, and eighteen-penny loaves, are not to be sold at the same time as pecks, half-pecks, and quarterns. s. 17.

Any corn-meter, corn-factor, baker, or meal-weigher, who shall neglect his duty, shall forfeit not exceeding 10*l.* s. 18.

Any buyer or dealer, who shall refuse to disclose the true prices, shall forfeit not exceeding 10*l.* s. 19.

When any false return is suspected, the party likely to give information may be summoned, and refusing to attend or answer on oath, is a penalty of 10*l.* and persons forswearing themselves are subject to be prosecuted for perjury. s. 20.

Bakers are not to use alum in making bread for sale, on pain of forfeiting not exceeding 10*l.* nor less than 5*l.* or in default to be imprisoned, for not exceeding six nor less than two months. s. 21.

Wardmote inquests may enter bakers shops to weigh and try bread, and seize such as shall be found deficient, which shall be disposed of by the magistrates. Persons obstructing the search or seizure of bread, shall forfeit not exceeding 5*l.* nor less than 20*s.* s. 22, 23.

The returns are not to be inspected or made known, except to such magistrates and officers, as such returns are intended to be inspected and examined by, on pain of not exceeding 20*l.* nor less than 10*l.* s. 24.

The general clauses of 31 Geo. 2. c. 29. as to recovery of penalties, and the indemnity of justices, are extended to this act. s. 25, 26.

By 38 Geo. 3. c. 62. in setting the assize of bread 5*d.* per quarter is to be added to the average price of wheat, on account of the additional duty on salt.

By 38 Geo. 3. c. 55. bakers within London, and ten miles of the Royal Exchange, are to make their returns of meal and flour bought by them at the cocquet office at the Mansion house, every Saturday, before eleven, if they reside within the bills of mortality, and before five in the afternoon, out of those limits. s. 1—3.

Instead of the oath required of bakers by 37 Geo. 3. c. 37. that they will make true returns, they shall take the oath prescribed by this act, on pain of 5*l.* for making bread without taking the oath. s. 4.

The meal-weighers returns shall be prepared from the weekly accounts of meal and flour, and contain the quantities, sorts, and prices, and average prices. s. 5.

Penalty on bakers and meal-weighers for not making returns, and on peace officers for neglect of duty, not exceeding 10*l.* s. 6.

Penalty on bakers for receiving, and on persons selling meal or flour for giving any allowance, so as that the corn shall be made less than stated in the weekly returns, not exceeding 10*l.* s. 7.

In setting the assize of bread, 5*d.* per quarter to be added to the average price of wheat, and 4*d.* per sack to the average price of flour, as an allowance for the additional duty on salt. s. 8.

Such parts of any acts as impose a penalty on bakers not marking loaves within the limits, are repealed, and such loaves as are wheaten are to be marked W. and such as are bonsehold H. on pain of not exceeding 5*s.* nor less than 1*s.* s. 10.

No baker within the limits shall be liable to penalty for deficiency in weight, unless ascertained within twenty-four hours after baking. s. 11.

No baker or other person shall ask more for his bread than the set price, nor refuse to sell to any person, who shall tender payment for loaves in his possession, more than necessary for the immediate use of his family or customers; on pain of not exceeding 40*s.* nor less than 10*s.* s. 12.

Penalty for selling bread inferior to wheaten, at a higher price than household, not exceeding 10*l.* nor less than 40*s.* s. 13.

Magistrates, or peace officers by their warrants, may at seasonable times search bakers premises, and if any adulterated flour, bread, alum, or other ingredient be found, it may be seized and disposed of. s. 14.

Penalty on bakers in whose premises shall be found any alum or ingredients for adulterating flour, not exceeding 20*l.* nor less than 10*l.*; and the penalty for obstructing any search or seizure, is not exceeding 10*l.* nor less than 5*l.* s. 15—16.

If any baker shall make it appear that any offence for which he shall have paid the penalty shall have been occasioned by the wilful default of a servant, the justice may order his servant to make recompence, and if unable, commit him to hard labour, for not exceeding one month. s. 17.

Persons forswearing themselves, are guilty of perjury, and the provisions of 31 Geo. 2. c. 29. for recovery of the penalties, are to extend to this act. s. 18—19.

By 39 & 40 Geo. 3. c. 74, the assize and weight of bread, may be set whatever the price of wheat may be, the proportions of the tables in the former acts, being observed, according to the schedule annexed to this. s. 1.

The lord mayor and aldermen of London, may set the assize and weight of bread whatever the price of wheat or flour may be. s. 2.

The penalties for selling bread deficient in weight, or higher than the assize price, to extend to persons acting contrary to this act. s. 3.

Magistrates may weigh bread made for sale at any time within forty-eight hours after it has been baked, for ascertaining whether it be deficient in weight. s. 4.

By 45 Geo. 3. c. 23. the allowance to the bakers of London, instead of that under 31 Geo. 2. c. 29. as amended by 37 Geo. 3. c. 98. shall be when the assize is set from wheat 16*s.* per quarter, or 2*s.* per bushel, and when from flour 13*s.* 4*d.* per sack, with an addition of 6*d.* per quarter, and 5*d.* per sack, for, and on account of the new duty on salt. See also London—Bakers.

BRECCA, (from the Fr. breche) a breach or decay. In some ancient deeds there have been covenants for repairing muros & breccas, portas & fossata, &c. Cowel. Blount.

BREDE, a word used by Bracton for broad; as too large and too brede, is proverbially too long and too broad. Cowel. Blount.

BREDWITE, (Sax. bread and white) a fine or penalty imposed for defaults in the assize of bread: to be exempt from which, was a special privilege granted to the tenants of the honour of Wallingford by Hen. 2. Paroch. Antiq. 114. Cowel. Blount.

BREHON, in Ireland the judges and lawyers were anciently styled brehons; and thereupon the Irish law called the brehon law. 4 Inst. 358. Vide Edm. Spencer's State of Ireland, p. 1513. edit. Hughes. In a parliament held at Kilkenny, 40 Ed. 3. under Lionel duke of Clarence, the then lieutenant of Ireland, the brehon law was formally abolished. 1 Black. Com. 100. It is described to have been a rule of right unwritten but delivered by tradition from one to another, in which oftentimes there appeared great show of equity in determining the right between party and party, but in many things repugnant both to God's laws and man's. 1 Black. 101. 4 Black. 313.

BREISNA, weather-sheep. Cowel. Blount.

BRENAGIUM, a payment in bran, which tenants anciently made to feed their lords hounds. Blount.

BRETOYSE, or BRETOISE, the law of the marches of Wales, in practice among the ancient Britons. Cowel. Blount.

BREVE, is any writ by which a man is summoned or attached to answer in action, or whereby any thing is commanded to be done in the king's courts, in order to justice, &c. It is called breve from the brevity of it. Bract. lib. 5. Tract. 5. cap. 17. Cowel. Blount.

BREVE PERQUIRERE, to purchase a writ or license of trial in the king's courts, by the plaintiff, qui breve perquisivit: and hence comes the usage of paying 6*s.* 8*d.* fine to the king, where the debt is 40*l.* and of 10*s.* where the debt is 100*l.* &c. in suits and trials for money due upon bond, &c. Cowel. Blount.

BREVE DE RECTO, a writ of right, or license for a person ejected out of an estate, to sue for the possession of it when detained from him. Ibid.

BREVIA TESTATA, mentioned by the feodal writers, Feud. l. 1. 64 were written memorandums introduced to perpetuate the tenure of the conveyance and investiture, when grants by parol only became the foundation of frequent dispute and uncertainty. To this end they registered in the deed the persons who attended as witnesses; and our modern deeds are in reality nothing more than an improvement or amplification of the brevia testata. 2 Black. Com. 307.

BREVIBUS ET ROTULIS LIBERANDIS, a writ or mandate to a sheriff to deliver unto his successor the county, and the appurtenances, with the rolls, briefs, remembrances, and all other things belonging to that office. Reg. Orig. fol. 295

BREWERS. See EXCISE.

BRIBERY, (from the Fr. briber, to devour or eat greedily) is a high offence, where a person in a judicial place takes any fee, gift, reward or brocage, for doing his office, but of the king only. 3 Inst. 145. But taken largely, it signifies the receiving or offering any undue reward to, or by any person concerned in the administration of public justice, whether judge, officer, or the like, to act contrary to his duty; and sometimes it signifies the taking or giving a reward for a public office. 3 Inst. 9. To take a bribe of money, though small, is a great fault; and judges' servants may be punished for receiving bribes. And though a bribe be refused the officer is punishable. Fortescue, cap. 51.

Bribery in judicial or ministerial officers is punishable by fine and imprisonment. Before the statute 25 Ed. 3. bribery in a judge was looked upon as so heinous an offence that it was sometimes punished as high treason; and it is at this day punishable, with forfeiture of office, fine and imprisonment. In the reign of king James I. the earl of M. lord treasurer of England, being impeached by the commons for refusing to hear petitions referred to him by the king, till he had received great bribes, &c. was, by sentence of the lords, deprived of all his offices, and disabled to hold any for the future, or to sit in parliament; also he was fined fifty thousand pounds, and imprisoned during the king's pleasure. 1 Hawk. P. C. 170. In the eleventh year of king George I. the lord chancellor M———— had a milder punishment: he was impeached by the commons with great zeal, for bribery, in selling the places of masters in chancery for exorbitant sums, and other corrupt practices, tending to the great loss and ruin of the suitors of that court; and the charge being made good against him, being before disseised of his office, he was sentenced by the lords to pay a fine of thirty thousand pounds, and be imprisoned till it was paid. See the State Trials.

By statute, the chancellor, treasurer, justices of both benches, barons of the exchequer, &c. shall be sworn not to ordain or nominate any person in any office for any gift, brocage, &c. 12 R. 2. c. 2. And the sale of offices concerning the administration of public justice, &c. is prohibited on pain of forfeiture and disability, &c. by 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 16. In the construction of the last mentioned statute, it has been resolved that the offices of the ecclesiastical courts are within the meaning of that act, as well as the offices in the courts of common law; and it hath been adjudged, that one who contracts for an office, contrary to the purport of the said statute 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 16. is so disabled to hold the same that he cannot be restored to a capacity of holding it by any grant or dispensation whatsoever. Cro. Jac. 269, 386. Hawk. P. C. 171.

Officers of the revenue taking bribes are also punishable by particular statutes, as is also the offence of bribery at parliamentary elections, for which see PARLIAMENT.

BRIBOUR, (Fr. bribeur) seems to signify in some of our old statutes, one that pilfers other men's goods. 28 Ed. 2. cap. 1.

BRICOLLS, an engine mentioned in Cowel and Blount, by which walls were beat down.

BRICKS. By 17 Ed. 4. c. 4. plain tiles, roof tiles, corner tiles, and gutter tiles, shall be made good, and the earth whereof they shall be made, shall be digged and cast up before November 1, next before making, and turned before February 1, and not wrought till March 1, after.

The earth is not to be mixed with the marl, or chalk whereof they are made. Plain tiles to be 10½ inches long, 6¼ inches broad, ¼ an inch and ½ quarter thick, roof tile 13 inches long, ¼ an inch and ½ quarter thick, with convenient depth, gutter and cover tile 10½ inches long, with convenient thickness, breadth, and depth. Ibid.

Selling tiles contrary to the act, to forfeit to the buyer double value, and justices may determine offences, and assess on the offender for every 1000 plain tiles 5*s.* for every 1000 roof tiles 6*s.* 8*d.* and for every 100 corner or gutter tiles 2*s.* Ibid.

The justices may appoint searchers, who are to have of the tile-maker for searching 1000 plain tiles 1*d.* 100 roof tiles ½, and for 100 corner and gutter tiles ¼; they are to present defaults, on pain of 10*s.* Ibid.

By 17 Geo. 3. c. 42. all bricks made in England for sale shall be 8½ inches long, 2½ inches thick, and 4 wide; and all pantiles 13½ inches long, 9½ inches wide, and ¼ inch thick; on pain of forfeiting for bricks or tiles made of less dimensions when burnt, as follows, viz. 20*s.* for every 1000 of bricks, and 10*s.* for every 1000 of pantiles. Ibid.

Mashes of sieves, for screening sea-coal ashes, not to be more than a quarter of an inch asunder. Ibid.

All contracts for engrossing of bricks and tiles, or for hindering a free sale thereof, shall be void, and the maker shall forfeit 20*l.* his clerk or agent 10*l.* half to the poor, and the other to the informer. Ibid.

See also Excise, (Bricks).

BRIDGE, (pons) public bridges, which are of general convenience, are of common right, to be repaired by the whole inhabitants of that county in which they lie. Hale's P. C. 143. 13 Co. 33. Cro. Car. 365.

But a corporation aggregate, either in respect of a special tenure of certain lands, or in respect of a special prescription; and also any private person, by reason of such special tenure, may be compelled to repair them. Hale's P. C. 143. Dalt. c. 14. 6 Mod. 307.

And those who are bound to repair public bridges, must make them of such heighth and strength, as shall be answerable to the course of the water; and they are not trespassers if they enter on any land adjoining to repair them, or lay the materials necessary for the repairs thereon. Dalt. cap. 16.

If a man makes a bridge for the common good of the king's subjects, which becomes a public convenience, the inhabitants of the county are bound to repair it. 2 Inst. 70. Rol. Abr. 368. Salk. 359. 6 Mod. 307.

But by 43 Geo. 3. c. 59. no bridge erected in any county by private persons shall be deemed a county bridge, to be repaired by the inhabitants, unless built in a substantial manner, under the directions of the county surveyor and the quarter sessions. s. 5.

Indictments for not repairing of bridges, will not lie, but in case of common bridges on highways; though it hath been adjudged they will lie for a bridge on a common footway. Mod. Cas. 256. Not keeping up a ferry, being a common passage for all the king's people, is also indictable, as well as not keeping up bridges. 1 Salk. 12.

The following is the substance and effect of the acts relating to bridges.

By magna charta, 9 Hen. 3. c. 15. no town or freeman shall be distrained to make bridges but such as have been accustomed.

By 22 Hen. 8. c. 5. four justices of the peace may hear and determine annoyances of bridges, and charge such as ought to repair them; and when it cannot be known who ought to repair, the county, cities or town corporate where it lies shall be charged.

The justices may tax the inhabitants with the assent of the constables, and appoint two collectors, and two surveyors, who shall repair the bridge, and the collectors and surveyors are to account to the justices. Ibid.

The justices may make process into every shire against offenders, where the bridge is in one county, and the persons who ought to repair in another; the sheriff is to execute the process, and the justices are to make allowances to the collectors and surveyors. Ibid.

This act is not to extend to the cinque ports. Ibid.

Three hundred feet in the highway from the ends of bridges, shall be repaired as often as necessary; for which purpose the justices are to act as above. Ibid.

By 1 Ann. stat. 1. c. 18. the quarter-sessions upon presentment that a bridge is out of repair, may assess every town and parish; the money to be levied by the constables, and paid to the high constables, who are to remit it to the treasurers appointed by the justices. Persons refusing to collect or pay the money, forfeit 40*s.* treasurers paying money without order of sessions to forfeit 5*l.* collectors of the rate to be allowed three-pence in the pound, inhabitants deemed good witnesses and no certiorari to be allowed.

By 12 Geo. 2. c. 29. no money shall be expended in the repair of bridges without the presentment of the grand jury.

By 14 Geo. 2. c. 33. justices at their quarter-sessions may purchase an acre of land for the building or enlarging of county bridges.

By 43 Geo. 3. c. 59. the surveyors of county bridges are empowered to get materials for the repair of bridges, in the same manner as surveyors of highways, under 13 Geo. 3. c. 78. and the quarter sessions may widen and improve or alter the situation of county bridges, on presentment of their insufficiency. s. 1, 2.

Tools and materials provided by the quarter sessions are vested in the surveyor: and inhabitants of counties may sue for damages done to bridges, in the name of the surveyor. s. 3, 4.

This act not to extend to bridges repaired by tenure. s. 7.

BRIDGEMASTERS, there are bridgemasters of London bridge, chosen by the citizens, who have certain fees and profits belonging to their office, and the care of the said bridge, and bridge-house estates. Lex. Londin. 283.

BRIEF, (brevis) an abridgement of the client's case, made out for the instruction of counsel, wherein the case of the party is to be briefly but fully stated.

BRIEF AL EVESQUE, a writ to the bishop, which in quare impedit shall go to remove an incumbent, unless he recover or be presented pendente lite. 1 Keb. 386.

BRIEFS, or licences to make collection for loss by fire. See stat. 4 & 5 Ann. cap. 14.

BRIGA, (Fr. brigue) debate or contention. Cowel. Blount.

BRIGANDINE, (Fr. in Lat. lorica) is a coat of mail or ancient armour, consisting of many jointed and scale-like plates, very pliant and easy for the body. Cowel and Blount.

BRIGANTES, a word used in Yorkshire, Lancashire, bishoprick of Durham, Westmorland and Cumberland. Blount.

BRIGBOTE or BRUG-BOTE, signifies to be freed from the reparation of bridges. It is compounded of the Sax. brig, a bridge, and bote, which is a yielding of amends, or supplying a defect: but this is more properly brucbote, from the Germ. bruck, i. e. a bridge, and bote, a compensation; and it is used for the liberty or exemption of being free from tribute or contribution towards the mending or re-edifying of bridges. Fleta, lib. 1. c. 47. Selden's Titles of Honour, fol. 622. Cowel. Blount.

BROCAGE, (brocagium) the wages or hire of a broker; which is also termed brokerage. 12 R. 2. c. 2. and 11 H. 4. Rot. Stat. 31 Ed. 3. Cowel. Blount.

BROCELLA, signifieth a wood; and it is said to be a thicket or covert of bushes and brush wood. Cowel. Blount.

BROCHA, (from the Fr. broche) an awl, or large packing needle, the use whereof is very well known. A spit in some parts of England is called a broche; and from this word comes to pierce or broach a barrel. Ibid.

BROCHIA, a great can or pitcher. Bract. lib. 2. tract. 1. cap. 6. Where it seems that he intends sarcus to carry dry, and brochia liquid things. Ibid.

BRODEHALFPENY, or BROADHALFPENY. See Bordhalfpeny.

BROKERS, (broccatores, broccarii & auxiatarii) are those that contrive, make and conclude bargains and contracts between merchants and tradesmen, in matters of money and merchandize, for which they have a fee or reward. The original of the word is from a trader broken, and that from the Sax. bror, which signifies misfortune, which is often the true reason of a man's breaking; so that the broker came from one who was a broken trader by misfortune, and none but such were formerly admitted to that employment. Cowel. Blount.

By the stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. cap. 20. they are to be licensed in London by the lord mayor, who administers an oath, and takes bond for the faithful execution of their offices: if any persons shall act as brokers, without being thus licensed and admitted, they shall forfeit the sum of 500*l.* And persons employing them 50*l.* And brokers are to register contracts, &c. under the like penalty: also brokers shall not deal for themselves, on pain of forfeiting 200*l.* They are to carry about them a silver medal, having the king's arms, and the arms of the city, &c. and pay 40*s.* a year to the chamber of the city.

By 10 Ann. c. 19. brokers taking above 2*s.* 6*d.* per cent. for brokage of stocks, shall forfeit 20*l.* with costs.

By 6 Geo. 1. c. 18. all undertakings tending to the prejudice of trade, and all subscriptions thereto, or presuming to act as corporate bodies without legal authority, and all acting under obsolete charters, shall be deemed illegal and void. All such undertakings are deemed public nuisances, and shall incur a præmunire.

Merchants or traders may have an action to recover treble damages with costs against the undertakers, and brokers buying or selling any shares in such undertakings, shall forfeit 500*l.* and be disabled.

This act not to extend to undertakings established before 1718, the two assurance companies thereby erected, or the South Sea company; nor to restrain the carrying on of any home or foreign trade in partnership. Ibid.

South Sea and East India companies may advance money on bottomree to their captains or other servants. Ibid.

Not to extend to corporations formerly created, or to any subscriptions to be made to the capital of the South Sea, nor to the powers of the East India company. Ibid.

By 7 Geo. 2. c. 8. all premiums to deliver, accept, or refuse any stock or share therein, shall be void, and the money returned; in default, it may be recovered by action, with double costs; and persons entering into any such contract, shall forfeit 500*l.* the like penalty is inflicted on brokers, negotiating such contracts, and also on persons who agree to sell, and are not actually possessed of, or entitled to stock; and in this case brokers transacting agreements knowingly, shall forfeit 100*l.*

Brokers are to keep a book, called the brokers book, in which they shall enter all contracts and agreements, with the names of buyers and sellers, and day of making, to be produced when required, under 50*l.* penalty. Ibid.

No money shall be given to compound any difference, for not delivering stock, but the whole money agreed shall be paid, and the stock transferred, on pain of 100*l.* Ibid.

Persons liable to be sued on this act, shall be obliged to answer a bill in equity, brought for discovering such contract or wager, and the sum or premium given, the plaintiff giving security for answering costs. Ibid.

Stocks sold to be delivered at a certain day, and not paid for at the time agreed, may be sold to any others, and the buyer shall make good the damage. Ibid.

Such stock not being transferred at the time agreed, the buyer may purchase other stock, and recover his damage. Ibid.

This act is not to extend to contracts for stock pursuant to order of the court of chancery, nor to hinder persons from lending money on stock, or prevent the redelivering thereof, on payment of the money lent. Ibid.

There are likewise pawn-brokers, who commonly keep shops, and let out money to poor necessitous people upon pawns, for the most part on extortion. See Pawn-Brokers.

BROK, an old sword or dagger. Cowel. Blount.

BROSSUS, bruised or injured with blows, wounds, or other casualty. Ibid.

BROTHEL-HOUSES, lewd places, being the common habitation of prostitutes. King Hen. 8. by proclamation, in the 37th year of his reign, suppressed all the stews or brothel-houses, which had long continued on the bank side in Southwark, contrary to the law of God and of the land. 3 Inst. 205. A brothelman was a loose idle fellow; and a feme bordelier or brothelier, a common whore. And borelman is a contraction of brothelman. Chaucer. Cowel. Blount.

BRUERE. This the Latins call erica, and signifies heath ground; and brueria, briars, thorns, or heath, from the Sax. brær, briar. Ibid.

BRUILLUS, a wood or grove; a thicket or clump of trees in a park or forest. Ibid.

BRUILLETUS, a small coppice or wood. Ibid.

BRUSCIA, sometimes signifies a wood. Ibid.

BRUSUA and BRUSULA, brouse or brush-wood. Ibid.

BUBBLES, the South-sea project, and other schemes, to raise joint-stock companies, having a tendency to defraud the subject, are called by the name of bubbles. And the stat. 6 Geo. 1. c. 18. makes all such unwarrantable undertakings by unlawful subscriptions subject to the penalties of a præmunire. 4 Black. 117.

BUCKLARIUM, a buckler. Cowel. Blount.

BUCKSTALL, a toil to take deer, which by the stat. 19 Hen. 7. c. 11. is not to be kept by any person that hath not a park of his own, under penalties. See also 3 Jac. 1. c. 13. There is a privilege of being quit of amerciaments for buckstalls. 4 Inst. 306.

BUCKWHEAT, is the same with French wheat, used in many counties of this kingdom: in Essex it is called brank; and in Worcestershire, crap. It is mentioned in the stat. 15 Car. 2. c. 5.

BUCINUS, a military weapon for a footman. Tenures, pag. 74. Cowel. Blount.

BUGGERY, or sodomy, (from the Italian buggerare) is a carnal copulation against nature, and this is either by the confusion of species; that is to say, a man or a woman with a brute beast; or of sexes, as a man with a man, or man unnaturally with a woman. 12 Co. Rep. 36. This sin was brought into England by the Lombards, Rot. Parl. 50 Ed. 3. numb. 58. Stat. 25 H. 8. cap. 6. And in ancient times, it was punishable with burning, though others say with burying alive: but at this day it is felony excluded clergy, and punished as other felonies. 25 H. 8. cap. 6. and 5 Eliz. cap. 17.

By the articles of the navy, (22 Geo. 2. c. 33.) if any person in the fleet shall commit the unnatural and detestable sin of buggery or sodomy, with man or beast; he shall be punished with death by the sentence of a court martial.

It is felony both in the agent and patient consenting, except the person on whom committed be a boy under the age of discretion; when it is felony only in the agent: all persons present, aiding and abetting to the crime, are all principals, and the statutes make it felony generally: there may be accessaries before and after the fact; but though none of the principal offenders shall be admitted to clergy, the accessaries are not excluded it. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 670.

In every indictment for this offence, there must be the words, rem habuit venerium & carnaliter cognovit, &c. and of consequence some kind of penetration and emission must be proved; but any the least degree is sufficient. 1 Hawk. 6.

BULL, (bulla) a brief or mandate of the pope or bishop of Rome, from the lead or sometimes gold seal affixed thereto: but by the statute 28 Hen. 8. c. 16. it was enacted, that all bulls, briefs and dispensations had or obtained from the bishop of Rome, should be void. And by 13 Eliz. c. 2. (vide 23 Eliz. c. 1.) if any person shall obtain from Rome any bull or writing to absolve or reconcile such as forsake their due allegiance, or shall give or receive absolution by colour of such bull, or use or publish such bull, &c. it is high treason.

BULL AND BOAR, by the custom of some places, a parson may be obliged to keep a bull and a boar, for the use of the parishioners, in consideration of his having tithes of calves and pigs, &c. 1 Roll. Abr. 559. 4 Mod. 241.

BULLIO SALIS, as much salt as is made at one wealing or boiling: a measure of salt, supposed to be twelve gallons. Mon. Angl. tom. 2.

BULLION, (Fr. billon) the ore or metal whereof gold is made; and signifies with us gold or silver in billet, in the mass before it is coined. Anno 9 Ed. 3. c. 2. Cowel. Blount.

BULTEL, is the bran or refuse of meal after dressed; also the bag wherein it is dressed is called a bulter, or rather boulter. Cowel. Blount.

BUNDLES, a sort of records of the Chancery lying in the office of the Rolls; in which are contained, the files of bills and answers, of hab. cor. cum causa, certiorari's, attachments, &c. scire facias's, certificates of statute-staple, extents and liberates, supersedeas's, bails on special pardons, bills from the Exchequer of the names of sheriffs, letters patent surrendered and deeds cancelled, inquisitions, privy seals for grants, bills signed by the king, warrants of escheators, customers, &c. Ibid.

BURCHETA, (from the Fr. berche) a kind of gun used in forests. Cowel. Blount.

BURCIFER REGIS, purse-bearer, or keeper of the king's privy purse. Pat. 17 Hen. 3. Cowel. Blount.

BURDARE, to jest or trifle. Mat. Paris, Addit. p. 149. Cowel. Blount.

BURGAGE, (burgagium) an ancient tenure proper to boroughs, whereby the inhabitants by custom hold their lands or tenements of the king, or other lord of the borough, at a certain yearly rent. Old Tenures. It is a kind of socage tenure, and signifieth the service whereby the borough is holden; and the king hath nothing to do with the heirs of this land, whether they be under fourteen or above that age and under twenty-one. Co. Lit. 109. Jenk. Cent. 127. 2 Black. Com. 82. 4 V. 412.

BURG, a small walled town, or place of privilege, &c. See Borough.

BURG-BOTE, (from burg, castellum, and bote, compensatio) is a tribute or contribution towards the building or repairing of castles, or walls of a borough or city: from which divers had exemption by the ancient charters of the Saxon kings. Fleta, lib. 1. c. 47. Cowel. Blount.

BURGESSES, (burgarii & burgenses) are properly men of trade, or the inhabitants of a borough or walled town; but we usually apply this name to the magistrates of such a town, as the bailiff and burgesses of Leominster, &c. Cowel. Blount.

We now also call those burgesses, who serve in parliament, for any borough or corporation: and no man is qualified to be such a burgess, that hath not an estate of 300*l.* a year, clear of all incumbrances. 9 Ann. cap. 7. 33 Geo. 2. c. 20.

BURGH-BRECHE, a fine imposed on the community of a town, for a breach of the peace, &c. Leg. Canuti, cap. 55. Cowel. Blount.

BURGHERISTHE, or burgheriche, is a word used in Domesday, signifying violatio pacis in villa. Blount.

BURGMOTE, a court of a borough. Cowel. Blount.

BURGHWARE, (quasi burgiver) a citizen or burgess. Ibid.

BURGLARY, (burglaria, from the Sax. burg, domus, or arx. & laron, furtum) is a felony at common law, in breaking and entering the mansion house of another, or a church, or the walls or gates of a walled town in the night-time, to the intent to commit some felony, whether the intention be executed or not. 4 Co. 39. H. P. C. 80. 1 Hawk. P. C. 38.

When several come with a design to commit burglary, and one does it, while the rest watch near the house, here his act is, by interpretation, the act of all of them. Wood. 377. If thieves pretend business to get into a house by night, and thereupon the owner of the house opens his door, and they enter and rob the house, this is burglary. Kel. 42. Though in such a case, juries generally find guilty of the stealing, but not of the burglary. Also if a person be within the house, and steal goods, and then open the house on the inside, and go out with the goods, this is burglary, though the thief did not break the house. 3 Inst. 64. If a thief unlocks a door, or draws the latch of a room to rob, &c. or if one comes down a chimney, opens a window, breaks a hole in the wall, &c. all these are a breaking: and if the thief set his foot over the threshold of the door of the house, or put his hand, pistol, &c. within the door or window, it is an entry sufficient to make it burglary. H. P. C. 80, 81.

Every entrance into the house by a trespasser is not a breaking in this case, but there must be an actual breaking. As if the door of a mansion house stand open, and the thief enters, this is no breaking. So it is if the window of the house be open, and a thief with a hook or other engine draweth out some of the goods of the owner, this is no burglary, because there is no actual breaking of the house. But any the least entry, either with the whole, or with but part of the body or without any instrument or weapon, will be sufficient; therefore, if the thief breaketh the glass of the window, and with a hook or other engine draweth out some of the goods of the owner, this is burglary, for there was an actual breaking of the house. 3 Inst. 64. And these acts amount to an actual breaking, viz. opening the casement, or breaking the glass window, picking open the lock of a door, or putting back the lock, or the leaf of a window, or unlatching the door that is only latched. 1 Hale H. P. C. 552.

One of the servants of the house opened his lady's chamber door, which was fastened with a brass bolt, with design to commit a rape, (a felony at common law); and it was ruled to be burglary, and the defendant was convicted and transported. Stran. 481. Kel. 67.

Though the house is to be a mansion-house, and the out-houses adjoining to the mansion-house are part thereof, wherein this crime may be committed; yet a barn, stable, &c. at any distance from the house, is not. 4 Rep. 40. But part of a house divided from the rest, having a door of its own to the street, this is a mansion-house of him who hires it. Kel. 84.

To break and enter a shop, not parcel of the mansion-house, in which the shop-keeper never lodges, but only works or trades there in the day-time, is not burglary, but only larceny; but if he, or his servant, usually or often lodge in the shop at night, it is then a mansion-house, in which a burglary may be committed. 1 H. H. P. C. 557, 558.

It is not necessary to make it burglary, that any person be actually in the house at the very time of the offence committed. 1 Hawk. 103.

And if on a bare assault upon a house, without entry, the owner fling out his money, it is no burglary. Hawk. P. C. c. 38.

The intention to commit felony to make burglary must be of such a fact, as was felony at common law; and not of a felony newly made by act of parliament: but the offences of burglary and felony may be joined in the same indictment; and where a man commits burglary, and at the same time steals goods out of the house, if he be acquitted of the burglary, he may notwithstanding be indicted of the larceny. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 245. Taking away goods from a dwelling-house in the night or day, where any person is therein; and breaking a shop, warehouse, &c. and taking away goods privately to the value of 5*s.* though no person be therein, is burglary, by stat. 3 W. & M. c. 9. 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 23. And a reward of 40*l.* is given by the statute for apprehending a burglar, and prosecuting him to conviction. 5 Ann. cap. 31.

And by stat. 12 Ann. cap. 7. if any person shall enter into the mansion-house of another, by day or by night, without breaking the same, with an intent to commit felony, or being in such house shall commit any felony, and shall in the night-time break the said house to get out, he shall be guilty of burglary, and ousted of the benefit of clergy, in the same manner as if he had broken and entered the house in the night-time, with intent to commit felony.

But it is not burglary if it appear upon the evidence, that there was so much day-light at the time, that the man's countenance might be discerned thereby. Hawk. P. C. c. 38. This capability of discernment does not, however, extend to moon-light, for then many mid-night burglaries would go unpunished. And besides, the maliguity of the offence doth not so properly arise from its being done in the dark, as at the dead of night, when all the creation, except beasts of prey, are at rest, when sleep has disarmed the owner, and rendered his castle defenceless. 4 Black. 244.

BURI, a word signifying husbandmen. Mon. Angl. tom. 3. p. 183.

BURIALS. Persons dying are to be buried in woollen, on pain of forfeiting 5*l.* And affidavit is to be made of such burying before a justice, &c. under the like penalty. Stat. 30 Car. 2. c. 3.

BURNETA, cloth made of dyed wool. Cowel. Blount.

BURNING IN THE HAND. Vide Branding.

BURNING of houses, out-houses, &c. Vide Arson.

BURROCHIUM, a burrock, or small ware over a river, where wheels are laid for the taking of fish. Cowel. Blount.

BURSA, a purse. Ibid.

BURSARIA, the bursery, or exchequer of collegiate and conventual bodies; or the place of receiving and paying, and accounting by the bursarii, or bursers. Parock. Antiq. p. 288. But the word bursarii did not only signify the bursars of a convent or college; but formerly stipendiary scholars were called by the name of bursarii, as they lived on the burse or fund, or public stock of the university. Cowel. Blount.

BURSE, (burse, cambium, basilica) an exchange or place of meeting of merchants. Ibid.

BURSHOLDERS. See Borough-holders.

BUSONES COMITATUS: they are mentioned in Bracton, lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 1. Cowel and Blount say busones is used for barones.

BUSSA, a old word signifying a great ship. Cowel. Blount.

BUSSELUS, a bushel; from busa, butta, buttis, a standing measure: and hence butticella, butticellus, bussellus, a less measure. Some derived it from the old Fr. bouts, leather continents of wine; whence come our leather budget and bottles. Kennet's Gloss.

BUSTA and BUSTUS, busca, and buscus, etc. The same with brucia and brusula. Cowel. Blount.

BUSTARD, a large bird of game, usually found on downs and plains, mentioned in stat. 25 Hen. 8. cap. 11.

BUTT, (butticum) a measure of wine, &c. well known among merchants, and containing 126 gallons of Malmsey wine. Stat. 1 R. c. 13.

BUTTER AND CHEESE. The following is the substance of the acts relating to butter and cheese:

By 9 Hen. 6. c. 8. a wey of cheese shall contain thirty-two cloves.

By 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 7. warehouse keepers, shippers, or others refusing to receive and ship butter, to forfeit 10*s.* for every firkin of butter, and 5*s.* for every wey of cheese. Masters of ships not taking on board, half such penalties. s. 4.

By 36 Geo. 3. c. 76. coopers shall make vessels, intended for packing of butter, of well-seasoned timber, and tight, and not leaky, in tubs weighing not less than eleven nor more than fifteen pounds, avoirdupois; firkins not less than seven, nor more than eleven pounds; and every half firkin not less than four, nor more than six pounds; and the same shall be capable of holding, tubs eighty-four pounds, avoirdupois, firkins fifty-six pounds, and half firkins twenty-eight pounds, of butter, on penalty of 10*s.* for each vessel made contrary to the above directions. s. 1.

Vessels are to be branded with the name of the maker, and the weight thereof, on penalty of 10*s.* s. 2.

Dairymen are to pack their butter in no other vessels, and before packing they shall soak and season them, and brand in the inside, on the bottom, and on the outside, at the top, and also on the bouge on the staves, their Christian and surnames, on pain of 5*l.* s. 3.

The quantities packed shall be good and merchantable, and exclusive of the tare of the cask, eighty-four pounds net weight of butter in each tub, fifty six pounds in firkins, and twenty-eight pounds in half firkins, and such butter shall not be mixed nor salted with great salt, on pain of 5*l.* for each offence. s. 4.

Any farmer, dairyman, factor, or other person whomsoever, guilty of any fraud whatsoever, in respect of the said matters, shall forfeit 30*l.* s. 5.

The full quantity of butter shall be delivered in the vessels, and if not, satisfaction may be recovered, with costs by action at law. s. 6.

Persons repacking butter in any vessel, for sale again, are to forfeit 5*l.* but foreign butter may be repacked in vessels used for British butter, defacing the original marks, and branding instead thereof their own names, and the words foreign butter. s. 8.

Persons counterfeiting the names or marks of farmers, are to forfeit 30*l.* s. 9.

Penalties not exceeding 5*l.* are recoverable before one justice: if exceeding 5*l* in courts of record, with costs; the whole to the informer. s. 10—14.

The act does not extend to vessels containing not more than fourteen pounds. s. 15.

By 58 Geo 3. c 73. persons making vesse's for packing butter shall brand them with their name and place of abode, on pain of 10*s.* and factors buying or selling butter in vessels not legally marked are to forfeit 20*s.* Also dealers having in their possession butter in vessels not legally marked, are to forfeit 10*s.* to be recovered as under last act; but this act does not extend to Scotland.

BUTTONS. See Manufactures.

BUTTS, the place where archers met with their bows and arrows to shoot at a mark, was called shooting at the butts Also butts are the ends or short pieces of land in arable ridges and furrows; buttum terræ, a butt of land. Cowel. Blount.

BUTLERAGE OF WINES, signifies that imposition upon wine brought into the kingdom, which the king's butler may take of every ship, viz. 2*s.* for every ton of wine imported by strangers. 1 Black. 314, 315.

BUTHSCARLE, butsecarl, busearles, (buscarli & buthsecarli) mariners or seamen. Selden's Mare Clausum, fol. 184.

BUZONIS, seems to be the shaft of an arrow, before it is fledged or feathered. Cowel. Blount.

BYE, words ending in by or bee, signify a dwelling place or habitation, from the Sax. bye. Ibid.

BY-LAWS, (bilagines, from the Goth, by, pagus, and lagen, lex) A by-law is a private law or statute, made by those who are duly authorised thereunto by charter, prescription, or custom, for the conservation of order and good government within some particular place or jurisdiction. Moor 583. 5 Co. 62.

Such as orders and constitutions of corporations, for the governing of their members; of courts-leet and courts-baron; commoners or inhabitants in vills, made by common assent, for the good of those that made them, in particular cases, whereunto the public law doth not extend; so that they lay restrictions on the parties, not imposed by the common or statute law: guilds and fraternities of trades, by letters patent of incorporation, may likewise make by-laws, for the better regulation of trade among themselves, or with others. Kitch. 45, 72. 6 Rep. 65.

For a power of making by-laws is included in the very act of incorporating, and incident to every corporation aggregate, without express words in the charter; and all by-laws must ever be subject and squared to the rule of the general law of the realm, as subordinate to it, otherwise they will be void. Hob. 211. 1 Black. 475.

A by-law by a corporation may inflict a penalty, recoverable by distress, or action of debt, and be good. 1 Danv. Abr. 738. But it cannot be made with a penalty of imprisonment or forfeiture of goods and chattels. 5 Co. 64. 8 Co. 127. 2 Inst. 54. For a by-law may not be made on pain of forfeiture of goods: nor may it inflict imprisonment, being contrary to magna charta. 2 Inst. 54.

All by-laws are to be reasonable; and ought to be for the common benefit, and not private advantage of any particular persons; and must be consonant to the public laws and statutes, as subordinate to them. Godsb. 79. And by 19 H. 7. c. 7. by-laws made by corporations are to be approved by the lord-chancellor, or chief justices, on pain of 40*l.*

C

CABLISH, (cablicium) signifies brushwood, according to the writers of the forest laws: but according to Spelman, it is more properly windfall-wood, because it was written of old cadibulum, from cadere: or if derived from the Fr. chablis, it also must be windfall-wood. Cowel. Blount.

CABLES. By 25 Geo. 3. c. 56. no person shall make or sell any cordage for shipping in which any hemp is used, called short chucking, half clean, whale line, or other toppings, codilla, or any damaged hemp, on pain of forfeiting the same, and also treble the value thereof

Cables, hawsers, or ropes, made of materials not prohibited by this act, and whose quality shall be inferior to clean Petersburgh hemp, shall be deemed inferior cordage, and the same shall be distinguished by marking on the tally, staple or inferior. Manufacturers making default herein forfeit for every hundred weight of cordage 10*s.* Ibid.

Manufacturers are to affix their names and manufactory, to new cordage, before sold, under the like forfeiture: and putting a false name is a forfeiture of 20*l.* Ibid.

Persons making cables of old and overworn stuff, containing above seven inches in compass, shall forfeit four times the value. Ibid.

Vessels belonging to British subjects, having on board foreign made cordage, are to make entry thereof, on entering into any British port, on penalty of 20*s.* for every hundred weight. But this is not to extend to cordage, brought from the East Indies; nor to materials at present used by any vessels built abroad before this act. Ibid.

CACHEPOLUS or CACHERELLUS, an inferior bailiff, a catchpole. Cowel. Blount.

CADE, of herrings is 500, of sprats 1000. Ibid.

CADET, the younger son of a gentleman; now applied to a volunteer in the army, waiting for some post. Ibid.

CAEP GILDUM, the restoring goods or cattle. Blount.

CAGIA, a cage or coop for birds. Cowel. Blount.

CALAMUS, a cane, reed, or quill. Ibid.

CALANGIUM and CALANGIA, a challenge, claim, or dispute. Ibid.

CALCETUM, CALCEA, a causey or common hard way, maintained, and repaired with stones and rubbish, from the Lat. calx, chalk, Fr. chaux, whence their chaussee and our causeway, or path raised with earth, and paved with chalk-stones, or gravel. Calcearium operationes were the work and labour done by the adjoining tenants: and calcagium was the tax or contribution paid by the neighbouring inhabitants towards the making and repairing such common roads; from which some persons were especially exempted by royal charter. Kennet's Glos. Cowel. Blount.

CALEFAGIUM, a word signifying a right to take fuel yearly. Blount.

CALENDAR. By 24 Geo. 2. c. 23. the commencement of the year was regulated, and the calendar corrected, and settled according to the form specified in the book of common prayer.

And 25 Geo. 2. c. 30. enacts, that the opening of commons, and doing other things depending on the movable feasts shall be according to the new calendar.

CALENDAR OF PRISONERS. A list of all the prisoners names, in the custody of each sheriff. Where prisoners are capitally convicted at the assizes, the judge may command execution to be done, without any writ. And the usage now is, for the judge to sign the calendar, which contains all the prisoners names, with their several judgments in the margin, and this calendar is left with the sheriff. As, for a capital felony, it is written opposite to the prisoner's name, "hanged by the neck" Formerly in the days of Latin and abbreviation, "sus. per coll." for "suspendatur per collum." Staundeford, P. C. 182. And this is the only warrant that the sheriff has, for so material an act, as the taking away the life of another. 4 Black. Com. 396,7. But Professor Christian, in a note upon this observation of the learned commentator states, that "though it be true, that a marginal note of a calendar, signed by the judge, is the only warrant that the sheriff has for the execution of a convict, yet it is made with more caution and solemnity than above represented. At the end of the assizes, the clerk of assize makes out in writing, four lists of all the prisoners, with separate columns, containing their crimes, verdicts and sentences, leaving a blank column, in which, if the judge has reason to vary the course of the law, he writes opposite the names of the capital convicts, to be reprieved, respited, transported, &c. these four calendars, being first carefully compared together by the judge and the clerk of assize, are signed by them, and one is given to the sheriff, one to the gaoler, and the judge and the clerk of assize each keep another. If the sheriff receives afterwards no special order from the judge, he executes the judgment of the law in the usual manner, agreeably to the directions of his calendar. In every county, this important subject is settled with great deliberation by the judge and the clerk of assize, before the judge leaves the assize town; but probably in different counties, with some slight variation, as in Lancashire, no calendar is left with the gaoler, but one is sent to the Secretary of State. 4 Black. Ed. 1809. p. 404.

If the judge thinks it proper to reprieve a capital convict, he sends a memorial or certificate to the king's most excellent majesty, directed to the Secretary of State's office, stating that, from favourable circumstances appearing at the trial, he recommends him to his majesty's mercy, and to a pardon upon condition of transportation, or some slight punishment. This recommendation is always attended to. Ibid.

CALENDS, (calendæ) among the Romans was the first day of every month, being spoken of it by itself, or the very day of the new moon, which usually happen together: and if pridie, the day before, be added to it, then it is the last day of the foregoing month; as pridie calend. Septemb. is the last day of August. If any number be placed within it signifies that day in the former month, which comes so much before the month named; as the tenth calends of October is the 20th day of September; for if one reckons backwards, beginning at October, the 20th day of September makes the 10th day before October. In March, May, July, and October, the calends begin at the sixteenth day, but in other months at the fourteenth; which calends must ever bear the name of the month following, and be numbered backwards from the first day of the said following months. Hopton's Concord, p. 69. In the dates of deeds, the day of the month, by nones, ides, or calends, is sufficient. 2 Inst. 675. See Ides.

CALIBURNE, the famous sword of the great king Arthur. Hovedon and Brompton in vita R.

CALLING THE PLAINTIFF. It is usual for a plaintiff, when he or his counsel perceives that he has not given evidence sufficient to maintain his issue, to be voluntarily nonsuited, or withdraw himself: whereupon the crier is ordered to call the plaintiff; and if neither he, nor any one for him, appears, he is nonsuited, the jurors are discharged, the action is at an end, and the defendant shall recover his costs. In fact, neither the plaintiff nor any one for him appears, unless council, or party, insist on the evidence, such as it is, being sent to the jury, which is seldom done, unless council have very good reasons for it. A nonsuit is not (like a verdict) a bar to the plaintiff's bringing another action, when he can get better proof, &c. 3 Black. 376.

CALLIS, the king's highway, mentioned in some of our ancient authors. Cowel. Blount.

CAMERA, from the old Germ. cam. cammer, crooked; whence comes our English kembo, arms in kembo. But camera at first signified any winding or crooked plat of ground; as unam cameram terræ, i. e. a nook of land. Du Fresne. Afterwards the word was applied to any vaulted or arched building; and by degrees more particularly restrained to an upper room or chamber: and it is now often used in the law, in the business of a judge, where persons are to be brought before him apud cameram suam situat. in Serjeant's-Inn, &c. The present Irish use cama for a bed. See Kennet's Gloss.

CAMERA STELLATA. The Star Chamber.

CAMISIA, a garment belonging to priests, called the alb. Cowel. Blount.

CAMOCA, a garment made of silk, or something better. Mon. Angl. Tom. 3. 81.

CAMPANA BAJULA, a small hand-bell, much in use in the ceremonies of the Roman church; and retained among us by sextons, parish clerks and criers. Cowel.

CAMPARTUM, any part of a larger field or ground, which would otherwise be in gross or common. Ibid.

CAMPERTUM, is used for a corn-field. Cowel. Blount.

CAMPFIGHT, the fighting of two champions or combatants in the field. 3 Inst. 221.

CAMPUS MAII, or MARTII, was an assembly of the people every year upon May-day, where they confederated together to defend the country against foreigners and all enemies. Cowel. Blount.

CANCELLI. Lattice work. 2 Black. 308.

CANCELLING DEEDS. A deed may be cancelled and avoided; 1st, by razure, interlining, or other alteration in any material part; unless a memorandum be made thereof at the time of the execution and attestation. 11 Rep. 27. 2dly, by breaking off, or defacing the seal. 5 Rep. 23. 3dly, by delivering it up to be cancelled; that is, to have lines drawn over it in the form of lattice work or cancelli; though the phrase is now used figuratively for any manner of obliteration or defacing of it: 4thly, by the disagreement of such, whose concurrence is necessary in order for the deed to stand; as the husband, where a feme covert is concerned; an infant or person under duress, when those disabilities are removed, and the like; 5thly, by the judgment or decree of a court of judicature. This was anciently the province of the court of Starchamber, and now of the Chancery: as when it appears that the deed was obtained by fraud, force, or other foul practice, or is proved to be an absolute forgery. Tothil Rep. 24, in any of which cases, the deed may be avoided either in part or totally, according as the cause of avoidance is more or less extensive. 2 Black. 308, 309.

CANCELLING OF WILLS. Although a man make a last will and testament irrevocable in the strongest words; yet he is at liberty to revoke it; because his own act or words cannot alter the disposition of law so as to make that irrevocable which is in its own nature revocable: for this, said Lord Bacon, would be for a man to deprive himself of that which of all other things is most incident to human conditions; and that is, alteration or repentance. 8 Rep. 82. Bac. Elem. c. 19. 2 Black. 502.

CANDLEMAS-DAY, the feast of the purification of the blessed Virgin Mary, being the second day of February, instituted in memory and honour of the purification of the said virgin, in the temple of Jerusalem, the fortieth day after her happy child-birth, according to the law of Moses, and the presentation of our blessed Lord. It is called Candlemas, or a mass of candles, because before mass was said that day, the church consecrated and set apart, for sacred use, candles for the whole year, and made a procession with hallowed candles, in remembrance of the divine light, wherewith Christ illuminated the whole church at his presentation in the temple, when by old Simeon stiled, a light to lighten the Gentiles, and to be the glory of his people Israel. St. Luke, cap. 2 ver. 32.

This festival is a dies non, or no day in court, for the judges sit not.

CANES OPERTIÆ, dogs with whole feet, not lawed. Cowel. Blount.

CANESTELLUS, a basket. In the inquisition of serjeancies, and knight's fees, anno 12 & 13 of king John, for Essex and Hertford, it appears that one John of Liston held a manor by the service of making the king's baskets. Ex Libro Rub. Scac: fol. 137.

CANFARA. (See Ordeal.) A trial by hot iron, formerly used in this kingdom. Cowel. Blount.

CANIPULUS. This word hath been taken for a short sword. Cowel. Blount.

CANNA, a rod or distance in the measure of ground. Ibid.

CANON LAW. The canon law is a body of Roman ecclesiastical law, relative to such matters as that church either has, or pretends to have, the proper jurisdiction over. 1 Black. 82.

This is compiled from the opinions of the ancient Latin fathers; the decrees of general councils, and the decretal epistles and bulls of the holy see: all which lay in the same disorder as the Roman civil law; (See title Civil Law.) Till about the year 1151, one Gratian, an Italian monk, animated by the discovery of Justinian's Pandects, reduced the ecclesiastical constitutions into some method in three books; which he entitled Concordia Discordantium Canonum, but which are generally known by the name of Decretum Gratiani, these reached as low as the time of pope Alexander III. The subsequent papal decrees, to the pontificate of Gregory IX. were published in much the same method, under the auspices of that pope, about the year 1230, in five books, entitled Decretalia Gregorii Noni. A sixth book was added by Boniface VIII. about the year 1298, which is called Sextus Decretalium: the Clementine constitutions or decrees of Clement V. were in like manner authenticated in 1317 by his successor John XXII. who also published twenty constitutions of his own, called the Extravagantes Joannis: all which in some measure, answer to the novels of the civil law: to these have been since added some decrees of later popes, in five books, called Extravagantes Communes. And all these together, Gratian's decree, Gregory's decretals, the sixth decretal, the Clementine constitutions, and the extravagants of John and his successors, form the corpus canonici, or body of the Roman canon law. 1 Black. 82.

Besides these pontifical collections, which during the times of popery, were received as authentic in this island, as well as in other parts of Christendom, there is also a kind of national canon law, composed of legatine and provincial constitutions, and adapted only to the exigencies of this church and kingdom. The legatine constitutions were ecclesiastical laws, enacted in national synods, held under the cardinals Otho and Othobon, legates from pope Gregory IX. and pope Clement IV. in the reign of king Henry III. about the years 1220 and 1268. The provincial constitutions are principally the decrees of provincial synods held under divers archbishops of Canterbury from Stephen Langton in the reign of Hen. III. to Henry Chichele, in the reign of Hen. V., and also adopted by the province of York, in the reign of Hen. VI. At the dawn of the reformation, in the reign of king Hen. VIII. it was enacted in parliament, (25 Hen. 8. c. 19. revived and confirmed by 1 Eliz. c. 1.) that a review should be had of the canon law; and, till such review should be made, all canons, constitutions, ordinances, and synodals provincial, being then already made, and not repugnant to the law of the land, or the king's prerogative, should still be used and executed: and as no such review has yet been perfected, upon this statute depends the authority of the canon law of England. 1 Black. 83.

For as to the canons, enacted by the clergy under James I. in the year 1603, and never confirmed in parliament, it has been solemnly adjudged upon the principles of law and the constitution, that where they are not merely declaratory of the ancient canon law; but are introductory of new regulations, they do not bind the laity, not being confirmed by parliament: although the clergy are clearly bound by the canons confirmed by the king only. 1 Black. 83. 2 Str. 1057. 2 Atk. 605. 2 B. Rep. 968.

CANON RELIGIOSORUM, a book wherein the religious of convents had a fair transcript of the rules of their order, which were frequently read among them as their local statutes; and this book was therefore called Regula and Canon. Kennet's Gloss.

CANTEL, (cantellum) a lump, or a piece of any thing, as a cantel of bread, and the like.

CANTRED, (cantredus) a British word from cant, or cantre, which in the British tongue signifies centum, and tref, a town or village, is in Wales an hundred villages: for the Welsh divide their counties into cantreds, as the English do into hundreds. Cowel.

CAPACITY, (capacitas) the capacity or ability in contemplation of law, to give or take lands, or other things, sue or defend actions, or commit treason, felony, or other crimes, is treated of under Infants, Idiots, and other proper heads.

CAPE, (Lat.) is a writ judicial, touching plea of lands or tenements; so termed, as most writs are, of that word in it, which carries the chief intention or end thereof: and this writ is divided into cape magnum, or grand cape, and cape parvum, or petit cape, both of which take hold of things immovable, Blount.

The grand cape, is a writ that lies before appearance to summon the tenant to answer the default, and also over to the demandant: and in the Old. Nat. Brev. it is defined to be, where a man hath brought a præcipe quod reddat of a thing touching plea of land, and the tenant makes default at the day to him given in the original writ, then this writ shall go for the king to take the land into his hands; and if the tenant come not at the day given him thereby, he loseth his land, &c. See Reg. Jud. fol. 1. Bract. lib. 3. tract. 3. c. 1. Blount.

The petit cape, is where the tenant is summoned in a plea of land, and comes on the summons, and his appearance is recorded; if at the day given him he prays the view, and having it granted, makes default; then this writ shall issue for the king, &c. Old Nat. Brev. 162. The difference between the grand cape and petit cape is, that the grand cape is awarded upon the tenant's not appearing or demanding the view in such real actions, where the original writ does not mention the particulars demanded; and the petit cape is after appearance or view granted; and whereas the grand cape summons the tenant to answer for the default, and likewise over to the demandant: petit cape summons the tenant to answer the default only: and therefore it is called petit cape; though some say it hath its name, not because it is of small force, but by reason it consists of few words. Reg. Jud. fol. 2. Fleta, lib. 2. c. 44. Blount.

CAPE AD VALENTIAM. This is a species of cape magnum, and is where I am impleaded of lands, and vouch to warrant another, against whom the summons ad warrantizandum hath been awarded, and he comes not at the day given; then if the demandant recover against me, I shall have this writ against the vouchee, and recover so much in value of the lands of the vouchee, if he hath so much; if not, I shall have execution of such lands and tenements as shall after descend to him in fee; or if he purchases afterwards, I shall have against him a re-summons, &c. And this writ lies before appearance. Old. Nat. Br. 161. Blount.

CAPELLA. Before the word chapel was restrained to an oratory or depending place of divine worship: it was used also for any sort of chest, cabinet, or other repository of precious things, especially of religious reliques. Kennet's Paroch. Antiq. p. 580.

CAPELLUS, a cap, bonnet, or other covering for the head. Blount.

CAPIAS AD RESPONDENDUM, is a writ or process before judgment, to take the defendant and make him answer the plaintiff.

CAPIAS AD SATISFACIENDUM, is a judicial writ which issues after a judgment recovered, or the like. And by this writ the sheriff is commanded to take the body of the defendant in execution, and him safely to keep, so that he have his body in court at the return of the writ, to satisfy the plaintiff his debt and damages. When the body is taken upon a ca. sa. and the writ is returned and filed, it is an absolute and perfect execution against the defendant, and no other execution can be against his lands or goods. But where a person dies in execution, his lands and goods are liable to satisfy the judgment, by statute 21 Jac. 1. c. 24. Rol. Abr. 904. 1 Lit. Abr. 249.

CAPIAS UTLAGATUM, is a writ that lies against a person who is outlawed in any action, by which the sheriff apprehends the party outlawed, for not appearing upon the exigent, and keeps him in safe custody till the day of return, and then presents him to the court, there to be ordered for his contempt.

When a person is taken upon a capias utlagatum, the sheriff is to take an attorney's engagement to appear for him, where special bail is not required; and his bond with sureties to appear, where it is required. Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 18. This writ is either general against the body; or, special, against the body, lands and goods. And the plaintiff, (after an inquisition taken thereupon, and returned into the Exchequer) may have the lands extended, and a grant of the goods, &c. whereby to compel the defendant to appear; which when he doth, if he reverse the outlawry, the same shall be restored to him. Old Nat. Br. 154.

CAPIAS PRO FINE, is where one, who is fined to the king for some offence committed against a statute, does not discharge the fine according to the judgment; whereupon his body is to be taken by this writ, and committed to prison until he pay the fine. 3 Rep. 16.

CAPIAS IN WITHERNAM, a writ lying for cattle in withernam, which is, where a distress taken is driven out of the county, so that the sheriff cannot make deliverance in replevin, when this writ issues to the sheriff to take as many beasts of the distrainer, &c. Reg. Orig. 82, 83. Vide Withernam.

CAPIATUR, (judgment quod) formerly if final judgment was for the plaintiff, it was also considered that the defendant should be either amerced, for his wilful delay of justice in not immediately obeying the king's writ, by rendering the plaintiff his due, (5 Rep. 49.) or be taken up, (capiatur) to pay a fine to the king, in case of any forcible injury. But now by stat. 5 W. & M. c. 12. capias shall not issue for this fine, but plaintiff shall pay 6*s.* 8*d.* and be allowed it against defendant in costs. Therefore in judgments in Common Pleas, they enter that the fine is remitted: in King's Bench they take no notice of any fine or capias. Salk. 54. Carth. 390.

CAPITA, (distribution by) i. e. to every man an equal share of personal estate, when all the claimants claim in their own right, as in equal degree of kindred, and not jure representationis. 2 Black. Com. 517.

CAPITA, (succession by) where the claimants are next in degree to the ancestor, in their own right, and not by right of representation. 2 Black. Com. 217, 218.

CAPITALE, signifies a thing which is stolen or the value of it. Leg. H. 1. cap. 59. Blount.

CAPITALE VIVENS, hath been used for live cattle. Ibid.

CAPITE, tenants in, (from caput, i. e. Rex, unde tenere in capite, est tenere de rege, omnium terrarum capite) an ancient tenure, whereby a man held lands of the king immediately as of the crown, whether by knight's service, or in socage. Kitch. 129. Dyer 44. F. N. B. 5. 2 Black.

But tenure in capite is now abolished; and by stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24. all tenures are turned into free and common socage: so that tenures hereafter to be created by the king are to be in common socage only; and not by capite, knight's service, or the like. Blount.

CAPITILITIUM, a word used to signify what we now call poll-money. Blount.

CAPITITIUM, a covering for the head. Ibid.

CAPITULI AGRI, the head-lands, lands that lie at the head or upper end of the land or furrows. Kennet's Paroch. Antiq. p. 137. Cowel. Blount.

CAPITULA RURALIA, assemblies or chapters held by rural deans and parochial clergy within the precinct of every distinct deanery; which at first were every three weeks, afterwards once a month, and more solemnly once a quarter. Cowel.

CAPTION, (captio) when any commission at law or in equity is executed, the commissioners subscribe their names to a certificate, testifying when and where the commission was executed; and this is called a caption.

Also where a man is arrested, the act of taking him is termed a caption. There is also the caption of an indictment, which is the setting forth of the style of the court before which the jurors made their presentment.

CAPTAIN, (capitaneus) one that leadeth or hath the command of a company of soldiers, or a ship of war. Cowel. Blount.

CAPTIVES, as in the goods of our enemy, so also in his person a man may acquire a sort of qualified property, by taking him a prisoner in war, at least till his ransom is paid. 2 Bluck. 402.

CAPTURE, (captura) signifies the taking of prizes, in time of war, which are to be divided between the captors, according to a particular act which passes at the commencement of every new war.

CAPUTAGIUM, head or poll-money. See Chevage.

CAPUT ANNI, new year's day, upon which of old was observed the festum stultorum. Cowel. Blount.

CAPUT BARONIÆ, is the castle or chief seat of a nobleman; which descends to the eldest daughter, if there be no son, and must not be divided among the daughters like unto lands, &c. Ibid.

CAPUT JEJUNII, in our records is used for Ash-Wednesday, being the head, or first day of the beginning of the Lent-fast. Paroch. Antiq. p. 132. Cowel. Blount.

CAPUT LOCI, the head or upper end of any place; ad caput villæ, at the end of the town. Ibid.

CAPUT LUPINUM, anciently an outlawed felon was said to have caput lupinum, and might be knocked on the head like a wolf. But now the wilful killing of such a one would be murder. 1 Hal. P. C. 497. 4 Black. 320.

CAR and CHAR, the names of places beginning with car and char, signify a city, from the British caer, viz. Civitas, as Carlisle, Caerleon. Cowel. Blount.

CARAVANNA, a caravan, or joint company of travellers in the eastern countries, for mutual conduct and defence. Ibid.

CARCAN, is sometimes expounded for a pillory. Ibid.

CARDS AND DICE. See STAMPS.

CARECTA and CARECTATA, a cart and cartload. Cowel. Blount.

CARETARIUS, or CARECTARIUS, a carter. Ibid.

CARISTIA, dearth, scarcity, dearness. Ibid.

CARITAS, ad caritatem, poculum caritatis, a grace cup; or an extraordinary allowance of wine, or other liquor, wherein the religious at festivals drank in commemoration of their founders and benefactors. Cartular. Abb. t. Glaston. A. S. f. 29. Ibid.

CARK, a quantity of wool, whereof thirty make a sarpler. Stat. 27 H. 6. c. 2. Ibid.

CARNARIUM, a charnel house, or repository for the bones of the dead. Ibid.

CARNO. This word seems to signify an immunity or privilege, as appears in Cromp. Jurisd. fol. 191. Ibid.

CARPEMEALS, cloth made in the northern parts of England, of a coarse kind, mentioned in 7 Jac. 1. cap. 16.

CARR, in some places is a kind of cart with wheels, in others a slide drawn, and sliding on the ground. Ibid.

CARRAT, a weight of four grains in diamonds, &c. And this word it is said was formerly used for any weight or burden. Cowel. Blount.

CARRELS, closets, or apartments for privacy and retirement. Three pews or carrels, where every one of the old monks, after they had dined, did resort, and there study. Davies Mon. of Durham, p. 31.

CARRETA, hath been taken for a carriage, cart, or wain load; as carreta fœni is used in an old charter for a load of hay. Cowel. Blount.

CARRICK, or CARRACK, (carrucha) a ship of great burden, so called of the Italian word carico or carro, which signifies a burden or charge. Cowel. Blount.

CARRIERS. All persons carrying goods for hire, as masters, and owners of ships, lightermen, stage-coachmen, and the like, come under the denomination of common carriers, and are chargeable on the custom of the realm for their faults and miscarriages, and it is said that they are liable in respect of their reward, but the true ground of their liability is the public employment they undertake. Co. Lit. 89. Rol. Abr. 2, 338. Salk. 17. pl. 8. 143. Ld. Raym. 646, 917. 12 Mod. 487.

Also if a person who is no common carrier, takes upon himself to carry another man's goods, though the other promise him no reward, yet if the goods are lost or damaged, by such person's own default, the owner shall have an action against him, for by taking the trust on himself, he is obliged to execute it; but if the goods are misused by another, he is not liable. Salk. 26. pl. 12. 2 Ld. Raym. 907.

But the master of a stage-coach, who only carries passengers for hire, shall not be liable for the goods of his passengers that are lost, and therefore where A. delivered a trunk to the driver or servant, who lost it out of his possession, it was holden that the master was not liable in an action upon the case, on the custom of the realm: for though the servant received money for it, yet it was but a gratuity; and the master shall not be chargeable with the acts of his servant, otherwise than as he acts in execution of the authority given him. Comyns, 25. pl. 16.

But if he carries goods as well as passengers for hire, then he is a common carrier, and shall be liable. 2 Show. Rep. 128. Salk. 282.

And the post-master general doth not come under the denomination of a carrier; for he hath no hire; nor enters into any contract: the post-office is a branch of the public revenue, and a part of the police of the country created by act of parliament: and the salary annexed to the office of post-master, is for no other consideration, than the trouble of executing it: he is therefore not liable for any constructive negligence. 1 Ld. Raym. 646. Carth. 487. 12 Mod. 482. Comp. 754.

Where goods are delivered to a carrier, and he is robbed of them, he shall be charged, and answer for them, because of the hire. 1 Rol. Abr. 338.

For a carrier who undertakes to carry goods, must deliver them safe at all events, except damaged by the act of God, or the king's enemies. 1 Wils. 281. 1 Salk. 18. 1 Vent. 190, 238.

If a common carrier, who is offered his hire, and who has convenience, refuses to carry goods, he is liable to an action in the same manner as an inn-keeper who refuses to entertain a guest, or a smith who refuses to shoe a horse. 2 Show. Rep. 327.

But if the porter of the inn puts up a package into the carriage, and the master as soon as he knows of it, says that he is already full, and refuses to take charge of it, the master shall not be liable. 2 Show. Rep. 128.

And if a common carrier between C. and D. receives goods, to be carried from C. to D. and then forwarded to E., and the carrier takes them safely to D. and there puts them in his warehouse to secure them until he can forward them by another conveyance, in such case, if they are destroyed by an accidental fire before he hath an opportunity of forwarding them, the carrier shall not be liable. 4 Ter. Rep. 581.

And if goods be delivered to a carrier to be carried from C. to D. and after their arrival at D. they are consumed by an accidental fire in the warehouse at D. where they are usually unloaded, but which does not belong to the carrier, in this case the carrier shall be liable, though all the profits of the cartage of the goods from D. to the consignee's house in that town, (charged and received by the carrier) belong to the warehouse-keeper, and not to the carrier; and the circumstance of its being known to the consignee does not vary the case. 5 Ter. Rep. 389.

For a carrier must see all things forthcoming which are delivered to him, let what will happen; the act of God, or an enemy, perils and dangers of the seas excepted; but for fire, thieves, and other casualties, he must answer. Molloy, b. 2. c. 2. s. 2. And the act of God, in this case, means such act, as could not happen by the intervention of man, as lightning and tempests. Inevitable accident happening by any human means, irresistible force, if not occasioned by the king's enemies, will not excuse, for the carrier is in the nature of an insurer: therefore, where a fire, not occasioned by lightning, began at another booth in a fair, than that wherein the goods were placed, and afterwards spread thither, and consumed the goods, the carrier was holden liable, though there was not the least negligence on his part. 1 Ter. Rep. 27.

If a carrier accept generally, he is liable to the value, whatever it may be. 1 Vent. 238. 3 Keb. 133. But he may accept conditionally, as, provided there be no money, or, it doth not exceed a certain amount: or in case of such excess, he may refuse to accept, without an additional premium; and if there be proof that the owner was apprized of his intention, such as by general advertisements or the like, though there be no personal communication, the carrier shall be considered as a special accepter. 1 Str. 145. 4 Burr. 2298. And if the owner of the goods, thus knowing the conditions, conceals the real value, he is guilty of a fraud and imposition, and therefore he shall not only where there has been an express declaration on the part of the carrier, that he will not be answerable beyond a certain amount without notice, not recover to that amount, but he shall not even recover back the money he may have paid for the carriage. 1 Hen. Black. 298.

So where a person delivered to a carrier's book-keeper two bags of money sealed up, to be carried from London to Exeter, and told him that it was 200*l.* and took his receipt for the same, with promise of delivery for 10*s.* per cent. carriage and risque: though it be proved that there was 400*l.* in the bags, if the carrier be robbed, he shall only answer for 200*l.* because there was a particular undertaking for the carriage of that sum and no more, and his reward, which makes him answerable, extends no farther. Carthew's Rep. 486.

A carrier who hath goods delivered to him, undertakes for his hire to deliver them safely, and though he hath the possession of them for no further purpose, yet he hath such a qualified, or special limited property therein, that he may bring trover and conversion against a stranger that takes them away, or he may sue the hundred when robbed of them, because he is answerable even in damages to the absolute owner. Co. Lit. 89. 4 Co. 83. 2 Buls. 311. Sid. 438. Mod. 30. 2 Saund. 47. Yelv. 44. Dyer 98.

So where goods are stolen from a carrier, he may bring an indictment against the felon as for his own goods, and the owner may likewise prefer an indictment against the felon. Kel. 39.

And where a carrier entrusted with goods, opens the pack, and takes away and disposes of part of the goods, this, shewing an intent of stealing them, will make him guilty of felony. H. P. C. 61. And it is the same if the carrier receives goods to carry to a certain place, and carrieth them to some other place, and not to the place agreed, with intent to defraud the owner of them. 3 Inst. 367. So if a carrier, after he hath brought goods to the place appointed, take them away privately, he is guilty of felony; for the possession which he received from the owner being determined, his second taking is in all respects the same as if he were a mere stranger. 1 Hawk. P. C. 90.

By the 3 Car. 1. c. 1. Carriers are not to travel on the Lord's day.

By the stat. 3 W. & M. c. 12. "The justices are to assess the price of land carriage of goods to be brought into any place within their jurisdiction, by any common carrier, who is not to take more, under the penalty of 5*l.*"

And by 21 Geo. 2. c. 28. "A carrier is not to take more, for carrying goods from any place to London, than is settled by the justices for the carrying goods from London to such a place, under the same penalty."

By 24 Geo. 2. c. 8. "commissioners for regulating the navigation of the river Thames are to rate the price of water carriage."

By 30 Geo. 2. c. 22. "justices of the city of London to assess the rates of carrying goods between London and Westminster." And by 7 Geo. 2. c. 15. and 26 Geo. 3. c. 86. "ship-owners are not answerable for any embezzlement or robbery by the master or mariners beyond the value of the ship and freight nor for loss by fire."

CART-BOTE, the Saxon word bote, is of the same signification with the French word estovers, and cart-bote is wood, to be employed in making and repairing instruments of husbandry. 2 Black. Com. 35.

CARUCA, (Fr. charrue) a plough, from the old Gallic carr, which is the present Irish word for any sort of wheeled carriage: hence charl and carl, a ploughman or rustic. Cowel. Blount. Vide Karle.

CARUCAGIUM, was a tribute imposed on every plough, for the public service; and as hidage was a taxation by hides, so carucage was by carucates of land. Mon. Angl. tom. 1. f. 291. Blount.

CARUCATE, or CARVE OF LAND, (carucata terræ) a plough land, anciently taken to be one hundred acres.

CARUCATARIUS, he that held lands in carvage, or plough-tenure. Paroch. Antiq. p. 354.

CASE. See Action.

CASSATUM and CASSATA, by the Saxons, called hide; by Bede, familia, is a house with land sufficient to maintain one family. Cowel. Blount.

CASHLITE, a Saxon word signifying a quiet. Blount.

CASSIDILE, a little sack, purse, or pocket. Ibid.

CASSOCK, or CASSULA, a certain garment belonging to the priest, quasi minor casa. Ibid.

CASTEL, or CASTLE, (castellum.) In the time of Hen. 2. there were in England 1115 castles; and every castle contained a manor: but during the civil wars in this kingdom these castles were demolished, so that generally there is only the ruins or remains of them at this day. 2 Inst. 31.

CASTELLAIN, (castellanus) the lord, owner, or captain of a castle, and sometimes the constable of a fortified house. Bract. lib. 5. tract. 2. cap. 16.

CASTELLARIUM, CASTELLARII, the precinct or jurisdiction of a castle. Mon. Angl. tom. 2. f. 402.

CASTELLORUM OPERATIO, castle-work, or service and labour done by inferior tenants, for the building and upholding of castles of defence; towards which some gave their personal assistance, and others paid their contribution. Cowel. Blount.

CASTIGATORY for scolds. A woman indicted for being a common scold, if convicted, shall be sentenced to be placed on a certain engine of correction, called the trebucket, castigatory, or cucking stool, which in the Saxon language signifies the scolding stool; though now it is frequently corrupted into ducking stool, because the residue of the judgment is, that, when she is so placed therein, she shall be plunged in the water for her punishment. 3 Inst. 219. 4 Black. Com. 169.

CASTLE-WARD, (castlegardum, vel wardum castri) an imposition laid upon such persons as dwell within a certain compass of any castle, towards the maintenance of such as watch and ward the castle. Magna charta, cap. 19, 20. 32 Hen. 8. cap. 48. It is sometimes used for the circuit itself, which is inhabited by those that are subject to this service. Castle guard rents were paid by persons dwelling within the liberty of any castle, for the maintaining of watch and ward within the same. Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 24. sect. 2.

CASTER, and CHESTER: the names of places ending in these words are derived from the Lat. castrum; for this termination at the end was given by the Romans to those places where they built castles. Cowel. Blount.

CASTRATION, the offence of mayhem by castration, is, according to all our old writers, felony; and this, although the mayhem was committed upon the highest provocation. Bract. fol. 144. 3 Inst. 62. 4 Black. Com. 206.

CASUAL EJECTOR, in ejectment a nominal defendant, and who continues such until appearance by or for the tenant in possession. 3 Black. Com. 202.

CASU CONSIMILI, writ in. Is a writ of entry granted where tenant by the curtesy, or tenant for life, aliens in fee or in tail, or for another's life; and is brought by him in reversion against the party to whom such tenant so aliens to his prejudice, and in the tenant's life time. It takes its name from this; that the clerks of the chancery did, by their common assent, frame it to the likeness of the writ called in casu proviso, according to the authority given them by the stat. Westm. 2. cap. 24. which statute, as often as there happens a new case in Chancery, something like a former, yet not specially fitted by any writ, authorises them to frame a new form answerable to the new case, and as like the former as they may. 7 Rep. 4. See Fitz. Nat. Br. fo. 206. Blount.

CASU PROVISO, writ of entry in. A writ of entry given by the statute of Gloucester, cap. 7. where a tenant in dower aliens in fee, or for life, &c. and lies for him in reversion against the alienee. Fitz. N. B. 205. This writ, and the writ of casu consimili, supposes the tenant to have aliened in fee, though it be for life only; and a casu proviso may be without making any title in it, where a lease is made by the demandant himself to the tenant that doth alien; but if an ancestor lease for life, and the tenant alien in fee, &c. the heir in reversion must have this writ with the title included therein. F. N. B. 206, 207.

CASUS OMISSUS: an expression signifying that some particular thing is omitted, or otherwise not provided against by statute.

CATALS, catalla, the same as goods and chattels.

CATALLIS CAPTIS NOMINE DISTRICTIONIS, was a writ, now obsolete, that anciently lay where a house is within a borough, for rent going out of the same; and warrants the taking of doors, windows, &c. by way of distress for the rent. Old. Nat. Br. 66.

CATALLIS REDDENDIS, an ancient writ, now disused, which lay where goods being delivered to any man to keep till a certain day, were not upon demand delivered at the day. It may be also called a writ of detinue: and is answerable to actio depositi in the civil law. See Reg. Orig. 139. and Old. Nat. Br. 63. Blount.

CATAPULTA, a warlike engine to shoot darts: but it is rather taken for a cross-bow. Cowel. Blount.

CATASCOPUS. This word signifies an archdeacon. Du Cange. Blount.

CATCHING BARGAIN, is an hazardous bargain, made with a young heir, to have double and treble the sum lent, or some other unreasonable advantage after the death of the father or tenant for life, or some other contingency. In these catching bargains, courts of equity will sometimes interfere, and set them aside, if there are strong circumstances of fraud; and where they do interfere they will oblige the plaintiff to do equity to the defendant, by paying what was really lent. 1 Fonbl. 140. 1 Atk 301. 352. 2 Ves. 125. 1 Bro. Cha. Ca. 149.

CATCHLAND. In Norfolk there were formerly some grounds not known to what parish they certainly belonged, so that the minister who first seized the tithes did, by that right of pre-occupation enjoy them for that year: and the land of this dubious nature was there called catchland, from this custom of seizing the tithes. Cowel.

CATCHPOLE, (quasi, one that catches by the poll,) now taken as a term of contempt. Sheriffs officers are now commonly so called, though in ancient times it was used without reproach. Cowel Blount.

CATHEDRAL (ecclesia cathedralis), is the church of the bishop, and head of the diocese, wherein the service of the church is performed with great ceremony.

CATHEDRATIC (cathedraticum), is a sum of two shillings paid to the bishop by the inferior clergy, in argumentum subjectionis et ob honorem cathedræ. Hist. procurat. et Synodals, p. 82. Cowel. Blount.

CATZURUS, a hunting-horse. Ibid.

CAUDA TERRÆ, a land's end or the bottom of a ridge in arable land. Cartul. Abbot. Glast. fol. 117.

CAVEAT, is a kind of process in the spiritual court to stop the institution of a clerk to a benefice, or probate of a will, or the like. When a caveat is entered against an institution, if the bishop afterward institutes a clerk it is void; the caveat being a supersedeas: but a caveat has been adjudged void when entered in the lifetime of the incumbent. A caveat entered against a will stands in force for three months; and this is for the caution of the ordinary, that he do no wrong; though it is said the temporal courts do not regard these sort of caveats. 1 Rol. Rep. 191. 1 Nels. Abr. 416, 417. 3 Black. Com. 98. 246.

CAVERS, offenders, relating to the mines in Derbyshire, who are punishable in the berghmote, or miners court. Cowel. Blount.

CAULCEIS, anno 6 Hen. 6. cap. 5. Ways pitched with flint, or other stone. See Calcetum. Cowel. Blount.

CAURCINES, (Caurcini) were Italians that came into England about the year 1235, terming themselves the 'pope's merchants,' driving no other trade than letting out money; and having great banks in England, they differed little from Jews, save that they were rather more merciless to their debtors. Some will have them called Caursines, quasi, causa ursini, bearish and cruel in their causes; others coursini, or cansini, as coming from the isle of Corsica: but Cowel says they have their name from Cursium, Cursi, a town in Lombardy, where they first practised their arts of usury and extortion; from whence spreading themselves, they carried their accursed trade through most parts of Europe, and were a common plague to every nation where they came. The then bishop of London excommunicated them; and king Hen. 3. banished them from this kingdom in the year 1240. But being the pope's solicitors and money-changers, they were permitted to return in the year 1250; though in a very short time after they were driven out of the kingdom again for their intolerable exactions. Mat. Par. 403. Cowel. Blount.

CAUSA MATRIMONII PRÆLOCUTI, a writ now in disuse, which anciently lay where a woman gave land to a man in fee-simple, &c. to the intent he should marry her, and he refused to do it in any reasonable time, being thereunto required. Reg. Orig. 66.

CAUSAM NOBIS SIGNIFICES, a writ directed to a mayor of a town, &c. who was by the king's writ commanded to give seisin of lands to the king's grantee, on his delaying to do it, requiring him to show cause why he so delays the performance of his duty. Blount.

CAUSEA, the same with calcea, calceta, which we call a causeway. Ibid.

CAUSES AND EFFECTS, (cessante causâ cessat effectus, i. e. when the cause ceaseth, the effect also ceaseth. Noy's Max. 4.) In most cases the law hath respect to the cause, or beginning of a thing, as the principal part on which all other things are founded: and herein the next, and not the remote, cause, is most looked upon, except it be in covinous and criminal things; and therefore that which is not good at first will not be so afterwards; for such as is the cause, such is the effect. Plowd. 208. 268. Thus if an infant or feme covert make a will, and publish it, and after die of full age, or sole, the will is of no force, by reason of the original cause of infancy and coverture. Finch 12.

So if husband and wife be legally separated, or if the wife carry on a sole trade, as by the custom of London, and many places, she may, the husband is no longer liable to her debts, according to this maxim. 2 Black. Rep. 1179. 1 Ter. Rep. 5. Cooke's Bankr. Laws 36.

Also, if lessee commit waste, no action will lie, if the thing wasted be repaired before the commencement of the action, because the cause of the action has ceased. Co. Lit. 204.

CAUTION. In the spiritual court caution (a species of bail, 1 Com. dig. Ba. (D) shall be given, and it is juratory, when a man makes oath in small offences; stare mandatis ecclesiæ: fide jussory, when he gives an obligation with sureties to do so; and pignoratitia, when he gives pledges for the same intent; but an obligation can only be taken upon a writ de cautione admittenda. 1 Lev. 56.

CAUTIONE ADMITTENDA, is a writ that lies against a bishop, who holds an excommunicated person in prison for contempt, notwithstanding he offers sufficient caution or security to obey the orders and commandments of holy church for the future. Reg. Orig. 66 See BAIL.

CEAPGILDE, a word derived from the Sax. ceap, signifying pecus, cattle, and gild, i.e. solutio; and hence it is solutio pecudis: from this Saxon word gild it is very probable we have our English word yield; as yield, or pay. Cowel. Blount.

CELER LECTI, is the top, head, or tester of a bed. Ibid.

CELLERARIUS, the butler in a monastery: in the universities they are sometimes called manciple, and sometimes caterer, and steward. Ibid.

CENDULÆ, small pieces of wood laid in form of tiles, to cover the roof of a house. Ibid.

CENEGILD. This was an expiatory mulct, paid by one who had killed another, to the kindred of the deceased. Spelm. Cowel. Blount.

CENELLÆ, acorns, from the oak, in our old writings, pessona cenellarum, is put for the pannage of hogs, or running of swine, to feed on acorns. Cowel.

CENNINGA, was notice given by the buyer to the seller, that the thing sold was claimed by another, that he might appear and justify the sale. Cowel. Blount.

CENSARIA, a farm, or house and land, let ad censum at a standing rent: it comes from the Fr. cense, which signifies a farm, and hence censarii, farmers. Ibid.

CENSUALES, a species or class of the oblati, or voluntary slaves of churches or monasteries, i. e. those who to procure the protection of the church bound themselves to pay an annual tax or quit-rent out of their estates to a church or monastery. Besides this, they sometimes engaged to perform certain services. Roberts. Hist. Emp. Cha. Vth. 1 V. 271, 2. Potgiesserus de Statu Servorum, lib. 1. cap. 1. sect. 6, 7. Cowel. Blount.

CENSUMOTHIDUS, a dead rent, like that which we call mortmain. Blount.

CENSURE, a custom called by this name (from the Lat. census, which has been expounded to be a kind of personal money, paid for every poll) observed in divers manors in Cornwall and Devon, where all persons residing therein above the age of sixteen are cited to swear fealty to the lord, and to pay 11 pence per poll, and one penny per annum ever after; and these thus sworn are called censers. Survey of the Duchy of Cornwall. Cowel. Blount.

CENTENARII, were petty judges, under sheriffs of counties, that had rule of an hundred, and judged smaller matters among them. 1 Vent. 211. 1 Black. 116.

These inferior judges, called centenarii, were required to take an oath that they would neither commit any robbery themselves, nor protect such as were guilty of that crime. 1 Black. Com. 115.

CEOLA, a large ship. Cowel. Blount.

CEPI CORPUS, is a return made by the sheriff, upon a capias, or other process to the like purpose, that he hath taken the body of the party. F. N. B. 26.

CEPPAGIUM, the stumps or roots of trees which remain in the ground after the trees are felled, &c. Fleta, lib. 2. cap. 41. Cowel. Blount.

CERAGIUM, cerage, a payment to find candles in the church. Cowel. Blount.

CERTAINTY, is a plain, clear, and distinct setting down of things in writs, declarations, pleadings, and the like, so that they may be understood. 5 Rep. 121.

CERTIFICANDO DE RECOGNITIONE STAPULÆ, an ancient writ whereby the mayor of the staple was commanded to certify to the lord chancellor a statute staple taken before him, where the party himself detained it, and refused to bring in the same. Reg. Orig. 152.

CERTIFICATE, is a writing made in any court to give notice to another court of any thing done therein, which is usually by way of transcript, &c. And sometimes it is made by an officer of the same court, where matters are referred to him, or a rule of court is obtained for it, containing the tenor and effect of what is done. Cowel. Blount. Morgan.

CERTIFICATION OF ASSISE OF NOVEL DISSEISIN, (certificatio assisæ novæ disseisinæ, &c.) was an ancient writ (now obsolete) granted for the re-examining of a matter passed by assise before justices, directed to the sheriff to call both the party for whom the assise passed, and the jury that was impanelled on the same, before the said justices at a certain day and place, at which the same was to be examined: and it was called a certificate, because therein mention was made to the sheriff, that upon the party's complaint of the defective examination, as to the assise passed, the king had directed his letters patent to the justices for the better certifying of themselves, whether all points of the said assise were duly examined. Reg. Orig. 200. F. N. B. 181. Bract. lib. 4. c. 13. Horne's Mirr. lib. 3.

CERTIORARI. A certiorari is an original writ issuing out of the Chancery, or court of King's Bench, directed in the king's name to the judges or officers of inferior courts, commanding them to return the records of a cause or matter depending before them, to the end the party may have the more sure and speedy justice before him, or such other justices as he shall assign to determine the cause. Fitz. N. B. 245. A.

The other courts at Westminster may also issue a certiorari to remove proceedings of a civil nature, 2 Ld. Raym. 836. 1 Salk. 148. 1 Hen. Black. Rep. 552.

The court of King's Bench hath a superintendency over all courts of an inferior criminal jurisdiction, and may by the plenitude of its power award a certiorari to have any indictment removed and brought before itself; and when such certiorari is allowable, it ought of right to award it at the instance of the king, because every indictment is at the suit of the king, and he hath a prerogative of suing in what court he pleases. 2 Hawk. P. C. 27. § 27.

But there is a distinction between those cases, in which the crown is specially concerned, and prosecutes by the attorney-general; and those which are nominally at the suit of the crown; but in reality are prosecuted by a private person; in the former the crown hath a right to demand a certiorari, and the court are bound to grant it: in the latter it issues indeed of course; but upon good cause a procedendo may be awarded. 4 Bur. 2458.

But though the court is to grant it at the suit of the king, yet it hath a discretionary power in granting or refusing it at the suit of the defendant. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. sec. 27.

This writ of certiorari is also not only used for the purpose of removing legal, but likewise equitable proceedings; for when an equitable right is sued for in an inferior court of equity, and by reason of the limited jurisdiction of the court the defendant cannot have complete justice, or the cause is without the jurisdiction of the inferior court, the defendant may file a bill in Chancery, praying this writ to remove the cause into the court of Chancery; and when the bill is filed he must enter into a bond with one surety, in the penalty of £.100 to the master of the Rolls, and the senior master in Chancery, to prove the suggestion of the bill within fourteen days: and in default of proof a procedendo may be applied for of course: but the plaintiff below, it seems, is not at liberty to make this application. 2 Cha. Rep. 109. Pr. Reg. 41. Cas. Rep. 48. 1 Vern. 178. Eq. Abr. 80. Harrison's Cha. Pr. 119.

This writ of certiorari may be issued by the courts of Chancery and King's Bench, to remove the proceedings from any inferior courts, whether they be of ancient or newly created jurisdiction, unless the statute or charter, which creates them exempts them from such jurisdiction. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. sec. 22.

Therefore the King's Bench may award such certiorari to justices in eyre, or gaol delivery, or of a county palatine, and to the college of physicians having a special power by statute to impose fines, and to justices of the peace, commissioners of sewers, the courts of the Cinque Ports, the courts of the grand sessions, and other courts in Wales, and also to a sheriff to return inquisitions taken under a private act. 1 Bac. Abr. tit. Cer. B.

In vacation time a certiorari to remove an indictment from the quarter sessions may be granted by any of the judges of B. R. but security is to be found before it is allowed, otherwise it is no supersedeas. Mod. Ca. 35. For by stat. 5 and 6 W. & Mar. cap. 11, no certiorari "is to be granted out of B. R. to "remove any indictment before justices of "peace at the sessions before trial, unless "motion be made in open court, and the "party indicted find security by two persons in 20*l.* each, to plead to the indictment in B. R. &c. And if the defendant "prosecuting the certiorari be convicted, "the court of B. R. shall order costs to the "prosecutor of the indictment."

CERT-MONEY, (quasi certain money) is head-money, paid yearly by the resiants of several manors to the lords thereof, for the certain keeping of the leet; and sometimes to the hundred: as the manor of Hook in Dorsetshire, pays cert-money to the hundred of Egerdon. In ancient records this is called certum letæ. Cowel. Blount.

CERVISARII. The Saxons had a duty called drinclean, that is, retributio potus, payable by their tenants; and such tenants were in Domesday called cervisarii, from cervisia, ale, their chief drink: though cervisarius vulgarly signifies a beer or ale brewer. Ibid.

CERURA, a mound, fence or inclosure. Ibid.

CESSAT EXECUTIO. In trespass against two persons, if it be tried and found against one, and the plaintiff takes his execution against him, the writ will abate as to the other; for there ought to be a cessat executio till it is tried against the other defendant. 10 Ed. 4. 11.

CESSAVIT. The writ of cessavit was a writ now in disuse which anciently lay, by the statutes of Gloucester, 6 Ed. 1. c. 4. and of Westminster 2, 13 Ed. 1. c. 21 and 41, when a man holding lands of a lord by a rent or other services, neglected or ceased to perform his services for two years together; or where a religious house held lands given it on condition of performing some certain spiritual service, as reading prayers, or giving alms, and neglected it, in neither of which cases if the cesser or neglect had continued for two years, the lord or donor and his heirs should have a writ of cessavit to recover the land itself; eo quod tenens in faciendis servitiis per biennium jam cessavit. Fitz. N. B. 208.

But by the statute of Gloucester the cessavit does not lie for lands let upon fee-farm rents, unless they have laid fresh and uncultivated for two years, and there be not sufficient distress upon the premises, or unless the tenant hath so inclosed the land, that the lord cannot come upon it to distrain. Fitz. N. B. 209. 2 Inst. 298.

But the same statute of Gloucester has provided further that upon tender of arrears and damages before judgment, and giving security for the future performance of the services, the process shall be at an end, and the tenant shall relieve him; and to this the stat. West. 2 conforms. Finch 270, 271.

CESSAVIT DE CANTARIA, was an ancient writ which laid where a man gave land to any house of religion, or parson, to say divine service, provide alms for the poor, &c. If the said services were not done in two years the donor or his heirs had this writ against him that held the land thus given, after such cessure. Stat. West. 2. cap. 41. Cowel. Blount.

CESSE, signifies an assessment or tax. Ib.

CESSION, (cessio) a ceasing, yielding up, or giving over: and is when an ecclesiastical person is created bishop, or a parson of a parsonage takes another benefice, without dispensation, or otherwise not qualified, &c. In both cases their first benefices are become void and are in the law said to be void by cession, without any resignation or deprivation; and to those benefices that the person had who was created bishop, the king shall present for that time, whoever is patron of them; and in the other case the patron may present. Cowel. Blount. 1 Black. 392.

CESSOR, (Lat.) a loiterer, but more particularly used for him who ceaseth, or neglects so long to perform a duty, that he thereby incurs the danger of the law. Old Nat. Brev. 136.

CESSURE, or cesser, is used for ceasing, giving over, or departing from. Stat. W. 2. c. 1.

CESTUI QUE TRUST, is he to whose use or benefit another man is enfeoffed or seised of lands or tenements. 1 Rep. 133.

CESTUI QUE USE, (Fr. cestui à l' use de qui) which signifies him to whose use any other man is enfeoffed of lands or tenements. 1 Rep. 133.

CESTUI QUE VIE, is he for whose life any lands or tenements are granted. Perk. 97.

CHACEA, is a station of game more extended than a park, and less than a forest, and is sometimes taken for the liberty of chasing or hunting within such a district. And according to Blount it hath another signification, i. e. the way through which cattle are drove to pasture, commonly called in some places a droveway. Bracton, lib. 4. c. 44. Cowel. Blount.

CHACEARE ad lepores, vel vulpes, to hunt hare or fox. Ibid.

CHACURUS, (from the Fr. chasseur) a horse for the chase, or rather a hound or dog, a courser. Ibid.

CHAFE, from the Fr. chauffer, to heat, whence our chafing-dish. Ibid.

CHAFEWAX, an officer in chancery, who fits the wax for sealing of the writs, and such other instruments as are there made to be issued out. Ibid.

CHAFFERS, seem to signify wares or merchandise; and we yet use chaffering for buying and selling, though we take it to be generally a kind of bartering of one thing for another. It is mentioned in stat. 3 Ed. 4. c. 4. Ibid.

CHAINS, (hanging in). By 25 Geo. 2. c. 37, the judge before whom a murderer is convicted shall, in passing sentence, direct him to be executed on the next day but one, (unless the same shall be Sunday, and then on the Monday following,) and that his body be delivered to the surgeons, to be dissected and anatomized; and that the judge may direct his body to be afterwards hung in chains, but in no wise to be buried without dissection. But a power is allowed to the judge, upon good and sufficient cause, to respite the execution, and relax the other restraints of this act. 4 Black. Com. 202.

CHALDRON, or CHALDER of coals, contains thirty-six bushels heaped up, according to the bushel sealed for that purpose at Guildhall, London. 16 et 17 Car. 2. c. 2.

CHALLENGE, Calumnia (from the Fr. chalenger) is used in the law for an exception to jurors, who are returned to pass on a trial; and this challenge to jurors is either made 1st. to the array, or 2d. to the poll. Cowel. Blount. 3 Black. 359.

CHALLENGES TO THE ARRAY, are at once an exception to the whole panel, in which the jury are arrayed, or set in order, by the sheriff in his return; and they may be made upon account of partiality, or some default in the sheriff, or his under-officer who arrayed the panel. And, generally speaking, the same reasons that before the awarding the venire were sufficient to have directed it to the coroners or elisors, will be also sufficient to quash the array, when made by a person or officer of whose partiality there is any tolerable ground of suspicion. Also, though there be no personal objection against the sheriff, yet if he arrays the panel at the nomination, or under the direction of either party, this is good cause of challenge to the array. Formerly, if a lord of parliament had a cause to be tried, and no knight was returned upon the jury, it was a cause of challenge to the array: but an unexpected use having been made of this dormant privilege by a spiritual lord, (K. v. bishop of Worcester, M. 23 Geo. 2.

B. R. though his title to such privilege was very doubtful) 2 Whitelocke of Parl. 211, it was abolished by statute 24 Geo. 2, c. 18. Also, by the policy of the ancient law, the jury was to come de vicineto, from the neighbourhood of the vill or place where the cause of action was laid in the declaration; and therefore some of the jury were obliged to be returned from the hundred in which such vill lay; and if none were returned, the array might be challenged for defect of hundredors. Thus the Gothic jury, or nembda, was also collected out of every quarter of the country; "binos, trinos, vel etiam senos, "ex singulis territorii quadrantibus." Stiernhook de jure Goth. lib. 1. c. 4. For, living in the neighbourhood they were properly the very country, or pais, to which both parties had appealed; and were supposed to know beforehand the characters of the parties and witnesses, and therefore the better knew what credit to give to the facts alleged in evidence. But this convenience was overbalanced by another very natural and almost unavoidable inconvenience; that jurors coming out of the immediate neighbourhood would be apt to intermix their prejudices and partialities in the trial of right. And this our law was so sensible of, that it for a long time has been gradually relinquishing this practice; the number of necessary hundredors in the whole pannel, which in the reign of Ed. 3d. were constantly six. Gilb. Hist. C. c. 8, being in the time of Fortescue, De Laud. L. L. 125, reduced to four. Afterwards, indeed, the stat. 35 Hen. 8. c. 6, restored the ancient number of six, but that clause was soon virtually repealed by stat. 27 Eliz. c. 6, which required only two. And sir Ed. Coke also, 1 Inst. 157, gives us such a variety of circumstances whereby the courts permitted this necessary number to be evaded, that it appears they were heartily tired of it. At length by stat. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16, it was entirely abolished upon all civil actions, except upon penal statutes, and upon those also by the 24 Geo. 2. c. 18, the jury being now only to come de corpore comitatus, from the body of the county at large, and not de vicineto, or from the particular neighbourhood. The array by the ancient law may also be challenged, if an alien be party to the suit, and, upon a rule obtained by his motion to the court for the jury de medietate linguæ, such a one be not returned by the sheriff, pursuant to the stat. 28 Ed. 3, c. 18, which enacts, that where either party is an alien born, the jury shall be one half aliens, and the other denizens, if required, for the more impartial trial: a privilege indulged to strangers in no other country in the world, but which is as ancient with us as the time of king Ethelred, in whose stat. de monticolis Walliæ (then aliens to the crown of England), cap. 3, it is ordained that "duodeni legales homines, quorum sex Walli "et sex Angli erunt, Anglis et Wallis jus "dicunto." But where both parties are aliens, no partiality is to be presumed to one more than another; and therefore by the statute 21 Hen. 6. c. 4, the whole jury are then directed to be denizens. And it may be questioned whether the statute 3 Geo. 2. c. 25, (before referred to) hath not in civil causes undesignedly abridged this privilege of foreigners, by the positive directions therein given concerning the manner of impanelling jurors, and the persons to be returned in such panel. So that the court might probably hesitate, especially in the case of special juries, how far it has now a power to direct a panel to be returned de medietate linguæ, and to alter the method prescribed for striking a special jury, or ballotting for common jurymen. 3 Black. 359. 361.

CHALLENGES TO THE POLLS, in capita, are exceptions to particular jurors, and seem to answer the recusatio judicis in the civil and canon laws, by the constitutions of which a judge might be refused upon any suspicion of partiality, Cod. 3, 1. 16. Decretal. l. 2. t. 28. c. 36. By the laws of England also, in the time of Bracton, l. 5. . 15. and Fleta, l. 6. c. 37. a judge might be refused for good cause; but now the law is otherwise, and it is held that judges or justices cannot be challenged, Co. Lit. 294. For the law will not suppose a possibility of bias or favour in a judge, who is already sworn to administer impartial justice, and whose authority greatly depends upon that presumption and idea. And should the fact at any time prove flagrantly such, as the delicacy of the law will not presume beforehand, there is no doubt but that such misbehaviour would draw down a heavy censure from those to whom the judge is accountable for his conduct. 3 Black. 361.

But challenges to the polls of the jury (who are judges of fact) are reduced to four heads by sir Ed. Coke 1 Inst. 156. propter honoris respectum; propter defectum; propter affectum; and propter delictum. Ibid.

1. Propter honoris respectum: as if a lord of parliament be impanelled on a jury, he may be challenged by either party, or he may challenge himself. Ibid.

2. Propter defectum: as, if a juryman be an alien born, this is defect of birth; if he be a slave or bondman, this is defect of liberty, and he cannot be liber et legalis homo. Under the word homo also, though a name common to both sexes, the female is however excluded, propter defectum sexus; except when a widow feigns herself with child in order to exclude the next heir, and a supposititious birth is suspected to be intended; then upon the writ de ventre inspiciendo, a jury of women is to be impanelled to try the question, whether with child, or not Cro. Eliz. 566. But the principal deficiency is defect of estate, sufficient to qualify him to be a juror. This depends upon a variety of statutes. And first, by the stat. Westm. 2, 13 Ed. 1, c. 38, none shall pass on juries in assises within the county but such as may dispend 20*s.* by the year at the least, which is increased to 40*s.* by the stat. 21 Ed. 1, st. 1, and 2 Hen. 5, st. 2, c. 3. This was doubled by the stat. 27 Eliz. c. 6, which requires in every such case the jurors to have estate of freehold to the yearly value of 4*l.* at least. But the value of money at that time decreasing very considerably, this qualification was raised by the statute 16 & 17 Car. 2, c. 3, to 20*l. per ann.* which being only a temporary act, for three years, was suffered to expire without renewal, to the great debasement of juries. However, by the stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 24, it was again raised to 10*l. per ann.* in England, and 6*l.* in Wales, of freehold lands or copyhold; which is the first time that copyholders, as such, were admitted to serve upon juries in any of the king's courts, though they had before been admitted to serve in some of the sheriff's courts, by statutes 1 Ric. 3, c. 4, and 9 Hen. 8, c. 13. And, lastly, by stat. 3 Geo. 2, c. 25, any leaseholder for the term of five hundred years absolute, or for any term determinable upon a life or lives, of the clear yearly value of 20*l. per ann.* over and above the rent reserved, is qualified to serve upon juries. When the jury is de medietate linguæ, that is, one moiety of the English tongue or nation, and the other of any foreign one, no want of lands shall be cause of challenge to the alien; for as he is incapable to hold any, this would totally defeat the privilege. 3 Black. 362, 363.

3. Jurors may be challenged propter affectum, for suspicion of bias or partiality. This may be either a principal challenge, or to the favour. A principal challenge is such where the cause assigned carries with it prima facie evident marks of suspicion, either of malice or of favour; as, that a juror is of kin to either party within the ninth degree, Finch L. 401, that he has been arbitrator on either side; that he has an interest in the cause; that there is an action depending between him and the party; that he has taken money for his verdict; that he has formerly been a juror in the same cause; that he is the party's master, servant, counsellor, steward, or attorney, or of the same society or corporation with him: all these are principal cause of challenge; which, if true, cannot be over-ruled, for jurors must be omni exceptione majores. Challenges to the favour are where the party hath no principal challenge, but objects only some probable circumstances of suspicion, as acquaintance, and the like, the validity of which must be left to the determination of triors, whose office it is to decide whether the juror be favourable or unfavourable. The triors, in case the first man called be challenged, are two indifferent persons named by the court; and if they try one man and find him indifferent, he shall be sworn; and then he and the two triers shall try the next, and when another is found indifferent, and sworn, the two triers shall be superseded, and the two first sworn on the jury shall try the rest. Co. Lit. 158. 3 Black. 363.

4. Challenges propter delictum are for some crime or misdemeanor that affects the juror's credit, and renders him infamous. As for a conviction of treason, felony, perjury, or conspiracy; or if he hath received judgment of the pillory, tumbrel, or the like; or to be branded, whipped, or stigmatized; or if he be outlawed, or excommunicated, or hath been attainted of false verdict, præmunire, or forgery; or lastly, if he hath proved recreant when champion in the trial by battle, and thereby hath lost his liberem legem. A juror may himself be examined on oath of voir dire, veritatem dicere, with regard to the three former of these causes of challenge, which are not to his disbonour; but not with regard to this head of challenge, propter delictum, which would be to make him either forswear or accuse himself if guilty. 3 Bl. 364.

Besides these challenges, which are exceptions against the fitness of jurors, and whereby they may be excluded from serving, there are also other causes to be made use of by the jurors themselves, which are matter of exemption; whereby their service is excused, and not excluded. As by statute Westm. 2. 13 Ed. 1. c. 38, sick and decrepid persons, persons not commorant in the county, and men above seventy years old; and, by the stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 32, infants under twenty-one. This exemption is also extended by divers statutes, customs, and charters, to physicians, and other medical persons, counsel, attorneys, officers of the courts, and the like; all of whom, if impanelled, must show their special exemption. Clergymen are also usually excused, out of favour and respect to their function: but if they are seised of lands and tenements they are in strictness liable to be impanelled in respect of their lay-fees, unless they be in the service of the king, or of some bishop: "in obsequio domini regis, vel alicujus episcopi." F. N. B. 166. Reg. Brev. 179. 3 Black. 364.

CHAMBERDEKINS, or CHAMBERDEACONS, were certain poor Irish scholars, clothed in mean habit, and living under no rule: banished England by stat. 1 Hen. 5. cap. 7, 8. Cowel. Blount.

CHAMBERLAIN, (camerarius) is variously used in our laws, statutes and chronicles: as first, there is lord great chamberlain of England, to whose office belongs the government of the palace at Westminster, and upon all solemn occasions the keys of Westminster-Hall, and the court of Requests are delivered to him; he disposes of the sword of state to be carried before the king when he comes to the parliament, and goes on the right hand of the sword next to the king's person: he has the care of providing all things in the House of Lords in the time of parliament; to him belongs livery and lodgings in the king's court, &c. And the gentleman usher of the black rod, yeoman usher, &c. are under his authority. Cowel. Blount.

The lord chamberlain of the household has the oversight and government of all officers belonging to the king's chamber, (except the bed-chamber, which is under the groom of the stole), and also of the wardrobe; of artificers retained in the king's service, messengers, comedians, revels, musick, &c. The serjeants at arms are likewise under his inspection; and the king's chaplains, physicians, apothecaries, surgeons, barbers, &c. And he hath under him a vice-chamberlain, both being always privy counsellors. Ibid.

There were formerly chamberlains of the king's courts. 7 Ed. 6. cap. 1. And there are chamberlains of the exchequer, who keep a controlment of the pells of receipts and exitus, and have in their custody the leagues and treaties with foreign princes, many ancient records, the two famous books of antiquity called Domesday, and the Black Book of the Exchequer; and the standards of money, and weights and measures are kept by them. There are also under-chamberlains of the exchequer, who make searches for all records in the treasury; and are concerned in making out the tallies, &c. The office of chamberlain of the exchequer is mentioned in the stat. 34 & 35 H. 8. cap. 16. Besides these, we read of a chamberlain of North Wales. Stow. p. 641.

A chamberlain of Chester, to whom it belongs to receive the rents and revenues of that city; and when there is no prince of Wales, and earl of Chester, he hath the receiving and returning of all writs coming thither out of any of the king's courts. Cowel. Blount.

The chamberlain of London, who is commonly the receiver of the city rents payable into the chamber; and hath great authority in making and determining rights of freemen, concerning apprentices, orphans, &c. Cromp. Jur.

CHAMBERS OF THE KING, (regiæ cameræ) the havens or ports of the kingdom are so called in our ancient records. Mare Claus. fol. 242. Cowel. Blount.

CHAMBRE DEPINCT, anciently St. Edward's chamber, now called the painted chamber. Ibid.

CHAMPARTY, or CHAMPERTY, compi partitio, (from the Fr. champ, a field, and parti divided, or the Lat. campus, and partitio, because the parties in champerty, agree to divide the thing in question) this is a species of maintenance, and signifies a bargain with the plaintiff or defendant in any suit, to have part of the land, debt, or other thing sued for, if the party that undertakes it prevails therein. Co. Lit. 368.

This offence is punishable by common law and statute; and the stat. 33 Ed. 1. stat. 2. "makes the offenders liable to three years im-"prisonment, and a fine at the king's plea-"sure." And by the stat. 28 Ed. 1. c. 11. it is ordained, that "no officer, nor any other, "shall take upon him any business in suit, "to have part of the thing in plea; nor none "upon any covenant, shall give up his right "to another; and if any do, and be convicted "thereof, the taker shall forfeit to the king "so much of his lands and goods as amounts "to the value of the part purchased, &c. "for such maintenance."

In the construction of these statutes, it hath been adjudged, that under the word covenant, all kinds of promises and contracts are included, whether by writing or parol. F. N. B. 172. 2 Inst. 209. 2 Rol. Abr. 113.

Champerty in any action at law, seems to be agreed to be within the statute, and a purchase of land, pending a suit in equity concerning it, it hath also been holden to be within it, also a lease for life or years, or a voluntary gift of land pending a plea, is as much within the statute as a purchase for money. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 84. s. 16.

But neither a conveyance executed, pending a plea, in consideration of a precedent honest debt, which is agreed to be satisfied with the thing in demand when recovered, or in pursuance of a precedent bargain, nor any surrender by a lessee to his lessor, nor any conveyance or promise thereof made by a father to his son, or by any ancestor to his heir apparent, nor a gift of land in suit, after the end of it, to a counsellor for his fee or wages, without any kind of precedent bargain relating to such gift, are within the meaning of the stat. 1 Haw. P. C. c. 84. s. 15, 18, 19, 20.

CHAMPERTORS, by statute, are those who move pleas or suits, or cause them to be moved, either by their own procurement, or by others, and sue them at their proper costs, to have part of the land in variance, or part of the gain. 33 Ed. 1. stat. 2.

CHAMPION, (campio) is taken in the law not only for him that fights a combat in his own cause, but also for him that doth it in the place or quarrel of another: these judicial combats, on the wager of battel by a defendant, have long since fallen into disuse. Bract. lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 21. 3 Black. 341.

These champions were usually hired, and any one might hire them, except parricides, and those who were accused of the highest offences: before they came into the field, they shaved their heads, and made oath that they believed the persons who hired them, were in the right, and that they would defend their cause to the utmost of their power; which was always done on foot, and with no other weapon than a stick or club, and a shield: and before they engaged, they always made an offering to the church, that God might assist them in the battle. On a drawn battle, the defendant maintained his possession, but if victory declared itself for either party, for him judgment was finally given. 3 Black. 340. Bract. lib. 2. c. 35.

CHAMPION OF THE KING, (campio regis) is an ancient officer, whose office it is at the coronation of our kings, when the king is at dinner to ride armed cap-a-pee into Westminster Hall, and by the proclamation of a herald make a challenge, that if any man shall deny the king's title to the crown, he is there ready to defend it in single combat, &c. Which being done, the king drinks to him, and sends him a gilt cup with a cover full of wine, which the champion drinks, and hath the cup for his fee. This office, ever since the coronation of king Richard II. when Baldwin Freville exhibited his petition for it, was adjudged from him to sir John Dymocke his competitor, (both claiming from Marmion), and hath continued ever since in the family of the Dymockes; who hold the manor of Scrivelsby in Lincolnshire, hereditary from the Marmions, by grand serjeantry, viz. that the lord thereof shall be the king's champion, as aforesaid. Accordingly sir Edward Dymocke performed this office at the coronation of king Charles II. Cowel. Blount.

And a person of the name of Dymocke performed it, at the coronation of his present majesty George the Third.

CHAMPS DES MARS, and les champs de mai, assemblies of the ancient Gauls, to deliberate on whatever related to the general welfare of the nation. These assemblies were called champs, because, according to the custom of all the barbarous nations, they were held in the open air, in some plain, capable of containing the vast number of persons who had a right to be present. They were denominated champs de mars and de mai, from the months in which they were held. Every freeman seems to have had a right to be present in these assemblies. 1 Robert. Hist. Emp. C. v. 357.

CHANCE, where a man commits an unlawful act, by misfortune, or chance, and not by design, this is a deficiency of the will; for here the will observes a total neutrality, and doth not co-operate with the deed; which therefore wants one main ingredient of a crime. 4 Black. Com. 26, 7.

And if any accident or mischief happens to follow from the performance of a lawful act, the party stands excused from all guilt: but if a man be doing any thing unlawful, and a consequence ensues which he did not foresee or intend, as the death of a man or the like, his want of foresight shall be no excuse; for being guilty of one offence, in doing antecedently, which in itself is unlawful, he is criminally guilty of whatever consequence may follow the first misbehaviour. 4 Black. Com. 26, 7.

But a very important distinction is made in such cases, viz. whether the unlawful act is also in its original nature wrong and mischievous, for a person is not answerable criminally for the incidental consequences of an unlawful act, which is merely a malum prohibitum; as from an unqualified person being in pursuit of game, he is answerable only to the same extent as a man duly qualified. Fost. 659. 1 Hale P. C. 475. See also Chancemedley.

CHANCELLOR, (cancellarius) for the office of lord high chancellor, see Chancery.

—— Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, is the chief judge of the duchy court, held in Westminster-Hall. Under the chancellor of the duchy, are an attorney of the court, one chief clerk or register, and several auditors.

—— Chancellor of the Exchequer, a great officer, originally appointed for the qualifying extremities in the exchequer: he sometimes sits in court, and in the exchequer-chamber; and with the judges of the court, orders things to the king's best benefit. He hath by the stat. 33 H. 8. c. 39. power with others, to compound for the forfeitures upon penal statutes, bonds and recognizances entered into to the king: he hath also great authority in the management of the royal revenue, &c. which seems of late to be his chief business, being commonly the first commissioner of the treasury. And though the court of equity in the Exchequer-chamber was intended to be holden before the treasurer, chancellor, and barons; it is usually before the barons only. Where there is a lord-treasurer, the chancellor of the Exchequer is under treasurer. Cowel. Blount.

There is a chancellor of the Order of the Garter, Stow's Annals, 706. Chancellor of the Universities. See 9 Hen. 5. c. 8. Chancellor of the diocese, 32 Hen. 8. c. 15. Chancellor in cathedral churches. Mon. Angl. tom. 3. p. 24, 339. Cowel. Blount.

CHANCEMEDLEY. If a person casts (not intending harm) a stone, which happens to hit one, whereof he dies: or shoots an arrow in a highway, and another that passeth by is killed therewith: or if a workman, in throwing down rubbish from a house, after warning to take care, kills a person: or a school-master in correcting his scholar, a master his servant, or an officer in whipping a criminal, in a reasonable manner, happens to occasion his death: it is chancemedly and misadventure. 3 Inst. 56. Dalt. 351.

But if a man throws stones in a highway where persons usually pass: or shoots an arrow, &c. in a market-place, among a great many people: or if a workman cast down rubbish from a house, in cities and towns, where people are continually passing: or a school-master, &c. correct his servant or scholar, &c. exceeding the bounds of moderation, it is manslaughter; and if with an improper instrumen: of correct on, as with a sword or iron bar, or by kicking, stamping, &c. in a cruel manner, it is murder. Terms de Ley, H. P. C. 31, 58, &c. Kel. 40, 65, 113. If a man whips his horse in the street to make him gallop, and the horse runs over a child and kills it, it is manslaughter: but if another whips the horse, it is manslaughter in him, and chancemedley in the rider. H. P. C. 48, 59. And if two are fighting, and a third person coming to part them is killed by one of them, without any evil intent, yet this is murder in him; and not manslaughter by chancemedley or misadventure: and if they were met with prepensed malice, the one intended to kill the other, then it is murder in both. Terms de Ley. In chancemedley the offender forfeits his goods; but hath a pardon of course. Stat. 6 Ed. 1. c. 9.

CHANCERY, (cancellaria.) The high court of Chancery, is by much the most important of any of the king's superior and original courts of justice: and is next to the parliament, it has its name of Chancery cancellaria, from the judge who presides here: the lord chancellor who, sir Edward Coke tells us, is so called a cancellendo, from cancelling the king's letters patent, when granted contrary to law, which is the highest point of his jurisdiction. 4 Inst. 88.

But the office and name of chancellor, (however derived) was certainly known to the courts of the Roman emperors; where originally, it seems to have signified a chief scribe or secretary, who was afterwards invested with several judicial powers, and a general superintendency over the rest of the offices of the province. 3 Black. 46.

From the Roman empire, it passed to the Roman church, ever emulous of imperial state; and hence every bishop has to this day, his chancellor, the principal judge of his consistory. And when the modern kingdoms of Europe were established upon the ruins of the empire, almost every state preserved its chancellor, with different jurisdictions and dignities according to their different constitutions: but in all of them, it seems to have had the supervision of all charters, letters, and such other public instruments of the crown, as were authenticated in the most solemn manner; and therefore when seals came in use, he had always the custody of the king's great seal. 3 Black. 46, 47.

So that the office of chancellor, or lord keeper, (whose authority by stat. 5 Eliz. c. 18. is declared to be exactly the same) is with us at this day created by the mere delivery of the king's great seal into his custody. Lamb. Archeion, 65. 1 Roll. Abr. 385. Whereby he becomes, without writ or patent, an officer of the greatest weight and power of any now subsisting in the kingdom; and superior in point of precedency to every temporal lord. Stat. 31 Hen. 8. c. 10. He is a privy counsellor by his office, and, according to lord chancellor Ellesmere, prolocutor of the house of lords by prescription. To him belongs the appointment of all justices of the peace throughout the kingdom. Ibid.

Being formerly usually an ecclesiastic, (for none else were then capable of an office so conversant in writings), and presiding over the royal chapel, Madox. Hist. of Exch. 42. he became keeper of the king's conscience; visitor, in right of the king, of all hospitals and colleges of the king's foundation; and patron of all the king's livings under the value of 20*l.* per annum in the king's books. Ibid.

He is the general guardian of all infants, idiots, and lunatics; and has the general superintendance of all charitable uses in the kingdom. And all this over and above the vast and extensive jurisdiction which he exercises in his judicial capacity in the court of chancery: wherein, as in the exchequer, there are two distinct tribunals; the one ordinary, being a court of common law; the other extraordinary, being a court of equity. Ibid.

As to the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, he hath judicial power; and is an assistant to the lord chancellor when present, and his deputy when absent, but he has certain causes assigned him to hear and decree, which he usually doth on certain days appointed at the chapel of the rolls, being assisted by one or more masters in chancery: he is, by virtue of his office, chief of the masters of chancery, and chief clerk of the petty-bag office. Chan. Prac.

The twelve MASTERS IN CHANCERY sit some of them in court, and take notice of such references as are made to them, to be reported to the court, relating to matters of practice, the state of the proceedings, accounts, &c. and they also take affidavits, acknowledge deeds and recognisances, &c. Ibid.

The six CLERKS in chancery transact and file all proceedings by bill and answer; and also issue out some patents that pass the great seal; which business is done by their under clerks, each of whom has a seat there, and whereof every six clerk has a certain number in his office, usually about ten. Ibid.

The CURSITORS of the court, four and twenty in number, make out all original writs in Chancery, which are returnable in C. B. &c. and among these the business of the several counties is severally distributed. Ibid.

The REGISTER is a place of great importance in this court, and he hath several de-parties under him, to take cognizance of all orders and decrees, and enter and draw them up, &c. Ibid.

The master of the subpœna office issues out all writs of subpœna. Ibid.

The EXAMINERS are officers in this court, who take the depositions of witnesses, and are to examine them, and make out copies of the depositions. Ibid.

The clerk of the affidavits files all affidavits used in court, without which they will not be admitted. Ibid.

The clerk of the rolls sits constantly in the rolls to make searches for deeds, offices, &c. and to make out copies. Ibid.

The clerks of the petty-bag office, in number three, have great variety of business that goes through their hands, in making out writs of summons to parliament, conges d' elire for bishops, patents for customers; liberates upon extent of statute-staple, and recovery of recognisances forfeited, &c. And also relating to suits for and against privileged persons, &c. And the clerks of this office have several clerks under them. Ibid.

The usher of the chancery had formerly the receiving and custody of all money ordered to be deposited in court, and paid it back again by order.

But anno 12 Geo. 1. c. 32. a new officer was appointed by statute, called ACCOUNTANT-GENERAL, to receive the money lodged in court, and convey the same to the Bank, to be there kept for the suitors of the court.

Then there is a SERJEANT-AT ARMS, by whom persons standing in contempt are brought up by his substitute as prisoners. Chan. Pr. 2.

A warden of the Fleet, who receives such prisoners as stand committed by the court, &c. Chan. Pr. 2.

And besides these officers, there is a clerk of the crown in chancery; clerk and controller of the hanaper; clerk for inrolling letters patent, &c. not employed in proceedings of equity, but concerned in making out commissions, patents, pardons, &c. under the great seal, and collecting the fees thereof. A clerk of the faculties for dispensations, licences, &c. Clerk of the presentations, for benefices of the crown in the chancellor's gift; clerk of appeals, on appeals from the courts of the archbishop to the court of chancery: and divers other officers, who are constituted by the chancellor's commission. Chan. Pr. 3.

The ordinary legal court of the chancellor is much more ancient than the court of equity. Its jurisdiction is to hold plea upon a scire facias to repeal and cancel the king's letters patent, when made against law or upon untrue suggestions; and to hold plea of petitions, monstrans de droit, traverses of offices, and the like; when the king hath been advised to do any act, or is put in possession of any lands or goods, in prejudice of a subject's right. (4 Rep. 54.) On proof of which, as the king can never be supposed intentionally to do any wrong, the law questions not but he will immediately redress the injury; and refers that conscientious task to the chancellor, the keeper of his conscience. It also appertains to this court to hold plea of all personal actions, where any officer or minister of the court is a party. (4 Inst. 80.) It might likewise hold plea (by scire facias) of partitions of lands in co-parcenery, (Co. Litt. 171. F. N. B. 62.) and of dower, (Bro. Abr. tit. dower. 66. Moor. 565.) where any ward of the crown was concerned in interest, so long as the military tenures subsisted; as it now may also do of the tithes of forest land, where granted by the king and claimed by a stranger against the grantee of the crown, (Bro. Abr. tit. dismes. 10.) and of executions on statutes, or recognizances in nature thereof by the stat. 23 Hen. 8. c. 6. (2 Roll. Abr. 469.) "but if any cause comes to "issue in this court, that is, if any fact be "disputed between the parties, the chancel-"lor cannot try it, having no power to sum-"mon a jury; but must deliver the record "propria manu into the court of king's bench, "where it shall be tried by the country, and "judgment shall be there given thereon." (Cro. Jac. 12.) And, when judgment is given in chancery, upon demurrer or the like, a writ of error, in nature of an appeal, lies out of this ordinary court into the court of king's bench. (Year Book, 18 Ed. 3. 25. 17. Ass. 24. 29. Ass. 47. Dyer, 315. 1 Roll. Rep. 287. 4 Inst. 80.) But so little is usually done on the common law side of the court, that according to Blackstone there are no traces of any writ of error being actually brought, since the fourteenth year of queen Elizabeth, A. D. 1572. 3 Black. 48.

In this ordinary, or legal, court is also kept the officina justitiæ: out of which all original writs that pass under the great seal, all commissions of charitable uses, sewers, bankruptcy, idiocy, lunacy, and the like, do issue; and for which it is always open to the subject, who may there at any time demand and have, ex debito justitiæ, any writ that his occasions may call for. These writs (relating to the business of the subject) and the returns to them were, according to the simplicity of antient times, originally kept in a hamper, in hanaperio; and the others (relating to such matters wherein the crown is immediately or mediately concerned) were preserved in a little sack or bag, in parva baga; and thence hath arisen the distinction of the hanaper office, and petty bag office, which both belong to the common law court in chancery. 3 Black. 48, 49.

But the extraordinary court, or court of equity, is now become the court of the greatest judicial consequence. This distinction between law and equity, as administered in different courts, is not at present known, nor seems to have ever been known in any other country at any time: and yet the difference of one from the other, when administered by the same tribunal, was perfectly familiar to the Romans; the jus prætorium, or discretion of the prætor, being distinct from the leges or standing laws: but the power of both centered in one and the same magistrate, who was equally intrusted to pronounce the rule of law, and to apply it to particular cases by the principles of equity. With us too, the aula regia, which was the supreme court of judicature, undoubtedly administered equal justice according to the rules of both or either, as the case might chance to require; and, when that was broken to pieces, the idea of a court of equity, as distinguished from a court of law, did not subsist in the original plan of partition. For though equity is mentioned by Bracton, (l. 2. c. 7. fol. 23.) as a thing contrasted to strict law, yet neither in that writer, nor in Glanvil or Fleta, nor yet in Briton (composed under the auspices and in the name of Edward I. and treating particularly of courts and their several jurisdictions) is there a syllable to be found relating to the equitable jurisdiction of the court of chancery. It seems therefore probable, that when the courts of law, proceeding merely upon the ground of the king's original writs, and confining themselves strictly to that bottom, gave a harsh or imperfect judgment, the application for redress used to be to the king in person assisted by his privy council, (from whence also arose the jurisdiction of the court of requests (Smith's Commonwealth, b. 3. c. 7.) which was virtually abolished by the statute 16 Car. 1. c. 10.) and they were wont to refer the matter either to the chancellor and a select committee, or by degrees to the chancellor only, who mitigated the severity or supplied the defects of the judgments pronounced in the courts of law, upon weighing the circumstances of the case. This was the custom not only among our Saxon ancestors, before the institution of the aula regia (LL. Edg. c. 2.) but also after its dissolution, in the reign of king Edward I. (Lambard. Archeion. 59.) if not that of Henry II. 3 Black. 50.

In these early times the chief juridical employment of the chancellor must have been in devising new writs, directed to the courts of common law, to give remedy in cases where none was before administered. And to quicken the diligence of the clerks in the chancery, who were too much attached to antient precedents, it is provided by statute Westm. 2. 13 Edw. 1. c. 24. that "whensoever from thenceforth in one case a "writ shall be found in the chancery, and "in a like case falling under the same right, "and requiring like remedy no precedent of "a writ can be produced, the clerks in chan- "cery shall agree in forming a new one: and, "if they cannot agree, it shall be adjourned "to the next parliament, where a writ "shall be framed by consent of the learned "in the law, lest it happen for the future that "the court of our lord the king be deficient "in doing justice to the suitors." And this accounts for the very great variety of writs of trespass on the case, to be met with in the register, whereby the suitor had ready relief according to the exigency of his business, and adapted to the specialty, reason, and equity of his very case. (Lamb. Archeion. 61.) Which provision (with a little accuracy in the clerks of the chancery, and a little liberality in the judges, by extending rather than narrowing the remedial effects of the writ) might have effectually answered all the purposes of a court of equity, except that of obtaining a discovery by the oath of the defendant. 3 Black. 51.

But when, about the end of the reign of king Edward III. uses of land were introduced, and, though totally discountenanced by the courts of common law, were considered as fiduciary deposits and binding in conscience by the clergy, the separate jurisdiction of the chancery as a court of equity began to be established (Spelm. Gloss. 106. 1 Lev. 242.); and John Waltham, who was bishop of Salisbury and chancellor to king Richard II. by a strained interpretation of the above-mentioned statute of Westm. 2. devised the writ of subpœna, returnable in the court of chancery only, to make the feoffee to uses accountable to his cestuy que use: which process was afterwards extended to other matters wholly determinable at the common law, upon false and fictitious suggestions; for which therefore the chancellor himself is by statute 17 Ric. 2. c. 6. directed to give damages to the parties unjustly aggrieved. But as the clergy, so early as the reign of king Stephen, had attempted to turn their ecclesiastical courts into courts of equity, by entertaining suits pro læsione fidei, as a spiritual offence against conscience, in case of non-payment of debts or any breach of civil contracts (Ld. Lyt. Hen. 2. b. 3. p. 361. n.); till checked by the constitutions of Clarendon (10 Hen. 2. c. 15.), which declared that placita de debitis, quæ fide interposita debentur, vel absque interpositione fidei, sint in justicia regis: therefore probably the ecclesiastical chancellors, who then held the seal, were remiss in abridging their own new-acquired jurisdiction; especially as the spiritual courts continued to grasp at the same authority as before, in suits pro læsione fidei, so late as the fifteenth century (Yearb. 2 Hen. IV. 10. 38. & VI. 29.), till finally prohibited by the unanimous concurrence of all the judges. However, it appears from the parliament rolls (Rot. Parl. 4 Hen. IV. n. 78. & 110. 3 Hen. V. n. 46.) that in the reigns of Henry IV. and V. the commons were repeatedly urgent to have the writ of subpœna intirely suppressed, as being a novelty devised by the subtilty of chancellor

Waltham, against the form of the common law; whereby no plea could be determined, unless by examination and oath of the parties, according to the form of the law civil, and the law of holy church, in subversion of the common law. But though Henry IV. being then hardly warm in his throne, gave a palliating answer to their petitions, and actually passed the statute 4 Hen. 4. c. 23. whereby judgments at law are declared irrevocable, unless by attaint or writ of error, yet his son put a negative at once upon their whole application: and in Edward VI. time, the process by bill and subpœna was become the daily practice of the court (Rot. Parl. 14 Edw. 4. n. 33. 3 Black. 52.)

But this did not extend very far; for in the antient treatise, intitled Diversité des courtes (Tit. Chanc. fol. 296. Rastell's edit. A. D. 1534.) supposed to be written very early in the sixteenth century, we have a catalogue of the matters of conscience then cognizable by subpœna in chancery, which fall within a very narrow compass. No regular judicial system at that time prevailed in the court; but the suitor, when he thought himself aggrieved, found a desultory and uncertain remedy, according to the private opinion of the chancellor, who was generally an ecclesiastic, or sometimes (though rarely) a statesman: no lawyer having sat in the court of chancery from the times of the chief justices Thorpe and Knyvet, successively chancellor to king Edward III. in 1372 and 1373, (Spelm. Gloss. 111. Dougl. Chron. Ser. 50.) to the promotion of sir Thomas More by king Henry VIII. in 1530. After which the great seal was indiscriminately committed to the custody of lawyers, or courtiers, or churchmen, according as the convenience of the times and the disposition of the prince required, till serjeant Puckering was made lord keeper in 1592: from which time to the present, the court of chancery has always been filled by a lawyer, excepting the interval from 1621 to 1625, when the seal was intrusted to Dr. Williams, then dean of Westminster, but afterwards bishop of Lincoln: who had been chaplain to lord Ellesmere, when chancellor. 3 Black. 53.

In the time of lord Ellesmere (A. D. 1616.) arose that notable dispute between the courts of law and equity, set on foot by sir Edward Coke, then chief justice of the court of king's bench; whether a court of equity could give relief after or against a judgment at the common law. This contest was so warmly carried on, that indictments were preferred against the suitors, the solicitors, the counsel, and even a master in chancery, for having incurred a præmunire, by questioning in a court of equity a judgment in the court of king's bench, obtained by gross fraud and imposition (Bacon's Works, IV. 611, 612, 632.) This matter, being brought before the king, was by him referred to his learned counsel for their advice and opinion; who reported so strongly in favour of the courts of equity, (Whitelocke of Parl. ii. 390. 1 Chan. Rep. append. 11.) that his majesty gave judgment on their behalf: but, not contented with the irrefragable reasons and precedents produced by his counsel, (for the chief justice was clearly in the wrong) he chose rather to decide the question by referring it to the plenitude of his royal prerogative. (1 Chan. Rep. append. 26.) Sir Edward Coke submitted to the decision, and thereby made atonement for his error: but this struggle, together with the business of commendams (in which he acted a very noble part) and his controlling the commissioners of sewers, were the open and avowed causes, first of his suspension, and soon after of his removal from his office. 3 Black. 54.

Lord Bacon, who succeeded lord Ellesmere, reduced the practice of the court into a more regular system; but did not sit long enough to effect any considerable revolution in the science itself: and few of his decrees which have reached us are of any great consequence to posterity. His successors, in the reign of Charles I. did little to improve upon his plan; and even after the restoration, the seal was committed to the earl of Clarendon, who had withdrawn from practice as a lawyer near twenty years; and afterwards to the earl of Shaftsbury, who had never practised at all. 3 Black. 54, 55.

Sir Heneage Finch, who succeeded in 1673, and became afterwards earl of Nottingham, was a person of the greatest abilities and most uncorrupted integrity: a thorough master and zealous defender of the laws and constitution of his country; and indued with a pervading genius that enabled him to discover and to pursue the true spirit of justice, notwithstanding the embarrassments raised by the narrow and technical notions which then prevailed in the courts of law, and the imperfect ideas of redress, which had possessed the courts of equity. 3 Black. 55.

The reason and necessities of mankind, arising from the great change in property by the extension of trade, and the abolition of military tenures, co-operated in establishing his plan, and enabled him in the course of nine years to build a system of jurisprudence and jurisdiction upon wide and rational foundations; which have also been extended and improved by many great men, who have since presided in chancery, and from that time to this, the power and business of the court have increased to an amazing degree. 3 Black. 55.

From this court of equity in chancery, as from the other superior courts, an appeal lies to the house of peers: but there are these differences between appeals from a court of equity, and writs of error from a court of law; 1st, that the former may be brought upon an interlocutory matter; the latter upon nothing, but only a definitive judgment; 2dly, that in writs of error, the house of lords pronounces the judgment: in appeals, it gives direction to the court below, to rectify its own decree. Ibid.

But this court of chancery, will not retain a suit by English bill under 10*l.* value, except in cases of charity, nor under the value of 40*s.* per ann. in lands, except for rent-service. Eq. Cas. Abr. 75.

For the practice of this court, see BILL IN EQUITY and PRACTICE.

CHANGER, an officer belonging to the king's mint, whose office consists chiefly in exchanging coin for bullion, brought in by merchants or others: it is written after the old way, chaunger. Stat. 2 Hen. 6. cap. 12. Cowel. Blount.

CHANTER, (cantator) a singer in the choir of a cathedral church. Ibid.

CHANTRY, or CHAUNTRY, (cantaria) a little church, chapel, or particular altar, in some cathedral church, &c. endowed with lands, or other revenues, for the maintenance of one or more priests, daily to sing mass, and officiate divine service for the souls of the donors, and such others as they appointed. Ibid.

CHAPEL, (capella, Fr. chapelle) is either adjoining to a church, for performing divine service; or separate from the mother-church, where the parish is wide, which is commonly called a chapel of ease. And chapels of ease are built for the ease of those parishioners who dwell far from the parochial church, in prayer and preaching only; for the sacraments and burials ought to be performed in the parochial church. 2 Rol. Abr. 340.

These chapels are served by inferior curates, provided at the charge of the rector, or vicar, or him that has the benefice, as the custom may be. And the curates are therefore removable at the pleasure of the rector or vicar. Cowel. Blount.

Public chapels, annexed to parish churches, shall be repaired by the parishioners, as the church is; if any other persons be not bound to do it. 2 Inst. 489.

CHAPELRY, (capellania) is the precinct and limits of a chapel.

CHAPERON, (Fr.) a hood or bonnet, anciently worn by the knights of the garter, as part of the habit of that noble order: but in heraldry, it is a little escutcheon fixed in the forehead of the horses that draw a hearse at a funeral. Cowel. Blount.

CHAPITERS, (Lat. capitula, Fr. chapitres, i. e. chapters of a book) signified in our ancient common law, a summary of such matters as were to be enquired of, or presented before justices in eyre, justices of assise, or of peace, in their sessions. Britton, cap. 3.

These chapiters are now those articles which are delivered by the justice in his charge to the inquest; whereas, in ancient times, they were first read in open court, and then delivered in writing to the grand inquest, for their better observance; and the grand jury were to answer upon their oaths to all the articles thus delivered them, and not put the judges to long and learned charges to little or no purpose, for want of remembering the same, as they do now, when they think their duty well enough performed, if they only present those few of many misdemeanors which are brought before them by way of indictment. Horn's Mir. lib. 3. Des articles in Eyre. Cowel. Blount.

CHAPLAIN, (capellanus) a priest or like spiritual person retained by the king, or some noble person, to instruct him and his family, and say divine service in his house. Cowel. Blount.

The king, queen, prince, princess, and royal family, may retain as many chaplains as they please; and the king's chaplains may hold any number of benefices of the king's gift, as the king shall think fit to bestow upon them. And this, even in addition to what they hold upon the presentation of a subject without dispensation: but a king's chaplain beneficed by the king, cannot afterwards take a living from a subject, but by a dispensation according to the stat. 1 Salk. 161.

An archbishop may retain eight chaplains; a duke, or a bishop, six; marquis, or earl, five; viscount, four; baron, knight of the garter, or lord chancellor, three; a duchess, marchioness, countess, baroness, the treasurer, and controller of the king's house, the king's secretary, dean of the chapel, almoner, and master of the rolls, each of them two; the chief justice of the king's bench, &c. one; all which may purchase a licence or dispensation, and take two benefices with cure of souls. Stat. 22 H. 8. cap. 13.

Also every judge of the king's bench and common pleas, and chancellor and chief baron of the exchequer, and the king's attorney and solicitor general, may each of them have one chaplain, attendant on his person, having one benefice with cure, who may be non-resident on the same, by stat. 25 Hen. 8. cap. 16.

And the groom of the stole, treasurer of the king's chamber, and chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster, may retain each one chaplain. Stat. 33 Hen. 8. cap. 28.

There is also a distinction between the king's chaplains and those of noblemen, for the king can give a leave to his chaplains for non-residence, even whilst they do not attend his household. But the chaplains of noblemen are only excused during their actual attendance upon lords or their ladies. 3 Burn. Ec. L. 290.

A chaplain must be retained by letters testimonial under hand and seal, or he is not a chaplain within the statute, so that it is not enough for a spiritual person to be retained by word only to be a chaplain. 4 Rep. 90.

CHAPTER, (capitulum) is a congregation of clergymen consisting of prebends or canons under the dean in a cathedral church. This collegiate company is metaphorically termed capitulum, signifying a little head, it being a kind of head, not only to govern the diocese in the vacation of the bishopriek, but also in many things to advise and assist the bishop when the see is full, for which, with the dean, they form a council. Co. Lit. 103.

CHARGE to the GRAND JURY. The grand jury, previous to their sitting to receive indictments proposed before them are instructed in the articles of their enquiry by a charge from the judge, who presides on the bench, these articles were formerly reduced to writing, and delivered to the grand jury for their information. See Chapiters.

CHARGE AND DISCHARGE. A charge is a thing done, that bindeth him that doth it: and discharge is the removal, or taking away of that charge. Terms de Ley. Land may be charged divers ways; as by demise, mortgage, or grant of rent out of it, or by statutes, judgments, conditions, warranties, or the like. Lit. sect. 648. Moor Ca. 129. Dyer 10.

If rent be issuing out of a house, &c. and it falls down, the charge shall remain upon the soil. 9 E. 4. 20. But when the estate is gone, upon which the charge was grounded, there generally the charge is determined. Co. Lit. 349. And in all cases where any executory thing is created by deed, there by consent of all the parties it may be by deed defeated and discharged. 10 Rep. 49.

Charge and discharge in Equity. Where a decree or order of the court directs an account, or the like, to be taken and examined before one of the masters thereof, in such case, the plaintiff delivers in an account before the master, in the form of a charge against the defendant, which being examined and gone through, the defendant or adverse party must bring in his discharge against such charge, which being likewise examined and gone through, the master will exercise his judgment upon the evidence, and allow or disallow the charge or any part of it as he thinks proper, and so è contra as to the discharge, after which the report is made.

CHARITABLE CORPORATION. A society of persons, who in the early part of the reign of Geo. 2. obtained a statute to lend money to industrious poor, at 5*l.* per cent. interest on pawns and pledges, to prevent their falling into the hands of the pawnbrokers, and they were therefore called the charitable corporation: but they likewise took 5*l.* per cent. for the charge of officers, warehouses, &c. And in the 5th of Geo. 2. broke, and defrauded the proprietors of great sums. See 5 Geo. 2. cap. 31, 32. 7 Geo. 2. cap. 11.

CHARITABLE USES. The king as parens patriæ, has the general superintendance of all charities, which he exercises by the keeper of his conscience, the chancellor: and therefore whenever it is necessary, the attorney general at the relation of some informant (who is usually called the relator,) files ex officio, an information in the court of chancery, to have the charity properly established. 3 Black. 427.

Also by stat. 43 Eliz. c. 4. authority is given to the lord chancellor or lord keeper, and to the chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster respectively, to grant commissions under their several seals, to inquire into abuses of charitable donations, and rectify the same by decree; which may be reviewed in the respective courts of the several chancellors upon exceptions taken thereto. But though this is done in the petty bag-office, in the court of chancery, because the commission is there returned, it is not a proceeding at common law, but treated as an original cause in the court of equity. 3 Black. 428.

The evidence below is not taken down in writing, and the respondent, in his answer to the exceptions, may allege what new matter he pleases; upon which they go to proof, and examine witnesses in writing upon all the matters in issue: and the court may decree the respondent to pay all the costs, though no such authority is given by the statute. Ibid.

And as it is thus considered as an original cause throughout, an appeal lies of course from the chancellor's decree to the House of Peers. Ibid.

As to what shall be deemed a charitable use, the stat. 43 Eliz. c. 4. enacts, that "the commissioners shall inquire of the following uses as good and charitable: viz. for relief of aged and impotent and poor people; for maintenance of sick and maimed soldiers; schools of learning, free schools, scholars in universities; houses of correction; for repair of bridges, of seas and havens, of causeways, of churches, of seabanks, of highways; for education and preferment of orphans, for marriage of poor maids, for support and help of young tradesmen, of handicraftsmen, of persons decayed; for redemption, or relief of prisoners or captives, for ease and aid of poor inhabitants; concerning payment of fifteenths, setting out of soldiers, and other taxes.

Other gifts, provisions, and limitations, which, though not within the letter, have been held to be within the provisions of the statute, as money to maintain a preaching minister, or a schoolmaster: so for the building of an hospital for the relief of poor people. 2 Vez. 187. So for the king to fund a free-school, and make it a corporation of guardians, masters, and ushers, to give charity to them and theirs for necessaries to maintain them, and certain poor people under them: so for the building a sessions-house for a city or county; the making of a new or repair of an old pulpit in a church, or the buying a pulpit cloth or pulpit cushion, or the setting up of new bells, where none are, or amending them, where they are out of order. Duke's Ch. Us. 109. So a devise of money to a minister to preach an annual sermon, and keep a tomb-stone and inscription in repair, and to a corporation for keeping accounts thereof, is a charitable use. 1 Ves. 320. 4 Bro. Ch. Rep. 67. Fonbl. 208. See also Mortmain.

CHARKS, are pit-coal when charred or charked, so called in Worcestershire; as sea-coal thus prepared at Newcastle is called coke. Blount.

CHARRE OF LEAD, is a quantity of lead consisting of thirty pigs, each pig containing six stone wanting two pounds, and every stone being twelve pounds. Cowel. Blount.

CHARTA, a word made use of not only for a charter, for the holding an estate, but also a statute. See Magna Charta.

CHARTE, a card, chart, or plan which mariners use at sea, mentioned 14 Car. 2. cap. 33. Cowel. Blount.

CHARTEL, (Fr. cartel) a letter of defiance, or challenge to single combat; in use herctofore to decide difficult controversies at law, which could not otherwise be determined. Blount.

CHARTER, (Lat. charta, Fr. chartre, i. e. instrumenta) is the written evidence of things done between man and man: and charters are divided into those of the king, and those of private persons. Charters of the king are those whereby the king passeth any grant to any person or body politic; as a charter of exemption, of privilege, pardon, or the like. Bract. Lib. 2. c. 26. Brit. c. 39. Fleta, lib. 3. c. 14. Cowel. Blount.

Charters of private persons are deeds and instruments for the conveyance of lands, &c. And the purchaser of lands shall have all the charters, deeds and evidences as incident to the same, and for the maintenance of his title. Co. Lit. 6. Moor Ca. 687.

CHARTERER, in Cheshire, a freeholder is called by this name. Sir P. Ley's Antiq. fol. 356.

CHARTER-GOVERNMENTS IN AMERICA. Our colonies in America, previous to the acknowledgment of the independance of the united states by 22 Geo. 3. c. 46. with respect to their interior polity, were properly of three sorts.

1. Provincial establishments, the constitutions of which depend on the respective commissions issued by the crown to the governors, and the instructions which usually accompany those commissions; under the authority of which, provincial assemblies are constituted with the power of making local ordinances, not repugnant to the laws of England. 1 Black. 108.

2. Proprietary governments, granted out by the crown to individuals, in the nature of feudatory principalities, with all the inferior regalities, and subordinate powers of legislation, which formerly belonged to the owners of counties palatine: yet still with these express conditions, that the ends for which the grant was made, be substantially pursued, and that nothing be attempted which may derogate from the authority of the mother country. Ibid.

3. Charter governments, in the nature of civil corporations, with the power of making by-laws, for their own interior regulations, not contrary to the laws of England; and with such rights and authorities as are specially given them in their several charters of incorporation. Ibid.

The form of government in most of them is borrowed from that of England. They have a governor named by the king (or in some proprietary colonies by the proprietor) who is his representative or deputy; they also have courts of justice of their own, from whose decisions an appeal lies to the king and council here in England. Ibid.

Their general assemblies, which are their house of commons, together with their council of state, being their upper house, with the concurrence of the king, or his representative, the governor, make laws suited to their emergency. Ibid.

CHARTER-LAND, (terra per chartam) is such as a man holds by charter, that is by evidence in writing otherwise called freehold. Anno 19 H. 7. cap. 13. This in the time of the Saxons was called bockland, which was held (according to Lambard) with more commodious and easy conditions than folkland was, i. e. lands held without writing. 2 Black. Com. 90.

CHARTER-PARTY, (Lat. charta partita, Fr. chartre parti, i. e. a deed or writing divided) is what among merchants and sea-faring men we commonly call a pair of indentures, containing the covenants and agreements made between them, touching their merchandize and maritime affairs. 2 Inst. 673. And charter-parties of affreightment settle agreements, as to the cargo of ships, and bind the master to deliver the goods in good condition at the place of discharge, according to agreement; and the master sometimes obliges himself, ship, tackle and furniture, for performance.

The common law construes charter-parties, as near as may be, according to the intention of them, and not according to the literal sense of traders, or those that merchandize by sea, but they must be regularly pleaded. In covenant by charter-party, that the ship should return to the river of Thames, by a certain time, dangers of the sea excepted, and after in the voyage, and within the time of the return, the ship was taken upon the sea by pirates, so that the master could not return at the time mentioned in the agreement; it was adjudged that this impediment was within the exception of the charter-party, which extends as well to any danger upon the sea by pirates and men of war, as dangers of the sea by ship-wreck, tempest, &c. Stile 132. 2 Rol. Abr. 248.

A ship is freighted at so much per month that she shall be out, covenanted to be paid after her arrival at the port of London; the ship is cast away coming up from the Downs, but the lading is all preserved, the freight shall in this case be paid; for the money becomes due monthly by the contract, and the place mentioned is only to ascertain where the money is to be paid, and the ship is intitled to wages, like a mariner that serves by the month, who if he dies in the voyage, his executors are to be answered pro rata. Molloy de Jur. Maritim. 260. If a part-owner of a ship refuse to join with the other owners in setting out of the ship, he shall not be intitled to his share of the freight; but by the course of the admiralty, the other owners ought to give security if the ship perish in the voyage, to make good to the owner standing out his share of the ship. Sir Lionel Jenkins, in a case of this nature, certified that by the law marine and course of the admiralty, the plaintiff was to have no share of the freight; and that it was so in all places, for otherwise there would be no navigation. Lex Mercat. 100. See Freight.

CHARTIS REDDENDIS, is a writ now in disuse which anciently lay against him that had charters or feoffment entrusted to his keeping, and refused to deliver them. Reg. Orig. 159.

CHASE, (Fr. chasse) is a great quantity of woody ground lying open, and privileged for wild beasts of the chase, which properly extend to the buck, doe, fox, martin, and roe, and in common and legal sense to all the beasts of the forest; which, besides the other, are reckoned to be hart, hind, hare, boar, and wolf, and in a word all wild beasts of venary, or hunting. Co. Lit. 233.

A chase is of a middle nature between a forest and a park, being commonly less than a forest, and not endowed with so many liberties, as the courts of attachment, swainmote, and justice-seat; though of a larger compass, and stored with greater diversity both of keepers, and wild beasts or game, than a park. Manwood.

A chase also differs from a forest in this, because it may be in the hands of a subject, which a forest in its proper and true nature cannot. Crompt. Jurisd. 148, 197.

For though the king may give or alienate aforest to a subject, yet it thereby loseth the true property of a forest, because the courts called the justice-seat, swainmote, &c. do forthwith vanish, none being able to make a lord chief justice in eyre of the forest, but the king, and yet it may be granted in so large a manner, as there may be attachment, swainmote, and a court equivalent to a justice-seat, and if such jurisdiction is not added in the grant, it becomes a chase, and trespassers in it are only punishable by the common law. Manwood, part 2. c. 3, 4. 4 Inst. 314.

A chase likewise differs from a park in that it is not inclosed; and also in that, a man may have a chase in another man's ground as well as his own, being indeed the liberty of keeping beasts of chace or royal game therein, protected even from the owner of the land, with a power of hunting them therein. 2 Black. Com. 38.

And if a person hath a chase in other men's grounds, and after purchaseth the grounds, the chase remaineth. 2 Inst. 318.

Also if a common person hath a chase in another's soil, the owner of the soil cannot destroy all the covert, but ought to leave sufficient thereof, and also browsewood, as hath been accustomed. 11 Rep. 22.

CHASOR, an hunting horse. Dederunt mihi unum chasorem, &c. Leg. Will. 1. cap. 22. Blount.

CHASTELLAINE, a noble woman: quasi castelli domina.

CHASTITY. The Roman law (Ff. 48, 8. 1.) justifies homicide in defence of the chastity either of one's self or relations; and so also, according to Selden, (de Legib. Hebræor. l. 4. c. 3.) stood the law in the Jewish republic. The English law likewise justifies a woman, killing one who attempts to ravish her. (Bac. Elem. 34. 1 Hawk. P. C. 71.) So the husband or father may justify killing a man, who attempts a rape upon his wife or daughter; but not if he takes them in adultery by consent, for the one is forcible and felonious, but not the other. 1 Hal. P. C. 485, 6. 4 Black. 181.

And without doubt the forcibly attempting a crime, of a still more detestable nature, may be equally resisted by the death of the unnatural aggressor. For the one uniform principle that runs through our own and all other laws seems to be this, that where a crime, in itself capital, is endeavoured to be committed by force, it is lawful to repel that force by the death of the party attempting. 4 Black. Com. 181.

CHATTELS, or CATALS, (from the Lat. catalla) which primarily signified only beasts of husbandry, or as we still call them cattle; but in its secondary sense it was applied to all movables in general. 2 Black. 385. And chattels are distributed by our law into two kinds, chattels real, and chattels personal. 2 Black. 386.

Chattels real are such as concern or savour of the realty or freehold, as terms for years of land, the next presentation to a church, estates by statute merchant, statute staple, elegit, or the like: and these are called real chattels, as being interests issuing out of or annexed to real estates, of which they have one quality, viz. immobility, which denominates them real: but want the other, viz. a sufficient legal indeterminate duration: and this want it is that constitutes them chattels: the utmost period for which they can last is fixed and determinate, either for such a space of time certain, or till such a particular sum of money be raised out of such a particular income. Thus a lease for years must necessarily fail at the end and completion of the term: the next presentation to a church is satisfied and gone the instant it comes into possession, that is, by the first avoidance, and presentation to the living; the conditional estates by statutes and elegits are determined as soon as the debt is paid; and if there be any other chattel real it will be found to correspond with the rest in this essential quality, that its duration is limited to a certain time, beyond which it cannot subsist. 1 Inst. 118. 2 Black. 386.

Chattels personal are properly and strictly speaking things movable, which may be annexed to or attendant on the person of the owner, and carried about with him from one part of the world to another. 2 Black. 387.

Thus gold, silver, plate, jewels, household-goods and wares in a shop, corn sown on the ground, carts, ploughs, coaches, saddles, cattle, as horses, oxen, kine, bullocks, sheep, pigs, and all tame fowls and birds, swans, turkeys, geese, poultry, are called personal in two respects, one because they belong immediately to the person of a man; and the other, for that being any way injuriously withheld from us we have no means to recover them but by personal action. Cp. Lit. 118. Noy 49.

But deeds relating to a freehold, obligations, and the like, which are things in action, are not reckoned under goods and chattels; nor is money, or animals feræ naturæ. 8 Rep. 33. Terms de Ley 103. Kitch. 32.

CHAUD-MEDLEY, is of pretty much the same import with chance-medley. The former, in its etymology, signifies an affray in the heat of blood, or passion; the latter, a casual affray. The latter is in common speech too often erroneously applied to any manner of homicide by misadventure; whereas it appears by the stat. 24 Hen. 8, c. 5. and our ancient books, Staundf. P. C. 16, that it is properly applied to such killing as happens in self-defence, upon sudden rencounter. 3 Inst. 55, 57. Foster 275, 6. 4 Black. Com. 184.

CHAUMPERT, a kind of tenure mentioned in Stat. 35 Ed. 3, to the hospital of Bowes in the isle of Guernsey. Cowel. Blount.

CHAUNTER, a singer in a cathedral. Ibid.

CHAUNTRY-RENTS, are rents paid to the crown by the servants or purchasers of chauntry-lands. 22 Car. 2. c. 6.

CHEATS, are deceitful practices in defrauding or endeavouring to defraud another of his known right by means of some artful device, contrary to the plain rules of common honesty; as by playing with false dice, or by causing an illiterate person to execute a deed to his prejudice, by reading it over to him in words different from those in which it was written; or by persuading a woman to execute writings to another as her trustee, upon an intended marriage, which in truth contained no such thing, but only a warrant of attorney to confess a judgment; or by suppressing a will, and such like. 1 Hawk. 188.

And by 33 Hen. 8. cap. 1, "if any person "falsely and deceitfully get into his hands "or possession any money or other things "of any other persons by colour of any "false token, &c. being convicted, he shall "have such punishment by imprisonment, "setting upon the pillory, or by any cor-"poral pain, except pains of death, as shall "be adjudged by the persons before whom "he shall be convicted." Sec. 2.

For this offence the offender cannot be fined, but corporal pain only inflicted if he be indicted on the statute. 3 Inst. 133.

But if he be indicted (as he may be) at common law, he may be fined and imprisoned. 4 Black. 158. 1 Hawk. 158.

And there are frauds which in a special case may not be helped civilly, and yet shall be punished criminally: as, if a minor goes about the town, and pretending to be of age defrauds many persons, by taking credit for a considerable quantity of goods, and then insisting on his nonage, the persons injured cannot recover the value of their goods, though they may indict and punish him for a common cheat. Burl. 100.

Also, by 30 Geo. 2. c. 24, persons convicted of obtaining money or goods by false pretences, or of sending threatening letters in order to extort money or goods, may be punished by fine and imprisonment, or by pillory, whipping, or transportation. But it has been determined on this statute that a false assertion or affirmation, without an artful device or contrivance, will not amount to a false pretence, and therefore it was held in the K. v. Lara, that it was not a false pretence within this statute to purchase goods and to give a bill for them drawn upon a banker with whom the drawer had no effects. 6 Ter. Rep. 565.

CHECK-ROLL, is a roll or book containing the names of such as are attendant on and in pay to the king or other great personages, as their household servants. Stat. 19 Car. 2. cap. 1. It is otherwise called the chequer-roll, and seems to take its etymology from the Exchequer. 14 Hen. 8. c. 3.

CHELINDRA, was a sort of ship. Cowel. Blount.

CHEST, an uncertain quantity of merchandise, wine, &c. Cowel. Blount.

CHESTER. See Counties Palatine.

CHEVAGE, (chevagium, from the Fr. chef, i. e. caput) was a tribute or sum of money formerly paid by such as held lands in villenage to their lords in acknowledgment, and was a kind of head or poll-money. Cowel. Blount.

CHEVANTIA, a loan or advance of money upon credit. Ibid.

CHEVERIL, (chevetillus) a young cock, or cockling. Ibid.

CHEVISANCE, (from the Fr. chevisance,) signifies an agreement or contract made in respect to the buying and selling of goods amongst traders, and is so used in stat. 13 Eliz. c. 7, relating to bankrupts.

CHEVITÆ, and CHEVISCÆ, are heads of ploughed lands. Cowel. Blount.

CHIEF RENTS, the rents of freeholders of manors often so called, i. e. reditus capitales. They are also denominated quit rents, quieti reditus, because thereby the tenant goes quit and free of all other services. 2 Black. Com. 42.

CHIEF PLEDGE, (plegius vel vas capitalis) mentioned 20 Hen. 6. c. 8. See Borough-head and Borough-holder.

CHIEF (TENANTS IN). Tenants in capite, holding immediately under the king, in right of his crown and dignity. 2 Black. Com. 60.

CHILDREN, (in law) are a man's issue, begotten on his wife. The duties of children to their parents arise from a principle of natural justice and retribution: for to those who gave us existence we naturally owe subjection and obedience during our minority, and honour and reverence ever after: they who protected the weakness of our infancy are entitled to our protection in the infirmities of their age: they who by sustenance have enabled their offspring to prosper, ought in return to be supported by that offspring, in case they stand in need of assistance: upon this principle proceed all the duties of children to their parents which are enjoined by positive laws: thus a child is equally justifiable in defending the person or maintaining the cause or suit of a bad parent as a good one; and is equally compellable by the stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2, made for the relief of the poor, if of sufficient ability, to maintain and provide for a wicked and unnatural progenitor, as for one who has shown the greatest tenderness and parental piety. 1 Black. 453, 454.

See also Age — Capacity — Infant, and Posthumous.

CHILDWIT, (Sax.) was a fine or penalty of a bond-woman unlawfully gotten with child. And according to Cowel it signified a power to take a fine of a bond-woman gotten with child without the lord's consent: and within the manor of Writtle, in the county of Essex, every reputed father of a base child pays to the lord, for a fine, 3*s.* 4*d.* where it seems to extend as well to free as bond-women; and the custom is there called childwit to this day. Blount.

CHIMIN, (from the Fr. chemin, i. e. via) is a way; which is of two sorts: the king's highway, and a private way. Comyns' Dig. tit. Chim.

CHIMINAGE, (Chiminagium) is a toll due by custom for having a way through a forest. Cromp. Jurisd. 189. Co. Lit. 56. Cowel. Blount.

CHIMNEY-MONEY, otherwise called hearth-money, a duty imposed by 14 Car. 2, c. 2, on every fire-hearth and stove of every dwelling or other house within England and Wales, which being much complained of, as burthensome to the people, was taken off by 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 18, which substituted an equally grievous duty on windows.

CHIMNEY SWEEPERS. By 28 Geo. 3. c. 48. the churchwardens and overseers of parishes, with the consent of two justices, may bind any boy of the age of eight years or more, chargeable to the parish, or who begs, or with the consent of the parent, to be apprentice to a chimney sweeper, until 16 years of age.

His age to be mentioned in the indenture, as taken from the register, or where none according to information. Ibid.

The form of the indenture is given, but they are not chargeable with the duty now chargeable on parish indentures. Ibid.

Covenants for keeping boys under eight years are void; and taking them otherwise is 10*l.* penalty, and not less than 5*l.* Ibid.

Overseers of the poor of any township or village may act. Ibid.

Any justice may determine complaints between masters and apprentices. Ibid.

No one shall keep more than six apprentices at one time, on like pain, and every master is to affix a brass plate with his name and place of abode, on the front of a leathern cap for the boy to wear when upon duty, on like pain. Ibid.

Masters ill treating apprentices, or being guilty of a breach of covenant, subjected to like pain. Ibid.

Masters are not to let apprentices to hire, nor cause them to call the streets before seven, nor after twelve between Michaelmas and Lady Day; nor before five and twelve, between Lady Day and Michaelmas, on like pain. Ibid.

A magistrate may convict; and the penalties are recoverable by distress; but not to issue till six days after conviction, and order for payment served; appeal lies to the informer. Ibid.

CHIPP, CHEAP, CHIPPING, signifies the place to be a market-town, as Chippenham, &c. Blount.

CHIPPINGAVEL, or cheapingavel, toll for buying and selling. Ibid.

CHIRCHGEMOT, or CHIRGEMOT, (circgemot, Sax.) a synod, or a meeting in a church or vestry. 4 Inst. 321. Cowel. Blount.

CHIROGRAPH, (chirographum, or scriptum chirographatum). Formerly when deeds were more concise than at present, it was usual to write both parts on the same piece of parchment, with some words or letters of the alphabet written between them, through which the parchment was cut, either in a straight or indented line, in such manner as to leave half the word CHIROGRAPH on in one part, and half in the other. Deeds thus made were denominated syngrapha by the canonists, and with us chirographa, or hand-writing; the word cirographum or cyrographum being usually that which is divided in making the indenture: and this custom is still preserved in making out the indentures of a fine. 2 Black. 296.

CHIROGRAPHER OF FINES, (chirographus finium et concordiarum of the Greek Χειρογραφον, a compound of χειρ manus, a hand, and γραφω, scribo, I write, a writing of a man's hand) signifies that officer in the Common Pleas who ingrosseth fines acknowledged in that court into a perpetual record, after they are examined and passed in the other offices, and that writes and delivers the indentures of them to the party: and this officer makes out two indentures, one for the buyer, another for the seller; and also makes one other indented piece, containing the effect of the fine, which he delivers to the custos brevium, which is called the foot of the fine. The chirographer likewise, or his deputy, proclaims all the fines in the court every term, according to the statute, and indorses the proclamations upon the backside of the foot thereof, and always keeps the writ of covenant, and note of the fine. 2 Inst. 468.

CHIVALRY, (servitium militare) comes from the Fr. chevalier, and in our law was used for a tenure of lands by knights service; whereby the tenant was bound to perform service in war unto the king, or the mesne lord of whom he held by that tenure.

It was only in the feoffment that the tenant held per servitium militare, without any specification of serjeanty, escuage, &c. Special, when it was declared particularly by what kind of knight-service the land was held.

By the stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24, tenures by knights service of the king, or any other person in capite, &c. and the fruits and consequences thereof are taken away and discharged; and all tenures are to be construed and adjudged to be free and common socage, &c.

CHOP-CHURCH, (ecclesiarum permutatio) a vulgar expression, used to denote the exchange of benefices; thus to chop and change is a common expression. Cowel. Blount.

CHORAL, (choralis) any person admitted to sit and serve God in the choir, or chorus. Ibid.

CHOREPISCOPI, Suffragan or rural bishops, now abolished. Kennet's Paroch. Antiq. 639.

CHOSE, (Fr.) a thing; used in the common law with divers epithets; as, chose local, chose transitory, and chose in action. Chose local is such a thing as is annexed to a place, as a mill, and the like: and chose transitory is that thing which is movable, and may be taken away, or carried from place to place: chose in action is a thing incorporeal, and only a right, which may be recoverd by suit, as an annuity, a bond or obligation for debt, covenant, or the like. And, generally, all causes of suit for any debt, duty, or wrong, are to be accounted choses in action: and it seems a chose in action may also be called chose in suspence, because it hath no real existence or being, nor can properly be said to be in our possession until after a verdict. Bro. tit. Chose in Action. 1 Lil. Abr. 264. 2. Black. 390.

When bonds or other specialties or debts are assigned, it is done with power of attorney to receive and sue in the assignor's name; so that though in this case a chose in action may be said to be assignable over to a certain extent, yet it amounts to little more than a letter of attorney to sue for the debt. Wood's Inst. 282. 1 Shep. Abr. 337.

CHRISM, a confection of oil and balsam consecrated by the bishop, and used in the popish ceremonies of baptism, confirmation, and sometimes ordination. Cowel. Blount.

CHRISMALE, Chrismal, Chrisom, the face-cloth, or piece of linen laid over the child's head at baptism, which in ancient times was a perquisite due to the parish priest. Ibid.

CHRISMATIS DENARII, chrisom-pence, money paid to the diocesan, or to his suffragan, by the parochial clergy, for the chrisom consecrated by them about Easter, for the holy uses of the year ensuing. Cartular. Mons. De Bernedy, Cotton. MS.

CHRISTIANITATIS CURIA, the court christian, or ecclesiastical judicature. See Court Christian.

CHURCH, (ecclesia) is a temple or building consecrated to the honour of God and religion, and anciently dedicated to some saint, whose name it assumed; or it is an "assembly of persons united by the profession of the same christian faith, met together for religious worship;" and if it hath administration of the sacraments and sepulture, it is in law adjudged a church.

A church in general consists of three principal parts, that is, the belfrey or steeple, the body of the church with the aisles, and the chancel: and not only the freehold of the whole church, but of the church-yard, are in the parson or rector; and the parson may have an action of trespass against any one that shall commit any trespass in the church or church-yard; as in the breaking of seats annexed to the church, or the windows, taking away the leads, or any of the materials of the church, cutting the trees in the church-yard, &c. Co. Lit. 644, 645.

Also a man may be indicted for digging up the graves of persons buried, and taking away their burial-dresses, &c. the property whereof remains in the party who was the owner when used: and it is said an offender was found guilty of felony in this case, but had his clergy. Co. Lit. 113.

The property of the bells, books, and other ornaments, and the goods of the church, is in the parishioners; but the custody of them is in the church-wardens, who may maintain action of trespass against such as shall wrongfully take them away. 1 Rol. Rep. 255.

The use of the body of the church, and the seats fixed to the freehold, is common to all the parishioners that pay to the repairs thereof. The chancel of the church is to be repaired by the parson, unless there be a custom to the contrary; and for these repairs the parson may cut down trees in the church-yard, but not otherwise. 35 E. 1. Stat. 2. viz. Stat. Ne Rector prosternat, &c. By the common law parishioners of every parish are bound to repair the church: 1 Salk. 164. and the Spiritual court may compel the parishioners to repair the church, and excommunicate every one of them till it be repaired; but those that are willing to contribute shall be absolved till the greater part agree to a tax, when the excommunication is to be taken off; but the spiritual court cannot assess them towards it. 1 Mod. 194. 1 Vent. 367. For though this court hath power to oblige the parishioners to repair by ecclesiastical censures, yet they cannot appoint in what sum, or set a rate, for that must be settled by the church-wardens, &c. 2 Mod. 8.

Where a church is so much out of repair that it is necessary to pull it down, in such case, upon a general warning to the parishioners, the major part, meeting, may make a rate for pulling it down, and rebuilding it on the old foundation, and it shall be good. And if any parishioner refuse to pay his proportion, they may libel against him in the ecclesiastical court. 2 Mod. 222. And if a church be down, and the parish is increased, the greater part of the parish may raise a tax for he necessary enlarging it, as well as the repairing thereof, &c. 1 Mod. 237.

Church rates for repairs are to be made by the church-wardens and the major part of the parishioners, which shall bind the others, after a general notice given; and if the parishioners refuse or neglect to meet upon such notice, or if on meeting they refuse to make a rate, then the church-wardens and overseers of the poor may make a rate, and levy it on the inhabitants, being first confirmed by the ordinary or archdeacon. And rates for repairing of churches, &c. are of ecclesiastical cognizance, and to be recovered in the ecclesiastical court. Also if a parish is unequally rated, those who are aggrieved must plead it in the spiritual court, being sued there. 1 Vent. 367. 2 Rol. Abr. 291.

These rates must be made upon the whole parish, and not on particular persons; and the charge is in respect of the land, upon every occupier, &c. If the owner lives in another parish he shall be rated for repairs in the parish where the lands lie, and not where he lives; for though the charge is upon the person, yet it is in regard of his lands: if he let the same by lease, then he shall be charged in respect of the rent reserved, and the farmer shall make up the rest. 2 Rol. Rep. 270.

The communion tables are to be kept in repair in churches, and covered in time of divine service with a carpet, &c. And the Ten Commandments to be set up at the east end of every church or chapel, and other chosen sentences of scripture upon the walls. Can. 82, 83.

By 1 Eliz. c. 2.; 23 Eliz. c 1.; and 3 Jac. 1, c. 4, every person is to repair to his parish church every Sunday, on pain of forfeiting 1*s.* for every offence; and being present at any form of prayer used contrary to the Book of Common Prayer, is punished with six months imprisonment, &c. Persons above sixteen years of age, who absent themselves from church above a month, are to forfeit 20*l. per* month to the king, and if they keep any inmate thus irreligiously disposed, in their houses, they forfeit 10*l. per* month. But protestant dissenters, not denying the Trinity, are exempted from the penalties by 1 W. & M. c. 18. And Roman catholics by 31 Geo. 3, c. 32.

No ill language is to be used, or noise made in churches or church-yards; and persons striking others there are to be excommunicated, and lose one of their ears: and a man may not lawfully return blows in his own defence in these cases. 5 & 6 Ed. 6. cap. 4. Disturbing dissenting or Roman catholic ministers officiating divine service, incurs three months imprisonment, and a forfeiture of 20*l.* by stat. 1 M. cap. 3, and 1 W. & M. c. 18. 31 G. 3. c. 32, any person may be indicted for indecent or irreverent behaviour in the church; and those that offend against the acts of uniformity are punishable either by indictment upon the statute, or by the ordinary, &c. See likewise Mag. Chart. 9 Hen. 3. c. 1.—5 Ed. 3.—13 Ed. 1, stat. 2. c. 6.—3 Ed. 1, stat. 2.—21 Ed. 1, c. 3.—9 Ed. 2, stat. 1, c. 10.—50 Ed. 3, c. 5.—1 Ric. 2, c. 5, and 15 Ric. 2, c. 15.

CHURCHWARDENS, (ecclesiæ guardiani) are ancient officers, chosen yearly in Easter week, by the minister and parishioners of every parish, to look to and take care of the church and church-yard, and the things belonging to the same.

They are to be chosen by the joint consent of the parishioners and minister; and by custom the minister may choose one, and the parishioners another; or by custom the parishioners alone may elect both, though it be against the canon. 1 Vent. 267.

They are sworn into their offices by the archdeacon; and if the archdeacon refuses to swear a churchwarden, a mandamus shall issue to compel him, Cro. Car. 551 for the parishioners are the proper judges, of their ability to serve, and not the archdeacon who swears them. 5 Mod. 325.

All peers of the realm, by reason of their dignity, are exempt from the office of church-warden; Gibs. 215. So are all clergymen, by reason of their order, Id. In like manner all parliament men, by reason of their privilege. Ibid.

If an attorney be made a churchwarden of a parish, he shall have a writ of privilege, showing his privilege to be discharged thereof, by reason of his attendance in court. Ibid.

And no person living out of the parish, although he occupies lands within the parish, may be chosen churchwarden, because he cannot take notice of absences from church, nor disorders in it, for the due presenting of them. Gibs. 215.

Churchwardens are in the nature of a corporation to sue and be sued for the goods of the church. 2 Cro. 325. Co. Lit. 3. 1 Rol. Abr. 390. 1 Rol. Abr. 393. Cro. Eliz. 179.

But the churchwardens have no right to, or interest in, the freehold and inheritance of the church, which alone belongs to the parson or incumbent. Comp. Incumb. 381.

Also, churchwardens cannot release to the prejudice of the church; nor can they dispose of the church goods without the consent of the vestry. If they waste the goods of the church the new churchwardens may have actions against them, or call them to account before the ordinary; though the parishioners cannot have an action against them for wasting the church goods, for they must make new churchwardens, who must prosecute the former, &c. 1 Dano. Abr. 788. 2 Cro. 145. Bro. Account, 1.

But they have such a special property in the organ, bells, parish books, bible, chalice, surplice, &c. belonging to the church, that for the taking away, or for any damage done any of these, they may bring an action at law, and therefore the person cannot sue for them in the spiritual court. 1 Bac. Abr. tit. Churchwarden.

General power of Churchwardens.] Besides their ordinary power, the churchwardens have the care of the benefice during its vacancy: and as soon as there is any avoidance they are to apply to the chancellor of the diocese for a sequestration; which being granted, they are to manage all the profits and expenses of the benefice for him that succeeds, plough and sow his glebes, gather in tithes, thrash out and sell corn, repair houses, &c. and they must see that the church be duly served by a curate approved by the bishop, whom they are to pay out of the profits of the benefice. 2 Inst. 489. They are to join with the overseers of the poor in making rates for the relief of the poor, setting up trades for employing them, placing out poor apprentices, settling poor persons, &c. and in the execution of their whole office, by statutes 43 Eliz. c. 2. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 12. 3 W. & M. c. 11, &c.

The churchwardens have no power to make any rate themselves, exclusive of the parishioners, their duty being only to summon the parishioners, who are to meet for that purpose, and when they are assembled a rate made by the majority present shall bind the whole parish, although the churchwardens voted against it. See Comp. Incumb. 389.

But if the churchwardens give the parishioners due notice that they intend to meet for that purpose, and the parishioners refuse to come, or being assembled, refuse to make any rate, they may make one without their concurrence; for as they are liable to be punished in the ecclesiatical courts for not repairing the church, it would be unreasonable that they should suffer by the wilfulness and obstinacy of others. 1 Vent. 367. 1 Mod. 79, 194.

The churchwardens, in summoning the parishioners need not do it from house to house, but a general public summons at the church is sufficient, and the major part of them that appear upon such summons will bind the whole parish. 1 Vent. 367. Comp. Incumb. 389.

Duty of Churchwardens.] The churchwardens are to take care of the repairs of the church; and if they erect, or add any thing new to the same, they must have the consent of the parishioners or vestry; and if in the church the license of the ordinary. 2 Inst. 489. 1 Vent. 367.

The churchwardens shall suffer no man to preach within their churches without producing his license: and they are to keep the keys of the belfrey, and take care that the bells be not rung without good cause, to be allowed of by the minister and themselves. Can. 50, 80.

Churchwardens are to see that all the parishioners duly resort to their parish-church, and there continue during the time of divine service. They are not to permit any to stand idle, walk, or make any noise in the church, or to contend for places, &c. they may apprehend those that disturb the minister, &c. and justify the appeasing any disorder in the church or church-yard; they are to chastise disorderly boys, and take off the hats of those who would irreverently keep them on. 1 Saund. 13.

Further, they must search alehouses on Sundays, that there be no persons therein during divine service; and execute warrants against those who profane the Lord's Day, &c. Also levy penalties on persons not coming to church, against prophaners of the Sabbath in pastimes, tippling, &c. and for drunkenness, cursing and swearing, &c. by divers statutes. And they are to present to the ordinary all things presentable by the ecclesiastical laws, which relate to the church, the parson, and parishioners: these presentments are made upon oath, and usually twice a year, especially at the visitation: and what relates to the church, is chiefly of repairs, and whether there be a box for alms, in the church, a Bible, Common Prayer Book, and Book of Canons, a desk for the reader, cushion for the pulpit, a communion-table, table-cloth, cups and covers for bread, flagons, and font, a register-book, king's arms set up, Lord's Prayer, creed and commandments, in fair letters, &c.

What concerns the parson is, whether he reads the Thirty-nine Articles twice a year, and the Canons once in the year; preaches every Sunday good doctrine; reads the Common Prayer; celebrates the sacraments; preaches in his gown; visits the sick; catechises children; marries according to law, &c.

And what relates to the parishioners is, whether they come to church, and duly attend the worship of God, if baptism be neglected, women not churched, persons marrying in prohibited degrees, or without banns or licence, alms-houses or schools abused, legacies given to pious uses, &c. They must likewise present crimes and offences, such as drunkenness, fornication, adultery, incest, blasphemy, &c. and by statute popish recusants: and if they refuse to make presentments, the parsons or vicars, &c. may present to the bishop all crimes committed in their parishes. Can. 117. Cro. Car. 291. 1 Vent. 114.

It is their duty to collect the charity-money upon briefs, which are to be read in churches, and the sums collected, &c. to be indorsed on the briefs in words at length, and signed by the minister and churchwardens; after which they shall be delivered, with the money collected to the persons undertaking them, in a certain time, under the penalty of 20*l.* A register is to be kept of all money collected, &c. Also the undertakers in two months after the receipts of the money, and notice to sufferers, are to account before a master in chancery, appointed by the lord chancellor. Stat. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 14.

They are to sign certificates of receiving the sacrament by persons, to qualify them to bear offices, &c.

Churchwardens' accounts.] At the end of the year the churchwardens are to yield just accounts to the minister and parishioners, and deliver what remains in their hands to the parishioners, or to the new churchwardens: in case they refuse, they may be presented at the next visitation, or the new officers may by process call them to account before the ordinary, or sue them by writ of account at common law. And if all the parish have allowed their accounts of the church goods, the ordinary may nevertheless call them to account before him too, and punish them if he find cause; but in laying out their money, they are punishable for fraud only, not indiscretion. If their receipts fall short of their disbursements, the succeeding churchwardens may pay them the balance, and place it to their account. 1 Rol. Abr. 121. Can. 89, 109, &c. Disputes arising about churchwardens' accounts are to be decided before the ordinary: and for disbursements of any sum not exceeding 40*s.* the churchwardens' oath alone is a sufficient proof; but for all sums above, receipts are to be produced, &c. If churchwardens through improvidence, indiscretion, or negligence, either waste the church goods in their custody, or much damnify the parish; on proof thereof they may be removed at any time, by the authority of the ordinary. 3 El. 4, 6. 13 Co. 70.

The spiritual court can only order the churchwardens' accounts to be audited, but cannot make a rate to reimburse them, because they are not obliged to lay out money before they receive it. Rep. temp. Hard. p. 381. Cro. Car. 285, 286.

CHURCH-REEVE, is the same with churchwarden, (reve in the Sax. being as much as guardian in the French.) Cowel. Blount.

CHURCHESSET, or churchset, circeseat, a Saxon word used in Domesday, which is interpreted quasi semen ecclesiæ, corn paid to the church. Ibid.

CHURCH-SCOT, customary oblations paid to the parish-priest; from which duties the religious sometimes purchased an exemption for themselves and their tenants. Ibid.

CHURLE, ceorle, carl, was in the Saxon time a tenant at will, of free condition, who held some land of the Thanes, on conditions of rents and services; which ceorles were of two sorts; one that hired the lord's tenementary estate, like our farmers; the other that tilled and manured the demesnes, (yielding work and not rent) and were thereupon called his sockmen or ploughmen. Spelm.

CINQUE-PORTS, (quinque portus). The cinque ports, as we now account them, are, Dover, Sandwich, Rumney, Winchelsea, and Rye; and to these we may add Hythe and Hastings, which are reckoned as part or members of the cinque ports: though by the first institution it is said that Winchelsea and Rye were added as members, and that the others were the cinque ports; there are also several other towns adjoining that have the privileges of the ports. These cinque ports have an especial governor, called lord warden of the cinque ports, and divers privileges granted them, as a peculiar jurisdiction; their warden having not only the authority of an admiral amongst them, but of sending out writs in his own name, &c. Stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 48. 4 Inst. 223. To hold pleas, &c. and the king's writs do not run there; but on a judgment in any of the king's courts, if the defendant hath no goods, &c. but in the ports; the plaintiff may get the record certified into chancery, and from thence sent by mittimus to the lord warden to make execution. 4 Inst. 223. 3 Leon. 3.

The constable of Dover castle is lord warden of the cinque ports. And there are several courts within the cinque ports; one before the constable, others within the ports themselves, before the mayors and jurats; another, which is called curia quinque portuum apud Shepway: there is likewise a court of chancery, in the cinque ports, to decide matters of equity; but no original writs issue thence. 1 Danv. Abr. 793. The jurisdiction of the cinque ports is general, extending to personal, real, and mixed actions: and if any erroneous judgment is given in the cinque ports before any of the mayors and jurats, writ of error lies not in B. R. but it shall be redressed, according to the custom, by bill in nature of a writ of error coram domino custode seu guardiano quinque portuum apud curiam suam, &c. And in these cases the mayor and jurats may be fined, and the mayor removed, &c. 4 Inst. 334. Crompt. Juriſd. 138.

The cinque ports cannot award process of outlawry. Cro. Eliz. 910. And a quo minus from the Exchequer, lies to the cinque ports. Ibid 911. Also if a man is imprisoned at Dover by the lord warden, an habeas corpus may be issued; for the privilege that the king's writ lies not there is intended between party and party, and there can be no such privilege against the king; and an habeas corpus is a prerogative writ, by which the king demands an account of the liberty of the subject. Cro. Jac. 543. 1 Nels. Abr. 447.

Also a certiorari lies to the cinque ports, to remove indictments; for the jurisdiction that brev. dom. regis non currit is only in civil causes between party and party: but this has been held to extend only to indictments before the mayors, barons, &c. as justices of peace, on late statutes, &c. Cro. Car. 252, 253. 2 Hawk. P. C. 286, 287.

CIRCA, a watch; from which circuitor; Cowel. Blount.

CIRCADA, a tribute anciently paid to the bishop or archdeacon for visiting the churches. Du Fresne.

CIRCUITS, certain divisions of the kingdom appointed for the judges to go, twice a year, for administering of justice, in the several counties. These circuits are made in the respective vacations, after Hilary and Trinity terms. 3 Black. Com. 58. 4 Black. 415, 417.

CIRCUITY OF ACTION, (circuitus actionis) is a longer course of proceeding to recover a thing sued for than is needful: as if a person grant a rent-charge of 10*l.* per annum out of his manor of B. and after the grantee disseiseth the grantor of the same manor, who brings an assise and recovers the land, and 20*l.* damages, which being paid, the grantee brings his action for 10*l.* of his rent due during the time of the disseisin, which he must have had if no disseisin had been: this is called circuity of action, because as the grantor was to receive 20*l.* damages, and pay 10*l.* rent, he might have received but 10*l.* only for damages, and the grantee might have kept the other 10*l.* in his hands by way of retainer for his rent, and so saved his action, which appears to be needless. Terms de Ley.

CIRCUMSPECTE AGATIS, is the title of a statute made anno 13 Ed. 1. relating to prohibitions, prescribing certain cases to the judges, wherein the king's prohibition lies not. 2 Inst. 187.

CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE, or the doctrine of presumption, takes place, next to positive proof: for when the fact itself cannot be demonstratively evinced, that which comes nearest to the proof of the fact is the proof of such circumstances which either necessarily or usually attend such facts; and these are called presumptions, which are only to be relied upon till the contrary be actually proved. Co. Lit. 373. 3 Black. Com. 371.

CIRCUMSTANTIBUS, tales de: signifies in our law the supplying or making up from the by-standers the number of jurors, if any impanelled appear not, or appearing are challenged by either party, by adding to them so many of those that are present or standing by that are qualified as will serve the turn. Stat. 35 H. 8. cap. 6. 3 Black. 365.

CITATION, (citatio) a summons to appear, applied particularly to process in the spiritual court, where they proceed according to the course of the civil and canon laws, by citation. But a person is not generally to be cited to appear out of the diocese, or peculiar jurisdiction where he lives; unless it be by the archbishop, in default of the ordinary; where the ordinary is party to the suit, in cases of appeal, or the like. And by law, a defendant may be sued where he lives, though the offence be in another diocese. 1 Nels. 449.

CITATIO AD INSTANTIAM PARTIS, is mentioned in 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 9. for laying impositions on proceedings at law. Blount.

CITY (civitas). A city is a town corporate, which is or hath been the see of a bishop and hath a cathedral; and though the bishoprick be dissolved, as at Westminster, yet still it remaineth a city. Co. Lit. 109. 1 Black. 114.

CITIZENS, (cives) are either freemen, or such as reside and keep a family in the city, &c. and some are citizens and freemen; and some are not, who have not so great privileges as the others. 1 Rol. Rep. 105.

CIVIL LAW, is that civil or municipal law which the old Romans used, compiled from the laws of nature and of nations, and comprised in the institutes, the code, and the digest of the emperor Justinian, and the novel constitutions of himself and some of his successors. 1 Black. 80.

The whole civil law is contained in four books or tomes, 1. The code. 2. The pandects or digests. 3. The institutes. 4. The novels or authentics. Ibid.

1. The code is divided into twelve books, and was the first book of the civil law, which the emperor Justinian ordered to be collected: it was published in the year 534, and contains the constitutions of fifty-six emperors, and their wise councils. Ferriers Hist. 2. The digests or pandects, were collected from the works and commentaries of the ancient lawyers, some whereof lived before the coming of our Saviour: this tome is divided into fifty books; and upon a more particular division, the whole digest is divided into seven parts. Ibid.

3. The institutes contain a system of the whole body of law, and are an epitome of the digest divided into four books; but sometimes they correct the digest: they are called institutes, because they are of instruction, and shew an easy way to the obtaining a knowledge of the civil law: but they are not so distinct and comprehensive as they might be, nor so useful at this time as they were at first. Ibid.

4. The novels or authentics were published at several times without any method: they are termed novels as they are new laws, and authentics, being authentically translated from the Greek into the Latin tongue; and the whole volume is divided into nine collations, constitutions or sections, and they again into 168 novels, which also are distributed into certain chapters. Ibid.

There are four species of courts in which the civil law is permitted under different restrictions to be used; 1st, the courts of the archbishop and bishop, and their derivative officers, usually called in our law, courts Christum, curiæ Christianitatis, or the ecclesiastical courts; 2d. the military courts; 3d. the courts of admiralty; 4th. the courts of the two universities. 1 Black. 83.

CIVIL LIST, is properly the whole of the king's revenue in his own distinct capacity. 1 Black. 332.

CLACK WOOL, is to cut off the sheep's mark, which makes it weigh lighter, as to force wool, signifies to clip off the upper and hairy part thereof; and to bard it, is to cut the head and neck from the rest of the fleece. Stat. 8 H. 6. cap 22. Cowel. Blount.

CLADES, clida, cleta, cleia, from the Brit. clie, and the Irish clia, a wattle or hurdle. Parock. Antiq. p. 575.

CLAIM, (clameum) is a challenge of interest in any thing that is in the possession of another, or at least out of a man's own, as claim by charter, by descent, &c. And claim is either verbal, where one doth by words claim and challenge the thing that is so out of his possession; or it is by an action brought, &c. and sometimes it relates to lands, and sometimes to goods and chattels. Lit. Sect. 420.

CLAIM OF LIBERTY, is a suit or petition to the king in the court of Exchequer, to have liberties and franchises confirmed there by the king's attorney-general. Co. Ent. 93.

CLAMEA ADMITTENDA IN ITINERE PER ATTORNATUM, an ancient writ now disused, by which the king commanded the justices in eyre to admit a person's claim by attorney who was employed in the king's service, and could not come in his own person. Reg. Orig. 19.

CLAP-BOARD, is a board cut in order to make casks or vessels. Stat. 35 El. c. 11. Cowel. Blount.

CLARENDON, (constitutions of) certain constitutions, made in the reign of Hen. 2. A. D. 1164, in a great council held at Clarendon, whereby the king checked the power of the pope, and his clergy, and greatly narrowed the total exemption they claimed from the secular jurisdiction. 4 Black. Com. 415.

CLARETUM, a liquor made of wine and honey, clarified or made clear by decoction: and it was from this, the red wines of France were called claret. Cowel. Blount.

CLARIGARIUS ARMORUM, an herald at arms. Cowel. Blount.

CLARIO, a trumpet. Cowel. Blount.

CLASSIARIUS, a seaman or soldier serving at sea. Ibid.

CLAUD, (Brit.) a ditch: from claudere, to enclose, or turn open fields into inclosures. Ibid.

CLAVES INSULÆ, is a term used in the Isle of Man, where all ambiguous and weighty cases are referred to twelve persons, whom they call claves insulæ, i. e. the keys of the island. Ibid.

CLAVIA, an ancient tenure, viz. by the serjeantry of the club or mace. Brady 22.

CLAVIGERATUS, a treasurer of a church. Cowel. Blount.

CLAUSE ROLLS, (rotuli clausi) contain all such matters of record as were committed to close writs: these rolls are preserved in the Tower. Ibid.

CLAUSTURA, brushwood for hedges and fences. Ibid.

CLAUSUM FREGIT, is a writ so called, because the defendant is summoned thereby to answer quare clausum fregit of the plaintiff, that is why he did such a trespass. It is the course of the common pleas, to declare in actions (especially upon an assumpsit or the like) upon a quare clausum fregit as they do on a latitat in the king's bench. 2 Vent. 192, 259.

But personal service of this writ of quare clausum fregit is not necessary; the defendant being to be summoned by the sheriff, which is done by the officers leaving a copy of the warrant, whereby he is directed to summon the party at his house; if the defendant does not appear at the return, a distringas issues to levy 40*s.* on the goods, and then a second to levy 4*l.* after which, if the defendant still continues in contempt, on affidavit and motion to the court, the issues to be distrained will be directed by the court to be increased to the full amount of the debt, and for default of appearance then the court will order the same to be sold.

CLAUSUM PASCHÆ, Stat. Westm. 1. in crastino clausi paschæ, or in crastino octabis paschæ, which is all one, that is the morrow of the utas of Easter. 2 Inst. 157.

CLAUSURA HEYÆ, the enclosure of a hedge. Cowel. Blount.

CLAWA, a close or small measure of land. Ibid.

CLEPTOR, this word is taken for a rogue or thief. Ibid.

CLERGY. (clerus) The clergy comprehends all persons in holy orders and in ecclesiastical offices, such as bishops, deans, parsons, vicars and like persons.

This venerable body of men, being separate and set apart from the rest of the people in order to attend the more closely to the services of Almighty God, have thereupon larger privileges allowed them by our municipal laws. 1 Black. 376.

Clergymen are liable to all public charges imposed by act of parliament, where they are not particularly excepted. But they are not to be chosen to any temporal offices, as the office of sheriff, bailiff, reeve, constable, or the like, (though they are sometimes in the commission of the peace, in which commissions they may either act as justices, or not act at their pleasure) nor are they to serve on juries, or obliged to appear at turns and leets; or to be pressed to serve in the wars in person, although by statutes they are compellable to contribute to the charge of a war, and to musters of the militia: their bodies are not to be taken upon statutes merchant or staple, &c. for the writ to take the body of the conusor is si laicus sit; and if the sheriff or any other officer arrest a clergyman upon any such process, it is said an action of false imprisonment lies against him that does it, or the clergyman arrested may have a supersedeas out of chancery. 2 Inst. 4. Finch. 88. 1 Black. 376.

Clergymen may not be arrested in the church, or church-yard, while attending on divine service, &c. (that is, for a reasonable time eundo redeundo et morando to perform divine service, 12 Co. 100.) on pain of imprisonment, and ransom at the king's pleasure, and likewise to make agreement with the party. 50 Ed. 3. c. 5. 1 Ric. 2. c. 16.

In cases also of felony, a clerk in orders shall have the benefit of his clergy, without being branded in the hand; and may likewise have it more than once. 2 Inst. 637. 4 Hen. 7. c. 13. 1 Ed. 6. c. 12. 1 Black. 377.

This is a privilege, peculiar to the clergy, that sentence of death can never be passed upon them for any number of manslaughters, bigamies, simple larcenies, or other clergyable offences: for a layman, even a peer may be ousted of clergy and will be subject to the judgment of death, upon a second conviction of a clergyable offence, thus if a layman has once been convicted of manslaughter, upon production of the conviction, he may afterwards suffer death for bigamy or any other felony within clergy, or which would not be a capital crime to another person not so circumstanced: but for the honor of the clergy, there are few or no instances in which they have had occasion to claim the benefit of this privilege. 1 Black. 377. 4 Black. 373. Lehn. 312.

But clergymen have no privilege in petty larcenies, but they are liable to be whipped or transported, like other persons for a petty larceny, though they are subject to no corporal punishment whatsoever, upon being convicted of a grand larceny or any clergyable felony. Christian, (n. 3.) 4 Black. 375.

But as they have their privileges, so also they have their disabilities, on account of their spiritual avocations; thus "no person having been ordained to the office of priest or deacon, is capable of being elected to serve in parliament, and if he shall sit in the house, he forfeits 500*l.* per day, and becomes incapable of holding any office or profession under the king." 41 Geo. 3. c. 17.

And by stat. 21 Hen. 8. c. 13. they are not in general, allowed to take any lands or tenements to farm, upon pain of 10*l.* per month, and total avoidance of the lease.

But if they have not sufficient glebe, they may take a farm for the necessary expences and consumption of their household. 43 Geo. 3. c. 84.

Nor shall they upon like pain keep any farmhouse or brewhouse, or engage in any manner of trade, nor sell any merchandize, under the forfeiture of treble the value. s. 9.

This prohibition is consonant to the canon law. 1 Black. 377. But though a clergyman is subject to this penalty for trading, yet his contracts with others as a trader are valid, and he is liable to be made a bankrupt. 1 Cooke's B. L. 33.

CLERGY, BENEFIT OF. 1. Clergy, the privilegium clericale, or in common speech the benefit of clergy, had its original from the pious regard paid by christian princes to the church in its infant state; and the ill use which the popish ecclesiastics soon made of that pious regard. The exemptions which they granted to the church, were principally of two kinds: 1. Exemption of places consecrated to religious duties, from criminal arrests, which was the foundation of sanctuaries: 2. Exemption of the persons of clergymen from criminal process before the secular judge in a few particular cases, which was the true original and meaning of the privilegium clericale. 4 Black. 365.

But the clergy, increasing in wealth, power, honour, number, and interest, began soon to set up for themselves: and that which they obtained by the favour of the civil government, they now claimed as their inherent right: and as a right of the highest nature, indefesible, and jure divino. From the following text of scripture; "touch not mine anointed, and do my prophets no harm."

Keilw. 181. By their canon laws therefore and constitutions they endeavoured at, and where they met with easy princes obtained, a vast extension of these exemptions: as well in regard to the crimes themselves, of which the list became quite universal; as in regard to the persons exempted, among whom were at length comprehended not only every little subordinate officer belonging to the church or clergy, but even many that were totally laymen. 4 Black. 366.

In England however, although the usurpations of the pope were very many and grievous, till Henry the eighth entirely exterminated his supremacy, yet a total exemption of the clergy from secular jurisdiction could never be thoroughly effected, though often endeavoured by the clergy, Keilw. 180. and therefore, though the antient privilegium clericale was in some capital cases, yet it was not universally allowed. And in those particular cases, the use was for the bishop or ordinary to demand his clerks to be remitted out of the king's courts, as soon as they were indicted: concerning the allowance of which demand there was for many years a great uncertainty, 2 Hal. P. C. 377. till at length it was finally settled in the reign of Henry the sixth, that the prisoner should first be arraigned; and might either then claim his benefit of clergy, by way of declinatory plea; or, after conviction, by way of arresting judgment. This latter way is most usually practised, as it is more to the satisfaction of the court to have the crime previously ascertained by confession or the verdict of a jury; and also it is more advantageous to the prisoner himself, who may possibly be acquitted, and so need not the benefit of his clergy at all. 4 Black. 366.

Originally the law was held, that no man should be admitted to the privilege of clergy, but such as had the habitum et tonsuram clericalem. 2 Hal. P. C. 372. M. Paris, A. D. 1259. But in process of time a much wider and more comprehensive criterion was established: every one that could read (a mark of great learning in those days of ignorance and her sister superstition) being accounted a clerk or clericus, and allowed the benefit of clerkship, though neither initiated in holy orders, nor trimmed with the clerical tonsure. But when learning, by means of the invention of printing, and other concurrent causes, began to be more generally disseminated than formerly; and reading was no longer a competent proof of clerkship, or being in holy orders; it was found that as many laymen as divines were admitted to the privilegium clericale: and therefore by statute 4 Hen. 7. c. 13. a distinction was once more drawn between mere lay scholars, and clerks that were really in orders. And, though it was thought reasonable still to mitigate the severity of the law with regard to the former, yet they were not upon the same footing with actual clergy; being subjected to a slight degree of punishment, and not allowed to claim the clerical privilege more than once. Accordingly the statute directs, that no person once admitted to the benefit of clergy, shall be admitted thereto a second time, unless he produces his orders: and in order to distinguish their persons, all laymen who are allowed this privilege shall be burnt with a hot iron in the brawn of the left thumb. This distinction between learned laymen, and real clerks in orders, was abolished for a time by the statutes 28 Hen. 8. c. 1. and 32 Hen. 8. c. 3. but it is held (Hob. 294. 2 Hal. P. C. 375.) to have been virtually restored by statute 1 Ed. 6. c. 12. which statute also enacts that lords of parliament and peers of the realm, having place and voice in parliament, may have the benefit of their peerage, equivalent to that of clergy, for the first offence, (although they cannot read, and without being burnt in the hand,) for all offences then clergyable to commoners, and also for the crimes of house-breaking, highway-robbery, horse-stealing, and robbing of churches. 4 Black. 367.

After this burning the laity, and before it, the real clergy, were discharged from the sentence of the law in the king's courts, and delivered over to the ordinary, to be dealt with according to the ecclesiastical canons. Whereupon the ordinary, not satisfied with the proofs adduced in the profane secular court, set himself formally to work to make a purgation of the offender by a new canonical trial; although he had been previously convicted by his country, or perhaps by his own confession. Staund. P. C. 158. This trial was held before the bishop in person, or his deputy; and by a jury of twelve clerks: and there, first, the party himself was required to make oath of his own innocence; next, there was to be the oath of twelve compurgators, who swore they believed he spoke the truth; then, witnesses were to be examined upon oath, but on behalf of the prisoner only: and, lastly, the jury were to bring in their verdict upon oath, which usually acquitted the prisoner; otherwise, if a clerk, he was degraded, or put to penance, 3 P. Wms. 447. Hob. 289. A learned judge in the beginning of the last century, Hob. 291. remarks with much indignation the vast complication of perjury and subornation of perjury, in this solemn farce of a mock trial; the witnesses, the compurgators, and the jury, being all of them partakers in the guilt: the delinquent party also, though convicted before on the clearest evidence, and conscious of his own offence, yet was permitted and almost compelled to swear himself not guilty; nor was the good bishop himself, under whose countenance this scene of wickedness was daily transacted, by any means exempt from a share of it. And yet by this purgation the party was restored to his credit, his liberty, his lands, and his capacity of purchasing afresh, and was entirely made a new and an innocent man. 4 Black. 367, 8.

This scandalous prostitution of oaths, and the forms of justice, in the almost constant acquittal of felonious clerks by purgation, was the occasion, that, upon very heinous and notorious circumstances of guilt, the temporal courts would not trust the ordinary with the trial of the offender, but delivered over to him the convicted clerk, absque purgatione facienda: in which situation the clerk convict could not make purgation; but was to continue in prison during life, and was incapable of acquiring any personal property, or receiving the profits of his lands, unless the king should please to pardon him. Both these courses were in some degree exceptionable; the latter being perhaps too rigid, as the former was productive of the most abandoned perjury. As therefore these mock trials took their rise from factious and popish tenets, tending to exempt one part of the nation from the general municipal law; it became high time, when the reformation was thoroughly established, to abolish so vain and impious a ceremony. 4 Black. 368.

Accordingly the stat. 18 Eliz. c. 7 enacts, that, "for the avoiding of such perjuries "and abuses, after the offender has been al- "lowed his clergy, he shall not be delivered "to the ordinary, as formerly; but, upon "such allowance and burning in the hand, "he shall forthwith be enlarged and deli- "vered out of prison; with proviso, that the "judge may, if he thinks fit, continue the "offender in gaol for any time not exceeding "a year." And thus the law continued, for above a century unaltered; except only that the statute 21 Jac. 1. c. 6. allowed, that "women convicted of simple larcenies under "the value of ten shillings should" (not properly have the benefit of clergy, for they were not called upon to read; but) "be "burned in the hand, and whipped, stocked, "or imprisoned for any time not exceeding "a year." And a similar indulgence by the statutes 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 9. and 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 24. was extended to women, guilty of any clergyable felony whatsoever; "who "were allowed once to claim the benefit of "the statute, in like manner as men might "claim the benefit of clergy, and to be dis- "charged upon being burned in the hand, "and imprisoned for any time not exceeding "a year." The punishment of burning in the hand being found ineffectual was also changed by statute 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 23. into "burning in the most visible part of the "left cheek, nearest the nose:" but, such an indelible stigma being found by experience to render offenders desperate, this provision was repealed about seven years afterwards, by statute 5 Ann. c. 6. and, till that period, all women, all peers of parliament and peeresses, and all male commoners who could read, were discharged in all clergyable felonies; the males absolutely, if clerks in orders; and other commoners, both male and female, upon branding, and peers and peeresses without branding, for the first offence: yet all liable (excepting peers and peeresses) if the judge saw occasion, to imprisonment not exceeding a year. And those men, who could not read, if under the degree of peerage, were hanged. 4 Black. 368, 9.

Afterwards indeed it was considered, that education and learning were no extenuations of guilt, but quite the reverse: and that, if the punishment of death for simple felony was too severe for those who had been liberally instructed, it was, a fortiori, too severe for the ignorant also. And thereupon by the same statute 5 Ann. c. 6. it was enacted, that "if a person convicted of a clergyable "offence shall pray the benefit of this act, "he shall not be required to read, but shall "be taken to be, and punished as, a clerk "convict." And experience having shewn, that so very universal a lenity was frequently inconvenient, and an encouragement to commit the lower degrees of felony; and that, though capital punishments were too rigorous for these inferior offences, yet no punishment at all (or next to none) was as much too gentle; it was farther enacted by the same statute, that "when any person is convicted of "any theft or larceny, and burnt in the "hand for the same according to the ancient "law, he shall also, at the discretion of the "judge, be committed to the house of cor- "rection or public workhouse, to be there "kept to hard labour, for any time not less "than six months, and not exceeding two "years; with a power of inflicting a double "confinement in case of the party's escape "from the first." And it was also enacted by the statutes 4 Geo. 1. c. 11. and 6 Geo. 1. c. 23. that "when any persons shall be con- "victed of any larceny, either grand or pe- "tit, or any felonious stealing or taking of mo- "ney or goods and chattels either from the "person or the house of any other, or in any "other manner, and who by the law shall be "entitled to the benefit of clergy, and liable "only to the penalties of burning in the "hand or whipping, the court in their dis- "cretion, instead of such burning in the "hand or whipping, may direct such of- "fenders to be transported to America, (or, "by statute 19 Geo. 3. c. 74. to any other "parts beyond the seas) for seven years: "and if they return or are seen at large in "this kingdom within that time, it shall be "felony without benefit of clergy."

It is also enacted by the same statute, 19 Geo. 3. c. 74. that "instead of burning in "the hand (which was sometimes too slight and "sometimes too disgraceful a punishment) the "court in all clergyable felonies may im- "pose a pecuniary fine; or (except in the "case of manslaughter) may order the of"fender to be once or oftener, but not more

"than thrice, either publicly or privately
"whipped; such private whipping (to pre"vent collusion or abuse) to be inflicted in
"the presence of two witnesses, and in case
"of female offenders in the presence of fe"males only. Which fine or whipping shall "have the same consequences as burning in
"the hand; and the offender, so fined or
"whipped, shall be equally liable to a sub"sequent detainer or imprisonment."

And in consequence of these statutes, persons convicted of manslaughters, bigamies, and simple grand larcenies, are still asked what they have to say why judgment of death should not be pronounced upon them? And they are then told to kneel down, and pray the benefit of the statute. Christian in (n. 2.) 4 Black. 370.

In this state does the benefit of clergy at present stand; very considerably different from its original institution: the wisdom of the English legislature having converted, by gradual mutations, what was at first an unreasonable exemption of particular popish ecclesiastics, into a merciful mitigation of the general law, with respect to capital punishment. 4 Black. 372.

What persons are allowed the benefit of clergy.] At this day all clerks in orders are, without any branding, and of course without any transportation, fine, or whipping, (for those are only substituted in lieu of the other,) to be admitted to this privilege, and immediately discharged; and this as often as they offend. 2 Hal. P. C. 375. Again, all lords of parliament and peers of the realm having place and voice in parliament, by the statute 1 Ed. 6. c. 12, (which is likewise held to extend to peeresses*,) shall be discharged in all clergyable and other felonies, provided for by the act, without any burning in the hand or imprisonment, or other punishment substituted in its stead, in the same manner as real clerks convict: but this is only for the first offence. Lastly, all the commons of the realm, not in orders, whether male or female, shall for the first offence be discharged of the capital punishment of felonies within the benefit of clergy, upon being burnt in the hand, whipped, or fined, or suffering a discretionary imprisonment in the common gaol, the house of correction, one of the penitentiary houses, or in the places of labour for the benefit of some navigation; or in case of larceny, upon being transported for seven years, if the court shall think proper. 4 Black. 373.

A layman, who has once had the benefit of clergy, may be precluded from obtaining it a second time, by a counter-plea on the part of the prosecution, averring the identity of the prisoner's person, and that he had before been allowed the benefit of his clergy, though the second crime be quite different from the first. As a person convicted of bigamy is liable to suffer death for a manslaughter, or any other clergyable felony. Leach. 312.

For what crimes the benefit of clergy is to be allowed.] The benefit of clergy was not allowed at common law, neither in high treason, nor in petit larceny, nor in any mere misdemeanors, and therefore it may be laid down for a rule, that it was allowable only in petit treason and capital felonies: which for the most part became legally intitled to this indulgence by the statute de clero, 25 Ed. 3. st. 3. c. 4. which provides that clerks convict for treasons or felonies, touching other persons than the king himself or his royal majesty, shall have the privilege of holy church. But yet it was not allowable in all felonies whatsoever: for in some it was denied even by the common law, viz. insidiatio viarum, or lying in wait for one on the highway; depopulatio agrorum, or destroying and ravaging a country, 2 Hal. P. C. 33; and combustio domorum, or arson, that is, the burning of houses 1 Hal. P. C. 346. all which are a kind of hostile acts, and in some degree border upon treason. And farther, all these identical crimes, together with petit treason, and very many other acts of felony, are ousted of clergy by particular acts of parliament. 4 Black. 373.

Upon all which statutes we may observe the following rules: 1st, that in all felonies, whether new created or by common law, clergy is now allowable, unless taken away by express words of an act of parliament, 2 Hal. P. C. 330. 2nd, That where clergy is taken away from the principal, it is not of course taken away from the accessory, unless he be also particularly included in the words of the statute. 2 Hawk. P. C. 341. 3. That, when the benefit of clergy is taken away from the offence, (as in case of murder, buggery, robbery, rape, and burglary,) a principal in the second degree, being present, aiding, and abetting the crime, is as well excluded from his clergy as he that is principal in the first degree: but 4. That, where it is only taken away from the person committing the offence, his aiders and abettors are not excluded, through the tenderness of the law, which hath determined that such statutes shall be taken literally. 1 Hal. P. C. 529. Foster 356, 357. 4 Black. 374.

* Upon the conviction of the duchess of Kingston for bigamy, it was argued by the attorney-general Thurlow, that peeresses were not entitled by this stat. of 1 Ed. 6. c. 12. like peers, to the privilege of peerage; but it was the unanimous opinion of the judges, that a peeress convicted of a clergyable felony, ought to be immediately discharged without being burnt in the hand, or without being liable to any imprisonment. 11 H. St. Tr. 264. If the duchess had been admitted, like a commoner, only to the benefit of clergy, burning in the hand at that time could not have been dispensed with.

The argument was, that the privilege of peerage was only an extension of the benefit of clergy, and therefore granted only to those who were or might be entitled to that benefit; but as no female, peeress or commoner, at that time was entitled to the benefit of clergy, so it was not the intention of the legislature to grant to any female the privilege of peerage.

The allowance of the benefit of clergy, operates as a statute pardon; but the consequences are, 1st. that by the conviction the offender forfeits all his goods to the king; which being once vested in the crown, shall not afterwards be restored. 2. That, after conviction, and till he receives the judgment of the law, by branding or some of its substitutes, or else is pardoned by the king, he is to all intents and purposes a felon, and subject to all the disabilities and other incidents of a felon. 3. That, after burning or its substitute, or pardon, he is discharged for ever of that, and all other felonies before committed, within the benefit of clergy, but not of felonies from which such benefit is excluded: and this by stat. 8 Eliz. c. 4. and 18 Eliz. c. 7. 4. That by the burning, or its substitute, or the pardon of it, he is restored to all capacities and credits, and the possession of his lands, as if he had never been convicted. 5. That what is said with regard to the advantages of commoners and laymen subsequent to the burning in the hand, is equally applicable to all peers and clergymen, although never branded at all, or subjected to other punishment in its stead: for they have the same privileges, without any burning, or any substitute for it, which others are entitled to after it. 2 Hal. P. C. 388, 9. 3 Peere Wms. 487. 5 Rep. 110. 4 Black. 373.

CLERICO ADMITTENDO. Upon a presentation to a benefice recovered in a quare impedit, or assise of darrein presentment, the execution is by this writ, directed not to the sheriff, but to the bishop or his metropolitan, requiring them to admit and institute the clerk of the plaintiff. 3 Black. Com. 413.

CLERICO INFRA SACROS ORDINES CONSTITUTO, NON ELIGENDO IN OFFICIUM, is a writ directed to those who have thrust a bailiwick, or other office upon one in holy orders, charging them to release him. Reg. Orig. 143.

CLERICO CAPTO PER STATUTUM MERCATORUM, &c. A writ for the delivery of a clerk out of prison, who is taken and imprisoned upon the breach of a statute merchant. Reg. Orig. 147.

CLERICO CONVICTO COMMISSO GAOLÆ IN DEFECTU ORDINARII DELIVERANDO, is an ancient writ that lay for the delivery of a clerk to his ordinary, that was formerly convicted of felony, by reason his ordinary did not challenge him according to the privileges of clerks. Reg. Orig. 69.

CLERK, (clericus) in the most general signification, is one that belongs to the holy ministry of the church; and is said to be properly a minister or priest in holy orders. Cowel. Blount. 1 Black. 388.

CLERK, in another sense, signifies a person who practises his pen in any court, or otherwise; of which clerks there are various kinds, in several offices, for the officers of the courts of law were formerly often clergymen; hence to this day their successors are denominated clerks. 1 Black. 16, 17.

CLERK OF THE ACTS, is an officer in the navy office, whose business is to record all orders, contracts, bills, warrants, &c. transacted by the lord high admiral, or lords commissioners of the admiralty, and commissioners of the navy. See 16 Car. 2. c. 5. and 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 11.

CLERK OF AFFIDAVITS, in the court of chancery, is an officer that files all affidavits made use of in court.

CLERK OF THE ASSISE, is he that records all things judicially done by the justices of assise in their circuits. Cromp. Jurisd. 227. And this officer is associated to the judge in the commission of assise, to take assises, &c.

CLERK OF THE BAILS, an officer belonging to the court of king's bench. He files the bail pieces taken in that court, and attends for that purpose.

CLERK OF THE CHECK, is an officer in the king's court, so called, because he hath the check and controlment of the yeomen of the guard, and all other ordinary yeomen belonging either to the king, queen, or prince; giving leave, or allowing their absence in attendance, or diminishing their wages for the same: he also by himself or deputy takes the view of those that are to watch in the court, and hath the setting of the watch. 33 H. 8. c. 12. Also there is an officer of the same name in the king's navy at Plymouth, Deptford, Woolwich, Chatham, &c. 19 Car. 2. c. 1.

CLERK CONTROLLER OF THE KING'S HOUSE, is an officer in the king's court, that hath authority to allow or disallow charges and demands of pursuivants, messengers of the green cloth, &c. He hath likewise the oversight of all defects and miscarriages of any of the inferior officers; and hath a right to sit in the counting-house, with the superior officers, viz. the lord steward, treasurer, controller, and cofferer of the household, for correcting any disorders. 33 H. 8. c. 12.

CLERK OF THE CROWN, (clericus co- ronæ) an officer in the king's bench, whose function is to frame, read and record all indictments against offenders there arraigned or indicted of any public crime. He is also termed clerk of the crown-office, and exhibits informations, by order of the court, for divers offences.

CLERK OF THE CROWN IN CHANCERY, is an officer in that court who continually attends the lord chancellor in person or by deputy: he writes and prepares for the great seal, special matters of state by commission, or the like, either immediately from his majesty's orders, or by order of his council, as well ordinary as extraordinary, viz. commissions of lieutenancy, of justices of assise, oyer and terminer, gaol delivery, and of the peace, with their writs of association, &c. All general pardons, at the king's coronation, or in parliament, where he sits in the lord's house in parliament time; and into whose office the writs of parliament, with the names of knights and burgesses elected thereupon, are to be returned and filed. He hath likewise the making out of all special pardons; and writs of execution upon bonds of statute staple forfeited; which was annexed to his office in the reign of queen Mary, in consideration of his chargeable attendance.

CLERK OF THE DECLARATIONS, an officer of the court of king's bench, that files all declarations in causes there depending.

CLERK OF THE DELIVERIES, is an officer in the Tower of London, who exercises his office in taking of indentures for all stores, ammunition, &c. issued from thence.

CLERK OF THE ERRORS, (clericus errorum) in the court of common pleas, transcribes and certifies into the king's bench the tenor of the records of the cause or action, upon which the writ of error, made by the cursitor, is brought there to be heard and determined. The clerk of the errors in the king's bench, likewise transcribes and certifies the records of causes in that court into the exchequer, if the cause or action were by bill: if by original, the lord chief justice certifies the record into the house of peers in parliament, by taking the transcript from the clerk of the errors, and delivering it to the lord chancellor, there to be determined, according to the statutes 27 Eliz. c. 8. and 31 Eliz. c. 1. The clerk of the errors in the exchequer also transcribes the records, certified thither out of the king's bench, and prepares them for judgment in the court of exchequer chamber, to be given by the justices of C. B. and barons there. Stat. 16 Car. 2. c. 2. 20 Car 2. c. 4.

CLERK OF THE ESSOINS, is an officer belonging to the court of common pleas, who keeps the essoin rolls; and the essoin roll is a record of that court: he has the providing of parchment, and cutting it out into rolls, marking the numbers thereon; and the delivery out of all the rolls to every officer of the court; the receiving of them again when they are written, and the binding and making up the whole bundles of every term; which he doth as servant of the chief justice. The chief justice of C. B. is at the charge of the parchment of all the rolls, for which he is allowed, as is also the chief justice of B. R. besides the penny for the seal of every writ of privilege and outlawry, the seventh penny taken for the seal of every writ in court under the green wax, or petit seal; the said lord chief justices having annexed to their offices or places, the custody of the said seals belonging to each court.

CLERK OF THE ESTREATS, (clericus extractorum) a clerk or officer belonging to the exchequer, who every term receives the estreats out of the lord treasurer's remembrancer's office, and writes them out to be levied for the king: and he makes schedules of such sums estreated as are to be discharged.

CLERK OF THE HANAPER, or HAMPER, is an officer in the chancery, whose office is to receive all the money due to the king, for the seals of charters, patents, commissions and writs; as also fees due to the officers for inrolling and examining the same. He is obliged to attendance on the lord chancellor daily in the term time, and at all times of sealing, having with him leather bags, wherein are put all charters, &c. After they are sealed, those bags, being sealed up with the lord chancellor's private seal, are delivered to the controller of the hanaper, who, upon receipt of them, enters the effect of them in a book, &c. This hanaper represents what the Romans termed fiscum, which contained the emperor's treasure; and the exchequer was anciently so called, because in eo reconderentur hanapi & scutræ cæteraquæ vasa quæ in censum & tributum persolvi solebant; or it may be for that the yearly tribute which princes received was in hampers or large vessels full of money.

CLERK OF THE INROLLMENTS, is an officer of the common pleas, that inrolls and exemplifies all fines and recoveries, and returns writs of entry, summons and seisin, &c.

CLERK OF THE JURIES, (clericus juratorum) an officer belonging to the court of common pleas, who makes out the writs of habeas corpora and distringas, for the appearance of juries; either in that court, or at the assises, after the jury or panel is returned upon the venire facias: he also enters into the rolls the awarding of these writs; and makes all the continuances from the going out of the habeas corpora until the verdict is given.

CLERK OF THE MARKET, (clericus mercati hospitii regis) is an officer of the king's house, to whom it belongs to take charge of the king's measures, and keep the standards of them, which are examples of all measures throughout the land; as of ells, yards, quarts, gallons, &c. And of weights, bushels, &c. And to see that all weights and measures in every place be answerable to the said standard. For the court of the clerk of the market, see Courts.

CLERK MARSHAL OF THE KING'S HOUSE, an officer that attends the marshal in his court, and records all his proceedings. 33 H. 8. c. 22.

CLERK OF THE NISCHILS, or NIHILS, (clericus nihilorum) an officer of the court of exchequer, who makes a roll of all such sums as are nihiled by the sheriffs upon their estreats of green wax, and delivers the same into the remembrancer's office, to have execution done upon it for the king.

CLERK OF THE ORDNANCE, is an officer in the Tower, who registers all orders touching the king's ordnance.

CLERK OF THE OUTLAWRIES, (clericus utlagariarum) an officer belonging to the court of common pleas, being the servant or deputy to the king's attorney-general, for making out writs of capias utlagatum, after outlawry; the king's attorney's name being to every one of those writs.

CLERK OF THE PAPER-OFFICE, is an officer in the court of king's bench, that makes up the paper-books of special pleadings and demurrers in that court.

CLERK OF THE PAPERS, an officer in the common pleas; who hath the custody of the papers of the warden of the Fleet, enters commitments and discharges of prisoners, delivers out day-rules, &c.

CLERK OF A PARISH. The parish clerk is regarded by the common law, as a person who has a freehold in his office, and therefore, though he may be punished, yet he cannot be deprived by ecclesiastical censures. 2 Rol. Abr. 234.

For it has been resolved, that if the parish clerk misdemean himself in his office, or in the church, he may be sentenced for it in the ecclesiastical court to excommunication, but not to deprivation. 2 Brownl. 38. And when a parish clerk is nominated, he is by common law an officer, and in for life without deed. 2 Salk. 536.

And a parish clerk may sue in court Christian for his fees. Reg 52. 2 Rol. Rep. 71.

The parish clerk was formerly very frequently in holy orders, and some are so to this day: he is generally appointed by the incumbent, but by custom, may be chosen by the inhabitants, and if such custom appears, the court of king's bench will grant a mandamus to the archdeacon to swear him in; for the establishment of the custom turns it into a temporal right. Cro. Car. 589. 1 Black. 395.

CLERK OF THE PARLIAMENT ROLLS, (clericus rotulorum parliamenti) is he who records all things done in the high court of parliament, and ingrosseth them in parchment rolls, for their better preservation to posterity: of these officers there are two, one in the lords' house, and another in the house of commons.

CLERK OF THE PATENTS, or of the letters patent under the great seal of England, an office erected 18 Jac. 1.

CLERK OF THE PEACE, (clericus pacis) is an officer belonging to the sessions of the peace: his duty is to issue sessions, process, record the proceedings therein, and do particular acts directed by divers statutes.

The custos rotulorum of the county hath the appointment of the clerk of the peace, who may execute his office by deputy. 37 H. 8. c. 1. And if the clerk of the peace misdemeans himself, the justices of peace in quarter-sessions have power to discharge him; and the custos rotulorum is to choose another resident in the county, or on his default the sessions may appoint one: the place is not to be sold, on pain of forfeiting double the value of the sum given, and disability to enjoy it, &c. Stat. 1 W. & M. sess. 1. c. 21.

CLERK OF THE PELL, (clericus pellis) is a clerk belonging to the exchequer, whose office is to enter every teller's bill into a parchment roll called pellis recepiorum, and also to make another roll of payments, which is termed pellis exituum; wherein he sets down by what warrant the money was paid. See stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 22.

CLERK OF THE PETTY-BAG, (clericus parvæ bagæ) an officer of the court of chancery. There are three of these officers, of whom the master of the rolls is the chief. Their office is to record the return of all inquisitions out of every shire; to make out patents of customers, guagers, controllers, &c. all conges d' elire for bishops, the summons of the nobility, and burgesses to parliament; commissions directed to knights and others of every shire, for assessing subsidies and taxes: all offices found post mortem are brought to the clerks of the petty-bag to be filed; and by them are entered all pleadings of the chancery concerning the validity of patents or other things which pass the great seal; they also make forth liberates upon extents of statutes staple, and recovery of recognizances forfeited, and all eligits upon them: and all suits for or against any privileged person are prosecuted in their office, &c.

CLERK OF THE PIPE, (clericus pipæ) is an officer in the exchequer who having the accounts of debts due to the king, delivered and drawn out of the remembrancer's offices, charges them down in the great roll, and is called clerk of the pipe from the shape of that roll, which is put together like a pipe: he also writes out warrants to the sheriffs to levy the said debts upon the goods and chattels of the debtors; and if they have no goods, then he draws them down to the lord treasurer's remembrancer, to write estreats against their lands. The ancient revenue of the crown stands in charge to him, and he sees the same answered by the farmers and sheriffs: he makes a charge to all sheriffs of their summons of the pipe, and green wax, and takes care to be answered on their accounts. And he hath the drawing and ingrossing of all leases of the king's lands; having a secondary and several clerks under him. In the reign of king Henry VI. this officer was called ingrossator magni rotuli. See Stat. 33 H. 8 c. 22.

CLERK OF THE PLEAS, (clericus placitorum) an officer in the court of exchequer, in whose office all the officers of the court, upon special privilege belonging unto them, ought to sue or be sued in any action, &c. In this office are also prosecuted actions at law, by other persons as well as officers of the court; but the plaintiff ought to be tenant, or debtor to the king, or some way accountant to him: now it is only matter of form. The clerk of the pleas has under him a great many clerks, who are attornies in all suits commenced or depending in the exchequer.

CLERK OF THE PRIVY SEAL, (clericus privati sigilli.) There are four of the officers which attend the lord privy seal: or if there be no lord privy seal, the principal secretary of state; writing and making out all things that are sent by warrant from the signet to the privy seal, and which are to be passed to the great seal: also they make out privy seals, upon a special occasion of his majesty's affairs, as for loan of money, and the like. He that is now called lord privy seal, seems to have been in ancient times called clerk of the privy seal; but notwithstanding to have been reckoned in the number of the great officers of the realm. Stat. 12 R. 2. c. 11. and 27 H. 8. c. 11.

CLERK OF THE ROLLS, an officer of the chancery, that makes search for, and copies deeds, offices, &c.

CLERK OF THE RULES, in the court of king's bench, is he who draws up and enters all the rules and orders made in court: and gives rules of course on divers writs: this officer is mentioned in the 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 22.

CLERK OF THE SEWERS, an officer belonging to the commissioners of sewers, who writes and records their proceedings, which they transact by virtue of their commissions, and the authority given them by statute 13 Eliz. c. 9.

CLERK OF THE SIGNET, (clericus signeti) is an officer continually attendant on his majesty's principal secretary, who hath the custody of the privy signet, as well for sealing his majesty's private letters, as such grants as pass the king's hand by bill signed: and of these clerks or officers there are four, that attend in their course, and have their diet at the secretary's table.

CLERK OF THE KING'S SILVER, (clericus argenti regis) is an officer belonging to the court of common pleas, to whom every fine is brought after it hath passed the office of the custos brevium, and by whom the effect of the writ of covenant is entered into a paper-book; according to which all the fines of that term are recorded in the rolls of the court. After the king's silver is entered, it is accounted a fine in law, and not before.

CLERK OF THE SUPERSEDEAS, an officer belonging to the court of common pleas, who makes out writs of supersedeas, upon a defendant's appearing to the exigent on an outlawry, whereby the sheriff is forbidden to return the exigent.

CLERK OF THE TREASURY, (clericus thesaurarii) is an officer of the common pleas, who hath the charge of keeping the records of the court, and makes out all the records of nisi prius; also he makes all exemplifications of records being in the Treasury; and he hath the fees due for all searches. He is taken to be the servant of the chief justice, and removable at pleasure; whereas all other officers of the court are for life: there is a secondary, or under clerk of the Treasury for assistance, who hath some fees and allowances: and likewise an under-keeper, that always keeps one key of the treasury door, and the chief clerk of the secondary another; so that the one cannot come in without the other.

CLERK OF THE KING'S GREAT WARDROBE, an officer of the king's household, that keeps an account or inventory of all things belonging to the royal wardrobe. Stat. 1 E. 4. c. 1.

CLERK OF THE WARRANTS, (clericus warrantorum) an officer belonging to the common pleas court, who enters all warrants of attorney for plaintiffs and defendants in suits; and inrolls deeds of indentures of bargain and sale, which are acknowledged in the court or before any judges out of the court. And it is his office to estreat into the exchequer all issues, fines and amerciaments, which grow due to the king in that court, for which he hath a standing fee or allowance.

CLERONIMUS, an old word signifying heir.

CLIPPING the coin. By 5 Eliz. c. 11. "clipping, washing, rounding, or filing for "wicked gain's sake any of the money of "this realm or other money suffered to be "current here, shall be adjudged high treason." And by stat. 18 Eliz. c. 1. (because the same law, being penal, ought to be taken and expounded strictly according to the words thereof, and the like offence not by any equity to receive the like punishment and pains) the same species of offence is described in other more general words, viz.

"impairing, diminishing, falsifying, seal-
"ing, and lightening, and made liable to
"the same penalties."

CLITONES, the eldest, and all the sons of kings. Cowel. Blount.

CLIVE, CLIFF. The names of places beginning or ending with these words signify a rock from the old Saxon. Ibid.

CLOTHES (spoiling). By 6 Geo. 1. c. 23, the wilful and malicious tearing, cutting, spoiling, burning, or defacing of the garments or clothes of any person passing in the streets or highways, with intent so to do, is felony.

This act was occasioned by the insolence and malicious practices of certain weavers, and others, who, upon the introduction of a new fabric, prejudicial to their own manufactures, made it their practice to deface them, either by open outrage, or by privily cutting, or casting aqua fortis in the streets upon such as wore them. 4 Black. 245.

CLOERE, a prison or dungeon; conjectured to be of British original: as the dungeon, or inner prison of Wallingford castle, temp. Hen. 2. was called cloere brien, i. e. carcer brieni, &c. Cowel. Blount.

CLOSE ROLLS and CLOSE WRITS, Grants of lands, &c. from the crown, are contained in charters or letters patent, that is, open letters, literis patentes, so called because they are not sealed up, but exposed to open view, with the Great Seal pendent at the bottom, and are usually addressed by the king to all his subjects at large. And therein they differ from other letters of the king, sealed also with the Great Seal, but directed to particular persons, and for particular purposes; which, therefore, not being fit for public inspection, are closed up and sealed on the outside, and are thereupon called writs close, literæ clausæ, and are recorded in the close rolls, in the same manner as the others are in the patent-rolls. 2 Black. Com. 346.

CLOSH, was an unlawful game forbidden by 17 Ed. 4, c. 3, and 33 H. 8. c. 9, and said to have been the same with our nine-pins. Blount.

CLOVE, is the two-and-thirtieth part of a weigh of cheese, i. e. eight pounds. 9 H. 6. c. 8.

CLOUGH, a word made use of for valley, in Domesday book. But among merchants it is an allowance for the turn of the scale on buying goods wholesale by weight. Lex Mercat.

CLUTA, (Fr. clous) shoes, clouted shoes, and most commonly horse-shoes: it also signifies the streaks of iron with which cart-wheels are bound. Cowel. Blount.

COADJUTOR, (Lat.) a fellow-helper or assistant, particularly applied to one appointed to assist a bishop, being grown old and infirm so as not to be able to perform his duty. Cowel. Blount.

COALS. By 12 Ann. stat. 2, c. 17, the coal bushel shall contain one Winchester bushel and one quart, and the chalder shall contain 36 such bushels heaped.

By 15 Geo. 3, c. 2. the coal bushel shall be round, with an even bottom, nineteen inches and an half from outside to outside; to contain one Winchester bushel and one quart of water, allowing 36 bushels heaped to a chaldron, and 20 hundred, at 112 pounds avoirdupoise per hundred, to the ton. Ibid.

And by 28 Geo. 3. c. 53, persons united in covenant or otherwise, consisting of more than five, for the purchasing of coals, or regulating the trade, shall be deemed a combination to advance the price of coals, and may be punished in the King's Bench at Westminster. See also LONDON.

COLLIERIES. See MINES.

COATS OF ARMS. It is said that these were introduced about the reign of Richard the First, who brought them from the Croisade in the Holy Land, where they were first invented, and painted on the shields of the knights to distinguish the variety of persons of every Christian nation who resorted thither, and who could not when clad in complete steel be otherwise known or ascertained. 2 Black. Com. 306.

It is the business of the court military or the court of chivalry, according to sir Matthew Hale, to adjust the right of armorial bearings. 3 Black. Com. 105.

COCHERINGS, chief rents in Ireland. Cowel. Blount.

COCKET, (cocketum) is a seal belonging to the king's custom-house, or rather a scroll of parchment sealed, and delivered by the officers of the custom-house to merchants, as a warrant that their merchandises are customed. Cowel. Blount.

COCKSETUS, a boatman, cockswain or coxon. Cowel.

COCULA, a cogue, or little drinking-cup. Cowel. Blount.

CODICIL, (codicillus, from codex, a book, a writing) is a supplement to a will, where any thing is omitted which the testator would add, or which he would explain, alter, or retract; and it is the same with a testament, and taken as part thereof, and the testator may make as many codicils as he pleases. West, Symb. p. 636. Swinb. l. sec. 1.

COFRA, a coffer, chest, or trunk. Cowel. Blount.

COFFERER OF THE KING'S HOUSEHOLD, is a principal officer of the king's house, next under the comptroller, who in the counting-house, and elsewhere, hath a special charge and oversight of other officers of the household, to all which he pays their wages: this officer passes his accounts in the Exchequer, and is mentioned in 39 Eliz. c. 7. Ibid.

COGGLE, a small fishing-boat, upon the coasts of Yorkshire. Ibid.

COGNATI, relations by the mother, as the agnati are relations by the father. 2 Black. 234.

COGNATIONE, a writ of cousenage. See Cosenage.

COGNISANCE, or cognizance, (Fr. connaissance, Lat. cognitio) is used diversely in our law: sometimes it is an acknowledgment of a fine, or confession of a thing done; and there is a cognisance of taking a distress: as a bailiff to another; and it is the same as an avowry. Sometimes it is the hearing of a matter judicially; as to take cognisance of a cause; and sometimes it signifies a jurisdiction, as cognisance of pleas is a power to call a cause or plea out of another court, which none can do but the king, or by charter. This cognisance of pleas is a privilege granted by the king to a city or town, to hold plea of all contracts, &c. within the liberty of the franchise; and when any man is impleaded for such matters in the courts of Westminster, the mayor, &c. of such franchise, may ask cognisance of the plea, and demand that it shall be determined before them: but if the courts at Westminster are possessed of the plea before cognisance be demanded, it is then too late; and cognisance must be demanded before an imparlance. Terms de Ley. Gilb. Hist. P. C.

Cognisance also signifies the badge of a waterman or servant, which is usually the giver's crest, whereby he is known to belong to this or that nobleman or gentleman. 3 Black. Com. 3 V. 300. 4 V. 275.

COGNISOR, and COGNISEE. In a fine the cognisor is he who passeth or acknowledges a fine of lands or tenements to another; and the cognisee is he to whom the fine of the said lands, &c. is acknowledged.

COGNITIONES, ensigns and arms, or a military coat painted with arms. Mat. Par. 1250. Cowel. Blount.

COGNITIONIBUS MITTENDIS, was an ancient writ to one of the king's justices of the Common Pleas, or other that hath power to take a fine, who having taken the fine defers to certify it, commanding him to certify it. Reg. Orig. 68.

COGNOVIT ACTIONEM, is where a defendant acknowledges or confesses the plaintiff's cause against him to be just and true, and before or after issue suffers judgment to be entered against him without trial, upon which judgment may be entered up, and execution levied according to such terms as are therein agreed on by the parties. 1 Rol. 929. Hob. 178.

COGWARE, is said to be a sort of coarse cloths, made in divers parts of England. See 13 R. 2. cap. 10.

COHUAGIUM, a tribute anciently paid by those who met promiscuously in the market or fair. Cowel. Blount.

COIF, (coifa) the lawn coif which serjeants at law wear on their heads when they are created, hence they are called serjeants of the coif; and the use of it was anciently to cover tonsuram clericalem, otherwise called corona clericalis, because the crown of the head was close shaved, and a border of hair left round the lower part, which made it look like a crown. Blount.

COIN (cuna pecunia). Coin is a word collective, and so called from the most ancient having been square, with corners, and not round, as it now is. Cromp. Jur. 71. 220. It contains in it all manner of the several stamps and species of money in any kingdom: and this is one of the royal prerogatives belonging to every sovereign prince, that he alone in his own dominions may order and dispose the quantity, value, and fashion of his coin. But the coin of one king is not current in the kingdom of another; though our king by his prerogative may make any foreign coin lawful money of England at his pleasure, by proclamation. Terms de Ley.

By statute any person may break or deface pieces of silver money suspected to be counterfeit, or diminished otherwise than by wearing: but if such pieces on breaking, &c. are found to be good coin, it will be at the breaker's peril, who shall stand to the loss of it. 9 & 10 W. 3, cap. 21.

But it said that when a person has accepted of money in payment from another, and put the same into his purse, it is at his peril after his allowance; and he shall not then take exception to it as bad, notwithstanding he presently reviews it. Ter. de Ley.

COLIBERTS, (coliberti) were tenants in socage, and particularly such villeins as were manumitted or made freemen. Domesday. Du Cange.

COLLATERAL, (collateralis) from the Lat. laterale, sidewise, or that which hangeth by the side, not direct; as collateral assurance is that which is made over and above the principal deed itself: collateral security is where a deed is made of other lands beside those granted by the deed of mortgage: and if a man covenants with another, and enters into bond for performance of his covenant, the bond is a collateral assurance, because it is external, and without the nature and essence of the covenant. Cromp. Juris. 185. Cowel. Blount.

COLLATERAL CONSANGUINITY, or kindred. Collateral relations agree with the lineal in this, that they descend from the same stock or ancestor, but differ in this, that they do not descend from each other. Collateral kinsmen, therefore, are such as lineally spring from one and the same ancestor, who is the stirps or root, the stipes, trunk, or common stock from whence these relations are branched out. 2 Black. Com. 204.

COLLATERAL ISSUE, is where a criminal convict pleads any matter, allowed by law, in bar of execution, as pregnancy, the king's pardon, an act of grace, or diversity of person, viz. that he or she is not the same that was attainted, &c. whereon issue is taken, which issue is to be tried by a jury, instanter. 4 Black. Com. 389.

COLLATIO BONORUM, is in law where a portion or money advanced by the father to a son or daughter, is brought into hotchpot, in order to have an equal distributory share of his personal estate at his death, according to the intent of the stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 10. Abr. Cas. Eq. p. 254. 2 Black. Com. 517.

COLLATION OF A BENEFICE, (collatio beneficii) signifies the bestowing of a benefice by the bishop, when he hath right of patronage. And it differs from institution in this, that institution is performed by the bishop upon the presentation of another, and collation is his own act of presentation; and it differs from a common presentation, as it is the giving of the church to the parson, and presentation is the giving or offering of the parson to the church. But collation supplies the place of presentation and institution, and amounts to the same as institution, where the bishop is both patron and ordinary. 1 Lil. Abr. 273. Anciently the right of presentation to all churches was in the bishop, and now if the patron neglects to present to a church then this right returns to the bishop by collation: and if the bishop neglects to collate within six months after the lapse of the patron, then the archbishop hath a right to do it; and if the archbishop neglects, then it devolves to the king, the one as superior, to supply the defects of bishops, the other as supreme, to reform all defects of government. 1 Inst. 344. Wood's Inst. 159. 2 Black. Com. 22, 23.

COLLATIONE FACTA UNI POST MORTEM ALTERIUS, is a writ directed to the justices of the Common Pleas, commanding them to issue their writ to the bishop for the admission of a clerk in the place of another presented by the king, who died during the suit between the king and the bishop's clerk; for judgment once passed for the king's clerk, and he dying before admittance, the king may bestow his presentation on another. Reg. Orig. 31.

COLLATIONE HEREMITAGII, an ancient writ whereby the king conferred the keeping of an hermitage upon a clerk. Reg. Orig. 303. 308.

COLLATION OF SEALS. This was when upon the same label one seal was set on the back or reverse of the other. Cowel. Blount.

COLLATIVE ADVOWSONS. An advowson collative is where the bishop and patron are one and same person; in which case the bishop cannot present to himself; but he does, by the one act of collation, or conferring the benefice, the whole that is done in common cases, by presentation and institution. 2 Black. Com. 22, 23.

COLLEGE, (collegium) a particular corporation, company, or society of men, having certain privileges founded by the king's license, such as the colleges or universities at Oxford, Cambridge, and elsewhere. 4 Rep. 106, 108. Roberts. Hist. Emp. Charles V. 323.

COLLEGIATE CHURCH, consists of a dean or other president, and secular priests, as canons or prebendaries in the said church, as Westminster, Windsor, Winchester, &c.

COLLIGENDUM BONA DEFUNCTI, (letters ad). In defect of representatives and creditors to administer to an intestate, the ordinary may commit administration to such discreet person as he approves of, or grant him letters ad colligendum bona defuncti, which neither make him executor or administrator, his only business being to keep the goods in his safe custody, and to do other acts for the benefit of such as are entitled to the property of the deceased. 2 Black. Com. 505.

COLLOQUIUM, (a colloquendo) a talking together, or affirming of a thing, and the colloquium in pleading is the discourse, laid in declarations for words in actions of slander. Mod. Cas. 203. Carthew 90.

COLLUSION (collusio), is a deceitful agreement or contract between two or more persons, for some evil purpose, as to defraud a third person, or the like. This collusion is either apparent, when it shews itself in the face of the act; or, which is more common, it is secret, where done occulte, or in the dark, covered over with a show of honesty. And it is a thing the law abhors; wherefore when found it makes void all things dependent upon the same, though otherwise in themselves good. Co. Lit. 109. 360. Plowd. 54.

COLONIES. See Charter-governments

COLONUS, a husbandman or villager, anciently bound to pay a yearly tribute, or at certain times in the year to plough some part of the lord's land. Cowel. Blount.

COLOUR, (color) signifies a probable plea, but what is in fact false, and hath this end, to draw the trial of the cause from the jury to the judges; and therefore colour ought to be matter in law, or doubtful to the jury. 1 Rep. 79. 108. Terms de Ley, 140. See Doct. Plac. 72, 73. 3 Black. Com. 309.

COLOUR OF OFFICE, (color officii) is when an act is evilly done by the countenance of an office: and always taken in the worst sense, being grounded upon corruption, to which the office is as a shadow and colour. Plowd. Comment. 64.

COLPICES, (colpicium, colpiciis,) young poles, which being cut down make levers, or lifters. Blount

COLPO, a small wax candle, à copo de cere. Ibid.

COMBARONES, the fellow barons, or commonalty of the Cinque Ports. But the title of barons of the Cinque Ports is now given to their representatives in parliament, and the word combaron is used for a fellow member, the baron and his combaron. Cowel. Blount.

COMBA TERRÆ, from the Sax. cumbe, Brit. kum, Eng comb, a valley or low piece of ground or place between two hills. Ibid.

COMBAT, (Fr.) an ancient mode of trial between two champions, of a doubtful cause or quarrel, by the sword or lastons. See Battle. Champion.

COMBINATIONS to do unlawful acts are punishable by the common law before the unlawful act is executed, and this is to prevent the consequence of combinations and conspiracies, &c. 9 Rep. 57.

By 39 and 40 Geo. 2, c. 106, every workman who shall enter into any contract for obtaining an advance of wages, altering the usual time of working, decreasing the quantity of work, or the like, (except contracts between masters and men) shall be committed to the common gaol for not more than three months, or the house of correction for not more than two, on conviction before two justices: as also any workmen entering into any combination for advancing wages, or the like, as above, or who shall wilfully and maliciously endeavour to prevent any workmen from hiring himself, or prevail on him to quit his employ, or who shall hinder any master from employing any person, or, without reasonable cause, shall refuse to work with any other workman, and also all persons who shall attend any meeting for the purpose of making any such illegal contract, or who shall summon, or by intimidation, or otherwise, endeavour to induce any journeyman to attend any such meeting for such purpose. s. 1, 2, 3, 4.

No person shall contribute for any expenses incurred for acting contrary to this act, or towards the support of any person to induce him not to work, on penalty not exceeding 10*l.* and any person collecting money for such purposes shall forfeit not exceeding 5*l.* one moiety to his Majesty, and the other to the informer and the poor of the parish. s. 5.

The offences shall be determined in a summary way before two justices, who shall fix the penalty, and if not paid shall cause it to be levied by distress, or in default thereof shall commit the offender to the common gaol or house of correction. s. 5.

Contributions made for any prohibited purposes shall be forfeited, one moiety to the king, and the other to the person who shall sue for the same. s. 6.

Persons liable to be sued for contribution money shall be obliged to answer, on oath, to any information in equity preferred against them by the attorney-general, or at the relation of any informer. s. 7.

Upon payment into court of the money remaining in the hands of any person, at the time of filing information, and making discovery of the securities, upon which other monies shall have been placed, the party shall be discharged from penalty, and no person is to be liable to penalty for money discovered by any answer to an information. s. 8.

Offenders may be compelled to give evidence, and shall be indemnified from prosecution for any offence whatever to which they give testimony. s. 9.

Justices may summon offenders: and on their not appearing, or in the first instance, may issue warrants for their apprehension, and also on their appearing, or on proof of their absconding, may convict or acquit the parties. s. 10.

Justices may summon witnesses, and for non-appearance, or refusal to give evidence, may commit them until they submit. s. 11.

Convictions are to be transmitted to the next general or quarter sessions, to be filed, and if appeal be made the justices shall then proceed to hear it. s. 13.

This act is not to abridge powers now given by law to justices touching combinations; nor empower manufacturers to employ workmen contrary to the provisions now in force for regulating the conduct of any particular manufacture, without a licence from a justice, who is empowered to grant the same in the case of misconduct on the part of a qualified workman. s. 15.

No master in the trade in which any offence is charged to have been committed, shall act as a justice under this act. s. 16.

All contracts between masters or other persons for reducing the wages of journeymen, or for altering the usual hours of working, or increasing the quantity of work, shall be void, and masters convicted thereof shall forfeit 20*l.* one moiety to his Majesty, and the other to the informer and the poor of the parish, which may be levied by distress, and if not paid the offender may be committed for not exceeding three, nor less than two, calendar months. s. 17.

Disputes between masters and workmen may be settled by arbitration. If arbitrators shall not decide the matter within three days after submission to their award, either party may require them to go before and state to a justice the points in difference, who shall finally determine the same. s. 18.

Persons summoned neglecting to attend the arbitrators, or refusing to be examined, may be committed by a justice till they submit. Ibid.

But the parties may extend the time limited for making the award, and the submission to arbitration and the award may be on unstamped paper, and each party to have a copy of the submission. s. 19, 20, 21.

If an arbitration be demanded, and the submission signed, and an arbitrator named by either party, and the other shall refuse to sign the submission and appoint his arbitrator, he shall on conviction forfeit 10*l.* half to the king, and the other to the poor of the parish, which may be levied by distress, or in default the offender may be committed for three months, or not less than two. s. 22.

If either party shall not perform what is directed by the award he may be committed till performance; but no person is to be deemed guilty in not attending at more than one arbitration at a time, or more than two in one day, and non-resident masters may appoint persons to act for them. Ibid.

Appeal may be made to the general sessions, or general quarter sessions, whose decision shall be final.

For combinations amongst particular manufacturers, see tit. Manufacturers.

COMBUSTIO PECUNIÆ, the ancient way of trying mixed and corrupt money, by melting it down upon payment into the Exchequer. Lowndes's Essay on Coin, p. 5.

COMITATUS, a county divided into hundreds and into tithings. Mat. Paris. anno 1234.

According to Lord Littleton, in his history of Hen. 2. lib. 2, fol. 217, each county was anciently an earldom, so that, previous to the reign of king Stephen, there were not any titular earls, nor more earls than counties, though there might be fewer, see also Bract. l. 3. c. 10.

COMITATU COMMISSO, is a writ or commission whereby a sheriff was authorized to take upon him the charge of the county. Reg. Orig. 295.

COMITATU ET CASTRO COMMISSO, a writ by which the charge of a county, together with the keeping of a castle, was committed to the sheriff. Reg. Orig. Ibid.

COMITIVA, a companion or fellow traveller. Cowell. Blount.

COMMANDERY, (præceptoria) was any manor or chief messuage, with lands or tenements thereto appertaining, which belonged to the priory of St. John of Jerusalem in England; and he who had the government of such a manor or house was styled the commander, who could not dispose of it but to the use of the priory, and only taking thence his own sustenance, according to his degree. Since the dissolution of this priory in the reign of Hen. 8. the name only of commanderies remains, the power being now extinct.

COMMANDMENT, (præceptum) is diversely taken, as the commandment of the king, when upon his own motion he hath cast any man into prison. Commandment of the justices, absolute or ordinary; absolute, where upon their own authority they commit a person for contempt, &c. to prison, as a punishment; ordinary is when they commit one rather for safe custody than for any punishment; and a man committed upon such an ordinary commandment is replevisable. Staundf. P. C. 72, 73.

In another sense of this word, magistrates may command others to assist them in the execution of their offices, for the doing of justice, and so may a justice of peace to suppress riots, apprehend felons; an officer to keep the king's peace, &c. Bro. 3. A master may command his servant to drive another man's cattle out of his ground, to enter into lands, seize goods, distrain for rent, or do other things, if the thing be not a trespass to others. Fits. Abr. The commandment of a thing is good where he that commands hath power to do it: and a verbal command in most cases is sufficient, unless it be where it is given by a corporation, or when a sheriff's warrant is to a bailiff to arrest, &c. Bro. 288. Dyer 202.

But he that commandeth any one to do an unlawful act is accessary to it and all the consequences, if it be executed in the same manner as commanded: but if the commander revoke the command, or if the execution varies from it, or in the nature of the offence, in such case he will not be accessary. 2 Inst. 282. 3 Inst. 51. 57.

In trespasses an infant or feme covert may be guilty in respect of actual violence done by them in person, though not in regard to what shall be done by others at their command, because all such commands of theirs are void. Co. Lit. 357. 1 Hawk. 147. In trespass, &c. the master shall be charged criminally for the act of the servant, done by his command; but servants shall not be excused for committing any crime when they act by command of their masters, who have no authority over them to give such command. Doct. et Stud. c. 42. H. P. C. 66. Kel. 13. And if a master commands his servant to distrain, and abuses the distress, the servant shall answer it to the party injured, &c. Kitch. 372.

COMMARCHIO, the confines of the land, whence, probably, comes the word marches. Cowel. Blount.

COMMENDAM, (ecclesia commendata, vel custodia ecclesiæ alicui commissa) is the holding of a benefice or church living, which being void, is commended to the charge and care of some sufficient clerk, to be supplied until it may be conveniently provided of a pastor, and he to whom the church is commended, hath the profits thereof only for a certain time, and the nature of the church is not changed thereby, but is as a thing deposited in his hands in trust, who hath nothing but the custody of it, which may be revoked. When a parson is made bishop, there is a cession or voidance of his benefice, by the promotion; but if the king by special dispensation gives him power to retain his benefice, notwithstanding his promotion; he shall continue parson, and is said to hold it in commendam. Hob. 144. Latch. 236.

But this is usually where the bishopricks are small, for the better support of the dignity of the bishop promoted, (as in the case of the late bishop of Rochester, and the benefice of St. Mary, Newington,) and it must be always before consecration: for afterwards it comes too late, because the benefice is then absolutely void. Dyer. 223. 3 Lev. 381. Hob. 143. Danv. 79.

And a commendam may be temporary for six or twelve months; two or three years, &c. or it may be perpetual, i. e. for life, and thus it is equal to a presentation, without institution or induction. Vaugh. 13.

COMMENDATORY, (commendatarius) is he that hath a church living or preferment in commendam. Cowel. Blount.

COMMENDATORY LETTERS, are such as are written by one bishop to another in behalf of any of the clergy, or others of his diocese, travelling thither, that they may be received among the faithful: or that the clerk may be promoted, or necessaries administered to others, &c. Ibid. and Bede, lib. 2. c. 18.

COMMENDATUS, one that lives under the protection of a great man. Spelm. of fands, cap. 20.

COMMERCE, (commercium), there is a difference between commerce and trade; the former relates to our dealings with foreign nations, or our colonies, &c. abroad, the other to our mutual trafficks and dealings among ourselves at home. Lex. Mer.

COMMISSARY, (commisarius) is a title in the ecclesiastical law, belonging to one that exerciseth spiritual jurisdiction, in places of a diocese which are so far from the episcopal city, that the chancellor cannot call the people to the bishop's principal consistory court, without their too great inconvenience. This commissary was ordained to supply the bishop's jurisdiction and office in the out places of the diocese: or in such places as are peculiar to the bishop, and exempted from the jurisdiction of the archdeacon: for where, either by prescription or composition, archdeacons have jurisdiction within their archdeaconries, as in most places they have, this commissary is superfluous and oftentimes vexatious, and ought not to be, yet in such cases a commissary is sometimes appointed by the bishop, he taking prestation money of the archdeacon yearly, pro exteriori jurisdictione, as it is ordinarily called. But this is held to be a wrong to archdeacons and the poorer sort of people. Cowel's Interp. 4 Inst. 338.

COMMISSION, (commissio) the warrant or letters patent, which all men exercising jurisdiction either ordinary or extraordinary, have to authorize them to enquire into, hear or determine any cause, action, or matter: as the commission of the judges, justices of the peace. Bro. Abr. 12. Rep. 39. 2 Dyer. 289.

COMMISSION OF ARRAY, before the establishment of the militia, it was usual for our princes to issue commissions of array, and send into every county officers in whom they could confide, to muster and array, (or set in military order), the inhabitants of every district. 1 Black. Com. 410, 11.

COMMISSION OF ASSOCIATION, is a commission to associate two or more learned persons with the justices, in the several circuits and counties of Wales. 18 Eliz. c. 9.

COMMISSION OF BANKRUPT, issues from the lord chancellor to certain commissioners appointed to take order with the bankrupt's lands and goods, for the satisfaction of the creditors. See Bankrupt.

COMMISSION OF CHARITABLE USES, goes out of the Chancery to the bishop and others, where lands given to charitable uses are misemployed, or there is any fraud or disputes concerning them, to enquire of and redress the abuse, &c. 43 Eliz. c. 4. See Charitable Uses.

COMMISSION OF DELEGATES, is a commission under the great seal to certain persons, usually two or three temporal lords, as many bishops, and two judges of the law, to sit upon an appeal to the king in the court of chancery, where any sentence is given in any ecclesiastical cause by the archbishop. Stat. 25 H. 8. c. 19. Now generally three of the common law judges, and two civilians, sit as delegates. Cowel, Blount.

COMMISSION TO ENQUIRE OF FAULTS AGAINST THE LAW, was an ancient commission sent forth on extraordinary occasions and corruptions. Ibid.

COMMISSION OF LUNACY, a commission out of Chancery to enquire whether a person represented to be a lunatic be so or not, that if a lunatic, the king may have the care of his estate, &c. 17 Ed. 2. c. 10.

COMMISSION OF THE PEACE, justices of the peace are appointed by the king's special commission under the great seal, the form of which was settled A.D.1590, this appoints them all jointly and severally to keep the peace, and any two or more of them to enquire of and determine felonies and other misdemeanors: in which number some particular justices or one of them, are directed to be always included, and no business to be done without their presence; the words of the commission running thus: quorum aliquem vestrum, A. B. C. D. &c. unum esse volumus, whence the persons so named are usually called justices of the quorum. 1 Black. 351.

COMMISSION OF REBELLION, is a writ, which issues when a man after proclamation made by the sheriff, upon process out of the Chancery, on pain of his allegiance, to present himself to the court by a day assigned, makes default in his appearance: and this commission is directed to certain persons, to the end they, three, two, or one of them apprehend the party, or cause him to be apprehended as a rebel and contemner of the king's laws, wheresoever found within the kingdom, and bring or cause him to be brought to the court on a day therein assigned: this writ or commission goes forth after an attachment returned, non est inventus, &c. Terms de Ley.

COMMISSION OF SEWERS, is directed to certain persons to see drains and ditches well kept and maintained in the marshy and fenny parts of England, for the better conveyance of the water into the sea, and preserving the grass upon the land. See 23 H. 8. c. 5. 13 Eliz. c. 9.

COMMISSIONER, (commissionarius) is he that hath a commission, letters patent, or other lawful warrant to examine any matters or to execute any public office, or the like. And commissioners by the common law must strictly pursue the authority of the commission, and perform the effect thereof; and they are to observe the ancient rules of the courts whence they come; and if they do any thing for which they have not authority, it will be void. 2 Co. Rep. 25. Co. Lit. 157. The office of commissioners is to do what they are commanded; and it is necessarily implied, that they may do that also, without which, what is commanded cannot be done: and their authority when appointed on any statute law, must be used as the statutes prescribe. 12 Rep. 32.

COMMITTEE, are those to whom the consideration or ordering of any matter is referred by some court, or by consent of parties to whom it belongs: as in parliament where a matter is referred to the consideration of certain persons appointed by the house farther to examine it, they are thereupon called a committee. And when a parliament is called, and the speaker and members have taken the oaths, and the standing orders of the house are read, committees are appointed to sit on certain days, viz. the committee of privileges and elections, of religion, of grievances, of courts of justice, and of trade; which are the standing committees. But though they are appointed by every new parliament, they do not all of them act, only the committee of privileges; and this being not of the whole house, is first called in the speaker's chamber, from whence it is adjourned into the house, every one of the house having a vote therein, though not named, which makes the same usually very numerous: and any member may be present at any select committee; but is not to vote unless he be named. The chairman of the grand committee, who is always some leading member, sits in the clerk's place at the table, and writes the votes for and against the matter referred to them; and if the number be equal he has a casting voice, otherwise he hath no vote in the committee; and after the chairman hath put the question for reporting to the house, if that be carried, he leaves the chair, and the speaker being called to his chair, (who quits it in the beginning, and the mace is laid under the table) he is to go down to the bar, and so bring up his report to the table. After a bill is read a second time in the house of commons, the question is put, whether it shall be committed to a committee of the whole house, or a private committee; and the committees meet in the speaker's chamber, and report their opinion of the bill with the amendments, &c. And if there be any exceptions against the amendments reported, the bill may be recommitted: eight persons make a committee, which may be adjourned by five, &c. Lex Constitutionis, 147, 150.

COMMITTEE. The care and commitment of the custody of the persons and estates of ideots and lunatics are the prerogative of the crown, and are always entrusted to the person holding the great seal by the royal sign manual. By virtue of this authority, upon an inquisition finding any person an ideot or lunatic, grants of the custody of the person and estate of the ideot or lunatic are made to such persons as the lord chancellor, or lord keeper, or lords commissioners for the custody of the great seal for the time being think proper, and the person to whom these grants are made, are termed their committees; ideots and lunatics therefore can only sue by the committees of their estates. Milford, 28.

COMMITMENT, is the sending of a person to prison by warrant or order, who hath been guilty of any crime: and all persons apprehended for offences which are not bailable, and all persons who neglect to offer bail for offences which are bailable, must be committed. 2 Hawk. P. C. 116, 117.

The privy council, or any one or two of them, or secretary of state, may lawfully commit persons for treason, and other offences against the state, as in all ages they have done. 2 Hawk. P. C. 117.

And by 2 & 3 P. & M. c. 10. Justices of peace shall examine persons brought before them for felony, or the like, or suspicion thereof, before they commit them to prison, and shall bind their accusers to give evidence against them.

Under this statute a justice of the peace may detain a prisoner a reasonable time, in order to his being brought up to be examined; and it is said, that three days is a reasonable time for this purpose. 2 Hawk. P. C. 119. Dalt. c. 125. 2 Inst. 52, 591.

Every commitment must be in writing, under hand and seal, and directed to the keeper of the prison. Hawk. P. C. 119.

And it may command the gaoler to keep the party in safe and close custody. 2 Hawk. P. C. 119.

But it ought to set forth the crime with certainty, whether the commitment be by the privy council, or any other authority, otherwise the officer is not punishable for suffering the party to escape; and the court before whom he is removed by habeas corpus ought to discharge or bail him; and this doth not only hold where no cause at all is expressed in the commitment, but also where it is so loosely set forth, that the court cannot judge whether it were a reasonable ground for imprisonment or not. 2 Hawk. P. C. 119.

And a commitment for high treason or felony in general, without expressing the particular species is not good, for under the habeas corpus act, the party may be admitted to bail, if it do not appear of what species of treason or felony he was guilty. 2 Hawk. P. C. 119. Skin. 596. 1 Salk. 347. S. C.

It is also safe to set forth that the party is charged upon oath; though not absolutely necessary. 2 Hawk. P. C. 120.

Every such mittimus ought to have a lawful conclusion, viz. that the party be safely kept till he be delivered by law, or by order of law, or by due course of law, or that he be kept (if committed only for want of bail), till he find bail; but a commitment till the person who makes it shall take further order, is not good. 2 Hawk. P. C. 120.

Also a commitment grounded on an act of parliament must be strictly conformable to the method prescribed by such statute. Carth. 152, 153.

All commitments must be to some prison within the realm of England. For by stat. 31 Car. 2. cap. 2. no subject of this realm, being an inhabitant of England, Wales, or Berwick, shall be sent prisoner into Scotland, Ireland, Jersey, Guernsey, Tangier, or into any parts, garrisons, islands, or places beyond the seas, within or without the dominions of his majesty.

By 14 Ed. 3. c. 10. "Sheriffs shall "have the custody of the gaols as before "this time they were wont to have, and "they shall put in such underkeepers for "whom they will answer." And by 5 Hen. 4. cap. 10. it is enacted, "that none be im-"prisoned by any justice of the peace, but "only in the common gaol, saving to lords, "and others who have gaols, their franchise "in this case."

But by 6 Geo. 1. c. 19. Vagrants and other criminals, offenders, and persons charged with small offences, may for such offences, or for want of sureties, be committed either to the common gaol or house of correction, as the justices in their judgment shall think proper.

And by the 3 Hen. 7. c. 3. The sheriff shall certify the names of all prisoners in his custody to the justices of gaol delivery.

As prisoners ought to be committed at first to the proper prison, so they ought not to be removed thence, except in some special cases; for by 31 Car. 2. cap. 2. "If "any subject of this realm shall be com-"mitted to any prison, or in custody of any "officer or officers whatsoever, for any cri-"minal, or supposed criminal matter, that "the said prison shall not be removed from "the said person and custody, into the cus-"tody of any other officer or officers, un-"less it be by habeas corpus, or some other "legal writ; or where the prisoner is deli-"vered to the constable or other inferior "officer, to carry such prisoner to some "gaol; or where any person is sent by "order of any judge of assize, or justice of "the peace, to any common workhouse, or "house of correction; or where the prisoner "is removed from one prison or place to "another within the same county, in order "to a trial or discharge by due course of "law; or in case of sudden fire or infection, "or other necessity; upon pain that he "who makes out, signs, or countersigns, "or obeys or executes such warrant, shall "forfeit to the party grieved 100*l.* for the "first offence, 200*l.* for the second, &c. 2 "Hawk. P. C. 118.

A person legally committed for a crime certainly appearing to have been done by some one or other, cannot be lawfully discharged by any other but by the king, till he be acquitted on his trial, or have an ignoramus found by the grand jury, or none to prosecute him on a proclamation for that purpose, by the justices of gaol delivery. 2 Hawk. P. C. 121.

COMMOIGNE, (Fr.) A word signifying a fellow monk, that lives in the same convent. 3 Inst. 15.

COMMONALTY, (populus, plebs communitas) In art. super chartas, 28 Ed. 1. c. 1. Tout le Commune d' Engleterre signifies all the people of England. 2 Inst. 539. But it is now generally used to design all such persons as are members of particular corporations, thus many companies incorporated are said to consist of masters, wardens, and commonalty, the first two being the chief, and the others such as are usually called of the livery.

COMMON, communia. Common is a right or privilege which one or more persons claim to take or use, in some part or portion of that which another man's lands, waters, woods, or the like, do naturally produce, without having an absolute property therein. It is called an incorporeal right, which lies in grant, as if originally commencing on some agreement between lords and tenants, for some valuable purposes, which by age being formed into a prescription continues, although there be no deed or instrument in writing which proves the original contract or agreement. 4 Co. 37. 2 Inst. 65. 1 Vent. 387.

There is not only common of pasture, but also common of piscary or fishing, common of estovers, common of turbary. But the word common in its most usual acceptation signifies common of pasture, which is divided into common in gross, common appendant, common appurtenant, and common per cause de vicinage. Bur. Abr. Tit. Com.

Common in gross is a liberty to have common alone, without any lands or tenements, in another person's land, granted by deed to a man and his heirs, or for life, &c. F. N. B. 31, 37. 4 Rep. 30.

Common appendant is a right belonging to a man's arable land, of putting beasts commonable into another's ground.

And common appurtenant is belonging to an estate for all manner of beasts commonable or not commonable. 4 Rep. 37. Plowd. 161.

Beasts commonable are horses, oxen, kine, and sheep; and not commonable goats, hogs, and geese. Ibid.

Common pur cause de vicinage, common by reason of neighbourhood, is a liberty that the tenants of one lord in one town have to common with the tenant, of another lord in another town; and is where the tenants of two lords have used, time out of mind, to have common promiscuously in both lordships lying together and open to one another. 8 Rep. 78.

Interest of the lord.] The property of the soil in the common is entirely in the lord; and the use of it, jointly in him and the commoners. 1 Inst. 122.

But the lord may agist the cattle of a stranger in the common by prescription: and he may licence a stranger to put in his cattle, if he leaves sufficient room for the commoners. 1 Danv. 795. 2 Mod. 6. Also the lord may surcharge an overplus of the common: and if where there is not an overplus the lord surcharges the common, the commoners are not to distrain his beasts: but must commence an action against the lord. F. N. B. 125. 1 Danv. 807. So if the lord makes a warren on the common, the commoners may not kill the conies; but are to bring their action, for they may not be their own judges. 1 Rol. 90, 405.

The lord however may distrain where the common is surcharged, and bring action of trespass for any trespass done in the common. 9 Rep. 113.

Also a lord may make a pond on the common: though he cannot dig pits for gravel or coal; the statutes of approvement being only by inclosure. 3 Inst. 204. 1 Sid. 106.

By stat. 20 H. 3. c. 4, lords may approve against their tenants, viz. inclose part of the waste, &c. and thereby discharge it from being common, leaving common sufficient; and neighbours as well as tenants claiming common of pasture, shall be bound by it. But if the lord encloses on the common, and leaves not common sufficient, the commoners may not only break the enclosures, but may put in their cattle, although the lord ploughs and sows the land. 2 Inst. 88. 1 Rol. Abr. 406.

Interest of the commoners.] A commoner hath only a special and limited interest in the soil, but yet he shall have such remedies as are commensurate to his right, and therefore may distrain beasts damage-feasant, bring an action on the case, &c. but not being absolute owner of the soil, he cannot bring a general action of trespass for a trespass done upon the common. See Bridg. 10, 11. Godb. 123, 124. 2 Leon. 201, 202.

But a commoner cannot regularly without there is a custom to do it, do any thing on the soil, which tends to the melioration or improvement of the common, as cutting down of bushes, fern, or the like, &c. 1 Sid. 251. 12 Hen. 8. 2. 13 Hen. 8. 15. 1 Nils. 642. For he has nothing to do with the soil, but only to take the grass with the mouth of the cattle. 1 Rol. Abr. 405. 2 Bulst. 116.

If the tenant of the freehold ploughs it, and sows it with corn, the commoner may put in his cattle, and therewith eat the corn growing upon the land; so if he lets his corn lie in the field beyond the usual time the other commoners may, notwithstanding put in their beasts. 2 Leon. 202, 203.

The commoner cannot use common but with his own proper cattle; but if he hath not any cattle to manure the land, he may borrow other cattle to manure it, and use the common with them; for by the loan, they are in a manner made his own cattle. 1 Danv. 798.

A commoner may distrain beasts put into the common by a stranger, or every commoner may bring action of the case, where damage is received. 9 Rep. 11. But one commoner cannot distrain the cattle of another commoner, though he may those of a stranger, who hath no right to the common. 2 Lutw. 1238.

Where a commoner surcharges the common, the other commoners may have a writ of admeasurement; and admeasurement is to be according to the quality and quantity of the freehold, and for all the cattle which are upon the land. It lies only by one commoner against another, but not against a commoner sans number, nor against the lord, in which case there must be an assize. 1 Danv. 809. If a man be disseised of his common, he shall have an assise. New Nat. Br. 399.

If any commoner incloses, or builds on the common, every commoner may have an action for the damage. Where turf is taken away from the common, the lord only is to bring the action: but it is said the commoners may have an action for the injury, by entering on the common, &c. 1 Rol. Abr. 89, 398. 2 Leon. 201.

If a commoner who hath a freehold in his common be ousted of, or hindered therein, that he cannot have it so beneficially as he used to do; whether the interruption be by the lord or any stranger, he may have an assize against him, but if the commoner hath only an estate for years, then his remedy is by action on the case. And if it be only a small trespass, that is little or no loss to the commoner, but he hath common enough besides, the commoner may not bring any action. 4 Rep. 37. 8 Rep. 79. Dyer. 316.

A commoner cannot dig clay on the common, which destroys the grass, and carrying it away doth damage to the ground: so that the other commoners cannot enjoy the common in tam amplo modo as they ought. Godb. 344.

A release of common in one acre, is an extinguishment of the whole right of common. 3 Co. 47.

COMMON OF ESTOVERS, is a right of taking wood out of another man's wood, for house-bote, plough-bote, and hay-bote. What botes are necessary, tenants may take, notwithstanding mention be not made thereof in their leases, but if a tenant take more house-bote than is needful, he may be punished for waste, Terms de Ley.

COMMON OF PISCARY, is a liberty of fishing in another man's water. Common of piscary to exclude the owner of the soil, is contrary to law: though a person by prescription may have a separate right of fishing in such water, and the owner of the soil be excluded; for a man may grant the water, without passing the soil: and if one grant separalem piscariam, neither the soil nor the water pass, but only a right of fishing. 1 Inst. 4. 122, 164. 5 Rep. 34.

COMMON OF TURBARY, is a licence to dig turf upon the grounds of another or in the lord's waste. This common is appendant or appurtenant to an house, and not to lands; for turfs are to be burnt in the house: and it may be in gross; but it does not give any right to the land, trees, or mines. It cannot exclude the owner of the soil. 1 Inst. 4. 4 Rep. 37.

COMMON BENCH, (bancus communis, from the Sax. banc, bank, and thence metaphorically a bench, high seat or tribunal) the court of common pleas was anciently, and still at times, called in common bench, because the pleas or controversies between common persons are there tried and determined. Camb. Britan. 113.

This court of common pleas is referred to by the letters C. B. from communi banco, (or C. P.) And the justices of that court are stiled justiciarii de banco. See Common Pleas.

COMMON DAY OF PLEA IN LAND, an ordinary day in court, as octabis hilarii, quindena paschæ, &c. Cowel. Blount.

COMMON FINE, (finis communis) a small sum of money, which the resiants within the liberty of some leets pay to the lords, called in divers places head silver or head pence, in others cert money; and was first granted to the lord, towards the charge of his purchase of the court-leet, whereby the resiants have the ease to do their suit within their own manors, and are not compellable to go to the sheriff's turn: in the manor of Sheapshead in the county of Leicester, every resiant pays 1*d.* per poll to the lord at the court held after Michaelmas, which is there called common fine. For this common fine the lord may distrain; but he cannot do it without a prescription. 11 Rep. 44. It is also called the leet penny.

COMMONS HOUSE OF PARLIAMENT, is the lower house of parliament, so called, because the commons of the realm, that is the knights, citizens, and burgesses returned to parliament, representing the whole body of the commons, do sit there. Crom. Jurisd.

COMMON INTENDMENT, is the common meaning, sense, or understanding, according to the subject matter, not strained to any extraordinary or foreign sense. Co. Lit. 78. See Co. Lit. 303, a, b, &c.

COMMON LAW, (lex communis). The common law is grounded upon the general customs of the realm; and includes in it the law of nature, the law of God, and the principles and maxims of the law: it is founded upon reason; and is said to be the perfection of reason, acquired by long study, observation and experience, and refined by learned men in all ages. And it is the common birth-right, that the subject hath for the safe-guard and defence, not only of his goods, lands, and revenues; but of his wife and children, body, fame, and life also. Co. Lit. 97, 142.

According to Hale, the common law of England, is the common rule for administering justice, within this kingdom, and asserts the king's royal prerogatives, and likewise the rights and liberties of the subject: it is generally that law, by which the determinations in the king's ordinary courts are guided; and this directs the course of descents of lands; the nature, extent and qualification of estates; and therein the manner and ceremonies of conveying them from one to another; with the forms, solemnities, and obligations of contracts; the rules and directions for the exposition of deeds, and acts of parliament: the process, proceedings, judgments and executions of our courts of justice; also the limits and bounds of courts and jurisdictions; the several kinds of temporal offences and punishments, and their application, &c. Hale's Hist. C. L. 24, 44, 45.

COMMON PLEAS, (communia placita) is one of the king's courts now constantly held in Westminster-hall.

By the antient Saxon constitution, there was only one superior court of justice in the kingdom: and that had cognizance both of civil and spiritual causes; viz. the witten-agemote, or general council, which assembled annually or oftener, wherever the king kept his Easter, Christmas, or Whitsuntide, as well to do private justice as to consult upon public business. At the conquest the ecclesiastical jurisdiction was diverted into another channel; and the conqueror, fearing danger from these annual parliaments, contrived also to separate their ministerial power, as judges, from their deliberative, as counsellors to the crown. He therefore established a constant court in his own hall, thence called by Bracton, l. 3. tr. 1. c. 7. and other antient authors aula regia or aula regis. This court was composed of the king's great officers of state resident in his palace, and usually attendant on his person: such as the lord high constable and lord mareschal, who chiefly presided in matters of honour and of arms, determining according to the law military and the law of nations. Besides these, there were the lord high steward, and lord great chamberlain; the steward of the household; the lord chancellor, whose peculiar business it was to keep the king's seal, and examine all such writs, grants, and letters, as were to pass under that authority; and the lord high treasurer, who was the principal adviser in all matters relating to the revenue. These high officers were assisted by certain persons learned in the laws, who were called the king's justiciars or justices; and by the greater barons of parliament, all of whom had a seat in the aula regia, and formed a kind of court of appeal, or rather of advice, in matters of great moment and difficulty. All these in their several departments transacted all secular business both criminal and civil, and likewise the matters of the revenue: and over all presided one special magistrate, called the chief justiciar or capitalis justiciarius totius Angliæ; who was also the principal minister of state, the second man in the kingdom, and by virtue of his office guardian of the realm in the king's absence. And this officer it was who principally determined all the vast variety of causes that arose in this extensive jurisdiction; and from the plenitude of his power grew at length both obnoxious to the people and dangerous to the government which employed him, Spelm. Gloss. 331, 2, 3. Gilb. Hist. C. P. introd. 17. 3 Black. 57, 8.

This great universal court being bound to follow the king's household in all his progresses and expeditions, the trial of common causes therein was found very burthensome to the subject. Wherefore king John, who dreaded also the power of the justiciar, very readily consented to that article, which now forms the eleventh chapter of magna charta, and enacts, that "communia placita non se-"quantur curiam regis, sed teneantur in aliquo"loco certo." This certain place was established in Westminster-hall, the place where the aula regis originally sat, when the king resided in that city; and there it hath ever since continued. And the court being thus rendered fixed and stationary, the judges became so too, and a chief with other justices of the common pleas was thereupon appointed; with jurisdiction to hear and determine all pleas of land, and injuries merely civil between subject and subject. Which critical establishment of this principal court of common law, at that particular juncture, and that particular place, gave rise to the inns of court in its neighbourhood; and thereby collecting together the whole body of the common lawyers, enabled the law itself to withstand the attacks of the canonists and civilians, who laboured to extirpate and destroy it. 3 Black. 38, 39.

The aula regia being thus stripped of so considerable a branch of its jurisdiction, and the power of the chief justiciar being also considerably curbed by many articles in the great charter, the authority of both began to decline apace under the long and troublesome reign of king Henry III. And in further pursuance of this example, the other several offices of the chief justiciar were, under Edward I. (who new modelled the whole frame of our judicial polity,) subdivided and broken into distinct courts of judicature. A court of chivalry was erected, over which the constable and mareschal presided; as did the steward of the household over another, constituted to regulate the king's domestic servants. The high steward, with the barons of parliament, formed an august tribunal for the trial of delinquent peers; and the barons reserved to themselves in parliament the right of reviewing the sentences of other courts in the last resort. The distribution of common justice between man and man was thrown into so provident an order, that the great judicial officers were made to form a cheque upon each other: the court of chancery issuing all original writs under the great seal to the other courts; the common pleas being allowed to determine all causes between private subjects; the exchequer managing the king's revenue; and the court of king's bench retaining all the jurisdiction which was not cantoned out to other courts, and particularly the superintendance of all the rest by way of appeal; and the sole cognizance of pleas of the crown or criminal causes. For pleas or suits are regularly divided into two sorts; pleas of the crown, which comprehend all crimes and misdemesnors, wherein the king (on behalf of the public) is the plaintiff; and common pleas, which include all civil actions depending between subject and subject. The former of these were the proper object of the jurisdiction of the court of king's bench; the latter of the court of common pleas. Which is a court of record, and is styled by Sir Edward Coke, 4 Inst. 99. the lock and key of the common law; for herein only can real actions, that is, actions which concern the right of freehold or the realty, be originally brought; and all other, or personal, pleas between subject and subject, are likewise here determined; though in some of them the king's bench has also a concurrent authority. 3 Black. 38, 39.

Thus in personal and mixed actions it hath a concurrent jurisdiction with the king's bench: but it hath no cognizance of pleas of the crown; and common pleas are all pleas that are not such. Also this court cannot regularly hold plea in any action, real or personal, &c. but by writ out of chancery returnable here, except it be by bill for or against an officer, or other privileged person of the court: and except as after mentioned. All actions belonging to this court, come hither either by original, as arrests and outlawries; or by privilege or attachment, for or against privileged persons; or out of inferior courts, not of record, by pone, recordare, accedas ad curiam, writ of false judgment, &c. Actions popular, and actions penal, of debt, &c. upon any statute, are cognizable by this court; and besides having jurisdiction for punishment of its officers and ministers; the court of common pleas may grant prohibitions to keep temporal and ecclesiastical courts within due bounds. 4 Inst. 99, 100, 118.

The judges of this court are at present four in number, one chief and three puisne justices, created by the king's letters patent, who sit every day in the four terms to hear and determine all matters of law arising in civil causes, whether real, personal, or mixed and compounded of both. These it takes cognizance of, as well originally, as upon removal from the inferior courts. But a writ of error, in the nature of an appeal, lies from this court into the court of king's bench. 3 Black. 40.

The other officers of the common pleas are the custos brevium, three prothonotaries and their secondaries, the clerk of the warrants, clerk of the essoins, fourteen filazers, four exigenters, a clerk of the juries, the chirographer, clerk of the king's silver, the clerk of the Treasury, clerk of the seal, of outlawries, and the clerk of the inrolment of fines and recoveries; clerk of the errors, &c. The custos brevium is the chief clerk in this court, who receives and keeps all writs returnable therein; and all records of nisi prius, which are delivered to him by the clerks of the assise of every circuit, &c. and he files the rolls together, and carries them into the treasury of records: he also makes out exemplifications, and copies of all writs and records, &c. The prothonotaries enter and inrol all declarations, pleadings, judgments, &c. and they make out all judicial writs, writs of execution, writs of privilege, procedendo's, &c. The secondaries are assistants to the prothonotaries in the execution of their offices; and they take minutes, and draw up all orders and rules of court. The filazers, who have the several counties of England divided among them, make out all mesne process, as capias, alias, pluries, &c. between the original writ and the declaration; and they make all writs of view, &c. The exigenters, appointed for several counties, make out all exigents and proclamations in order to outlawry. The clerk of the warrants, enters all warrants of attorney; inrols deeds of bargain and sale, and estreats all issues. The clerk of the essoins, keeps the roll of the essoins, wherein he enters them, and nonsuits, &c. The clerk of the juries, makes out all writs of habeas corpora juratorum, for juries to appear; and he enters the continuances till the verdict given. The clerk of the Treasury keeps the records of the court, and makes exemplifications of records, copies of issues, judgments, &c. The clerk of the seals, seals all writs and mesne process; also writs of outlawry and supersedeas, and all patents. The clerk of the outlawries, makes out the writs of capias utlagatum. The clerk of the errors, is for the allowance of writs of error, &c. The clerk of the inrolments of fines and recoveries, returns all writs of covenant, writs of entry and seisin, and inrols and exemplifies fines, &c. The clerk of the king's silver, enters the substance of the writ of covenant: and the chirographer ingrosseth all fines, and delivers the indentures to the parties, &c.

To these officers may be added, a proclamator; a keeper of the court; cryer; and tipstaffs; besides the warden of the Fleet. There are also attornies of this court, whose number is unlimited; and none may plead at the bar of the court, or sign any special pleadings, but serjeants at law. See PRACTICE.

COMMON PRAYER, (preces publicæ) is the liturgy, or prayers used in our church, prescribed by the book of common prayer: and established by stat. 1 Eliz. c. 2.

COMMON WEAL, is understood in our law to be bonum publicum, and is a thing much favoured; and therefore the law doth tolerate many things to be done for common good, which otherwise might not be done: and hence it is, that monopolies are void in law; and that bonds and covenants to restrain free trade, tillage, or the like, are adjudged void. 11 Co. Rep. 50. Plowd. 25. Shep. Epit. 270.

COMMORANCY, (commorantia, from commoro) an abiding, dwelling or continuing in any place; as a house, a vill, or the like, and sleeping there. Dalt. tit. Poor, &c. 4 Black. 273.

COMMORTH, or COMORTH, (comortha) from the Brit. cymmorth, i. e. subsidium; a contribution, formerly gathered at marriages, and when young priests said or sung the first masses, &c. Cowel. Blount.

COMMOTE, in Wales is half a cantred, or hundred, containing fifty villages. Stat. Walliæ, 12 Ed. I.

COMMUNANCE. The commoners or tenants and inhabitants, who had the right of common, or commoning in open fields, &c. were formerly called the communance. Cowel. Blount.

COMMUNE CONCILIUM REGNI ANGLIÆ, the common council of the king and people assembled in parliament. Ibid.

COMMUNIA PLACITA NON TENENDA IN SCACCARIO, was an ancient writ directed to the treasurer and barons of the exchequer, forbidding them to hold plea between common persons in that court, where neither of the parties belong to the same. Reg. Orig. 187.

COMMUNI CUSTODIA, a writ which anciently lay for the lord, whose tenant holding by knight's service died, and left his eldest son under age, against a stranger that entered the land, and obtained the ward of the body. F. N. B. 89. Reg. Orig. 161. Since the stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24. (which took away wardships,) of no use.

COMMUNITY, the people of the kingdom.

COMPANAGE, (Fr.) is all kind of food, except bread and drink. Cowel. Blount.

COMPANION OF THE GARTER, is one of the knights of that most noble order; at the head of which is the king, as sovereign. 24 H. 8. c. 13.

COMPASS, an instrument used in navigation, by the direction and assistance whereof vessels are steered to the most distant parts of the world. It was invented soon after the close of the holy war, and thereby navigation was rendered more secure as well as more adventurous, the communication between remote nations was facilitated, and they were brought nearer to each other. Roberts. Hist. Emp. C. V. 78.

COMPELLATIVUM, an adversary or accuser. Cowel. Blount.

COMPERTORIUM, a judicial inquest in the civil law, made by delegates, or commissioners to find out and relate the truth of a cause. Paroch. Antiq. 575.

COMPOSITION, (compositio) an agreement or contract between a parson, patron and ordinary, &c. for money or other thing in lieu of tithes. Real compositions for tithes are to be made by the concurrent consent of the parson, patron and ordinary. Real composisions are distinguished from personal contracts; for a composition called a personal contract is only an agreement between the parson and the parishioners, to pay so much instead of tithes; and though such agreement is confirmed by the ordinary, yet (if the parson is not a party) that doth not make it a real composition, because he ought to be a party to the deed of composition. March's Rep. 87. The compositions for tithes made by the consent of the parson, patron and ordinary, by virtue of 13 Eliz. c. 10. shall not bind the successor unless made for twenty-one years or three lives, as in case of leases or ecclesiastical corporations, &c. Compositions were at first for a valuable consideration, so that though in process of time, upon the increase of the value of the lands such compositions do not amount to the value of the tithes, yet custom prevails, and from hence arises what we call a modus decimandi. Hob. 29.

COMPOSITIO MENSURARUM, is the title of an antient ordinance for measures, not printed. Cowel. Blount.

COMPOSTUM, dung, soil or compost laid on lands. Ibid.

COMPOUNDING FELONY, or theftbote, is where the party robbed not only knows the felon, but also takes his goods again, or other amends upon agreement not to prosecute. It was formerly held to make a man an accessary; but is now punished only with fine and imprisonment. 1 Hawk. P. C. 125.

And by stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 36. even to advertise a reward for the return of things stolen, with no questions asked, or words to the same purport, subjects the advertiser and the printer to a forfeiture of 50*l.* each.

COMPRINT, intends a surreptitious printing of another bookseller's copy, to make gain thereby. See BOOKS.

COMPROMISE, (compromissum) is a mutual agreement between two or more parties at difference, to put an end to such difference upon certain terms agreed upon, such as by releasing, or the like, or referring the ending of the controversy to arbitrators: and West says it is the faculty or power of pronouncing sentence between persons at variance, given to arbitrators by the parties private consent. West's Symb. sect. 1.

COMPURGATOR, one that by oath justifies another's innocence. 3 Black. Com. 342, 3. 4 Black. 361, 407.

COMPUTATION, (computatio) is the true account and construction of time; and to the end an her party to an agreement, &c. may do wrong to the other, nor the determination of time be left at large, it is to be taken according to the just judgment of the law. 1 Inst. 46. 5 Rep. 1.

COMPUTATION of miles after the English manner, is allowing 5280 feet, or 1760 yards to each mile; and the same shall be reckoned not by strait lines, as a bird or arrow may fly, but according to the nearest and most usual way. Cro. Eliz. 212.

COMPUTO, (Lat.) is a writ to compel a bailiff, receiver or accountant, to yield up his accounts: it is founded on the statutes of Westm. 2. cap. 12. And also lies against guardians, &c. Reg. Orig. 135.

CONCEALERS, (concelatores, so called à concelando, as mons a movendo, by an antiphrasis) are such as find out concealed lands, i. e. such lands as are privately kept from the king by common persons, having nothing to shew for their title or estate therein. Cowel. Blount.

CONCESSI, a word of frequent use in conveyances, creating a covenant in law; as dedi makes a warranty. Co. Lit. 384. This word is of a general extent, and said to amount to a grant, feoffment, lease and release, &c. 2 Saund. 96.

CONCIONATORS, common-council men, freemen, called to the hall or assembly, as most worthy. Cowel. Blount.

CONCLUSION, (conclusio) is when a man by his own act upon record hath charged himself with a duty or other thing, or confessed any matter whereby he shall be concluded: as if a sheriff returns that he hath taken the body upon a capias, and hath not the body in court at the day of the return of the writ; by the return, the sheriff is concluded from plea of escape, &c. Terms de Ley. In another sense, this word conclusion signifies the end of any plea, replication, &c. and a plea to the writ is to conclude to the writ; a plea in bar, to conclude to the action, &c. Conclusion of plea in bar shall be, et hoc paratus est verificare: of pleas tendering issue, et de hoc ponit se super patriam. Kitch. 219, 220. 3 Black. Com. 303. and Co. Lit. 303. a. b, &c.

CONCORD, (concordia) is an agreement made between two or more, upon a trespass committed; and is divided into concord executory and concord executed. Plowd. 5, 6, 8.

Concord is also an agreement between parties, who intend the levying of a fine of lands one to the other, how and in what manner the lands shall pass: and is the foundation and substance of the fine, and acknowledged by the party before one of the judges of C. B. or by commissioners in the country. Cruise on Fines.

CONCUBARIA, a fold, pen, or place where cattle lie. Cowel. Blount.

CONCUBEANT, signifies a lying together. Stat. 1 H. 7. cap. 6.

CONCUBINAGE, (concubinatus) in common acceptation is the state of living with a concubine: but in a legal sense, it is used as an exception against her that sueth for dower, alleging thereby that she was not a wife lawfully married to the party, in whose lands she seeks to be endowed, but his concubine. Brit. c. 107. Bract. lib. 4. tract. 6. cap. 8. Cowel. Blount.

CONDERS, (from the Fr. conduire, to conduct) are such as stand upon high places near the sea-coast, at the time of herring-fishing, to make signs with boughs, &c. to the fishermen at sea, which way the shoals of herrings pass; for this may be better discovered by such as stand upon some high cliff on the shore, by reason of a kind of blue colour which the herrings cause in the water, than by those that are in the ships or boats for fishing. These are otherwise called huers and balkers, directors and guiders, as appears by stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 23. Blount.

CONDITION, (conditio) is a restraint annexed to a thing, so that by the non-performance, the party to it shall receive prejudice and loss; and by the performance, commodity and advantage: or it is a restriction of men's acts, qualifying or suspending the same, and making them uncertain whether they shall take effect or not; also it is defined to be what is referred to an uncertain chance, which may happen or not happen. West's Symb. part 1. lib. 2. sect. 156. And of conditions there are divers kinds, viz. conditions in deed and in law; conditions precedent, and subsequent; conditions inherent, and collateral, &c. Bac. Abr. tit. Con.

A condition in deed is that which is joined by express words to a feoffment, lease, or other grant; as if a man makes a lease of lands to another, reserving a rent to be paid at such a feast, upon condition if the lessee fail in payment, at the day, then it shall be lawful for the lessor to enter. Ibid.

Condition in law, or implied, is when a person grants another an office, as that of keeper of a park, steward, bailiff, &c. for term of life; here, though there be no condition expressed in the grant, yet the law makes one, which is, if the grantee do not justly execute all things belonging to the office, it shall be lawful for the grantor to enter and discharge him of his office. Lit. lib. 3. c. 5.

Condition precedent is when a lease or estate is granted to one for life, upon condition that if the lessee pay to the lessor a certain sum at such a day, then he shall have fee simple; in this case the condition precedes the estate in fee, and on performance thereof gains the fee-simple. Bac. Abr. tit. Con.

Condition subsequent, is when a man grants to another his manor of Dale, &c. in fee, upon condition that the grantee shall pay to him at such a day such a certain sum, or that his estate shall cease; here the condition is subsequent, and following the estate, and upon the performance thereof continues and preserves the same: so that a condition precedent doth get and gain the thing or estate made upon condition by the performance of it; as a condition subsequent keeps and continues the estate by the performance or the condition. 1 Inst. 201, 327. Terms de Ley. If one agree with another to do such an act, and for the doing thereof the other shall pay so much money; here the doing the act is a condition precedent to the payment of the money, and the party shall not be compelled to pay till the act is done: but where a day is appointed for the payment of money, which day happens before the thing contracted for can be performed, there the money may be recovered before the thing is done; for here it appears that the party did not intend to make the performance of the thing a condition precedent. 3 Salk. 95.

Inherent conditions are such as descend to the heir with the land granted, &c.

A collateral condition is that which is annexed to any collateral act.

Conditions are likewise affirmative, which consist of doing; negative, and consist of not doing: some are further said to be restrictive, for not doing a thing; and some compulsory, as that the lessee shall pay the rent, &c.

Also some conditions are single, to do one thing only; some copulative, to do divers things; and others disjunctive, where one thing of several is required to be done. Co. Lit. 201.

Among these several kinds of conditions, the cases which most frequently occur fall under the distinctions of conditions precedent and subsequent. We shall therefore speak of them more at large under the following divisions, wherein it is to be considered,

To what estates conditions may be annexed.] Conditions may be to any estate, whether in fee-simple, fee-tail, for life or years: they run with the estate, and bind in the hands of whomsoever they come. Lit. Rep. 128. But a condition may not be made but on the part of the lessor, donor, &c. For no man may annex a condition to an estate, but he that doth create the estate itself. 8 Rep. 75. Bac. Abr. tit. Con.

A condition that would take away the whole effect of a grant is void; and so it is if it be contrary to the express words of it. Conditions against law are void; but what may be prohibited by law, may be prohibited by deed. 1 Inst. 206, 220.

The word "if" will not always make a condition; but sometimes it makes a limitation, as where a lease is made for years, if A. B. lives so long. And this is contrary to a condition, for a stranger may take advantage of an estate determined thereby, &c. Co. Lit. 236. Dyer 300. Upon condition, is the most proper word to make a condition: provided is also as good a word, when not dependant upon another sentence; but in some cases, the word "provided" may make no condition, but be only a qualification or explication of a covenant. 2 Danv. 1, 2. And neither the word "provided" nor any other, makes a condition, unless it is restrictive. Plowd. 34. 1 Nels. 466.

Performance of conditions.] A condition may be well performed, when it is done as near to the intent as may be: for if the condition of a feoffment be, that the feoffee shall make an estate back to the feoffor and his wife, and the heirs of their two bodies, remainder to the right heirs of the feoffor; in this case, if the feoffor die before, the estate shall be made to the wife without impeachment of waste, the remainder to the heirs of the body of the husband begotten on the wife, &c. Co. Lit. 219. 8 Rep. 69. So if a condition be performed in substance and effect, it is good although it differs in words; as where it is to deliver letters patent, and the party bound having lost them, delivers an exemplification, &c. 2 Danv. 40.

So where there is a condition in a feoffment or lease, that if no distress can be found, the feoffor, &c. shall re-enter; if the place is not open to the distress, as if there be only a cupboard in the house, which is locked, &c. it is all one as if there was no distress there, and the feoffor, &c. may enter. 2 Danv. 46. When a rent is to be paid upon condition at a certain day, the lessor cannot enter for the condition broken, before demand of the rent. Ibid. 98. And the lessor ought to demand the rent at the day, or the condition shall not be broken by the non-payment of the rent. 1 Rol. Abr. 408.

No one can reserve the power or benefit of re-entry, on breach of a condition to any other but himself, his heirs, executors, &c. parties and privies in right and representation: But by the stat. 32 H. 8. c. 28. grantees of reversions may take advantage against lessees, &c. by action. 1 Inst. 214, 215. Plowd. 175.

Tenants by the curtesy, tenant in tail after possibility of issue extinct, tenant in dower, for life, or years, &c. hold their estates subject to a condition in law, not to grant a greater estate than they have, nor to commit waste, &c. 1 Inst. 233.

A condition in a will is a thing odious in law, which shall not be created without sufficient words. 2 Leon. 40. A devise to the heir at law, provided he pay to A.B. 20*l.* is a void condition, because there is no devise over to any other person to take advantage of the non-performance. 1 Lutw. 797. Yet conditional devises, as well of lands as of goods, are allowed by our law, and not being performed, the heir or executors shall take advantage of them. 1 Nels. 467.

Conditions precedent and subsequent.] Conditions precedent are such as must be punctually performed before the estate can vest; but on a condition subsequent, the estate is immediately executed: yet the continuance of such estate dependeth on the breach or performance of the condition. Co. Lit. 218. Eq. Abr. 108. As if I grant, that if A. will go to such a place, about my business, that he shall have such an estate, or that he shall have 10*l.* &c. this is a condition precedent. 1 Rol. Abr. 414.

But if A. makes a lease for five years to B. upon condition that if B. pays him 10*l.* within two years, that then he shall have a fee-simple in the lands, and make livery and seisin to B. this passes the freehold immediately, and B. has a fee conditional; because if the freehold was not to vest in B. till the condition performed, it would be difficult to determine in whom the freehold lay, for conditions may be inserted in such deeds as are perfected privately, which might prove greatly prejudicial to strangers. Lit. sect. 350. Co. Lit. 216, 217.

CONDUITS, for water in London, were formerly directed by the Stat. 35 H. 8. c. 10. to be made and repaired, and the lord mayor and aldermen were to inquire into defaults therein, &c.

CONE AND KEY. A woman at the age of fourteen or fifteen years might take the charge of her house, and receive cone and key: that is, she was then deemed able to keep the accounts and keys of the house. Bract. lib. 2. cap. 37. Glanv. lib. 7. c. 9. Cowel. Blount.

CONEY-BURROWS, places where conies or rabbits breed and haunt, &c. And commoners cannot lawfully dig up coney-burrows in the common. 2 Wils. Rep. 51.

CONFEDERACY, (confœderatio) is when two or more combine together to do any damage or injury to another, or to do any unlawful act. And false confederacy between divers persons shall be punished, though nothing be put in execution: but this confederacy, punishable by law before it is executed, ought to have these incidents; first, it must be declared by some matter of prosecution, as by making of bonds or promises the one to the other; secondly, it should be malicious, as for unjust revenge; thirdly, it ought to be false against an innocent person; and lastly it is to be out of court voluntarily. Terms de Ley.

It is the practice to insert in a bill in equity, a general charge of confederacy, viz. that the parties named in it combine together, and with several other persons unknown to the plaintiff, whose names when discovered the plaintiff prays he may be at liberty to insert in the bill: this practice is said to have arisen from an idea, that without such a charge, parties could not be added to the bill by amendment, and in some cases perhaps the charge has been inserted with a view to give the court jurisdiction, and from whatever cause the practice has arisen, it is still adhered to, except in the case of a peer. Milford, 40.

CONFESSION, (confessio) is where a prisoner being indicted of treason and felony, and brought to the bar to be arraigned; upon the indictment being read to him, and the court demanding what he can say thereto, he confesses the offence, and the indictment to be true. And where a prisoner confesses the fact, the court has nothing more to do than to proceed to judgment against him, confessus in judicio pro judicato habetur. 11 Rep. 30. 4 Inst. 66.

A demurrer also amounts to a confession of the indictment as laid, so far, that if the indictment be good, judgment and execution shall go against the prisoner. Bro. 86. S. P. C. 150. H. P. C. 246. And in criminal cases, not capital, if the defendant demur to an indictment, &c. whether in abatement, or otherwise, the court will not give judgment against him to answer over, but final judgment. 2 Hawk. 334.

Also it has been held, that wherever a man's confession is made use of against him, it must all be taken together, and not by parcels. 4 Hawk. P. C. 429. And no confession shall, before final judgment, deprive the defendant of the privilege of taking exceptions in arrest of judgment, to faults apparent in the record. Ibid. 333.

Confession is likewise in civil cases, where the defendant confesses the plaintiff's right of action to be good: (see cognovit) or in prosecutions under penal statutes, by which confession, there may be a mitigation of a fine, against the penalty of a statute, though not after verdict. Finch. 387. 2 Keb. 408. Lamb. lib. 4. c. 9.

CONFESSO. In courts of equity after an order for a sequestration issued, the plaintiff's bill is to be taken pro confesso, and a decree made accordingly. 3 Black. 444.

CONFESSOR, (Lat. confessor, confessionarius) hath relation to private confession of sins, in order to absolution: and the priest who received the auricular confession had the title of confessor, though improperly; for he is rather the confessee, being the person to whom the confession is made. This receiving the confession of a penitent, was in old English to shreve or shrive; whence comes the word beshrieved, or looking like a confessed or shrieved person, on whom was imposed some uneasy penance, The most solemn time of confession was the day before lent, which from thence is still called Shrove Tuesday. Cowel. Blount.

CONFIRMATION, (confirmatio, from the verb confirmare, quod est firmum facere) is an affirmative deed of conveyance at the common law, whereby an estate or right which is voidable is made sure and unavoidable; or a particular state is increased, or a possession made perfect. And it is a strengthening of an estate formerly made, which is voidable, though not presently void, as for example: a bishop granteth his chancellorship by patent, for term of the patentee's life; this is no void grant, but voidable by the bishop's death, except it be strengthened by the confirmation of the dean and chapter. Wood Moor. 180. 1 Inst. 296. Plow. 10.

CONFISCATE, From the Lat. confiscare, and that from fiscus, which signifies metonymically the Emperor's treasure; and as the Romans say, such goods as are forfeited to the emperor's treasury for any offence are bona confiscata, so we say of those that are forfeited to our king's exchequer. Staund. P. C. lib. 3. cap. 24.

Goods confiscated are generally such as are arrested and seized for the king's use: but confiscare and forisfacere are said to be synnymya: and bona confiscata are bona forisfacta. 3 Inst. 227. 1 Black. Com. 299. 4 Ibid. 370.

CONFORMITY to the church of England, the Stat. 1 Eliz. c. 2. see Recusant, prescribes a strict conformity to the church of England, and is still to be acted on, except when by subsequent acts certain non-conformists are tolerated in the exercise of their own religious rites.

CONFRAIRIE (confraternitas) a fraternity, brotherhood, or society. Cowel. Blount.

CONFRERES, (confratres) brethren in a religious house, fellows of one and the same society. Ibid.

CONFUSION, property by, where goods of two persons are so intermixed, that the several portions can no longer be distinguished, if the intermixture be by consent, it is supposed the proprietors have an interest in common, in proportion to their respective shares; but, if one wilfully intermixes his money, corn, or hay, with that of another man, without his approbation or knowledge, or cast gold in like manner into another's melting pot or crucible, our law does not allow any remedy in such case; but gives the entire property without any account to him, whose original dominion (or property) is invaded, and endeavoured to be rendered uncertain, without his own consent. 2 Black. Com. 405.

CONGEABLE, (from the Fr. conge, i. e. leave or permission) signifies in our law, as much as lawful, or lawfully done, or done with permission; as entry congeable, &c. Lit, sect. 420.

CONGE D' ACCORDER, (Fr.) leave to accord or agree, mentioned in the statute of fines. 18 Ed. 1.

CONGE D' ELIRE, (Fr. i. e. leave to choose) is the king's licence or permission sent to a dean and chapter to proceed to the election of a bishop, when any bishopric becomes vacant. 1 Black. Com. 379, 382. 4 Ibid. 414.

CONGIUS, an ancient measure, containing about a gallon and a pint. Cowel. Blount.

CONINGERIA, a coney-burrow or warren of conies. Ibid.

CONJUGAL RIGHTS, a suit for restitution of conjugal rights is one of the species of matrimonial causes: and is brought when either the husband or wife is guilty of the injury of subtraction, or lives separate from the other without any sufficient reason; in which case the ecclesiastical jurisdiction will compel them to come together again, if either party be weak enough to desire it, contrary to the inclination of the other. 3 Black. Com. 94.

CONJURATIO, is an oath, and conjuratus, the same with conjurator, viz. one who is bound by the same oath. Conjuratio is where several affirm a thing by oath. Mon. Angl. Tom. 1. p. 207. Cowel. Blount.

CONJURATION, (conjuratio) signifies a plot or compact made by persons combining by oath, to do any public harm: but was more especially used for the having (as was supposed) personal conference with the devil, or some evil spirit, to know any secret or effect any purpose. The difference between conjuration and witchcraft was said to be, that a person using the one endeavoured by prayers and invocations to compel the devil to say or do what he commanded him, the other dealt rather by friendly and voluntary conference, or agreement with the devil or familiar, to have his desires served, in lieu of blood or other gift offered. Both differed from enchantment or sorcery; because they were supposed to be personal conferences with the devil, and these were but medicines and ceremonial forms of words usually called charms, without apparition. Lambarde. Cowel. Blount. Hale. Dalton.

Hawkins, in his Pleas of the Crown, lib. 1. p 5, says, that conjurors are those who by force of certain magic words, endeavour to raise the devil, and oblige him to execute their commands. Witches are such who by way of conference bargain with an evil spirit, to do what they desire of him: and sorcerers are those, who by the use of certain superstitious words, or by the means of images, &c. are said to produce strange effects, above the ordinary course of nature. All which were anciently punished in the same manner as heretics, by the writ de haretico comburendo, after a sentence in the ecclesiastical court: and they might be condemned to the pillory, &c. upon an indictment at common law. 3 Inst. 44. H. P. C. 38.

By 9 Geo. 2. c. 6, where persons pretend to exercise any kind of witchcraft or conjuration, or undertake to tell fortunes, or from their skill in any crafty science to discover where goods stolen or lost, may be found, upon conviction, shall be imprisoned a year, and stand in the pillory once in every quarter, in some market-town, and may be ordered to give security for their good behaviour. See also Vagrants.

CONQUEST, countries got by, to be governed by the English laws, except otherwise settled by the capitulation of the people. 2 Black. Com. 48, 242.

CONSANGUINEO, is a writ mentioned in Reg. Orig. de avo, proavo et consanguineo, &c. f. 226.

CONSANGUINEUS FRATER, a brother by the father's side. 2 Black. Com. 232.

CONSANGUINITY, (consanguinitas) is a kindred by blood or birth, as affinity is a kindred by marriage: and it is considerable in the descent of lands, who shall take it as next of blood, &c. And also in administrations, which shall be granted to the next of kin. 1 Black. Com. 434. 2 Black. Com. 202.

CONSCIENCE, courts of. These were courts originally instituted by act of parliament, in London and Westminster, and other trading and populous districts, for the recovering of small debts not exceeding 40*s*. but many of them have now an extended jurisdiction for the recovery of small debts to the amount of 5*l*. as by 39 and 40 Geo. 3. c. civ. as to London, and 46 Geo. 3. c. lxxvii. and c. lxxxviii. as to Southwark and the west hundred of Brixton.

And by 26 Geo. 3. c. 38, debtors committed by courts of conscience for debts not exceeding 20*s*. shall not be imprisoned more than 20 days, and where the debt does not exceed 40*s*, not more than forty days, which prisoners are to be discharged without gaol fees, and gaolers demanding or taking the same are to forfeit 5*l*. on conviction, before two justices within two months; and the process of courts of conscience, shall not issue against both body and goods at the same time.

CONSECRATION. See Bishops, Church.

CONSENT, in all cases when any thing executory is created by deed, it may by consent of all persons that were parties to the creation of it by their deed, be defeated and annulled, and therefore it is said, that warranties, recognizances, rents, charges, annuities, covenants, leases for years, uses at common law, &c. may by a defeasance made with the mutual consent of all that were parties to the creation of them by deed, be annulled, discharged, and defeated. 1 Rep. 113. See Age.

CONSEQUENTIAL, damages. It is a fundamental principle in law and reason, that he who does the first wrong shall answer for all consequential damages. 12 Mod. 639. And though a man does a lawful thing, yet if any damage do thereby befal another, he shall answer if he could have avoided it; and this holds in all civil cases. As if a man lops a tree, and the boughs fall upon another, ipso invito, yet an action lies. So if a man shoots at butts, and hurts another unawares. So if I have land through which a river runs to your mill, and I lop the sallows growing on the river-side which accidentally stop the water so as your mill is hindered. So if I am building my own house, and a piece of timber falls on my neighbour's house, and breaks part of it. So if a man assaults me, and I lift up my staff to defend myself, and strike another in lifting it up. Raym. 422, 423.

So he that makes a fire in his field must see that it does no harm, and answer the damage if it does. 1 Salk. 13. Also if a man keeps a beast of a savage nature, as a lion, or the like, it is at his peril to keep him up, and he is answerable for all the consequences of his getting loose. Gilb. 187. 3 Black. Com. 153. But it is otherwise in criminal cases, for there actus non facit reum nisi mens sit rea. Raym. 422, 3.

So where one is party to a fraud, all which follows by reason of that fraud, shall be said as done by him, as if one trader knowingly give a false character of another, to a third person to obtain a credit, whereby the latter sustains a loss, he shall have his action on the case. Cro. Jac. 469. Action lies for threatening workmen to maim and prosecute them, whereby the master loses the selling of his goods, the men not daring to go on with their work. Cro. Jac. 567.

CONSERVATOR, (Lat.) a protector, preserver, or maintainer; or a standing arbitrator, chosen and appointed as a guarantee to compose and adjust differences that may arise between two parties, &c. Paroch. Antiq. p. 513. Cowel. Blount.

CONSERVATOR OF THE PEACE, (conservator vel custos pacis) is he that hath an especial charge to see the king's peace kept: and of these conservators Lambard saith, that before the reign of Ed. 3. who first created justices of the peace, there were divers persons that by the common law, land interest in keeping the peace; some whereof had that charge by tenure, as holding land of the king by this service, &c. And others as incident to the offices which they bore, and so included in the same, that they were nevertheless called by the name of their office only: also some had it simply, as of itself, and were therefore named custodes pacis, wardens or conservators of the peace. Thus the chamberlain of Chester is a conservator of the peace in that county, by virtue of his office. 4 Inst. 212. So also sheriffs of counties are at common law conservators of the peace; but constables, though deemed conservators, were only subordinate to the conservators of the peace, as they are now to the justice. 1 Black. 350.

The king's majesty is, by his office and dignity royal, the principal conservator of the peace within all his dominions, and may give authority to any other to see the peace kept, and to punish such as break it: hence it is usually called the king's peace. The lord chancellor or keeper, the lord treasurer, the lord high steward of England, the lord mareschal, and lord high constable of England, (when any such officers are in being) and all the justices of the court of King's Bench, by virtue of their offices, and the master of the Rolls, by prescription, are general conservators of the peace throughout the whole kingdom, and may commit all breakers of it, or bind them in recognizances to keep it; the other judges are only so in their own courts. The coroner is also a conservator of the peace within his own county, as, also, is the sheriff, and both of them may take a recognizance or security for the peace. Constables, tithing-men, and the like, are also conservators of the peace within their own jurisdictions, and may apprehend all breakers of the peace, and commit them till they find sureties for their keeping it. 1 Black. Com. 350.

CONSERVATOR OF THE TRUCE AND SAFE CONDUCTS, (conservator induciarum et salvorum regis conductuum) was an officer appointed by the king's letters patent, whose charge was to inquire of all offences done against the king's truce and safe conducts upon the main sea, out of the liberties of the Cinque Ports, as the admirals customarily were used to do, and such other things as are declared 3 Hen. 5. c. 6. Two men learned in the law were joined to conservators of the truce, as associates; and masters of ships sworn not to attempt any thing against the truce, &c. And letters of request and of marque were to be granted when truce was broken at sea, to make restitution. Stat. 4 Hen. 5. c. 7. 4 Black. Com. 69.

There was anciently a conservator of the privileges of the Hospitallers and Templars. West. 2, c. 46. And the corporation of the great Level of the Fens consists of a governor, six bailiffs, twenty conservators, and commonalty. Stat 15 Car. 2. c. 17.

CONSIDERATIO CURIÆ, is the judgment of the court, and often mentioned in the books and law pleadings, ideo consideratum est per curiam, i. e. therefore it is considered and adjudged by the court.

CONSIDERATION, (consideratio) is the material cause, or quid pro quo, of any contract, without which it will not be effectual or binding. This consideration is either expressed, as when a man bargains to give so much for a thing bought, or to sell his land for 100*l.* or grants it in exchange for other lands; or where I promise that if one will marry my daughter, or build me a house, &c. I will give him a certain sum of money; or one agrees for 20*s.* to do a thing. Or it is implied, when the law itself enforces consideration; as where a person comes to an inn, and there staying, eats and drinks, and takes lodgings for himself and horse, the law presumes he intends to pay for both, though there be no express contract for it; and therefore if he discharge not the house the host may stay his horse; and so if a taylor makes a garment for another, and there is no express agreement what he shall have for it, he may keep the clothes till he is paid, or sue the party for the same. 5 Rep. 19. Plowd. 308. Dyer. 30. 337. Also there is a consideration of nature and blood; and valuable consideration in deeds and conveyances: but if a man be indebted to divers others, and in consideration of natural affection gives all his goods to his son, or other relation, this shall be construed a fraudulent gift as against the creditors within the statute 13 Eliz. c. 5, because that act intends a valuable consideration. Terms de Ley.

But considerations of natural love, affection, marriage, and the like, are good to raise the uses of lands to a man's family: and yet if the uses are limited to a stranger, then it must be for a valuable consideration, not for love, affection, or the like. 1 Inst. 271. 1 Rep. 176.

And in case a deed of feoffment be made of lands, or a fine and recovery be passed, and no consideration is expressed in the deed, &c. for the doing thereof, it shall be intended by the law that it was made in trust for the use of the feoffor or conusor; for it shall be presumed he would not part with his land without a consideration; and yet the deed shall be construed to operate something, and that which is most reasonable. 1 Lill. Abr. 299.

A consideration also must be lawful to ground an assumpsit. 2 Lev. 161.

CONSIGNEE is the person to whom goods are assigned, or directed to be delivered over. Lex Mercat. See Factor.

CONSILIUM, (dies consilii) was a time allowed for one accused to make his defence, and answer the charge of the accuser; but it is now used for a speedy day appointed to argue a demurrer, which the court grants after the demurrer joined on reading the record of the cause, &c. 4 Black. Com. 349.

CONSIMILI CASU. See CASU CONSIMILI.

CONSISTOR, a magistrate so called. Blount.

CONSISTORY, (consistorium) signifies as much as prætorium, or tribunal: it is commonly used for a council-house of ecclesiastical persons, or place of justice in the Spiritual Court; a session or assembly of prelates. And every archbishop and bishop of every diocese hath a consistory court, held before his chancellor, or commissary in his cathedral church, or other convenient place of his diocese, for ecclesiastical causes. 4 Inst. 338.

CONSOLIDATION (consolidatio) is used for the uniting of two benefices into one in stat. 37 Hen. 8. c. 21. See Union of Churches.

There are also divers statutes for the consolidation of different taxes, such as of customs, excise, stamps, &c.

CONSORT, Queen. See QUEEN.

CONSPIRACY, (conspiratio) is an agreement of two or more persons falsely to indict one, or to procure him to be indicted of felony, riot, or other misdemeanor, who, after acquittal shall have a writ of conspiracy. See 33 Ed. 1. stat. 2. 4 Ed. 3. c. 11. 3 Hen. 7. c. 13. 1 Hen. 5. c. 3, and 18 Hen. 6. c. 12. And not only the old writ of conspiracy, which is a civil action at the suit of the party, but also an action on the case, in the nature of a writ of conspiracy, doth lie for a false and malicious accusation of any crime, whether capital or not capital, even of high treason; and though the bill of indictment is found ignoramus, or it does not go so far as an indictment. And the same damages may be recovered in such action as in a writ of conspiracy, where the party is lawfully acquitted by verdict. 1 Rol. Abr. 111, 112. 9 Rep. 56. See Gilb. Ca. 185. 10 Mod. 148. 214. Salk. 15.

And in action on the case he need not aver that he was lawfully acquitted, as he ought to do in a writ of conspiracy: but he must aver that the accusation was falsa et malitiosa, which words are necessary in the declaration; and it must appear that there was no ground for it. And as an action on the case may be prosecuted against one person, where the writ of conspiracy or indictment doth not lie but against two, this action is most commonly brought. 1 Danv. Abr. 208. 213. 2 Inst. 562, 638.

Conspirators may also be indicted at the suit of the king: and at the common law one may prefer an indictment against conspirators, who only conspire together, and nothing is executed: but a bare conspiracy will not maintain a writ of conspiracy at the suit of the party, because he is not damaged by it; though it is a ground for an indictment. 9 Rep. 56. 2 Rol. Abr. 77.

On an indictment for a conspiracy, if all the defendants but one are acquitted, that one must be acquitted also; because one person alone cannot be indicted for this crime: and husband and wife being but one person may not be indicted for a conspiracy, unless it be laid or proved that they conspired with others unknown. 2 Rol. Abr. 708. 3 Mod. 220. 1 Vent. 204. Cro. Eliz. 701.

If the parties are found guilty of the conspiracy, upon an indictment of felony at the king's suit, the consequence is that they shall lose their frank law (which disables them to be put upon any jury, to be sworn as witnesses, or to appear in person in any of the king's courts), and their lands, goods, and chattels are to be seized as forfeited, and their bodies committed to prison, which is called a villainous judgment. 2 Inst. 143. 222. Crompt. Just. 156, 810. But the usual punishment at this day on an indictment for a conspiracy is by fine and imprisonment, and sometimes pillory; and on writ of conspiracy, &c. the party shall be fined, and render damages. 1 Hawk. P. C. 193. Moor. And there are instances of parties being fined and having judgment of the pillory and to be burnt in the cheek with the letters F.C. i. e. false conspirators.

CONSPIRATORS (conspiratores), by 33 E. 1. stat. 2, are defined to be those that do bind themselves by oath, covenant, or other alliance, that every of them shall aid the other falsely and maliciously to indict persons; or falsely to move or maintain pleas, &c. And such as retain men in the country with liveries, or fees, to maintain their malicious enterprises, which extends as well to the takers as the givers; and stewards or bailiffs of great lords, who by their office or power undertake to bear and maintain quarrels, pleas, or debates, that concern other parties than such as relate to the estate of their lords or themselves. 2 Inst. 384. 562. And against conspirators, false informers, and embracers of inquest, the king hath provided a writ in the Chancery: and the justices of either bench, and justices of assise, shall on every plaint award inquest thereupon. Stat. 28 E. 1. c. 10.

CONSPIRATIONE, was the writ that anciently lay against conspirators. Reg. Orig. 134. F. N. B. 114.

CONSTABLE, (constabularius) is said by Lambard to be derived from the Sax. and compounded of the Saxon words coning, i. e. king, and staple, which signifies the stay or hold of the king: but however derived, it is at this day immaterial to consider, being now used in general acceptation for a well-known peace-officer. It is, however, diversely used in our law; first, for the lord constable of England, whose power was anciently so extensive, that some time since that office hath been thought too great for any subject, unless at the king's coronation, to complete the grandeur of that ceremony. This office was formerly of inheritance, and first created by Will. the conqueror: but Edward duke of Buckingham, the last inheritor, being attainted of high treason, anno 13 Hen. 8. the office became forfeited to the crown, and since that time it was never granted but pro hac vice, to be exercised at a coronation, &c.

Out of this high magistracy of the constable of England (says Lambard) were drawn those inferior constables which we call constables of hundreds and franchises; and the statute of Winchester, 13 Ed. 1, appoints for conservation of the peace, and view of armour, two constables in every hundred and franchise, who in Latin are called constabularii capitales, high constables, because continuance of time, and increase of people and offences, have under these made others necessary in every town, called petty constales, in Latin sub-constabularii, which are of like nature but of inferior authority to the other. Cowel. Blount

And there are other officers, whose duty is much the same with constables, as headboroughs, tithing-men, &c. of which the petty constable seems to be the principal officer, but in his absence, or where there is no petty constable, their duty is the same.

My Lord Coke says that both high constables and petty constables were created by 13 Ed. 1, stat. 2, c. 6, and that their duty was thereby limited, though subsequent statutes have enlarged their power. 4 Inst. 267. 2 Danv. Abr. 148.

Choice of Constables.] Anciently high and petty constables were appointed by the sheriff in his tourn, and sworn there as well as in the leet: and by the common law they ought to be chosen in the tourn or leet. Dalt. cap. 21. Of common right a constable is to be chosen by the jury in the leet, and if he be present, and refuse to be sworn, the steward may fine him; if he be absent he shall be sworn before justices of peace; and if such constable refuses to be sworn, the jury must present his refusal the next court, and then he shall be amerced, for the steward of the leet may not fine him if he is absent. 1 Salk. 175. 5 Mod. 130.

A high constable may be chosen at a court-leet by the steward, on presentment of the jury, when custom warrants it; but where such courts are not kept, or there is a neglect in choosing him, the justices at their quarter-sessions may choose and swear a high constable. 1 Mod. Jus. 133. And he may be sworn out of sessions by warrant from thence, and be elected out of the sessions by the greater number of justices in the division. Ibid. If one that is elected to the office of constable, being eligible, refuse to take the oath to serve in that office, a writ of mandamus may be had to compel him to do it. 1 Lil. Abr. 303. Or he may be indicted. And the justices of peace may appoint a constable in such place where there was never any before. 1 Mod. 13.

If constables, headboroughs, &c. die or go out of the parish, two justices of peace are to swear new ones till the lord of the manor hold a court-leet, or till the next quarter-sessions, who shall approve of them or appoint others: and if any of them continue above a year the justices of peace may discharge them, and put in others till the lord of the manor holds a court. By stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2, cap. 12, a constable's oath runs thus: "You shall well and truly serve "our sovereign lord the king, and the lord of "this leet (if sworn in a court-leet) in the office of constable, in and for the hundred of, "&c. or parish of, &c. for the year ensuing, or "until you shall be thereof discharged according to due course of law: You shall "well and truly do and execute all things belonging to the said office, according to the "best of your knowledge. So help you God."

At this day, however, high constables are generally chosen and sworn by the justices of peace in their sessions; and as to the petty constables, who are their assistants, in each town, parish, or vill, the choice of them properly belongs to the court-leet; but they are in some places elected by the parishioners, and sworn by a justice of peace, who on just cause may remove them. 4 Inst. 267.

These constables are appointed yearly, and are to be men of honesty, knowledge and ability, not infants, lunatics, &c. And if they refuse to serve they may be bound over to the sessions, and indicted, and fined and imprisoned. 8 Rep. 41. 5 Mod. 96.

And none are to be chosen constable who are not inhabitants. Field's Par. Off. 331. nor unless they be of an ableр sort of inhabitants, 8 Co. 42; and within Westminster none of the age of 63 or upwards are to be chosen. 31 Geo. 2, c. 17. sec. 13. And the crown may exempt particular persons from serving, provided a sufficient number be left to serve. 1 Ter. Rep. 686. Also no man who keeps a public house ought to be a constable. 6 Mod. 41. But revenue officers, as such, are not exempt. Espin. Ca. 359. Nor are women, if chosen according to custom, in turn, in respect to the houses in a town, for the office is ministerial, and may be executed by deputy. 2 Hawk. c. 10. s. 57. Nor is a younger brother of the Trinity House exempted. 1 Ter. Rep. 679; or a captain in the guards, who is appointed in respect of lands in a town. 2 Hawk. c. 10. s. 41; or a practising physician, unless he be a member of the College of Physicians and practise in London, or within seven miles thereof. 32 Hen. 8. c. 40. But surgeons by the ancient custom of the realm, and the statutes 5 Hen. 8, c. 6, and 18 Geo. 2, s. 15, s. 10, are exempt; and so also are apothecaries by 6 and 7 Wil. 3, c. 4. Likewise by 12 W. 3, c. 2, and 1 Geo. 1, c. 4, aliens naturalized are not eligible, for this is a civil office of trust, 5 Burr. Rep. 2799. Also by 1 Wil. & Mar. c. 18, s. 11, dissenting preachers, and by 31 Geo. 3, c. 32, Roman catholic priests, taking certain oaths, are exempted. Likewise by 10 and 11 Wil. 3, the prosecutors of burglars, housebreakers, persons privately stealing to the value of 5*s.* in any shop, warehouse, coach-house, or stable, and horse-stealers, are entitled to certificates to exempt them from parish and ward offices; but this does not exempt them if they are chosen constables for a manor, and not for a parish or ward. 2 Burr. 1182. By ancient custom also barristers, servants to members of parliament, and attornies, 2 Hawk. c. 10. s. 39, aldermen of London, 1 Jones 462. Cro. Car. 585, and the college barbers of Oxford and Cambridge are exempt. Doug. Rep. 531.

But physicians, apothecaries, and surgeons, are excused by statute from bearing the office of constable, or other parish office in London, or within seven miles thereof. See 5 H. 6. c. 6. 3 H. 8. c. 43. 5 H. 8. c. 6. and 6 W. & M. c. 4.

And by the last act, 6 Wil. & Mar. c. 4. apothecaries wherever they may reside, are in like manner exempt.

General duty of constables.] The HIGH CONSTABLE has the direction of the petty constables, headboroughs, and tithingmen, within his hundred: his duty is to keep the peace, and apprehend felons, rioters, &c. to make hue and cry after felons; and take care that the watch be duly kept in his hundred; and and that the statutes for punishing rogues and vagrants be put in execution. He ought to present unlawful games, tippling, and drunkenness; bloodshed, affrays, &c. He is to execute precepts and warrants, directed to him by justices of the peace, and make returns to the sessions of the peace to all the articles contained in his oath, or that concern his office: and shall also cause the petty constables, to make their returns. He is to return all victuallers and alehouse-keepers that are unlicensed; and all such persons as entertain inmates, who are likely to be a charge to the parish. He must likewise present the faults of petty constables, headboroughs, &c. who neglect to apprehend rogues, vagrants, and idle persons, whores, night-walkers, mothers of bastard children like to be chargeable to the parish, &c. And also all defects of highways and bridges, and the names of those who ought to repair them: scavengers who neglect their duty; and all common nusances in streets and highways: bakers who sell bread under weight; brewers selling beer to unlicensed alehouses; forestallers, regraters, ingrossers, &c. And at every quarter-sessions they are to pay to the treasurer of the county all such money as hath been received by them, of the churchwardens, &c. for the county rates. Dalt. Ca. 28. Lamb. 125. and 12 Geo. 2. cap. 29.

The authority of PETTY CONSTABLES, in their several towns, tithings, and boroughs, is generally the same as the high constable hath in his hundred: they are to keep the peace in the absence of the high constable; and assist him in making presentments at the assises and quarter sessions, of every thing that is amiss: they may command affrayers to keep the peace, and depart, &c. and may break into a house to see the peace kept; make fresh pursuit into another county, &c. Also they may command all persons to assist them, to prevent a breach of the peace; justify beating another if assaulted; and if they happen to be killed, doing their duty, it will be taken to be murder, or malice prepense; they may, without warrant from a justice of peace, take into custody any persons whom they see committing a felony or breach of the peace; but if a breach of the peace has been committed out of their sight, as an assault, an affray, or the like, they may not do it without a warrant from a justice. Neither can a constable detain a man at his pleasure; for he can only stay him for a reasonable time, to bring him before a justice to be examined, &c. And this detaining of an offender by the constable, it is said, may be for a day, (if he has reasonable cause for so doing,) without warrant, and be justified. Dalt. c. 1. 8 Lamb. 125 H. P. C. 135. 1 Leon. 307. Moor 408.

Petty constables are to execute all warrants of justices, and not dispute it, when the justice hath jurisdiction, and the warran is lawful: and being sworn officers, they need not shew their warrants when they come to arrest any one. 10 Rep. 76.

But if any justice sends his warrant to a constable, &c. to bring a person before him to answer all such matters as shall be objected against him by another, and doth not set forth the special matter in the warrant, the warrant is unlawful; or if a justice of peace sends a warrant to a constable to take up one for slander, &c. the justices having no jurisdiction, in such cases, the constable ought not to execute it, because the constable, if he executes it, is liable to an action of false imprisonment. 2 Inst. 521.

And as the constable is the proper officer to a justice of peace, and bound to execute his lawful warrants; therefore where a statute authorises a justice to convict a person of any crime, and to levy the penalty, &c. without saying to whom such warrant shall be directed, the constable is the officer to execute the warrant, and must obey it. 5 Mod. 130. 1 Salk. 381. And if a warrant be directed to a constable by name, commanding him to execute, though he is not conpellable to go out of his own parish, yet he may if he will, and execute it in any place in the county, and shall be justified by the warrant for so doing; but if the warrant be directed to all constables, &c. generally, no constable can execute the same out of his precinct. 1 Salk. 175. 3 Salk. 99.

It is at the election of a constable to carry an offender before any other justice than him who issued the warrant; if the warrant be not special, to bring the offender before the justice that granted it. 5 Rep. 59.

And by stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 55. "a constable may execute a warrant in any other "county, &c. if indorsed by a justice of such "other county, &c. and carry the offender "before a justice of such other county, &c. "and if the offender shall give bail, the constable is to deliver the recognizance, examination or confession of the offender, and "all other proceedings relating thereto to "the clerk of assise, or clerk of the peace "of the county, &c. where the offence was "committed, under the penalty of 10*l.* But "if the offence shall not be bailable, or the "offender shall not give bail, the constable "shall carry the offender before a justice of "the county where the offence was committed."

A constable is not obliged to return a justice's warrant to the justice, but he may keep the same for his own justification, in case he should be questioned for his acting; but he must make a return to the justice of what he hath done upon it. 2 Ld. Raym. 1196.

As to the particular duty of constables, his depends on the provisions contained in numerous acts of parliament, which being n general to be carried into execution by he justices of peace, and under their special warrants, it is unnecessary in this place to numerate all the objects of their duty, and nore particularly as the constable is protect-d in the exercise of his office, and the exeution of all warrants issued by the justices f the peace by the following statutes.

By 7 Jac. 1. cap. 5. if any action is brought gainst a constable, for any thing done by rtue of his office, he, and also all others ho in his aid, or by his command, shall do ny thing concerning his office, may plead te general issue, and give the special matr in evidence, and if he recovers he shall ve double costs.

By the stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 44. no action all be brought against any constable, or ther officer, or any person acting by his rder, and in his aid, for any thing done in oedience to any warrant of a justice of pace, until demand of the perusal and copy o such warrant, and the same hath been fused or neglected by the space of six ays; and in case after such demand, and mpliance therewith, any action shall be ought against such constable, &c. without making the justice a defendant; then on producing and proving such warrant, the jury shall give a verdict for the defendant, notwithstanding any defect of jurisdiction in such justice; and if such action be brought jointly against such justice, and also against such constable, &c. then on proof of such warrant, the jury shall find for such constable, &c. and if the verdict shall be given against the justice, the plaintiff shall recover his costs against him, to be taxed, so as to include the costs plaintiff shall be liable to pay to such defendant, &c. No action shall be brought against any constable, &c. unless commenced within six calendar months after the act committed.

S. at 27 Geo. 2. cap. 20. sect. 2. the constable executing a justice's warrant for levying a penalty, or other sum of money directed by any act of parliament, by distress, may deduct his own reasonable charges of taking, keeping, and selling the goods distrained; returning the overplus on demand, after such penalty or sum of money, and charges deducted.

By 18 Geo. 3. c. 19. constables every three months shall deliver to the overseers of the poor, an account of their expences for the parish, to be settled in 14 days, and paid, if approved, by the parish, if not, to be settled by a justice, with an appeal to the next general or quarter sessions, who may give costs, and in corporations or liberties not having four justices, appeal may be to the next general or quarter sessions of the county.

And by 41 Geo. 3. (u. k.) c. 78. when special constables shall be appointed in England to execute warrants in cases of felony, two justices may order proper allowances to be made for their expences and loss of time, which order shall be submitted to the quarter sessions. s. 1.

And two justices may in like manner, order allowances to be made to high constables in England for extraordinary expences incurred in the execution of their duties in cases of riot or felony. s. 3.

CONSTAT, (Lat.) is a certificate from the clerk of the pipe, and auditors of the exchequer, made at the request of any person who intends to plead or move in that court. for the discharge of any thing: and the effect of it, is the certifying what does constat upon record, touching the matter in question. 3 & 4 Ed. 6. c. 4. and 13 Eliz. c. 6.

CONSTITUTION, the form of government used in any place.

The pure principles of the BRITISH CONSTITUTION, many of which are pointed out in this Dictionary, under their different titles, cannot be better illustrated, than by referring to the elegant summary of the rise, progress, and gradual improvements of the laws of England, given by Sir William Blackstone in the fourth volume of his learned Commentaries, and wherein he has taken a chronological view of the state of our laws, and their successive mutations at different periods of time.

The several periods under which the learned Commentator considers the state of our legal polity, are the following six; I. From the earliest times to the Norman conquest; II. From the Norman conquest to the reign of king Edward I.; III. From thence to the reformation; IV. From the reformation to the restoration of king Charles 2.; V. From thence to the revolution in 1688; VI. From the revolution to the present time.

I. With regard to the antient Britons, the aborigines of our islands, so little is handed down to us concerning them with any tolerable certainty, that inquiries here must be very fruitless and defective. However, from Cæsar's account of the tenets and discipline of the antient Druids in Gaul, in whom centered all the learning of these western parts, and who were, as he tells us, sent over to Britain, (that is, to the island of Mona or Anglesey,) to be instructed; we may collect a few points, which bear a great affinity and resemblance to some of the modern doctrines of our English law. Particularly, the very notion itself of an oral unwritten law, delivered from age to age, by custom and tradition merely, seems derived from the practice of the Druids, who never committed any of their instructions to writing: possibly for want of letters: since it is remarkable that in all the antiquities, unquestionably British, which the industry of the moderns has discovered, there is not in any of them the least trace of any character or letter to be found. The partible quality also of lands, by the custom of gavelkind, which still obtains in many parts of England, and did universally over Wales till the reign of Henry VIII. is undoubtedly of British original. So likewise is the antient division of the goods of an intestate between his widow and children, or next of kin: which has since been revived by the statute of distributions. And the same custom had continued from Cæsar's time, unaltered by stat. 30 Geo. 3. c. 48.; that of burning a woman guilty of the crime of petit treason by killing her husband. 4 Black. 408.

The great variety of nations, that successively broke in upon and destroyed both the British inhabitants and constitution, the Romans, the Picts, and, after them, the various clans of Saxons and Danes, must necessarily have caused great confusion and uncertainty in the laws and antiquities of the kingdom; as they were very soon incorporated and blended together, and therefore, we may suppose, mutually communicated to each other their respective usages, (Hal. Hist. C. L. 62.) in regard to the rights of property, and the punishment of crimes. So that it is morally impossible to trace out, with any degree of accuracy, when the several mutations of the common law were made, or what was the respective original of those several customs we at present use, by any analization or resolution of them to their first and component principles. We can seldom pronounce, that this custom was derived from the Britons; that was left behind by the Romans; this was a necessary precaution against the Picts, that was introduced by the Saxons, discontinued by the Danes, but afterwards restored by the Normans. Ibid.

Wherever this can be done, it is matter of great curiosity, and some use: but this can very rarely be the case; not only from the reason above-mentioned, but also from many others. First, from the nature of traditional laws in general; which, being accommodated to the exigencies of the times, suffer by degrees insensible variations in practice (Ibid. 57.): so that, though upon comparison we plainly discern the alteration of the law from what it was five hundred years ago, yet it is impossible to define the precise period in which that alteration accrued, any more than we can discern the changes of the bed of a river, which varies its shores by continual decreases and alluvions. Secondly, this becomes impracticable from the antiquity of the kingdom and its government: which alone, though it had been disturbed by no foreign invasions would make it impossible to search out the original of its laws; unless we had as authentic monuments thereof, as the Jews had by the hand of Moses (Ibid. 59.) Thirdly, this uncertainty of the true origin of particular customs must also in part have arisen from the means, whereby christianity was propagated among our Saxon ancestors in this island, by learned foreigners brought over from Rome and other countries; who undoubtedly carried with them many of their own national customs; and probably prevailed upon the state to abrogate such usages as were inconsistent with our holy religion, and to introduce many others that were more conformable thereto. And this perhaps may have partly been the cause, that we find not only some rules of the mosaical, but also of the imperial and pontifical laws, blended and adopted into our own system.* Ibid.

A farther reason may also be given for the great variety, and of course the uncertain original, of our antient established customs; even after the Saxon government was firmly established in this island: viz. the subdivision of the kingdom into an heptarchy, consisting of seven independent kingdoms, peopled and governed by different clans and colonies. This must necessarily create an infinite diversity of laws: even though all those colonies, of Jutes, Angles, Anglo-Saxons, and the like, originally sprung from the same mother-country, the great northern hive; which poured forth its warlike progeny, and swarmed all over Europe, in the sixth and seventh centuries. This multiplicity of laws will necessarily be the case in some degree, where any kingdom is cantoned out into provincial establishments; and not under one common dispensation of laws, though under the same sovereign power. Much more will it happen where seven unconnected states are to form their own constitution and superstructure of government, though they all begin to build upon the same or similar foundations. Ibid.

When, therefore, the West Saxons had swallowed up all the rest, and king Alfred succeeded to the monarchy of England, whereof his grandfather Egbert was the founder, his mighty genius prompted him to undertake a most great and necessary work, which he is said to have executed in as masterly a manner: no less than to new model the constitution; to rebuild it on a plan that should endure for ages; and, out of its old discordant materials, which were heaped upon each other in a vast and rude irregularity, to form one uniform and well-connected whole. This he effected, by reducing the whole kingdom under one regular and gradual subordination of government, wherein each man was answerable to his immediate superior for his own conduct and that of his nearest neighbours: for to him we owe that masterpiece of judicial polity, the subdivision of England into tithings and hundreds, if not into counties; all under the influence and administration of one supreme magistrate, the king; in whom as in a general reservoir, all the executive authority of the law was lodged, and from whom justice was dispersed to every part of the nation by distinct, yet communicating, ducts and channels; which wise institution has been preserved for near a thousand years unchanged, from Alfred's to the present time. He also, like another Theodosius, collected the various customs that he found dispersed in the kingdom, and reduced and digested them into one uniform system or code of laws, in his dom-bec, or liber judicialis. This he compiled for the use of the court-baron, hundred, and county-court, the court-leet, and sheriff's tourn; tribunals, which he established, for the trial of all causes civil and criminal, in the very districts wherein the complaint arose: all of them subject however to be inspected, controlled, and kept within the bounds of the universal or common law, by the king's own courts; which were then itinerant, being kept in the king's palace, and removing with his household in those royal progresses, which he continually made from one end of the kingdom to the other. Ibid. 411.

The Danish invasion and conquest, which introduced new foreign customs, was a severe blow to this noble fabric: but a plan, so excellently concerted, could never be long thrown aside. So that, upon the expulsion of these intruders, the English returned to their antient law; retaining however some few of the customs of their late visitants; which went under the name of Dane-Lage; as the code compiled by Alfred was called the West Saxon-Lage; and the local constitutions of the antient kingdom of Mercia, which obtained in the counties nearest to Wales, and probably abounded with many British customs, were called the Mercen-Lage. And these three laws were, about the beginning of the eleventh century, in use, in different counties of the realm: the provincial polity of counties, and their subdivisions, having never been altered or discontinued through all the shocks and mutations of government, from the time of its first institution; though the laws and customs therein used, have often suffered considerable changes. Ibid. 412.

For king Edgar, (who besides his military merit, as founder of the English navy, was also a most excellent civil governor,) observing the ill effects of three distinct bodies of laws, prevailing at once in separate parts of his dominions, projected and began what his grandson king Edward the confessor afterwards completed, viz. one uniform digest or body of laws to be observed throughout the whole kingdom: being probably no more than a revival of king Alfred's code, with some improvements suggested by necessity and experience; particularly the incorporating some of the British or rather Mercian customs, and also such of the Danish as were reasonable and approved, into the West Saxon-Lage, which was still the groundwork of the whole. And this appears to be the best supported and most plausible conjecture (for certainty is not to be expected) of the rise and original of that admirable system of maxims and unwritten customs, which is now known by the name of the common law, as extending its authority universally over all the realm; and which is doubtless of Saxon parentage. Ibid.

Among the most remarkable of the Saxon laws we may reckon, 1. The constitution of parliaments, or rather, general assemblies of the principal and wisest men in the nation: the witten-gemote, or commune consilium of the antient Germans; which was not yet reduced to the forms and distinctions of our modern parliament: without whose concurrence, however, no new law could be made, or old one altered. 2. The election of their magistrates by the people; originally even that of their kings, till dear-bought experience evinced the convenience and necessity of establishing an hereditary succession to the crown. But that of all subordinate magistrates, their military officers or heretochs, their sheriffs, their conservators of the peace, their coroners, their port-reeves, (since changed into mayors and bailiffs,) and even their tithing-men and borsholders at the leet, continued, some till the Norman conquest, others for two centuries after, and some remain to this day. 3. The descent of the crown, when once a royal family was established, upon nearly the same hereditary principles upon which it has ever since continued: only that, perhaps, in case of minority, the next of kin of full age would ascend the throne, as king, and not as protector; though, after his death, the crown immediately reverted back to the heir. 4. The great paucity of capital punishments for the first offence: even the most notorious offenders being allowed to commute it for a fine or weregild, or, in default of payment, perpetual bondage; to which our benefit of clergy has now in some measure succeeded. 5. The prevalence of certain customs, as heriots and military services in proportion to every man's land, which much resembled the feodal constitution; but yet were exempt from all its rigorous hardships: and which may be well enough accounted for, by supposing them to be brought from the continent by the first Saxon invaders, in the primitive moderation and simplicity of the feodal law; before it got into the hands of the Norman jurists, who extracted the most slavish doctrines and oppressive consequences out of what was originally intended as a law of liberty. 6. That their estates were liable to forfeiture for treason, but that the doctrine of escheats and corruption of blood for felony, or any other cause, was utterly unknown amongst them. 7. The descent of their lands to all the males equally, without any right of primogeniture; a custom, which obtained among the Britons, was agreeable to the Roman law, and continued among the Saxons till the Norman conquest; though really inconvenient, and more especially destructive to antient families; which are in monarchies necessary to be supported, in order to form and keep up a nobility, or intermediate state between the prince and the common people. 8. The courts of justice consisted principally of the county courts, and in cases of weight or nicety the king's court held before himself in person, at the time of his parliaments; which were usually holden in different places, according as he kept the three great festivals of Christmas, Easter, and Whitsuntide. An institution which was adopted by king Alonso VII. of Castile, about a century after the conquest: who at the same three great feasts was accustomed to assemble his nobility and prelates in his court; who there heard and decided all controversies, and then, having received his instructions, departed home. (Mod. Un. Hist. xx. 114.) These county courts, however, differed from the modern ones, in that the ecclesiastical and civil jurisdiction were blended together, the bishop and the ealdorman or sheriff sitting in the same county court; and also that the decisions and proceedings therein were much more simple and unembarrassed; an advantage which will always attend the infancy of any laws, but wear off as they gradually advance to antiquity. 9. Trials, among a people who had a very strong tincture of superstition were permitted to be by ordeal, by the corsned or morsel of execration, or by wager of law with compurgators, if the party chose it; but frequently they were also by jury, for whether or no their juries consisted precisely of twelve men, or were bound to a strict unanimity; yet the general constitution of this admirable criterion of truth, and most important guardian both of public and private liberty, we owe to our Saxon ancestors. Thus stood the general frame of our polity at the time of the Norman invasion, when the second period of our legal history commences. Ibid. 414.

II. This remarkable event wrought as great an alteration in our laws, as it did in our antient line of kings: and though the alteration of the former was effected rather by the consent of the people, than any right of conquest, yet that consent seems to have been partly extorted by fear, and partly given without any apprehension of the consequences which afterwards ensued. Ibid. 415.

1. Among the first of these alterations we may reckon the separation of the ecclesiastical courts from the civil; effected in order to ingratiate the new king with the popish clergy, who for some time before had been endeavouring all over Europe to exempt themselves from the secular power: and whose demands the conqueror, like a politic prince, thought it prudent to comply with; by reason that their reputed sanctity had a great influence over the minds of the people; and because all the little learning of the times was engrossed into their hands, which made them necessary men, and by all means to be gained over to his interests. And this was the more easily effected, because the disposal of all the episcopal sees being then in the breast of the king, he had taken care to fill them with Italian and Norman prelates. Ibid.

2. Another violent alteration of the English constitution consisted in the depopulation of whole countries, for the purposes of the king's royal diversion: and subjecting both them, and all the antient forests of the kingdom, to the unreasonable severities of forest laws imported from the continent, whereby the slaughter of a beast was made almost as penal as the death of a man. In the Saxon times, though no man was allowed to kill or chase the king's deer, yet he might start any game, pursue, and kill it, upon his own estate. But the rigour of these new constitutions vested the sole property of all the game in England in the king alone; and no man was entitled to disturb any fowl of the air, or any beast of the field, of such kinds as were specially reserved for the royal amusement of the sovereign, without express licence from the king, by a grant of a chase or free warren: and those franchises were granted as much with a view to preserve the breed of animals as to indulge the subject. From a similar principle to which, though the forest laws are now mitigated, and by degrees grown entirely obsolete, yet from this root has sprung a bastard slip, known by the name of the game law, now arrived to and wantoning in its highest vigour: both founded upon the same unreasonable notions of permanent property in wild creatures; and both productive of the same tyranny to the commons; but with this difference, that the forest laws established only one mighty hunter throughout the land, the game laws have raised a little Nimrod in every manor. And in one respect the antient law was much less unreasonable than the modern: for the king's grantee of a chase or free-warren might kill game in every part of his franchise; but now, though a freeholder of less than 100*l*. a year is forbidden to kill a patridge upon his own estate, yet nobody else, (not even the lord of the manor, unless he hath a grant of free-warren) can do it without committing a trespass, and subjecting himself to an action. Ibid. 415, 16.

3. A third alteration in the English laws was by narrowing the remedial influence of the county courts the great seats of Saxon justice, and extending the original jurisdiction of the king's justices to all kinds of causes, arising in all parts of the kingdom. To this end the aula regis, with all its multifarious authority, was erected; and a capital justiciary appointed, with powers so large and boundless, that he became at length a tyrant to the people, and formidable to the crown itself. The constitution of this court, and the judges themselves who presided there, were fetched from the duchy of Normandy: and the consequence naturally was, the ordaining that all proceedings in the king's courts should be carried on in the Norman, instead of the English language. A provision the more necessary, because none of his Norman justiciers understood English; but as evident a badge of slavery as ever was imposed upon a conquered people. This lasted till king Edward the third obtained a double victory, over the armies of France in their own country, and their language in our courts here at home. But there was one mischief too deeply rooted thereby, and which this caution of king Edward came too late to eradicate. Instead of the plain and easy method of determining suits in the county courts, the chicanes and subtilties of Norman jurisprudence had taken possession of the king's courts, to which every cause of consequence was drawn. Indeed that age, and those immediately succeeding it, were the era of refinement and subtilty. There is an active principle in the human soul, that will ever be exerting its faculties to the utmost stretch, in whatever employment, by the accidents of time and place, the general plan of education, or the customs and manners of the age and country, it may happen to find itself engaged. The northern conquerors of Europe were then emerging from the grossest ignorance in point of literature: and those who had leisure to cultivate its progress, were such only as were cloistered in monasteries, the rest being all soldiers or peasants. And, unfortunately, the first rudiments of science, which they imbibed were those of Aristotle's philosophy, conveyed through the medium of his Arabian commentators; which were brought from the east by the Saracens into Palestine and Spain, and translated into barbarous Latin. So that, though the materials upon which they were naturally employed, in the infancy of a rising state, were those of the noblest kind; the establishment of religion, and the regulations of civil polity, yet having only such tools to work with, their execution was trifling and flimsy. Both the divinity and the law of those times were therefore frittered into logical distinctions, and drawn out into metaphysical subtilties, with a skill most amazingly artificial; but which serves no other purpose, than to shew the vast powers of the human intellect, however vainly or preposterously employed. Hence law in particular, which (being intended for universal reception) ought to be a plain rule of action, became a science of the greatest intricacy; especially when blended with the new refinements engrafted upon feodal property; which refinements were from time to time gradually introduced by the Norman practitioners, with a view to supersede (as they did in great measure) the more homely but more intelligible, maxims of distributive justice among the Saxons. And to say the truth, these scholastic reformers have transmitted their dialect and fineness to posterity so interwoven in the body of our legal polity, that they cannot now be taken out without a manifest injury to the substance. Statute after statute has in later times been made, to pare off these troublesome excrescences, and restore the common law to its pristine simplicity and vigour; and the endeavour has greatly succeeded, but still the scars are deep and visible; and the liberality of our modern courts of justice is frequently obliged to have recourse to unaccountable fictions and circuities, in order to recover that equitable and substantial justice, which for a long time was totally buried under the narrow rules and fanciful niceties of metaphysical and Norman jurisprudence. Ibid. 417.

4. A fourth innovation was the introduction of the trial by combat, for the decision of all civil and criminal questions of fact in the last resort. This was the immemorial practice of all the northern nations; but first reduced to regular and stated forms among the Burgundi, about the close of the fifth century; and from them it passed to other nations, particularly the Franks and the Normans; which last had the honour to establish it here, though clearly an unchristian, as well as most uncertain, method of trial. But it was a sufficient recommendation of it to the conqueror, and his warlike countrymen, that it was the usage of their native duchy of Normandy. Ibid. 417.

5. But the last and most important alteration, both in our civil and military polity, was the engrafting on all landed estates, a few only excepted, the fiction of feodal tenure; which drew after it a numerous and oppressive train of servile fruits and appendages; aids, reliefs, primer seisins, wardships, marriages, escheats, and fines for alienation; the genuine consequences of the maxim then adopted, that all the lands in England were derived from and holden, mediately or immediately, of the crown. Ibid. 417.

The nation at this period seems to have groaned under as absolute a slavery, as was in the power of a warlike, an ambitious, and a politic prince to create. The consciences of men were enslaved by four ecclesiastics, devoted to a foreign power, and unconnected with the civil state under which they lived; who now imported from Rome for the first time the whole farrago of superstitious novelties, which had been engendered by the blindness and corruption of the times, between the first mission of Augustin the monk, and the Norman conquest; such as transubstantiation, purgatory, communion in one kind, and the worship of saints and images; not forgetting the universal supremacy and dogmatical infallibility of the holy see. The laws too, as well as the prayers, were administered in an unknown tongue. The ancient trial by jury gave way to the impious decision by battle. The forest laws totally restrained all rural pleasures and manly recreations. And in cities and towns the case was no better; all company being obliged to disperse, and fire and candle to be extinguished, by eight at night, at the sound of the melancholy curfeu. The ultimate property of all lands, and a considerable share of the present profits, were vested in the king, or by him granted out to his Norman favourites; who, by a gradual progression of slavery, were absolute vassals to the crown, and as absolute tyrants to the commons. Unheard of forfeitures, tallages, aids, and fines, were arbitrarily extracted from the pillaged landholders, in pursuance of the new system of tenure. And to crown all, as a consequence of the tenure by knight service, the king had always ready at his command, an army of sixty thousand knights or milites; who were bound upon pain of confiscating their estates, to attend him in time of invasion, or to quell any domestic insurrection. Trade or foreign merchandize, such as it then was, was carried on by the Jews and Lombards; and the very name of an English fleet, which king Edgar had rendered so formidable, was utterly unknown to Europe: the nation consisting wholly of the clergy, who were also the lawyers, the barons, or great lords of the land; the knights or soldiery, who were the subordinate landholders, and the burghers, or inferior tradesmen, who from their insignificancy happily retained, in their socage and burgage tenure, some points of their antient freedom. All the rest were villains or bondman. Ibid. 419.

From so complete and well concerted a scheme of servility, it has been the work of generations for our ancestors to redeem themselves and their posterity into that state of liberty which we now enjoy: and which therefore is not to be looked upon as consisting of mere encroachments on the crown, and infringements on the prerogative, as some slavish and narrow minded writers in the last century endeavoured to maintain: but as in general, a gradual restoration of that ancient constitution, whereof our Saxon forefathers had been unjustly deprived, partly by the policy, and partly by the force of the Norman. How that restoration, has in a long series of years, been step by step effected, I now proceed to inquire. Ibid.

William Rufus proceeded on his father's plan, and in some points extended it; particularly with regard to the forest laws. But his brother and successor Henry the first, found it expedient, when he first came to the crown, to ingratiate himself with the people; by restoring, (as our monkish historian tells us) the laws of king Edward the confessor. The ground whereof is this, that by charter he gave up the great grievances of marriage, ward, and relief, the beneficial pecuniary fruits of his feodal tenures; but reserved the tenures themselves, for the same military purposes that his father introduced them. He also abolished the curfeu; (Spelm. Cod. L. L. W. I. 228. Hen. I. 299). For, though it is mentioned in our laws a full century afterwards (Stat. Civ. Lond. 13 Edw. 1); Yet it is rather spoken of as a known time of night (so denominated from that abrogated usage) than as a still subsisting custom. There is extant a code of laws in his name, consisting partly of those of the confessor, but with great additions and alterations of his own; and chiefly calculated for the regulation of the country courts. It contains some directions as to crimes and their punishments, (that of theft being made capital in his reign,) and a few things relating to estates, particularly as to the descent of lands, which being by the Saxon laws equally to all the sons, by the feodal or Norman to the eldest only, king Henry here moderated the difference; directing the eldest son to have only the principal estate, "primum patris feudum," the rest of his estates, if he had any others, being equally divided among them all. On the other hand, he gave up to the clergy the free election of bishops and mitred abbots; reserving however these ensigns of patronage, congé d' eslire, custody of the temporalities when vacant, and homage upon their restitution. He lastly united again for a time the civil and ecclesiastical courts, which union was soon dissolved by his Norman clergy: and, upon that final dissolution, the cognizance of testamentary causes seems to have been first given to the ecclesiastical court. The rest remained in his father's time; from whence we may easily perceive how far short this was of a thorough restitution of king Edward's, or the Saxon laws. Ibid. 420.

The usurper Stephen, as the manner of usurpers is, promised much at his accession, especially with regard to redressing the grievances of the forest laws, but performed no great matter in that or in any other point. It is from his reign, however, that we are to date the introduction of the Roman civil and canon laws into this realm, and at the same time was imported the doctrine of appeals to the court of Rome, as a branch of the canon law. Ibid.

By the time of king Henry the second, if not earlier, the charter of Henry the first seems to have been forgotten: for we find the claim of marriage, ward, and relief, then flourishing in full vigour. The right of primogeniture seems also to have tacitly revived, being found more convenient for the public than the parcelling of estates into a multitude of minute subdivisions. However in this prince's reign much was done to methodize the laws, and reduce them into a regular order; as appears from that excellent treatise of Glanvil; which, though some of it be now antiquated and altered, yet when compared with the code of Henry the first, it carries a manifest superiority. (Hal. Hist. C. L. 138.) Throughout his reign also was continued the important struggle, which we have had occasion so often to mention, between the laws of England and Rome; the former supported by the strength of the temporal nobility, when endeavoured to be supplanted in favour of the latter by the popish clergy. Which dispute was kept on foot till the reign of Edward the first, when the laws of England, under the new discipline introduced by that skilful commander, obtained a complete and permanent victory. In the present reign of Henry the second, there are four things which peculiarly merit the attention of a legal antiquarian. 1. The constitutions of the parliament at Clarendon, A. D. 1164, whereby the king checked the power of the pope and his clergy, and greatly narrowed the total exemption they claimed from the secular jurisdiction: though his farther progress was unhappily stopped, by the fatal event of the disputes between him and archbishop Becket. 2. The institution of the justices in eyre, in itinere; the king having divided the kingdom into six circuits, (a little different from the present), and commissioned these new created judges to administer justice, and try writs of assize, in the several counties. These remedies are said to have been then first invented, before which all causes were usually terminated in the county courts, according to the Saxon custom; or before the king's justiciaries in the aula regis, in pursuance of the Norman regulations. The latter of which tribunals, travelling about with the king's person, occasioned intolerable expense and delay to the suitors; and the former, however proper for little debts and minute actions, where even injustice is better than procrastination, were now become liable to too much ignorance of the law, and too much partiality as to facts, to determine matters of considerable moment. 3. The introduction and establishment of the grand assize, or trial by special kind of jury in a writ of right at the option of the tenant or defendant, instead of the barbarous and Norman trial by battle. 4. To this time must also be referred the introduction of escuage, or pecuniary commutation for personal military service; which in process of time was the parent of the ancient subsidies granted to the crown by parliament, and the land tax of later times. Ibid. 422.

Richard the first, a brave and magnanimous prince, was a sportsman as well as a soldier: and therefore enforced the forest laws with some rigour, which occasioned many discontents among his people, though (according to Matthew Paris) he repealed the penalties of castration, loss of eyes, cutting off the hands and feet, before inflicted on such as transgressed in hunting; probably finding that their severity prevented prosecutions. He also, when abroad, composed a body of naval laws at the isle of Oleron; which are still extant, and of high authority; for in his time we began again to discover, that (as an island) we were naturally a maritime power. But with regard to civil proceedings we find nothing very remarkable in this reign, except a few regulations regarding the Jews, and the justices in eyre: the king's thoughts being chiefly taken up by the knight errantry of a crusade against the Saracens in the holy land. Ibid.

In king John's time, and that of his son Henry the third, the rigours of the feodal tenures and the forest laws were so warmly kept up, that they occasioned many insurrections of the barons or principal feudatories: which at last had this effect, that first king John, and afterwards his son, consented to the two famous charters of English liberties magna carta, and carta de foresta. Of these the latter was well calculated to redress many grievances, and encroachments of the crown, in the exertion of forest law; and the former confirmed many liberties of the church, and redressed many grievances incident to feodal tenures, of no small moment at the time; though now, unless considered attentively and with this retrospect, they seem but of trifling concern. But, besides these feodal provisions, care was also taken therein to protect the subject against other oppressions, then frequently arising from unreasonable amercements, from illegal distresses or other process for debts or services due to the crown, and from the tyrannical abuse of the prerogative of purveyance and preemption. It fixed the forfeiture of lands for felony in the same manner as it still remains; prohibited for the future the grants of exclusive fisheries; and the erection of new bridges so as to oppress the neighbourhood. With respect to private rights, it established the testamentary power of the subject over part of his personal estate, the rest being distributed among his wife and children; it laid down the law of dower, as it hath continued ever since, and prohibited the appeals of women, unless for the death of their husbands. In matters of public police and national concern, it enjoined an uniformity of weights and measures, gave new encouragements to commerce, by the protection of merchant strangers, and forbad the alienation of lands in mortmain. With regard to the administration of justice, besides prohibiting all denials or delays of it, it fixed the court of common pleas at Westminster, that the suitors might no longer be harassed with following the king's person in all his progresses: and at the same time brought the trial of issues home to the very doors of the freeholders, by directing assizes to be taken in the proper counties, and establishing annual circuits; it also corrected some abuses then incident to the trials by wager of law and of battle; directed the regular awarding of inquest for life or member, prohibited the king's inferior ministers from holding pleas of the crown, or trying any criminal charge, whereby many forfeitures might otherwise have unjustly accrued to the exchequer; and regulated the time and place of holding the inferior tribunals of justice, the county court, sheriffs tourn, and court-leet. It confirmed and established the liberties of the city of London, and all other cities, boroughs, towns, and ports of the kingdom. And lastly, (which alone would have merited the title that it bears, of the great charter), it protected every individual of the nation in the free enjoyment of his life, his liberty, and his property, unless declared to be forfeited by the judgment of his peers or the law of the land.* Ibid. 424.

However by means of these struggles, the pope in the reign of king John gained a still greater ascendant here, than he ever had before enjoyed; which continued through the long reign of his son Henry the third, in the beginning of whose time the old Saxon trial by ordeal was also totally abolished. And we may by this time perceive in Bracton's treatise, a still farther improvement in the method and regularity of the common law, especially in the point of pleadings. (Hale Hist. C. L. 156). Nor must it be forgotten, that the first traces which remain, of the separation of the greater barons from the less, in the constitution of parliament, are found in the great charter of king John, though omitted in that of Henry III. and that, towards the end of the latter of these reigns, we find the first record of any writ for summoning knights, citizens, and burgesses to parliament. And here we conclude the second period of our English legal history. Ibid.

III. The third commences with the reign of Edward the first; who hath justly been styled our English Justinian. For in his time the law did receive so sudden a perfection, that Sir Matthew Hale does not scruple to affirm, (Ibid. 158), that more was done in the first thirteen years of his reign to settle and establish the distributive justice of the kingdom, than in all the ages since that time put together.

It would be endless to enumerate all the particulars of these regulations; but the principal may be reduced under the following general heads. 1. He established, confirmed, and settled the great charter and charter of forests. 2. He gave a mortal wound to the encroachments of the pope and his clergy, by limiting and establishing the bounds of ecclesiastical jurisdiction: and by obliging the ordinary, to whom all the goods of intestates at that time belonged, to discharge the debts of the deceased. 3. He defined the limits of the several temporal courts of the highest jurisdiction, those of the king's bench, common pleas, and exchequer; so as they might not interfere with each other's proper business: to do which they must now have recourse to a fiction, very necessary and beneficial in the present enlarged state of property. 4. He settled the boundaries of the inferior courts in counties, hundreds, and manors confining them to causes of no great amount, according to their primitive institution; though of considerably greater, than by the alteration of the value of money they are now permitted to determine. 5. He secured the property of the subjects by abolishing all arbitrary taxes and talliages, levied without consent of the national council. 6. He guarded the common justice of the kingdom from abuses, by giving up the royal prerogative of sending mandates to interfere in private causes. 7. He settled the form, solemnities, and effect, of fines levied in the court of common pleas; though the thing itself was of Saxon original. 8. He first established a repository for the public records of the kingdom, few of which are ancienter than the reign of his father, and those were by him collected. 9. He improved upon the laws of king Alfred, by that great and orderly method of watch and ward, for preserving the public peace and preventing robberies, established by the statute of Winchester. 10. He settled and reformed many abuses incident to tenures, and removed some restraints on the alienation of landed property, by the statute of quia emptores. 11. He instituted a speedier way for the recovery of debts, by granting execution not only upon goods and chattels, but also upon lands by writ of elegit; which was of signal benefit to a trading people: and upon the same commercial ideas, he also allowed the charging of lands in a statute merchant, to pay debts contracted in trade, contrary to all feodal principles. 12. He effectually provided for the recovery of advowsons, as temporal rights in which, before the law was extremely deficient. 13. He also effectually closed the great gulph, in which all the landed property of the kingdom was in danger of being swallowed, by his reiterated statutes of mortmain; most admirably adapted to meet the frauds that had been then devised, though afterwards contrived to be evaded by the invention of uses. 14. He established a new limitation of property by the creation of estates tail; concerning the good policy of which, modern times have however entertained a very different opinion. 15. He reduced all Wales to the subjection, not only of the crown, but in great measure of the laws, of England, (which was thoroughly completed in the reign of Henry the eighth); and seems to have entertained a design of doing the like by Scotland, so as to have formed an entire and complete union of the island of Great Britain. Ibid. 426,7.

---

* The following is the celebrated 29th chapter of magna charta, the foundation of the liberty of Englishmen:

Nullus liber homo capiatur, vel imprisonetur aut dissesiatur de libero tenemento suo, vel libertatibus, vel liberis consuetudinibus suis, aut utlagetur, aut exulet, aut aliquo modo destruatur, nec super eum ibimus, nec super eum mittemus, nisi per legale judicium parium suorum vel per legem terræ. Nulli vendemus, nulli negabimus, aut differemus rectum aut justitiam.

This catalogue might be continued much farther; but upon the whole, we may observe, that every scheme and model of the administration of common justice between party and party, was entirely settled by this king. (Hal. Hist. C. L. 162). And has continued nearly the same in all succeeding ages, to this day; abating some few alterations, which the humour or necessity of subsequent times hath occasioned. The forms of writs by which actions are commenced, were perfected in his reign, and established as models for posterity. The pleadings, consequent upon the writs, were then short, nervous, and perspicuous; not intricate, verbose, and formal. The legal treatises written in his time, as Britton, Fleta, Hengam, and the rest, are for the most part law at this day, or at least were so, till the alteration of tenures took place. And to conclude, it is from this period, from the exact observation of magna charta, rather than from its making or renewal, in the days of his grandfather and father, that the liberty of Englishmen began again to rear its head; though the weight of the military tenures hung heavy upon it for many ages after. Ibid. 426,7.

A better proof of the excellence of his constitutions, cannot be given than that from his time to that of Henry the eighth, there happened very few, and those not very considerable, alterations in the legal forms of proceedings. As to matter of substance the old Gothic powers of electing the principal subordinate magistrates, the sheriffs, and conservators of the peace, were taken from the people in the reigns of Edward II. and Edward III. and justices of the peace were established instead of the latter. In the reign also of Edward the third the parliament is supposed most probably to have assumed its present form; by a separation of the commons from the lords. The statute for defining and ascertaining treasons was one of the first productions of this new modelled assembly; and the translation of the law proceedings from French into Latin another. Much also was done, under the auspices of this magnanimous prince, for establishing our domestic manufactures; by prohibiting the exportation of English wool, and the importation or wear of foreign cloth or furs; and by encou raging clothworkers from other countries to settle here. Nor was the legislature inattentive to many other branches of commerce, or indeed to commerce in general; for, in particular, it enlarged the credit of the merchant by introducing the statute-staple, whereby he might the more readily pledge his lands for the security of his mercantile debts. And, as personal property now grew by the extension of trade to be much more considerable than formerly, care was taken, in case of intestacies, to appoint administrators, particularly nominated by the law, to distribute that personal property among the creditors and kindred of the deceased, which before had been usually applied by the officers of the ordinary to uses then denominated pious. The statutes also of præmunire, for effectually depressing the civil power of the pope, were the work of this and the subsequent reign. And the establishment of a laborious parochial clergy, by the endowment of vicarages out of the overgrown possessions of the monasteries, added lustre to the close of the 14th century; though the seeds of the general reformation, which were thereby first sown in the kingdom, were almost overwhelmed by the spirit of persecution introduced into the laws of the land by the influence of the regular clergy. Ibid. 427, 428.

From this time to that of Henry VII. the civil wars and disputed titles to the crown gave no leisure for further juridical improvement: "nam silent leges inter arma." And yet it is to these very disputes that we owe the happy loss of all the dominions of the crown on the continent of France, which turned the minds of our subsequent princes entirely to domestic concerns. To these likewise we owe the method of barring entails by the fiction of common recoveries, invented originally by the clergy, to evade the statutes of mortmain, but introduced under Edward the Fourth for the purpose of unfettering estates, and making them more liable to forfeiture: while on the other hand the owners endeavoured to protect them by the universal establishment of uses, another of the clerical inventions. Ibid. 428.

In the reign of king Henry VII. his ministers (not to say the king himself) were more industrious in hunting out prosecutions upon old and forgotten penal laws, in order to extort money from the subject, than in framing any new beneficial regulations. For the distinguishing character of this reign was that of amassing treasure in the king's coffers by every means that could be devised; and almost every alteration in the laws, however salutary or otherwise in their future consequences, had this and this only for their great and immediate object. To this end the court of star-chamber was new modelled, and armed with powers the most dangerous and unconstitutional, over the persons and properties of the subject. Informations were allowed to be received in lieu of indictments at the assises and sessions of the peace, in order to multiply fines and pecuniary penalties. The statute of fines for landed property was craftily and covertly contrived to facilitate the destruction of entails, and make the owners of real estates more capable to forfeit as well as to aliene. The benefit of clergy, which so often intervened to stop attainders and save the inheritance, was now allowed only once to lay-offenders, who only could have inheritances to lose. A writ of capias was permitted in all actions on the case, and the defendant might in consequence be outlawed; because upon such outlawry his goods became the property of the crown. In short, there is hardly a statute in this reign, introductive of a new law, or modifying the old, but what either directly or obliquely tended to the emolument of the Exchequer. Ibid. 429.

IV. This brings us to the fourth period of our legal history, viz. the reformation of religion under Henry VIII. and his children, which opens an entirely new scene in ecclesiastical matters, the usurped power of the pope being now for ever routed and destroyed, all his connexions with this island cut off, the crown restored to its supremacy over spiritual men and causes, and the patronage of bishoprics being once more indisputably vested in the king. And had the spiritual courts been at this time re-united to the civil, we should have seen the old Saxon constitution with regard to ecclesiastical polity completely restored. Ibid. 429, 430.

With regard also to our civil polity, the statute of wills, and the statute of uses, (both passed in the reign of this prince) made a great alteration as to property: the former by allowing the devise of real estates by will, which before was in general forbidden, the latter by endeavouring to destroy the intricate nicety of uses, though the narrowness and pedantry of the courts of common law prevented this statute from having its full beneficial effect. And thence the courts of equity assumed a jurisdiction, dictated by common justice and common sense, which, however arbitrarily exercised, or productive of jealousies in its infancy, has at length been matured into a most elegant system of rational jurisprudence; the principles of which (notwithstanding they may differ in forms) are now equally adopted by the courts of both law and equity. From the statute of uses, and another statute of the same antiquity, (which protected estates for years from being destroyed by the reversioner,) a remarkable alteration took place in the mode of conveyancing: the ancient assurance by feoffment and livery upon the land being now very seldom practised since the more easy and more private invention of transferring property by secret conveyances to uses, and long terms of years being now continually created in mortgages and family settlements, which may be moulded to a thousand useful purposes by the ingenuity of an able artist. Ibid. 430, 431.

The further attacks in this reign upon the immunity of estates tail, which reduced them to little more than the conditional fees at the common law before the passing of the statute de donis, the establishment of recognizances in the nature of a statute-staple for facilitating the raising of money upon landed security, and the introduction of the bankrupt laws, as well for the punishment of the fraudulent, as the relief of the unfortunate, trader; all these were capital alterations of our legal polity, and highly convenient to that character which the English began now to re-assume, of a great commercial people. The incorporation of Wales with England, and the more uniform administration of justice, by destroying some counties palatine, and abridging the unreasonable privileges of such as remained, added dignity and strength to the monarchy, and, together with the numerous improvements before observed upon, and the redress of many grievances and oppressions which had been introduced by his father, will ever make the administration of Henry the Eighth a very distinguished era in the annals of juridical history. Ibid. 431.

It must, however, be remarked, that (particularly in his later years) the royal prerogative was then strained to a very tyrannical and oppressive height; and, what was the worst circumstance, its encroachments were established by law, under the sanction of those pusillanimous parliaments, one of which, to its eternal disgrace, passed a statute whereby it was enacted that the king's proclamations should have the force of acts of parliament; and others concurred in the creation of that amazing heap of wild and new-fangled treasons which were slightly touched upon in a former chapter. Happily for the nation this arbitrary reign was succeeded by the minority of an amiable prince, during the short sun-shine of which great part of these extravagant laws were repealed. And, to do justice to the shorter reign of queen Mary, many salutary and popular laws, in civil matters, were made under her administration; perhaps the better to reconcile the people to the bloody measures which she was induced to pursue for the re-establishment of religious slavery, the well-concerted schemes for effecting which, were (through the providence of God) defeated by the seasonable accession of queen Elizabeth. Ibid. 431, 432.

The religious liberties of the nation being by that happy event established (we trust) on an eternal basis, (though obliged in their infancy to be guarded against papists and other non-conformists by laws of too sanguinary a nature,) the forest-laws having fallen into disuse, and the administration of civil rights in the courts of justice being carried on in a regular course, according to the wise institutions of king Edward the First, without any material innovations, all the principal grievances introduced by the Norman conquest seem to have been gradually shaken off, and our Saxon constitution restored, with considerable improvements, except only in the continuation of the military tenures, and a few other points, which still armed the crown with a very oppressive and dangerous prerogative. It is also to be remarked, that the spirit of enriching the clergy, and endowing religious houses, had through the former abuse of it gone over to such a contrary extreme, and the princes of the house of Tudor and their favourites had fallen with such avidity upon the spoils of the church, that a decent and honourable maintenance was wanting to many of the bishops and clergy. This produced the restraining statutes, to prevent the alienations of lands and tithes belonging to the church and universities. The number of indigent persons being also greatly increased by withdrawing the alms of the monasteries, a plan was formed in the reign of queen Elizabeth, more humane and beneficial than even feeding and clothing millions, by affording them the means (with proper industry) to feed and to clothe themselves. And, the farther any subsequent plans for maintaining the poor have departed from this institution, the more impracticable, and even pernicious, their visionary attempts have proved. Ibid. 432.

However, considering the reign of queen Elizabeth in a great and political view, we have no reason to regret many subsequent alterations in the English constitution: For, though in general she was a wise and excellent princess, and loved her people; though in her time trade flourished, riches increased, the laws were duly administered, the nation was respected abroad, and the people happy at home; yet the increase of the power of the star-chamber, and the erection of the high commission court in matters ecclesiastical, were the work of her reign. She also kept her parliaments at a very awful distance; and in many particulars she at times would carry the prerogative as high as her most arbitrary predecessors. It is true, she very seldom exerted this prerogative so as to oppress individuals; but still she had it to exert; and therefore the felicity of her reign depended more on her want of opportunity and inclination, than want of power to play the tyrant. This is a high encomium on her merit; but at the same time it is sufficient to show, that these were not those golden days of genuine liberty that we formerly were taught to believe; for surely the true liberty of the subject consists not in much to the gracious behaviour, as to the limited power, of the sovereign. Ibid. 433.

The great revolutions that had happened in manners and in property had paved the way, by imperceptible yet sure degrees, for as great a revolution in government: yet, while that revolution was effecting, the crown became more arbitrary than ever by the progress of those very means which afterward reduced its power. It is obvious to every observer that, till the close of the Lancastrian civil wars, the property and the power of the nation were chiefly divided between the king, the nobility, and the clergy. The commons were generally in a state of great ignorance; their personal wealth, before the extension of trade, was comparatively small; and the nature of their landed property was such as kept them in continual dependence upon their feudal lord, being usually some powerful baron, some opulent abbey, or sometimes the king himself. Though a notion of general liberty had strongly pervaded and animated the whole constitution, yet the particular liberty, the natural equality, and personal independence of individuals, were little regarded or thought of; nay even to assert them was treated as the height of sedition and rebellion. Our ancestors heard with detestation and horror those sentiments rudely delivered, and pushed to most absurd extremes by the violence of a Cade and a Tyler, which have since been applauded, with a zeal almost rising to idolatry, when softened and recommended by the eloquence, the moderation, and the arguments of a Sidney, a Locke, and a Milton. Ibid. 434.

But when learning, by the invention of printing, and the progress of religious reformation, began to be universally disseminated; when trade and navigation were suddenly carried to an amazing extent, by the use of the compass, and the consequent discovery of the Indies, the minds of men thus enlightened by science, and enlarged by observation and travel, began to entertain a more just opinion of the dignity and rights of mankind. An inundation of wealth flowed in upon the merchants, and middling rank, while the two great estates of the kingdom, which formerly had balanced the prerogative, the nobility and clergy, were greatly impoverished and weakened. The popish clergy, detected in their frauds and abuses, exposed to the resentment of the populace, and stripped of their lands and revenues, stood trembling for their very existence. The nobles, enervated by the refinements of luxury, (which knowledge, foreign travel, and the progress of the politer arts, are too apt to introduce with themselves,) and fired with disdain at being rivalled in magnificence by the opulent citizens, fell into enormous expenses, to gratify which they were permitted, by the policy of the times, to dissipate their overgrown estates, and alienate their ancient patrimonies. This gradually reduced their power and their influence within a very moderate bound, while the king, by the spoil of the monasteries, and the great increase of the customs, grew rich, independent, and haughty; and the commons were not yet sensible of the strength they had acquired, nor urged to examine its extent by new burthens or oppressive taxations, during the sudden opulence of the Exchequer. Intent upon acquiring new riches, and happy in being freed from the insolence and tyranny of the orders more immediately above them, they never dreamed of opposing the prerogative to which they had been so little accustomed, much less of taking the lead in opposition, to which by their weight and their property they were now entitled. The latter years of Henry VIII. were therefore the times of the greatest despotism that have been known in this island since the death of William the Norman: the prerogative, as it then stood by common law, (and much more when extended by act of parliament,) being too large to be endured in a land of liberty. Ibid. 434, 435.

Queen Elizabeth, and the intermediate princes of the Tudor line, had almost the same legal powers, and sometimes exerted them as roughly, as their father Henry VIII. But the critical situation of that princess with regard to her legitimacy, her religion, her enmity with Spain, and her jealousy of the queen of Scots, occasioned greater caution in her conduct. She, probably, or her able advisers, had penetration enough to discern how the power of the kingdom had gradually shifted its channel, and wisdom enough not to provoke the commons to discover and feel their strength. She therefore drew a veil over the odious part of prerogative, which was never wantonly thrown aside, but only to answer some important purpose: and, though the royal treasury no longer overflowed with the wealth of the clergy, which had been all granted out, and had contributed to enrich the people, she asked for supplies with such moderation, and managed them with so much economy, that the commons were happy in obliging her. Such, in short, were her circumstances, her necessities, her wisdom, and her good disposition, that never did a prince so long and so entirely, for the space of half a century together, reign in the affections of the people. Ibid. 435.

On the accession of king James I. no new degree of royal power was added to, or exercised by, him; but such a sceptre was too weighty to be wielded by such a hand. The unreasonable and imprudent exertion of what was then deemed to be prerogative, upon trivial and unworthy occasions, and the claim of a more absolute power inherent in the kingly office than had ever been carried into practice, soon awakened the sleeping lion. The people heard with astonishment doctrines preached from the throne and the pulpit, subversive of liberty and property, and all the natural rights of humanity. They examined into the divinity of this claim, and found it weakly and fallaciously supported: and common reason assured them, that, if it were of human origin, no constitution could establish it without power of revocation, no precedent could sanctify, no length of time could confirm it. The leaders felt the pulse of the nation, and found they had ability as well as inclination to resist it; and accordingly resisted and opposed it, whenever the pusillanimous temper of the reigning monarch had courage to put it to the trial; and they gained some little victories in the cases of concealments, monopolies, and the dispensing power. In the mean time, very little was done for the improvement of private justice, except the abolition of sanctuaries, and the extension of the bankrupt laws, the limitation of suits and actions, and the regulating of informations upon penal statutes. For I cannot class the laws against witchcraft and conjuration under the head of improvements; nor did the dispute between lord Ellesmere and sir Edward Coke, concerning the powers of the court of chancery, tend much to the advancement of justice. Ibid. 436.

Indeed when Charles the first succeeded to the crown of his father, and attempted to revive some enormities, which had been dormant in the reign of king James, the loans and benevolences extorted from the subject, the arbitrary imprisonments for refusal, the exertion of martial law in time of peace, and other domestic grievances, clouded the morning of that misguided prince's reign; which, though the noon of it began a little to brighten, at last went down in blood, and left the whole kingdom in darkness. It must be acknowledged that, by the petition of right, enacted to abolish these encroachments, the English constitution received great alteration and improvement. But there still remained the latent power of the forest laws, which the crown most unseasonably revived. The legal jurisdiction of the star-chamber and high commission courts was also extremely great; though their usurped authority was still greater. And, if we add to these the disuse of parliaments, the ill-timed zeal and despotic proceedings of the ecclesiastical governors in matters of mere indifference, together with the arbitrary levies of tonnage and poundage, ship-money, and other projects, we may see grounds not amply sufficient for seeking redress in a legal constitutional way. This redress, when sought, was also constitutionally given: for all these oppressions were actually abolished by the king in parliament, before the rebellion broke out, by the several statutes for triennial parliaments, for abolishing the star-chamber and high commission courts, for ascertaining the extent of forest and forest laws, for renouncing ship-money and other exactions, and for giving up the prerogative of knighting the king's tenants in capite, in consequence of their feodal tenures: though it must be acknowledged that these concessions were not made with so good a grace, as to conciliate the confidence of the people. Unfortunately, either by his own mismanagement, or by the arts of his enemies, the king had lost the reputation of sincerity; which is the greatest unhappiness that can befal a prince. Though he had formerly strained his prerogative, not only beyond what the genius of the present times would bear, but also beyond the examples of former ages, he had now consented to reduce it to a lower ebb than was consistent with monarchial government. A conduct so opposite to his temper and principles, joined with some rash actions and unguarded expressions, made the people suspect that this condescension was merely temporary. Flushed therefore with the success they had gained, fired with resentment for past oppressions, and dreading the consequences if the king should regain his power, the popular leaders (who in all ages have called themselves the people) began to grow insolent and ungovernable; their insolence soon rendered them desperate: and despair at length forced them to join with a set of military hypocrites and enthusiasts, who overturned the church and monarchy, and proceeded with deliberate solemnity to the trial and murder of their sovereign. Ibid. 437.

The crude and abortive schemes for amending the laws in the times of confusion which followed, must be passed by: the most promising and sensible whereof (such as the establishment of new trials, the abolition of feodal tenures, the act of navigation, and some others) were adopted in the

V. Fifth period, which is after the restoration of king Charles II. Immediately upon which, the principal remaining grievance, the doctrine and consequences of military tenures, were taken away and abolished, except in the instance of corruption of inheritable blood, upon attainder of treason and felony. And though the monarch, in whose person the royal government was restored, and with it our antient constitution, deserves no commendation from posterity, yet in his reign, (wicked, sanguinary, and turbulent as it was,) the concurrence of happy circumstances was such, that from thence we may date not only the re-establishment of our church and monarchy, but also the complete restitution of English liberty, for the first time, since its total abolition at the conquest. For therein not only these slavish tenures, the badge of foreign dominion, with all their oppressive appendages, were removed from incumbering the estates of the subject; but also an additional security of his person from imprisonment was obtained, by that great bulwark of our constitution, the habeas corpus act. These two statutes, with regard to our property and persons, form a second magna charta, as beneficial and effectual as that of Running-Mead. That only pruned the luxuriances of the feodal system; but the statute of Charles the second extirpated all its slaveries; except perhaps in copyhold tenure; and there also they are now in great measure enervated by gradual custom, and the interposition of our courts of justice. Magna Carta only, in general terms, declared, that no man shall be imprisoned contrary to law: the habeas corpus act points him out effectual means, as well to release himself, though committed even by the king in council, as to punish all those who shall thus unconstitutionally misuse him. Ibid.

To these may be added the abolition of the prerogatives of purveyance and pre-emption; the statute for holding triennial parliaments; the test and corporation acts, which secure both our civil and religious liberties; the abolition of the writ de hæretico comburendo; the statute of frauds and perjuries, a great and necessary security to private property; the statute for distribution of intestates' estates, and that of amendments and jeofails, which cut off those superfluous nicetics which so long had disgraced our courts; together with many other wholesome acts that were passed in this reign, for the benefit of navigation and the improvement of foreign commerce: and the whole, when we likewise consider the freedom from taxes and armies which the subject then enjoyed, will be sufficient to demonstrate this truth, "that the constitution of England had ar-"rived to its full vigour, and the true ba-"lance between liberty and prerogative was "happily established by law, in the reign of "king Charles the second." Ibid. 438, 9.

It is far from my intention to palliate or defend many very iniquitous proceedings, contrary to all law, in that reign, through the artifice of wicked politicians, both in and out of employment. What seems incontestible is this, that by the law*, as it then stood, (notwithstanding some invidious, nay dangerous branches of the prerogative have since been lopped off, and the rest more clearly defined,) the people had as large a portion of real liberty, as is consistent with a state of society; and sufficient power, residing in their own hands, to assert and preserve that liberty, if invaded by the royal prerogative. For which I need but appeal to the memorable catastrophe of the next reign. For when king Charles's deluded brother attempted to enslave the nation, he found it was beyond his power: the people both could, and did, resist him; and, in consequence of such resistance, obliged him to quit his enterprize and his throne together. Which introduces us to the last period of our legal history; viz.

VI. From the revolution in 1688 to the present time. In this period many laws have passed; as the bill of rights, the toleration act, the act of settlement with its conditions, the act for uniting England with Scotland, under the title of Great Britain, and recently Great Britain with Ireland, and some others: which have asserted our liberties in more clear and emphatical terms; have regulated the succession of the crown by parliament, as the exigencies of religious and civil freedom required; have confirmed, and exemplified, the doctrine of resistance, when the executive magistrate endeavours to subvert the constitution; have, maintained the superiority of the laws above the king, by pronouncing his dispensing power to be illegal; have indulged tender consciences with every religious liberty, consistent with the safety of the state; have established triennial, since turned into septennial, elections of members to serve in parliament; have excluded certain officers from the house of commons; have restrained the king's pardon from obstructing parliamentary impeachments; have imparted to all the lords an equal right of trying their fellow peers; have regulated trials for high treason; have afforded our posterity a hope that corruption of blood may one day be abolished and forgotten; have (by the desire of his present majesty) set bounds to the civil list, and placed the administration of that revenue in hands that are accountable to parliament; and have (by the like desire) made the judges completely independent of the king, his ministers, and his successors. Yet, though these provisions have, in appearance and nominally, reduced the strength of the executive power to a much lower ebb than in the preceding period; if on the other hand we throw into the opposite scale (what perhaps the immoderate reduction of the antient prerogative may have rendered in some degree necessary) the vast acquisition of force, arising from the riot act, and the annual expedience of a standing army; and the vast acquisition of personal attachment, arising from the magnitude of the national debt, and the manner of levying those yearly millions that are appropriated to pay the interest; we shall find that the crown has gradually and imperceptibly, gained almost as much in influence, as it has apparently lost in prerogative. 4 Black. 440.

* The point of time at which Sir William Blackstone fixed this theoretical perfection of our public law, is the year 1679; after the habeas corpus act was passed, and that for licensing the press had expired; though the years which immediately followed it were times of great practical oppression. 4 Black. 439.

The chief alterations of moment (for the time would fail me to descend to minutiæ) in the administration of private justice during this period, are the solemn recognition of the law of nations with respect to the rights of embassadors: the cutting off by the statute for the amendment of the law, a vast number of excrescences, that in process of time had sprung out of the practical part of it: the protection of corporate rights by the improvements in writs of mandamus, and informations in nature of quo warranto: the regulations of trials by jury, and the admitting witnesses for prisoners upon oath: the farther restraints upon alienation of lands in mortmain: the annihilation of the terrible judgment of peine fort et dure: the extension of the benefit of clergy, by abolishing the pedantic criterion of reading: the counterbalance to this mercy, by the vast increase of capital punishment: the new and effectual methods for the speedy recovery of rents: the improvements which have been made in ejectments for the trying of titles: the introduction and establishment of paper credit, by indorsements upon bills and notes, which have shewn the legal possiblity and convenience (which our ancestors so long doubted) of assigning a chose in action: the translation of all legal proceedings into the English language: the erection of courts of conscience for recovering small debts, and (which is much the better plan) the reformation of county courts: the great system of marine jurisprudence, of which the foundations have been laid, by clearly developing the principles on which policies of insurance are founded, and by happily applying those principles to particular cases: and, lastly, the liberality of sentiment, which (though late) has now taken possession of our courts of common law, and induced them to adopt (where facts can be clearly ascertained) the same principles of redress as have prevailed in our courts of equity, from the time that lord Nottingham presided there; and this, not only where specially impowered by particular statutes, (as in case of bonds, mortgages, and set offs,) but by extending the remedial influence of the equitable writ of trespass on the case, according to its primitive institution by king Edward the first, to almost every instance of injustice not remedied by any other process. These, are all the material alterations that have happened with respect to private justice, in the course of the present century. 4 Black. 441, 2.

Thus, therefore, hath the learned commentator endeavoured to delineate some rude outlines of a plan for the history of our laws and liberties; from their first rise, and gradual progress among our British and Saxon ancestors, till their total eclipse at the Norman conquest; from which they have gradually emerged, and risen to the perfection they now enjoy, at different periods of time. For the fundamental maxims and rules of the law, which regard the rights of persons, and the rights of things, the private injuries that may be offered to both, and the crimes which affect the public, have been and are every day improving, and are now fraught with the accumulated wisdom of ages: that the forms of administering justice came to perfection under Edward the first; and have not been much varied, nor always for the better, since: that our religious liberties were fully established at the reformation: but that the recovery of our civil and political liberties was a work of longer time; they not being thoroughly and completely regained, till after the restoration of king Charles, nor fully and explicitly acknowledged and defined, till the era of the revolution. Of a constitution so wisely contrived, so strongly raised, and so highly finished, it is hard to speak with that praise, which is justly and severely its due: but it has defects, chiefly arising from the decays of time, or the rage of unskilful improvements in later ages. To sustain, to repair, to beautify this noble pile, is a charge intrusted principally to the nobility, and such gentlemen of the kingdom as are delegated by their country to parliament. The protection of the liberty of Britain is a duty which they owe to themselves, who enjoy it; to their ancestors, who transmitted it down; and to their posterity, who will claim at their hands this, the best birthright, and noblest inheritance of mankind. 4 Black. 443.

CONSTRUCTIVE TREASON. By the stat. 25 Ed. 3. c. 2. and stat. 39 & 40 Geo. 3. c. 93, treason is defined, to prevent the subject from becoming condemned for constructive treason. See title TREASON.

CONSUETUDINARIUS, a ritual or book, containing the rites and forms of divine offices, or the customs of abbies and monasteries. Cowel. Blount.

CONSUETUDINIBUS A SERVICIIS, is a writ of right close, which lies against the tenant that deforceth his lord of the rent or service due to him. Reg. Orig. 159. F.N.B. 151.

CONSUL, (Lat.) in our law books signifies an earl. Bract. lib, 1. c. 8. Blount.

At this day we have consuls abroad, whose duty it is to take care of the affairs and interests of merchants, in foreign kingdoms. They are appointed by the king.

CONSULTA ECCLESIA, a church full, or provided for, according to Cowel.

CONSULTATION, (consultatio) is a writ whereby a cause being removed by prohibition from the ecclesiastical court, to the king's court, is returned thither again; for if the judges of the king's court, upon comparing the libel with the suggestion of the party, find the suggestion false, or not proved, and therefore the cause to be wrongfully called from the ecclesiastical court, then upon this consultation or deliberation they decree it to be returned: whereupon the writ in this case obtained is called a consultation, and is in nature of a procedendo. Reg. Orig. 44.

CONTEMPT, (contemptus) is a disobedience to the rules and orders of a court, which hath power to punish such offence; and one may be imprisoned instanter for a contempt done in court; but not for a contempt out of court, or a private abuse. Cro. Eliz. 689. But for a contempt out of court, an attachment may be granted, to bring in the offender to answer on interrogatories, and if he cannot acquit himself, he shall according to the nature of the case be fined or imprisoned. 1 Lill. 305. Dyer, 128, 177. 1 Bulst. 85. 12 Rep. 76. 4 Black. Com. 280.

CONTENEMENT, (contenementum) is said to signify a man's countenance or credit, which he hath together with, and by reason of, his freehold. But it is more properly that, which is necessary for the support and maintenance of men, agreeable to their several qualities, or states of life: and seems to be freehold land, which lieth to a man's tenement, or dwelling-house, that is in his own occupation. Cowel. Blount.

CONTINGENT LEGACY. If a legacy be left to any one, when he attains, or if he attains the age of twenty-one, it is contingent, and if he dies before that time, it is lapsed. Dyer, 59. 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 295. But a legacy to one, to be paid when he attains the age of twenty-one years, is a vested legacy, an interest which commences in præsenti, although it be solvendum in futuro: and if the legatee dies before that age, his representatives shall receive it out of the testator's personal estate, at the same time it would have become payable, in case the legatee had lived. 2 Black. Com. 513.

CONTINGENT REMAINDER, contingent or executory remainders (whereby no present interest passes) are where the estate in remainder is limited to take effect, either to a dubious and uncertain person, or upon a dubious and uncertain event; so that the particular or intermediate estate may chance to be determined, and the remainder never take effect. 2 Black. Com. 169.

CONTINGENT USE, is a use limited in a conveyance of land, which may, or may not happen to vest, according to the contingency expressed in the limitation of such use: a use in contingency is such which by possibility may happen in possession, reversion or remainder. 1 Rep. 121. A remainder contingent is said to be an estate vested; but on such remainder in executory devises, the estate descends till the contingency happens, and nothing is vested till then. 1 Vent. 189.

CONTINUAL CLAIM, is a claim made from time to time, within every year and day, to land, or other thing, which in some respect we cannot attain without danger as if a person be disseised of land, into which, though he hath a right of entry, he dare not enter for fear of beating, &c. it behoves him to hold on his right of entry at his best opportunity, by approaching as near it as he can, once a year, as long as he lives, and to save the right of entry to his heir. Lit. lib. 3. c. 7.

Continual claim is where it is made, and repeated yearly, so as to be within a year and a day before the death of him that hath the lands; and if after he dies seised, so that his heir is in by descent, yet he that makes the claim may enter, &c. but if no claim be made, then the entry of the person disseised, &c. is taken away. 32 H. 8. cap. 33.

Though by the statute the disseisor is to have peaceable possession for five years, without entry or continual claim, for a descent on his death, to take away the entry of the disseisee, or his heir; after the five years, the disseisee is to make continual claim, as before the statute: the feoffee of a disseisor, abators, &c. are out of the statute. As to this claim, though the tenant die within the year and day, and it be but once made, it shall preserve the entry of him that maketh it: and if the ancestor claim, and the disseisor die, and then the ancestor dieth, now his heir may enter: but if an ancestor or predecessor, make a continual claim, and dieth, and the son or successor make no continual claim, and within the year and day after the claim made by the ancestor, the disseisor dies; this shall take away the entry of the son or successor, for the descent was cast in his time. Co. Lit. 250, 251.

If there be tenant for life, remainder for life, the remainder in fee, and the tenant for life alien in fee: if he in remainder for life maketh continual claim, before the dying seised of the alienee, and after the alience die seised, and after that the remainder man for life dieth before any entry made by him: in this case he in remainder in fee shall have benefit by the claim of tenant for life, and he may enter upon the heir of the alienee, &c. Lit. Sect. 416.

This claim shall not avoid a descent, unless it be made by him that hath title to enter, and in whose life the dying seised was: and so it is for the continual claim of a tenant for life, to give him in remainder advantage, except the disseisor, &c. die in the life-time of tenant for life. Co. Lit. 250. 2 Black. Com. 316. 3 Bl'ock. 175.

CONTINUANCE, is the continuing of a cause in court, by an entry upon the records there for that purpose. Kitch. 268. 3 Lev. 431. 2 Danv. Abr. 150. Cro. Jac. 316, 317.

CONTINUANDO, is a word used in a special declaration of trespass, when the plaintiff would recover damages for several trespasses in the same action: and to avoid multiplicity of suits, a man may in one action of trespass recover damages for many trespasses, laying the first to be done with a continuando to the whole time, in which the rest of the trespasses were done; which is in this form, 'continuando transgressionem praedictam, &c. a praedicto die, &c. usque talem diem, including the last trespass. Terms de Ley.

CONTRABAND GOODS, (from contra, and the Ital. bando, an edict or proclamation) are those which are prohibited by act of parliament, or the king's proclamation to be imported into, or exported out of this into any other nation.

CONTRACAUSATOR, a criminal, or one prosecuted for a crime. Cowel. Blount.

CONTRACT, (contractus) is an agreement between two or more persons, with a lawful consideration or cause. West. Symb. part 1.

And every contract doth imply in itself an assumpsit in law, to perform the same; for a contract would be to no purpose, if there were no means to enforce the performance thereof. 1 Lill. Abr. 308.

But all contracts are to be certain, perfect, and compleat: for an agreement to give so much for a thing as it shall be reasonably worth, is void for uncertainty: so a promise to pay money in a short time, &c. or to give so much, if he likes the thing when he sees it. Dyer, 91. 1 Bulst. 92.

And by the statute of frauds, 29 Car. 2. c. 3. "all contracts, not to be performed in "a year, are to be in writing, signed by the "party, or no action may be brought on "them." However, if no day is set, or the time is uncertain, they may be good without it. And by the same statute, "no contract "for the sale of goods for 10*l.* or upwards, "shall be good, unless the buyer receive "part of the goods sold; or gives something "in earnest to bind the contract; or some "note thereof be made in writing, signed by "the person charged with the contract, &c.

CONTRAFACTION, (contrafactio) a counterfeiting; as contrafactio sigilli regis, counterfeiting the king's seal. Cowel. Blount.

CONTRA FORMAM COLLATIONIS, is a writ that lay where a man had given lands in perpetual alms, to any of the old houses of religion, as to an abbot and convent, or to the warden or master of any hospital and his convent, to find certain poor men with necessaries, and do divine service, &c. If they aliened the land, to the disherison of the house and church, then the donor or his heirs, should bring this writ to recover the lands. It was had against the abbot or his successor; not against the alienee, though he were tenant of the land: and was founded upon the statute of Westm. 2. c. 1. Reg. Orig. 258. F. N. B. 210.

CONTRA FORMAM FEOFFAMENTI, a writ that lies for the heir of a tenant enfeoffed of certain lands or tenements, by charter of feoffment from a lord to make certain services and suits to his court, who is afterwards distrained for more services than are mentioned in the charter. Reg. Orig. 176. Old Nat. Br. 162.

CONTRA FORMAM STATUTI, is the usual conclusion of every indictment, &c. laid on an offence created by statute.

CONTRAMANDATIO PLACITI, signifies a respiting or giving a defendant further time to answer; or a countermand of what was formerly ordered. Leg. H. 1. c. 59. Cowel. Blount.

CONTRAMANDATUM, is said to be a lawful excuse which the defendant in a suit by attorney alleged for himself, to shew that the plaintiff hath no cause of complaint. Cowel. Blount.

CONTRAPOSITIO, a plea or answer. Ibid.

CONTRARIENTS. In the reign of Ed. 2. the earl of Lancaster taking part with the barons against the king, it was not thought fit, in respect of their great power, to call them rebels or traitors, but contrarients. Ibid.

CONTRA TENERE, to withhold. Ibid.

CONTRIBULES, contribunales, kindred or cousins. Lamb. 75. Cowel. Blount.

CONTRIBUTION, (contributio) is where every one pays his share, or contributes his part to any thing. One parcener shall have contribution against another; one heir have contribution against another heir, in equal degree: and one purchaser have contribution against another. Also conusors in a statute shall be equally charged, and not one of them solely extended. 3 Rep. 12, 13, &c.

Where goods are cast into the sea, for the safe-guard of a ship, or other goods, &c. aboard in a tempest; there is a contribution among merchants, towards the loss of the owners. 32 H. 8 c. 14.

CONTRIBUTIONE FACIENDA, is a writ which anciently lay where there were tenants in common, bound to do one thing, and one was put to the whole burden; or who jointly held a mill pro indiviso, and took the profits equally, and the mill falling into decay, one of them would not repair the mill; then the other was to have a writ to compel him to contribute to the reparations. And if there were three coparceners of land, that owed suit to the lord's court, and the eldest performed the whole; then she might have this writ to compel the others to make their contribution. So where one suit was required for land, and that land being sold to divers persons, suit was demanded of them all, or some of them by distress, as entirely as if all the land were still in one. Reg. Orig. 175. F. N. B. 162.

CONTROLLER, (Fr. controlleur, Lat. contrarotulator) is an officer having the supervision or controul of public accounts, &c.

And we have divers officers of this name; as controller of the king's household; of the navy; of the customs; of the excise; of the mint, &c.

CONTROVER, (controuveur) signifies in our law, one that of his own head devises or invents false news. 2 Inst. 227.

CONVENABLE, (Fr.) agreeable. 27 Ed. 3. c. 21. See Covenable.

CONVENIENT, (conveniens) non solum quod licet sed quod est conveniens est considerandum, nihil quod est inconveniens est licitum. 1 Inst. 66.

CONVENT, (conventus) signifies the fraternity of an abbey or priory: as societas doth the number of fellows in a college. Brct. lib. 2. c. 35.

CONVENTICLE, (conventiculum) a private assembly or meeting for the exercise of religion. And by 22 Car. 2. cap. 1. if any persons of the age of sixteen years, subjects of this kingdom, shall be present at any conventicle, where there are five or more assembled, they shall be fined 5*s.* for the first offence, and 10*s.* for the second; and persons preaching incur a penalty of 20*l.* Also suffering a meeting to be held in a house, &c. is liable to 20*l.* penalty. Justices of peace have power to enter such houses, and seize persons assembled, &c. And if they neglect their duty, they shall forfeit 100*l.* And if any constable, &c. know of such meetings, and do not inform a justice of peace or chief magistrate, he shall forfeit 5*l.* But the 1 W. & M. c. 18. ordains that protestant dissenters not denying the Trinity shall be exempted from the penalties: though if they meet in a house, with the doors locked, barred, or bolted, such dissenters shall have no benefit from that statute. Officers of the government, &c. present at any conventicle, at which there shall be ten persons, if the royal family be not prayed for in express words, shall forfeit 40*l.* and be disabled. Stat. 10 Ann. c. 2. See Papists.

CONVENTIO, is a word used in ancient law-pleadings, for an agreement or covenant, &c. Cowel. Blount.

CONVENTIONE, is a writ that lies for the breach of any covenant in writing, whether real or personal: and it is called a writ of covenant. Reg. Orig. 115. F. N. B. 145.

CONVENTION, is properly where a parliament is assembled, but no act is passed, or bill signed. See Abdication.

CONVENTION PARLIAMENT, the lords and commons convened, on the abdication of king James II. Anno 1689, and who settled king William and queen Mary on the throne, formed what was called the convention.

CONVENTUALS, religious men united together in a convent or religious house. Cowel.

CONVENTUAL CHURCH, is a church that consists of regular clerks, professing some order of religion; or of dean and chapter, or other societies of spiritual men. Cowel. Blount.

CONVERSION, is where a person finding or having the goods of another in his possession, converts them to his own use, without the consent of the owner, and for which the proprietor may maintain an action of trover and conversion against him. And refusal to restore goods is, prima facie, sufficient evidence of a conversion, though it does not amount to a conversion. 10 Rep. 56. 3 Black. Com. 152.

CONVERSOS. The reformed Jews here in England were formally called conversos, because they were converted to the Christian religion. And king Hen. 3. built an house for them, called Domus Conversorum, in London, and allowed them a competent provision or subsistence for their lives; the Jews however, being afterwards banished, king Ed. 3. in the 51st year of his reign, gave this house for the keeping of the rolls; and it is said to be the same which is at this time enjoyed by the master of the rolls. Blount.

CONVEYANCE of lands. The conveyance of lands by feoffment, and livery and seisin, was formerly the general conveyance at common law; but after the statute of uses, it became the practice to make a lease for years upon a valuable consideration, and afterwards execute a release, which release operates upon the lease without an actual entry by the lessee so as to pass the reversion: because the statute executed the lease, and raises an use presently to the lessee: and it is said that Serjeant Moor was the first who practised this way. 2 Mod. 251, 252.

The most common conveyances now in use are deeds of gift, bargain and sale, feoffment with livery and seisin, lease and release, fines and recoveries, settlements to uses, &c. 2 Lev. 225. A feoffment without livery and seisin, will not enure as a grant; but where made in consideration of a marriage, &c. it has been adjudged, that it did enure as a covenant to stand seised to uses. 2 Lev. 213.

CONVICT, (convictus) is he that is found guilty of an offence by verdict of a jury. Staund. P. C. 186. And for the consequences of a conviction, see Attainder.

CONVICTION, (summary). A conviction, in the sense in which it is here used, is a record of the summary proceedings upon any penal statute, before one or more justices of the peace, or other persons duly authorized, in a case where the offender has been convicted and sentenced. Boscaw. 7. Wms. Jus. tit. Conv.

This mode was first introduced for the greater ease of the subject, by doing him speedy justice, and by not harrassing the freeholders with frequent and troublesome attendances to try every minute offence. 4 Black. Com. 280.

But such summary convictions are unknown at the common law, there being no intervention of a jury, and therefore this authority being special, and in restraint of the common law, it must appear on the face of the proceedings, to have been strictly pursued according to the letter of the act by which it was created; that the justice has jurisdiction in the case, and that rules similar to those adopted by the common law, in criminal prosecutions, and founded in natural justice have been observed; unless the statute does (as it doth in some instances, in giving particular forms of conviction) expressly dispense with the necessity of stating them. Wms. Jus. tit. Con.

And it is reasonable that these convictions should be construed with strictness, because they must be taken to be true against the defendant. 1 Burr. 613.

In these convictions, it is necessary that there should be, 1st, an information or charge against the defendant; 2dly, a summons or notice of such information in order that he may make his defence; 3dly, his appearance or non-appearance; 4thly, his defence or confession; 5thly, the evidence against him; and 6thly, the judgment on adjudication against him, and in general all those matters must be particularly set forth in the record of the conviction. Wms. Jus. tit. Con.

But for the ease of the magistrate this precise statement is in many instances dispensed with, by the statute which imposes the penalty, by allowing some concise form of conviction to be drawn up, and where an act directs that all convictions shall be made out in the form or to the effect following, giving a particular form; a conviction containing all the substantial parts of the form prescribed will be good, although it be not in the express words thereof, or may contain something more than is directed, 4 Ter. Rep. 767. But where a form of conviction is prescribed by statute, it is in general most safe to adopt the very words used, and if the justices do vary therefrom, the conviction must be drawn up agreeable to the express provisions of the act. 6 Ter. Rep. 538.

Also in all instances convictions ought to be drawn up in form, and returned to the sessions to be there recorded, whether the defendant appeals or not, or whether an appeal is or is not given, that the crown may not be deprived of its share of the forfeitures. 2 Ter. Rep. 285.

CONVICT RECUSANT, according to the statutes. See Recusants.

CONVIVIUM, signifies the same thing among the laiety, as procuratio doth with the clergy, viz. When the tenant by reason of his tenure is bound to provide meat and drink for his lord once or oftener in the year. Blount.

CONVOCATION, (convocatio) is the assembly of all the clergy, to consult of ecclesiastical matters in time of parliament; and as there are two houses of parliament, so there are two houses of convocation; the one called the higher or upper house, where the archbishop and all the bishops sit severally by themselves: and the other the lower house of convocation: where all the rest of the clergy sit, i. e. all deans and archdeacons, one proctor for every chapter, and two proctors for all the clergy of each diocese, making in the whole number one hundred and sixty-six persons. Each convocation house hath a prolocutor, chosen from among themselves, and that of the lower house is presented to the bishops, &c.

The Archbishop of Canterbury is the president of the convocation, and prorogues and dissolves it by mandate from the king. The convocation exercises jurisdiction in making of canons, with the king's assent; for by the stat. 25 H. 8. c. 18, the convocation is not only to be assembled by the king's writ, but the canons are to have the royal assent; they have the examining and censuring of heretical and schismatical books, and persons, &c. But appeal lies to the king in Chancery, or to his delegates. 4 Inst. 322. 2 Rol. Abr. 225. The clergy called to the convocation, and their servants, &c. have the same privileges as members of parliament. Stat. 8 H. 6. c. 1.

CONUSANCE OF PLEAS, a privilege that a city or town hath to hold pleas. Cowel. Blount.

CONUSANT, (Fr. connoisant) knowing or understanding. Co. Lit. 159.

COOPERTIO, the head or branches of a tree cut down, though coopertio arborum is rather the bark of timber trees felled, and the chumps and broken wood. Cowel.

COOPERTURA, a thicket or covert of wood. Chart de Foresta, cap. 12. Cowel. Blount.

COPARCENERS, (participes) otherwise called parceners, are by law the issue female which in default of heirs male, come in equality, and have equal portions in the lands and inheritance of their ancestors. Bract. lib. 2. cap. 30.

COPARTNERSHIP, a copartnership is where two or more persons agree to stand share and share alike, or in some other proportion as to profit and loss, in any trade or bargain. See Partners.

COPE, is a custom or tribute due to the king, or lord of the soil, out of the lead mines in some part of Derbyshire. Cowel. Blount.

COPIA LIBELLI DELIBERANDA, is a writ that lies where a man cannot get the copy of a libel at the hand of a judge ecclesiastical, to have the same delivered to him. Reg. Orig. 51.

COPPA, a cop or cock of grass, hay or corn divided into tithable portions, as the tenth cock, &c. Cowel. Blount.

COPY, (copia) is in a legal sense the transcript of an original writing; as the copy of a patent, of a charter, deed, will, or the like; for how far copies are admitted as evidence, see Evidence.

COPYHOLD, (tenura per copiam rotuli curiæ) is a tenure for which the tenant hath nothing to shew but the copy of the rolls, made by the steward of the lord's court, on such tenant's being admitted to any parcel of land or tenement belonging to the manor. 4 Rep. 25. It is called base tenure, because held at the will of the lord: but though they are held by copy, yet are they a kind of freehold; Kitch. 81. However copyhold land cannot be made at this day: for the pillars of a copyhold estate are, that it hath been demised time out of mind by copy of court-roll; and that the tenements are parcel of or within the manor. 1 Inst. 58. 4 Rep. 24. A copyhold tenant had originally in judgment of law, but an estate at will; yet custom so established his estate, that by the custom of the manor it was descendible, and his heirs inherited it: and therefore the estate of the copyholder is not merely ad voluntatem domini, but ad voluntatem domini secundum consuetudinem manerii; so that the custom of the manor is the life of copyhold estates, for without a custom, or if copyholders break their custom, they are subject to the will of the lord: and as a copyhold is created by custom, so it is guided by custom. 4 Rep. 21.

Copyholds descend according to the rules and maxims of the common law, (unless in particular manors, where there are contrary customs of great antiquity); but such customary inheritances shall not be assets; to charge the heir in action of debt, &c. 5 Rep. 21. 1 Vent. 165. Copyholders hold their estates free from charges of dower, being created by custom, which is paramount to the title of dower. 4 Rep. 24. But by particular custom, there may be dower and tenancy by the curtesy. Cro. Eliz. 361. So by custom a copyhold may be entailed, and by custom the entail may be cut off by surrender. 1 Inst. 60.

So also by custom a recovery may be suffered of a copyhold: but a fine and recovery at common law will not destroy a copyhold estate: because common law assurances do not work upon the assurance of the copyhold.

And by 47 Geo. 3. sess. 2. c. 8, persons may appoint attornies for surrendering copyholds or customary estates, of which common recoveries are intended to be suffered.

Also copyholders may according to the custom of some manors, entail copyhold lands, and bar the entails and remainders, by committing a forfeiture, as making lease without licence, &c. and then the lord is to make three proclamations, and seize the copyhold, after which the lands are granted to the copyholder, and his heirs, &c. 2 Danv. Abr. 191. Sid. 314.

Copyholders shall neither implead nor be impleaded for their tenements by writ, but by plaint in the nature of a real action, in the lord's court held within the manor: and if on such plaint, erroneous judgment be given, no writ of false judgment lies, but petition to the lord in nature of a writ of false judgment, wherein errors are to be assigned, and remedy given according to law. Co. Lit. 60. 1 Brown. 121.

But it is now the practice, (except where the statute of limitations has run against this possessory action,) to bring an ejectment to recover the possession of copyholds: for the defendant by the rule obliges himself to confess lease, entry, and ouster, and the title only can come in question on the trial. But the lessor of the plaintiff, before he brings his ejectment, should be admitted; unless he be the heir at law, in which case, if the ancestor, through whom he claims was admitted, and in possession, actual admission previous to the bringing the ejectment is not absolutely necessary.

A manor is lost when there are no customary tenants or copyholders: and if a copyhold comes into the hands of the lord in fee, and the lord leases it for one year, or half a year, or for any certain time, it can never be granted by copy after; but if the lord keeps the copyhold for a long time in his hand, it is no impediment but that he may after grant it again by copy. 2 Danv. Abr. 176, 177. And if a copyholder in fee accepts of a lease, grant, or confirmation of the same land from the lord, this determines his copyhold estate, for it is a surrender in law of his copyhold. 2 Cro. 16. Cro. Jac. 253. 3 Leon. 329.

A copyholder cannot convey or transfer his copyhold estate to another, otherwise than by surrender; which is the yielding up of the land by the tenant to the lord, according to the custom of the manor, to the use of him that is to have the estate. And if a lord of the manor for the time being, take a surrender, and before admittance dieth, the next lord shall be compelled to make admittance according to the surrender. Co. Lit. 59.

All grants of copyhold estates are to be according to the custom of the manor, and rents and services customary must be reserved; for what acts of the lord in granting copyholds are not confirmed by custom, but only strengthened by the power and interest of the lord, have no longer duration than the lord's estate continueth. Comp. Court. Keeper. 421.

And is voluntary admittances, if the lord admits any one contrary to custom, it shall not bind his heir or successor. 1 Nels. Abr. 493.

The lord of a manor may himself grant a copyhold estate at any place out of the manor; but the steward cannot grant a copyhold at a court held out of the manor. 4 Rep. 26. Though the steward may take surrenders out of the manor, as well as the lord. 2 Danv. Abr. 181.

In admittances, in court, upon voluntary grants, the lord is proprietor; in admittances upon surrender, the lord is not proprietor of the lands, but only a necessary instrument of conveyance; and in admittances by descent the lord is a mere instrument, not being necessary to strengthen the heir's title, but only to give the lord his fine. 4 Rep. 21, 22.

On surrender of a copyhold, the surrenderor or person making the same, continues tenant till the admittance of the surrenderee, and the surrenderee may not enter upon the lands, or surrender before admittance, for he hath no estate till then: though it is otherwise of the heir by descent, who is in by course of law, and the custom casts the possession upon him. Comp. Court Keep. 436. A surrender is not of any effect until admittance, and yet the surrenderee cannot be defrauded of the benefit of the surrender; for the surrenderor cannot pass away the land to another, or make it subject to any other incumbrances; and if the lord refuse the surrenderee admittance, he is compellable in Chancery, or by mandamus. Comp. Cop. sect. 89. And a grantee hath no interest vested in him till he is admitted; but admittance of a copyholder for life is an admittance of him in remainder; for they are but one estate; and the remainder-man may, after the death of tenant for life, surrender without admittance. 3 Lev. 308. Cro. El. 504.

Where a widow's estate is created by custom, that shall be an admittance in law: and her estate arising out of that of her husband's, his admittance is the admittance of her. Ilut. 13. And she who hath a widow's estate by the custom of the manor, upon the death of her husband, need not pay a fine to the lord for the estate; for this is only a branch of the husband's. Hob. 181. For after the death of the baron the law casts the estate upon the wife, so that she shall have it before admittance, &c. 2 Danv. 184. But if a copyholder in fee surrenders to the use of another, and then dies; the surrenderee should have the land, free from the free bench or estate of the wife; because the wife's title thereto, doth not commence till after the death of her husband; but the plaintiff's title begins with the surrender; and the admittance relates to that, and it is the husband's dying seized only, which gives the widow a title. 1 Inst. 59. 1 Salk. 185. 4 Mod. Rep. 452, 453.

The widow's title commenceth not by the marriage; if it did, then the husband could do nothing in his life-time to prejudice it: but it is plain he may alien or extinguish his right, so as to bind the estate of the widow: the free bench grows out of the estate of the husband.

Admittances are never by attorney, for the tenant ought to do fealty: though surrenders are oftentimes by attorney. 2 Danv. 189.

The intent of surrenders is, that the lord may not be a stranger to his tenant, and the alteration of the estate. And if any person would devise a copyhold estate, he cannot do it by his will; but he must surrender to the use of his last will and testament; and in his will declare his intent. Comp. Cop. sect. 36, 39. And where a copyholder surrenders to the use of his will, the lands do not pass by the will, but by the surrender; the will being only declaratory to the uses of the surrender. 1 Bulst. 200. But in case of a will, the Chancery will supply the defect of a surrender, in the behalf of children, if not to disinherit the eldest son; and for the benefit of creditors, where a copyhold estate is charged by will with the payment of debts, for though there is no surrender to those uses, it will be good in equity. 4 Rep. 25. 1 Salk. 187. 3 Salk. 84. Yet it is held, that equity shall not supply the want of such surrender in favour of a grandchild; or bastard, who is not considered as a child, or a wife against the heir, nor in behalf of legatees; but where the surrender is refused by the lord, a will of copyhold may be sufficient without it. Abr. Cas. Eq. 122, 124.

A cestui que trust may devise an interest in land, &c. without surrender, and if copyhold lands are in mortgage, the mortgagor can dispose of the equity of redemption by will, without any surrender made; because he hath at that time no estate in the land, whereof to make a surrender. Preced. Canc. 320, 322.

By the general custom of copyhold estates, copyholders may surrender in court, and need not allege any particular custom to warrant it; but where they surrender out of court, into the hands of the lord by customary tenants, &c. custom must be pleaded. 9 Rep. 75. 1 Rol. Abr. 500. And surrenders out of court are to be presented at the next court; for it is not an effectual surrender till presented in court. Where a copyholder in fee surrenders out of court, and dies before it is presented; yet the surrender being presented at the next court, will stand good, and cestui que use shall be admitted; so if cestui que use dies before it is presented, his heir shall be admitted.

But if the surrender be not presented at the next court it is void. Co. Lit. 62. 2 Danv. 188.

Tenants refusing to make presentments, are compellable in the lord's court. And by surrender of copyhold lands to the use of a mortgagee, the lands are bound in equity, though the surrender be not presented at the next court. 2 Salk. 449. When a copyholder surrenders upon condition, and this is presented absolutely, the presentment is void; but where a conditional surrender is presented; and the steward omits entering the condition, on proof thereof the condition shall not be avoided; but the rolls shall be amended. 4 Rep. 25. A copyholder may surrender to the use of another, reserving rent, with a condition of re-entry for non-payment and in default of payment may re-enter. Ibid. 21.

Fines are paid to the lord on admittances, and may be either certain by custom, or uncertain; a fine certain is to be paid presently on the admission; but if it be uncertain, the copyholder is to have notice and time to pay it. 4 Rep. 27. 13 Rep. 2.

Uncertain fines must be reasonable, such as a year, or at the utmost a year and a half's value which has been deemed a reasonable fine, but two years unreasonable. These fines are not due until after admission, and if not paid the lord may have his action of debt for the same, in which their reasonableness may be tried; or he may by custom in some places distrain.

An heriot is a duty to the lord, at the death of the tenant, and is the best beast or goods, found in the possession of the tenant deceased. Plowd. 96.

Relief is a sum of money which every copyholder in fee, or freeholder of a manor pays to the lord, on the death of his ancestor; and is generally a year's profit of his land. Ibid.

Services signify any duty whatsoever accruing unto the lord from tenants: and are not only annual and accidental; but corporal, as homage, fealty, &c. Comp. Court Keep. 7, 8, 9, &c.

And for heriots, reliefs, &c. the lord may distrain or bring action of debt. Plowd. 96.

Copyholds escheat, and are forfeited to the lord; either where the lands fall into the hands of the lord for want of an heir to inherit them; or where the copyholder commits felony, &c. But before the lord can enter on an estate escheated, the homage jury ought to present it. Ibid.

Upon the descent of any copyhold of inheritance, the heir by the general custom is bound upon three solemn proclamations, made at three several courts, to come in and be admitted to his copyhold; or if he faileth therein, this failure worketh a forfeiture.

And by stat. 9 Geo. 1. c. 29. "On default "of infant and feme coverts appearing "to be admitted tenants to copyhold "lands, the lord or his steward, may "name a person to be guardian or "attorney for them, and by such guardian "&c. admit them, and if the usual fine "be not paid in three months, being de- "manded in writing, the lord may enter "on the copyhold, and receive the rents, "&c. till the fine is paid with all charges. "And by this statute no infant or feme "covert shall forfeit any copyhold lands "for their neglect to come to court to be "admitted, or refusal to pay any fine."

The general custom of copyholds allows a copyholder to make a lease for one year of his copyhold estate and no more, without incurring a forfeiture. Moor. 184. Salk. 186. But if there is a custom to warrant it, a copyholder may make a lease for years, without forfeiture; so also with the licence of the lord, a copyholder may make a lease for years. Cro. Jac. 300. Cro. Car. 7. 4 Rep. 21 to 25.

If copyholder for life cuts down timber trees, the lord may take them, and it is a forfeiture of his copyhold: though such copyholder may take house-boot, hedge-boot, and plough-boot upon his copyhold, of common right, as a thing incident to the grant; if he be not restrained by custom, to take them by the assignment of the lord or his bailiff. But if under-lessee for years of a copyholder cut down timber, this shall not be a forfeiture of the copyhold estate, but the lord is put to his action on the case against the lessee. 1 Bulst. 150. Style. 233.

But the copyholder for life, committing waste, shall not forfeit the estate of him in remainder. Cro. Eliz. 880. A copyholder committing waste voluntary or permissive, that is a forfeiture: voluntary, as if he pull down any house, though built by himself, lop trees and fell them, plough up meadow, whereby the ground is made worse, &c. Permissive, if he suffer the roof of the house to let in rain, or the house to fall, or if he permit his meadow ground to be surrounded with water, so that it becomes marshy, or his arable land to be thus surrounded and become unprofitable, &c. these and the like are forfeitures. See 2 Danv. Abr. 192, 193, 196, &c. 1 Nels. Abr. 509, 510, &c. But it must be by his wilful default.

The court of Chancery will not relieve a copyhold tenant against a forfeiture, on committing voluntary waste by wilfully cutting down timber trees, or the like. But it doth for permissive waste, arising by neglect and laches, and when the estate is forfeited for non-payment of rent, a fine, or such things, where a value may be set on them, and compensation made the lord, the tenant may be relieved; for there the land is but in nature of a security for those sums. Preced. Chanc. 569, 572.

If a lease for years be made without licence, and not warranted by custom, and it be found to be a forfeiture at law, equity has nothing to do with it, to give any remedy.

COPYRIGHT, was by the common law of England, a perpetual and inviolable right vested in the author of any literary composition. But the enjoyment of this right has been abridged by the statute of Queen Ann, and all remedy for the violation of it, is now taken away by that statute, after the expiration of the two several terms specified in the act. 4 Burr. 2303.

By this stat. 8 Ann. c. 19. (amended by 15 Geo. 3. c. 53.) it is now declared that the author and his assigns shall have the sole liberty of printing and reprinting his works for the term of 14 years and no longer, and hath also protected that property by additional penalties and forfeitures, (see Books) directing further, that if, at the end of that time, the author himself be living, the right shall then return to him for another term of the same duration.

And by 41 Geo. 3. (u. k.) c. 107. in consequence of the Irish union, provisions similar to those in the stat. of queen Ann, are re-enacted and extended to the whole of the united kingdom (before that time no statute was existing in Ireland to protect copyright) these provisions ase also enforced by additional remedies and increased penalties, and an action on the ease for damages is specifically given to the party injured. See Books.

Where an author transfers all his right or interest in his publication, upon his surviving the first fourteen years, the second term will result to his assignee, and not to himself. 2 Bro. 80; and musical compositions are within the meaning and protection of the stat. Comp. 623, but the representation on the stage of a dramatic performance not printed, is not such a publication, for which the author can maintain an action as for the invasion of his rights. 5 Ter. Rep. 245. But no one has a right to take down a play in short hand, and to print it before it is published by the author. Amb. 694.

A fair and bona fide abridgment of any book is considered a new work; and however it may injure the sale of the original, yet it is not deemed in law to be a piracy or a violation of the author's copyright. 1 Bro. 451. 2 Atk. 141.

But in such productions, and also history, chronology, dictionaries, and the like, it must be left to a jury to determine whether the publication complained of is a servile copy, and imitation, or an original work upon the same subject. 1 East. 358.

No one but the author or his assignee hath a right to print or publish original notes, or additions to an old work, although the chief copyright may be open, and any person have the liberty of printing and publishing the original work without the notes or improvements. Christ. n. 6. 2 Black. 407.

Also no one can be prosecuted for the penalties introduced by the statutes, viz. a forfeiture of one penny, (and in some cases three pence) for every sheet, and the sheets being defaced (see Books) unless the work is duly entered at Stationer's hall in London, according to the directions of the several statutes now in force; but an action may be brought, or an injunction obtained in a court of equity, though the publication be not entered in the register of the Stationer's company, or the author does not prefix his name to it. 1 Black. Rep. 330. 7 Ter. Rep. 620.

CORAAGE, (coragium) was a kind of extraordinary imposition, growing upon some unusual occasion, and seems to have been of certain measures of corn; for corus tritici is a measure of wheat. Bract. lib. 2. c. 116. Blount.

CORACLE, a small boat used by fishermen on the river Uske, and some parts of the river Severn, made of split sally twigs interwoven, and on that part next the water covered with leather, capable of holding only one man, on a seat in the middle.

CORAM NON JUDICE, when a cause is brought, and determined in a court, whereof the judges have not any jurisdiction; it is said to be coram non judice, and void. 2 Cro. 351.

CORBEL, a nich in the wall of a church or other structure, in which an image is placed for an ornament or superstition; the niches remain on the outside of very many churches, though the little statues and reliques were most of them broken down in the puritannical rebellion. Paroch. Antiq. 575.

CORD OF WOOD, is a quantity of wood eight feet long, four feet broad, and four feet high. Cowel. Blount.

CORDAGE, (Fr.) is a general appellation for all stuff to make ropes, and for all kind of ropes belonging to the rigging of a ship. Cowel. Blount.

CORDINER, from the Fr. cordouannier, a shoemaker; we call him vulgarly a cordwainer; and so this word is used in divers statutes.

CORDUBANARIUS, also signifies a shoemaker. Cowel. Blount.

CORETES, from the Brit. cored, pools, ponds, &c. Du Fresne. Cowel. Blount.

CORUM FORISFACERE, was where a person was condemned to be whipped; which was anciently the punishment of a servant. Ibid.

CORN, Offences concerning corn. By 11

Geo. 2. c. 22, persons using violence to hinder the buying or carrying corn, on conviction, shall be imprisoned three months, and not less than one month, within which time they are to be publicly whipped.

By 36 Geo. 3. c. 9. persons hindering the buying of corn, or seizing it on its passage to any place, are to be committed to hard labour for not exceeding three months, nor less than one. s. 1.

Persons convicted of such offences a second time, or destroying store houses, or carrying corn therefrom, are to be transported for seven years. s. 2.

The hundred where any such offence is committed may be sued for damages not exceeding 100*l.*; but no person is to recover such damages unless notice be given of the offence, and recognizance entered into to prosecute known offenders, and if any offender be convicted within a year after the offence, the hundred is not liable to make satisfaction for such damages, and no such action is to be commenced until after the year, nor unless commenced within two years after the offence. s. 3, 5.

This is not to abridge any law for the punishment or suppression of such offences as aforesaid. s. 6.

Bounties and duties.] By 44 Geo. 3, c. 109, the bounties on British corn exported shall be as follows: s. 3.

By 45 Geo. 3. c. 86, the importation and exportation of corn into and from Great Britain, shall be regulated by the average prices of the twelve maritime districts in England and Wales, as ascertained by the returns required by 31 Geo. 3, c. 30. s. 31, infra. And no corn shall be exported when the price in the preceding week is at the import rates s. 1, 2.

And the orders in council, when issued for the importation of corn and grain from the British colonies in America, shall continue in force for six months. s. 3.

Corn Regulations.] By 31 Geo. 3, c. 30, so much of 15 Car. 2. c. 7, as prohibits the buying of corn to sell again, and the laying it up in granaries, is repealed; and it shall be lawful to buy corn to sell again, and lay it up in granaries, whatever the price may be. s. 2.

Bond is to be given for the due exportation of corn exported upon bounty, and the bounty is to be paid on oath that it is of British growth or produce, and a certificate from the proper officer of its having been duly exported. s. 5, 6.

Corn exported contrary to the act is forfeited, with the vessel; but if satisfactory proof be made that from the smallness of the quantity the same was on board without the privity of the owner or master, the vessel is not to be forfeited. s. 9.

Corn begun to be shipped outwards, or such part as shall be shipped within twenty days from the entry, may be exported, though the price in the mean time rise to the rates at which the exportation is prohibited. s. 10.

But the act is not to extend to corn for the sustenance of the crew of any vessel, or for victualling his Majesty's ships of war, forces, forts, or garrisons, or to beans exported to the British forts in Africa, or corn carried coastwise on sufferance. Ibid.

Or to certain quantities permitted to be exported to certain places mentioned in the table set forth in the act, for the due exportation whereof to which settlements and places bond is to be given. Ibid, and s. 7.

The inhabitants of Guernsey, Jersey, or Alderney, may transport directly from thence to Newfoundland, or the British colonies in America, for the use of the fishery, the corn allowed to be imported into those islands. s. 12.

In cases of war or distress his Majesty in council, when the parliament is not sitting, may allow certain further quantities of corn specified in the act, to be exported to the above places. s. 13.

Corn, grain, and flour imported may be landed without payment of duty, and warehoused under certain regulations. s. 19.

Foreign corn imported, and not warehoused, or delivered from the warehouse for home consumption, not to be exported from any port when British corn is not permitted to be exported therefrom. s. 20.

No debenture is to be made out for bounty on any corn shipped when it may be imported at the low duties. s. 22.

Foreign corn not warehoused, or meal made therefrom, if exported contrary to this act, to be forfeited, with the vessel. s. 23.

For ascertaining the prices of corn, the maritime counties of England are to be divided into the twelve districts herein specified, (including the cities which are counties of themselves) viz. London, Essex, Kent, and Sussex, being the 1st district — Suffolk and Cambridge the 2d, — Norfolk the 3d, — Lincoln, and the east and north ridings of Yorkshire, including Kingston upon Hull, the 4th, — Durham, Northumberland, and Berwick, the 5th, — Cumberland and Westmorland, the 6th, — Lancaster and Chester, the 7th, — Flint, Denbigh, Anglesea, Caernarvon, and Merioneth, the 8th, — Cardigan, Carmarthen, and Glamorgan, the 9th, — Gloucester, Somerset, Monmouth, and Bristol, the 10th, — Devon and Cornwall, the 11th, — and Dorset and Hants, the 12th district. s. 31.

And the several counties of Scotland form the 13th, 14th, 15th, and 16th districts. s. 32, 33.

The exportation of corn to be regulated in London and Kent, Essex and Sussex, by the prices at the Corn Exchange: the proprietors whereof are to appoint an inspector of corn returns, who is to be sworn; and they are also to appoint an office for his use. s. 34, 35

The inspector is not removable, except by the London sessions. s. 36.

In case of sickness a deputy-inspector may be appointed. s. 37.

Corn-factors are to make a declaration in writing that they will make true returns to be delivered to the lord mayor, who is to grant a certificate thereof, to be registered with the inspector: and corn-factors acting without the delivery of such certificate, forfeit 50*l.* s. 38.

Factors are to make weekly returns to the inspector of corn returns, of the quantity of each sort sold, on penalty of 10*l.* which returns are to be entered in a book by the inspector, but not shown without proper authority on like penalty. s. 39, 40.

The inspector is to make up weekly accounts of the average quantity and price of each sort sold in London, and transmit the average prices every Friday to the receiver of corn-returns, who is to transmit a certificate thereof to the collectors of the customs within the district, as the price for exportation. s. 41.

The inspector is also to make up within seven days after 15th February, 15th May, 15th August, and 15th November, in every year, like accounts, and to transmit the average prices to the receiver of corn-returns, who is to transmit a copy thereof to the collectors of customs, as the rule for importation. s. 42. Inspector to deliver a copy of the average prices at the sessions, to be inserted in the Gazette. s. 43.

Factors are to pay to the inspector for corn brought into the Thames eastward of London bridge, 1*d.* per last, and for foreign corn 2*d.* and to deliver to him an account of the quantity. s. 45.

Inspector to deliver twice in the year to the London sessions an account of the money so received by him, which is to be disposed of in paying to the inspector not more than 200*l.* nor less than 100*l.* per ann. 2dly, so much to the proprietors of the Corn Exchange as will discharge the expense of providing the office; and 3dly, the residue, if any, to the receiver-general of the Customs. s. 45.

And the lord mayor and aldermen in sessions may order the beforementioned imposition of 1*d.* and 2*d.* per last to be levied by distress. s. 46.

In each of the eleven other districts (except counties of themselves) the justices in sessions are to appoint an inspector of corn-returns; and for such of them as are counties of themselves, the mayor and justices in their sessions are to appoint such inspector. s. 48, 49.

Such inspector may be removed, and in case of death or resignation other persons may be appointed by two justices till the quarter-sessions. s. 50.

Inspectors are to take an oath to make true returns, and dealers in corn for sale are to return to the inspectors accounts of the quantities bought by them in each week, and to make a declaration in writing that they will act conformable to the act, which declaration is to be delivered to a justice, to be filed by the clerk of the peace; and acting without, or making a false declaration, is a penalty of not exceeding 10*l.* nor less than 40*s.* s. 51, 52, 53.

Inspector is to enter the accounts of the quantities and prices of corn returned to him by the dealers, and return to the receivers of corn-returns, weekly, an account of the quantities and prices. s. 54.

By 33 Geo. 3. c. 65; the receiver of corn-returns is to make up the weekly average prices of corn and oatmeal sold in each of the towns in England, appointed by the last act, and to transmit the average prices in each district to the officer of customs, at the several ports as the rule for exportation. s. 2.

The receiver of corn within 7 days after 15th February, 15th May, 15th August, and 15th November, in each year is to state the average prices of corn and oatmeal in each district for the last six weeks, and transmit the same to the several officers of the customs, as the rule for import and export. s. 3.

Receivers of corn returns are to insert in the gazette, the weekly average prices of corn and oatmeal in each county, and the general aggregate prices in England, and the like average prices in Scotland monthly. s. 4.

In case a sufficient number of returns shall not be made from any districts, the receiver of corn returns is to transmit a certificate of the general average prices to the officers of customs therein, for the rule of import and export. s. 4.

Seed corn may at all times be carried coastwise, but when prohibited to be exported, bond must be given to secure its being only carried coastwise; oath must also be made that it is seed corn, and bond given that it shall not be used for any other purpose, and if used for any other purpose, the party is to forfeit treble the value. s. 13, 14.

By 31 Geo. 3. c. 30, the importation and exportation of corn is to be regulated in Scotland by certain rules. s. 57 to 61.

Accounts of the prices of corn are also to be taken in the several inland and other counties and places, in the act specified, for each of which an inspector of corn returns is to be appointed by the sessions, in like manner as for the maritime counties. s. 62, 64.

Such inspectors are to transmit to the receiver of corn returns a weekly account of the average prices sold in their districts, on penalty of 10*l.* s. 65.

Receiver of corn returns to cause an abstract of the average prices, from the last mentioned places to be inserted in the Gazette weekly, and to transmit certificates of the returns received four times in the year to the county treasurer. s. 66.

Places for taking the prices of corn may be changed. s. 67.

Returns from two-thirds of the places in corn districts to be sufficient for forming the average prices, and the average prices of the districts which have sent returns are to be transmitted as guides for importation or exportation in the districts from which sufficient returns have not been received. s. 68, 69.

Inspectors in England are to be paid quarterly out of the county rates, 5*s.* for each return from any city or town in the maritime counties, and 2*s.* for each return from cities and towns in the inland counties. s. 74.

The receiver of corn returns is to transmit, at the end of every year, a certificate of the number of returns received to the receiver general of the customs, who is to repay the county treasurers out of duties received, and if the duties on foreign corn imported be insufficient to make repayment, the receiver-general is to make up the deficiency. s. 75, 76.

The lords of the treasury are to appoint a receiver of corn returns, who is to take an oath to execute the office truly, who may send and receive papers free of postage. s. 77, 78, 79.

The collectors of the customs are to send weekly accounts of corn shipped to be carried coastwise at, or brought coastwise into their respective ports, to the receiver of corn returns, who is every three months to transmit an account thereof to the commissioners of customs. s. 80.

The treasury are to order an annual account to be transmitted from the customs, to the receiver of corn returns, of the corn exported. s. 81.

All corn shall be measured by the Winchester bushel, but when sold by weight, the following quantities are to be deemed equal to a bushel, wheat 57lb. rye 55lb. barley 49lb. beer or bigg 42lb. oats 38lb. wheat meal 56lb. wheat flour 45lb. rye meal 55lb. barley meal 48lb. beer or bigg meal 41lb. oatmeal 22lb. and the quantity of ground corn in sacks is to be determined by weighing two sacks out of twenty; and on doubts whether it be wheat meal or wheat flour, the officer may require a reasonable portion of every sack to be passed through a 14*s.* cloth. s. 82.

The inspector of corn returns is to make a comparison between the Winchester measure, and that used where he is inspector. s. 83.

The present practice of measuring corn within London is to continue, and the city tolls to be paid. s. 84.

No fee is to be taken for oaths. s. 86.

And the penalties may be recovered in the courts of record, or before two justices of the peace, who may levy the same by distress. s. 87, 88.

By 39 Geo. 3. c. 38, the average prices of middling British rapeseed at the place of importation shall be ascertained in like manner as the prices of corn. s. 2.

By 46 Geo. 3. c. 11, the act 45 Geo. 3. c. 86, s. 2, shall not prevent the carrying coastwise, or exporting corn for the use of his majesty's forces, or for the purposes mentioned in 31 Geo. 3. c. 30, and 33 Geo. 3. c. 65, although prohibited from being otherwise exported by reason of the price.

By 46 Geo. 3. c. 97, all bounties and duties payable on the interchange of corn and grain between Great Britain and Ireland shall cease, and corn and grain may be imported and exported between them whatever the price may be. s. 1.

But the exporter is to declare before the officer of customs, that such corn and grain is intended to be exported between the countries, and shall receive a coast cocquet; and no fee shall be taken by any officer of customs on account thereof, on pain of being dismissed, and rendered incapable of serving in the customs, excise, or any revenue office. s. 3.

Nothing in any acts in force shall prohibit the exportation from Ireland of a supply of corn, and the like for ship stores, or for provisioning forces or garrisons, or beans for the British forts in Africa, usually supplied from Great Britain, nor prohibit the like quantities mentioned in table C. of the British acts 31 Geo. 3. c. 30. s. 10, and 33 Geo. 3. c. 65, but if the price be above the price at which the export is allowed, the exporter to any place mentioned in the said table shall declare the place for which the same are exported. s. 5, 6.

And by 47 Geo. 3. sess. 1. c. 7, the act 46 Geo. 3. c. 97, is declared to extend only to corn and grain of the growth of Great Britain or Ireland.

CORNAGE, (cornagium, from the Lat. cornu) a horn, was a kind of tenure in grand serjeantry; the service of which was to blow a horn when any invasion of the Scots was perceived; and by this tenure many persons held their lands northward, about the wall commonly called the Picts wall. Cambd. Britan. 609. Cowel. Blount. Ibid.

CORNARE, to blow in the horn. Ibid.

CORN RENTS. By 18 El. c. 6, on college leases, one-third of the old rent is to be reserved in wheat or malt, &c. The invention of lord treasurer Burleigh, and sir Thomas Smith, who observed the value of money to sink much, and the price of provisions to rise greatly, on our communication with the Indies; and therefore devised this method for upholding the revenues of the colleges. 2 Black. Com. 322.

CORNWALL, a royal duchy belonging to the Prince of Wales, abounding with mines, and having stannary courts, &c. See STANNARIES.

CORODY, (corodium) was a sum of money or allowance of meat, drink, and clothing due to the king from an abbey, or other house of religion, whereof he was founder, towards the sustentation of such a one of his servants as he thought fit to bestow it upon. And the difference between a corody and pension was, that a corody was allowed towards the maintenance of any of the king's servants in an abbey; a pension was given to one of the king's chaplains, for his better maintenance, till he was provided of a benefice. Fitz. Nat. Br. 250. Staundf. Prærog. 44.

CORODIO HABENDO, a writ to exact a corody of an abbey or religious house. Reg. Orig. 264.

CORONA MALA or MALA CORONA, the clergy who abused their character were formerly so called. Blount.

CORONARE FILIUM, to make one's son a priest; homo coronatus was one who had received the first tonsure, as preparatory to superior orders; and the tonsure was in the form of a corona, or crown of thorns. Cæsel. Blount.

CORONATION OATH, the original contract between the king and people is now comprized in the coronation oath, the articles which seem to be as ancient as the Mirrour of Justices, cap. 1. s. 2. and even as the time of Bracton, lib. 3. c. 9. 1 Black. 234, 235.

This oath, by stat. 1 W. & M. st. 1. c. 6, is to be administered to every king and queen, who shall succeed to the imperial crown of these realms, by one of the archbishops or bishops of the realm, in the presence of all the people; who on their parts do reciprocally take the oath of allegiance to the crown. This coronation oath is conceived in the following terms.

The archbishop or bishop shall say, "Will you solemnly promise and swear to govern the people of this kingdom of England, and the dominions thereto belonging, according to the statutes in parliament agreed on, and the laws and customs of the same." The king or queen shall say, "I solemnly promise so to do." Archbishop or bishop. "Will you to your power, cause law and justice, in mercy to be executed in all your judgments." King or queen, "I will." Archbishop or bishop. "Will you to the utmost of your power maintain the laws of God, the true profession of the gospel, and the protestant reformed religion established by the law. And will you preserve unto the bishops and clergy of this realm, and to the churches committed to their charge, all such rights and privileges as by law do or shall appertain unto them, or any of them." King or queen, "all this I promise to do." After this the king or queen, laying his or her hand upon the holy gospels, shall say, "the things which I have here before promised I will perform and keep: so help me God," and then shall kiss the book.

And it is required both by the bill of rights, 1 W. & M. st. 2. c. 2, and the act of settlement 12 & 13 W. 3. c. 2. that every king and queen of the age of twelve years, either at their coronation, or on the first day of the first parliament, upon the throne in the house of peers, (which shall first happen), shall repeat and subscribe the declaration against popery according to the 30 Car. 2. st. 2. c. 1.

This is most indisputably a fundamental and original express contract; and on the king's part expresses all the duties that a monarch can owe to his people, viz. to govern according to law; to execute judgment in mercy, and to maintain the established religion: though doubtless the duty of protection is impliedly as much incumbent on the sovereign before coronation as after: in the same manner as allegiance to the king becomes the duty of the subject immediately on the descent of the crown, before he has taken the oath of allegiance, or whether he ever takes it at all. 1 Black. 235. 6.

CORONATORE ELIGENDO, is a writ which lies on the death or discharge of any coroner, directed to the sheriff out of the Chancery, to call together the freeholders of the county, for the choice of a new coroner; and to certify into the Chancery: both the election and the name of the party elected, and also to give him his oath, &c. Reg. Orig. 177. F. N. B. 163.

CORONATORE EXONERANDO, is a writ for the discharge of a coroner for negligence, or insufficiency in the discharge of his duty; and where coroners are so far engaged in any other public business, that they cannot attend the office; or if they are disabled by old age or disease, to execute it; or have not sufficient lands, &c. they may be discharged by this writ. 2 Inst. 32. 2 Hawk. P. C. 44. But if any such writ be grounded on an untrue suggestion, the coroner may procure a commission from the Chancery, to inquire thereof; and if the suggestion be disproved, the king may make a supersedeas to the sheriff, that he do not remove the coroner; or if he hath removed him, that he suffer him to execute the office. Reg. Orig. 177, 8. F. N. B. 164.

CORONER, (coronator, a corona), is an ancient officer of this realm, so called because he deals wholly for the king and crown. Bac. Abr. tit. Cor.

Coroners are to be men of good ability, and have lands in fee in the county, where chosen, to answer all people; and if insufficient, the county shall answer for them. 2 Inst. 174.

And by 28 Ed. 3. c. 6, the coroner shall be chosen by the commons in full county, saving the franchises of the king and other lords. But the lord chief justice of the king's bench is the sovereign coroner of the whole kingdom in person wheresoever he is, 4 Rep. 57. And there are also special coroners within divers liberties, either in right of their offices according to custom, or by appointment agreeable to the king's charter, as granted to some corporations. Cromp. Juris. 102. 4 Inst. 271. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 53.

And thus there are coroners of the king's household, and of the verge of the king's palaces, of the admiralty, of London, Southwark, and other particular franchises.

Power of Coroners.] Coroners are conservators of the peace in the county where elected; and their authority is both judicial and ministerial. Judicial, where one comes to a violent death, and to take and enter appeals of murder, pronounce judgment upon outlawries, &c. And to inquire of lands and goods, and escapes of murderers, treasure trove, of persons riotously living, of deodands, wreck of the sea, &c. The ministerial power is where the coroners execute the king's writs, on exception to the sheriff, as being party, plaintiff, or defendant to a suit, kin to either of the parties, or on default of the sheriff in not making returns, &c. 4 Inst. 271. 1 Plowd. 73. And the authority of coroners does not determine by the demise of the king. 2 Inst. 174.

By the stat. de officio coronatoris, 4 Ed. 1. "The coroner is to go to the place where "any person is slain or suddenly dead, "and shall by his warrant to the bailiffs, "constables, &c. summon a jury out of the "four or five neighbouring towns, to make "inquiry upon view of the body; and the "coroner and jury are to inquire into the "manner of killing, and all circumstances "that occasioned the party's death, who "were present, whether the dead person was "known, where he lay the night before, "&c. Examine the body if there be any "signs of strangling about the neck, or of "cords about the members, &c. Also all "wounds ought to be viewed, and inquiry "made with what weapons, &c. And the "coroner may send his warrant for wit-"nesses, and take their examination in "writing: and if any appear guilty of the "murder, he shall inquire what goods and "lands he hath, and then the dead body "is to be buried. A coroner may likewise "commit the person to prison who is by "his inquisition found guilty of the mur-"der; and the witnesses are to be bound "by recognizance to appear at the next "assizes, &c."

When the jury have brought in their verdict, the coroner is to inroll and return the inquisition, whether it be brought in murder, manslaughter, &c. to the justices of the next gaol delivery of the county, or certify it into B. R. where the murderers shall be proceeded against. 2 Rol. Abr. 32. And upon an inquisition taken before the coroner, he must put into writing the effect of the evidence given to the jury before him; and bind them to appear, &c. which is to be certified to the court with the inquisition, and neglecting it he shall be fined. 1 & 2 P. & M. cap. 13. 1 Lil. Abr. 327.

The coroner may in convenient time take up a dead body that hath been buried, in order to view it; but if it be buried so long that he can discover nothing, from the viewing it; or if there be danger of infection, the inquest ought not to be taken by the coroner, but by justices of peace, by the testimony of witnesses; for none can take it on view, but the coroner. Bro. Coron. 167, 173.

And a coroner may find any nuisance by which the death of a man happens; and the township shall be amerced on such finding. 1 Nels. Abr. 536.

Coroners ought to sit and inquire on the body of every prisoner that dies in prison. 3 Inst. 134.

If a body is drowned and cannot be found to be viewed, the inquisition must be taken by justices of peace, on the examination of witnesses, &c. 5 Rep. 110.

A coroner's inquisition being final, the coroner ought to hear counsel and evidence on both sides. 2 Sid. 90, 101. Where a coroner would not admit of evidence against the king, to prove a felo de se to be non compos mentis, his inquisition was set aside; and a new inquisition taken, whereby it was found that the party was non compos. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 60. But though the coroner must admit evidence as well against the king's interest, as for it; yet if a person be killed by another, and it is certainly known that he did it, the coroner's jury are to hear the evidence only for the king; and inquire whether the killing were by malice, or without malice. 2 Hale's P. C. 60.

If there be an inquisition of manslaughter or murder, and also an indictment by the grand jury, against one, and he is arraigned, and found not guilty on the indictment; here it is necessary to quash the coroner's inquisition, or to arraign the party upon it, and acquit him on that also; for otherwise it stands as a record against him, whereon he may possibly be outlawed. 2 Hale. 65.

Fees of coroners.] By 3 Hen. 7. cap. 1. upon an inquisition taken on the view of the body, the coroner shall have 13*s.* 4*d.* fee of the goods of the murderer; and if he be gone, then out of the amercement of the town for the escape, but by 1 H. 8. c. 7, where a person is slain, drowned, or dead by misadventure, the coroner is to take no fee, on pain of 40*s.*

By stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 29, however, every inquisition, (not taken upon the view of a body dying in gaol), which shall be taken by the coroner in any township or place contributory to the rates directed by stat. 12 Geo. 2. c. 29, the sum of 20*s.* and for every mile which he shall travel from the place of his abode, the further sum of 9*d.* shall be paid him out of the money arising by the said rates. And for every inquisition taken upon the view of a body dying in gaol, so much money, not exceeding 20*s.* shall be paid him as the justices at sessions shall think fit to allow, out of the money arising from the said rates. Provided that over and above the recompence hereby appointed for inquisitions taken as aforesaid, the coroner who shall take an inquisition upon the view of a body slain or murdered, shall have the fee of 13*s.* 4*d.* payable, by stat. 3 H. 7. c. 1. out of the goods of the slayer or murderer, or out of the amerciaments upon the township, if the slayer or murderer escape. And coroners taking further fees shall be guilty of extortion.

But no coroner of the king's household, and of the verge of the king's palaces, nor any coroner of the Admiralty, nor of the county palatine of Durham, nor of the city of London and borough of Southwark, or of any of the franchises belonging to the said city, nor any coroner of any city, borough, town, liberty or franchise not contributory to the rates directed by stat. 12 G. 2. c. 29. or within which such rates have not been usually assessed, shall be entitled to any fee, recompence, or benefit given by this act.

Punishment for misbehaviour.] If a coroner be remiss in coming to do his office, when he is sent for, he shall be amerced by virtue of the stat. de coronatoribus. S. P. C. 51. Salk. 377. H. P. C. 170.

And if a coroner hath been guilty of any corrupt practice, such as bribery, or the like, in taking the inquisition, a melius inquirendum may be awarded for taking a new one by special commissioners. And coroners concealing felonies, are to be fined, and suffer one year's imprisonment by 3 Ed. 1. cap. 9. Also for mismanagement in the coroner, filing the inquisition may be stopped. 1 Mod. 82.

If it be found before the coroner super visum corporis, that one was felo de se, the executors or administrators of the deceased, it is said, cannot traverse it. 3 Inst. 55. But it has been held that the inquest being moved into B. R. by certiorari, may be there traversed by the executor or administrator of the deceased. 2 Hawk. 54. And it hath been adjudged, that the inquisition of felo de se is traversable; though fugam fecit is not. 2 Leon. 152.

CORONER OF THE KING'S HOUSEHOLD, hath an exempt jurisdiction within the verge, and the coroner of the county cannot intermeddle within it; as the coroner of the king's house may not intermeddle within the county out of the verge. 2 Hawk. 45.

By the stat. 33 H. 8. 12. Par. 1 & 3. it is ordained, "that all inquisitions made upon "the view of persons slain, within any of "the king's palaces or houses, or any other "house or houses wherein his majesty shall "happen to be abiding in his royal person, "shall be taken by the coroner for the time "being of the king's household, without "any assisting of another coroner of any "shire within this realm, by the oaths of "twelve or more of the yeomen officers of "the king's household, returned by the two "clerks controllers, the clerks of the checks, "and the clerks marshal, or one of them, of "the said household, to whom the said co-"roner of the household shall direct his pre-"cept; and the said coroner shall certify "under his seal, and the seals of such per-"sons as shall be sworn before him, all such "inquisitions before the master or lord stew-"ard of the household; who hath the ap-"pointment of such coroner," &c.

CORONER OF LONDON. By the charter of king Ed. 4. the mayor and commonalty of London may grant the office of coroner to whom they please; and no other coroner but he that belongs to the city, shall have any power there: also the lord mayor, &c. may chuse two coroners in Southwark. Cit. Lib. 46, 47. 1 Lil. Abr. 327.

CORONE, (Fr.) all matters of the crown, were heretofore reduced to this law head or title; they are the things that concern treason, felony, and divers other offences by the common law, and by statute. Shep. Epit. 367.

CORPORAL OATH. See Oaths.

CORPORATION, (corporatio) is a body politic or incorporate, so called, as the persons are made into a body, and of capacity to take and grant, &c. Or it is an assembly and joining together of many into one fellowship and brotherhood, whereof one is head and chief, and the rest are the body; and this head and body knit together, make the corporation: also it is constituted of several members like unto the natural body, and framed by fiction of law to endure in perpetual succession. Bac. Abr. tit. Corp.

Of corporations some are sole, some aggregate; sole, when is one single person, as the king, a bishop, dean, or the like. Aggregate, which is the most usual, consisting of many persons, as mayor and commonalty, dean and chapter, &c. Likewise corporations are spiritual or temporal; spiritual, of bishops, deans, archdeacons, parsons, vicars, and other ecclesiastical persons. Temporal, of mayors, commonalty, bailiffs and burgesses, &c. and some corporations are of a mixt nature, composed of spiritual and temporal persons, such as heads of colleges and hospitals, &c. And all corporations are said to be ecclesiastical, or lay.

Bodies politic or incorporate may be, 1st, by prescription; 2dly, by letters patent, or 3dly, by act of parliament; but they are most commonly by patent or charter. 1 Inst. 250. 3 Inst. 202. 3 Rep. 73.

In making aggregate corporations, there must be, 1. Lawful authority. 2. Proper persons to be incorporated. 3. A name of incorporation. 4. A place, without which no corporation can be made. 5. Words sufficient in law to make a corporation. 10 Rep. 29, 123. 3 Rep. 73.

London and many other places are corporations by prescription; but though a corporation may be by prescription, it shall be intended that it did originally derive its authority by grant from the king; for the king is the head of the commonwealth, and all the commonwealth, in respect of him, is but one corporation; and all other corporations are but limbs of the greater body. 1 Lil. Abr. 330. A mayor and commonalty or corporation, cannot make another corporation, or commonalty. 1 Sid. 290. But they may make a company or fraternity. 1 Salk. 193.

By 13 Car. 2. c. 1. no person shall bear the office of mayor, alderman, recorder, bailiff, town clerk, common council man, or other office in any corporation, unless he hath taken the sacrament, one year prior to his election; and he shall take the oaths of allegiance and supremacy when the oaths of office are administered, otherwise the election is void.

The 5 Geo. 1. c. 6. discharged members of corporations from all incapacities of the last act, incurred by not receiving the sacrament within a year before their election: and enacts that persons elected hereafter shall not be removed, unless prosecution is commenced within six months after election.

Jurisdiction of Corporations.] When a corporation is duly created, all incidents, as to purchase and grant, sue and be sued, &c. are impliedly annexed to it; and although no power to make by-laws is given by a special clause to a corporation, it is included by law in the very act of incorporating. Co. Lit. 264. And a new charter doth not merge or extinguish any of the ancient privileges of the old charter. And if an ancient corporation is incorporated by a new name, yet their new body shall enjoy all the privileges that the old corporation had. Raym. 439. 4 Rep. 37.

And there are usually granted in charters to corporations, divers franchises; as felons' goods, waifs, estrays, treasure trove, deodands, courts, and cognisance of pleas, fairs, markets, assise of bread and beer, &c. 4 Rep. 65. Also actions arising in corporations may be tried in the corporation courts, where such courts are erected by the charter; but if they try actions which arise not within their jurisdictions, and encroach upon the common law, they shall be punished for it. Lutw. 1571, 1572.

By 2 & 3 Phil. & Mar. c. 18. commissioners of peace and gaol delivery for a town corporate, are not superseded by a new commission or the county.

By 38 Geo. 3. c. 52. in actions in any court of record at Westminster, or indictments removed by certiorari, if the venue be laid in the county of any city or town corporate, the court may direct the issue to be tried by a jury of the county next adjoining. s. 1.

Bills of indictment for offences committed within the county of any city or town corporate, may be preferred to the jury of the county next adjoining. s. 2.

Indictments found by a grand jury of the county of any city or town corporate, or inquisitions taken before the coroner, may be ordered by the court of oyer there, to be filed with the proper officer of the next adjoining county, and defendants removed to the gaol thereof. s. 3.

The judges of the court of king's bench, or oyer and terminer, may on application of the prosecutor, cause persons in custody for offences committed within the county of any city or town corporate, to be removed into the custody of the sheriff of the next adjoining county for trial, and direct coroners to return to the court of oyer and terminer inquisitions. s. 4.

Recognizances for prosecutions are to be forfeited, if the parties on notice left at their abode of intention to prefer indictments in the next adjoining counties, do not appear. s. 5, 6.

But such recognizances are not to be estreated until the next following sessions for the adjoining county.

Persons taking such recognizances, are to return them to the next court of oyer and terminer, for the next adjoining county, upon notice of the intention to prosecute, in the next adjoining county: and after such notice, bills are not to be preferred at any sessions for the county of the city or town corporate. s. 7.

Justices of oyer and terminer of the next county may order the expences of prosecution to be paid, as if the indictment had been tried in the county of the city. s. 8.

York is to be considered as the next county to Kingston upon Hull, and Northumberland as next to Newcastle upon Tyne. s. 9.

The act does not extend to London, Westminster, Southwark, Bristol, Chester, or Exeter, except where the court of king's bench has concurrent jurisdiction: nor to take away any other ancient privileges of corporations, who shall not be liable to attend as jurymen upon the trial of any cause or indictment in the county at large. s. 10, 11.

Also, the act is not to authorise the preferring any bill of indictment, for an offence committed within the county of any city or town, to the jury of the next county, unless recognisances be entered in to pay the extra costs. s. 12.

In a case of sole corporation, as bishop, dean, parson, &c. no chattel, either in action or possession, shall go in succession; but the executors or administrators of the bishop, parson, &c. shall have them: but it is otherwise of a corporation aggregate, as a dean and chapter, mayor and commonalty, and the like: for they in the judgment of law never die. Terms de Ley.

But though a sole corporation cannot generally take in succession goods and chattels, &c. yet it may take a fee-simple in succession, by the word successors. Co. Lit. 8, 9. 46. And aggregate corporations may take not only goods and chattels, but lands in fee-simple, without the word successors, for the reason before mentioned. 4 Inst. 249. And succession in a body politic, is an inheritance in a body private. If a lease for years be made to a bishop and his successors, it is said his executors shall have it in auter droit; for regularly no chattel can go in succession in case of a sole corporation, no more than if a lease be made to a man and his heirs, which cannot go to his heirs. Co. Lit. 46.

Grants of corporations are to be by deed, under their common seal, and are good without delivery; for the common seal gives perfection to corporation deeds. Danv. 44. And the release of a mayor of a corporation, made in his own name, is not good in law; the corporation must join and do it by their common seal. Terms de Ley.

But though a corporation cannot do an act in pais without their common seal, they may do an act upon record; and the reason is, because they are estopped by the record to say it is not their act. 1 Salk. 192.

A promise to a corporation is good without deed. 2 Lev. 252.

And a corporation may do an act in that capacity, to one of themselves in his natural capacity; and any member in his natural capacity may perform an act to the corporation in its politic capacity; and so they may sue one another, in their distinct capacities. 1 Shep. Abr. 436.

A corporation cannot sue, or appear in person, but by attorney: they cannot commit treason or felony, or be excommunicate, &c. They may not be executors, or administrators, be joint-tenants, trustees, &c. Nor shall the members of a corporation be regularly witnesses for the corporation. 10 Rep. 32. 11 Rep. 98. Co. Lit. 134. But they may be disfranchised, and then be witnesses; though not surrender by consent. Yet in some cases the judges now admit their testimony without disfranchisement, where the interest is remote. Attachment doth not lie against a corporation. Raym. 152.

Corporations may have power not only to infranchise freemen, but to disfranchise a member, and deprive him of his freedom; if he doth any act to the prejudice of the body, or contrary to his oath, &c. Though for conspiring to do any thing contrary to his duty, or for words of contempt against the chief officers, he may not be disfranchised; but he may be committed till he find sureties for his good behaviour. 11 Rep. 98. 5 Mod. 257. A corporation cannot disfranchise for breach of a by-law. 1 Lil. 331. And one wrongfully disfranchised may be restored, and have his remedy by mandamus, &c. in B. R. And a freeman of a corporation cannot be removed from his freedom or place without good cause, and a custom to remove them ad libitum is void, because the party hath a freehold therein. Cro. Jac. 540.

By 7 Geo. 3. c. 48. in companies or corporations instituted for carrying on particular trades or dealing with joint stocks, no member shall vote in general courts, unless possessed of his stock six months (except acquired by bequest, marriage, succession to intestate's estate, custom of London, or settlement); the oaths are required to be conformable to this act.

No declaration of a dividend shall be made, but at one of the half yearly or quarterly general courts, at five months distance from the last preceding declaration; and for no more than the half year. And no question for a proposed increase of dividend shall be decided, but by ballot taken three days after breaking up of the court. Ibid.

Acts of corporations.] A corporation is properly an investing the people of the place with the local government thereof, and therefore their laws shall be binding to strangers; but a fraternity is some people of a place united together in respect of a mystery and business into a company, and their laws and ordinances cannot bind strangers, for they have not a local power. Salk. 193.

And by 19 Hen. 7. c. 7. no masters and wardens, or fellowships of any mystery, or other corporation, shall make any by-laws or ordinances in diminution of the king's prerogative, or against the common profit of the people; except the same be approved by the lord chancellor, treasurer, or chief justices, &c. on pain of 40*l.*

And such bodies corporate shall not make any acts or ordinances for restraining persons to sue in the king's courts for remedy, &c. under the like penalty. Ibid.

And ordinances made by corporations, to be observed, on pain of imprisonment, or of forfeiture of goods, &c. are contrary to magna charta. 2 Inst. 47, 54.

But penalties may be inflicted by by-laws, which may be recovered by distress or action of debt: and a custom for the lord mayor and aldermen of London, to commit a citizen for not accepting of the livery, &c. was held a good custom, being for the good government of the city. 5 Mod. 320.

Corporations may not, by bond, or otherwise, restrain any apprentice, &c. from keeping shop in the corporation under the penalty of 40*l.* Stat. 28 H. 8. c. 5.

And by 33 Hen. 8. c. 27. grants, leases, and the like, by the majority of a corporation shall be valid, against any negative voice or dissent of the minority, and any by-law or oath to the contrary shall be void.

Corporations dissolved.] A corporation may be dissolved, for it is created upon a trust; and if that be broken it is forfeited. 4 Mod. 58.

Corporations are dissolved by forfeiture of their charter, misuser, &c. upon the writ quo warranto brought; by surrender, or by act of parliament; and if they neglect to choose officers, or make false elections, &c. it is a forfeiture of the corporation. 4 Rep. 77.

But by stat. 11 Geo. 1. c. 4. where the election of mayors, or other chief officers shall not be made on the days appointed by charter or usage, the corporation shall not be thereby dissolved, but they may meet and proceed to election on the day after, and the mayor or chief officer absenting, the nearest in place may hold the court.

If no election be made, or one that becomes void, the king's bench may award a mandamus, for electing, and mayors so elected shall take the oaths before the presiding officer. Ibid.

No such election shall be valid, unless as great a number be present, as required by charter. Ibid.

Mayors voluntarily absenting themselves, shall suffer six months imprisonment, and be incapacitated. Ibid.

A return shall be made to the first writ of mandamus. Ibid.

By 2 Ann. c. 20. where persons intrude into the office of mayor, &c. of a corporation, a quo warranto shall be brought against the usurpers, who shall be ousted, and fined: and none are to execute an office in a corporation for more than a year.

And by 12 Geo. 3. c. 21. any person intitled to be admitted a citizen, burgess, or freeman, of any city, or corporation, applying to the mayor or chief officer for that purpose, and giving him notice, specifying the nature of his claims; shall if such mayor or head officer shall refuse to admit such person, and a mandamus shall issue for compelling his admission, have all costs from the mayor.

Freemen shall be admitted to inspect the entries of admission, and to take copies thereof. Ibid.

Mayor, bailiff, or other head officer, denying inspection of such entries, or to give copies thereof, shall for every refusal forfeit 100*l.* if sued for within one year. Ibid.

By 32 Geo. 3. c. 58. defendants to informations, in the nature of quo warranto, for the exercise of any office or franchise in corporations, may plead the holding of it six years, or more. s. 1.

And forfeiture of the office, within six years before information, may be replied to such plea. s. 2.

The title derived under an election, is not to be affected, on account of defect of title in the person electing, if he was in the exercise of his office six years previous to the information. s. 3.

CORPSE, stealing of. If any one in taking up a dead body steals the shroud, or other apparel, it will be felony. 3 Inst. 110. 12 Rep. 113. 1 Hal. P. C. 515. But stealing the corpse itself, is a misdemeanor only, and not felony. 4 Black. Com. 236.

CORPUS CHRISTI DAY, is a feast instituted in the year 1264, in honour of the sacrament: to which also a college in Oxford is dedicated. Cowel. Blount.

CORPUS CUM CAUSA, is a writ issuing out of the chancery, to remove both the body and record, touching the cause of any man lying in execution upon a judgment for debt, into the king's bench, &c. there to lie till he have satisfied the judgment. F. N. B. 251.

CORREDIUM and CONREDIUM. See CORODY.

CORRUPTION OF BLOOD, (corruptio sanguinis) is an infection growing to the state of a man, and to his issue; and is where a person is attainted of treason or felony, by means whereof his blood is said to be corrupted, and neither his children, nor any of his blood, can be heirs to him or any other ancestor: also if he is of the nobility, or a gentleman, he and all his posterity by the attainder are rendered base and ignoble: but by pardon of the king, the children born afterwards may inherit the land of their ancestor, purchased at the time of the pardon or after; but so cannot they, who were born before the pardon. Terms de Ley.

Corruption of blood from an attainder is so high that it cannot be absolutely saved but by act of parliament; for the king's pardon doth not restore the blood so as to make the person attainted capable either of inheriting others, or being inherited himself by any one born before the pardon. 1 Inst. 391, 392. 2 Hawk. 458. A statute which saves the corruption of blood, impliedly saves the descent of the land to the heir; and it prevents the corruption of blood so far: also it saves the wife's dower, &c. But nevertheless the land shall be forfeited for the life of the offender. 3 Inst. 47. 1 Hawk. 107.

CORSELET, (Fr. in Lat. corpusculum) signifies a little body: and it was used with us for an armour to cover the body or trunk of a man, wherewith pikemen commonly set in the front and flanks of the battle were formerly armed, for the better resistance of the assaults of the enemy, and the surer guard of the soldiers placed behind, who were more slightly armed for their speedier advancing to and retreating from fire. Cowel. Blount.

CORSEPRESENT, (from the Fr. corpse present) is a word signifying a mortuary: and the reason why it was thus termed seems to be, that where a mortuary became due on the death of any man, the best or second beast was, according to custom, offered or presented to the priest, and carried with the corpse. Ibid. 4 Black. Com. 425.

CORSNED BREAD, (panis conjuratus) ordeal bread: it was a kind of superstitious trial used among the Saxons, to purge themselves of any accusation, by taking a piece of barley bread, and eating it with solemn oaths and execrations, that it might prove poison, or their last morsel, if what they asserted or denied were not punctually true. These pieces of bread were first execrated by the priest, and then offered to the suspected person to be swallowed by way of purgation: for they believed a person, if guilty, could not swallow a morsel so accursed; or if he did, it would choak him. Cowel. Blount.

CORTIS, (curtis) a court or yard before a house. Blount.

CORTULARIUM, (curtilagium) is also a yard adjoining to a country farm. Ibid.

CORUS, a certain corn-measure heaped up, (from the Hebr. cora, a hill:) eight bushels of wheat in a heap, making a quarter, are of the shape of a little hill; and probably a corus of wheat was eight bushels; for we read in Bracton, decem. coros tritici sive decem quarteria. Bract. lib. 2. c. 6. Cowel. Blount.

COSDUNA, an ancient word for custom or tribute. Mon. Angl. tom. 1. p. 562. Ibid.

COSENAGE, (from the Fr. cousinage, i. e. kindred, cousinship) a writ, now in disuse, which anciently lay for the heir where the tresail, that is, the father of the besail, or great grandfather, being seised of lands, a stranger entered and abated. F. N. B. 221.

COSENING, is an offence where any thing is done deceitfully, whether belonging to contracts or not, which cannot be properly termed by any special name. West. Symb. p. 2. sect. 68.

COSHERING. As there were many privileges inherent by right and custom, allowed in the feudal laws; so were there several grievous exactions imposed by the lords on their tenants, by a sort of prerogative or senioral authority, as to lie and feast themselves and their followers at their tenants houses, &c. which were called coshering. Spelm. of Parliaments. MS.

COSMAS, a word mentioned by Cowel and Blount for clean.

COSTARD, apple, whence costard-monger, i. e. seller of apples. Cowel. Blount.

COSTERA, coast, sea-coast. Ibid.

COSTS in general acceptation, are the expences incurred by proceedings at law or in equity, and these were not originally recoverable by the plaintiff or defendant at common law. 2 Inst. 288. Hardr. 152.

But as to the Plaintiff's costs.] By the statute of Gloucester, (6 Edw. 1.) c. 1. s. 2. it is provided, "that the demandant may recover "against the tenant the costs of his writ pur- "chased (which has been construed to extend "to the whole costs of his suit, 2 Inst. 228.) "together with the damages given by that "statute; and that this act shall hold place, "in all cases where a man recovers damages." This was the origin of costs de incremento. Gilb. Eq. Rep. 195. And hence the plaintiff has, generally speaking, a right to costs, in all cases where he was entitled to damages, antecedent to, or by the provisions of, the statute of Gloucester 10 Co. 116. a.; as in assumpsit, covenant, debt on contract, case, trespass, replevin, ejectment, &c.; or where, by a subsequent statute, double or treble damages are given, in a case where single damages were before recoverable, 2 Inst. 289. Cowp. 368.; as upon the 2 Hen. 4. c. 11. for suing in the admiralty court, 10 Co. 116. a. b. Dyer, 159. b. Carth. 287. upon the 8 Hen. 6. c. 9. for a forcible entry, 10 Co. 115. b. Co. Lit. 257. b. 2 Inst. 289. Cro. Eliz. 882. or upon the 2 & 3 W. & M. sess. 1. c. 5. for rescuing a distress for rent, Carth. 321. 1 Salk. 205. 1 Ld. Raym. 19. Skin. 555. Holt, 172. S. C. And he has also a right to costs, in all cases where a certain penalty is given by statute to the party grieved, for otherwise the remedy might prove inadequate. Cro. Car. 560. 1 Roll. Abr. 574. Skin. 363. Carth. 230. 1 Salk. 206. 1 Ld. Raym. 172. Say. Costs, 11. H. Black. 10.

But the statute of Gloucester did not extend to cases where no damages were recoverable at common law, as in scire facias, prohibition, &c. Comb. 20.; nor where double or treble damages were given by a subsequent statute, in a new case where single damages were not before recoverable, as in waste against tenant for life or years, 2 Hen. 4. 17. 9 Hen. 6. 66. b. 10 Co. 116. b. 3 Inst. 239. upon the statute of Gloucester, (6 Edw. 1.) c. 5.; for not setting out tithes, Moor, 915. Noy, 136. Hardr. 152. upon the 2 & 3 Edw. 6. c. 13.; or for driving a distress out of the hundred. 2 Inst. 289. Dyer, 177. But see Cro. Car. 560. 1 Roll. Abr. 574. upon the 1 & 2 Ph. & M. c. 12. Nor does this statute extend to popular actions, where the whole or part of a penalty is given by statute to a common informer, as, upon the 5 Eliz. c. 4. s. 31. for exercising a trade, without having served an apprenticeship; or upon the statute of usury, 12 Ann. stat. 2. c. 16. In these and such like cases, therefore, the plaintiff is not entitled to costs, unless they are expressly given him by the statute; but wherever they are so given, he is of course entitled to them. 1 Roll. Abr. 574. 1 Vent. 265. Carth. 231. 1 Salk. 206. 1 Ld. Raym. 112. Cas. Pr. C. B. 87. Barnes, 124. S. C. Comp. 366. H. Black. 10. B. N. P. 333.

Where single damages are given by a statute, subsequent to the statute of Gloucester, in a new case wherein no damages were previously recoverable, it has been doubted whether the plaintiff shall recover costs, if they are not mentioned in the statute. The rule in Pilford's case is, that he shall not, 10 Co. 116. a.; and accordingly it is holden, that he is not entitled to costs, in quare impedit, wherein damages are given by the statute of Westm. 2. (13 Edw. 1.) c. 5. s. 3. 2 Hen. 4. 17. 27 Hen. 6. 10. 10 Co. 116. a. 2 Inst. 289. 362. Barnes, 140. And see Cro. Car. 360. Carth. 231. Comp. 367, 8. But the rule in Pilfold's case is contradicted by lord Coke himself, 2 Inst. 289. who says that "this clause (respecting the statute of Gloucester's holding place, in all cases where a man recovers damages) doth extend to give costs, where damages are given to any demandant or plaintiff, in any action, by any statute made after this parliament." And the rule has been since narrowed by several modern decisions, from whence it may be collected that the plaintiff is entitled to costs in all cases where single damages are given by statute to the party grieved, although costs are not particularly mentioned in the statute. 2 Wils. 91. Barnes, 151. S. C. 5 Bur. 1723. 1 T. R. 71. But see the opinion of Aston, J. contra. Comp. 367, 8.

In several of the foregoing cases, wherein costs were not recoverable by the plaintiff at common law, they are expressly given him by statute 8 & 9 Will. 3. c. 11, by which it is enacted, that "in all actions of waste, "and actions of debt upon the statute for "not setting forth tithes, wherein the single "value or damage found by the jury shall "not exceed the sum of twenty nobles; "and in all suits upon any writ or writs of "scire facias, and suits upon prohibitions, "the plaintiff obtaining judgment, or any "award of execution, after plea pleaded, "or demurrer joined therein, shall likewise "recover his costs of suit; and if the "plaintiff shall become nonsuit, or suffer "a discontinuance, or a verdict shall pass "against him, the defendant shall recover "his costs, and have execution for the same "by capias ad satisfaciendum, fieri facias, "or elegit."

Upon this statute there have been the following determinations:

In an action of debt for the penalty of the statute 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 13, for not setting out tithes, with a count for the single value, after a demurrer to the declaration the parties submitted to arbitration, and the arbitrator awarded the single value to less than 20 nobles (6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*), the court held that the plaintiff was not entitled to costs on the counts for the penalty, under the statute 8 & 9 Wil. 3. c. 11, the value not having been found by the jury; but they allowed him to have the costs taxed on the count for the single value. H. Black. 107. Barnes 150.

In scire facias the plaintiff is not entitled to costs unless the defendant has appeared and pleaded: and no costs are payable by the plaintiff on moving to quash his own writ before plea. Cas. Pr. C. B. 74. nor after a plea in abatement. 1 Stra. 638.

In prohibition the rule is that the plaintiff succeeding after a plea pleaded, or demurrer joined, ought to have his costs from the time of the suggestion, or first motion for a prohibition, and all costs incident and subsequent thereto. Pr. Cas. C. B. 11. 1 Str. 82. 2 Str. 1062. And where the defendant pleaded nothing to the merits, but only that he did not proceed in the spiritual court after the prohibition, the court held this not to be a plea within the statute, but a mere sham plea; and ordered the defendant to pay the plaintiff's costs of the proceedings in prohibition. Barnes 148. Where the defendant in prohibition lets judgment go by default, the plaintiff is entitled by the common law to a writ, to inquire of his damages for the contempt in proceeding after the prohibition delivered; and of consequence, by the statute of Gloucester, to his costs. Cas. Pr. B. C. 20. In this case, however, the plaintiff is only entitled to costs from the time that the rule for a prohibition was made absolute, as the defendant could not possibly be in contempt before. Say. Costs, 137. And where the plaintiff was nonsuited, it was holden that the defendant ought only to have the costs of the nonsuit, and not what were incurred by opposing the rule, to show cause why the writ of prohibition should not be granted. Say. Costs 21. If judgment be given for the plaintiff, as to part of what is in issue, he is entitled to costs, although a consultation be granted as to the residue. 2 Str. 1062, 3. And in like manner, if the defendant prevail as to part, he is entitled to costs. Barnes 138, 139. But it seems that if the defendant succeed upon demurrer he is not entitled to costs, Brymer and Atkyns, H. 29 Geo. 3. C. B. This being a casus omissus out of the statute, there is a proviso in the statute, sec. 5, that it shall not extend to executors or administrators; and hence it has been determined that in scire facias, 1 Str. 188. or prohibition, Cas. Pr. C B. 158. Pr. Reg. 118. Barnes 127. 129. S. C. they are not liable when plaintiffs, to the payment of costs.

The plaintiff's general right to costs being thus settled and established upon the footing of the statute of Gloucester, has been since altered, restrained, and modified by subsequent statutes. The first statute that restrained the plaintiff's right to costs, was the 43 Eliz. c. 6, (extended to Wales, and the counties palatine, by the 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 9.) by which it is enacted, "that if in "any personal action, to be brought in any "of her majesty's courts of Westminster, "not being for any title or interest of lands, "nor concerning the freehold or inheritance "of any lands, nor for any battery, it shall "appear to the judges of the same court, "and be so signified by the justices before "whom the same shall be tried, that the "debt or damages to be recovered therein "shall not amount to the sum of 40*s.* that "in every such case the judges or justices "before whom such action shall be pursued "shall not award to the plaintiff any more "costs than the sum of the debt or damages "so recovered shall amount to, but less at "their discretion." The intention of this statute was to confine trifling actions to inferior courts. Gilb. Eq. Rep. 196. And a certificate may be granted upon it at any time after the trial of the cause. Say. Costs, 18. 3 T. R. 38. (d) The first instance of a certificate being granted upon this statute was in the case of White v. Smith, E. 17 G. 2. wherein Willes, ch. jus. certified in an action for taking sand, 2 Str. 1232. 1 Wils. 93. S. C. 3 Wils. 325. And since that time certificates have been not unfrequent. Say. Rep. 250. 2 Wils. 258. 3 T. R. 37.

By 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, it is enacted, that "in all actions upon the case for slanderous "words, to be sued or prosecuted in any "of the courts of record at Westminster, "or in any court whatsoever that hath power "to hold plea of the same, if the jury upon "the trial of the issue in such action, or "the jury that shall inquire of the damages, "do find or assess the damages under 40*s.* "then the plaintiff or plaintiffs in such ac"tion shall have and recover only so much "costs as the damages so given or as"sessed amount unto, without any further "increase of the same, any law, statute, or "usage to the contrary notwithstanding." The operation of this statute is confined to actions for slanderous words spoken of the person, and does not extend to actions for slander of title, &c. Cro. Car. 141. 163. 1 Str. 645. wherein the special damage is the gist of the action: neither, for the same reason, does it extend to an action for special damage in consequence of words not in themselves actionable, 2 Ld. Raym. 831. 1 Salk. 206. 7 Mod. 129, S. C. Barnes 135. Though where the words are actionable in themselves a special damage will not take the case out of the statute. 2 Ld. Raym. 15 8. 2 Str. 936. S. C. Barnes 132. 142. 3 Bur. 1688. 2 Black. Rep. 1062. Cas. Pr. C. B. 137. contra. This statute applies to a writ of inquiry as well as a trial, where the damages are under 40*s.* 2 Str. 934; and a justification found for the plaintiff will not in that event entitle him to full costs. Barnes 128.

But the principal statute made for restraining the plaintiff's right to costs is the 22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 9, (extended to Wales and the counties palatine, by the 11 & 12 Will. 3, c. 9.) by which it is enacted, that "in all actions of trespass, assault and bat"tery, and other personal actions, wherein "the judge at the trial of the cause shall "not find and certify under his hand, upon "the back of the record, that an assault and "battery was sufficiently proved by the "plaintiff against the defendant, or that the "freehold or title of the land mentioned in "the plaintiff's declaration was chiefly in "question, the plaintiff, in case the jury "shall find the damages to be under the "value of 40*s.* shall not recover or obtain "more costs of suit than the damages so "found shall amount unto." It seems to have been the intention of this statute that the plaintiff shall have no more costs than damages in any personal action whatsoever, if the damages be under 40*s.* except in cases of battery or freehold, and not even in these without a certificate. And this construction was adopted in some of the first cases that arose upon the statute; 3 Keb. 121. 247. But a different construction soon prevailed; and it is now settled that the statute is confined to actions of assault and battery, and actions for local trespasses, wherein it is possible for the judge to certify that the freehold or title of the land was chiefly in question. T. Raym. 487. T. Jon. 232. 2 Show. 258. S.C. 3 Mod. 39. 1 Salk. 208. 1 Str. 577. Gilb. Eq. Rep. 195. Barnes 134. 3 Wils. 322. S. C. H. Black. 294. Therefore it does not extend to actions of debt, covenant, assumpsit, trover, or the like; or to actions for a mere assault; or for criminal conversation, or battery of the plaintiff's servant, per quod consortium vel servitium amisit. 3 Keb. 31. 1 Salk. 208. 3 T. R. 391. 3 Wils. 319. 3 Keb. 184. 1 Salk. 208. 1 Stra. 192.

In actions for local trespasses the statute applies wherever an injury is done to the freehold. 2 Vent. 48. Com. Rep. 19. 1 Salk. 208. 1 Stra. 577. 633. 645. Gilb. Eq. Rep. 195. 2 Stra. 726. 2 Ld. Raym. 1444. or to any thing growing upon, B. N. P. 330. Barnes, 144, or affixed, B. N. P. 330. 1 Stra. 633. Cas. Pr. C. B. 86. Barnes, 121. to, the freehold: and in a modern case it was carried still farther: it was an action of trespass quare clausum fregit: the first count stated that the defendants broke and entered the close of the plaintiffs, and the grass of the plaintiffs there then growing, with their feet in walking trod down, spoiled, and consumed; and dug up and got divers large quantities of turf, peat, sods, heath, stones, soil and earth of the plaintiffs in and upon the place in which, &c. and took and carried away the same, and converted and disposed of the same to their own use. On the trial a verdict was found for the plaintiffs on the general issue, with 1*s.* damages. The question was, whether the plaintiffs were entitled to any more costs than damages under the statute 22 and 23 Car. 2, c. 9. And Lord Mansfield said that on a consultation with all the judges they were all of opinion that this case was within the statute, and that the plaintiffs ought to have no more costs than damages. That what had been called an asportavit in this declaration was a mode or qualification of the injury done to the land. The trespass was laid to have been committed on the land by digging, &c. and the asportavit as part of the same act; and on the trial of the issue the freehold certainly might have come in question. This is clearly distinguishable from an asportavit of personal property, where the freehold cannot come in question, and which therefore is not within the act. Thus after trees are cut down, and thereby severed from the freehold, if a trespasser comes and carries them away, that case is not within the statute, because the freehold cannot come in question; here it might. Doug. 779.

Where an injury is done to a personal chattel it is not within the statute. 3 Keb. 389. 469. T. Jon. 232. 1 Salk. 208. 1 Stra. 534. Gilb. Eq. Rep. 197. S. C. nor where an injury to a personal chattel is laid in the same declaration with an assault and battery, or local trespass. 3 Mod. 39. 1 Salk. 208. 1 Stra. 192. 551. Gilb. Eq. Rep. 197. S. C. Barnes, 119, 120. 134. 3 Wils. 322. S. C. 2 Stra. 1130. Say. Costs, 39. And consequently in these cases, though the damages be under 40*s.* the plaintiff is entitled to full costs, without a certificate. But then it must be a substantive and independent injury; for where it is laid, or proved, merely in aggravation of damages, as a mode or qualification of the assault and battery, or local trespass, 1 Stra. 624. Ante, 22. or there is a verdict for the defendant, upon that part of the declaration which charges him with an injury to a personal chattel, 2 Vent. 180. 125. Cas. Pr. C. B. 118. it is within the statute. So where a laceravit, or tearing of the plaintiff's clothes, is laid in the declaration, Say. Rep. 91. 1 T. R. 655. H. Black. 291, or found by the jury to be merely in consequence of an assault and battery, the plaintiff, recovering less than 40*s.* damages, is not entitled to full costs without a certificate. Ibid. 24.

The certificate required by this statute need not, it seems, be granted at the trial of the cause, 11 Mod. 198. And where the defendant lets judgment go by default, B. N. P. 329, or justifies the assault and battery, or pleads in such a manner as to bring the freehold or title of the land in question, on the face of the record, 1 Ld. Raym. 76. 2 Salk. 665. S. C. a certificate is holden to be unnecessary; but where to a plea of a right of way there is a replication of extra viam, if the judge do not certify, the plaintiff is not entitled to more costs than damages. Tidd, 82. So where in an action for an assault and battery the defendant justifies the assault only, 3 T. R. 391, or an assault only is certified by the judge, 2 Lev. 108, the plaintiff recovering less than 40*s.* is not entitled to more costs than damages; though in the latter case to entitle him to full costs the judge may certify on the 8 and 9 Wil. 3. c. 11, that the assault was wilful and malicious. 3 Wils. 326. The award of an arbitrator is not tantamount to a judge's certificate under the 22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 9. 3 T. R. 138.

Where the plea or issue, though special, is collateral to the question of freehold or title to the land, as where the defendant justifies an entry as bailiff under process, and issue is joined upon the door's being shut, 2 Barnard. K. B. 277, or where upon a plea of a distress for rent there is an issue on the defendant's being bailiff, Say. Rep. 250, a certificate is necessary to entitle the plaintiff to full costs; and it is also necessary, where the plaintiff recovers less than 40*s.* damages, on a plea of not guilty to a new assignment. Barnes, 124. 129. S. C. Id. 149. B. N. P. 330. But where the plaintiff is entitled to costs upon the new assignment he is entitled to the costs of all the previous pleadings. 1 T. R. 636.

None of the statutes made for restraining the plaintiff's right to costs extend to actions brought in an inferior court, and removed by the defendant into a superior one, 2 Lev. 124. 4 Mod. 378, 379. 1 Ld. Raym. 395. Cas. Pr. C. B. 45. (a): and it has been holden that the 21 Jac. 1. c. 16, 1 Salk. 207, and the 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 9, Cas. Pr. C. B. 45, only restrain the court from awarding more costs than damages; but the jury not being restrained thereby may give what costs they please.

The restraint put upon the plaintiff's general right to costs, by the 22 & 23 Car. 2 c. 9, has been since partly taken off, by 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 23. s. 10, which enacted that "if any inferior tradesman, apprentice, or other dissolute person shall presume to hunt, hawk, fish, or fowl, (unless in company with the master of such apprentice, duly qualified by law), such person shall be subject to the penalties of this act, and shall or may be sued or prosecuted for his wilful trespass, in such his coming on any person's land; and if found guilty thereof, the plaintiff shall not only recover his damages thereby sustained, but his full costs of suit; any former law notwithstanding. It has been holden that a clothier is an in-inferior tradesman, within the meaning of this statute; and it is said that the words "inferior tradesmen," extend to every tradesman who is not qualified to kill game. Barnes. 125, but this was doubted in a subsequent case, 2 Wils. 70. Say. Costs. 54. S. C. wherein the judges where divided in opinion, upon the question, whether a surgeon and apothecary should be considered as an inferior tradesman.

So, by the 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11, s. 4, for the preventing of wilful and malicious trespasses, it is enacted, "that in all actions of trespass, to be commenced or prosecuted in any of his majesty's courts of record at Westminster, wherein at the trial of the cause it shall appear, and be certified by the judge under his hand, upon the back of the record, that the trespass, upon which any defendant shall be found guilty, was wilful and malicious, the plaintiff shall recover not only his damages, but his full costs of suit; the certificate required by this statute, need not be granted at the trial of the cause; 1 T. R. 636. 2 Wils. 21. Doug. Oct. 108, and it is said that the statute extends to every trespass, that is not accidental as well as trifling. 6 Mod. 153.

In the common pleas, where the declaration consists of several counts, and the plaintiff succeeds upon any one of them, he is entitled to the costs of the whole declaration; B. N. P. 335. 2 Black. Rep. 1199, though the defendant succeed upon the other counts. But it is otherwise in the king's bench; for there, neither party is allowed costs, as to those counts, the issues upon which are found for the defendant. Say. Costs. 212. Dougl. Oct. 677. 1 Wils. 331. In the latter court, where the plaintiff's declaration consisted of two counts, to one of which the defendant pleaded the general issue, which was found for the plaintiff, and to the other a justification, to which the plaintiff demurred, and judgment was thereupon given for the defendant; the court agreed, that the defendant could have no costs upon the demurrer. Say. Costs. 211. 2 Bur. 1232. But if there be two distinct causes of action, in two separate counts, and as to one the defendant suffers judgment to go by default, and as to the other takes issue, and obtains a verdict, he is entitled to judgment for his costs on the latter counts, notwithstanding the plaintiff is entitled to judgment and costs on the first count. 3 T. R. 634.

By the statute for the amendment of the law, (4 Ann. c. 16. s. 4, 5), it is enacted that "it shall be lawful for any defendant or tenant in any action or suit, or for any plaintiff in replevin, in any court of record, with the leave of the same court, to plead as many several matters thereto, as he shall think necessary for his defence."

"But if any such matter shall, upon a demurrer joined be judged insufficient, costs shall be given at the discretion of the court, or if a verdict shall be found, upon any issue in the said cause, for the plaintiff or demandant, costs shall be also given in like manner, unless the judge who tried the said issue, shall certify that the said defendant or tenant, or plaintiff in replevin, had a probable cause to plead such matter, which upon the said issue shall be found against him."

The certificate upon this statute is not required to be made in court, at the trial of the cause, Barnes. 141; and where the judge refuses to grant it, the court have not a discretionary power, whether they will allow the defendant any costs at all; but are bound by the statute to allow him some costs, though the quantum is left to their discretion. Barnes. 140. 2 T. R. 394, 5. The intention of the legislature was, that if there be several matters pleaded, some of which are found for the plaintiff, he shall be entitled to the costs of those, Sayer. 223; notwithstanding other matters are found for the defendant, which entitle him to judgment upon the whole record; unless the judge before whom the cause was tried, shall certify that the defendant had a probable cause to plead the matters which are found against him.

Thus in trespass, the defendant pleaded not guilty and several justifications; upon the trial, the plaintiff not proving his possession of the locus in quo, the defendant had a verdict; and by direction of Denison, J. the verdict was entered upon the general issue only; upon which there was a motion for a venire de novo; but the court refused the motion; saying the verdict was complete, and determined the cause; that the plaintiff was not entitled to damages; though they said, he might have insisted to have a verdict entered on the other issues, for the sake of costs, which he would be entitled to, unless the judge certified, that the defendant had probable cause to plead such plea. B. N. P. 335. But where the defendant in trespass in C. B. pleaded three different justifications, to three different counts, and on issue joined, had a verdict for him on two, and a verdict against him on the third; on motion this was holden not to be a case within the act, and that the plaintiff was entitled to costs at common law, on the whole declaration. B. N. P. 335.

Where the defendant pleads not guilty, and a justification, to which the plaintiff demurs, and the plaintiff has judgment on the demurrer, but is nonsuited on the plea of not guilty, he shall nevertheless be allowed the costs of the demurrer, which shall be deducted out of the costs allowed to the defendant. Barnes. 136. And if one of several pleas, pleaded by defendant, be adjudged bad on a demurrer to plaintiff's replication, the plaintiff is entitled to have the costs of those pleadings deducted, from the costs taxed for the defendant upon the postea, if afterwards upon the trial of the issues joined on the other pleas, the defendant should have a verdict; even though it should appear on the whole of the record, that the plaintiff had no cause of action. 2 T. R. 391. But if the plaintiff take issue on several pleas, one of which is insufficient in law, and has a verdict on all the issues, except that joined on the insufficient plea, which is found for the defendant, and afterwards judgment is entered for the plaintiff, still he shall not be allowed any costs, upon issue found for the defendant. 1 T. R. 266. Barnes. 133. And it has been resolved, at a meeting of all the judges, that if there be a certificate upon the 43 Eliz. the plaintiff shall not have the costs of any plea, pleaded with leave of the court; although the issue thereupon joined be found for him, and the judge have not certified, that the defendant had a probable cause for pleading the matter therein pleaded. Say. Rep. 260.

In crim. con. the defendant pleaded two pleas, viz. not guilty, and not guilty within six years; on the former, the plaintiff joined issue, and obtained a verdict, but to the latter there was a demurrer, and judgment against him; and it was holden, that the defendant should have the costs of the demurrer, but upon the trial, there should be no costs on either side. 2 Bur. 753. 2 Wils. 85. S. C.

The authority of this case, however, seems to be questionable, as to the costs of the trial, from a similar one that was differently determined in the court of common pleas, Barnes. 141. as well as from the reasoning that prevailed in several of the foregoing cases. Tidd. 35.

The avowant or defendant in replevin, though not within the words is plainly within the meaning of the statute, 4 Ann. c. 16. And accordingly, where some issues in replevin are found for the plaintiff, which entitle him to judgment, and some for the defendant, the latter must be allowed the costs of the issues found for him, out of the general costs of the verdict; unless the judge certify, that the plaintiff had a probable cause for pleading the matters, on which those issues are joined. 2 T. R. 235, And the general rule is said to be this, where several matters are pleaded by the plaintiff, some of which are found for him, and others for the defendant, so that the plaintiff is entitled to judgment; if the judge who tried the cause certify, that there was a probable cause for pleading those pleas, the master is not to deduct the costs of the issues so found for the defendant, but if there be no certificate, the defendant is entitled to have those costs deducted for him. 2 T. R. 237, 141, 144, 146. Doug. Oct. 708, 9.

Defendant's Costs.] No costs were recoverable by a defendant at common law. Tidd. 2, and the reason seems to be that if the plaintiff failed in his suit, he was amerced to the king pro falso clamore, which was thought to be a sufficient punishment, without subjecting him to the payment of costs. The first instance of costs being given to a defendant, was in a writ of right of ward, by the statute of Marlberge. 52 Hen. 3. c. 6. Afterwards costs were given to the defendant in error, by the 3 Hen. 7. c. 10; and in replevin, by the 7 Hen. 8. c. 4, and 21 Hen. 8. c. 19, &c. But in one of these cases, the defendant is to be considered as an actor; and in the other of them, the provision is virtually for the benefit of the plaintiff in the original action. Say. Costs. 70.

In error, brought by the defendant before execution, Cro. Jac. 636; or by the plaintiff upon a judgment for the defendant, if the judgment be affirmed, the writ of error discontinued, or the plaintiff in error nonsuited, the defendant in error is entitled to costs, by 3 Hen. 7. c. 10, and 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11. s. 2; upon the former of which statutes it has been holden, that costs are recoverable in error, for the delay of execution, although none were recoverable in the original action. Dyer. 77. Cro. Eliz. 617. 659. 5 Co. 101. S. C. Cro. Car. 145. 1 Str. 262. 2 Str. 1084. By the 13 Car. 2. stat. 2. c. 2. s. 10, if the judgment be affirmed after verdict, the plaintiff shall pay to the defendant in error his double costs. And by the 4 Ann. c. 16. s. 25, for preventing vexation, from suing out defective writs of error, it is enacted, that "upon the quashing of any writ of error, for variance from the original record, or other defect, the defendant shall recover against the plaintiff in error his costs, as he should have had, if the judgment had been affirmed, and to be recovered in the same manner." 2 Str. 834. Cas. Temp. Hardw. 197. Which costs include those of the motion, for quashing the writ of error, 2 Ld. Raym. 1403. 1 Str. 606. 8 Mod. 316. And though no costs were recoverable in the original action, they are payable, on quashing a writ of error. 1 Str. 262. But where the defendant in error enters continuances, to defeat the writ of error, the plaintiff in error is not liable to costs on quashing it. 1 Str. 139. 2 Str. 834. Barnes, 250. And none of the statutes before mentioned give costs, upon the reversal of a judgment. 1 Str. 617.

In replevin, or second deliverance, the defendant making avowry, cognizance, or justification, for rents, customs, or services, or for damage feasant, is entitled to costs by the 7 Hen. 8. c. 4, and 21 Hen. 8. c. 19. s. 3, if the avowry, cognizance, or justification be found for him, or the plaintiff be nonsuit, or otherwise barred; which statutes extend to avowries, &c. made by an executor, 2 Rol. Rep. 437; or for an estray, Cro. Eliz. 330; and as it should seem, for an amercement by court leet. Cro. Jac. 520. Cro. Eliz. 300; but not to pleas of prisel en auter lieu, upon which the writ is abated. Com. Rep. 122; or to pleas of property in the thing distrained. Hardr. 153. By the 17 Car. 2. c. 7. s. 2, the defendant obtaining judgment thereon, for the arrearages of rent, or value of the goods distrained is also entitled to his full costs of suit. And by the 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. s. 22, if the defendant avow, or make cognizance, according to that statute, upon a distress for rent, relief, heriot, or other service, and the plaintiff be nonsuit, discontinue his action, or have judgment against him, the defendant shall recover double costs of suit. But this latter statute does not extend to a seizure for a heriot custom. Barnes. 148.

At length by the statute 23 Hen. 8. c. 15, s. 1, it was enacted, that "in trespass upon the statute 5 Rich. 2, debt, covenant, detinue, account, trespass on the case, or upon any statute for an offence or wrong personal, immediately supposed to be done to the plaintiff, if the plaintiff, after the appearance of the defendant be nonsuited, or a verdict pass against him, the defendant shall have judgment to recover his costs against the plaintiff, to be assessed and taxed by the discretion of the judge or judges of the court, where such action shall be commenced or sued; and shall have such process and execution, for the recovery of the same against the plaintiff, as the plaintiff should or might have had against the defendant, in case judgment had been given for the plaintiff."

But by s. 2. of the same statute, it is provided that "every poor person, being plaintiff in any such action, who at the commencement of his suit shall be admitted, by the discretion of the judge or judges where the action is pursued, to have his process counsel of charity, without paying money or fee for the same, shall not be compelled to pay any costs, by virtue of this statute; but shall suffer other punishments, as by the discretion of the justices, before whom the suit shall depend, shall be thought reasonable."

Executors and administrators are not particularly excepted out of the statute 23 Hen. 8. c. 16, yet as that statute only relates to contracts made with, or wrongs done to the plaintiff, 2 Str. 1107; it has been uniformly holden, 2 Cro. Eliz. 503. Cro. Jac. 229. 2 Bulst. 261. 1 Salk. 207, 314. 3 Bur. 1586. Say. Costs. 97; that they are not liable to costs, upon a nonsuit or verdict, where they necessarily sue in their representative character, and cannot bring the action in their own right; as upon a contract entered into with the testator or intestate, T. Jon. 47. 2 Ld. Raym. 1414. 1 Str. 682. S. C. Cas. Pr. C. B. 157. Pr. Reg. 118. S. C. Barnes. 141; or for a wrong done in his lifetime, Barnes. 129. But where the cause of action arises after the death of the testator or intestate, and the plaintiff may sue thereon, in his own right, he shall not be excused from the payment of costs, though he bring the action as executor or administrator; as upon a contract express or implied, 6 Mod. 91, 181. 1 Salk. 207. S. C. 1 Ld. Raym. 436. 1 Str. 682. Barnes. 119. 2 Str. 1106. 4 T. R. 277; or in trover for a conversion, after the death of the testator or intestate. Com. Rep. 162. Cas. Pr. C. B. 61. Barnes. 132. Cas. Temp. Hardw. 204. But an executor or administrator is liable to costs, upon a judgment of non pros, Cas. Pr. C. B. 14. 157, 8. 3 Bur. 1585; and where he has knowingly brought a wrong action, or otherwise been guilty of a wilful default, he shall pay costs upon a discontinuance, Cas. Pr. C. B. 79. 3 Bur. 1451. 1 Black. Rep. 451. S. C.; or for not proceeding to trial according to notice, Cas. Pr. C. B. 158. 3 Bur. 1585; but otherwise he is not liable to costs, in either of these cases, 2 Str. 877. Barnes. 133. 4 Bur. 1927. Nor where he merely sues en auter droit, is he liable to costs, upon a judgment as in case of a nonsuit. 4 Bur. 1928.

The stat. 23 Hen. 8. c. 15, only relates to cases where the plaintiff is nonsuited, or has a verdict against him. But by stat. 8 Eliz. c. 2, "upon process issuing out of the court of king's bench, if the plaintiff do not declare in three days after bail put in, or if after declaration he do not prosecute his suit with effect, but willingly suffer the same to be delayed or discontinued, or he be nonsuited therein, the judges by their discretions, shall award to the defendant his costs, damages, and charges in that behalf sustained." This statute does not extend, any more than the former to actions brought by executors and administrators, in their representative character. Cro. Eliz. 69. Cro. Jac. 361. But if the plaintiff enter a nolle prosequi, the defendant is entitled to costs upon this statute. 3 T. R. 511.

The plaintiff is not entitled to costs in a popular action, for the whole or part of a penalty, given by statute to a common informer, unless they are expressly given him by the statute. Tidd. 47. Nor was the defendant entitled to costs, in such an action, until the statute 18 Eliz. c. 5. s. 3, (made perpetual by the 27 Eliz. c. 10), by which it is enacted, that "if any common informer shall willingly delay his suit, or shall discontinue or be nonsuit, or shall have the matter pass against him therein by verdict or judgment in law, the said informer shall pay to the defendant his costs, charges, and damages, to be assigned by the court, in which the suit shall be attempted;" with a proviso, that "this act shall not extend to any officer who in respect of his office, has heretofore usually sued upon penal laws; nor to any officer suing only for matters concerning his office." 2 Ld. Raym. 1333. B. N. P. 334. This law extends to actions brought upon a subsequent statute, or one that is repealed, 1 Wils. 177. Hutt. 35,6. 2 Keb. 106; and also to actions qui tam, for part of a penalty, as well as where the whole is given to a common informer, Cowp. 366; but it does not extend to actions, brought by the party grieved, upon a remedial statute. 1 And. 116. 2 Leon. 116. 4 Leon. 55. Cro. El. 177. Hutt. 22. 1 Salk. 30.

There being still many cases in which the defendant was not aided by the provisions of the before mentioned statutes, 2 Leon. 9. 3 Leon. 92. B. N. P. 334; it was enacted by the statute 4 Jac. 1. c. 3, that "if any person shall commence in any court, any action of trespass, ejectione firmæ, or any other action whatsoever, wherein the plaintiff or demandant might have costs, in case judgment should be given for him, and the plaintiff shall be nonsuited therein, after the appearance of the defendant, or a verdict shall pass against him by lawful trial, that then the defendant in every such action, shall have judgment to recover his costs against the plaintiff or demandant, to be assessed and levied in like manner as upon the 23 Hen. 8. c. 15." By this statute the defendant is entitled to costs, on a nonsuit or verdict, in all cases where the plaintiff would have been entitled to them, if he had obtained judgment. And though the declaration be insufficient, so that the plaintiff could not have had costs thereon, the defendant is nevertheless entitled to costs, for the unjust vexation. Moor. 625. 1 Bulst. 189. 3 Bulst. 248. Hob. 219. Hutt. 16 S. C. Cro. Car. 175. But see Cro. Jac. 158,9. semb. contra.

By the 13 Car. 2. stat. 2. c. 2. s. 3, it is enacted, that "upon an appearance entered for the defendant by attorney, of the term wherein the process is returnable, unless the plaintiff shall put into the court, from whence the process issued, his bill or declaration against the defendant, in some personal action or ejectment of farm, before the end of the term next following after appearance, a nonsuit for want of a declaration may be entered against him; and the defendant shall have judgment to recover costs against the plaintiff to be taxed and levied in like manner as upon the 23 Hen. 8. c. 15."

And still further to discourage the bringing of frivolous and vexatious actions, it is enacted by the statute 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11, s. 2, that "if any person shall commence or prosecute any action, in any court of record wherein upon demurrer, either by plaintiff or defendant, demandant or tenant, judgment shall be given by the court against the plaintiff or defendant, the demandant or tenant shall have judgment to recover his costs, and have execution for the same by capias ad satisfaciendum, fieri facias, or elegit." This statute does not extend to demurrers to pleas in abatement, 1 Ld. Raym. 337. 1 Salk. 194. 12 Mod. 195. Comb. 482. S. C. 2 Ld. Raym. 992. 1 Salk. 194. 6 Mod. 88. S. C.; nor in any action, wherein the defendant would not have been entitled to costs upon a nonsuit or verdict, Cas. Pr. C. B. 25.

Where there are several defendants, who succeed in the action, the plaintiff may pay costs to which of them he pleases, 1 Str. 516. 2 Str. 1203; and if they fail, each of them is answerable for the whole costs. Thus, where an ejectment was brought against several defendants, who defended severally, and at the assizes one of them confessed lease, entry, and ouster, and had a verdict against him, but the others did not confess; the court upon application said, the officer must tax the same costs against all the defendants; and that if the plaintiff, after he had satisfaction against one should take out execution against another, the latter might apply to the court. B. N. P. 335, 6.

Where one of several defendants lets judgment go by default, and the other pleads a plea which goes to the whole, and shews that the plaintiff had no cause of action, if this plea be found for the defendant who pleaded it, he shall have costs; and being an absolute bar, the other defendant shall have the benefit of it, and shall not pay costs to the plaintiff. Co. Lit. 125. Cro. Jac. 134. 1 Lev. 63. 1 Sid. 76. 1 Keb. 284. S. C. 2 Ld. Raym. 1372. 1 Str. 610. 8 Mod. 217. C. C. Cas. Pr. C. B. 107. Pr. Reg. 102. S. C.

But where the plea does not go to the whole, but is merely in discharge of the party pleading it, there the other party shall not have the benefit of it; but shall pay costs, though it be found against the plaintiff. Ibid. 1 Wils. 89. 3 T. R. 656.

Before the statute 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11, if one of several defendants was acquitted, he was not entitled to his costs; the courts construing the former acts to relate only to the case of a total acquittal of all the defendants. 2 Str. 1005. And see 1 Salk. 194. This being found inconvenient, it was enacted by the same statute, s. 1, that "where several persons shall be made defendants, to any action of trespass, assault, false imprisonment, or ejectione firmæ, and any one or more of them shall be, upon the trial thereof acquitted by verdict, every person so acquitted shall recover his costs of suit, in like manner as if the verdict had been given against the plaintiff, and acquitted all the defendants; unless the judge, before whom the cause is tried, shall immediately after the trial thereof, in open court certify upon the record under his hand that there was a reasonable cause for making such person a defendant." This statute is confined to the particular actions therein mentioned; and does not extend to an action of trespass upon the case, 2 Str. 1005; nor consequently to an action of trover, Barnes. 139; neither does it extend to an action of replevin. 3 Bur. 1284. 1 Black. Rep. 355. S. C.

When a feigned issue is ordered by a court of law, whether it be in a civil or criminal proceeding, the costs always follow the verdict, and must be paid to the party obtaining it. 1 Lil. P. R. 344. Barnes. 130. 1 Wils. 261. 331. Say. Rep. 24. 1 Wils. 324.

But when a feigned issue is ordered by a court of equity, the costs do not follow the verdict as a matter of course; but the finding of the jury is returned back to the court which ordered it, and the costs there are in the discretion of the court. Ibid. Where the issue is ordered by a court of law, on a rule for an information, Say. Rep. 229. 1 Bur. 605, or motion for an attachment, Say. Rep. 253, the costs of the original rule, or motion, do not in general follow the verdict, but only the costs of the feigned issue; which costs are to be reckoned from the time when the feigned issue was first ordered and agreed to, 1 Bur. 604. Yet where it was ordered by the consent-rule that the costs should abide the event of the issue, the court directed the whole costs to be paid under it. 2 Bur. 1021.

Double and treble Costs.] Where the plaintiff recovers single damages he is only entitled to single costs, unless more be expressly given him by the statute. But if double or treble damages be given by statute, in a case wherein single damages were before recoverable, the plaintiff is entitled to double or treble costs, although the statute be silent respecting them, Say. Costs, 228; as in an action upon the 2 Hen. 4, c. 11, for suing in the Admiralty court, &c. (ante.)

In some cases double and treble costs are expressly given to the plaintiff, as upon the game-laws by the statute 2 Geo. 3, c. 19, s. 5; and wherever a plaintiff is entitled to double or treble costs, the costs given by the court de incremento are to be doubled or trebled, as well as those given by the jury. 2 Leon. 52. Cro. Eliz. 582. 3 Lev. 351. Carth. 297. 321. 2 Stra. 1048. 1 T. R. 252.

But double or treble costs are not to be understood to mean, according to their literal import, twice or thrice the amount of single costs; for where a statute gives DOUBLE costs they are calculated thus: 1, the common costs, and then half the common costs. If TREBLE costs, 1st, the common costs; 2d, half of these, and then half of the latter. Table of Costs in principio.

Double or treble costs are also in some cases expressly given to the defendant, as in actions against parish officers, by 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 19; against justices of the peace, constables, &c. by the 7 Jac. 1, c. 5, for distresses for rents and services; by the 11 Geo. 2, c. 19. s. 21, 22; and against officers of the excise or customs by 23 Geo. 3. c. 70, s. 34, and 24 Geo. 3, sess. 2, c. 47. s. 35. In these and such like cases, where it does not appear on the face of the record that the defendant is entitled to the benefit of the act, (as where he pleads the general issue) and there is no particular mode appointed for recovery of the costs, the proper mode, after a nonsuit or verdict for the defendant is to apply to the court, upon an affidavit of the facts, for leave to enter a suggestion on the roll. 1 Stra. 49, 50. Cas. Pr. C. B. 16. Cas. Temp. Hardw. 125. Id. 138. 2 Stra. 1021. S. C. Say. Rep. 214. 3 Wils. 442. And it cannot be done by rule of court, 1 Stra. 50, unless where the plaintiff moves for leave to discontinue on payment of costs; in which case the court may make it part of the rule that he shall pay double or treble costs. 2 Stra. 974. Cas. Temp. Hardw. 125. But where a particular mode is appointed by statute for the recovery of double or treble costs, as by the certificate of the judge who tried the cause on the 7 Jac. 1. c. 5, there that particular mode must be observed, 2 Vent. 45. Doug. oct. 307, 308: so that if the judge certify there is no need of a suggestion; and if he do not it is useless, except where judgment goes by default. Cas. Temp. Hardw. 138, 139.

Taxing of costs.] Costs are taxed as between party and party, by the master in the king's bench, or by one of the prothonotaries in the common pleas, upon a bill made out by the attorney for the party entitled, or more frequently without a bill, upon a view of the proceedings; and if there have been any extra expenses which do not appear on the face of the proceedings, there should be an affidavit made of such expenses, to warrant the allowance of them, which is called an affidavit of increased costs. Imp. K. B. 348.

It is usual among fair practisers to give notice to the opposite attorney of the time when the costs are intended to be taxed, but in order to enforce it there must be a rule to be present at taxing costs, which rule is obtained from the clerk of the rules in the king's bench, or one of the secondaries in the common pleas, and should be duly served; after which, if the costs are taxed without notice, the taxation is irregular, and the attorney liable to an attachment. Impey, 348.

The means of recovering costs as between party and party, are by action or execution, upon a judgment obtained for them, or by attachment, upon a rule of court. Thus in ejectment, where there is a verdict and judgment against the tenant, an action may be brought, or execution taken out thereon for the costs, Run. Eject. 140, 141; but where the plaintiff is nonsuited for not confessing lease, entry, and ouster, the lessor of the plaintiff must proceed by attachment, upon the consent rule. Ibid. 1 Salk. 259. Harnes, 182. And so where the nominal plaintiff is nonsuited upon the merits, or has a verdict and judgment against him, the only remedy is by attachment, against the lessor of the plaintiff. Run. Eject. 142, 143.

In proceeding by attachment a copy of the rule, with the officer's allocatur thereon, should be personally served on the party liable to the payment of costs; and at the same time the original rule should be shown to him, and a demand made of the payment of them, which demand may be made by the acting attorney in the cause, although he act in the name of another attorney. And if the costs be not paid, the court, upon an affidavit of the circumstances, will grant an attachment. In the king's bench the rule for an attachment is absolute in the first instance, and may be moved for on the last day of term. 3 T. R. 351. Barnes, 120. Say. Rep. 95. 5 Burr. 2686.

Besides the ordinary method of proceeding there are certain auxiliary means for the recovery of costs as between party and party: These means are by moving to stay the proceedings until security be given for the payment of costs, or until the costs are paid of a former action for the same cause, or by deducting the costs of one action from those of another. Tidd, 60, 61.

Thus in ejectment, 1 Str. 681, and actions qui tam, 1 Stra. 697. 705. Barnes, 126, where the plaintiff or his lessor is unknown to the defendant, the latter may call for an account of his residence, or place of abode, from the opposite attorney, and if he refuse to give it, or give in a fictitious account of a person who cannot be found, the court will stay the proceedings until security be given for the payment of costs. And in ejectment, where the lessor of the plaintiff is an infant, dead, or resident abroad, 1 Str. 694. 2 Str. 932. 1206. 1 Wils. 130. Comp. 24. Barnes, 183. B. N. P. 111. Comp. 128. Barnes, 447. 2 Bur. 1177. Say. Costs, 153, the court will stay the proceedings until a real and substantial plaintiff be named, or some responsible person undertake for the payment of costs. A similar undertaking is also required in an action for the mesne profits, brought in the name of the nominal plaintiff in ejectment. Say. Rep. 78.

But except in ejectment, 2 Bur. 1177. Say. Costs, 153, or actions qui tam, 1 Stra. 697. 2 Stra. 1206. 1 Wils. 266, it was not formerly usual to require security for costs where the plaintiff resided abroad, 2 Str. 1206. 1 Wils. 266. Say. Costs, 155. 2 Bur. 1026. 4 Bur. 1205. Comp. 24. 158: for it was considered that such a proceeding might affect trade, by excluding foreigners from our courts, and would be a mean of clogging the course of justice. But now, although a plaintiff is not compellable to give security for costs, merely as a foreigner, if he reside in this country, yet, whether foreigner or native, if he reside abroad, out of the reach of the process of the court, the proceedings may be stayed till his return, or security be given for the payment of costs. 1 T. R. 267. 362. 491. These are the only grounds upon which the proceedings can be stayed for want of security for costs; it being holden that they shall not be stayed even in a qui tam action merely on account of the plaintiff's poverty, Comp. 24. Barnes, 126, or in ejectment, where the lessor of the plaintiff is known of full age, and resident in this country. 1 T. R. 491.

In a second ejectment the court will stay the proceedings until the costs are paid of a prior one for the same case; and that whether it be brought in the same or a different court. 1 Salk. 255. 1 Stra. 548. 554. 2 Stra. 1152. 1206. 1 T. R. 492. K. B. Pr. Reg. 174. Barnes, 133. 2 Black. Rep. 304. 1158. 1180. C. B. And where the defendant in ejectment brings a writ of error before he has quitted possession, the court will stay the proceedings pending the writ of error. 1 Salk. 258, 9, and see 1 Str. 554.

But the vexation of the party is said to be the ground of these rules: 4 Mod. 379. 2 Str. 1152. And therefore if the second ejectment be brought by the defendant, or there appears to be no vexation, the court will not make a rule for staying the proceedings until the costs are paid of the former ejectment. 4 Mod. 379. 1 Str. 681. 2 Str. 1152. 1121. Barnes, 180.

In other cases it was not formerly usual to stay the proceedings in a second action until the costs were paid of a prior one, for the same cause, and particularly if the merits did not come in question on the former trial. But of late years it has been done, in several instances, on the ground of vexation: 2 T. R. 511. K. B. Say. Costs, 245. 247

2 Black. Rep. 741. 3 Wils. 149. S. C. C. B. and in one case, Lampley and wife v. Sands, H. 25 Geo. 3. K. B. where an action was brought by husband and wife, the court stayed the proceedings until the payment of costs in a former action, at the suit of the husband only, it being for the same demand. Tidd, 64, 65.

The practice of deducting or setting off the costs in one action against those in another, however agreeable to natural justice, does not seem to have obtained till lately, in the court of king's bench. 2 Str. 891. 1203. B. N. P. 336. 4 T. R. 124. But in the court of common pleas it has been frequently allowed; and that not only where the parties have been the same, Barnes, 145. 2 Black. Rep. 826. B. N. P. 336, but also where they have been in some measure different. Thus a party has been permitted to set off a separate demand for costs payable to himself alone, against a joint demand for costs payable by himself and others, Barnes, 146. But see Barnes, 130: and he has also been permitted to set off a joint demand for costs payable to himself and another, against a separate demand for damages and costs payable by himself only. Say. Costs, 254. 2 Black. Rep. 827. But where in an action of trespass against four defendants, the plaintiff obtained a verdict against one, and the other three were acquitted, the court would not suffer the costs of the three defendants who were acquitted to be deducted out of the plaintiff's costs, against that defendant who was found guilty, declaring the motion to be unprecedented. Barnes, 145. B. N. P. 336.

Where the application is made by the party to whom the larger sum is due, the rule is for a stay of proceedings, on acknowledging satisfaction for the lesser sum. B. N. P. 336. But where the lesser sum is due to the party applying, the rule is to have it deducted, and for a stay of proceedings on payment of the balance. Say. Costs, 254. 4 T. R. 124.

As between attorney and client, the former may maintain an action against the latter for the recovery of his costs. Cro. Car. 159, 160. But by the stat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 7, s. 1, "all attornies and solicitors shall give a true bill unto their masters or clients, or their assigns, of all charges concerning the suits which they have for them, subscribed with their hands and names, before such time as they or any of them shall charge their clients with any the same fees or charges." Upon this statute it was a good plea to an action brought by an attorney for his fees, that no bill had been delivered to the defendant, 3 Keb. 118. 514. T. Raym. 245. 3 Salk. 19. S. C. But see Carth. 57. 1 Show. 48. Comb. 126. S. C. or the statute might have been given in evidence on non assumpsit. 1 Show. 338. But if an attorney had delivered his bill to the defendant, after the arrest, and before the bill filed, it was well enough, 1 Lil. P. R. 145, but see 1 Str. 633. Cas. Pr. C. B. 27. S. C. And this statute did not extend to attornies in inferior courts, but only to those in the courts at Westminster. Carth. 147. 1 Show. 96. 1 Salk. 86. S. C. It should also seem that an attorney's bill could not have been taxed unless an action was depending thereon, nor without bringing the amount of it into court. To remedy these manifold inconveniences it was enacted by the stat. 2 Geo. 2, c. 23, s. 23, (made perpetual by 30 Geo. 2. c. 19, s. 75) that "no attorney of the court of king's bench, common pleas, or exchequer, &c. nor any solicitor in chancery, &c. shall commence or maintain any action or suit for the recovery of any fees, charges, or disbursements, at law or in equity, until the expiration of one month or more after such attorney or solicitor respectively shall have delivered unto the party to be charged therewith, or left for him at his dwelling-house, or last place of abode, a bill of such fees, charges, and disbursements, (Barnes, 243,) written in a common legible hand, and in the English tongue, except law-terms and names of writs, and in words at length, except times and sums, which bill shall be subscribed with the proper hand of such attorney or solicitor respectively.

"And upon application of the party chargeable, or of any other person in that behalf, unto the chancellor, or master of the rolls, or unto any of the courts aforesaid, or unto a judge or baron of any of the courts, in which the business, or the greatest part thereof, in amount, shall have been transacted; and upon the submission of the party or person aforesaid to pay the whole sum that upon taxation shall appear to be due, it shall be lawful for the said master of the rolls, or any of the courts aforesaid, or any judge or baron, to refer the said bill, although no action be then depending, to be taxed by the proper officer, without any money being brought into court; and if the attorney or solicitor, or the party chargeable, having notice, shall refuse or neglect to attend such taxation, the said officer may proceed to tax the bill ex parte, pending which reference and taxation no action shall be commenced.

"And upon the taxation the said party shall forthwith pay to the said attorney or solicitor, or to any person by him authorized to receive the same, that shall be present at the taxation, or otherwise unto such other person, or in such manner, as the court shall direct, the whole sum that shall be found to be due thereon, which payment shall be a full discharge of the said bill; and in default thereof the said party shall be liable to an attachment, or such other proceedings, at the election of the attorney or solicitor, as such party was before liable unto.

"And if, upon the taxation it shall be found, that such attorney or solicitor shall have been overpaid, then he shall forthwith refund, and pay unto the party all such money as the officer shall certify to have overpaid; and in default thereof, the said attorney or solicitor shall in like manner, be liable to an attachment, or to such other proceedings, at the election of the said party, as he would have been subject unto, if this act had not been made.

"And the said courts are to award the costs of such taxations to be paid by the parties, according to the event of the taxation: that is to say, if the bill taxed be less, by a sixth part, than the bill delivered then the attorney or solicitor is to pay the costs, but if it shall not be less, the court in their discretion shall charge the attorney or client, in regard to the reasonableness or unreasonableness of such bill."

But by the 12 Geo. 2. c. 13. s. 6, the said act 8 Geo. 2. shall not extend to any bill of fees, charges, and disbursements, due from any attorney or solicitor, to any other attorney or solicitor, or clerk in court; but every such attorney, solicitor, or clerk in court, may use such remedies for the recovery thereof, as he might have done before the making of the said act."

Upon the latter clause, there is a case in 1 Wils. 266. where a judge of the court of king's bench having made an order, to refer an agent's bill to be taxed, and the master not having obeyed it, the court was applied to, and held that the order was irregular; the master declaring, that he had never taxed a bill for agency. But it is now the uniform practice of both courts, Doug. oct. 199, 200. to refer an agent's bill to be taxed, upon the defendant's bringing into court the sum claimed by the plaintiff. It is not necessary, however, that such a bill should be signed, or delivered, before the commencement of an action. Doug. oct. 199. in notis.

If the whole bill be for conveyancing, or for business done at the quarter sessions, &c. it cannot be taxed. Barnes, 141,2. 4 T. R. 124. Barnes, 122. C. B. But where an attorney had delivered two separate bills, one of which was for fees and disbursements in causes, and the other for making conveyances, a rule was made for taxing both. Say. Rep. 233. Say. Costs, 320. S. C. And so, where it was moved, that the master might be directed to tax those articles in an attorney's bill, which related to conveyancing and parliamentary business, the rest being for management of causes in the court of king's bench, lord Mansfield said, there was no doubt but the master might tax the whole: that he recollected a case, where the fees paid to a proctor, for business done in the ecclesiastical court, made part of the bill; and it was determined, that, as the whole bill had been referred to the master, he might tax that part of it. Doug. oct. 199. in notis.

It is not necessary for the executor or administrator of an attorney, to deliver a bill of costs, for business done by his testator or intestate, before the commencement of an action, Cas. Pr. C. B. 58.; the statute 2 Geo. 2. c. 23. s. 23. being confined to actions brought by the attorney himself, and not extending to his personal representatives. And, in the court of common pleas, they will not suffer such a bill to be taxed, Barnes, 119, 122.: but in the court of king's bench it is otherwise, 2 Str. 1056. Say. Costs, 324,5. Imp. K. B. 482.; for there, the bill may be referred to be taxed, on the defendant's undertaking to pay what is due. Tidd. 75. An attorney delivered his bill, and, after his death, application was made to tax it, and above a sixth part was taken off; it was moved that the executrix might pay the costs, but the court held she should not, for the words of the act 2 Geo. 2. c. 23. s. 23. impose them upon the attorney or solicitor only, and the executrix is not to blame, if she stand upon his bill, or make out one from his books. 2 Str. 1056. Say. Costs, 327.

After an attorney's bill has been settled and paid, and the payment has been long acquiesced under, the court will not refer it to be taxed as a matter of course, Say. Costs, 323. Doug. oct. 199. So where a bond had been given for the debt, five years before, and the vouchers had been delivered up, the court would not refer the bill to be taxed, saying, an attorney at this rate could never be safe, Cas. Pr. C. B. 109. Pr. Reg. 37. S. C. And it is a general rule that an attorney's bill cannot be taxed, at the trial of an action brought upon it, nor after verdict, Doug. oct. 199. K. B. Barnes, 124. C. B.; for if the business was really done, (which must be proved at the trial,) the delay of the defendant, for more than a month, in objecting to the quantum, is an admission that he thinks it to be reasonable. Tidd. 76, 7.

But though an attorney's bill has been settled and paid, yet the court, under special circumstances, will refer it to be taxed; for the client may, by affidavit, shew, that the business charged was never performed, or that the charges are fraudulent: and where that is the case, neither payment, nor a release, nor a judgment for the money due, will preclude the court from referring the bill to be taxed. Say. Costs, 323. Doug. oct. 199. S. P.

It may also be taxed, though there was a special agreement, between the attorney and his client, that the former should be paid for his time, at a certain rate by the day, besides his expences; or though he has obtained a warrant of attorney from his client, for confessing judgment for the money due upon his bill, and has entered judgment thereupon. Say. Costs, 321, 2,

The statute 2 Geo. 2. c. 23. s. 23. only requires the delivery of a bill, for the bringing of an action; and therefore, though an attorney cannot bring an action on his bill, till it has been delivered a month, that circumstance is not necessary to enable him to set it off. But he must not produce it at the trial by surprize. It is sufficient, in such case, to deliver it time enough, for the plaintiff to have it taxed before the trial. Doug. oct. 199. in notis.

If any attorney refuse to deliver a bill to his client, the latter may compel him, by taking out a summons before a judge; and if the attorney, on being served therewith, do not attend, an order will be made for delivering it, within a reasonable time. If he still neglect to deliver it, the order should be made a rule of court; and on serving the same, and making affidavit thereof, the court on motion will grant an attachment. The bill being delivered, the client may apply for a judge's summons, to shew cause why it should not be referred to the proper officer to be taxed; upon which an order will be made, the client undertaking to pay what shall appear to be due upon such taxation. If the attorney do not attend, an order will be made of course. But the client cannot have a summons for delivery of the bill, and taxing it together. Imp. K. B. 479, 480. Barnes, 126. C. B.

It was formerly necessary, in the king's bench, to have three appointments, in case the attorney did not attend, before the master could proceed ex parte. But, by a late rule, H. 32 Geo. 3. 4 T. R. 580. it is ordered, that "on every appointment to be made by the master, the party on whom the same shall be served, and required to attend, shall attend such appointment, without waiting for a second; or in default thereof, the master shall proceed ex parte on the first appointment."

Under the statute.] If a sixth part of the bill be taken off, the attorney is to pay the costs of taxation; but if less, the costs are in the discretion of the court. In the exercise of this discretion, however, the courts are governed by the statute: and accordingly, the costs of taxation have been always reciprocally given to the client or attorney, as a sixth part has, or has not been taken off. Barnes, 118. 147, 8.

To assist the attorney, in recovering his costs, he has a lien for the amount of his bill, upon the deeds, papers, and writings in his hands, belonging to his client, 4 T. R. 124. Doug. oct. 104, 5.: and until that be paid, the court will not order them to be delivered up, 1 Lil. P. R. 142. 3 T. R. 275. Nor can an attorney be changed by his client, without leave of the court, or order of a judge, on payment of his bill, to be taxed by the proper officer. 1 Lil. P. R. 141. Doug. oct. 217. An attorney has also a lien, on the money recovered by his client, for his bill of costs. 4 T. R. 124. If the money come to his hands, he may retain it, to the amount of his bill: he may stop it in transitu, if he can lay hold of it: if he apply to the court, they will prevent its being paid over, till his demand is satisfied. And lord Mansfield declared he was inclined to go still farther, and to hold, that if the attorney give notice to the defendant, not to pay the money recovered by his client, till his bill be satisfied, a payment by the defendant, after such notice, would be in his own wrong, and like paying a debt which has been assigned, after notice. Doug. 100, 101. So in a late case, where the defendant applied to set off the debt and costs in one action, against those in another, the court would not suffer it to be done, until the attorney's bill was first discharged. 4 T. R. 123, 4. But the court will not go beyond those limits. And therefore where the defendant, not having had any notice to the contrary, compromised the debt and costs with the plaintiff, before his attorney had been paid, the court would not oblige the defendant to pay him. Doug. 226.

COSTS IN EQUITY. Costs in equity are in the discretion of the court upon all the circumstances of the case, though he who fails is primâ facie to be taken to be the person liable to the costs; and those parties who depend upon circumstances to govern the discretion of the court in withholding costs, must show the existence of those circumstances, in a sufficient degree to cut down the primâ facie claim of costs. 11 Ves. 458.

If the plaintiff obtains a decree, he has generally his costs of suit, but if it be against a trustee not in fault, but who desires only to be indemnified by the decree of the court in the performance of the trust, he shall pay no costs. Pre. Chan. 254. 3 Peere Wms. 347. 3 Bro. Ch. Ca. 90. 1 Ves. jun. 215.

And where trustees and executors are brought into court, they are entitled to costs, though they make a claim and fail, if merely by submission. 1 Ves. J. 205.

But the court will not give costs to a trustee, whose neglect has occasioned the suit. 5 Ves. 128. And where trustees are charged with a loss occasioned by their negligence, though without any corrupt motive, the costs follow of course. 6 Ves. 488. And notwithstanding a testator may direct that his executors for any expences they may be put to, shall be allowed their costs out of his estate, yet if they act fraudulently, the court will decree costs against them. 3 Atk. 126.

Where a cause is set down upon bill and answer only, or comes on after withdrawing the replication, it is discretionary in the court to dismiss with 40*s.* costs, or costs to be taxed, or no costs. Wy. Pr. R. 146.

Upon affidavit to satisfaction of the court, that the complainant lives beyond sea, he may be ordered to enter into 40*l.* security to pay costs, and so it will be if he is about to go to live, or stay long there. Wy. Pr. 146. 2 Ves. 557.

But the court will not order a plaintiff residing abroad to give security for costs where there are co-plaintiffs residing in England, for the defendant has a security for his costs against each of the plaintiffs. 6 Ves. 612.

And this security should be applied for before an order for time to answer is obtained, if it appears upon the bill, or is in the defendant's knowledge, that the plaintiff is beyond sea; otherwise it may be applied for in any stage of the cause. 6 Ves. 612. 10 Ves. 287.

Sometimes upon a full hearing, the court will, upon pronouncing a decree for the plaintiff, order the defendant to pay him his costs to that time, and if the court refers matters to a master, as accounts to be taken or the like, between plaintiff and defendant, the court commonly reserves costs in these cases till after the master hath made his report; and after he has made his report, the court gives either party liberty to apply for further directions as they shall think fit; whereon such order shall be made as shall be just, in which case, after the master has made his report, and the same is absolutely confirmed by the court, either party may apply by petition to the lord chancellor to have the cause heard on the master's report as to costs, which is always granted of course; and that order being drawn up, and served on the adverse clerk in court, and the cause being set down by the register to be heard upon the master's report, the court will order costs to be taxed by the said master, and paid by such party as the court shall think proper. Har. Ch. Pr. cap. 56. Costs.

On bills for a discovery and nothing more, the defendant is always entitled to and may move as a matter of course for his costs, after he has put in a full and sufficient answer. Wy. Pr. R. Costs. Mitf. 136.

After an order to have costs taxed, the clerk or solicitor for the party that is to have them, delivers in a bill thereof to the master, to whom they are referred, who gives the other side a copy of the charge, if desired, and on a request, he gives out a summons for the party to attend him at a certain time, and so from time to time till the whole costs are taxed, and then he reports the quantum to the court. Wy. Pr. R. 148.

The report being confirmed, and the order duly entered, there may be a subpœna to the party to pay them; and if upon due service thereof, the costs be not paid, then upon affidavit as to the default, an attachment, and further process of contempt to a sequestration go forth, if there be occasion. Wy. Pr. R. 328.

COT, in the old Saxon signifies cottage, and so is still used in many parts of England. Cowel. Blount.

COTARIUS, a cottager: the cotarii, or cottagers, are mentioned in Domesday. Ibid.

COTE and COT. The names of places which begin or end with these words or syllables, have the signification of a little house or cottage: there are likewise dove-cotes, which are small houses or places for the keeping of doves or pigeons. Ibid.

COTELLUS, COTERIA, both signify a small cottage, house or homestall. Ibid.

COTERELLUS. Cotarius and coterellus, according to Spelman and Du Fresne, are servile tenants: but in Domesday and other ancient MSS. there appears a distinction as well in their tenure and quality, as in their name. For the cotarius had a free socage tenure, and paid a stated firm or rent in provisions or money, with some occasional customary services; whereas the coterellus seems to have held in mere villenage, and his person, issue and goods, were disposable at the pleasure of the lord. Paroch. Antiq. 310. Cowel. Blount.

COTESWOLD, is used for sheep cotes and sheep feeding on hills: from the Sax. cote and wold, a place where there is no wood. Cowel. Blount.

COTGARE, a kind of refuse wool, so clung or clotted together, that it cannot be pulled asunder. See stat. 12 Ric. 2. c. 9. Cowel. Blount.

COTLAND and COTSETHLAND, land held by a cottager, whether in socage or villenage. Cowel. Blount.

COTSETHLA, COTSETLE, the little seat or mansion belonging to a small farm. Ibid.

COTSETHUS, a cottage-holder, who, by servile tenure, was bound to work for the lord. Cowel.

COTTAGE, (cotagium) is properly a little house for habitation, without any land belonging to it. See stat. 4 Ed. 1. stat. 1. But by 31 El. cap. 7. no man could build a cottage, unless he laid four acres of land thereto, except it were in a market-town or city, or within a mile of the sea, or for the habitation of labourers in mines, sailors, foresters, shepherds, &c. or a cottage erected by order of justices of peace, &c. for poor impotent people. But by 15 Geo. 3. c. 23. this stat. of 31 Eliz. was repealed.

COTUCA, coat armour. Walsing. 114. Cowel. Blount.

COTUCHANS, boors or husbandmen, of which mention is made in Domesday. Ibid.

COUCHER, or COURCHER, signifies a factor that continues abroad in some place or country for traffic; as formerly in Gascoign, for buying of wines. Stat. 27 Ed. 3.

c. 16. This word is also used for the general book wherein any corporation, &c. register their particular acts. 3 & 4 Ed. 6. c. 10. Cowel. Blount.

COVENABLE, (Fr. covenable, Lat. rationabilis) is what is covenient or suitable.—Every of the same three sorts of goods, &c. shall be good and covenable, as in old time hath been used. Stat. 31 Ed. 3. cap. 2. Covenably indowed, that is, indowed as is fitting. 4 H. 8. c. 12. See Plowd. 472. Cowel. Blount.

COVENANT, (conventio) is the consent and agreement of two or more persons to do or not to do some act or thing contracted between them. Also it is the declaration the parties make, that they will stand to such agreement, relating to lands or other things; and is created by deed in writing, sealed and executed by the parties: a covenant may likewise be implied in the contract, as incident thereto. 2 Mod. Entr. 91. And if the persons do not perform their covenants, an action of covenant is the remedy to recover a compensation in damages for the breach thereof. Ibid.

A covenant is generally either in fact or in law: in fact is that which is expressly agreed between the parties, and inserted in the deed; and in law, is that covenant which the law intends and implies, though it be not expressed in words; as if a lessor demise and grant to his lessee a house or lands, &c. for a certain term, the law will intend a covenant on the lessor's part, that the lessee shall, during the term, quietly enjoy the same against all incumbrances. 1 Inst. 384.

There is also a covenant real, and covenant personal: a covenant real is that, whereby a man ties himself to pass a thing real, as lands or tenements; or to levy a fine of lands, &c. And covenant personal, is where the same is annexed to the person and merely personal; as if a person covenants with another by deed to build him a house, or to serve him, &c. F. N. B. 145. 5 Rep. 10.

Covenants are likewise inherent, that tend to the support of the land or thing granted; or are collateral to it; and are affirmative, where somewhat is to be performed; or negative; executed, of what is already done, or executory: but a covenant being to bind a man, to do something in futuro, is for the most part executory, and can only be enforced and carried into execution by a court of equity. 1 Vent. 176. Dyer 112, 271.

There is this difference, however, between a covenant, and a condition; a condition broken, gives a right of entry, but covenant broken, gives an action only. Owen 54. Note also that a person cannot have action of covenant upon a verbal agreement, for it cannot be grounded without writing. F. N. B. 145.

All covenants between persons must be to do what is lawful, or they will not be binding; and if the thing to be done be impossible, the covenant is void. Dyer. 112.

An infant within age may bind himself apprentice; but neither at common law nor by statute, can he be bound by covenant for his apprenticeship, so as to make himself liable to an action of covenant, if he depart, &c. 1 Cro. 129. Winch. 68.

No cause of action arises on a covenant, till it is broken: and as to breaches of covenant, if a person by his own act disables himself to perform a covenant, or does any act to defeat the intent and use of it, it is a breach thereof. 5 Rep. 21.

In covenant that a person shall hold land free from all incumbrances, and be kept indemnified from arrears of rent; there, till an action is brought, or distress made, he is not indemnified; and a suit in chancery is no breach in such case; but where a joinure, or dower is recovered, it is. Skin. 397. Moor 159. Palm. 339.

When a covenant is to two persons jointly, one of them may not bring action of covenant, or plead alone, but both must join. 1 Nals. 558.

Covenants are generally taken most strongly against the covenantor, and for the covenantee. Plowd. 287. But it is a rule in law, that where one thing may have several intendments, it shall be construed in the most favourable manner for the covenantor. 1 Lut. 490. The common use of covenants is for assuring of land; quiet enjoyment free from incumbrances; for payment of rent reserved; and concerning repairs, &c. And in deeds of covenant, sometimes a clause for performance, with a penalty, is inserted in the body of the deed. Other times, and more frequently, bonds for performance, with a sufficient penalty, are given separate; which last being sued, the jury must find the penalty; but on covenant, only the damages. Wood's Inst. 250.

COVENANT TO STAND SEISED TO USES, is where a man that hath a wife, children, brother, sister, or kindred, doth by covenant in writing under hand and seal agree that for their or any of their provision or preferment, he and his heirs will stand seised of land to their use; either in fee-simple, fee-tail, or for life. The use being created by the stat. 27 H. 8. c. 10. which conveyeth the estate as the uses are directed; this covenant to stand seised is become a conveyance of the land since the said statute. The considerations of these deeds, are natural affection, marriage, &c. and the law allows in such cases consideration of blood and marriage, to raise uses, as well as money and other valuable consideration when a use is to a stranger. Plowd. 302. There are no considerations now, to raise uses upon covenants to stand seised, but natural love and affection, which is for advancement of blood; and consideration of marriage, which is the joining of the blood and marriage together: other considerations, as money, &c. for land, though the words in the deed are stand seised, yet they are bargains and sales, and without inrolment they raise no use. Carter 138. Lil. Abr. 353.

The usual covenant to stand seised to uses need not be by deed indented and inrolled. And where a man limits his estate to the use of his wife for life, this imports a sufficient consideration in itself: also, if a person covenants to stand seised to the use of his wife, son, or cousin, it will raise an use without any express words of consideration, for sufficient consideration appears. 7 Rep. 40.

In case of a covenant to stand seised, so much of the use as the owner doth not dispose of, remains still in him. 1 Ventr. 374. And where an use is raised by way of covenant, the covenantor continues in possession; and there the uses limited, if they are according to law, shall rise and draw the possession out of him: but if they are not, the possession shall remain in him until a lawful use ariseth. 1 Leon. 197. 1 Mod. 159, 160.

If on a covenant to stand seised to uses, no use doth arise, yet it may be good by way of covenant and give remedy to the covenantee in an action; as if the covenant be future, that, in consideration of a marriage, lands shall descend or remain to a son and the heirs of his body on the body of his wife, in this case the covenantee may have writ of covenant upon the covenant against the covenantor. But if a covenant be that a man and his heirs, shall from henceforth stand and be seised to such and such uses, and the uses will not arise by law; here no action of covenant lies on the covenant: for this action will never lie upon any covenant but such as is either to do a thing hereafter, or where the thing is already done, and not when it is for a thing present. Plowd. 307, 398. Finch's Law. 49.

COVERT BARON, a married woman. 1 Black. Com. 442.

COVERTURE, (Fr.) any thing that covers; as apparel, a coverlet, &c. but it is by our law particularly applied to the state and condition of a married woman, who is sub potestate viri; and therefore disabled to contract with any to the damage of herself or husband, without his consent and privity, or his allowance and confirmation thereof. Bract. lib. 1. c. 10. lib. 2. c. 15, &c. Bro. Abr. When a woman is married, she is called a feme covert; and whatever is done concerning her, during the marriage, is said to be during the coverture: all things that are the wife's, are the husband's; nor hath the wife power over herself, but the husband. And if the husband alien the wife's land, during the coverture, she cannot avoid it during his life; but after his death, she may recover by cui in vita. Terms de Ley. See Baron and Feme.

COVIN, (covina) is a deceitful compact between two or more to deceive or prejudice others, as if tenant for life or in tail, conspire with another, that he shall recover the land which he the tenant holds, in prejudice of him in reversion. Plowd. 546. Covin is commonly used as to conveyances of land by fine, feoffment, recovery, &c. where it tends to defeat purchasers of the land they purchase, and creditors of their just debts, and so it is used as to deeds of gift of goods; it may be likewise sometimes in suits of law, and judgments had in them. But wherever covin is, it shall never be intended, unless it appears and be particularly found: for covin and fraud though proved, must yet be found by the jury, or it will not be good to avoid the act. Brownl. 188. Bridgm. 112.

COUNSELLOR, (consiliarius) is a person retained by a client to plead his cause, in a court of judicature. A counsellor at law hath a privilege to enforce any thing which is informed him by his client, if pertinent to the matter, and is not to examine whether it be true or false; for it is at the peril of him who informs him. Cro. Jac. 90. But after the court hath delivered their opinions of the matter in law depending before them, the counsel at the bar are not to urge any thing further in that cause, 1 Lil. Abr. 355. A counsellor must not set his hand to a frivolous plea, to delay a trial; which argues ignorance or foul practice. Ibid. And as counsellors have a special privilege to practice the law, they are punishable by attachment, &c. for misbehaviour. 1 Hawk. P. C. 157.

And if a bill in equity signed, contain matters criminal, impertinent, or scandalous, the counsel who signed them, on its being referred to the master, and reported to be so, is in strictness to pay costs to the party aggrieved; but nothing relevant is considered as scandalous. 1 Ch. Rep. 194. 2 Ves. 24. Also if upon reference to the master, any part of an answer is reported to be impertinent, it will be struck out as such with costs, which likewise in strictness ought to be paid by the counsel, who signed the answer. Mitf. 253. And by 3 Ed. 1. c. 29, "any serjeant pleader or the like attainted of using deceit in the king's court, shall be imprisoned a year and a day, and thenceforth he shall not be heard to plead in the court." But by 5 Eliz. c. 14, no counsellor shall be punished for pleading or shewing forth a forged deed, or the like, not being privy to the forgery thereof.

By 3 Jac. 1. c. 5, no recusant convict shall practice the common law as a counsellor, but by 31 Geo. 3. c. 32, Roman catholics taking the oaths prescribed by that act may act as barristers.

COUNT, signifies the declaration of the complainant in a real action. A declaration is applied to personal, so count is applicable to real causes; but count and declaration are oftentimes confounded, and made to signify the same thing. F. N. B. 16, 60.

COUNTEE, (Fr. comte) was the most eminent dignity of a subject, before the conquest; and those who in ancient times were created countees, were men of great estate: for which reason, and because the law intends that they assist the king with their counsel for the public good, and preserve the realm by their valour, they had great privileges; as they might not be arrested for debt or trespass, or be put on juries, &c. Of old the countee was præfectus or præpositus comitatus, and had the charge and custody of the county, but this authority the sheriff now hath. 9 Rep. 46. A countee or count, is an earl, in the law French. Law Fr. Dict.

COUNTENANCE. This word seems to be used for credit or estimation. Old. Nat. Br. 111.

COUNTER, (computatorium from the Lat. computare) is the name of two prisons in London, the Poultry counter, and Wood-street counter, for the use of the city to confine debtors, peace-breakers, &c. Cowel. Blount.

COUNTERFEITS, See Cheats, Frauds.

COUNTERMAND, is where a thing formerly directed to be executed, is afterwards by some act or ceremony countermanded and made void by the party that first did it. But an authority by deed, such as a letter of attorney or the like, can only be countermanded and avoided by an instrument executed with the same solemnity, that is, by a deed under seal.

COUNTERPART. When the several parts of an indenture are interchangeably executed by the several parties, that part or copy which is executed by the grantor is usually called the original, and the rest are counterparts; though of late it is most frequent (and better) for all the parties to execute every part; which renders them all originals. 2 Black. Com. 296.

COUNTERPLEA, is where the tenant in any real action, tenant by the curtesy, or in dower, in his answer and plea, vouches any one to warrant his title, or prays in aid of another, who hath a larger estate; as of him in reversion, &c. Or where one that is a stranger to the action, comes and prays to be received to save his estate; then that which the demandant allegeth against it, why it should not be admitted is called a counterplea; in which sense it is used stat. 25 Ed. 3. cap. 7. So that counterplea is in law a replication to aid prier; and is called counterplea to the voucher; but when the voucher is allowed and the vouchee comes and demands what cause the tenant hath to vouch him, and the tenant shews his cause, whereupon the vouchee pleads any thing to avoid the warranty; that is termed a counterplea of the warranty. Terms de Ley. 3 Ed. 1. cap. 39. If on demurrer to a counterplea of the voucher upon a warranty, it be found against the vouchee, judgment shall not be peremptory, but only stet vocare; it is otherwise upon a plea to the writ tried by the country. 4 Rep. 80. 10 Rep. 34.

COUNTER-ROLLS, are the rolls which sheriffs of counties have with the coroners of their proceedings, as well of appeals, as of inquest, &c. Stat. 3. Ed. 1. c. 10.

COUNTORS, (Fr. comtours) have been taken for such serjeants at law, which a man retains to defend his cause, and speak for him in any court for their fees. Horn's Mirror, lib. 2. And as in the court of C. B. none but serjeants at law may plead; they were anciently called serjeant countors. 1 Inst. 17.

COUNTY, (comitatus) signifies the same with shire, the one coming from the French the other the Saxons; and contains a circuit or proportion of the realm, into which the whole land is divided for the better government of it, and the more easy administration of justice: so that there is no part of this kingdom that lies not within some county: and every county is governed by a yearly officer whom we call a sheriff. Fortescue, cap. 24. Of these counties there are in England forty, besides twelve in Wales, making in all fifty-two.

COUNTY PALATINE, there are four counties of special note, which are therefore termed counties palatine; as Lancaster, Chester, Durham, and Ely. 4 Inst. 204, 221.

These counties palatine are reckoned among the superior courts; and are privileged as to pleas, so as no inhabitant of such counties shall be compelled by any writ to appear or answer out of the same; except for error, and in cases of treason, &c. Comp. Juris. 137. 1 Danv. Abr. 750.

But by 33 Geo. 3. c. 68, when final judgment shall be obtained in the courts of the great sessions in Wales or Chester, or the common pleas in Lancaster and Durham, and the persons or effects cannot be found within the jurisdiction of the court, any court of record at Westminster, upon affidavit filed, may issue execution. s. 1.

Counties palatine, with jura regalia, were probably erected at first, because they were adjacent to the enemies countries heretofore; as Lancaster and Durham to Scotland, and Chester to Wales; that the inhabitants might have administration of justice at home, and remain there to secure the country from incursions. 1 Vent. 155.

County palatine of Lancaster.] By 36 Hen. 6. c. 2, jurors who indict in the county of Lancaster, a foreigner dwelling in another county, must have lands, 5*l.* each, value.

By 37 Hen. 8. c. 19, fines levied in Lancaster shall be of like force, as fines acknowleged before the justices of the common pleas, and like proclamations shall be made in the sessions there.

By 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 26, on exigent, in any action in the king's bench or common pleas, awarded against any person dwelling in the county of Lancaster, a writ of proclamation shall be awarded to the sheriff, and all other process of outlawry shall be directed to the chancellor of the duchy who shall issue like writs, under the seal of the county palatine, to the sheriff.

By 2 & 3 Ph. & M. c. 20, duchy lands severed from the crown, and since re-united shall be again parcel of the duchy, as well those lying out of the county palatine of Lancaster, as those within the same, and shall pass under the duchy seal.

But lands in the principality of Wales, the duchy of Cornwall, and the counties of Chester and Flint, shall not be annexed to the duchy. Ibid.

By 17 Geo. 2. c. 7, the chancellor of the duchy may grant commissions to take affidavits.

By 22 Geo. 2. c. 46, the statute for further regulations of attornies, shall not deprive those of the duchy or county palatine of Lancaster, from acting within those jurisdictions.

Writs in the court of common pleas of Lancaster, shall be made returnable on the first Wednesday of any month, in vacation, or before justices of the sessions of assizes for the county of Lancaster, at the plaintiff's election, and the defendant at the day of return shall appear. Ibid.

By 34 Geo. 3. c. 58, no execution shall be stayed by writ of false judgment in any inferior court in the county of Lancaster, but on recognizance given, with two sureties for payment of the debt and costs, nor any action for less than 10*l.* be removed from any inferior court into the common pleas of the said county.

By 38 Geo. 3. c. 63, adjournments of the general court of quarter sessions of the peace for Lancaster are declared to be legal.

The justices are also authorized to hold an annual general sessions at Preston, for the county at large, and also a special general sessions at any time, upon a previous advertisement; and notice therein of the business to be brought forward. Ibid.

By 39 & 40 Geo. 3. c. 105, in the court of common pleas of Lancaster, the plaintiffs and defendants may plead and give evidence of any cause of action, or any thing in bar of any suit, provided the same shall happen prior to the issuing of the writ of capias ad respondendum, or prior to the day of actual service of any declaration in ejectment, notwithstanding the cause of action shall not have accrued prior to the teste and return of the writ, and no advantages shall be by reason taken of any action having accrued subsequent to such teste and return. s. 1.

Process issuing out of the said court may be returnable, according to the present practice, on any of the return days in Easter and Michaelmas terms, according to the court of common pleas at Westminster. s. 2.

But no final judgment shall be entered, or execution issued, within ten clear days, after the days of the return of the writ of inquiry, or scire facias. s. 3.

Parties are not to be debarred from moving in arrest of judgment. s. 4.

Counties Palatine of Chester.] By 1 Hen. 4. c. 18, process of outlawry in other counties, against persons in the county of Chester, may be certified into the county of Chester, and proceeded upon there.

By 32 Hen. 8. c. 43. sessions shall be kept in Chester twice in the year, viz. at Michaelmas and Easter.

By 38 Hen. 8. c. 13, the sheriff of Chester is to keep his court monthly, and with the two coroners sit to give judgment upon outlawries.

By 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 28, fines may be levied before the chief justice of Chester, or his deputy, of lands in the county palatine of Chester.

Recognizances of statute merchant, on the statute of Acton Burnel, acknowledged before the mayor of Chester, shall be good. Ibid. c. 31.

By 43 Eliz. c. 15, fines may be levied before the mayor of Chester, of lands within the county of the city of Chester, and writ of error lies thereon before the high justice of the said county.

By 22 Geo. 2. c. 46, writs of capias, and other mesne process in the court of session of Chester, may be made returnable at the first day of the next session, or on the first Wednesday of any month, in the vacations at the election of the plaintiff, and the defendant shall appear on the day of such return, or within eight days after.

By 26 Geo. 2. c. 34, the annual meeting for election of mayor and other officers of the city of Chester, shall be on the Friday next after October 20th yearly.

By 27 Geo. 3. c. 43, justices of the court of session for the county palatine of Chester, may empower persons to take affidavits in causes depending therein; and the prothonotary may take like affidavits.

Persons forswearing themselves are liable to the same penalties as for false affidavits in open court. Ibid.

The prothonotary is to make out the commission upon a fiat from the justices, or one of them, of which he is to make entry, and the fees for each commission are 2*s.* for the fiat, 4*s.* for the commission, besides duty and parchment, and 4*s.* for sealing the same: and the commissioners may take for swearing each affidavit 1*s.* but no affidavit shall be taken within a mile of Chester castle, during the county sessions. Ibid.

Justices of the said court may empower persons to take recognizances of bail, and the commission shall be made out by the prothonotary, upon the justice's fiat; and the said bail with an affidavit of the taking thereof, shall be sent to the prothonotary's office, within ten days, to be filed upon payment of 5*s.* 4*d.* and the following fees shall be paid for commissions and for taking recognizances, viz. 2*s.* for the fiat; and 7*s.* 6*d.* for the commission, besides duty and parchment; 4*s.* for the seal, 5*s.* for taking bail, and 1*s.* for swearing. Ibid.

The justices of the said court may make rules for justifying bail, by affidavits before the commissioners, and the power of the prothonotary, or his deputy, to take recognizances, shall not be affected by this act. Ibid.

If any person represent another in entering into special bail, he shall be adjudged a felon. Ibid.

County palatine of Durham.] By 27 Hen. 8. 24, bishops of Durham and their chancellors, shall be justices of the peace within that county palatine.

By 5 Eliz. c. 27, fines levied before the justices of assize at Durham, shall be as effectual for lands there, as fines in the common pleas.

By 31 El. c. 9, on exigent awarded against any person dwelling in the bishopric of Durham, a writ of proclamation shall be awarded, and the bishop, or chancellor, shall issue a mandate to the sheriff to make proclamation.

The bishop of Durham shall have a deputy in the king's bench and common pleas, to receive such writs of proclamation; and the bishop, or chancellor, not making true return of every such writ, shall forfeit 5*l.* Ibid.

All process against persons outlawed there, shall be directed to the bishop of Durham, or during vacancy, to the chancellor; and one fee only shall be taken for the proclamation, mandate, and execution. Ibid.

By 4 Geo. 3. c. 21, the chancellor and justices of the court of pleas, are ered to issue commissions to prop to take and swear affidavits in c pending in their respective cou affidavits are to be filed, and may in evidence.

The cursitor is to make out the sions upon a fiat from the chanc upon a fiat from two justices of of which he is to make an entry.

His fees for each commission follows, viz. 2*s.* for the fiat, 4 commission, besides duty and pa 4*s.* for sealing, and the comm may take for swearing each affid chancery 2*s.* and if in the court of pleas 1*s.* Ibid.

Officers of the respective cou take affidavits as heretofore.

By 14 Geo. 3. c. 46, persons ap ing offenders guilty of highway clipping, coining, or housebreakin the county palatine of Durham, ceive the rewards made payable acts 4 W. & M. c. 6. and 7 Wi Ann. and 6 Geo. 1.

Disputes arising between partie hending offenders, shall be determ the judges. Ibid.

The sheriff is to pay the rews be reimbursed by the commissioner treasury. Ibid.

In case any sheriff shall die, month after conviction, his succes pay the reward; and in case of shall forfeit double the sum, with tre of suit. Ibid.

COUNTIES CORPORATE. Bes counties above mentioned, there a ties corporate. Stat. 3 Ed. 4. c. they are certain cities, with lands ritories, having liberties and jurisdi grant from the king. As the co Middlesex annexed to the city of by king Hen. 1. The county of the York, anno 32 H. 8. COUNTY COURT, (curia comitat county court is a court incident to risdiction of the sheriff, held every by the sheriff or his deputy; and stat. 2 Ed. 6. c. 25, no county co be adjourned longer than for one consisting of 28 days. 3 Black. 40.

It had formerly, and now hath termination of certain debts, &c. und And this court holdeth not plea (d of any debt or damage to the value or above; nor of trepsass; vi & ar And the proceedings are removab hence into the king's superior cou pone or recordari.

But of debt and other actions personal above that sum, the sheriff may nevertheless hold plea by force of a writ of justicies, which is in nature of a commission to him to do so. 4 Inst. 266. In this court the plaintiff takes out a summons, and if the defendant do not appear, an attachment or distringas is to be made out against him; but if the defendant appears, the plaintiff is to file his declaration, and after the defendant is to put in his answer or plea; and the plaintiff having joined issue, the trial proceeds, &c. whereupon, if verdict is given for the plaintiff, judgment is entered, and a fieri facias may be awarded against the defendant's goods, which may be taken by virtue thereof, and be appraised and sold to satisfy the plaintiff: but if the defendant hath no goods, the plaintiff is without remedy in this court; for no capias lies therein, but an action may be brought at common law, upon the judgment entered. Greenwood of Courts, p. 22.

COUNTY-RATES, the justices of peace at their quarter sessions may make one general rate, to answer all former distinct county rates, which shall be assessed on every parish, &c. and collected and paid by the high constables of hundreds to treasurers appointed by the justices: which money shall be deemed the public stock and be laid out in repairing of bridges, gaols, or houses of correction, on presentment made by the grand jury at the assizes or quarter sessions, of their wanting reparation; and the other purposes to which by law the county rates are applicable. But appeal lies by the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parishes to the justices at the next sessions against the rate on any particular parish. 12 Geo. 2. c. 9.

COUNTING HOUSE OF THE KING'S HOUSEHOLD, (domus computus hospitii regis) is usually called the green cloth, where sit the lord steward, treasurer of the king's house, the comptroller, master of the household, cofferer, and two clerks of the green cloth, &c. for daily taking the accounts of all expenses of the household, making provisions, and ordering payment for the same, and for the good government of the king's household servants, and paying the wages of those below stairs. Stat. 39 Eliz. cap. 7.

COURIER, (from the Fr. courir to run) an express messenger of haste. Cowel. Blount.

COURRACIER, a French word signifying a horse courser. 2 Inst. 719. Ibid.

COURT, (curia) signifies the king's palace or mansion; but is more especially the place where justice is judicially administered.

Of courts, some are of record, and some not, which are accounted base courts in respect of the rest; a court of record is that court which hath power to hold plea, according to the course of the common law, of real, personal, and mixed actions, where the debt or damage is 40*s.* or above: as the king's bench, common pleas, &c. 1 Inst. 117, 260. 4 Rep. 52. 2 Rol. Abr. 574.

A court not of record is where it cannot hold plea of debt or damages amounting to 40*s.* but of pleas under that sum, or where the proceedings are not according to the course of the common law, nor inrolled; as the county court, and the court baron, &c. 1 Inst. 117, 260. 4 Rep. 52. 2 Rol. Abr. 574.

The rolls of the superior courts of record are of such authority, as no proof will be admitted against them; and they are only triable by themselves. 3 Inst. 71. But as the county court, court baron, &c. are not courts of record, the proceedings therein may be denied, and tried by a jury: and upon their judgments a writ of error lies not; but writ of false judgment. 1 Inst. 117.

COURT OF ADMIRALTY, (curia admiralitatis) was erected by Ed. 3. for deciding maritime causes: but is not allowed to be a court of record, because it proceeds by the civil law. 4 Inst. 134, 135. This court hath jurisdiction only to determine causes arising wholly upon the sea, out of the jurisdiction of a county, and consequently judgment of a thing done upon land is void. 1 Inst. 260.

COURT BARON, (curia baronis) is a court which every lord of a manor hath within his own precinct; and it is inseparably incident to the manor; and must be held by prescription, for it cannot be created at this day. 1 Inst. 58. 4 Inst. 268. It must be kept on some part of the manor; and is, 1st, By common law, which is the barons or freeholders court, of which the freeholders being suitors are the judges, and this cannot be a court baron without two suitors at least.

2dly, By custom, which is called the customary court; and concerns the customary tenants and copyholders, whereof the lord or his steward, is judge. The court baron may be of this double nature, or one may be without the other, but as there can be no court baron at common law without freeholders, so there cannot be a customary court without copyholders or customary tenants. 4 Rep. 26. 6 Rep. 11, 12. 2 Inst. 119.

The freeholders' court which hath jurisdiction for trying actions of debt, trespasses, &c. under 40*s.* may be had every three weeks; and is something like a county court, and the proceedings much the same; though on recovery of debt, they have not power to make execution, but are to distrain the defendant's goods, and retain them till satisfaction is made.

The other court baron for taking and passing of estates, surrenders, admittances, &c. is held but once or twice in a year, (usually with the court leet), unless it be on purpose to grant an estate; and then it is holden as often as requisite. In this court the homage jury are to inquire that their lords do not lose their services, duties, or custom; but that the tenants make their suits of court: pay their rents, heriots, &c. and keep their lands and tenements in repair; they are to present all common and private nuisances, which may prejudice the lord's manor: and every public trespass must be punished in this court, by amercement on presenting the same. By statute, it shall be inquired of customary tenants, what they hold, by what works, rents, heriots, services, &c. And of the lord's woods and other profits, fishing, &c. Stat. Extent. Manerii. 4 Ed. 1. See Compleat Court-keeper.

COURT OF CHIVALRY, (curia militaris) otherwise called the court martial; the judges of it were the lord constable of England, and the earl marshal; this court is said to be the fountain of the martial law; and the office is now given to the earl marshal who hath both a judicial and ministerial power; for he is not only one of the judges, but to see execution done. 4 Inst. 123. Wood's Inst. lib. 4. c. 1.

COURT-CHRISTIAN, (curia christianitatis) is an ecclesiastical judicature, opposed to the civil court, or lay tribunal; and as in secular courts human laws are maintained; so in the court christian, the laws of Christ should be the rule. And therefore the judges are divines, as archbishops, bishops, archdeacons, &c. 2 Inst. 488.

COURT OF CONSCIENCE, (curia conscientiæ). See Conscience, court of.

COURT OF DELEGATES, (curia delegatorum) is so called, because the judges are delegated, and sit by force of the king's commission, under the great seal, upon appeals to the king in three cases. 1st, When a decree or sentence is given in an ecclesiastical cause by the archbishop, or any of his officials. 2dly, When any decree or sentence is given in an ecclesiastical cause, in places exempt, or peculiars, belonging to the king, or an archbishop. 3dly, When a sentence is given in the court of admiralty in a civil and marine cause, according to the civil law. 4 Inst. 339. Stat. 25 Hen. 8. c. 19.

COURTS ECCLESIASTICAL, (curiæ ecclesiasticæ) are those courts which are held by the king's authority as supreme governor of the church, for matters which chiefly concern religion. 4 Inst. 321. And the laws and constitutions whereby the church of England is governed, are; 1st, Divers immemorial customs. 2dly, Our own provincial constitutions, and the canons made in convocations, especially those in the year 1603. 3dly, Statutes or acts of parliament concerning the affairs of religion, or causes of ecclesiastical cognizance; particularly the rubricks in our common prayer book, founded upon the statutes of uniformity. 4th, The articles of religion, drawn up in the year 1562, and established by 13 Eliz. cap. 12. And it is said by the general canon law, where all others fail. Wood's Inst. lib. 4. c. 1. s. 26.

COURT OF HUSTINGS, (curia hustingi) is the highest court of record, holden at Guildhall for the city of London, before the lord mayor and alderman, the sheriffs, and recorder. 4 Inst. 247. For which see LONDON.

COURT-LEET, (leta visus francii plegii) is a court of record ordained for punishing offences against the crown; and is said to be the most ancient court of the land. 2 Danv. Abr. 289.

A leet is incident to a hundred, as a court baron to a manor; for by grant of a hundred, a leet passeth, and a hundred cannot be without a leet. Kitch. 70. Leets may be held by charter or prescription; but are commonly claimed by prescription, and are to be kept twice a year, one time within a month after Easter, and the other within a month after Michaelmas, at a certain place within the precinct; these are the usual times of holding the leet; but if it hath been a custom to keep this court at any other time of the year, it is good if due warning be given. 1 Inst. 115. 2 Inst. 72. The steward is the judge of this court, as the sheriff is in the torn; and he hath power to elect officers, as constables, tithingmen, &c. as well as punish offenders. 6 Rep. 12. 2 Inst. 199. See LEET.

COURT OF MARSHALSEA, (curia palatii) a court of record to hear and determine causes, kept once a week in Southwark. See MARSHALSEA.

COURT MARTIAL, (curia martialis) is a court held both in the military and naval service for punishing offences.

COURT OF PIE POWDRE, (curia pedis pulverisati) is a court held in fairs to do justice to buyers and sellers, and for redress of disorders committed in them, so called because they are most usual in summer, when the suitors to the court have dusty feet, and from the expedition in hearing causes proper thereunto, before the dust goes off the feet of the plaintiffs and defendants. 4 Inst. 272. It is a court of record incident to every fair, and to be held only during the time that the fair is kept. Doct. et Stud. c. 5. As to the jurisdiction, the cause of action for contract, slander, &c. must arise in the fair, or market, and not before at any former fair, or after the fair: it is to be for some matter concerning the same fair or market, and be done, complained of, heard and determined, the same day. Also the plaintiff must make oath that the contract, &c. was within the jurisdiction and time of the fair. Stat. 17 Ed. 4. c. 2. 2 Inst. 220.

The court of pie poudre may hold a plea of a sum above 40*s.* and it is said judgment may be given at another fair, at a court held there; and a writ of error lies upon a judgment given. Dyer 133. F. N. B. 18. This court may not meddle with any thing done in a market without a special custom for it; but what is done in a fair only; and not there for slanderous words, unless they concern matters of contract in the fair, as, where it is for slandering the wares of another, and not of his person in the same fair. Moor, ca. 854. The steward before whom the court is held is the judge; and the trial is by merchants and traders in the fair; and the judgment against the defendant shall be quod amercietur. If the steward proceeds contrary to the statute 17 Ed. 4. c. 2, he shall forfeit 5*l.*

COURT OF REQUESTS, (curia requisitionum) was a court of equity, of the same nature with the court of chancery, but inferior to it, and abolished by stat. 16 & 17 Car. 2. c. 10. 4 Inst. 97.

COURT OF THE LORD STEWARD OF THE KING's HOUSE. The lord steward, or, in his absence, the treasurer and comptroller of the king's house, and steward of the Marshalsea, may inquire of, hear, and determine, in this court, all treasons, murders, manslaughters, bloodsheds, and other malicious strikings, whereby blood shall be shed, in any of the palaces and houses of the king, or in any other house where his royal person shall abide. And this jurisdiction was given by the statute 33 Hen. 8, c. 12. 3 Inst. 140. But this court was at first intended only to inquire of and punish felonies, &c. by the king's servants against any lord or other person of the king's council. 3 Hen. 7. c. 14.

COURT OF STAR-CHAMBER, (curia cameræ stellatæ) a court erected by 3 Hen. 7. c. 8, but dissolved by stat. 17 Car. 12. c. 10.

COURTS OF THE UNIVERSITIES. The courts of the two universities of Oxford and Cambridge are the chancellor's courts. These two learned bodies enjoy the sole jurisdiction, in exclusion of the king's courts, over all civil actions and suits whatsoever, where a scholar or privileged person is one of the parties, excepting in such cases where the right of freehold is concerned. And these, by the university charter, they are at liberty to try and determine, either according to the common law of the land, or according to their own local customs, at their discretion; which has generally led them to carry on their process in a course much conformed to the civil law. 3 Black. 83.

These privileges were granted that the students might not be distracted from their studies by legal process from distant courts, and other forensic avocations. And privileges of this kind are of very high antiquity, being generally enjoyed by all foreign universities, as well as our own, in consequence of a constitution of the emperor Frederick, A. D. 1158. Cod. 4. tit. 13. But as to England in particular, the oldest charter containing this grant to the university of Oxford was 28 Hen. 3. A. D. 1244. And the same privileges were confirmed and enlarged by almost every succeeding prince down to king Henry 8, in the 14th year of whose reign the largest and most extensive charter of all was granted. One similar to which was afterward granted to Cambridge in the third year of queen Elizabeth. But yet, notwithstanding these charters, the privileges granted therein, of proceeding in a course different from the law of the land, were of so high a nature that they were held to be invalid; for though the king might erect new courts, yet he could not alter the course of law by his letters patent. Therefore in the reign of queen Elizabeth an act of parliament was obtained, 13 Eliz. c. 29, confirming all the charters of the two universities, and those of 14 Hen. 8, and 3 Eliz. by name: which blessed act, as sir Ed. Coke intitles it, 4 Inst. 227, established this high privilege without any doubt or opposition, Jenk. Cent. 2. pl. 88. Cent. 3. pl. 33. Hardr. 504. Godbolt, 201. or, as sir Matthew Hale, Hist. C. L. 33, very fully expresses the sense of the common law, and the operation of the act of parliament, "although king Henry 8, 14 A. R. sui, "granted to the university a liberal charter "to proceed according to the use of the "university, viz. by a course much con"formed to the civil law, yet that charter "had not been sufficient to have warranted "such proceedings without the help of "an act of parliament. And therefore in "13 Eliz. an act was passed, whereby that "charter was in effect enacted; and it is "thereby that at this day they have a kind "of civil law procedure, even in matters "that are of themselves of common law "cognizance, where either of the parties is "privileged." 3 Black. 84.

This privilege, so far as it relates to civil causes, is exercised at Oxford in the chancellor's court; the judge of which is the vice-chancellor, his deputy, or assessor. From his sentence an appeal lies to delegates appointed by the congregation, from thence to other delegates of the house of convocation; and if they all three concur in the same sentence it is final, at least by the statutes of the university, tit. 21, sec. 19, according to the rule of the civil law, Cod. 7.

70. 1. But if there be any discordance or variation in any of the three sentences, an appeal lies in the last resort to judges delegates, appointed by the crown under the great seal in chancery. 3 Black. 83.

But these particular jurisdictions, derogating from the general jurisdiction of the courts of common law, are ever taken strictly, and cannot be extended farther than the most explicitly express letter of their privileges will warrant. 3 Black. 83.

COURTS OF WALES (curiæ principalitatis Walliæ). The courts of the principality of Wales, and their jurisdiction, are settled by acts of parliament; and beside county-courts, hundred-courts, courts-leet, &c. by 34 and 35 Hen. 8, c. 26, sec. 5, it is enacted, that there shall be a court of grand sessions kept twice in every year in every of the 12 counties of Wales; and the justices of those courts may hold pleas of the crown in as large a manner as the king's bench, &c. and also pleas of assises, and all other pleas and actions real and personal, in as large a manner as the common pleas, &c. And errors in judgment before any of the justices in the great sessions shall be redressed by writ of error out of the chancery of England, returnable in B R. The proceedings in these courts are according to the laws of England. 3 Black. 77.

COURT-LANDS, Domains, or lands kept in the lord's hands to serve his family. Cowel. Blount.

COUSENAGE, an ancient writ. See Cosenage.

COUTHUTLAUGH, (from the Sax. couth, i. e. sciens, and utlagh, ex lex) a person that willingly and knowingly received a man outlawed, and cherished or concealed him, for which offence he was in ancient time to undergo the same punishment as the outlaw himself. Bract. lib. 3. tract. 2. c. 13.

CRAIERA, (crayer) a small vessel of lading, a hoy, or smack. Cowel. Blount.

CRAIL, an engine made use of to catch fish. Ibid.

CRANAGE, (cranagium) is a liberty to use a crane for drawing up goods and wares of burthen from ships and vessels, at any creek of the sea, or wharf, unto the land and to make a profit of it; it also signifies the monies paid and taken for the same. Cowel. Blount.

CRANNOCK, an ancient measure of corn. Ibid.

CRASTINO SANCTI VINCENTII, the morrow after the feast of St. Vincent the martyr, i. e. the 22d of January, which is the date of the statutes made at Merton, anno 20 Hen. 3. There are likewise certain return days of writs in terms, in the courts at Westminster, beginning with crastino, &c. as crastino animarum in Michaelmas term; crastino Purificationis beatæ Mariæ Virginis, in Hilary term; crastino Ascensionis Domini, in Easter term; and crastino Sanctæ Trinitatis, in Trinity term.

CRATES (Lat.), is an iron grate before a prison, used in the time of the Romans. 1 Vent. 304.

CRAVARE, to impeach. Cowel Blount.

CRAVEN, or CRAVENT, was a word of obloquy, where in the ancient trial by battle the victory should be proclaimed, and the vanquished acknowledge his fault, or pronounce the word craven, in the name of recreantisse, &c. and thereupon judgment was given forthwith; after which the recreant should become infamous, &c. 2 Inst. 248. 3 Inst. 221. 3 Black. Com. 340. Ibid. 4, 342.

CREAMER, a foreign merchant, but generally taken for one who has a stall in a fair or market. Blount.

CREANSOR, creditor, (of the Fr. croyance) signifies him that trusts another with any debt, money, or wares, in which sense it is used in Old Nat. Br. 66.

CREAST, or CREST, (crista) any imagery, or carved work, to adorn the head of wainscot, &c. like our modern cornice; but this word is now applied by the heralds to their devices set over a coat of arms. Kennet's Paroch. Antiq. 573.

CRECHE, a drinking-cup. Cowel. Blount.

CREDITORS. See Bankrupt, Conscience, courts of, and other titles.

CREEK, (creca, crecca) is a part of a haven where any thing is landed from the sea. Cromp. Juriſd. fol. 110.

CREMENTUM COMITATUS. The sheriffs of counties anciently answered in their accounts for the improvement of the king's rents above the ancient vicontiel rents, under the title of crementum comitatus, or firma de cremento comitatus. Hale's Sher. Acc. p. 36.

CREPARE OCULUM, to put out an eye, which had a pecuniary punishment annexed to it. Cowel. Blount.

CRETINUS, (cretena) a sudden stream or torrent. Ibid.

CROCIA, the crosier or pastoral staff, so called a similitudine crucis, which bishops, &c. had the privilege to carry as the common ensign of their religious office, on being invested in their prelacies, by the delivery of such a crosier. Cowel. Blount.

CROCIARIUS, the crociary or cross-bearer, who, like our verger, went before the prelate and bore his cross. Ibid.

CROFT, (Sax. croftum and crofta) a little close adjoining to a dwelling-house, and enclosed for pasture or arable, or any particular use. Ibid.

CROISES, and croisado, are mentioned in our ancient law-books. Ibid.

CROK, (crocus) turning up the hair into curls or croks. Ibid.

CROP, (croppu) the seeds or products of the harvest in corn, &c. Fleta, lib. cap. 82.

CROSS BILL, in equity, when a defendant has any relief to pray against a plaintiff, he must do it by an original bill of his own, which is cal'ed a cross bill. 3 Black. 448.

CROSS-BOWS. None shall shoot in, or keep any cross-bow, hand-gun, hagbut, &c. but those who have lands of the value of 100*l. per ann.* and no person shall travel with a cross-bow bent, or gun charged, except in time of war; or shoot within a quarter of a mile of any city, or market-town, unless for defence of himself or his house, or at a dead mark, under the penalty of 10*l.* Stat. 33 Hen. 8. cap. 6.

CROSS REMAINDERS, are where an estate tail is limited to one person, and for default of such issue then over to another in tail, with or without other remainders over. 2 Black. 381.

CROSSES. By stat. 13 Eliz. c. 2, crosses, beads, &c. used by the Roman catholics, are prohibited to be brought into this kingdom on pain of a præmunire, &c.

CROWN, (corona) signifies the possessions and dignity of a king of any kingdom. The crown of England is, by common law and constitutional custom hereditary; and this in a manner peculiar to itself; as the right of inheritance may, under peculiar circumstances, from time to time be changed or limited by act of parliament, under which limitations the crown still continues hereditary. 1 Black. Com. 191. For after the abdication of James 2. the lords spiritual and temporal, and commons, lawfully representing all the estates of the people of the realm, invited over William prince of Orange, and the princess Mary, eldest daughter of James 2. to take care of their rights and liberties, whom they declared to be king and queen of England. And by stat. 1 W. & M. c. 2, reciting the declaration of the lords and commons for securing the liberties of the kingdom, upon which the prince and princess of Orange accepted the crown, the said prince and princess were recognised king and queen of England, &c. for their lives, and the life of the survivor of them; and after their deaths the crown was settled on the heirs of the body of the said princess, and for want of such issue to the princess Anne of Denmark, sister to the queen, and the heirs of her body.

Also by 12 W. 3, c. 2, (after the decease of queen Mary without issue) the princess Sophia of Hanover, daughter of Elizabeth, eldest daughter of James 1. was declared next in succession after king William, and the princess Anne, and their issue; and the crown to remain to the princess Sophia, and the heirs of her body, being protestants.

By virtue of which last statute his Majesty king George the first, eldest son of the princess Sophia, on the death of her majesty queen Anne without issue, the said princess Sophia being likewise dead, came to the possession of the crown of these realms. But by these last acts papists are rendered incapable to inherit the crown of England, and subjects are absolved from their allegiance to such persons coming to the crown. 1 Black. Com. 191.

CROWN-OFFICE. This is an office belonging to the court of king's bench, of which the king's coroner, or attorney there is commonly master; in which the attorney-general and clerk of the crown exhibit informations for crimes and misdemeanors, the one ex officio, and the other by order of court.

CROY, signifies marsh land. Cowel. Blount.

CROYSES, (cruce signati) is used by Britton for pilgrims, because they wear the sign of the cross upon their garments. Bracton, lib. 5, par. 2, cap. 2, and par. 5, cap. 9.

CRUSTUM, was a garment of purple, mixed with many colours. Cowel. Blount.

CRY DE PAIS. On a robbery, or other felony done, hue and cry may be raised by the country in the absence of the constable, which is called cry de pais. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 100.

CRYPTA, a chapel, or oratory under ground. Cowel. Blount.

CUCKING-STOOL, (tumbrellum) is an engine invented for the punishment of scolds and unquiet women, by ducking them in water, called in ancient times a tumbrel, and sometimes a trebuchet. Lamb. Eiren. lib. 1. c. 12. It was anciently also a punishment inflicted upon brewers and bakers transgressing the laws, who were thereupon in such a stool immersed over head and ears in stercore, some stinking water. Blount.

CUDE. A cude cloth is a chrysom or face-cloth for a child baptized. Ibid.

CUI ANTE DIVORTIUM, was a writ that a woman divorced from her husband had to recover lands and tenements which she had in fee simple, or in tail, or for life, from him to whom her husband did alienate them during the marriage, when she could not gainsay it. Reg. Orig. 233. F. N. B. 240. And the heir shall have a sur cui ante divortium where the wife dieth before the action brought, as well as she shall have a sur cui in vita: But of an estate-tail the heir shall not have sur cui in vita ante divortium, but shall be put to his formedon in the descender. New Nat. Br. 454. 3 Black. Com. 183.

CUI IN VITA, is a writ of entry which a widow has against him to whom her husband alienated her lands or tenements in his life-time, which must contain in it, that during his life she could not withstand it. Reg. Orig. 233. F. N. B. 195.

CULAGIUM, is when a ship is laid up in the dock to be repaired. Cowel. Blount.

CULPRIT, is a reply of a proper officer in behalf of the king, affirming a criminal to be guilty after he had pleaded Not guilty, without which the issue to be tried is not joined. It is compounded of two words, viz. cul and prit, the one an abbreviation of culpabilis, and the other derived from the French word prest, i. e. ready, and is as much as to say that he is ready to prove the offender guilty. 4 Black. Com. 333.

CULTURA. This word is often found in old writings, and signifies a parcel of arable land. Blount.

CULVERTAGE, (culvertagium) is said by some persons to be derived from culum & vertere, to turn tail; and in this sense sub nomine culvertagii was taken to be on pain of cowardice, or being accounted cowards. But in the opinion of others it rather signifies some base slavery, or the confiscation of an estate, being a feudal term for the lands of the vassal, forfeited and escheating to the lord; and sub nomine culvertagii, in this signification, was under pain of confiscation. Mat. Par. 1212.

CULWARD, and CULVERD, words used for a coward, or cowardice. Chart. Temp. Ed.].

CUNA CERVISIÆ, a tub of ale. Domesday. Cowel. Blount.

CUNEUS, a mint or place to coin money: cuneum monetum signifies the king's stamp for coinage, and from the word cune is derived coin. Ibid.

CUNTEY-CUNTEY, was a kind of trial, as appears by Bracton, by the ordinary jury. Bract. lib. 4. tract. 3, c. 18.

CURAGULUS, one who takes care of a thing. Mon. Ang. tom. 2. Cowel. Blount.

CURA MONASTERII, an officer so called, who had the charge of a monastery.

CURATE, (curatus) is he who represents the incumbent of a church, parson or vicar, and officiates divine service in his stead. He is to be licensed and admitted by the bishop or ordinary; and when a curate has the approbation of the bishop he usually appoints the salary too; and in such case, if he be not paid, the curate has a proper remedy in the ecclesiastical court, by a sequestration of the profits of the benefice; but if he hath no license from the bishop he is put to his remedy at common law, where he must prove the agreement, &c. Right. Clerg. 127.

By 12 An. stat. 2, c. 12, when a rector or vicar presents a curate to the ordinary to be licensed, the ordinary may appoint a stipend to such curate, according to the cure, not exceeding 50*l.* nor less than 20*l.* per ann. And by 36 Geo. 3. c. 83, the bishop or ordinary may appoint a stipend to curates of 75*l.* per ann. where the incumbent does not reside four months, with the use of the parsonage house for 12 calendar months, or a further allowance of 15*l.* per ann. in lieu thereof, sec. 1. But the grant of the house may be revoked; and the curate neglecting to deliver it up is to forfeit his salary unpaid, and 50*l.* sec. 2. Churches augmented according to 1 Geo. 1. stat. 2, c. 10, by queen Anne's bounty, are to be deemed benefices presentative; and the officiating curate may have a like stipend, sec. 3. And bounties held with augmented cures may be held by the present incumbents, s. 4.

The bishop or ordinary may appoint the stipend to officiating curates of perpetual curacies not augmented, sec. 5. The ordinary may license curates employed, though no nomination shall have been made to him by the incumbent; and may revoke any license, subject to appeal to the archbishop.

By 43 Geo. 3. c. 84, and c. 109, curates may take leases of the impropriate parsonages of their parishes, but where not occupied by a spiritual person before July 1803, the license of the bishop shall be necessary, sec. 7, 8.

A curate having no fixed estate in his curacy, not being instituted and inducted, may be removed at pleasure by the bishop or incumbent. Noy. But there are perpetual curates, as well as temporary, who are appointed where tithes are impropriate, and no vicarage endowed: these are not removable; and the impropriators are obliged to find them, some whereof have certain portions of the tithes settled on them. Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 8.

CURATOR, is the guardian of an infant. 1 Black. 460.

CURFEU, (of the Fr. couvrir, i. e. tegere, and feu, ignis,) signifies the ringing of a bell, or evening peal, by which William I. called the conqueror, commanded every person to rake up or cover over his fire, and put out his light. And in many places of England at this day, where a bell is customarily rung towards bed-time, it is said to ring curfew. Stow's Annals.

CURIA. This word was sometimes taken for the persons, as feudatory and other customary tenants, who did their suit and service at the court of the lord. Kennet's Paroch. Antiq. 139. See Court.

CURIA ADVISARE VULT, when judgment is staid on matters of difficulty requiring the deliberation of the judges, the entry is curia advisare vult. Shep. Epit. 682.

CURIA CURSUS AQUÆ, a court held by the lord of the manor of Gravesend for the better management of barges and boats using the passage on the river Thames from thence to London, and plying at Gravesend-bridge. See stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 26.

CURIA CLAUDENDA, is a writ to compel another to make a fence or wall, which he ought to make between his land and the plaintiff's, on his refusing or deferring to do the same. Reg. Orig. 155.

CURIA DOMINI, the lord's house, hall, or court, where all the tenants attend at the time of keeping courts. Cowel. Blount.

CURIA PENTICIARUM, is a court held by the sheriff of Chester, in a place there called the Pendice or Pentice: and it is probable its being originally kept under a Penthouse, or open shed covered with boards, gave it its denomination. Ibid.

CURNOCK, a measure containing four bushels, or half a quarter. Fleta, lib. 2. c. 12.

CURRICULUS, the year, or course of a year. Cowel. Blount.

CURSING. See SWEARING.

CURSITORS, (clerici de cursu) clerks belonging to the Chancery, who make out original writs; and are called clerks of course, in their oath appointed 18 Ed. 3. stat. 5. There are of these clerks twenty-four in number, which make a corporation of themselves; and to each clerk is allotted a division of certain counties, in which they exercise their functions. 2 Inst. 670.

CURSONES TERRÆ, is used for ridges of land. 14 Ed. 2. Cowel. Blount.

CURSORIÆ, a sort of light ships or swift sailers. Ibid.

CURTESY OF ENGLAND, (jus curialitatis Angliæ) is where a man taketh a wife seised in fee-simple, or fee-tail general, or as heiress in special tail, and hath issue by her, male or female, born alive, which by any possibility may inherit, and the wife dies; the husband holds the lands during his life; and is called tenens per legem Angliæ, or tenant by the curtesy of England; because this privilege is not allowed in any other country, except Scotland.

Four things are requisite to give an estate by the curtesy, viz. marriage, seisin of the wife, issue, and death of the wife. Co. Lit. 30. Therefore if land descend to the wife after the husband hath issue by her; or if the issue be dead at the time of her death, being born alive; the husband shall be tenant by the curtesy. And it is not material whether it was baptised, or ever heard to cry, for if it is born alive, it is enough. 1 Nels. Abr. 578. But the child must be such as by possibility may inherit; and therefore if land be given to a woman, and the heirs male of her body, and she takes husband and hath issue a daughter, and dies; as this issue cannot possibly inherit, the husband shall not be tenant by the curtesy. Terms de Ley.

If the child is ripped forth of the mother's belly, after her death, though it be alive, it will not entitle tenancy by the curtesy; for this ought to begin by the issue, and be consummate by the death of the wife, and the estate of tenant by the curtesy should avoid the immediate descent. Ibid.

But there is no tenancy by the curtesy of copyhold lands, except there be a special custom for it. Plowd. 263.

CURTEYN, (curtana) was the name of king Edward the confessor's sword: which is the first sword carried before the kings of England at their coronation: and it is said the point of it is broken as an emblem of mercy. Mat. Paris. in Hen. 3. Cowel. Blount.

CURTILAGE, (curtilagium) from the Fr. cour, court, and Sax. leagh locus) is a court-yard, back-side, or piece of ground lying near and belonging to a dwelling-house. 4 Ed. 1. cap. 1. 35 H. 8. c. 4. 39 Eliz. c. 10. 9 Rep. 64.

CURTILES TERRÆ, court lands. It is recorded, that among our Saxon ancestors, the Thanes or nobles who possessed Bockland, or hereditary lands, divided them into inland and outland: the inland was that which lay most convenient for the lord's mansion-house; and therefore the lords kept that part in their own hands, for the support of their families, and for hospitality: afterwards the Normans called these lands terras dominicales, the domains, or lord's lands: the Germans termed them terras indominicatas, lands in the lord's own use: and the Feudists, terras curtiles, lands appropriate to the court or house of the lord. Spelm. of Feuds, c. 5.

CUSTANTIA, the same with custagium, which signifies costs. Cowel. Blount.

CUSTODE ADMITTENDO, and CUSTODE AMOVENDO, writs for the admitting or removing of guardians. Reg. Orig.

CUSTODES LIBERTATIS ANGLIÆ AUTHORITATE PARLIAMENTI, was the style in which writs and all judicial process did run during the grand rebellion, from the murder of king Charles I. till the usurper Oliver was declared protector, &c. mentioned and declared to be traiterous, by statute 12 Car. 2. c. 3.

CUSTODIAM DARE. was taken for a gift or grant for life. Du Cange.

CUSTOM, (consuetudo) is a law not written, established by long usage, and the consent of our ancestors. And if it is universal, then it is common law: if particular to this or that place, then it is custom. 3 Salk. 112.

And general customs which are used throughout England, and are the common law, are to be determined by the judges: but particular customs, such as are used in some certain town, borough, city, &c. shall be determined by jury. Doct. & Stud. c. 7, 10: 1 Inst. 110. See also London.

CUSTOM OF MERCHANTS. These are particular customs prevailing among merchants which being in furtherance of trade, are supported by the common law, and upon those customs have originated the laws relating to bills of exchange, marine insurances, and many other matters.

CUSTOMS (custuma) are duties payable to the crown for goods exported and imported, and are due to the king of common right; first, because the subject hath leave to depart the kingdom, and to export the commodities thereof; secondly, for the interest which the king hath in the sea, and as he is guardian of, and maintains all the ports, wherein the commodities are exported or imported; and lastly, for that the king protects merchants from enemies and pirates. Dyer 43.

These duties have been from time to time settled by act of parliament, and as they now stand are ascertained and fully fixed by the tables and per centages contained in a very voluminous act, viz. 49 Geo. 3. c. 98.

These duties of customs began in the reign of Ed. 1. when the parliament granted him 3*d.* in the pound for all merchandizes exported and imported. Dyer 165.

And the following is a compendious summary of all such acts as relate generally to the customs, and what is termed smuggling, from the earliest period to the present time, so far as the same appear to remain in force.

By 27 Ed. 3. stat. 2. c. 16. credit shall be given to letters brought by merchants aliens, or to their oaths, of the value of their goods; and sheriffs, mayors, or other officers, wrongfully meddling with the goods of such merchants shall pay quadruple damages.

By 38 Ed. 3. c. 6. the owner of a ship shall not forfeit for a small thing therein, not customed, without his knowledge.

By 14 Ric. 2. c. 10. no customer or comptroller shall have any ship of his own, nor meddle with the freight of ships; and he shall not enjoy such office for life, but only during the king's pleasure. Also 17 Ric. 2. c. 5.

By 1 Hen. 4. c. 13. customers and comptrollers shall be resident upon their offices, without making any deputy.

By 4 Hen. 4. c. 20. merchandizes entering in, or going out, shall be charged and discharged in the great ports, and not in creeks, upon pain of forfeiture.

By 4 Hen. 4. c. 21. searchers shall not let their offices to farm, nor occupy them by deputy, nor take more than shall be ordained to them, nor be host to any merchant or mariner.

By 11 Hen. 4. c. 2. no common innkeeper in any city or borough, shall be a customer, comptroller, or searcher there.

By 13 Hen. 4. c. 5. all customers, comptrollers, and collectors, shall be constantly resident upon their offices, nor be absent three weeks, unless commanded of record.

By 3 Hen. 6. c. 3. customer, collector, or comptroller of the king's customs, concealing the same when entered and paid, shall forfeit the treble value of the merchandizes.

By 11 Hen. 6. c. 15. customers and comptrollers shall deliver warrants to discharge merchants that have paid their custom.

By 20 Hen. 6. c. 5. no customer, comptroller, or his servant, shall have any ship of his own, nor use merchandize, keep an inn, or a wharf, or be a factor to another.

By 28 Hen. 6. c. 5. officer of the customs making an arrest or distress upon any ships for an unlawful cause, shall pay 40*l.* on conviction.

By 31 Hen. 6. c. 5. no letters patent of the offices of searcher, gauger of wine, aulneger, finder, weigher, collector or comptroller, shall be made but by warrant from the treasury.

By 1 Hen. 7. c. 2. and 11 Hen. 7. c. 14. an alien made denizen shall pay the same customs as before.

By 1 Hen. 8. c. 5. one Englishman may custom goods in another Englishman's name, and a merchant stranger may custom goods in another's name.

Customing goods, whereby the king loseth his custom, forfeits the goods, and also the value of the goods, to the party grieved. Ibid. and by 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 22. he shall forfeit all his goods and chattels.

By 1 Hen. 8. c. 5. no citizen of London, inhabitant of Cinque Ports, or other person being free of butlerage, shall custom the wines of others.

By 14 & 15 Hen. 8. c. 4. an Englishman, sworn subject to a foreign prince, shall pay such customs as aliens do; and if they return and dwell again in the realm, they shall pay such customs as other Englishmen.

By 22 Hen. 8. c. 8. tables of the custom duties shall be set up in every city or town where demanded; on pain of 5*l.* in every city, and 40*s.* in every town, for every month's neglect herein.

The scavage tables in London shall be approved and signed by the chancellor, treasurer, president of the council, lord privy seal, lord steward, and the two chief justices or four of them. Ibid.

By 1 Eliz. c. 11. no customable goods shall be laden or discharged but in the daylight, and in open place where there is a customer, upon pain of forfeiture. Masters of vessels receiving or discharging the loading otherwise, forfeit 100*l.* and they are to give notice to the customer of their departure under the like penalty.

No master of a ship shall discharge the same, before he hath certified the custom, upon pain of 100*l.* and no man shall enter goods in the customer's book, but in the owner's name. Ibid.

The penalty of an officer of the custom-house, concealing an offence, is 100*l.* Ibid.

This act not to prejudice the inhabitants of Anglesey, Flint, and Caernarvon. Ibid.

By 12 Car. 2. c. 4. the penalty for not paying the old subsidy, was forfeiture of goods; but merchant strangers shall be well intreated, and such whose goods be taken by pirates, or perish in the sea, may newly ship other goods to the amount of those lost, without paying any duty; and goods shipped in caracs or galleys shall pay alien duties.

By 12 Car. 2. c. 19. if any persons convey away any goods without entry and agreement for the custom, the chief magistrate of the port may grant a warrant of assistance, to search for and seize the same within a month after.

By 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 11. for preventing frauds and abuses in the customs, no ship arriving from beyond sea, shall be above three days coming from Gravesend to the place of her discharge in the Thames, unless hindered by winds or otherwise, and shall make true entry of the loading, on forfeiture of 100*l.*

Captains or other officers, shall take no goods on board ships outward bound, before entry thereof made at the custom-house, on the like pain. Ibid.

Officers of the customs may enter ships, and stay aboard to search; the penalty on embezzling or concealing goods is 100*l.* and persons beating or abusing the officers shall by the next justice of peace be committed to prison, and be fined not above 100*l.* Ibid.

Foreign built ships shall not have the privilege of English ships. Ibid.

No goods shall be water borne or landed, but in the presence of an officer of the customs, nor carried from one port to another, without a coquet. Officers of any port making false certificate, shall lose their employment, be incapacitated, and forfeit 50*l.* and any person counterfeiting a certificate, shall forfeit 100*l.* Ibid.

Owners of goods secretly conveyed beyond sea, uncustomed, shall forfeit the double value of the goods. Ibid.

Persons in prison relative to the custom or excise, not pleading within one term, judgment may be entered by default, and execution awarded against body and estate. Ibid.

No information shall be filed for recovery of any penalty by the laws of the customs or excise, unless entered in the attorney-general's name, or of some officer. Ibid.

By 9 Geo. 2. c. 35. persons apprehending, or maimed in apprehending of offenders against this act by running goods, shall be allowed 50*l*. reward, and if killed, their executors shall have the same.

Such offenders discovering two or more accomplices, three months after the offence, to the commissioners of the customs or excise, shall be discharged, and have the fifty pounds reward. Ibid.

The proof of entry and payment of duties, shall lie on such offenders, and all goods, weapons, furniture, and packages shall be forfeited. Ibid.

The rewards shall be paid by the respective receivers general, by order of the commissioners, on the judge's certificate of the offender's conviction; and the commissioners are to adjust the shares in case of difference. Ibid.

Persons lurking within five miles of the sea, or a navigable river, with intent to assist in running goods, not giving a good account of themselves to a justice, shall be sent to the house of correction, and be whipt, and kept to hard labour, and 20*s*. per head to the informer of such offenders shall be paid by the commissioners. Ibid.

Such persons desiring time to clear themselves of the accusation, shall be only imprisoned till satisfaction, or security given not to offend again. Ibid.

Watermen, porters, or others, found with prohibited or run goods, shall forfeit treble the value, or be imprisoned for not more than three months. Ibid.

Vessels arriving from foreign parts, with six pounds of tea on board, or brandy or spirits in casks, under six gallons (except for the use of the seamen) hovering within two leagues of the shore, all such goods, with the packages, shall be forfeited. Ibid.

Foreign goods taken in, or put out of any vessel, within four leagues of the British coasts, without payment of customs (unless in apparent necessity) shall be forfeited, and the master shall forfeit treble the value, and the vessel, if not above 100 tons. Ibid.

Fifty pounds penalty on offering to bribe an officer to connivance; and actions of assault upon officers, may be tried in any county of England. Ibid.

All goods found concealed, after the master's report at the custom-house, are forfeited, and the master shall forfeit treble the value. Ibid.

Officers may go on board coasting vessels, and search for prohibited goods, and continue on board during the vessel's stay in port; and every person obstructing shall forfeit 100*l*. Ibid.

Alehouse-keepers or the like persons, knowingly harbouring any person against whom process hath issued, for obstructing officers, and after six days notice in the gazette, of such persons absconding, and writing fixed to the door of the church, shall forfeit 100*l*. Ibid.

Sheriffs, mayors, and like officers, on request in writing of a known solicitor for the customs or excise, shall grant special warrants for apprehending offenders, and they shall be indemnified from escapes. Ibid.

In trials of seizures, judges shall proceed to the merits of the cause, without inquiring into the fact or form of making the seizure. Ibid.

Officers and their assistants may oppose force to force, and if carried before a justice for wounding or killing, shall be admitted to bail. Ibid.

The court of king's bench, or court of justiciary in Scotland, may bail persons committed on this act. Ibid.

By 15 Geo. 2. c. 31. claimants of vessels seized for unlawful importation shall give security to pay costs.

By 19 Geo. 2. c. 34. made perpetual by 43 Geo. 3. c. 157. armed persons in the number of three, assembled to assist in the illegal exporting of wool, or other prohibited goods, or in the running of goods, or appearing in disguise with such goods, or who shall resist officers in the execution of their duty, are guilty of felony without clergy.

Orders for offenders to surrender in forty days, shall be published in two successive gazettes, and on their not surrendering, to be deemed convicted of felony without clergy. Ibid.

Persons harbouring such offenders shall be transported for seven years. Ibid.

Where officers are wounded in securing offenders, the hundred shall make full satisfaction and amends, and pay 100*l.* to the executors of each officer killed. Ibid.

Offenders discovering two or more accomplices shall receive 50*l.* and be acquitted. Ibid.

On information for seizures, if there was a probable cause for seizure, the person who seized shall not pay costs: and in actions for the seizure, if there was a probable cause, the defendant shall not be liable to costs. Ibid.

By 21 Geo. 2. c. 2. drawbacks shall be allowed on exportation within three years, except where any act of parliament has declared that no drawback shall be allowed.

By 28 Geo. 2. c. 21. no spirituous liquors imported in vessels under sixty gallons shall be entered or reported for exportation; and all tea above six pounds, found in British vessels (excepting those of the East India company) arriving from foreign parts, shall be forfeited.

By 3 Geo. 3. c. 22. vessels or goods seized by officers of the customs, shall be publicly sold after condemnation, at such places as the commissioners of the customs shall think proper.

By 5 Geo. 3. c. 43. unentered goods found concealed in packages sent to the king's warehouse, or brought on shore by special sufferance, and not specified, are forfeited.

Officers seizing and not prosecuting, instead of a moiety, shall have only one third of the value.

By 14 Geo. 3. c. 89. a capias requiring bail, may issue in the first process for smuggling.

The 12 Geo. 1. c. 28. as to informations is extended to suing of penalties for importing, wearing, or using prohibited goods, where the king is entitled to any part. Ibid.

By 16 Geo. 3. c. 48. bonds taken relating to the customs, and not prosecuted in five years (except for duties or money due to the crown, or for the good behaviour of officers) shall be void, and the commissioners shall order them to be cancelled. s. 2.

But by 48 Geo. 3. c. 84, all such bonds shall remain in force and may be prosecuted within two years from the time limited in the condition.

By 17 Geo. 3. c. 41, unshipping goods at sea from homeward bound East India ships at any distance from the coast, (unless through apparent necessity) is a forfeiture thereof, and of the vessel into which they are taken, and treble value for assisting; and putting on board East India ships, wine, brandy, or the like at sea, after clearance (except stores for the voyage) is the like forfeiture.

Bonds for the exportation of prohibited goods, or goods intitled to a drawback, shall not be discharged without a certificate of the landing; and commanders of ships to the Baltic shall give a particular of their landing to the British consul in ten days. Ibid.

By 18 Geo. 3. c. 40, the 17 Geo. 3. c. 41, as to certificates and proof for their discharge of bonds for exportation of goods prohibited is repealed; and the part relating to the Baltic is extended to Denmark, Norway, and Archangel.

By 19 Geo. 3. c. 48, masters of ships removing their vessels out of the stream, except to the lawful quays in the port of London, before the goods are discharged, forfeit 100*l.*

By 19 Geo. 3. c. 69, foreign brandy or other spirits imported from any part of Europe, in casks less than sixty gallons, (except two gallons for each seaman) shall be forfeited with the ship.

If tea, coffee, foreign brandy, or other spirits or goods liable to forfeiture, be found on board any ship in port, or within two leagues, not more than 200 tons, such ship and tackle shall be forfeited. Ibid.

The 8 Geo. 1. c. 18, is extended to boats with six oars, but not to commanders of the king's ships, nor to tow boats at Bristol. Ibid.

Ships and other things forfeited may be seized by officers of the customs or excise, and if not fit for the king's service shall be broken up and sold; and no writ of delivery shall issue out of the exchequer for any ship ordered to be burnt, or used for the king's service or broken up, unless the officer seizing shall delay proceeding three terms, and then not without good security for double value. Ibid.

Penalty 300*l.* on master of a ship coming from abroad (not an East India ship) having more than 100lb. of tea, or 100 gallons of spirits (above two gallons for each seaman) in casks under sixty gallons. Ibid.

Officers of the customs or excise may arrest the master and persons assisting in running goods, and justices of peace may commit them. Ibid.

And such master shall enter into a recognisance with one sufficient security for 300*l.* to enter appearance to informations, and refusing so to do shall be imprisoned. 26 Geo. 3. c. 77.

Two or more travelling together, armed or disguised, with horses or carriages, laden with more than 6lb. of tea, or five gallons of spirits, without a permit, may be arrested and committed, as also any one obstructing the officer, attempting a rescue, or damaging the casks, the officer to enter into a recognizance to prosecute, and the charges to be paid by the receiver-general of the customs. 19 Geo. 3. c. 69.

Persons so committed may be tried at the quarter sessions, and if convicted, to be committed for not more than three years nor less than one, or to serve the king by sea or land, and then not to be discharged in less than five years. Ibid.

By 24 Geo. 3. c. 47, if any vessel shall be found at anchor, or hovering on the coasts (unless by distress of weather) having on board any foreign spirits in a less cask than sixty gallons, or any wine in casks, six pounds of tea, or twenty pounds of coffee, such vessel with its cargo shall be forfeited; but on proof that such small quantities were on board without the privity of the owner or master, such vessel shall not be forfeited, if of more than 100 tons burthen, but the goods found on board shall be forfeited.

Cutters, luggers, shallops, or wherries shall be forfeited, and all armed vessels; but vessels may have two carriage guns, four pounders, and two muskets for every ten men. Ibid.

This is not to extend to vessels belonging to the revenue or government offices, or such as are licensed by the admiralty, or have arms on board for exportatiop, by way of merchandize. Ibid.

No fee is to be taken for licenses. Owners of licensed vesels shall bring their licenses to the proper officer at the port of exportation, and shall give security not to employ the vessel in the importation or landing of tea, or foreign spirits, or any prohibited goods.

If any person shall maliciously shoot at any ship belonging to the crown, or shoot at, or dangerously wound, any officer of the navy, customs, or excise, when acting in the execution of his duty, he shall suffer death as a felon. Ibid.

If any person be charged with any offence made felony by this act, before a judge of the court of king's bench, if in England, or before one of the lords of justiciary, if in Scotland, such judge shall return the information to one of the secretaries of state to be laid before the king in council; who may order the offender to surrender himself to such judge, who shall commit him: which order is to be published in the gazette, and transmitted to the sheriffs, who shall proclaim the same in two market towns; offenders not surrendering shall suffer death as felons, and the court may award execution against them, as if they had been convicted. Ibid.

Any person harbouring such offenders after the time appointed for their surrender, and being prosecuted within a year after, shall on conviction, be guilty of felony and be transported for seven years. Ibid.

This is not to prevent the apprehending such offenders by the ordinary course of law. Persons obstructing officers of the navy, customs, or excise, in execution of their duty, may be carried before a justice, who may commit them, and on conviction they are to be sent to hard labour on the Thames for three years; and persons charged with such offences may be committed until the next quarter sessions. Ibid.

Offences may be tried in any county, and persons charged with a misdemeanor shall not be admitted to bail, without entering into a recognizance to appear, and stand trial. Ibid.

Officers and seamen wounded in the revenue service shall be provided for by the treasury, and commissioners of customs shall reward officers, who shall take offenders against this act. Ibid.

If suspected vessels shall not bring to, when chased by any cutter in the service of the navy, having the proper pendant hoisted, the commander may shoot into them. Vessels not in the service of the navy, or customs or excise, shall not hoist such pendant on penalty of 500*l.* Ibid.

The penalties and restrictions in an act 8 Geo. 1. and in 19 Geo. 3. c. 69. relating to certain boats, are extended to boats exceeding twenty-eight feet in length, or more in proportion than three feet and an half in length to one in breadth. Ibid.

Masters of vessels arriving at any port in this kingdom, or going outwards in ballast, shall make a true report of their vessels, and answer questions relative to the voyage, put to them by the proper officer; on penalty of 100*l.* Ibid.

Wine imported in any vessel not exceeding sixty tons burthen, shall be forfeited, as also the vessel. Goods reported, contents unknown, may be opened, and if any prohibited goods are found, they shall be forfeited. Ibid.

Officers of customs shall have like power to seize tea and spirits removing without permit, as officers of excise; and seizures of horses, boats, and carriages, for removing of customable goods, shall be determined by two justices. Ibid.

Officers making any collusive seizure, or agreeing not to seize any ship or goods, or taking any bribe, shall forfeit 500*l.* and be incapacitated; and every person giving or offering such bribe, shall forfeit 500*l.* Ibid.

Vessels and goods forfeited by this act, or by 19 Geo. 3. c. 69. may be seized by any officer of customs or excise; but condemned vessels, if fit for his majesty's service, may be sold to the officers appointed by the admiralty. Ibid.

All the regulations in 23 Geo. 3. c. 70, (see Excise) touching actions to be brought against excise officers, and their aiders, are extended to officers of the customs. Ibid.

No claim shall be entered to any vessel or goods seized, and returned into the exchequer, unless in the real names of the owners or proprietors thereof, which are to be sworn to before a baron, and taking a false oath incurs the pains of perjury. Ibid.

Every claimant of any vessel or goods seized (if resident in Great Britain) shall be bound with two sureties, in a penalty of 100*l.* to pay costs; but if not resident, his attorney shall be bound in like manner. Ibid.

By 26 Geo 3. c. 40. no goods shall be imported into Great Britain, in any vessel belonging to British subjects, unless the master have on board a manifest, containing the particulars of the contents, where laden, the name and built of such ship, the tonnage, the commander's name, the port to which it belongs, and a true account of the whole cargo.

No wine shall be imported from any place not subject to the crown of Great Britain, unless the master has a proper manifest on board. Ibid.

And certificates are requisite on the importation of goods, as heretofore. Ibid.

Masters of vessels, before clearing out for Great Britain, from any of the British dominions in foreign parts, shall deliver a manifest to the chief officer of the customs. Ibid.

Truth of the manifest shall be verified on oath before the consul relative to wine shipped in foreign parts for Great Britain. Ibid.

Masters of vessels importing goods without a proper manifest, forfeit double the value of the goods, with the full duties. Ibid.

Masters of vessels, on arrival within four leagues of the British coast, are to produce their manifest to the first officer of the customs who shall come on board, and give him a copy thereof. Officer shall certify such production on the back of the original manifest, and transmit a copy to the proper officers at the port of consignment. The master is not required to give more than two copies of his manifest. Ibid.

The master neglecting to produce his manifest, or to give a copy thereof to the proper officer, forfeits double the value of the goods, and all the duties, and the officer neglecting to certify the production thereof forfeits 100*l.* Ibid.

Master and mate of any such vessel, who shall suffer bulk to be broken within the said limits, unauthorised by the proper officer, shall forfeit 200*l.* each (except through bad weather). Ibid.

Goods not stored in the main hold shall be taken an account of by the proper officer, who shall first come on board, who is to mark or seal the packages; and if any marks on such goods shall be defaced, with the privity of the master and mate, they shall forfeit 200*l.* each. Ibid.

Masters of every vessel importing such goods shall make entry upon oath, of her burthen and lading, before the chief officer at the port of importation; and deliver his manifest to him; on penalty of 200*l.* Ibid.

The master, if the goods reported do not agree with the manifest, shall forfeit 200*l.* But if it is proved that the cargo was taken aboard in foreign parts, and that no part has been unshipped, or that the manifest is lost, or defaced without fraud, or incorrect only by mistake, the penalties are not to be incurred. Ibid.

Masters permitting goods to be thrown overboard or destroyed after arrival within the limits aforesaid, unless through necessity, shall forfeit 200*l.* Ibid.

Importers, within twenty days after the master's report, shall make entry, with the proper officer, of all goods imported by them, and pay the duties; unless such goods may be warehoused upon bond, Ibid.

No vessel shall be cleared out for foreign parts, until the master and mate have given bond not to land illegally any goods on board; and no bounty or drawback shall be allowed on any goods exported in bales press packed, unless the packer make oath of the quantity and quality of the goods packed. Ibid.

Masters who shall not deliver cocquets to the proper officer shall forfeit 100*l.* and if the cargo shall not be agreeable thereto, he shall likewise forfeit 20*l.* for every package missing. Ibid.

Debentures on exportation of goods entitled to a drawback or bounty, shall be made out in the names of the real owners; but companies trading by a joint stock may employ an agent. Ibid.

No bounty or drawback shall be paid for goods exported to Ireland, Guernsey or Jersey, without a proper certificate. Ibid.

Goods entitled thereto shall not be put on board by any persons (except revenue officers) other than such as shall be licensed by the commissioners of the customs, who are to grant such licences to the persons now entitled by law to carry goods on board, they finding proper security. Ibid.

Masters of vessels who shall neglect to bring to at the usual places appointed for stationing revenue officers, shall forfeit 100*l.* Ibid.

Revenue officers on board shall have free access to the cabin, and may open locks. Ibid.

No goods, the growth or manufacture of any country beyond the Cape of Good Hope, shall be brought into London or Westminster, Southwark or the bills of mortality without a proper certificate that the duties have been duly paid; on forfeiture thereof with the carriages. The proof of the place to which such goods were removing shall lie on the claimant; but goods that were bought openly, or are private property, and used as domestic furniture may be removed without forfeiture thereof. Ibid.

Commanders of the king's ships of war may seize any vessels or goods subject to forfeiture. Ibid.

Witnesses shall be examined on oath before the surveyors general of the customs; and persons making a false oath shall be deemed guilty of perjury. Ibid.

If in a trial for seizure of goods, wherein a verdict is given for the claimant, there shall appear to have been a probable cause for such seizure, the defendant shall not be liable to costs or damages. Ibid.

All vessels and goods seized and condemned in the British colonies in America, shall be sold there, by public auction. Ibid.

By 27 Geo. 3. c. 13. all goods imported shall be entered at the custom-house, and landed in the presence of an officer, except fish, British taken, and turbots and lobsters.

The value of non-enumerated goods, shall be ascertained by the importer or proprietor making a declaration according to the form in the act, which shall bind as fully, as if it had been made on oath: and if such goods be undervalued, they are to be taken for the use of the crown, paying to the proprietor for the same the entered value, with 10 per cent. thereon, and the duties paid; which goods so taken for the use of the crown may be sold; and if they produce more than all costs and charges, a moiety of the overplus may be given to the officers who examine them. Ibid.

There is a similar clause in respect to goods which may be exported chargeable with duties according to their value.

Collectors of the customs shall account for money received for sale of goods undervalued, as for duties. Ibid.

The portage to masters of ships shall cease. Ibid.

Cambrics or French lawns may be imported, worn, or sold; but cambrics imported in ships of less than sixty tons burthen, and in bales not containing the quantity of 100 pieces, and French wines in packages, containing less than three dozen quarts, shall be forfeited. Ibid.

The commissioners of customs may settle the accounts of the collectors or receivers, who have applied money belonging to one branch of the revenue to another. Ibid.

The East India company shall pay, at the times they become due by law, their duties to the receiver general of the customs, whose receipt shall be received as cash by the collector. Ibid.

Duties collected in the port of London, shall be paid to the receiver general, on the days they are received. Ibid.

Monies due on debentures for drawbacks or premiums, if due in London, shall be paid by the receiver general. Ibid.

Such debentures not due in London, may be paid by the respective collectors at the out-ports. Ibid.

If goods on which duties are payable according to weight, tale, gauge, or measure, be damaged on the voyage, a proportionable allowance shall be made out of the duties. Ibid.

Goods shall continue to be laden and unladen, and the officers of the customs shall attend at the same hours, and the same fees shall be received as now established by law. Ibid.

The duties and drawbacks on specific quantities of goods shall apply proportionably to any less quantities. Ibid.

By 27 Geo. 3. c. 31. the regulations of 26 Geo. 3. c. 40. shall not tend to beer exported.

By 27 Geo. 3. c. 32. any cutter, lugger, shallop, wherry, sloop, smack, or yawl belonging to his majesty's subjects, found within four leagues of the coast, whose bowsprit exceeds two thirds of the vessel in length, shall be forfeited. Ibid.

Names of boats belonging to such vessels shall be painted on their sterns, on penalty of being forfeited. Ibid.

Boats not belonging to vessels shall have their names and the owners painted on their sterns, on penalty of being forfeited, if found within the limits of any port or within four leagues of the coast; but this is not to extend to any vessel in his majesty's service. Ibid.

If vessels having a licence from the admiralty shall be found out of the limits thereof, they may be seized, unless it be made appear that they were driven thereout by distress of weather. Ibid.

The licences shall be produced to officers of the revenue, who shall board such vessels within four leagues of the coast, otherwise the vessel may be seized. Ibid.

Vessels seized may be disposed of agreeable to 24 Geo. 3. c. 47. Ibid.

The officers of the customs may open all bales, casks and packages, on board any vessel wherein any packages for exportation have been reported; but this is not to extend to vessels coming from Asia, Africa, or America. Ibid.

The manifest required by 26 Geo. 3. c. 40. shall for all ships within the limits of the East India company's charters be delivered to and authenticated by the person who shall deliver the last dispatches: and for ships from China, by the company's chief supercargo there. Ibid.

Commissioners of the customs may direct the hull of any vessel seized in America or the West Indies, to be broken up, and the materials sold. Ibid.

All seized goods shall be stamped before they are delivered from his majesty's warehouses; and if any officer neglects to stamp such goods, or accepts any fee for stamping them, he forfeits 200*l.* and is disabled from serving his majesty. Ibid.

Persons counterfeiting such stamps shall be guilty of felony without clergy. Goods with counterfeit stamps shall be forfeited, and the person in whose custody they are found, shall forfeit 500*l.* and unauthorised persons having stamps in their custody shall also forfeit 500*l.* Ibid.

Commissioners of the customs may restore goods, and other things seized, on being satisfied that the forfeiture arose, without any design of fraud in the proprietor, on such conditions as they may think reasonable; and if such conditions are not complied with, they may be condemned; but proprietors accepting such conditions are not entitled to any recompence on account of the seizure. Ibid.

By 28 Geo. 3. c. 34. the commissioners of the customs and excise shall out of the king's share of seizures, reward the officer seizing any vessel liable to be broken up after condemnation, by paying them 10*s.* per ton for all vessels exceeding 4 tons, and 40*s.* for every boat not exceeding 4 tons, and also one half of the produce of the materials after deducting the charges.

If it shall appear to the commissioners that any condemned vessel is not proper for smuggling, but may be employed in fair mercantile trade, such vessel may be sold and applied in like manner.

Goods seized in pursuance of any act relative to the trade and revenue of the British colonies in America, may by order of the judge be delivered, on security by bond to answer double the value in case of condemnation. Ibid.

The collector and comptroller are to inquire into the sufficiency of the security, and certify the same to the judge before delivery. Ibid.

And this act does not permit the delivery of any goods except such as are perishable, or where the prosecutor wilfully delays the suit. Ibid.

Any open boat belonging to his majesty's subjects, and being of the length of 23 feet and upwards, the length of which shall be greater than in the proportion of three feet and an half to one foot in breadth, to be measured by a straight line from the fore-part of the stem to the aft-side of the transum or stern post aloft, found within any port or within four leagues of the coast shall be forfeited: and if any such open boat shall be eighteen feet long, and under twenty-four feet, from the fore-part of the stem to the aft-side of the transum or stern post aloft, and whose depth shall be more than in proportion of one inch and a quarter to every foot in length, the depth to be taken from the upper part of the plank next the keel to the top of the upper strake, it shall be forfeited with the vessel to which it belongs. Ibid.

All open boats belonging as aforesaid, of twenty-four feet and upwards, the depth of which shall be greater than in the proportion of one inch to one foot in length to be taken as aforesaid, shall be seized. Ibid.

But this act shall not authorise the seizing of any boat, on account of her built, employed in the navy, or revenue, or which is used on any canal, nor any boat licensed by the admiralty, if the licence is on board; nor any of the following open boats, viz.

By 28 Geo. 3. c. 37. "actions for any "thing done in pursuance of any act relating to the customs or excise, must be "brought in the proper county within three "months. The defendant may plead the "general issue, and if he succeeds, he has "treble costs." Ibid.

"If in an action for a seizure the claimer "recovers, he shall not have any costs; if "the court certifies that there was a probable cause of seizure, not greater damages "than 2*d.*; nor shall the defendant be imprisoned, or be fined above 1*s.*" Ibid.

"No writ shall issue against any person "acting under any act relating to the customs or excise, until one month's notice "shall be given of the cause of action, for "which the attorney is entitled to 20*s.* and "within that month the person may tender "amends. No evidence shall be received of "any act, except what is mentioned in the "notice; and if the defendant neglects to "tender amends within the month, he may "at any time before issue joined pay money "into court." Ibid.

By 30 Geo. 3. c. 43. the commissioners of the customs may order the expences of seizures of vessels to be paid out of his majesty's share of any seizure, and the officer to receive his full share of the net produce.

By 33 Geo. 3. c. 70. commissioners of the customs may direct their officers to examine goods damaged on the voyage, and to make a proportionable allowance out of the duties; but if the importer is not satisfied with the allowance, or the officers are incompetent to determine it, the directions of 27 Geo. 3. are to be followed. s. 5.

Vessels condemned, under 24 Geo. 3. sess. 2. c. 47. and which may be broken up or sold to private persons, may be sold to be used as privateers, and one moiety of the produce paid into the exchequer, and the other to the officer. s. 6.

By 24 Geo. 3. c. 50. persons obstructing officers of the navy, customs, or excise, in execution of their duty, may be prosecuted as for a misdemeanor, and shall not have time to traverse, but plead immediately, and if convicted they are to be sentenced to hard labour on the Thames, or some navigable river, or in the house of correction, for not exceeding three years. s. 5.

The 24 Geo. 3. c. 47. so far as relates to the vessels hereinafter mentioned to have arms on board is repealed. s. 6.

Every cutter, lugger, shalloon, wherry, smack, or yawl, of which the bottom is clench work, unless square-rigged, or fitted with a standing bowsprit, found within the limits of any of the ports, or within four leagues of the coast, or any distance as after mentioned, shall be forfeited with her furniture. s. 7.

Vessels having on board any spirits in any cask which shall not contain sixty gallons (except at the rate of two gallons for each seaman), or any wine in casks, (if the vessel shall not exceed sixty tons), or 6lb. of tea, or 20lb. of coffee, or any tobacco or snuff, exceeding together or separately 100lb.; or having on board any prohibited goods on a straight line between Walney and Great Ormshead, Burdsey Island and Shamble Head; the Lisard and the Prall; and the Prall and Bill of Portland; Cromer and the Spun Head; Flamborough Head to the Staples or the Mull of Galloway and Ayre in the Isle of Man; shall be forfeited with their furniture, as also open boats of the length of fourteen and under eighteen feet, and cutters, luggers, shallops, wherries, smacks, or yawls, to which they belong: but this is not to extend to whale-boats. s. 8, 9, 10.

Such last-mentioned vessels found within the said distances, having on board arms or ammunition without license, to be forfeited, except vessels from America, or the East or West Indies, or Africa, or the Mediterranean, or vessels in the service of the navy, victualling, ordnance, customs, excise, or post-office. s. 11.

By 35 Geo. 3, c. 31. the act 34 Geo. 3, c. 50, is extended to cutters, luggers, shallops, wherries, smacks, or yawls of any built whatever. s. 1.

By 36 Geo. 3, c. 82, no goods imported, (except diamonds, precious stones, and fresh fish,) shall be unshipped, though on Sundays or holidays, without the presence of the proper officer, on pain of forfeiture. s. 1.

Also, by 36 Geo. 3, c. 82, owners of vessels licensed pursuant to 24 Geo. 3. sess. 2, s. 47, are to give bond that if they are lost the license shall be delivered up, and the commissioners of the customs may at any time direct licenses to be cancelled. s. 3, 4.

By 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 51, the owner of every vessel licensed under 24 Geo. 3, sess. 2, c. 47, shall, before it sails, give bond that the same shall not be found within the limits prescribed by 34 Geo. 3, c. 50, or trade contrary to 27 Geo. 3. c. 32, and also that the vessels shall not be engaged in any other trade or employment than what is set forth in the license. s. 17.

By 42 Geo. 3. c. 82, vessels described in 24 Geo. 3. c. 41, or any other act, found hovering within eight leagues of the coast, shall be forfeited, with the cargo; and all pains and penalties, and all clauses in such acts relating to vessels described therein, found hovering within four leagues of the coast, shall extend to such vessels hovering within eight leagues, and their cargoes. s. 1, 2, 3.

And though in any trial it shall appear doubtful whether the vessel was within such limits, the jury shall find for the crown, if they are satisfied the vessel had prohibited goods on board. s. 4.

Officers of excise or customs may extinguish lights made for signals to smugglers (see 47 Geo. 3, sess. 2, c. 36, s. 37, infra) and convey offenders before a justice, who shall proceed against them as vagabonds, or take bail for their appearance. s. 10.

Persons so found making such lights shall be deemed rogues and vagabonds, within the meaning of 17 Geo. 2, c. 5, the powers of which act are extended to this for the purpose of punishing such offenders. s. 14, 12.

Persons shall be liable to be prosecuted only for one offence. s. 13.

By 43 Geo. 3, c. 68, pearls, emeralds, rubies, and other jewels, except diamonds, are to be entered and landed as other goods. s. 3.

Fish of British taking and curing caught by the crews of vessels built in Great Britain, Ireland, &c. and navigated and registered according to law, may be imported into Great Britain, duty free. s. 6.

Where goods on importation are chargeable according to the value, it shall be considered the same as at the port of their importation, which shall be ascertained according to 27 Geo. 3, c. 13, and if not truly valued, may be detained; and where on exportation according to the value, it shall be considered the same as at the port of exportation, &c. s. 12, 13.

If on making entry of such goods for exportation the real value cannot be ascertained, the officer of the customs may permit them to be exported upon oath that it cannot be ascertained, and bond being given for payment of the duties, and producing such documents as may be required by the commissioners of the customs. Bonds not chargeable with stamp-duties

Penalty for making false declaration of the value of such goods, forfeiture of the real value. s. 14, 15.

If goods are detained for not being truly valued the commissioners of the customs, upon proof that no fraud was intended, may direct the entry to be amended upon such terms as to them shall appear reasonable. s. 16.

Where the duties on goods imported by the East-India company are charged according to the value, it shall be ascertained by the gross price at their public sales. s. 18.

Persons bringing goods from the limits of the East-India company's charters as presents, or for private use, may enter them with the officer of the customs, and the value shall be ascertained as prescribed with respect to goods not imported by the company. s. 21.

But no goods shall be entered unless on proof that they are imported for private use. s. 23.

Tonnage-duties on vessels entering inwards or outwards from foreign parts shall be paid each voyage, and shall be computed according to their register. s. 28.

The duties charged according to weight are to be paid for in proportion to the actual weight, &c. of the articles, s. 42, and the allowance in weighing of goods, called draft, shall be discontinued. s. 43.

The commissioners of customs may close the accounts of collectors or receivers, and correct any erroneous application of the duties, which corrections shall be allowed by the commissioners for auditing the public accounts. s. 47.

By 43 Geo. 3, c. 128, during hostilities commissioners of the customs or excise may sell condemned vessels (see 24 Geo. 3, c. 47. s. 34,) to be commissioned as privateers. s. 5.

By 45 Geo. 3, c. 121, if vessels of subjects coming from foreign parts shall be found in any part of the British or Irish channels, or high seas, within 100 leagues of the coasts of Great Britain or Ireland, having spirits in casks less than 60 gallons, except two gallons for each of the crew; tea exceeding 6 lbs. or tobacco or snuff in packages of less than 450 lbs. weight (except loose tobacco not exceeding 5 lb. for each of the crew) the whole goods and ships shall be forfeited, s. 1; and vessels taking such articles on board on the high seas are subject to the like forfeiture. s. 2.

No foreign spirits shall be imported, exported, or carried coastwise, at Guernsey, Jersey, Alderney, or Sark, in ships of less than 100 tons, and casks of 60 gallons; tobacco in like ships, and in packages of 450 lbs.; wine in ships of not less than 60 tons, and in hogsheads. s. 3.

But licensed boats, not exceeding 10 tons, having 10 gallons of spirits or under, in casks of less than 60 gallons, or tobacco, snuff, or tea, not exceeding 50 lbs. each, on board for the supply of the isle of Sark, are not seizable. s. 5.

And the act is not to prevent the importation or exportation at Guernsey, Jersey, Alderney, or Sark, of wine in bottles, packed in cases, containing six dozen quart bottles; but, before exportation to this kingdom, bond shall be entered into for duly landing thereof. s. 5.

Vessels having on board spirits, wine, or tobacco, in illegal packages, and found hovering within two leagues of the coast of Guernsey, Alderney, or Sark, shall be forfeited, as also the articles. s. 6.

Penalty on subjects (not being passengers only) found on board vessels liable to forfeiture, or assisting in unshipping, or concealing any spirits subject to forfeiture, treble the value of the goods, or 100*l.* and such persons may be taken before a justice, near the port to which the ship is brought, to be bailed or committed; or if desirous of entering into the navy or marines, they may be taken before officers, and entered for five years: officers discharging such persons shall be cashiered; and persons entering are acquitted of the penalty. s. 7.

And the commissioners of the customs and excise may reward officers and others, where men taken enter to serve his majesty. s. 8.

Persons taking horses for conveying articles liable to seizure, without owner's consent, to forfeit not exceeding 50*l.* nor less than 20*l.* s. 9.

Powers of officers of customs and excise under former acts, extended to vessels and goods liable to forfeiture under this act; and persons assaulting or resisting officers of army or navy, customs or excise, in execution of this act, shall be guilty of felony, and transported for seven years; and shooting at any ship, or officer, or persons aiding therein, felony without benefit of clergy. s. 10, 11.

Spirits seized shall be deposited in the king's warehouse in London, or at places appointed by the treasury, in Scotland or Ireland, and an account kept of quantity and strength. s. 13.

Tobacco and snuff shall also be conveyed to London, or to places appointed by the treasury, in Scotland or Ireland. s. 14.

The treasury may, if they see fit, order spirits to be re-distilled, to bring the same to a proper strength; and may order spirits either before or after such distillation, and also tobacco or snuff, seized and condemned, to be delivered to the victualling-office, for the use of the navy, or otherwise to be destroyed, giving at the same time such rewards as they think fit to settle to the officers of the customs, excise, navy, or army. s. 15.

The powers and privileges of officers of customs and excise extended to the commissioned officers of the navy or army; but ships seized by any officers of the army, navy, or marines, shall be delivered to the revenue officers. s. 16, 17.

By 46 Geo. 3. c. 82, no fee or gratuity shall be taken by the officers of the customs in the ports of London specified in the act, but such officers shall receive yearly salaries to be settled by the treasury, and if they do take fees, they shall be for the first offence peremptorily dismissed, and rendered incapable of again holding an office of customs or excise. s. 1.

But this does not extend to shares of seizures, penalties, and compositions, or allowances, or reward from the crown, to such officers. s. 2.

Landing waiters shall make out, and deliver to merchants, accounts of West India goods imported without fee. s. 4.

The said officers shall take an oath "for the faithful execution of their offices, and not to take any fees," instead of the oath under 6 and 7 Will. 3. c. 1, s. 5. s. 5.

No holidays shall be observed except Sundays, Christmas-day, Good Friday, public fasts, or thanksgivings, the Restoration of Charles II. and the birth-day of the king, queen, and prince of Wales. s. 6.

This act is not to alter the attendance of officers at the West-India, London, or East-India docks. s. 7.

Officers of the customs in the port of London shall attend from 10 Nov. to 9 May inclusive, from 9 to 4, and from 10 May to 9 Nov. from 8 to 4. s. 8.

And the commissioners of customs may enforce the attendance of any officers whenever the public service shall require. s. 9.

And offices usually exercised by deputies may continue to be so. s. 10.

By 46 Geo. 3. c. 150, all monies received by the receiver-general of the customs in England shall be paid into the Bank of England, who shall open an account thereof, s. 1.; but money not exceeding 1000*l.* at the close of each day may be retained for current payments. s. 2*c*

The Bank shall enter payments in a book, to be returned for inspection of the supervisor of the receiver-general's accounts. s. 3.

And the money placed at the Bank shall be paid into the Exchequer by weekly orders from the Treasury on the Bank; and the bank is restrained from making any other payments. s. 4.

But deductions on account of the civil list tax, and 1*s.* tax on salaries, or on account of the superannuation fund, money for repair of Dover harbour, or fees arising from vacant patent offices, need not be paid into the Bank. s. 6.

Drawbacks, bounties, and the like, shall be paid under the direction of the commissioners of customs, by draft, countersigned by the supervisor. s. 7.

Officers of the exchequer shall be furnished with appropriation paper. s. 7.

On the death or removal of the receiver general, the balance shall vest in his successor. s. 8.

The receiver general shall keep an account with the bank. s. 9.

Penalty on forging drafts, &c. felony without clergy. s. 10.

By 47 Geo. 3. sess. 1, c. 51, the treasury may extend the provisions of the act of 46 Geo 3, c. 82, to such of the out-ports as they think fit, s. 1.; and no fee or gratuity, though freely offered, shall be taken by the officers or persons employed in the service of the customs, in any such port in Great Britain, on pain of being dismissed and rendered incapable of acting in any office of customs or excise, s. 2, except only that such officers may receive shares of seizures, or allowances from the crown, s. 3, and officers are to be sworn to act faithfully, and not take fees. s. 6.

After 5th July, 1807, no holidays shall be kept at the custom-house, in any port in Great Britain, except Christmas-day, Good Friday, days of general fast, or thanksgiving, the restoration of Charles II. the coronation, and the births of the king, queen, and prince of Wales. s. 8.

And the treasury may alter the hours of attendance in any port, except the port of London. s. 9.

By 47 Geo. 3, sess. 2, c. 66, every vessel rigged or fitted as a lugger, above 50 tons, shall be forfeited. s. 1.

But the owners of such vessels so rigged and fitted on 13th August 1807, not exceeding 50 tons, are to take out a licence from the customs within two months. s. 2.

Boats constructed to row with more than six oars found within the limits of any port, or in any part of the British or Irish channels, or elsewhere, within 100 leagues of any part of the coast, shall be forfeited. s. 3.

But this is not to extend to whale-boats, nor boats belonging to any merchant vessel exceeding 250 tons, nor to any life-boat, nor boats on rivers or inland navigations. s. 4.

No ships, vessels, or boats, shall be navigated with a greater number of men than in the proportions herein mentioned, viz. of 30 to under and above 5 tons, 4 men—of 60, or under and above 30 tons, 5 men—of 80, or under and above 60 tons, 6 men—of 100, or under and above 80 tons, 7 men—and above that tonnage one man for every 15 tons additional; or if a lugger the following proportions: if of 30 tons or under, 8 men—if of 50 tons or under, and above 30 tons, 9 men, on pain of forfeiture. s. 5.

Vessels are not to be forfeited for passengers only, or persons taken on board from distress, to be proved to the commissioners; nor are revenue vessels, or letters of marque, or any fishing vessels for excess of number of men to be forfeited. s. 6, 7.

Vessels owned in whole or in part by subjects, and manned as before, found within the limits, having on board any small cordage for slinging small casks, or any more ankers, half-ankers, or other small casks under 60 gallons, or any tin, or other cases, or bladders, of less content than 60 gallons, than shall be really necessary for the use of the vessel, or any materials for making the same, or any siphon, tube, hose, or implement for drawing any fluid more than is necessary, or having on board any articles adapted for the repacking of tobacco, shall be forfeited. s. 8.

And if any ship, vessel, or boat, shall be found hovering within four or eight leagues of such parts of the coasts of Great Britain or Ireland, as are in former acts specified, having on board, or having had on board, such articles as aforesaid, the same shall be forfeited. s. 9.

No tobacco or snuff shall be on board any vessel whatever within the said limits, separated or divided in any manner within the package, or having any other article introduced therein, on forfeiture of the vessel and goods. s. 10.

Vessels clearing out from Jersey, Guernsey, Alderney, and Sark, shall not break bulk or alter their cargo during the voyage, unless through distress, or some unavoidable cause. s. 11.

No vessel to sail from the said islands without a clearance, whether in ballast or with cargo, and if found light afterwards before delivery at the port of clearance, may be seized. s. 12.

Vessels are not to clear out from those islands with any greater proportion of men than allowed by this act, nor with any of the before-mentioned prohibited articles, on pain of forfeiture. s. 13.

Vessels belonging in whole, or part, to subjects, which shall take on board any spirits, tobacco, or snuff, or tea, in any foreign port at war with his majesty, more than necessary for the use of the men, without license from the privy council or admiralty, shall be forfeited if seized within six months. s. 14.

All protections of men found on board of vessels liable to seizure shall be forfeited, and the men impressed therefrom compelled to serve in the navy for five years, and afterwards, until the conclusion of any war in which his majesty may be engaged; and the commissioners of customs may reward persons taking such men. s. 15.

Powers of seizure given by any acts to officers of the army are extended to officers of the militia, volunteers, or other forces, while on service. s. 16.

All provisions in any act or acts respecting vessels found within four or eight leagues, shall extend to vessels found in any part of the British or Irish channels, or elsewhere on the high seas within 100 leagues of any part of the coasts of Great Britain or Ireland under any of the circumstances specified in such acts. s. 17.

Commissioners of the customs and excise may reward officers seizing vessels, or boats liable to be broken up, and not used in his majesty's service, or as privateers, with certain sums, according to their tonnage, viz. for vessels or boats seized and condemned exceeding 4 tons, 30*s.* per ton—not exceeding 4 tons, 40*s.* per ton—and for all ships, vessels, and boats, liable to be broken up, and at the time of seizure, light or in ballast, 20*s.* per ton. s. 18.

The rewards to the officers on penal prosecutions in the name of the attorney-general shall be, where they are carried on wholly at the charge of the crown, one fourth of the money recovered; when they are carried on wholly at the charge of the crown, except the charge of arresting the defendant, one moiety; and where they are carried on wholly at the charge of the officer, two thirds. s. 19.

On seizure of spirits, tobacco, or snuff, at sea, or in any port or harbour, or on shore, if the officer shall also arrest the persons on board, and convey them before some justice of the peace, he shall be paid one moiety of the value; and if he shall also seize the ship, vessel, or boat, or the cattle or cariages used in conveying the same, but shall not arrest the parties, or carry them before a justice, then the officer shall be only entitled to one third of the value of the spirits, tobacco, and snuff; and if he shall seize the same, and not seize the ship, boat, cattle, or carriage, nor arrest the parties, then he shall be entitled to only one fourth. s. 20.

Officers seizing carts, horses, cattle, or carriages, are upon their condemnation entitled to three fourths of the net proceeds, after costs deducted. s. 21.

And if prevented in seizing, the commissioners may reward their officers in not exceeding one moiety of the value. s. 22.

In cases of seizures by officers or privates in the army, or their aiding officers of customs or excise, the king in council may direct how and in what proportion the rewards by this or any other acts shall be distributed amongst them. s. 23.

The licenses for certain ships, vessels, and boats, under 24 Geo. 3, and other acts, are to be granted in future by the commissioners of the customs, and not the lords of the admiralty. s. 24.

And such licenses are to be without any stamp, or fee, or reward, or any payment whatever. s. 25.

Persons counterfeiting or altering such license to forfeit 500*l.* and on the licensed ship, vessel, or boat being lost, broken up, or otherwise disposed of, the license is to be delivered up to the collector of the customs within twelve months. s. 26, 27.

On penalties recovered under the license-bond, one half shall be paid to the officer seizing the ship, vessel, or boat, for which the bond was given. s. 28.

The treasury may direct seized spirits, tobacco, or snuff to be sold, either for home consumption or exportation, as shall appear most conducive to the protection of the revenue. s. 29.

Any warrant or non-commissioned officer, not under the rank of a serjeant, approved by the commanding officer, may patrole with soldiers, and make seizures without warrant from the commissioners of customs or excise, so that the seizures be deposited in the revenue warehouses. s. 30.

Salt exported from Guernsey, Jersey, Alderney, or Sark, shall only be exported in bulk or casks of 4 cwt. net, except it exceed not 2lb. for each man on board—and pepper in casks of 4 cwt. on pain of forfeiture with the vessel. s. 31.

All the powers in 24 Geo. 3. c. 47. for bringing vessels too, are extended to subsequent acts, and this act. s. 32.

The 62d section of 42 Geo. 3. c. 82. is repealed, and instead thereof it is provided, that persons making signals to smugglers, by lighting fires on the coast, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and may be arrested and carried before a justice of the peace, who may commit them to the assizes, where they shall be obliged to plead instanter, and if convicted, either forfeit 100*l.*, or be committed to gaol, to be kept to hard labour, for not exceeding one year. s. 33, 34.

And the proof of making the fires for some other purpose, and not with the intent charged, is to be with the defendant. s. 35.

Persons arrested and taken before a justice for any offence, under this act, or the acts of 42 & 45 Geo. 3. shall not be bailed, unless they enter into a recognizance themselves in 200*l.* and two sureties in 100*l.* each. s. 36.

Any person whatsoever may enter lands and extinguish fires. s. 37.

And as commissioners of customs or excise have power to elect as to the taking treble value or a penalty of 100*l.* from persons on board smuggling vessels, not proving themselves passengers, it is declared that an averment in the information that the commissioners of customs or excise had made their option in the recovery of penalties under 45 Geo. 3, c. 21. shall be sufficient proof of their determination. s. 38.

Every penalty of 100*l.* under the act of 45 Geo. 3. may be recovered either in the exchequer or before two justices of the peace. s. 39.

But persons prosecuted in the court of king's bench, may be proceeded against as offenders, under 45 Geo. 3. c. 10. § 41. s. 40.

Officers detaining persons are to be allowed by the commissioners 20*l.* for each. s. 41.

Officers and seamen in the service of the customs or excise, if wounded, or their families, if killed, to be provided for, out of the revenue, by warrant from the treasury. s. 42.

On mitigation of penalties, under the revenue laws, by the court of quarter sessions, or the justices of the peace out of sessions, they may require the offenders to enter into a recognizance for payment of double the sum for which convicted, in case they be again convicted within three years of a like offence. s. 43.

Justices of the peace nearest to the port (and also the court of king's bench, and justices of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery, 48 Geo. 3. c. 84. s. 8.), are also empowered to take cognizance of offences committed on the high seas. s. 44.

Penalties and seizures in the customs, under this act, are to be prosecuted and applied according to the law of customs. s. 45.

And penalties and seizures in the excise are to be prosecuted and applied according to law of excise. s. 46.

Persons giving or offering bribes, or making collusive agreements with officers, or non-commissioned officers of the army, navy, or marines, are to forfeit 100*l.* s. 47.

By 48 Geo. 3. c. 9. the office of surveyor of subsidies and petty customs in the port of London is abolished.

By 48 Geo. 3. c. 84. the licences to vessels exceeding fifty tons, granted under the last act, which extended only to vessels not exceeding fifty tons, are declared valid, s. 1, and such licences may be renewed within ten years of the first licence, s. 2; but no such vessel shall be navigated by more men than as follows, if of eighty tons or under, and above sixty tons, eleven men; a hundred or under, and above eighty tons, twelve men; and if of a hundred tons, one man for every ten tons additional tonnage, s. 3, and vessels having letters of marque are to be deemed vessels licensed. s. 4.

Non-commissioned officers of the army may stop persons liable to be detained, under any act relating to smuggling. s. 5.

Persons making seizures of spirits, tobacco, or snuff, and carrying any seamen found on board the vessel to any ship of war shall be rewarded. s. 6.

Unlicensed persons offering for sale any tea, spirits, tobacco, or snuff, and not having a permit, and hawkers so offering the same, though they have a permit, may be stopped, and proceeded against, and the party seizing shall have a reward of 5*l.* s. 7.

Persons sailing in any vessel on the one-my's coast with intent to take on board spirits, tea, tobacco, or snuff, to be transported for seven years, s. 9, and the offenders may be tried in any county. s. 10.

Persons committed for offences may be admitted to bail. s. 11.

So much of the acts 45 Geo. 3. and 47 Geo. 3. as are applicable to Guernsey, shall extend to the Isle of Man. s. 12.

Bonds entered into relating to the customs are to remain in force two years from the time limited in the condition. s. 13.

And bonds granted on licences are not to be cancelled until the licences shall have been delivered up twelve months. s. 14.

By 49 Geo. 3. c. 59. the importation of goods is allowed from the united states of America, in vessels of that country.

By 49 Geo. 3. c. 62. whenever any ship, vessel, or boat, for which the owners are required to have a licence, shall be found within four or eight leagues of the coasts of Great Britain or Ireland, or found in any part of the British or Irish channel, or elsewhere on the high seas within one hundred leagues of any part of the said coasts; and any person on board shall, during the chase, or previous to its being taken possession of, unship or throw overboard any part of the cargo, every person on board, not being a passenger, shall forfeit 100*l.* and the vessel and goods on board, shall be forfeited; and may be seized as under the Hovering acts; or every such person being a seaman, may be dealt with according to 47 Geo. 3. sect. 2. c. 66. s. 1.

The reward to the officers seizing spirits, sunk and concealed under water, within the said one hundred leagues, shall be one moiety of their value: any thing in 47 Geo. 3. sect. 2. c. 66. to the contrary notwithstanding. s. 2.

Persons liable to be detained under 45 Geo. 3. c. 121. and the said act of 47 Geo. 3. who shall be found unfit to serve in the navy, shall forfeit 100*l.* and give bail before two justices, to appear and answer to any information, that may be filed against him; or in default of finding bail, he shall be committed to gaol, until the penalty is paid. s. 3.

By 49 Geo. 3. c. 65. fines incurred against the laws relating to the customs, not exceeding 50*l.* may be recovered in a summary way, before two justices of the peace, who on non-payment, may levy the same by distress and sale, or, in default thereof, commit the offender to gaol for the space of six [lunar] months; a summons left in the parties' house is sufficient: the justices may mitigate the penalties one half; after the expiration of the imprisonment, the party is absolved from the payment of the penalties; and the information must be laid before the justices, before the expiration of six [lunar] months.

Uncustomable and prohibited goods, seized under the public acts, are to be carried to the Custom-house warehouse; and goods seized, as feloniously stolen, are to be deposited at the Thames or other public office, to be produced at the trial of the offender: but notice of such stopping is to be given to the Custom-house; and after trial, the goods are to be carried to the Custom-house.

Goods not carried to the Custom-house, as directed by this act, may be seized, or reseized, by officers of the customs; and the party neglecting, shall forfeit 20*l.*

CUSTOMS AND SERVICES, belonging to the tenure of lands, are such as tenants owe unto their lords; which, being withheld from the lord he may have a writ of customs and services. Cowel. Blount.

CUSTOS BREVIUM, is a principal clerk belonging to the court of common pleas, whose office is to receive and keep all the writs returnable in that court, and put them upon files, every return by itself; and to receive of the prothonotaries all the records of nisi prius, called the postea's. He makes entry likewise of all writs of covenant, and the concord upon every fine; and maketh forth exemplifications, and copies of all writs and records in his office, and of all fines levied. This officer is made by the king's letters patent.

In the court of king's bench, there is also a custos brevium and rotulorum, who fileth such writs as are in that court filed, and all warrants of attorney, &c. and whose business it is to make out the records of nisi prius, &c.

CUSTOS PLACITORUM CORONÆ, an officer which seems to be the same with him we now call custos rotulorum. Bract. lib. 2. c. 5.

CUSTOS ROTULORUM, is he who hath the custody of the rolls or records of the sessions of the peace, and also of the commission of the peace itself. He is always a justice of the peace of the quorum in the county where appointed, and usually some person of quality: but he is rather termed an officer or minister, than a judge. Lamb. Eiren. lib. 4. cap. 3. p. 373.

By 37 H. 8. cap. 1. the custos rotulorum in every county shall be appointed by a writing signed by the king's hand, which shall be a warrant to the lord chancellor to put him in commission: and he may execute his office by deputy; and hath power to appoint the clerk of the peace, &c.

And by stat. 1 W. & M. c. 21. the custos rotulorum is to nominate and appoint the clerk of the peace; but not to sell the place, on pain of forfeiting the office of custos rotulorum, and other penalties, &c.

CUSTOS OF THE SPIRITUALTIES, (custos spiritualitatis) is he that exerciseth the spiritual or ecclesiastical jurisdiction of a diocese, during the vacancy of any see; who with us in England is the archbishop by prescription: but (according to Gwyn) some deans and chapters challenge this right by ancient charters from the kings of this land. Cowel. Blount.

CUSTOS OF THE TEMPORALITIES, (custos temporalium) the person to whose custody a vacant see or abbey was committed by the king, as supreme lord; who, as a steward of the goods and profits, was to give an account to the escheator, and he unto the exchequer: his trust continued till the vacancy was supplied, and the successor obtained the king's writ de restitutione temporalium, which was usually after consecration. Ibid.

CUT-PURSE, a pick-pocket. 4 Black. Com. 341. 3 Inst. 68.

CUTTS, flat bottomed boats, built low and commodiously, used in the channel for transporting of horses. Stow Annal. p. 412.

CUTTER OF THE TALLIES, is an officer in the exchequer, to whom it belongs to provide wood for the tallies, and to cut the sum paid upon them, &c. Cowel. Blount.

CUVE, is a French word, in English keeve, from whence comes keever, a tub or vat for brewing. Cowel.

CYCLAS, a long garment close upwards, and open or large below. Cowel. Blount.

CYNEBOTE. This word signifies the same with cenegild. Blount.

CYRICHRYCE, (Sax.) irruptio in ecclesiam. Leg. Eccl. Canuti Regis. Cowel. Blount.

D

DA, (Fr.) a word affirmative for yes. Law Fr. Dict.

DAG, a gun; un dagg, a small gun, or hand-gun. Cowel. Blount.

DAGUS or DAIS, the chief or upper table in a monastery; from a cloth called dais, with which the tables of kings were covered. Ibid.

DAKIR. The stat. 41 H. 3. st. 1. de compositione ponderum & mensurarum ascertains a last of hides to consist of twenty dickers, and every dicker of ten hides. Ibid.

DALMATICA, a garment with large open sleeves, at first worn only by bishops, though since made a distinction of degrees; so called, because it came originally from Dalmatia. Ibid.

DALUS, DAILUS, DAILIA, a certain measure of land. In some places it is taken for a ditch, or vale, whence comes dale. The dali prati have been esteemed such narrow slips of pasture, as are left between the ploughed furrows in arable land; which in some parts of England are called doles: the present Welch use this word for low meadow by the river side. And this seems to be the original name and nature of Deal in Kent. Cowel. Blount.

DAMAGE, (damnum) signifies generally any hurt or hindrance that a man receives in his estate: but in its particular sense in this place signifies what the jurors are to enquire of and bring in, when an action passeth for the plaintiff: for after verdict given of the principal cause, the jury are asked touching costs and damages, which comprehend a recompence for what the plaintiff hath suffered, by means of the wrong done him by the defendant. Co. Lit. 257.

In personal and mixed actions, damages were recoverable at common law. And by the stat. of Glouc. 6 Ed. 1. cap. 1. damages are given in real actions, assises of novel disseisin, mort d' ancestor, &c. and shall be recovered against the alienee of a disseisor, as well as against the disseisor himself.

In a personal action, the plaintiff shall recover damages only for the tort done before the action brought; and therein he counts for his damages: but in a real action, he recovers his damages pending the writ; and therefore never counts for his damages. 10 Rep. 117. 2 Inst. 288.

In real actions, damages are assessed by writ of enquiry: but in other actions, when the jury find the issue for the plaintiff, they are to assess the damages. In debt, which appears certain to the court what it is, the damages assessed by the jury are small, in fact only nominal, as one shilling; and the master in B. R. taxeth the costs; which is added thereto, and called damages: but in actions where the damages are uncertain, as in actions upon the case, or the like, it is left to the jury to inquire of them. 1 Lill. 390.

Where excessive damages have been given, or there hath been any misdemeanor in executing a writ of enquiry, the court hath sometimes relieved the defendant by granting a new trial or awarding a new writ of enquiry. 2 Danv. 464, Style 465. 1 Nels. Abr. 557. But this is entirely in the discretion of the court, under all the circumstances of each particular case, and if upon a new trial or second writ of enquiry, the second jury should find damages to the same or a greater amount for a personal wrong, the court will not interpose on an opinion so expressed, though the damages may appear to them to be excessive, Blanchard v. Cobb. Tr. Ter. B. R. 48 Geo. 3. Editor's MSS.

In an action upon the case the jury may find less damages than the plaintiff lays in his declaration; but ought not to find more. And if they do, the plaintiff may release part of the damages, upon entering up his judgment. 10 Rep. 115. If he does not, but takes judgment for damages (exclusive of costs) to a larger amount, than laid in the declaration, it is error, and not within any of the statutes of amendment or jeofails. Morg. L. D.

In some cases double, treble, and other damages are allowed: but these are incurred by some particular statute. And if it be not found by the jury, that the plaintiff hath sustained some damage in cases where double or treble damages are inflicted, no damages can be awarded. 2 Danv. Abr. 449. See also Costs.

DAMAGE-CLEER, (damna clericorum) was a fee assessed of the tenth part in the common pleas, and the twentieth part in the king's bench and exchequer, out of all damages exceeding five marks, recovered in those courts, in actions upon the case, covenant, trespass, battery, &c. wherein the damages were uncertain; which the plaintiff was obliged to pay to the prothonotary, or the chief officer of the court wherein recovered, before he could have execution for the damages: this was originally a gratuity given to the prothonotaries and their clerks, for drawing special writs and pleadings; but it is now taken away by statute, and if any officer in the king's courts, take any money in the name of damage-cleer, or any thing in lieu thereof, he shall forfeit treble the value. Stat. 17 Car. 2. c. 6.

DAMAGE-FEASANT, or faisant, is where a stranger's beasts are found in another person's ground without his leave or licence, (and without the fault of the possessor of the close, which may happen from his not repairing his fences,) and there doing damage, by feeding, or otherwise, to the grass, corn, woods, or the like. In which case, the tenant whom they damage, may distrain and impound them, as well by night as in the day, and keep them till satisfaction be made of the damages. 2 Danv. Abr. 364. 3 Black. 7.

But if one comes to distrain damage-feasant, and to seize the cattle, and the owner drives them out before they are taken, he cannot distrain them damage-feasant, but is put to his action of trespass; for the cattle ought to be actually upon the land damage-feasant, at the time of the distress. 1 Inst. 161. 9 Rep. 22.

DAM, a boundary, or confinement; as to dam up, or dam out: infra damnum suum, within the bounds or limits of his own property or jurisdiction. Bract. lib. 2. c. 37.

DAMISELLA, a light damosell or miss. Cowel. Blount.

DAMNUM ABSQUE INJURIA. If one man sets up a trade in any particular place, another may do so likewise in the same place, though he draw away the business from the other; and this is damnum absque injuria: but he must not do any thing to disturb the other in the exercise of his business. 3 Salk. 10.

DAN. Anciently the better sort of men in this kingdom had the title of dan; as the Spaniards don, from the Lat. dominus. Cowel. Blount.

DANEGELT, or DANE-GOLD, (danegildum) compounded of the words dane and gelt, the latter in Dutch signifying money; was a tribute of 1*s.* and after of 2*s.* upon every hide of land through the realm, laid upon our ancestors by the Danes. Camb. Brit. 83, 142.

DANELAGE, was the law of the Danes when they governed a third part of this kingdom. 1 Black. Com. 65. 4 Black. 405.

DANGERIA, a payment in money made by forest tenants, that they might have liberty to plough and sow in time of pannage or mast-feeding. Manw. For. Laws.

DAPIFER, (a dapes ferendo) was at first a domestic officer, like unto our steward of the household: or rather clerk of the kitchen: but by degrees it was used for any fiduciary servant, especially the chief steward or head bailiff of an honour or manor. Cowel.

DARDUS, i. e. a dart: in Wales an oak is called a dar. Cowel. Blount.

DARE AD REMANENTIAM, to give away in fee, or for ever. Glanv. lib. 7. cap. 1.

DARREIN, is a corruption from the Fr. dernier, viz. ultimus, the last; in which sense we use it: as darrein continuance, &c. Cowel. Blount.

DARREIN PRESENTMENT, (ultima præsentatio.) See Assise of Darrein Presentment.

DATE of a deed, is the description of the time, viz. the day, month, year of our Lord, year of the reign, &c. in which the date was made. 1 Inst. 6. If in the date of a deed, the year of our Lord is right, though the year of the king's reign be mistaken, it shall not hurt it. 1 Cro. Jac. 261. 2 Salk. 658. A deed is good, though it hath no date, or the date be mistaken, or though it hath an impossible date, as the 30th of February, &c. But he that doth plead such a deed, without any date, or with an impossible date, must set forth the time when it was delivered. 2 Rep. 5. 1 Inst. 46. For it is no deed till the delivery, and that is in the intendment of the law the date of it. Mod. Ca. 244. 1 Nels. Abr. 525.

A deed may be dated at one time, and sealed and delivered at another: but every deed shall be intended to be delivered on the same day it bears date, unless the contrary is proved. 2 Inst. 674. Though there can be no delivery of a deed before the day of the date; yet after there may. Yelv. 138. So that a deed may be dated back on a time past, but not at a day to come. 2 Black. Com. 304.

DATIVE, or DATIF, (dativus) signifies that which may be given or disposed of at will and pleasure. Stat. 9 R. 2. c. 4.

DAVACA TERRÆ DAWACH, a portion of land so called in Scotland. Skene. Cowel. Blount.

DAY, (dies) is a certain space of time, containing twenty-four hours; the natural day consists of twenty-four hours, and contains the solar day and the night; and the artificial day begins from the rising of the sun, and ends when it sets. Co. Lit. 135.

There are several return days in the terms, and if either of them happen upon a Sunday it is a dies non juridicus; and so is Ascension day in Easter term, St. John Baptist in Trinity term, All Saints and all Souls in Michaelmas term, and the Purification of the Virgin Mary in Hilary term. 2 Inst. 264.

Days in bank are the days when writs shall be returned, or when the party shall appear upon the writ served. Stat. 51 H. 3. stat. 2. and stat. 3. 32 Hen. 8. cap. 21. 3 Black. 377.

To be dismissed or go without day, is to be finally dismissed the court: and when the justices before whom causes were depending, do not come on the day to which they were continued, whether such absence be occasioned by death or otherwise, they are said to be put without day; but may be revived or recontinued by re-summons, re-attachments, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. 300.

In action of trespass, if the day laid in the declaration be either before or after the actual day on which the trespass is committed, it is not material, if a trespass be proved. Co. Lit. 283, a.

When an act is to be done on a certain day, the party hath the whole of that day to perform the same, for the law rejects all fractions and divisions of a day, for the uncertainty. 4 Rep. 1. 1 Inst. 135.

DAY-WRIT, or RULE; the king may grant writ of warrantia die to any person, which shall save his default for one day, be it in plea of land or other action, and be the cause true, or not; and this by his prerogative. Br. Prerogative, pl. 142. cites F. N. B. 7.

It is against law to grant liberty to prisoners in execution, by other writs than day-writs, or rules. Chan. Rep. 67.

No prisoner committed for a contempt ought to have the benefit of the day-rule of going abroad in term time, for their imprisonment is their punishment for their contempt, or misbehaviour. 2 Show. 88. pl. 80.

DAYS-MAN, in the north of England, an arbitrator, or elected judge, is usually termed a dies-man or a days-man. Cowel. Blount.

DAYERIA, dairy, from day, deie, Sax. dag, was at first the daily yield of milch cows, or profit made of them. Ibid.

DAYWERE OF LAND. As much arable land as could be ploughed up in one day's work; or one journey, as the farmers still call it. Ibid.

DEADLY FEUD, is a profession of an irreconcileable hatred, till a person is revenged even by the death of his enemy. It is mentioned in stat. 43 El. c. 13. And such enmity and revenge were allowed by the old Saxon laws; for where any man was killed, if a pecuniary satisfaction was not made to the kindred of the slain, it was lawful for them to take up arms against the murderer, and revenge themselves on him: and this is called deadly feud; which it is conjectured was the original of an appeal. Blount. 4 Black. 243.

DEAD MAN'S PART. See Distribution..

DEAD PLEDGE, (mortuum vadium) a pledge of lands or goods. See Mortgage.

DEAF, DUMB, and BLIND. A man who is born deaf, dumb, and blind, is looked upon by the law as in the same state with an ideot, or being supposed incapable of any understanding, as wanting senses that furnish the human mind with ideas. Fitz. N. B. 223. 1 Black. 304.

DE-AFFORESTED, this word signifies discharged from being forest; or that is freed and exempted from the forest laws. 17 Car. 1. c. 16.

DEAN, (decanus, from the Greek Δέκα, decem) is an ecclesiastical governor or dignitary, so called, as he presides over ten canons or prebendaries at the least. And we call him a dean, that is next under the bishop, and chief of the chapter, originally in a cathedral church, the rest of the society being called capitulum, the chapter. Latch. 237, 250. Palm. Rep. 460.

A dean and chapter are the bishop's council, to assist him in the affairs of religion, &c. to consult in deciding difficult controversies, and to consent to every grant which the bishop shall make to bind his successors, &c.

DEATH OF PERSONS, there is a natural death of a man, and a civil death: natural, where nature itself expires, and extinguishes; and civil, is where a man is not actually dead, but is adjudged so by law.

If any person for whose life any estate hath been granted, remain beyond sea, or is otherwise absent seven years, and no proof made of his being living, such person shall be accounted naturally dead; though if the party be after proved living at the time of eviction of any person, then the tenant, &c. may re-enter and recover the profits. Stat. 19 Car. 2. c. 6. And persons in reversion or remainder, after the death of another, upon affidavit that they have cause to believe such other dead, may move the lord chancellor to order the person to be produced; and if he be not produced, he shall be taken as dead; and those claiming may enter, &c. 6 Ann. c. 18.

DE BENE ESSE, is in law to take any act as well done for the present; subject when it comes to be more fully examined or tried, to stand or fall according to the merit of the thing in its own nature. Thus in equity, upon motion, the court will often order a defendant to be examined de bene esse, viz. that his depositions be taken, subject to be allowed or suppressed at the hearing of the cause, upon the full debate of the matter, as the court shall think fit; but in the interim they have a well being, or conditional allowance. 3 Cro. 68.

So also at common law, bail is taken de bene esse, that is, to be allowed or disallowed upon the exception, or approbation of the plaintiff's attorney, however, in the interim, they are good, or have conditional allowance: and so it is of declarations filed de bene esse. Cowel. Blount. 3 Black. Com. 383.

DEBENTURE. A debenture is a written instrument in the nature of a bond or bill issued from some public office to charge the government with the payment of money due and payable to individuals out of the public revenue, and these usually are in the exchequer customs and excise. Debentures are also given to the king's servants, for the payment of their wages, &c.

DEBET ET DETINET, an action shall be always brought in the debet et detinet, when he who makes a bargain or contract, or lends money to another, or he to whom a bond is made, bringeth the action against him who is bounden, or party to the contract and bargain, or unto the lending of the money, &c. See New Nat. Br. 119.

But if an action be brought against an executor or administrator, for the act of his testator or intestate, it must be laid in the detinet only; and if it is laid in the debet et detinet, the declaration may be demurred to. 5 Rep. 31.

DEBET ET SOLET, are formal words made use of in writs: thus if a person sues to recover any right, whereof his ancestor was disseised by the tenant of his ancestor, then he useth the word debet alone in his writ, because his ancestor only was disseised, and the estate discontinued; but if he sue for any thing that is now first of all denied him, then he useth debet et solet, by reason his ancestor before him, and he himself usually enjoyed the thing sued for, until the present refusal of the tenant. Reg. Orig. 140.

DEBT, (debitum) Debt in the usual acceptance of the word is a sum of money due from one person to another. But in the legal sense, it is taken to be an action which lieth where a man oweth another a certain sum of money, by obligation, or bargain for a thing sold, or by contract, &c. and the debtor will not pay the debt at the day agreed. New Nat. Br. 268.

Thus an action of debt lies upon a parol contract, as well as assumpsit, or action on the case. 1 Lil. 403. 9 Rep. 87.

As if I agree with a taylor for a certain price to make me a suit of clothes, the taylor may have a general action of debt against me for the money; though if the price is not agreed on, there lies action on the case only, or special action of debt upon the special contract, which the law may imply on a quantum meruit. Wood's Inst. 554. But as in all these actions of debt or parol contracts, the defendant may wage his law, an action on the case brought upon the promise of payment, wherein the defendant cannot wage his law, is now the most usual course of proceeding. 4 Rep. 93.

But if the debt due, be secured by bond, obligation, or other speciality, an action of debt only lies for recovery thereof and no other. New Nat. Brev. 268.

So if a man accepts a bribe or obligation for a debt due by simple contract, this extinguishes the contract, and he shall have his action of debt upon the obligation only, and not upon the contract. 13 H. 4. c. 1. 1 Roll. Abr. 604. New Nat. Brev. 268.

In debt upon an obligation, the defendant cannot plead nil debet, but must deny the deed by pleading non est factum. Hard. 332.

But if in a debt by simple contract, then he may plead nil debet. Hob. 218.

DEBT TO THE KING. This comprehends all things due to the king; as all rents, fines, issues, and amerciaments, and other duties received or levied by the sheriff; for debt in the larger sense signifies whatever any man owes. 2 Inst. 198. The king's debt is to be satisfied before that of a subject. Mag. Char. 18. 1 Inst. 130. See EXTENT.

DEBTEE EXECUTOR. See EXECUTOR.

DEBTORS. By 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 20. no bailiff or officer shall carry persons in his custody to any tavern or alehouse, without their voluntary consent, nor charge such prisoners for any wine, ale, or victuals, but what they call for of their own accord; nor demand or receive any greater sum than by law ought to be taken.

All gaolers shall permit their prisoners to send for necessaries where they please; and they shall not take any greater fee for their commitment or discharge, than what is allowed. Ibid.

The lord chief justice shall enquire into all charities given for the benefit of poor prisoners: and the rates of fees of prisons, signed by the lords chief justices, shall be hung up in every prison, fairly written, and no other fees shall be demanded or received. Ibid.

Felons and prisoners for debt shall not be lodged together, but kept separate and in distinct rooms; and any one offending against any part of this act, shall forfeit his office, and treble damages to the party grieved. Ibid.

By 4 & 5 Will. & Mar. c. 21. plaintiff may deliver a copy of a declaration to a prisoner, or to the keeper of a prison, and if such prisoner do not plead, the plaintiff shall have judgment.

By 8 & 9 Will. 3. c. 27. keepers of the King's Bench, or Fleet, suffering prisoners to go at large, or out of the rules, without habeas corpus, or rule of court, shall be guilty of an escape.

Upon judgment in an action of escape, the marshal or warden's fees shall be sequestered for satisfaction, and if they bring error, they must put in special bail. Ibid.

The marshal or warden taking any reward to connive at prisoner's escape, shall forfeit 500*l.* and be disabled. But this does not extend to the taking security from prisoners who live within the rules only. Ibid.

No retaking on fresh pursuit shall be given in evidence on action of escape, unless specially pleaded; nor any special plea, unless upon oath that the escape was without consent. Ibid.

Prisoner in execution escaping, may be retaken by any new capias. Ibid.

Keeper's refusal to shew the prisoner to his creditor or attorney shall be adjudged an escape. Ibid.

Keepers are to give a note to any person wanting to charge a prisoner in execution, specifying his being in custody, on pain of 50*l.* Ibid.

The marshal and warden shall be answerable for escapes by their deputies, whom they have liberty to appoint. Ibid.

All conveyances of the inheritance of the King's Bench and Fleet prisons shall be inrolled in six months after execution, or else be void. Ibid.

Persons having cause of action against the warden of the Fleet, may file a bill against him in the common pleas or exchequer, and for want of a plea sign judgment. Ibid.

Plaintiffs may deliver a copy of declaration to a prisoner in the Fleet, or to the turnkey; and in default of a plea may sign judgment, on an affidavit of the delivering a declaration. Ibid.

No prisoner shall pay chamber rent longer than while in actual possession, and not more than 2*s.* 6*d.* per week; keeper taking or demanding more, shall forfeit 20*l.* Ibid.

By 1 Ann. stat. 2. c. 6. prisoner escaping out of the King's Bench or Fleet, a judge may grant warrants for retaking him, and thereupon he may be committed to the prison which the sheriff uses for debtors: the sheriff shall answer for such prisoner's escape after retaken; and bail for a prisoner retaken, may have a writ of detainer directed to the sheriff, who is to return the same, and whether the prisoner is in custody, on pain of 50*l.*

By 5 Ann. c. 9. confirming the above act, it is enacted, that an escape-warrant may be granted on affidavit made in the country; and persons may be apprehended by such a warrant on a Sunday.

Persons in custody for not performing a decree in chancery or the exchequer to pay money, afterwards escaping, the sheriff shall be liable to pay the same with costs. Ibid.

By 12 Geo. 2. c. 13. no attorney who shall be a prisoner, or within the rules, during such confinement, shall commence any action or suit. All proceedings therein shall be void, and he shall be incapacitated: but this is not to prevent his carrying on suits commenced before.

By 27 Geo. 2. c. 17. the prison of the court of King's Bench, with power of appointing the marshal, was revested in the crown, under certain provisions and regulations for execution of the office, and government of the prison.

The marshal, his officers, and prisoners, are subject to the rules in 2 Geo. 2. c. 22. (a temporary act, the clauses whereof are incorporated in 32 Geo. 2. c. 28.) and shall take no other fees than allowed thereby. Ibid.

The marshal shall have the appointment of inferior officers: both marshal and officers are liable to be amoved for non-residence, neglect of duty, or misbehaviour, as the court of king's bench shall judge, on motion in a summary way.

Selling the office of marshal, or inferior offices thereto belonging, incurs forfeiture and disability; and the marshal shall keep the prison in repair. Ibid.

By 32 Geo. 2. c. 28. no officer shall carry his prisoner to any tavern or other public-house, without his consent; nor charge him for liquor or other things, except such as he shall freely call for; nor demand for caption or attendance any other than his legal fee; nor exact any gratuity money; nor carry his prisoner to gaol within twenty-four hours after his arrest, unless he shall refuse to be carried to some safe house of his own appointment where arrested, or within three miles thereof.

Nor may the officer take for the lodging, diet, and other expences of such prisoner, more than shall be allowed in such cases by the sessions, a copy whereof shall be hung up in the sessions-house. Ibid.

Sheriffs and the secondaries of the counters, shall deliver printed copies of these clauses to bailiffs, and make it part of the condition of the bond to be given by them, that they shall show and deliver a copy of the said clauses to the prisoner, if carried to a public-house, to be by him read, or heard read, before any liquors or victuals be brought in, on pain on the officer, besides breach of covenant, of being punished for a misdemeanor. Ib.

Gaolers shall permit prisoners to send for what victuals, bedding, or linen, they please, without any restraint. Ibid.

The lords chief justices of the king's bench, common pleas, and exchequer, with the mayor and two aldermen of London, for the prisons within the city; and the chief justices and baron, with three justices of peace for Middlesex and Surrey, for the prisons in the said counties, shall settle the fees to be taken by gaolers, and make rules and orders: and the sessions elsewhere. Ibid.

Rules and orders for the better government of the gaols and prisoners therein, shall be made by the respective courts in Westminster hall for the gaols belonging to such courts, duplicates of which fees and orders shall be inrolled, and copies thereof hung up in courts of assize, sessions, and in prisons. Ibid.

The courts in Westminster are, every Michaelmas term, to inquire whether such tables of fees and orders are duly hung up and complied with, and shall give notice to the prisoners of the time of inquiry. Ibid.

Judges and justices of assizes shall make a like inquiry, and redress complaints, and charge grand juries to inquire. Ibid.

Courts of Westminster, judges of assize, justices of peace, and commissioners for charitable uses, may inquire of bequests to poor prisoners, and send for papers and persons, and settle the payment, recovery, and receipt of such bequests. Ibid.

Table of benefactions to be transmitted to, and registered by, the clerks of the peace, and also to the gaolers of the prisons to which the same relate, and to be hung up in such prisons. Ibid.

Where gaolers shall be guilty of extortion, or other abuses, the court, upon petition of the prisoner, is to examine into the same in a summary way, and redress the abuse and punish the offender. Ibid.

Gaolers shall take no other fees than what shall be allowed in the authenticated table of fees; and sheriffs or other officers offending against this act shall forfeit 50*l.* (besides other penalties) to the party aggrieved. Ibid.

"Any debtor charged in execution for "not more than 100*l.* (extended to 300*l.* "by 33 Geo. 3. c. 5,) may petition the court, "certifying therein the cause of imprisonment, with a schedule of his real and "personal estates at the time, and charges "affecting the same; and also the state of "his effects at the time of his first imprisonment, and the securities, bonds, notes, "and books relating thereto, with the particular witnesses. Fourteen days previous notice of such intended petition to "be given to the creditor, or his attorney, "at whose suit he is charged in execution; "and a copy of the schedule he intends to "deliver into court. Affidavit of the due "service of such notice to be delivered "at the same time with the petition into "court, and read openly; and a rule to be "made upon receiving the petition for "bringing the prisoner into court; and summoning the creditor, and the creditor appearing, or not appearing thereto, oath "being made of the due service of the "rule, the court to examine into the matter of the petition in a summary way, "and administer an oath to the prisoner.

"The court may thereupon order an assignment to be made, on the back of the "petition, of the prisoner's effects, subject to "former encumbrances to the creditor, who "may thereupon take possession, and sue "as an assignee of a bankrupt; and the "court shall order the prisoner to be discharged. Ibid.

"Assignee to make sale of and divide the "effects; but if the creditor shows cause of "disbelieving the prisoner's oath, and desires time for further information, the "court to remand the prisoner back to a "further day; objections to the form of the "schedule shall be made the first time the "prisoner is brought up. Ibid.

"The creditor not appearing the second "day or not making a further discovery, "the court to make a rule for discharge of "the prisoner, unless the creditor insist upon "his detention, and covenant to allow him "(3*s.* 6*d.* a week, 37 Geo. 3. c. 85.); but "upon failure, at any time, in the payment "thereof, the prisoner, upon application to "the court, shall be discharged upon executing such assignment and conveyance "as aforesaid. Prisoner refusing to take "the oaths, or being detected of falsity "therein, or refusing to execute an assignment of his estate, to be continued in execution. Ibid.

"Where more creditors than one insist on "the prisoner's detention, they are to pay "him each not exceeding (2*s.* 37 Geo. 3. "c. 85.) per week. Ibid.

"Prisoner charged in execution in county "and other gaols, distant from Westminster, "to proceed in like manner by petition and "affidavit; and the court to make a rule "thereupon, for his being brought up to the "next assizes; 1*s.* per mile to be paid to the "gaoler for his expences out of the prisoner's "estate or by the treasurer of the county. "Ibid.

" Creditors to be summoned, and a copy " of the rule served on them; and upon " affidavit made of such service the court " to appoint a time for hearing the matter " of the petition; and the creditors appear- " ing thereto, or not, proof being made of " their being duly served with the notice, " and copy of the schedule of the prisoner's " estate, the court to proceed therein in a " summary way, and administer the oath " to the prisoner, and make such order in " the premises as shall seem meet, and pro- " ceed as before concerning the prisoner's " discharge. Ibid.

" Prisoner refusing to deliver up his es- " tate and effects to satisfy his creditors, " they may compel him to be brought up, " and deliver into court a schedule of his " estate and effects, giving him twenty " days notice, in order that his estate and " effects may be divested out of him, and " assigned and conveyed as after directed. " Like notice to be given of such intention " to the other creditors, and also to the " sheriff and gaoler, requiring them to bring " up such prisoner, who is to be brought " up accordingly at the cost of the creditors, " with a copy of the detainer. Sheriffs and " gaolers making default on tender of " amends forfeit 20*l.* to the party aggrieved, " with treble costs. Ibid.

" Prisoner, upon proof of due notice as " aforesaid having been given him, is to " deliver in upon oath, to the court, a sche- " dule of his estate and effects, and signed " by him; and is to assign and convey " the same in trust for the benefit of his " creditors, they agreeing to his discharge, " and to take a dividend; but if any refuse, " then the same to be in trust, for the cre- " ditors, only requiring the prisoner to be " brought up. Overplus remaining, after " all charges to be paid to the prisoner. " Prisoner complying to the satisfaction of " the court to be set at liberty, paying " for his discharge fees. 2*s.* 6*d.* Future " effects of the prisoner liable to debts un- " satisfied; and no advantage to be taken " of the statute of limitation, unless he " was entitled thereto before he stood " charged in custody on the original suit.

" Prisoner neglecting or refusing to deli- " ver in a schedule of his estate and effects, " or to make an assignment and conveyance " thereof, to be transported for seven years; " and delivering a false account, to suffer the " pains and penalties of wilful perjury, and " be taken again in execution, and never " have the benefit of this act. Ibid.

" If the prisoner's effects shall not satisfy " his debt and gaol fees, the gaoler shall re- " ceive only a proportionable dividend with " the other creditors. Ibid.

" Prisoners discharged not liable to ar- " rests for the same debt, unless perjured; " but the judgment shall remain against " their effects. Ibid.

" Assignees of a prisoner's estate may " compound debts, and refer disputes to " arbitration, and may be removed by the " court on complaint of mismanagement. Ibid.

" None entitled to the benefit of this act " who has had the benefit of any act of " insolvency, unless compelled by a creditor " to deliver up his estate and effects." Ibid.

By 33 Geo. 3, c. 5, persons charged in execution for sums not exceeding 300*l.* to be entitled to the relief of the lords act (32 Geo. 2, c. 28), and debtors in execution for sums not exceeding 300*l.* may be compelled to deliver up their effects. s. 1, 3.

Persons committed on attachment for not paying money awarded by arbitrators, or on excommunications for ecclesiastical costs, are entitled to the benefit of the act. s. 4.

Debtors making it appear to the court that from ignorance or mistake they have not taken the benefit of the acts in time, shall be entitled thereto; and creditors may file interrogatories for the examination of prisoners before they take the benefit of the act. s. 5.

The act does not extend to debts due to the crown. Ibid.

By 37 Geo. 3. c. 85, debtors entitled to their discharge under 32 Geo. 2, c. 28, may be discharged, unless their creditors agree to pay them not exceeding 3*s.* 6*d.* weekly. s. 3.

When more creditors than one insist on a debtor's detention, they are each to pay him not exceeding 2*s.* weekly. s. 4.

By 48 Geo. 3. c. 123, persons in execution on judgment, in whatever court, whether of record or not, for any debt and damages not exceeding 20*l.* exclusive of costs recovered by such judgment, and who shall have laid in prison twelve calendar months, shall, on application to one of the superior courts at Westminster, be discharged; but persons fraudulently obtaining their discharge are liable to be taken in execution; and the estate and effects of debtors shall remain liable, notwithstanding their discharge; but debtors discharged are not liable afterwards to be arrested in any action to be brought on such judgment. s. 1.

DEBTS, priority of. See EXECUTOR.

DECEIT (deceptio) is a writ which lies to give damages in some particular cases of fraud, and principally where one man does any thing in the name of another, by which he is deceived or injured: as if one brings an action in another's name, and then suffers a nonsuit, whereby the plaintiff becomes liable to costs; or when one suffers a fraudulent recovery of land or chattels to the prejudice of him that hath right. It also lies in the cases of false warranties, and other subtle tricks, injuries, and devices contrary to good faith and honesty; but the special action on the case in nature of deceit, is now the ordinary remedy taken on these occasions. 3 Black. 165, 6.

DECENNARY, a town or tithing consisting (originally) of ten families of freeholders. Ten tithings composed an hundred. The institution of decennaries (or frankpledges) is imputed to Alfred. In these decennaries the whole neighbourhood or tithing of freemen were mutually pledges for each other's good behaviour. 1 Black. Com. 114. Ibid. 4. 249.

DECEM TALES, is when a full jury does not appear at a trial at bar; then a writ goes to the sheriff apponere decem tales, &c. whereby a supply is made of jurymen to proceed in the trial. Cowel. Blount.

DECIES TANTUM, is a writ that lies against a juror, who hath taken money of either party for giving his verdict; so called because it is to recover ten times as much as he took: and every person that will may bring this writ and recover the same, one half whereof shall be to the prosecutor, and the other to the king. This writ also lies against embraceors that procure such an inquest; who shall be further punished by imprisonment for a year. Reg. Orig. 188. F. N. B. 171. Stat. 38 Ed. 3. c. 13. But decies tantum does not lie against the embraceor, if he embrace and take no money, for he ought to take money, and also embrace. Yet it lies against the jurors, although they do not give a verdict, if they take money; and so it is said if they give a true verdict, decies tantum lies if they take money. Dyer 95. New Nat. Br. 380.

DECIMATION, (decimatio) the punishing every tenth soldier by lot: also tithing. Cowel. Blount.

DECINERS, DECENNIERS, or DOZINERS, (decennarii) such as were wont to have the oversight of the Friburghs, or views of frank-pledge, for the maintenance of the king's peace; and the limits or compass of their jurisdiction was called decenna, because it commonly consisted of ten households, as every person bound for himself and his neighbours to keep the peace was styled decennier. Bract. lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 15.

DECLARATION, (declaratio, narratio) is an exposition of the writ, and shows in writing the cause of complaint of the plaintiff in an action against the defendant, wherein the party is supposed to have received some wrong. This ought to be plain and certain, because it impeaches the defendant, and compels him to answer thereunto; it must set forth the plaintiff's and defendant's names, the nature and cause of the action, the manner thereof, &c. and the damage received. 1 Inst. 17. Wood's Inst. 582. See PLEADING and PRACTICE.

DECREE. A decree is the judgment of a court of equity pronounced on the hearing of a cause; and it is of the like nature with a judgment at common law. Chan. Rep. 234.

A decree not signed and inrolled may be altered upon a re-hearing, without the assistance of a bill of review, if there is sufficient matter to revise it appearing upon the former proceedings, and the investigation of the decree must be brought on by a petition of re-hearing only. 2 Ves. 598. Mitf. 82.

But if the decree be signed and inrolled it can only be altered upon a bill of review, 1 Chan. Cas. 44. 2 Fr. 179, except it has been obtained by fraud, in which case it may be impeached by original bill, Mitf. 84, and where a decree has been so obtained the court will restore the parties to their former situation, whatever their rights may be, 2 Bro. P. C. 44.

A bill to set aside a decree for fraud must state the decree, and the proceedings which led to it, with the circumstances of fraud on which it is impeached: the prayer must be necessarily varied, according to the nature of the fraud used, and the extent of its operation, in obtaining an improper decision of the court. Mitf. 85.

The operation of a decree signed and inrolled has also been suspended on special circumstances, or avoided by matter subsequent to the decree, upon a new bill for that purpose: Thus, during the troubles, after the death of Car. 1. upon a decree for a foreclosure in case of non-payment of principal, interest, and costs, due on a mortgage, the mortgagor at the time of payment being forced to leave the kingdom, to avoid the consequences of his engagements with the royal party, and having regranted the mortgage, to sell the estate to the best advantage, and pay himself, which the mortgagee appeared to have acquiesced in, the court, upon a new bill enlarged the time for performance of the decree, upon the ground of the inevitable necessity which prevented the mortgagor from complying with the strict terms of it; and also made a new decree on the ground of new matter subsequent to the former decree. 1 Cha. Ca. 361. 2 Cha. Ca. 8. Milf. 86.

Sometimes from the neglect of parties, or some other cause, it becomes impossible to carry a decree into execution without the further decree of the court: this happens generally in cases where parties having neglected to proceed upon the decree, their rights under it become so embarrassed by a variety of subsequent events, that it is necessary to have the decree of the court to settle and ascertain them. Sometimes such a bill is exhibited by a person who was not a party, nor claims under any party to the original decree; but claims in a similar interest, or is unable to obtain the determination of his own rights till the decree is carried into execution; or it may be brought by or against a person claiming as assignee of a party to the decree. Mitf. 86, 87.

The court in these cases in general only enforces, and does not vary, the decree; but, on particular circumstances, it has sometimes considered the directions, and varied them in case of mistake; and it has even refused to enforce the decree; though in other cases the court, and the house of lords on appeal, seem to have considered that the law of the decree ought not to be examined on a bill to carry it into execution. Mitf. 87.

Such a bill may also be brought to carry into execution the judgment of an inferior court of equity, if the jurisdiction of that court is not equal to the purpose; as in the case of a decree in Wales, which the defendant avoided by flying into England: but in this case the court thought itself entitled to examine the justice of the decision, though affirmed in the house of lords. Mitf. 87.

A bill for this purpose is, generally, partly an original bill, and partly in the nature of an original bill, though not strictly original; and sometimes it is likewise a bill of revivor, or a supplemental bill, or both; the frame of the bill is varied accordingly. Mitf. 88.

But if upon the face of a bill to carry a decree into execution the plaintiff appears to have no right to the benefit of the decree, the defendant may demur. Mitf. 167.

And if a plaintiff filing a bill to carry a decree into execution, has no right to the benefit of the decree, the defendant may plead the fact, if it is not so apparent on the bill as to admit of a demurrer. Mitf. 232.

A decree determining the rights of the parties, and signed and inrolled, may be pleaded to a new bill for the same matter, and this even if the party bringing the new bill was an infant at the time of the former decree; for a decree inrolled, as before observed, can only be altered upon a bill of review, but the decree must be in its nature final, or afterwards made so by order, or it will not be a bar. Therefore a decree for an account of principal and interest due on a mortgage, and for a foreclosure in case of non-payment, cannot be pleaded to a bill to redeem, unless there is a final order of foreclosure: nor can a decree which has been made upon default of the defendant, in not appearing at the hearing, be pleaded without an order making the decree absolute; the terms of such decree being always that it shall be binding on the defendant, unless on being served with a writ of subpœna for the purpose, he shall show cause to the contrary. Mitf. 193.

Upon a plea of this nature, so much of the former bill and answer must be set forth as is necessary to show that the same point was then in issue. 2 Atk. 603. 2 Ves. 577.

A decree or order dismissing a former bill for the same matter may be pleaded in bar to a new bill, if the dismission was upon hearing, and was not in terms directed to be without prejudice; but an order of dismission is a bar only where the court determined that the plaintiff had no title to the relief sought by his bill; and therefore an order dismissing a bill for want of prosecution is not a bar to another bill. 1 Vern. 310. 1 Br. P. C. 281. 1 Ch. Ca. 155. 1 Atk. 571.

DECRETALS, (decretales) are a volume or books of the canon law, so called, containing the decrees of sundry popes, or a digest of the canons of all the councils that pertained to one matter under one head. See Canon Law.

DECURIARE, signifies to bring into order. Mon. Angl. tom. I. p. 243. Cowel. Blount.

DEDBANA, (ded bane, Sax.) an actual homicide, or manslaughter. Leg. H. 1. c. 85.

DEDI, is a warranty in law, as if it be said in a deed or conveyance, that A. B. hath given, &c. to C. D. it is a warranty to him and his heirs. Co. Lit. 304.

DEDICATION-DAY, (festum dedicationis) the anniversary feast of dedication of churches, anciently celebrated not only by the inhabitants of the place, but those of neighbouring villages, by feasting and drinking, and in many parts of England they still meet every year in villages for this purpose, which are days called feasts or wakes. Cowel. Blount.

DEDIMUS POTESTATEM, is a writ issued out of the court of chancery to commissioners, authorizing them to take an answer,—to examine witnesses in a cause—to levy a fine in the common pleas, &c.

Also when any justice intends to act under any commission of the peace, he sues out a writ of dedimus potestatem from the clerk of the crown in chancery, empowering certain persons therein named to administer the usual oaths to him; which done he is at liberty to act. 1 Black. Com. 351.

DEDIMUS POTESTATEM DE ATTORNATO FACIENDO, a writ; anciently the parties could not make attornies in any action or suit without the king's writ of dedimus potestatem, to receive their attornies; but now the plaintiff or defendant may make attornies in suits without such writs. New Nat. Br. 55, 56.

DEED, (factum) is an instrument in writing, on parchment, or paper, and under seal, containing some conveyance, contract, bargain, or agreement between the parties thereto; and it consists of three principal points, writing, sealing, and delivery; writing, to express the contents—sealing, to testify the consent of the parties—and delivery, to make it binding and perfect. Terms de Ley.

And it seems that ten things are necessarily incident to a deed: 1. That it should be in writing. 2. That it be on parchment, vellum, or paper. 3. A person able to contract. 4. By a sufficient name. 5. A person able to be contracted with. 6. By a sufficient name. 7. A thing to be contracted for. 8. Apt words required by law. 9. Sealing: And, 10, delivery. Co. Lit. 35. b.

Every instrument in writing is not a deed; for a contract may be in writing and not by deed, (it being under seal,) and if so it is but as a parol agreement. 1 Ld. Raym. 28.

It is essential that all the matter thereof be written before the sealing and delivery of it: for if a man seals and delivers a blank piece of parchment or paper, although he therewith gives commandment that an obligation or other matter shall be written on it, which is done accordingly, yet this will not make it a good deed. Co. Lit. 171. Perk. S. 118, 119. See Moor 28. Hetley 136, 137.

A deed may be written in any hand, as in text, court, or Roman hand; or in any language, as in Latin or French, and is as good as a deed written in English and in common hand. 2 Co. 3.

If there be any alteration, erasure, or interlining made in any part of the deed before the delivery of it, this will not hurt the deed, but in all such cases it is proper to make a memorandum thereof, upon the back of the deed, and to give the witnesses notice of it (this is now usually done in the attestation of the deed thus: Sealed and delivered, the word —— being first interlined, &c.); for otherwise, if it be in any place material, as in the name of the grantor, grantee, in the limiting of the estate, or the like, and it cannot be proved to be done before the sealing and delivery of it, especially if it be a deed poll, it is very suspicious. Co. Lit. 37, 225. Perk. S. 125, 126, 127, 128, 155.

A deed sealed and delivered, it is said, may be good without signing; for the seal is the essential part of the deed: but it is usual to have deeds signed; and there must be witnesses to the sealing and delivery, who are to indorse or under-write their names thereon. 1 Inst. 7. 10 Rep. 93. The signing is of great use, for the subscribing witnesses to the deed may be dead, when proving their death, and the hand-writing of the party executing the deed, will be sufficient to establish the same. If a writing is not sealed, it cannot be a deed. 3 Inst. 169. 5 Rep. 23.

A deed may be good without all the orderly and formal parts; but if it be without delivery by the party himself, or his attorney lawfully authorized, to the party to whom made, or some other to his use, it is no deed. 1 Inst. 35. 2 Rep. 5.

Of deeds there are two sorts, deeds indented, and deeds poll; which names principally arise from the form of them, the one being cut in and out at top, dentwise, and the other plain; that is, shaved close, from whence it takes the name of deed poll. 2 Black. Com. 296.

A deed-poll is said to be a deed testifying that only one of the parties to the agreement hath put his seal to the same, where such party is the principal, or only person whose consent or act is necessary to the deed: and it is therefore a plain deed without indenting, and is used when the vendor, for example, only seals, and there is no need of the vendee's sealing a counterpart, because the nature of the contract is such as it requires no covenant from the vendee, &c. Co. Lit. 55.

Deeds by indenture, are, where there are several parts belonging to the feoffor, grantor, or lessor, who has one, and the feoffee, grantee, or lessee, who has another; and some other persons, as trustees, a third, &c. and the deed-poll which is single, and of but one part, is delivered to the feoffee, or grantee, &c. Ibid.

All the parts of a deed indented, in judgment of law, make but one entire deed; but every part is of as great force as all the parts together, and they are esteemed the mutual acts of either party, who may be bound by either part of the same, and the words of the indenture are the words of either party, &c. But a deed-poll is the sole deed of him that makes it, and the words thereof shall be said to be his words, and bind him only. Plowd. 134, 421. Lit. sect. 370.

Deeds have several formal parts, viz. the premises, habendum, reddendum, condition, covenants, warranty, date, sealing, &c.

The premises set forth the proper names of the parties, with their additions of place and quality: the lands and tenements intended to be conveyed, with the consideration of the deed, as money, natural love, &c. also the exceptions, if there be any, out of the land granted; as of timber, mines, &c. and in many deeds there may be an occasion for a recital of former deeds in the premises. 1 Inst. 6, 47, 201, 365. Plowd. 152. Wood's Inst. 224, 228.

The habendum fixes the certainty of the estate granted, for what time the grantee is to have it, and to what use: and it sometimes qualifies the estate, so that the general implication of it, which by construction of law passes in the premises, by the habendum may be controlled, but not if the estate is expressed in the premises. Likewise an habendum may explain the premises, to prevent wrong; and sometimes the premises are thereby enlarged. A freehold cannot be granted by deed with habendum at a day to come; and a deed or lease, habendum from henceforth, includes the day on which it was dated; but habendum a die datûs excludes it. Ibid.

The reddendum is that clause in the deed which reserves some new thing to the grantor, as rent, suit, service, &c. and is usually made by the words yielding, paying, doing, &c. A lessor cannot reserve to any but himself, his heirs and executors, &c. nor can he reserve to himself parcel of the annual profits, such as the herbage of the land, for that would be repugnant to the grant, it being a part thereof. Ibid.

Conditions and covenants in deeds are for the holding or not holding of the estate granted, on performance of some act: and a condition relating to a real estate is a quality annexed by him that hath the estate, interest, or right in the same, whereby the estate granted may be defeated, enlarged, or created, upon an uncertain event. Conditions are expressed by these words, viz. Upon condition, Provided, So that, &c. and Provided always, and it is covenanted, is a condition by force of the proviso, and a covenant by virtue of the other words; though sometimes a proviso shall amount to a covenant, and sometimes be taken for a limitation, exception, reservation, explanation, &c. Ibid.

The warranty in deeds is to secure the estate to the grantee and his heirs, &c. and is a covenant real, annexed to the land granted, by which the grantor and his heirs are bound to warrant the same to the grantee and his heirs, and that they shall quietly hold and enjoy it; or upon voucher, &c. the grantor shall yield other lands, to the value of what shall be evicted. Where a feoffor grants away all his estate in the land, and is not bound to warrant the title, but the feoffee is to defend it at his peril; the feoffor shall have all the deeds, as incidents to the land, although not granted in express words; but where the feoffor warrants the land it is otherwise: the feoffor shall have them to defend the title, and the feoffee must trust to his warranty, and have only such deeds as concern the possession, &c. Ibid.

In witness whereof, &c. ascertains the date of the deed; and is as well part of it as what is written before. 1 Inst. 6, 47, 201, 365. Plowd. 152. Wood's Inst. 224, 225.

In deeds, the consideration is a principal thing to give them effect: and the foundation of deeds ought always to be honest.

False English will not make a deed void: but rasure or interlineation in a material part, will render the same void, unless some memorandum be made thereof on the back of the deed, testifying its being done before sealing. 1 Rol. Rep. 40. And if words are blotted out in a deed, by a grantee or lessee himself, after execution, although it be not in a place material, it will make the deed void. Dyer 261.

When a chose in action is created by deed the destruction of such deed is the destruction of the duty itself; as in the case of a bond, bill, or the like, though it is not so where an estate or interest is created by a deed, which cannot be defeated by another deed. 3 Salk. 120.

An indorsement on a deed at or before the time of the sealing and delivery, is a part of the same; but if an indorsement be after the delivery it is a new deed. Mod. Cas. 237.

In deeds indented all parties are estopped, or concluded, to say any thing against what is contained in the deed, 1 Inst. 45. And where a deed is by indenture between parties, none can have an action upon that deed but he who is a party to it; but where it is a deed-poll one may covenant with another who is not a party to it, to do certain acts, for the non-performance whereof he may bring an action. 2 Lev. 74.

But deeds, if fraudulently made, when got by corrupt agreement, as on usurious contract, and when made by force or duress, &c. are void: so they are for uncertainty, and by reason of infancy, coverture, or other disability in the makers, &c. 2 Rol. Abr. 28. 1 Inst. 253. 11 Rep. 27.

And if a deed is obtained fraudulently, without consideration, or for an inadequate consideration; or if by fraud, accident, or mistake, a deed is framed contrary to the intention of the parties in their contract on the subject, the parties claiming under it may take the advantage of proceeding in a court of common law, against the conscience of the case; a court of equity will on this ground interfere to restrain proceedings at law until the matter has been properly investigated; and if it finally appears that the deed has been improperly obtained, or that it is contrary to the intention of the parties in their contract, will in the first case compel the delivery and cancellation of the deed; and in the second case will either rectify the deed according to the intention of the parties, or will restrain the use of it in the points in which it has been framed contrary to, or gone beyond, their intention in the original contract. And the instances of the exercise of the jurisdiction of courts of equity in these cases, and especially in the case of deed fraudulently obtained, are numerous. 3 Lev. 36. 1 Vern. 443, 446. 2 Vern. 123. 206. Mitf. 116.

On the ground of mistake the courts of equity have frequently interfered in a variety of instances, and particularly in the cases of defective securities for money, and of marriage settlements founded on previous articles, where the settlement has been contrary to the evident intention of the parties in the articles. Mitf. 116, 117.

DEEDS, stealing of. At common law, bonds, bills, and notes, which concern mere choses in action, were held not to be such goods whereof larceny might be committed: but by Stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 25, the stealing thereof shall be felony of like degree as in stealing of other goods of like value.

DEEMSTERS, (from the Sax. dema, a judge or umpire) are a kind of judges in the Isle of Man, who without process, or any charge to the parties, decide all controversies in the island; and they are chosen from among themselves. Cam. Brit.

DEER-FELD, a park, or deer-fold. Cowel. Blount.

DEER-HAYES, are engines, or great nets made of cords to catch deer; and no person not having a park, &c. shall keep any of these nets under the penalty of 40*s.* a month. Stat. 19 Hen. 7. cap. 11.

DEER-STEALERS. By 16 Geo. 3. c. 30, justices may order suspected houses to be searched for skins. s. 4.

Setting toils for deer to forfeit 10*l.* and not less than 5*l.* and for the second offence 20*l.* and not less than 10*l.* s. 7.

Pulling down pales, or inclosures of a park or like place, where deer are kept, incurs the same penalty, as the first for killing deer. s. 8.

Fire arms or the like, carried in parks, with intent to destroy deer, may be seized; and beating the keeper, or rescuing the prisoner, transportation for seven years. s. 9.

The penalties shall be applied one moiety to the king, and the other to the informer, to be levied by distress; and the offender, on non-payment, may be committed for one year, or till payment. Ibid.

It is necessary to observe that this act repealed 13 Ric. 2, c. 13. 19 Hen. 7, c. 11. 7 Jac. 1, c. 13. 3 Jac. 1, c. 13. 13 Car. 2, c. 10. 3 and 4 Wil. & Mar. c. 10. 5 Geo. 1, c. 15, and 10 Geo. 2, c. 32, so far as they respectively relate to deer. But it does not extend to Scotland.

By 42 Geo. 3, c. 107, persons who shall illegally hunt, snare, or shoot deer in any inclosure, and their abettors, shall be guilty of felony, and may be transported for seven years. s. 1.

Persons committing such offences in uninclosed grounds forfeit 50*l.* and keepers of deer offending shall forfeit double. s. 2.

The provisions of 16 Geo. 3, c. 30, are extended to this act, and in default of payment of the penalties, offenders may be committed for six months. s. 3.

Persons convicted of a second offence punishable by a pecuniary penalty, may be transported for seven years, and convictions for first offences shall be transmitted to quarter sessions, and filed for proof. s. 4, 5.

So much of 16 Geo. 3. c. 30, s. 1, as inflicts penalties for hunting or shooting deer is repealed. s. 6.

The act does not extend to Scotland. s. 7.

DE ESSENDO QUIETUM DE TELONIO, is a writ that lies for those who are by privilege free from the payment of toll, on their being molested therein. F. N. B. 226.

DE EXPENSIS MILITUM, a writ commanding the sheriff to levy the expenses of a knight of the shire for attendance in parliament, being 4*s. per diem* by statute: and there is a like writ de expensis civium et burgensium, to levy 2*s. per diem* for the expenses of every citizen and burgess of parliament. Stat. 23 Hen. 6. cap. 11. 4 Inst. 46.

DE FACTO, signifies a thing actually done, that is done indeed. A king de facto is one that is in actual possession of a crown, and hath no lawful right to the same; in which sense it is opposed to a king de jure, who has right to a crown, but is out of possession. 3 Inst. 7.

DEFAMATION, (defamatio) is when a person speaks scandalous words of another, whereby he is injured in reputation, for which the party offending shall be punished according to the nature and quality of his offence; sometimes by action on the case at common law, sometimes by statute, and sometimes by the ecclesiastical laws.

Defamation is also punishable by the ritual courts; in which it ought to have three incidents, viz. First, it is to concern matters spiritual, and determinable in the ecclesiastical courts; as for calling a man heretic, schismatic, adulterer, fornicator, &c. Secondly, that it be a matter spiritual only, for if the defamation concern any thing determinable at the common law, the ecclesiastical judges shall not have conusance thereof. And thirdly, although such defamation be merely spiritual, yet he that is defamed cannot sue for damages in the ecclesiastical courts; but the suit ought to be only for punishment of the fault by way of penance. Terms de Ley.

And by 27 Geo. 3, c. 44, suits in ecclesiastical courts for defamatory words shall be commenced within six months.

DEFAULT, (Fr. defaut) is commonly taken for non-appearance in court at a day assigned, though it extends to any omission of that which we ought to do. Bract. lib. 5. tract. 3. Co. Lit. 259. If a plaintiff makes default in appearance in a trial at law he will be non-suited; and where a defendant makes default without plea, judgment shall be had against him by default; but in that case a writ of inquiry is to be taken, because damages are uncertain. 1 Salk. 216.

For suffering judgment to go by default is an admission of the contract declared on. Stra. 612. And after the inquest is taken by default the defendant can make no suggestion on the roll. Str. 46.

DEFAULT IN CRIMINAL CASES. An offender indicted appears at the capias, and pleads to issue, and is let to bail to attend his trial, and then makes default; here the inquest in case of felony shall never be taken by default, but a capias ad audiendam juratam shall issue, and if the party is not taken, an exigent; and if he appear on that writ, and then make default, an exigi facias de novo may be granted; but where upon the capias or exigent the sheriff returns cepi corpus, and at the day hath not his body, the sheriff shall be punished, but no new exigent awarded, because in custody of record. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 202.

DEFAULT OF JURORS. If jurors make default, in their appearance for trying of causes, they shall lose and forfeit issues, unless they have any reasonable excuse proved by witnesses, in which case the justices may discharge the issue for default. Stat. 35 H. 8. c. 6.

DEFEASANCE, (from the Fr. defaire, to defeat) is a declaration relating to a deed that on some act being performed, the deed shall be defeated, and rendered void, as if it never had been made; and the difference between a common condition and a defeasance is, that the condition is annexed to, or inserted in the deed; and a defeasance is either a deed by itself, concluded and agreed on between the parties having relation to another deed, or it may (as in the case of a bond, warrant of attorney, or the like,) be indorsed on the back of the deed. 1 Inst. 236 b. 237. (a) 1 Rep. 113.

And to make a good defeasance it must be, 1st, by deed, (unless indorsed) for there cannot be a defeasance of a deed without deed; and a writing under hand doth not imply it to be a deed. 2dly. It must recite the deed it relates to, or at least the most material part thereof, (unless it be on the back, as mentioned before.) 3dly. It is to be made between the same persons that were parties to the first deed. 4thly. It must be made at the time, or after the first deed, and not before. 5thly. It ought to be made of a thing defeasible. 1 Inst. 236. 3 Lev. 234. Wood's Inst. lib. 2. c. 3.

DEFENCE, in a legal signification, is applicable to a plea, and is that which the defendant ought to make immediately after the count or declaration, viz. that he defends all the wrong, force, and damages, where and when he ought, &c. Terms de Ley.

When the plaintiff hath stated his case in the declaration, it is incumbent on the defendant within a reasonable time to make his defence and to put in a plea, or else the plaintiff will at once recover judgment by default, or nihil dicit of the defendant. 3 Black. 296.

Defence, in its true legal sense, signifies not a justification, protection, or guard, which is now its popular signification; but merely an opposing or denial (from the French verb defender) of the truth or validity of the complaint. It is the contestatio litis of the Civilians: a general assertion that the plaintiff hath no ground of action, which assertion is afterwards extended and maintained in his plea. For it would be ridiculous to suppose that the defendant comes and defends (or in the vulgar acceptation, justifies) the force and injury, in one line, and pleads that he is not guilty of the trespass complained of, in the next. And therefore in actions of dower, where the demandant does not count of any injury done, but merely demands her endowment. (Rastal. Entr. 234.) and in assises of land, where also there is no injury alleged, but merely a question of right stated for the determination of the recognitors or jury, the tenant makes no such defence. (Booth of real Actions, 118.) In writs of entry, (2 Black. Com. Append. No. 5. sect. 2.) where no injury is stated in the count, but merely the right of the demandant and the defective title of the tenant, the tenant comes and defends or denies his right, jus suum, that is, (as Blackstone understands it, though with a small grammatical inaccuracy) the right of the demandant, the only one expressly mentioned in the pleadings, or else denies his own right to be such, as is suggested by the count of the demandant. And in writs of right (3 Black. Com. No. 1. sect. 5.) the tenant always comes and defends the right of the demandant and his seisin, jus prædicti S. et seisinam ipsius. (Co. Entr. 182.) or else the seisin of his ancestor, upon which he counts, (as the case may be) and the demandant may reply, that the tenant unjustly defends his, the demandant's right, and the seisin on which he counts. (Nov. Narr. 230. edit. 1534.) All which is extremely clear, if we understand by defence on opposition or denial, but it is otherwise inexplicably difficult. [The true reason of this, says Booth (on real Actions, 94, 112.) I could never yet find.] 3 Black. Com. 297.

The courts were formerly very nice and curious with respect to the nature of the defence, so that if no defence was made though a sufficient plea was pleaded, the plaintiff should recover judgment: (Co. Lit. 127.) and therefore the book entitled Novæ Narrationes or the Newtalys, (edit. 1534.) at the end of almost every count, narratio, or tale, subjoins such defence as is proper for the defendant to make. For a general defence or denial was not prudent in every situation, since thereby the propriety of the writ, the competency of the plaintiff, and the cognizance of the court, were allowed. By defending the force and injury the defendant waved all pleas of misnomer; (Theh. Dig. l. 14. c. 1. pag. 357.) by defending the damages, all exceptions to the person of the plaintiff; and by defending either one or the other when and where it should behove him, he acknowledged the jurisdiction of the court. [En la defence sont iij choses on tendants: per tant quil defende tort et force, home doyt entendre quil se excuse detort a luy surmys per conte, et fait se partie al plee; et per tant quil defende les damages, il affirme le partie able destre respondu; et per tant quil defende ou et quant il devera, il accepte la poiar decourire de counsire on trier courple. (Mod. Tenend. cur. 408. Edit. 1534.) See also Co. Lit. 127.] But of late years these niceties have been very deservedly discountenanced; (Salk. 217. Ld. Raym. 282.) though they still seem to be law, if insisted on. Carth. 230. Lord Raym. 117. 3 Black. Com. 298.

DEFEND, (defendere) in our ancient laws and statutes, signifies to forbid: as in some parts of England we say, God defend, instead of God forbid. Blount.

DEFENDANT, (defendens) is the party that is sued in a personal action; as tenant is he that is sued in action real. Cowel. Blount.

DEFENDEMUS, is an ordinary word used in grants and donations; and hath this force, that it binds the donor and his heirs to defend the donee, if any one go about to lay any incumbrance on the thing given, other than what is contained in the deed of donation. Bract. lib. 2. c. 16. See Warranty.

DEFENDER OF THE FAITH, (fidei defensor) is a peculiar title belonging to the king of England, as catholicus, to the king of Spain; and Christianissimus, to the king of France, &c. These titles were given by the Popes of Rome; and that of defensor fidei was first conferred by Pope Leo the tenth, on king Henry the eighth, for writing against Martin Luther, and the bull for it bears date quinto idus Octob. 1521. Lord Herbert's Hist. Hen. 8. 105. But the Pope, on king Henry's suppressing the houses of religion, at the time of the reformation, foolishly sentenced him to be deprived of his title, and deposed from his crown; though in the 35th year of his reign his title, &c. was confirmed by parliament; which hath continued to be used by all succeeding kings to this day. Lex Constitutionis, 47, 48.

DEFENDERE SE PER CORPUS SUUM, to offer duel or combat as a legal trial and appeal. Bract. lib. 3. cap. 26.

DEFENDERE UNICA MANU. Words signifying to wage law, and a denial of the accusation upon oath. See Manus. Cowel. Blount.

DEFENSA, a park or place fenced in for deer. Ibid.

DEFENSIVA, the lords or earls of the marches, who were the wardens or defenders of their country, had the title of defensivæ. Ibid.

DEFENSO, that part of any open field or place that was allotted for corn and hay, and upon which there was no common or feeding; was anciently said to be in defenso: so of any meadow ground, that was laid in for hay only. It was likewise the same of a wood, where part was inclosed and fenced up, to secure the growth of the underwood from the injury of cattle. Mon. Angl. Tom. 3. p. 306.

DEFENSUM, an inclosure of land, or any fenced ground. Mon. Angl. tom. 2. p. 114.

DEFORCEMENT, (deforciamentum) is where any one is cast out of his lands or possessions by force: or it is a with-holding lands or tenements by force from the right owner. Co. Lit. 331.

DEFORCEOR, deforciator, (from the French forceur, expugnator) signifies one that overcometh, and casteth out by force. Britton, cap. 53. Old Nat. Brev. fol. 118. Lit. Dictionar. fol. 117. Bract. lib. 4. cap. 1.

DEFORCIANT, mentioned in the stat. 23 El. c. 3. is the same with a deforceor. 2 Black. Com. 350. 3 Black. Com. 174.

DEFORCIATIO, is used for a distress, or holding of goods for satisfaction of a debt. Paroch. Antiq. 293.

DEGRADATION, (degradatio) otherwise called deposition: is an ecclesiastical censure, whereby a clergyman is divested of his holy orders, and there are two sorts of degrading, by the canon law; one summary, by word only; the other solemn by stripping the party degraded of those ornaments and rights which are the ensigns of his order or degree. Selden's Titles of Hon. 787.

There is likewise a degradation of a lord, or a knight, &c. at common law; when they are attainted of treason. And there may be also a degrading by act of parliament; as by stat. 13 Car. 2. cap. 16. where lord Monson, sir Henry Mildmay, and others, were degraded from all titles of honour, dignities, and pre-eminences, and none of them to bear or use the title of lord, knight, esquire, or gentleman, or any coat of arms for ever after. 1 Black. Com. 403.

DEHORS, (Fr.) a word used in ancient pleading, when a thing is without the land, &c. or out of the point in question. Vide Hors de son fee. Cowel. Blount.

DE INJURIA SUA PROPRIA, absque tali causa, are words used in a replication where the defendant has pleaded a justification in an action of trespass. 1 Lil. Abr. 427. Cro. Eliz. 539. 2 Salk. 628.

DEI JUDICIUM. The old Saxon trial by ordeal was so called; because they thought it an appeal to God, for the justice of a cause, and verily believed that the decision was according to the will and pleasure of Divine Providence. Domesd. Cowel. Blount.

DEIS, the high table of a monastery. Ibid.

DELATURA, a Saxon word, signifying an accusation: and sometimes it hath been taken for the reward of an informer. Leges H. 1. c. 46. Leges Inæ 20. apud Brompton.

DELEGATES, are commissioners of appeal appointed by the king under the great seal; in cases of appeals from the ecclesiastical court, &c. by stat. 25 Hen. 8. c. 19. See Court of Delegates.

DELF, (from the Sax. delfan, to dig, or delve) is a quarry or mine, where stone or coal, &c. are dug. Stat. 31 Eliz. cap. 7.

DELIVERANCE. When a criminal is brought to trial, and the clerk in court asks him whether he is guilty, or not guilty, to which he replies not guilty, and puts himself on God and his country, the clerk wishes him a good deliverance. Crown Cir. Com.

DELIVERY OF DEEDS. See Deed.

DEMAND, (Fr. demande, Lat. postulatum) signifies a calling upon a man for any thing due. 8 Rep. 153.

And there are three sorts of demands; 1st, one in writing, without speaking, and that is in every præcipe; 2dly, one without writing, being a verbal demand of the person, who is to do or perform the thing; and 3dly, another made without either word or writing, which is a demand in law. 1 Nels. 630.

And an entry on land, and taking a distress, are a demand in law of the land and rent; so the bringing an action of debt for money due on an obligation is a demand in law of the debt. 1 Lil. 432.

And where there is a duty, which the law makes payable on demand, no actual demand need be made previous to suit; but if there is no duty till demand, in such case there must be a demand, to make the duty. Trin. 3 Ann. 1 Lil. 432. Cro. Eliz. 548. But upon a penalty the party need not make a demand; for if a man be bound to pay 20*l.* on such a day, and in default thereof to pay 40*l.* the 40*l.* must be paid without demand. 1 Mod. 89. So if a man leases land by indenture for years, reserving a rent payable at certain days, and the lessee covenants to pay the said rent at the days limited; the lessor is entitled to his rent, without demand, for the lessee is obliged to pay it at the days, by force of his covenant. 2 Danv. Abr. 101.

But if a lessor makes a lease rendering rent, and the lessee covenant to pay the rent, being lawfully demanded, the lessee is not bound to pay the rent, without a demand. Ibid. 102.

DEMANDANT, (petens) all civil actions are prosecuted either by demands or plaints, and the pursuer is called demandant, in actions real, and the plaintiff, in personal actions: in a real action, lands, &c. are demanded. Co. Lit. 127.

DEMESNE. Lands which are next or more convenient to the lord's mansion house, and which he keeps in his own hands for the support of his family, and hospitality, are called his demesne, but have not the same properties as ancient demesne. Spelm. 12.

DEMISE, (dimissio) is applied to an estate either in fee, for term of life or years, but commonly the latter: it is used in writs for any estate. 2 Inst. 483. The word demise in a lease for years, implies a warranty to the lessee and his assignee; and upon this word action of covenant lies against the heir of the lessor, if he oust the lessee: it binds the executors of the lessor, who has fee-simple, or fee-tail; where any lessee is evicted, and the executor hath assets; but not the lessor for life's executors, without express words, that the lessee shall hold his whole term. Dyer 257. Jenk. Cent. 35.

DEMISE and REDEMISE, the conveyance by demise and redemise is where there is a lease made from one to another at a pepper-corn or some other nominal rent. And the latter redemises to the first lessor the same land for a shorter term, subject to an actual rent; and this is most usually done upon the grant of a rent-charge, or annuity.

DEMURRER AT LAW, (in Latin demorari in lege, from the Fr. demurer) is an issue upon matter of law: thus when any action is brought, and the defendant saith that the plaintiff's declaration is not sufficient for him to answer unto: or when the defendant pleads, and the plaintiff says, that it is not a sufficient plea in law, and the defendant says, that it is a good plea; and thereupon both parties submit to the judgment of the court, this is a morator in lege. 1 Lil. Abr. 435.

So that a demurrer is an issue joined upon matter of law, to be determined by the judges; and is an abiding in point of law, and referring to the judgment of the court, whether the declaration or plea of the adverse party is sufficient in law to be maintained. Finch, lib. 4. cap. 40. 1 Inst. 71.

A demurrer admits the matter of fact, since it refers the law arising on the fact, to the judgment of the court; and therefore the fact is taken to be true on such demurrer, or otherwise the court has no foundation on which to make any judgment. Gilb. Hist. of C. P. 55.

When the court gives judgment on demurrer in debt for the plaintiff in the action, the judgment is for the plaintiff to recover his debt, costs, and damages; but if it be in action of the case, a writ of enquiry of damages must be awarded, before the plaintiff can have final judgment. If judgment on the demurrer is for the defendant in the action, the judgment is, that the plaintiff nihil capiat per breve, or per billam, and that the defendant eat sine die. Wood's Inst. 603.

DEMURRER IN EQUITY. A demurrer in equity, is a defence which rests on the bill, and on the foundation of matter there apparent, demanding the judgment of the court, whether the suit shall proceed at all. Mitf. 14.

A demurrer being founded on the bill itself, necessarily admits the truth of the facts contained in the bill, or in that part of the bill to which it extends; and therefore, as no fact can be in question between the parties, the court may immediately proceed to pronounce its definitive judgment on the demurrer, which if favourable to the defendant, puts an end to so much of the suit as the demurrer extends to. A demurrer if allowed, consequently prevents any further proceeding. Ibid.

This demurrer is an allegation of a defendant, which admitting the matters of fact alleged in the bill to be true, shews that as they are therein set forth, they are insufficient for the plaintiff to proceed upon, or to oblige the defendant to answer, or that for some reason apparent on the face of the bill, or because of the omission of some matter which ought to be contained therein, or for want of some circumstance which ought to be attendant thereon, the defendant ought not to be compelled to answer, it therefore demands the judgment of the court, whether the defendant shall be compelled to make answer to the plaintiff's bill, or to some certain part thereof. Mitf. 99.

The causes of demurrer are merely upon matter in the bill, or upon the omission of matter which ought to be therein, or attendant thereon; and not upon any foreign matter alleged by the defendant. Mitf. 100.

The principal ends of a demurrer are, to avoid a discovery, which may be prejudicial to the defendant; to cover a defective title; or to prevent unnecessary expense: if no one of these ends is obtained, there is little use in a demurrer; for in general, if a demurrer would hold to a bill, the court, though the defendant answers, will not grant relief upon hearing the cause. Ibid.

The principal grounds of objection to the relief sought by an original bill, which can appear on the bill itself, and may therefore be taken advantage of by demurrer, are these, 1st, that the subject of the suit is not within the jurisdiction of a court of equity; 2dly, that some other court of equity has the proper jurisdiction; 3dly, that the plaintiff is not entitled to sue by reason of some personal disability. 4thly, that he has no interest in the subject, or no title to institute a suit concerning it. 5thly, that he has no right to call upon the defendant concerning the subject of the suit. 6thly, that the defendant has not that interest in the subject which can make him liable to the claims of the plaintiff. 7thly, that for some reason founded on the substance of the case, the plaintiff is not entitled to the relief he prays; to these may be added, 8thly, the deficiency of the bill to answer the purpose of complete justice; and, 9thly, the impropriety of confounding distinct subjects in the same bill, or of unnecessarily multiplying suits. Mitf. 102, 103.

And it has been said that a defendant may demur to a bill, if it appears upon the face of it to be brought for a very small sum; but it is most usual to apply to the court, that the bill may be dismissed. Mosely 47, 356. Bunb. 17. Comyn 715.

When the discovery sought by a bill can only be assistant to the relief prayed, a ground of demurrer to the relief will also extend to the discovery, but if the discovery may have a further purpose the plaintiff may be entitled to it, though he has no title to relief. Mitf. 103.

The objections to a bill, which are causes of demurrer to discovery only, are, 1st, that the case made by the bill is not such in which a court of equity assumes a jurisdiction to compel a discovery. 2dly, that the plaintiff has no interest in the subject, or no interest which entitles him to call on the defendant for a discovery. 3dly, that the defendant has no interest in the subject to entitle the plaintiff to institute a suit against him, even for the purposes of discovery. 4thly, although both plaintiff and defendant may have an interest in the subject, yet that there is not that privity of title between them which gives the plaintiff a right to the discovery required by his bill. 5thly, that the discovery, if obtained, cannot be material; and, 6thly, that the situation of the defendant renders it improper for a court of equity to compel a discovery. Ibid. 149.

Where the sole object of a bill is to obtain a discovery, some grounds of demurrer, which if the bill prayed relief would extend to a discovery, as well as to the relief, will not hold: thus a demurrer to a bill for a discovery merely, will not hold for want of parties; for the plaintiff seeks no decree: nor, in general, for want of equity in the plaintiff's case, for the same reason, nor because the bill is brought for the discovery of part of a matter, for that is merely a demurrer, because the discovery would be insufficient; but it should seem a demurrer would hold to a bill for discovery of several distinct matters against several distinct defendants; for though a defendant is always eventually paid his costs upon a bill of discovery, if both parties live, yet the court ought not to permit him to be put to any unnecessary expense, as either the plaintiff or defendant may die pending the suit. Ibid. 163.

A demurrer must be signed by counsel; but is put in without oath, as it asserts no fact, and relies merely upon matter apparent on the face of the bill; it is therefore considered that the defendant may, upon the sight of the bill only, be enabled to demur thereto; and for this reason it is always made the special condition of an order, giving the defendant time to demur, plead, or answer to the plaintiff's bill, that he shall not demur alone. Ibid. 170.

Whenever, therefore, the defendant has obtained an order for time, and is afterwards advised to demur, he must also plead to or answer some part of the bill: and it has been held, that answering to some fact immaterial to the cause, and denying combination, do not amount to a compliance with the terms of such an order; and therefore upon motion a demurrer accompanied by such an answer has been discharged. 2 P. Will. 286. And as the modern practice is according to the strictness of this rule, Ld. Redesdale is of opinion that where the defendant cannot answer further without over-ruling his demurrer, it may be better to relax the rule upon special application to the court, than to permit it to be evaded. Mitf. 170, 2.

A demurrer must express the several causes of demurrer; and in case the demurrer does not go to the whole bill it must clearly express the particular parts of the bill demurred to; if a demurrer is general to the whole bill, and there is any part, either as to the relief or the discovery, to which the defendant ought to put in an answer, it is generally considered that the demurrer being entire must be over-ruled. Ibid. 173.

But there are instances of allowing a demurrer in part; and a defendant may put in separate demurrers to separate and distinct parts of a bill for separate and distinct causes: for the same ground of demurrer frequently will not apply to different parts of a bill, though the whole is liable to demurrer; and in this case one demurrer may be over-ruled upon argument, and another allowed. Ibid.

If the plaintiff conceives that there is not sufficient cause apparent in his bill to support a demurrer put into it, or that the demurrer is too extensive, or otherwise improper, he may take the judgment of the court upon it; and if he conceives that by amending his bill he can remove the ground of demurrer, he may do so before the demurrer is argued, on payment of costs, which vary according to the state of the proceedings. Ibid. 174.

But after a demurrer to the whole of a bill has been argued and allowed, the bill is out of court, and therefore cannot be regularly amended: to avoid this consequence the court has sometimes, instead of deciding upon the demurrer, given the plaintiff liberty to amend his bill, paying the costs incurred by the defendant; and this has been frequently done in the case of a demurrer for want of parties. Ibid.

Where a demurrer leaves any part of a bill untouched, the whole may be amended, notwithstanding the allowance of the demurrer; for the suit in that case continues in court, the want of which circumstance seems to be the reason of the contrary practice, where a demurrer to the whole bill has been allowed. Ibid.

A demurrer being frequently a matter of form is not in general a bar to a new bill; but if the court upon a demurrer has clearly decided upon the merits of the question between the parties, the decision may be pleaded in bar of another suit. Ibid. 175.

A demurrer being always upon matter apparent upon the face of the bill, and not upon any matter alleged by the defendant, it sometimes happens that a bill, which if all the parts of the case were disclosed, would be open to a demurrer, is so artfully drawn as to avoid showing upon the face of it any cause of demurrer; in this case the defendant is compelled to revert to a plea by which he may allege matter which, if it appeared on the face of the bill, would be good cause of demurrer; for in many cases what is a good defence by way of plea is also good as a demurrer, if the facts appear sufficiently by the bill. Ibid.

DEMURRER TO EVIDENCE, is where a question of law doth arise thereupon: as if the plaintiff produces in evidence, any records, deeds, writings, &c. upon which a question of law arises, and the defendant offers to demur upon it; and then the plaintiff must join in demurrer, or wave his evidence. So if the plaintiff brings witnesses to prove a fact, and a matter of law ariseth upon it; if the defendant admits their testimony to be true, there also the defendant may demur in law: and so may the plaintiff demur upon the defendant's evidence. And in these cases, the counsel for the plaintiff and defendant agree the matter of fact in dispute, and the jury are discharged; and the matter of law is referred to the judges to determine. But where evidence is given for the king, in an information or other suit, and the defendant offers to demur upon it, the king's counsel are not obliged to join therein; but the court ought to direct the jury to find the special matter. And, indeed, because juries of late usually find a doubtful matter specially, demurrers upon evidence are now seldom used. 5 Rep. 104. 1 Inst. 72. 2 Inst. 426. If the court doth not agree in a demurrer, to the insufficiency of evidence in a civil cause, they ought to seal a bill of exceptions, &c. 9 Ken. 13. See Bill of Exceptions.

DEMURRER TO INDICTMENTS. If a criminal joins issue upon a point of law in an indictment or appeal, allowing the fact to be true, as laid therein, this is a demurrer in law: and if the indictment or appeal proves good in law, in the opinion of the judges, they proceed to judgment and execution, as if the party had been convicted by confession or verdict. 2 Inst. 178. H. P. C. 243. S. P. C. 160. 1 Hawk. P. C. 14.

DEMY SANGUE, is the half blood: where a man marries a woman, and hath issue by her a son, and the wife dying he marries another woman, by whom he hath also a son; now these two sons, though they are called brothers, are but brothers of the half blood, because they had not both the father and mother: and therefore by law they cannot be heirs to one another; for he that claims as heir to another by descent must be of the whole blood to him from whom he claims. Terms de Ley.

But the half blood are entitled under the statutes of distribution to any equal share of the personal estate with the whole blood. Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 10.

DEN. The names of places ending in den, as Biddenden, &c. signify the situation to be in a valley, or near woods, from the Sax. den, i. e. vallis, locus sylvestris. Cowel. Blount.

DEN AND STRond, is a liberty for ships or vessels to run or come ashore: and Ed. 1. by charter granted this privilege to the barons of the Cinque Ports. Ibid.

DENA TERRÆ, a hollow place between two hills; it is also used for a little portion of woody ground, commonly called a coppice. Ibid.

DENARII, a general term for any sort of pecunia numerata, or ready money. Paroch. Antiq. 320.

DENARII DE CARITATE, customary oblations made to cathedral churches about the time of Pentecost, when the parishpriests and many of their people went in procession to visit their mother church. Cowel. Blount.

DENARIUS, an English penny. Ibid.

DENARIUS DEI, God's penny, or earnest money given and received by the parties to contracts, &c. Ibid.

DENARIUS S. PETRI, (called Peter's pence) an annual payment of one penny from every family to the pope, during the time that the Roman catholic religion prevailed in this kingdom, paid on the feast of St. Peter, finally abolished by 1 Eliz. c. 1.

DENARIUS TERTIUS COMITATUS. Of the fines and other profits of the county-courts, originally when those courts had superior jurisdiction before other courts were erected, two parts were reserved to the king, and a third part or penny to the earl of the county; who either received it in specie at the assises and trials, or had an equivalent composition for it out of the exchequer. Paroch. Antiq. 418.

DENBERA, (from the Sax. den, a vale, and berg, a barrow or hog) a place for the rumpasture feeding of hogs, wherein they are penned, by some called a swinecomb. Cowel. Blount.

DENIZEN, (Fr. denaisn) is an alien enfranchised, and made a subject by the king's letters patent; and is called denaison, because his legitimation proceeds ex donatione regis, from the king's gift. 2 Inst. 741. This may be either general, as to be accounted in all things as a subject, or particular, enabling one to sue only. And in the charter, whereby a person is made a denizen, there is commonly contained some clause that expressly abridges him of that full benefit which natural subjects enjoy. Bract. lib. 5. tract. 5. cap. 25. 2 Inst. 741.

When the king makes a denizen by letters patent he may purchase lands, and his issue born afterwards may inherit them, but those he had before shall not. And though a denizen is enabled to purchase he cannot inherit the lands of his ancestors, but as a purchaser he may enjoy them; and he may take lands by devise. 1 Inst. 8. 5 Rep. 52. 11 Rep. 67. And aliens made denizens are incapable of offices in the government, or to be members of parliament, &c. by stat. 12 W. 3. c. 2. 1 Geo. 1. c. 4.

DENSHIRING OF LAND (so called from the original practice in Devonshire) is the casting purings of earth, turf, and stubble, into heaps, which when dried are burnt into ashes for a compost on poor barren land. Cowel. Blount.

DE NON DECIMANDO, a writ to be discharged of tithes. Ibid.

DE NON RESIDENTIA CLERICI REGIS, was an ancient writ where a person was employed in the king's service, &c. to excuse and discharge him of non-residence. 2 Inst. 624.

DENTRIX, a fish with many teeth. Cowel. Blount.

DEODAND (Deo dandum) is a thing given to God, to appease his anger, where a person comes to a violent death by mischance, not by any reasonable creature, and is forfeited to the king, or the lord of the manor, as grantee of the crown; and if to the king, his almoner disposes of it by sale, and the money arising thereby, he distributes to the poor: also if forfeited to the lord of a liberty, it ought to be thus distributed. 3 Inst. 57. 5 Rep. 110. 1 Nels. 636. And it is described to be any movable thing inanimate, or beast animate, that doth cause or occasion the untimely death of any man by mischance (without fault of himself, or other person) in any county of England, (but not upon the sea or salt water) and that thing, and every thing moving with it to the death, is forfeited to the king, or grantee of the crown, if he dies within a year and a day after. 3 Inst. 57. 5 Rep. 110. Keil. 686.

Thus if a man in driving a cart falls so as the cart-wheel runs over him, and presses him to death, the cart-wheel is forfeited; and that only, as the immediate cause of his death, may be then seized by the lord of the manor, and converted to his own use. 1 Nels. 639. So if a horse strikes and kills a person, it is deodand. 3 Inst. 57.

And if a horse strikes a man, and afterward the owner sells the horse, and then the party that was stricken dies of the stroke, the horse, notwithstanding the sale, shall be forfeited as deodand. Plowd. 260. 5 Rep. 110.

But if a man riding over a river is thrown off his horse by the violence of the water, and drowned, his horse is not deodand, for his death was caused per casum aquæ. 2 Co. 483.

Things fixed to the freehold, as a bell hanging in a steeple, a wheel of a mill, &c. unless severed from the freehold, cannot be deodands. 2 Inst. 281. And there is no forfeiture of a deodand till the matter is found of record by the jury that finds the death, who ought also to find and appraise the value of the deodand. 5 Rep. 110. 1 Inst. 144. After the coroner's inquisition the sheriff is answerable for the value, where the deodand belongs to the king, and he may levy the same on the town, &c. wherefore the inquest ought to find the value of it. 1 Hawk 67.

DE ONERANDO PRO RATA PORTIONIS, was a writ, (now in disuse) which anciently laid where a person was distrained for rent, that ought to be paid by others proportionably with him. F. N. B. 264.

DEPARTURE, (in pleading) is where a defendant, who first pleading one thing in bar of an action, and being replied unto, in his rejoinder quits that and shows another matter, contrary to, or not pursuing his first plea, which is called a departure from his plea: also where a plaintiff in his declaration sets forth one thing, and after the defendant has pleaded, the plaintiff in his replication shows new matter different from his declaration, this is a departure; and for a departure in pleading a demurrer will lie. Plow. 7, 8. 2 Inst. 147.

DEPARTURE IN DESPITE OF THE COURT, and entry of it. See Default.

DEPARTURE OF GOLD AND SILVER. The parters or dividers of those metals, from others that are coarser. Cowel. Blount.

DEPOPULATIO AGRORUM, destroying and ravaging a country, an offence where the benefit of clergy was denied at common law. 2 Hal. pl. 332. 4 Black. Com. 366.

DEPOPULATION, (depopulatio) is a wasting or destruction; a desolation or unpeopling of any place, by fire, sword, pestilence, &c. 12 Rep. 30.

DEPOPULATORES AGRORUM, these were great offenders, by the ancient common law, so called because by prostrating and ruining of houses of habitation of the king's people, they, as it were, depopulated towns and villages, leaving them without inhabitants. Stat. 4 Hen. 4. cap. 2. 3 Inst. 204.

DEPOSITION, (depositio) is the testimony of a witness, otherwise called a deponent, put down in writing by way of answer to interrogatories exhibited for that purpose, in courts of equity, and the copies of such depositions regularly taken and published, are read as evidence at the hearing of the cause. Practis. Attorn. Edit. 1, p. 234. Harrison's Prac.

Depositions in the chancery after a cause is determined may be given in evidence in a trial at law, in a suit for the same matter, between the same parties, if the party that deposed be dead, but not otherwise; for if he be living he must appear in person in court, to be examined, &c. 1 Lil. Abr. 445.

Also in the courts of law, where witnesses in a cause are going to sea, or on long journies, the court will give leave to examine them de bene esse on interrogatories, at a judge's chamber, in the presence of the attornies on both sides. Also in the case of witnesses residing abroad, commissions frequently issue to take their depositions there, and such depositions in all such cases shall be admitted to be good evidence. Ibid.

Depositions of witnesses taken upon oath before a coroner, upon an inquisition of death, or before justices of peace on a commitment or bailment of felony, may be given in evidence at a trial for the same felony, if it be proved on oath that they are dead, or unable to travel, or kept away by the procurement of the prisoner; and oath must be made that the depositions are the same that were sworn before the coroner or justice, without any alteration. 2 Hawk. P. C. 429.

Deposition is also used in the law in another sense, viz. to signify the depriving of a person of some dignity; and deposition is also taken for death; and dies depositionis the day of one's death. Litt. Dict.

DEPRIVATION, (deprivatio) is depriving or taking away, as where a bishop, parson, vicar, or other ecclesiastical person, is deposed from his preferment. Cowel. Blount.

And the causes of deprivation are many: if a clerk obtain a preferment in the church by simoniacal contract; if he be an excommunicate, a drunkard, fornicator, adulterer, infidel, schismatic or heretic, or guilty of murder, manslaughter, perjury, forgery, &c. If a clerk be illiterate and not able to perform the duty of his church; if he is a scandalous person in his life and conversation; or bastardy is objected against him: if one be a mere layman, and not in holy orders; or under age, viz. the age of twenty-three years, be disobedient and incorrigible to his ordinary; or a nonconformist to the canons; if a parson refuse to use the common prayer, or preach in derogation of it; do not administer the sacraments, or read the articles of religion, &c. Or if any parson, vicar, &c. have one benefice with cure of souls, and take plurality, without a faculty or dispensation; or if he hath omitted to read and subscribe the thirty-nine articles, or if he commit waste in the houses and lands of the church called dilapidations; all these have been held good causes for deprivation of priests. Deg's Parson's Counsellor, 98, 99, &c. 3 Inst. 204.

But where the living is made ipso facto void, as in avoidances by act of parliament, no previous declaratory sentence is necessary. Can. 122.

But where a benefice is only voidable, but not void before sentence of deprivation, the party must be cited to appear; there is to be a libel against him, and a time assigned to answer it, and also liberty for advocates to plead, and after all a solemn sentence pronounced.

If a deprivation be for a thing merely of ecclesiastical cognizance, no appeal lies; but the party has his remedy by a commission of review, which is granted by the king of mere grace. 26 H. 8. Moor 781.

DEPUTY, (deputatus) is he that exercises an office, &c. in another man's right, whose forfeiture or misdemeanor shall cause him whose deputy he is to lose his office. 1 Lill. Abr. 446.

And there is great difference between a deputy and assignee of an office; for an assignee has an interest in the office itself, and does all things in his own name; for whom his grantor shall not answer, unless in special cases. But a deputy has not any interest in the office, but is only the shadow of the officer, in whose name he does all things. And where an officer has power to make assigns, he may implicitly make deputies, for cui licet quod majus est, non debet quod minus est non licere. And a sheriff may make a deputy, or under-sheriff, although he have not such express words in the patent. Comyns. Blount.

So a bailiff of a liberty may make a deputy. Cro. Jac. 240. And a constable may make a deputy, who may execute the warrant directed to the constable. 2 Danv. 482.

So when an office of inheritance descends to an infant, idiot, or other incapacitated person, such may make a deputy of course. 9 Rep. 47. And where an office is granted to a man and his heirs he may make an assignee of that office, and by consequence a deputy. A deputy of an office has no interest therein, but doth all things in his master's name, and his master shall be answerable; but an assignee hath an interest in the office, and does all things in his own name, for whom his grantor shall not answer unless in special cases. Terms de Ley.

And the superior officer must answer for his deputy in civil actions, if he is not sufficient; but in criminal cases it is otherwise, where deputies are to answer for themselves. 2 Inst. 191, 446. Doct. et Stud. c. 42.

But a deputy cannot make a deputy, because it implies an assignment of his whole power, which he cannot assign over, but he may empower another to do a particular act. 1 Salk. 96. Lit. 379.

Judges, however, cannot act by deputy, but are to hold their courts in person; for they may not transfer their power over to others. 2 Hawk. P. C. 3.

Also a coroner ought not to execute his office by deputy, it being a judicial office of trust, and judicial offices are annexed to the person. 1 Lill. 446

DE QUIBUS SUR DISSEISIN, is a writ of entry mentioned in our books treating of writs. F. N. B. 191.

DER (from the Sax. deor, fera). The names of places beginning with this word signify that formerly wild beasts herded together there. Cowel. Blount.

DERAIGN, or DEREYN, (distrationare) seems to be derived literally from the Fr. destrayer, i. e. to confound and disorder, or to turn out of course, or displace, as deraignment or departure out of religion. Stat. 31 H. 8. cap. 6. Cowel. Blount.

DERELICT (derelictus), is any thing forsaken or left, or wilfully cast away. 2 Nels. Abr. 903.

If the sea shrink back so slowly that the gain be by little and little, i. e. by small and imperceptible degrees, it is said it shall go to the owner of the lands adjoining. 2 Black. Com. 262.

But where an island in the sea is formed, or a large quantity of new land appears, it belongs to the king. 2 Nels. Abr. 905. 2 Black. Com.

DESCENDER, writ of formedon in. A writ which lies where a gift in tail is made, and the tenant in tail aliens the lands entailed, or is disseised of them and dies, the heir in tail shall have this writ against him who is then the actual tenant of the freehold. F. N. B. 211, 212. 3 Black. Com. 192.

DESCENT of lands, tenements, &c. See Discent.

DESCRIPTION (descriptio). In deeds and grants there must be a certain description of the lands granted, the places where the lands lie, and of the persons to whom granted, &c. to make them good. But wills are more favoured than grants, as to those descriptions; and a wrong description will not make a devise void if there be otherwise a sufficient certainty of what was intended by the testator. 1 Nels. Abr. 647.

DESERTION. If any one deserts from the king's armies in time of war, whether by land or sea, in England, or in parts beyond the seas, he is by the standing laws of the land (exclusive of the annual acts of parliament to punish mutiny and desertion), and particularly by stat. 18 Hen. 6, c. 19. and 5 Eliz. c. 5, guilty of felony, but not without benefit of clergy. But by stat. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 2, clergy is taken away from such deserters, and the offence is made triable by the justices of every shire. 4 Black. Com. 101.

DE SON TORT DEMESNE, are certain words of form used in actions of trespass, &c. by way of replication to the defendant's plea, i. e. that he did it of his own wrong, without any such cause, &c. in manner and form, &c. 8 Rep. 67. 1 Lil. Abr. 428. 3 Lev. 65. 2 Leon. 108.

DESPITUS, signifies in our ancient law-books a contemptible person. Fleta, lib. 4, cap. 5, par. 4.

DESUBITO, to weary a person with continual barkings, and then to bite. Cowel. Blount.

DETACHIARE, to seize or to take into custody another person's goods, &c. by attachment or other course of law. Cowel. Blount.

DETERMINATION OF WILL, the exertion of any act of ownership by the lessor puts an end to or determines an estate at will. 2 Black. Com. 146.

DETINET, a word used in writs, which is necessary in the writ of detinue, &c. See Debet and Detinet.

DETINUE, (detinendo) is a writ which lies, against him, who having goods or chattels delivered to keep, refuses to re-deliver them. In this action the thing detained is generally to be recovered, and not damages; but if one cannot recover the thing itself, he shall recover damages for the thing, and also for the detainer. Wood's Inst. 542. Detinue lies for any thing certain and valuable, wherein one may have a property or right; as for horse, cow, sheep, hens, dogs, jewels, plate, cloth, bags of money, sacks of corn, &c. It must be laid so certain, that the thing detained may be known and recovered; and therefore for money out of a bag, or corn out of a sack, &c. it lies not; for the money or corn cannot in this case be known from other money or corn; so that the party must have an action on the case, &c. 1 Inst. 226. F. N. B. 138.

In order, therefore, to ground an action of detinue, which is only for the detaining, these points are necessary; 1st, that the defendant came lawfully by the goods, as either by delivery to him, or finding them; 2dly, that the plaintiff have a property; 3dly, that the goods themselves be of some value; and, 4thly, that they be ascertained in point of identity. 3 Black. 151.

But there is one disadvantage which attends this action, viz. that the defendant is herein permitted to wage his law, that is, to exculpate himself by oath, denying the possession, &c. and thereby defeat the plaintiff of his remedy: which privilege is grounded on the confidence originally reposed in the bailee by the bailor, in the borrower by the lender, and the like; from whence arose a strong presumptive evidence that in the plaintiff's own opinion the defendant was worthy of credit. 3 Black. 151. And for this reason the action itself is of late much disused, and has given place to the action of TROVER, in which the defendant cannot wage his law. Ibid.

DETINUE OF CHARTERS. A man may have a writ of detinue for deeds and charters concerning land; but if they concern the freehold, it must be in C. B. and no other court. New Nat. Br. 308. Co. Lit. 286. 1 Rep. 2. F. N. B. 138.

For detaining of deeds and charters concerning the inheritance of lands, or an indenture of lease, the defendant shall not wage law; but in a common action of detinue he may do it. 1 Inst. 295.

DETINUE OF GOODS IN FRANK-MARRIAGE, is on a divorce between a man and his wife; after which the wife shall have this writ of detinue for the goods given with her in marriage. New Nat. Br. 308.

DETRACTARE, signifies a punishment to be torn in pieces with horses. Cowel. Blount.

DETUNICARE, to discover or lay open to the world. Ibid.

DEVADIATUS, is where an offender is without sureties or pledges. Ibid.

DEVASTAVIT, or DEVASTAVERUNT BONA TESTATORIS, is a writ that lies against executors or administrators for paying debts upon simple contract, before debts on bonds and specialties, &c. after notice. 1 Mod. 175. 1 Lev. 215. For in this case they are liable to action as if they had squandered away the goods of the deceased, or converted them to their own use; and are compellable to pay such debts by specialty out of their own goods, to the value of what they so paid illegally. Dyer 282.

Where an executor, &c. pays legacies before debts, and has not sufficient to pay both, it is a devastavit. Also where an executor sells the testator's goods at an undervalue, it is a devastavit; but this is understood where the sale is fraudulent; for if more money could not be had, it is otherwise. Kielw. 59. 1 Nels. Abr. 649. Executors keeping the goods of the deceased in their hands, and not paying the testator's debts, or selling them, and not paying off debts, &c. or not observing the law which directs them in the management thereof; or doing any thing by negligence or fraud, whereby the estate of the deceased is misemployed, are a devastavit, or waste; and they shall be charged for so much de bonis propriis, as if for their own debt. 8 Rep. 133. But the fraud or negligence of one executor is not chargeable on the rest, where there are several executors. 1 Rol. Abr. 929.

If an executor or administrator confesses judgment, or suffers it to go by default, he thereby admits assets, and is estopped to say the contrary in an action on such judgment, suggesting a devastavit. 1 Wms. 258.

DEVENERUNT, a writ, now disused, which was heretofore directed to the escheator on the death of the heir of the king's tenant under age, and in custody, commanding the escheator that by the oaths of good and lawful men he inquire what lands and tenements by the death of the tenant came to the king, Dyer 360.

DEVEST, (devestire) is opposite to invest. As invest signifies to deliver the possession of any thing to another, so devest signifies the taking it away. Feud. lib. 1, cap, 7. Cowel. Blount.

DEVISE, (from the Fr. deviser, to divide or sort into parcels) signifies a gift, or disposition of any lands or tenements by will in writing; and he who gives away, or in any wise disposes of or limits his lands in this manner, is called the devisor; and he to whom the lands are given or limited, the devisee. See WILLS.

DEVOIRES OF CALEIS, were the customs due to the king, for merchandise brought into or carried out of Calais, when our staple remained there. Cowel. Blount.

DEXTRARIUS, is understood to take the right hand of another. And the word dextarius has been used for light horses, or horses for the great saddle. Ibid.

DEXTRAS DARE, shaking of hands in token of friendship; or a man's giving up himself to the power of another person. Ibid.

DIARIUM, is taken for daily food, or as much as will suffice for the day. Ibid.

DIASPERATUS, stained with many colours. Ibid.

DICA, a tally for accounts, by number of taillees, cuts, or notches. Ibid.

DICKAR, or DICKER OF LEATHER, is a certain quantity, consisting of ten hides, by which leather is bought and sold; there are also dickers of iron, containing ten bars to the dicker. This word is thought to come from the Greek δεκας, which signifies ten. Ibid.

DICTORES and DICTUM, the one signifies arbitrators, and the other the arbitrament. Ibid.

Dictum also signifies any casual or extrajudicial opinion delivered by a judge in the argument of a case before the court.

DICTUM DE KENELWORTH, an edict or award, between king Hen. the Third and his barons and others, who had been in arms against him: so called because it was made at Kenelworth castle in Warwickshire, anno 51 Hen. 3. Cowel. Blount.

DIEM CLAUSIT EXTREMUM, was a writ issued out of the court of chancery to the escheator of the county upon the death of any of the king's tenants in capite, to inquire by a jury of what lands he died seised, and of what value, and who was the next heir to him; and the same ought to be granted at the suit of the next heir, &c for upon that, when the heir came of age, he was to sue livery of his lands out of the king's hands. F. N. B. 251. Ibid.

DIES NON. There are several days in the different terms called dies non juridica, on which the courts at Westminster do not transact any business; they are the following, viz. the Lord's day, throughout the whole year; in Easter term, Ascension day; in Trinity term, St. John Baptist, when it falls in that term; and in Hilary term the day of the purification of the Virgin Mary.

DIES DATUS, is a day or time of respite given to the defendant in a suit by the court. Broke.

DIES MARCHIÆ, was the day of congress or meeting of the English and Scotch, appointed annually to be held on the marches or borders, to adjust all differences between them, and preserve the articles of peace. Cowel. Blount.

DIETA, a day's journey. Omnes rationibilis dieta constat ex viginti miliaribus. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 22, and in this sense it is used by Bracton, lib. 3, tract. 2, c. 16.

DIET, (conventus) an assembly, as the diet of the empire, of Ratisbon, &c.

DIEU ET MON DROIT, God and my Right, the motto of the royal arms, intimating, that the king of England holds his empire of none but God; first given by king Rich. 1. Cowel. Blount.

DIEU SON ACT. It is a maxim of law that the act of God shall prejudice no man. Therefore, if an accident happens by tempest, thunder, or lightning, without the intervention of man, this shall excuse one who would otherwise be liable, as a common carrier, for the goods which he is intrusted to carry; or a lessee for life or years, in respect of waste or damage. 4 Rep. 63. 11 Rep. 82. 1 Ter. Rep. 27. 5 Ter. Rep. 389. 4 Ter. Rep. 581.

DIFFACERE, to destroy; and diffactio is a maiming any one. Leg. H. 1. c. 64. 92. Cowel. Blount.

DIFFORCIARE, RECTUM, to take away, or deny justice. Mat. Paris. anno 1164. Cowel. Blount.

DIGEST, the book of Pandects of the civil law, which has its name from its containing Legalia præcepta excellenter digesta. Du Cange.

DIGNITY. (dignitas) Dignity may be divided into superior and inferior: as the titles of duke, earl, baron, &c. are the highest names of dignity; and those of baronet, knight, serjeant at law, &c. the lowest. The omission of a name of dignity may be pleaded in abatement; and so it may be where a peer who has more than one name of dignity is not named by the most noble. 1 Hawk. P. C. 185, 239. But no temporal dignity of any foreign nation can give a man a higher title here than that of esquire. 2 Inst. 667.

DIGNITARIES, (dignitarii) are those who are advanced to any dignity ecclesiastical; as a bishop, dean, archdeacon, prebendary, &c. But there are simple prebendaries, without cure or jurisdiction, which are not dignitaries. 3 Inst. 155.

DILAPIDATION, (dilapidatio) is where an incumbent on a church living suffers the parsonage house or outhouses to fall down, or be in decay for want of necessary reparation: or it is the pulling down or destroying any of the houses or buildings, belonging to a spiritual living, or destroying of the woods, trees, &c. appertaining to the same; for it is said to extend to the committing or suffering any wilful waste in or upon the inheritance of the church. Degg's Paris. Couns. 89.

By the old canons, and our own provincial constitutions, the clergy are bound sufficiently to repair the houses belonging to their benefices; which, if they neglect or refuse to do, the bishop may sequester the profits of the benefice for that purpose, &c. Rights Clerg. 143.

The prosecution in these cases may be brought either against the incumbent himself, or against his executors or administrators; and the executor or administrator of him in whose time it was done or suffered must make amends to the successor: and if you proceed against the incumbent, then it is proper in the spiritual court: likewise you may proceed in that court against an executor, or the successor may have an action of the case or debt at the common law, in which action he shall recover damages in proportion to the dilapidations. 1 Nels. Abr. 656. Pars. Couns. 97, 98.

By statute, if any parson, &c. shall make a gift of his goods and personal estate to defraud his successor, as to dilapidations, such successor may have the same remedy in the spiritual court against the person to whom such gift is made, as he might have against the executors of the deceased parson. 13 Eliz. cap. 10. And money recovered for dilapidations, is to be employed in the reparations of the same houses suffered to be in decay, or the party recovering shall forfeit double the value of what he receives, to the king, by Stat. 14 Eliz. cap. 11.

If a parson suffers dilapidations, and afterwards takes another benefice, whereby his former benefice becomes void, his successor may have an action against him, and declare that by the custom of the kingdom he ought to pay him tantas denariorum summas quantæ sufficient ad reparandum, &c. 3 Lev. 268. In case a parson comes to a living, the buildings wherof are in decay by dilapidations, and his predecessor did not leave a sufficient personal estate to repair them, so that he is without remedy; he is to have the defects surveyed by workmen, and attested under their hands in the presence of witnesses, which may be a means to secure him from the encumbrance brought upon him by the fault of his predecessor. Country Parson's Companion, 60.

By 17 Geo. 3. c. 53, the incumbent of any ecclesiastical living, whereon there is no house of habitation, or one that is so ruinous or mean that one year's net income will not build or repair it, after an estimate, on oath, laid before the ordinary and patron, may borrow not more than two years income, and mortgage the living for twenty-five years, or till repaired, with interest and costs, which mortgage shall bind the succeeding incumbents.

The mortgagee is to execute a counterpart, which is to be registered by the register of the diocese for 5*s.* to pay 1*s.* for a search, and a copy to be evidence. Ibid.

On failure of payment of principal and interest, forty days after due, the mortgagee may distrain. Ibid.

The money borrowed, to be paid to a person nominated by the ordinary, who is to give security, and contract and pay for the work, and the surplus is to be laid out in lasting improvements by order of the ordinary, patron, and incumbent. Ibid.

The ordinary to inquire into the condition of the buildings, when the incumbent entered; every incumbent to pay the interest yearly, and 5 per cent. per ann. of the principal, and if not resident twenty weeks in the year, to pay 10 per cent. per ann. of the principal; and on paying 5 per cent. only to produce a certificate of two ministers of adjoining parishes of his residence; and when the buildings are completed he is to insure them against fire; on death or avoidance the annual payments to be in proportion between the late and present incumbent. Ibid.

If the living is worth 100*l. per ann.* or more, and has no house, or a ruinous one, and the incumbent is not resident for 20 weeks in any year, the ordinary may (if the incumbent neglects to make application for the purposes aforesaid) with the consent of the patron, procure a plan and estimate, and proceed to mortgage, in such manner as the parson is directed by this act. Ibid.

All money recovered or received from the former incumbent's representatives, for dilapidations, to go in improvements, and where buildings are necessary, the ordinary, patron, and incumbent may purchase a house within one mile of the church, and land not above two acres for each 100*l. per ann.* and the money may be raised by the sale of the glebe or tithes, by joint consent. Ibid.

Governors of queen Anne's bounty may lend 100*l.* to each living under 50*l. per ann.* (to promote this act) interest free; and if above 30*l. per ann.* may lend two years' value on interest at four per cent. and the universities of Oxford or Cambridge, being patrons, may advance money for the purposes of the act, interest free; and if the patron is a minor, idiot, lunatic, or feme covert, the guardian, committee, or husband, may act, and it shall be binding. Ibid.

All writings under this act are to be free from the stamp duty. If a corporation be patron, all acts by them to be under their common seal; where the rector or vicar nominates to a chapel or perpetual cure, his patron to consent. Disputes as to residence to be settled by the ordinary; and the person laying out the money may be allowed 5 per cent. for so doing. Ibid.

If the crown be patron, and the living above 20*l. per ann.* in the king's books, the first lord of the treasury is to consent; under 20*l. per ann.* the lord chancellor, and in the duchy of Lancaster the chancellor thereof. Ibid.

If an archbishop, bishop, or ecclesiastical corporation, sole or aggregate, be lord of the manor, they may grant the waste in perpetuity to build on, leaving sufficient for the commoners, with the consent of the lessees. Ibid.

By 21 Geo. 3. c. 66. the incumbent of every living, whereof the glebes, tithes, and other profits have been or shall be mortgaged for the purposes of the above act, shall pay to the mortgagee, beside interest, 5 per cent. per ann. of the principal, if resident, or 10 per cent. if non-resident.

DILATORY PLEAS, are such as are put in merely for delay, as coverture, misnomer, and the like, and there may be a demurrer to a dilatory plea, or issue may be taken on the fact, if false. If the plea is true in fact, and good in law, and is in abatement, the plaintiff must enter up judgment of cassetur billa before he commences a new suit. If the plea is adjudged ill, on demurrer, there must be a respondeas ouster, and defendant must plead another plea. If issue in fact, is taken, and found by the jury, for plaintiff, in case, &c. they assess the damages, in debt, the judgment for plaintiff is final, &c. And the truth of a dilatory plea must be verified by affidavit of the fact, by stat. 4 Ann. c. 16. s. 11.

DILIGIATUS, outlawed, i. e. de lege ejectus. Cowel. Blount.

DILLIGROUT, was a tenure in serjeanty, by which lands were held of the king, by the service of finding dilligrout, i. e. pottage, at the coronation of the king. Cowel. Blount.

DIMIDIETAS, is used in our records for a moiety, or one half. Ibid.

DIMINUTION, (diminutio) is where the plaintiff or defendant in a writ of error alleges to the court that part of the record is omitted and remains in the inferior court not certified; whereupon he prays that it may be certified by certiorari. Co. Ent. 232, 242.

DIMISSORY LETTERS, (literæ dimissoriæ) are such as are used where a candidate for holy orders has a title in one diocese, and is to be ordained in another: the proper diocesan sends his letters dimissory directed to some other ordaining bishop, giving leave that the bearer may be ordained, and have such a cure within his district. Cowel. Blount.

DIOCESE, (diœcesis) signifies the circuit of every bishop's jurisdiction. For this realm hath two sorts of divisions; one into shires or counties, in respect to the temporal state; and another into dioceses, in regard to the ecclesiastical state. Co. Lit. 94. And the kingdom is said to be divided in its ecclesiastical jurisdiction into two provinces of Canterbury and York; each of which provinces is divided into dioceses, and every diocese into archdeaconries, and archdeaconries into parishes, &c. Wood's Inst. 2.

DISABILITY, (disabilitas) is where a person is disabled, or made incapable to inherit any lands, or do such acts which otherwise he might. And this disability is either by the common law as in the cases of attainder of treason or felony, working corruption of blood; lunacy or idiocy, infancy, coverture, and alienage, or by statute as in the case of officers not taking the oaths, who are incapable to hold offices, and many other cases. Terms de Ley. 4 Rep. 123, 4. 5 Rep. 21. 6 Rep. 43. 11 Rep. 77. Stat. 12 & 13 W. 3. c. 2. 1 Geo. 2. stat. 2. c. 4.

In equity, if a plaintiff is not entitled to sue by reason of any personal disability, which is apparent on his bill, the defendant may demur, therefore if an infant or a married woman, an ideot or a lunatic exhibit a bill, if they appear on the face of it to be thus incapable of instituting a suit alone, and no next friend or committee is named in the bill, the defendant may demur, but if the incapacity does not appear upon the face of the bill, the defendant must take advantage of it by plea. Mitf. 135.

This objection extends to the whole bill, and advantage may be taken of it, as well in the case of a bill for discovery merely, as in the case of a bill for relief: for the defendant in a bill for a discovery merely, being always entitled to costs after a full answer as a matter of course would be materially injured by being compelled to answer a bill exhibited by persons whose property is not in their own disposal, and who are therefore incapable of paying the costs. Ibid. 136.

In a plea of disability to the person of the plaintiff for matters not appearing on the face of the bill, it may be shewn that he is disabled to sue being, 1st, outlawed; or 2d, excommunicated, or 3d, a popish recusant convict; or 4th, attainted in a præmunire, or of treason or felony; or 5th, an alien, or it may be shewn; 6th, that the the plaintiff is incapable of instituting the suit alone. Mitf. 185.

A plea of this kind is in the nature of a plea in abatement of the suit. Ibid.

1. A person outlawed is disabled from suing in a court of justice, and if a bill is filed in his name, the defendant may plead the outlawry, which whilst it remains in force, will delay the proceeding. The record of the outlawry, or the capias thereupon, must be pleaded sub pede sigilli, and is usually annexed to the plea: a plea of outlawry, in a suit for the same duty or thing for which relief is sought by the bill, is insufficient according to the rule of law, and shall be disallowed of course, as put in for delay, otherwise a plea of outlawry is always a good plea, so long as the outlawry remains in force; but if that is reversed, the plaintiff upon payment of costs, may sue out fresh process against the defendant, and compel him to answer the bill. Outlawry, in a plaintiff, executor or administrator cannot be pleaded, for he sues in auter droit; it is equally insufficient, if alleged in disability of a person named in the bill, as the next friend of an infant, plaintiff, or in an information as a relater. Mitf. 185.

2. The defendant may plead that the plaintiff is excommunicated, which must be certified by the ordinary; either by letters patent containing a positive affirmation, that the plaintiff stands excommunicated, and for what; or by letters testimonial reciting quod scrutatis registeriis invenitur, either of those certificates must be sub sigillo, and so pleaded. Excommunication is a good plea to an executor or administrator, though they sue in auter droit; but not to the next friend of an infant. This, like the plea of outlawry, ceases to be a bar, when the disability is removed; and therefore, the plaintiff purchasing letters of absolution, may, as at law, sue out fresh process, and compel the defendant to answer the bill. Mitf. 186, 7.

3. By stat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 5. s. 11. every popish recusant convict is in many cases disabled to sue in the same manner as a person excommunicated: the instances of a plea of conviction of recusancy, have probably been rare, as no traces of any occur in the books of reports, nor does the form of a plea appear in the books of practice: if advantage was attempted to be taken of this statute, the court would probably require the same averments to support the plea, as are necessary to a plea of the same nature at law: this plea also ceases to be a bar, if the plaintiff, by conforming, removes the disability. Mitf. 187.

4. A plea, that the plaintiff is disabled from suing, being attainted, is equally rare, it would probably be likewise judged with the same strictness, as if it was a plea at law. Mitf. 187.

5. There is little more to be found in the books upon the subject of a plea, that the plaintiff is an alien: an alien, who is not an alien enemy, is under no disability of suing for any personal demand, and an alien enemy may sue under some circumstances. A plea has been put in to a bill filed by an alien infidel, not of the Christian faith, and was attempted to be supported, upon the ground, that the plaintiff was upon a cross bill incapable of being examined upon oath: the plea was overruled without argument. Mitf. 188.

6. If a bill is filed in the name of any person incapable alone of instituting a suit; as an infant, a married woman, or an ideot or lunatic so found by inquisition, the defendant may plead the infancy, the coverture, or the inquisition of ideocy or lunacy in abatement of the suit. Mitf. 188.

DISADVOCARE, to deny, or not acknowledge a thing. Cowel. Blount.

DISAGREEMENT, will make a nullity of a thing, that had essence before. Co. Lit. 380.

DISALT, according to Littleton, is to disable a person. Lit. tit. Dis.

DISBOSCATIO, a turning wood ground into arable or pasture. Cowel. Blount.

DISCARCARE, (from dis and carga) is to unlade a ship or vessel by taking out the cargo or goods. Ibid.

DISCEIT, a writ or action for fraud and deceit. See Deceit.

DISCENT, (Lat. descendus, Fr. discent). Discent or hereditary succession; is the order or means whereby lands or tenements devolve upon any man from his ancestors; and this is either by common law, custom, or statute.

Discent at common law is lineal, or collateral: lineal is a discent downward in a right line, from the grandfather to the father, the father to the son, son to the grandson, and so on, and the lineal heir shall first inherit. Collateral, is a discent which springeth out of the side of the whole blood, as another branch thereof; such as the grandfather's brother, father's brother, and so downward. Co. Lit. 10, 11. Therefore, if a man purchaseth lands in fee-simple, and dies without issue, for default of the right line, he which is next of kin in the collateral line of the whole blood, though never so remote, comes in by discent as heir to him; for there is a next of kin by right of representation, and by right of propinquity or nearness of blood. Lit. 2. 1 Vent. 415. 3 Rep. 40.

To have land in fee simple by discent, a person must be heir of the whole blood; he is to be the next, and most worthy of blood, to the ancestor; and he ought to be heir to him that was last actually seised. Where ands descend to the son from the father, and he enters on the lands, and dies seised thereof, without having any issue, this land will descend to the heirs of the part of the father, who are of the whole blood; and if there are none such, the land shall escheat: so where lands descend on the part of the mother. Lit. sect. 4. Co. Lit. 13. And there is a maxim in law, that where lands descend on the part of the father, the heirs of the mother shall never inherit; and when lands descend on the part of the mother, the heirs of the father shall never inherit. Co. Lit. 14. But if there has been a fine and render of lands, claimed by a party, as heir at law, ex parte materna, this will alter the quality of the estate; so that it shall descend to the heir ex parte paterna. 6 Rep. 63. Carthew 141.

Also if a man seised of land, as heir of the part of his mother, make a feoffment, and take back an estate to him and his heirs; this, as a purchase, alters the descent, and if he die without issue, the heir of the part of the father shall inherit it. Co. Lit. 12. There is a difference between descents from father and mother to their children, and descents between brothers and sisters; for a son or a daughter need be only of the blood of either the father or mother, which hath the inheritance, to inherit them: though the brothers and sisters must be of the same father and mother, to inherit one another. Noy 68.

If a man hath issue two sons by divers wives, the younger brother of the half blood shall not have land purchased by the elder brother, on his dying without issue; but the elder brother's uncle or next cousin shall have it, Co. Lit. 14. The elder brother of the whole blood shall have land by descent, purchased by a middle or younger brother, if such die without issue; (for as to descents between brethren, the eldest is the most worthy of blood to inherit to them as well as to the father). And if there be no brother or sister, the uncle shall have it as heir, and not the father: and yet it may afterwards come to the father, as heir to the uncle; likewise if the father hath issue another son or daughter, after the descent to the uncle, that issue may enter upon the uncle, and hold the estate. Lit. 3. 3 Rep. 40.

The next and most worthy of blood are the male, and all descendants from him, before the females; and the female on the part of the father, before the male or female of the part of the mother: and the eldest brother, and his posterity, shall have lands in fee-simple before any younger brother. Ibid.

Also a sister of the whole blood shall be preferred, and taken before the younger brother, which is of the half blood; but such a younger brother, though he may not be heir to a brother, for want of the whole blood, yet he may be heir to his father, or his uncle. Co. Lit. 14. 3 Rep. 41.

All the descendants from a person, who by our laws might have been heir to another, hold the same right as that common root from whom they are derived: so that the son, or grandchild, whether son or daughter of the eldest son, takes before the youngest son; and a son or grandchild of the eldest brother before the youngest brother: and so it is through all degrees of discents; by representation, the proximity is transferred from the root to the branches, and gives them the same preference, as next and worthiest of blood. Hale's Hist. L. 237.

The great grandchild of the elder brother, whether it be a son or a daughter, shall here be preferred as the heir before the younger brother; for though a female be less worthy than the male, yet she stands in right of representation of the eldest brother, who was more worthy than the younger. Hale's Hist. L. 237.

As to being heir to him that was last seised: if tenant in fee-simple hath a son and a daughter by one woman or venter, and a son by another venter, and dies seised, and the eldest son dies without issue, before actual seisin, the younger brother as heir to the father shall have the estate; but if the elder brother had entered on the lands, the sister would have it as heir to him. Co. Lit. 11, 15. Lit. 8.

None can inherit any lands as heir, but only the blood of the first purchaser; as if the father make a purchase, the blood of the mother shall not have the estate: but if a son purchases, and there is no heir on the side of the father, the land shall go to the heirs on the side of the mother; for they are of the blood of the son of the first purchaser, and he hath the blood of both father and mother. Lit. 4. Co. Lit. 12.

So that there is a difference where the son purchaseth lands in fee-simple, and where he cometh to them by discent. Land thus purchased may go to the heirs of the father and mother of the purchaser; unless it be once attached in the heir of the part of the father, for then the heirs of the mother cannot have it, because they are not of the blood of him who was last seised. 49 E. 3. 12. Finch. 119. Where, for want of heirs of a purchaser, of the part of his father, or when such heir had not entered, the lands descend to the line of the mother; there the heirs of the mother of her father's side, shall take in succession, before her heirs of the part of her mother. Hale's Hist. L. 247. Plowd. 444. The discent of lands is particularly and very judiciously treated of by Mr. Justice Blackstone, in his Commentaries. 2 V. 201, &c.

The law takes no notice of the disability of the father in case of discent, but only of the immediate relation of brothers and sisters, as to their estates; so that the inability of the father doth not hinder the discent between them: for example, a man had issue a son and a daughter, and was attainted of treason, and died; the son purchased lands and died without issue; and it was adjudged that, notwithstanding the attainder of the father, the daughter shall take by discent from her brother, because the discent between them was immediate, and the law doth not regard the disability of the father. 4 Leon. 5. 1 Nels. Abr. 645.

If there be father and son, and the son is attainted of treason or felony in the father's life time, and yet out-live his father, the land by discent shall not come to such son, nor any of h s issue; but if he die before the father, it will descend to his other children. 4 Rep. 31, 124. And where a person seised of lands, hath issue two daughters, if one of them commits felony, after the father's death, both daughters being alive, a moiety shall descend to one daughter, and the other shall escheat. Co. Lit. 163.

Inheritances may descend but not ascend: and in the right line, children inherit their ancestors without limitation; but the ancestors may not take from their children, for the father can never come to the lands which his son hath purchased, by lineal ascent; though he may by collateral ascent, where the son's lands come to the uncle, and then to the father. In the collateral line, the uncle inherits the nephew, and the nephew the uncle. Lit. 3. 3 Rep. 40. Vaugh. 244.

In fine, lands and tenements in fee-simple DESCEND, first, to the eldest son as heir, and to his issue; the sons first, in order of birth; and for want of sons, to all the daughters equally, for where there are females in equal degree, they all inherit as one heir, and as coparceners; secondly, if the eldest son hath no issue, then to his next eldest brother of the whole blood, and his heirs, and for want of a brother, to his sister or sisters of the whole blood, and her and their issue; thirdly, if there be no brother or sister, to the uncle and his issue; and for want of an uncle, to an aunt or aunts, and her and their issue; fourthly, thence to the father; fifthly, thence to the half; and sixthly, for want of uncle, father, and half blood, to the next of kin in the collateral line. Wood's Inst. 218. 2 Black. Com. 201.

DISCENT of lands in fee-simple by custom, are of several kinds, sometimes to all the sons, or to all the brothers, when one brother dieth without issue, as in gavel kind: sometimes to the youngest, as in borough English: sometimes to his eldest daughter, or to the youngest as is the case in respect to some customary or copyhold lands. Dr. & St. Di. 1. c. 10. Lit. 210, 211. 1 Inst. 110. b. 140. a. and b, 175, b.

DISCENT by statute. Discents of estates in fee-tail, are by the stat. of Westm. 2. and 13 Ed. 1. c. 1. to be according to the manner of the settlement or limitation.

DISCENT OF CROWN LANDS. All the lands whereof the king is seised in jure coronæ, shall secundum jus coronæ attend upon and follow the crown; so that to whomsoever the crown descends, these lands and possessions descend also. Plowd. 247. Co. Lit. 15.

The dignity of the crown of England, for want of heirs male, is descendable immediately to the eldest daughter, and her posterity; and so it has been declared by act of parliament. Stat. 25 H. 8. cap. 22.

DISCENT OF DIGNITIES. A dignity differs from common inheritances, and goes not according to the rules of the common law; for it descends to the half blood, and there is no copartnership in it, but the eldest takes the whole. Co. Lit. 27. The dignity of peerage is personal, annexed to the blood, and so inseparable that it cannot be transferred to any person, or surrendered even to the crown; it can move neither forward nor backward, but only downward to posterity; and nothing but corruption of blood, as if the ancestor be attainted of treason or felony, can hinder the discent to the right heir. Lex Constitutionis, p. 85.

DISCHARGE, on writs and process, &c. is where a man confined by some legal writ or authority, doth that which by law he is required to do; whereupon he is released or discharged from the matter for which he was confined. 1 Lil. Abr. 470.

DISCLAIMER, (disclamium, from the Fr. clamer, with the privative dis) is a plea containing an express denial, or renouncing of a thing. Terms de Ley.

And by stat. 21 Jac. 1. cap. 16. s. 5. in all actions of trespass quare clausum fregit, wherein the defendant shall disclaim any title to the land, and the trespass be by negligence or involuntary, the defendant shall be admitted to plead a disclaimer, and that the trespass was by negligence or involuntary, and a tender of sufficient amends before the action brought; and if the issue be found for the defendant, or the plaintiff be nonsuited, the plaintiff shall be barred from the said action, and all suits concerning the same.

Also in chancery, a defendant may disclaim all right or title to the matter in demand by the plaintiff's bill, or by any part of it: but a disclaimer can hardly be put in alone; for if the defendant has been made a party by mistake, having never had any interest in the matter or question, yet as he may have had an interest which he may have parted with, the plaintiff may require an answer sufficient to answer whether that is the fact or not; and if in truth it is so, an answer seems necessary to enable the plaintiff to make the proper party instead of the defendant disclaiming: the form of a disclaimer alone, seems to be simply an assertion, that the defendant disclaims all right and title to the matter in demand, but the forms given in the books are all of an answer and disclaimer. Mitf. 253.

If the defendant disclaims, the court will in general, dismiss the bill as against him, with costs: but it is said, that if the plaintiff shews probable cause for exhibiting the bill, he may pray a decree against the defendant, upon the ground of the disclaimer. Prec. Reg. 141. Atk. 582. And where the defendant disclaims, the plaintiff is not to reply. 2 Br. P. C. Mitf. 254.

A defendant may demur to one part of a bill, plead to another, answer to another, and disclaim as to another: but all these defences must clearly refer to separate and distinct parts of the bill: for the defendant cannot by answer claim, what by disclaimer he has declared he has no right to: and if a disclaimer and answer are inconsistent, the matter will be taken most strongly against the defendant upon the disclaimer. Mitf. 254.

DISCONTINUANCE, (discontinuatio, derived from the Fr. discontinuer, i. e. cessare) signifies an interruption or breaking off; and is twofold, discontinuance of possession, and discontinuance in pleading. Co. Lit. 325. F. N. B. 191.

A discontinuance of estate may be five ways, viz. by feoffment, fine, recovery, release, and confirmation with warranty. 1 Rep. 44. But an exchange will not make a discontinuance; as if tenant in tail exchanges land with another, that is not any discontinuance, by reason no livery is requisite thereon. 2 Dane. 57. And it is the same of a bargain and sale, &c. And an alteration of such things as lie in grant, and not in livery, works no discontinuance; for such grant does no wrong either to the issue in tail, or him in reversion or remainder, because nothing passeth but during the life of the particular tenant, which is lawful. Co. Lit. 332.

DISCONTINUANCE OF PLEA, is where divers things should be pleaded to, and some are omitted; this is a discontinuance. 1 Nels. Abr. 660, 661.

DISCONTINUANCE OF PROCESS, is when the opportunity of prosecution is lost for that time; or the plaintiff is dismissed the court, &c. And every suit, whether civil or criminal, and every process therein, ought to be properly continued from day to day, &c. from its commencement to its conclusion; and the suffering any default or gap herein, is called a discontinuance: the continuance of the suit by improper process, or by giving the party an illegal day, is properly a miscontinuance. 2 Hawk. 298.

But by stat. 32 H. 8. cap. 30. All discontinuances, miscontinuances and negligences therein, of plaintiff or defendant, are cured after verdict.

DISCOVERT, is used in the law for a woman unmarried or widow, one not within the bonds of matrimony. Law Fr. Dict. Cowel. Blount.

DISCOVERY, bill of. A course of proceeding in the courts of equity for the discovery of facts, resting in the knowledge of a defendant: or of deeds or writings or other things in his custody or power, and seeking no relief in consequence of the discovery. Mitf. 52.

This bill is commonly used in aid of the jurisdiction of some other court, as to enable the plaintiff to prosecute or defend an action at law, or proceeding before the king in council, or any other legal proceeding of a nature merely civil, before a jurisdiction which cannot compel a discovery on oath; except that the court has in some instances refused to give this aid to the jurisdiction of inferior courts. A bill of this nature must state the matter touching which a discovery is sought, the interest of the plaintiff and defendant in the subject, and the right of the first to require the discovery from the other. Mitf. 52.

The courts of equity will not, however, entertain a bill for a discovery to aid the action of a common informer, though the statute under which he may sue (as under the statutes against gaming for the recovering back of monies lost at play) may allow of a bill for a discovery, and direct that the defendant shall not demur thereto: for this the court will intend to be for the benefit of a party grieved, and not for the furtherance of the views of a common informer, contrary to the positive rule of law, that no man is compellable to criminate himself. Holloway q. t. v. Ogden, reported in Mr. Anstruther's Exchequer Reports, 1803, 4.

DISCRETION, (discretio) when any thing is left to any person to be done according to his discretion, the law intends it must be done with sound discretion, and according to law: and the court of B. R. hath a power to redress things that are otherwise done, notwithstanding they are left to the discretion of those that do them. 1 Lil. Abr. 477.

DISFRANCHISE, is to take away one's freedom or privilege: it is the contrary to enfranchise. And corporations have power to disfranchise members, for doing any thing against their oaths; but not for contempts, &c. 11 Rep. 98.

DISHERISON, is an old word which signifies as much as disinheriting: mentioned in the stat. 20 Ed. 1. and 8 R. 2.

DISHERITOR, one that disinheriteth, or puts another out of his inheritance. Cowel. Blount.

DISMES, (decimæ) signify tithes. Comyn's Dig. Also the tenths of all spiritual livings given to the prince, which is called a perpetual dism. Stat. 2 & 3 Ed. 3. cap. 35. See Tithes.

DISPARAGEMENT, matching an heir in marriage under his degree, or against decency. Co. Lit. 107.

DISPAUPER. When a person by reason of his poverty, is admitted to sue in forma pauperis; and afterwards, the privilege is taken from him, he is said to be dispaupered. See Forma Pauperis.

DISPENSATION. By 25 H. 8. cap. 21.

"the archbishop of Canterbury has power "of dispensing in any case wherein dispensa- "tions (not contrary to the law of God) were "formerly granted by the see of Rome; and "may grant dispensations to the king, as well "as to his subjects: but such dispensations "shall not be granted out of the realm, &c. "And during the vacancy of the see of Can- "terbury, the guardian of the spiritualities "may grant dispensations."

The archbishop of Canterbury grants dispensations, not only in his own province, but in the province of York; and the archbishop of York, and other bishops, dispense as they were wont to do, by the common law and custom of the realm. Wood's Inst. 26. And every bishop of common right has the power of institution into benefices, and of dispensing in common cases, &c. Ibid. 505.

DISPENSATIONS OF THE KING. If a dispensation by the archbishop of Canterbury, is to be in extraordinary matters, or in a case that is new, the king and his counsel are to be consulted: and it ought to be confirmed under the broad seal. The king's authority to grant dispensations remains as it did at common law; notwithstanding the 25 H. 8. c. 21. Cro. Eliz. 542, 601. The dispensation of the king, &c. makes a thing prohibited, lawful to be done by him who hath it: but malum in se will not admit of a dispensation. March Rep. 213. Where the subject hath an immediate interest in an act of parliament, the king cannot dispense with it; but where the king is intrusted with the management thereof, and the subject interested by way of consequence only, he may. March 214, 216. This must be where the king is, by the act itself, empowered to dispense with it. When an offence wrongs none but the king; or if the suit is only the king's for the breach of a penal law, that is not to the damage of a third person, the king may dispense: but in case the suit is the king's, for the benefit of another, he cannot. Vaugh. 334, 339, 344, &c.

DISPENSATION BY NON OBSTANTE. Formerly if any statute tended to restrain some prerogative incident to the person of the king; by a clause in grants of non obstante, he might dispense with it. 2 Hawk. 390. But by 1 W. & M. sess. 2. cap. 2. no dispensation by non obstante, of, or to any statute, or any part thereof, shall be allowed, but the same shall be held void, and of none effect, except a dispensation be allowed in such statute.

DISPERSONARE, is to scandalize or disparage. Blount.

DISSEISIN, (from the Fr. dissaisin) is the unlawful dispossessing a man of his right. As where a person enters into lands or tenements, and his entry is not lawful, and keeps him that hath the estate from the possession thereof. Bract. lib. 4. c. 3. And disseisin is of two sorts; either single disseisin, committed without force of arms; or disseisin by force, but this latter is more properly deforcement. Brit. cap. 42, 43. See Assise of Novel Disseisin and Entry.

DISSEISOR, is he that disseiseth or puts another out of his land, without order of law: and a disseisee is he that is so put out. 4 H. 4. 1 E. 5, 8. Stat. 20 H. 3. c. 3.

DISSENTERS, are non-conformists who secede from the church, and the service and worship thereof. But by 1 Will. & Mar. c. 18. the statutes of Q. Eliz. and K. James I. concerning the discipline of the church, are not to extend to Protestant dissenters: but the persons dissenting, are to subscribe the declaration of 30 Car. 2. c. 1. and take the oaths, or the declaration of fidelity, &c. But they must not hold their meetings, till their place of worship is certified to the bishop, &c. or to the justices at their quarter sessions, and registered there; also they are not to keep the doors of their meeting-houses locked, &c. And if any person disturb them in their worship, on conviction at the sessions, he shall forfeit 20*l.*

DISTILLERS. See Excise.

DISTRESS, (districtio) in the most general sense, is any thing which is taken and distrained for rent behind, or in arrear. But by the common law, besides distresses for rent, there is a distress for homage, fealty, or any services; for fines and amercements; and for damage-feasant, &c. And there are likewise distresses in actions compulsory to cause a man to appear in court: as upon a distringas after a clausum fregit, &c. Co. Lit. 57, 205.

The law of distresses is of great use and consequence, it will therefore be fit to consider first, for what injuries a distress may be taken; secondly, what things may be distrained; and, thirdly, the manner of taking, disposing of, and avoiding distresses.

I. A distress, districtio, is the taking of a personal chattel out of the possession of the wrong doer into the custody of the party injured to procure a satisfaction for the wrong committed. 1st, The usual injury, for which a distress may be taken is that of non-payment of rent. And distresses were incident by the common law to every rent-service, and by particular reservation to rent-charges also; but not to rent-seck, till the statute 4 Geo. 2. c. 28. extended the same remedy to all rents alike, and thereby in effect abolished all material distinctions between them. So that it is now an universal principle, that a distress may be taken for any kind of rent in arrear; the detaining whereof beyond the day of payment is an injury to him that is entitled to receive it. 2dly, For neglecting to do suit to the lord's court (Bro. Abr. tit. Distress, 15.) or other certain personal service (Co. Lit. 46.), the lord may distrain, of common right. 3dly, For amercements in a court-leet, a distress may be had of common right, but not for the amercements in a court-baron, without a special prescription to warrant it. (Brownl. 36.) 4thly, Another injury, for which distresses may be taken, is where a man finds beasts of a stranger wandering on his grounds, damage-feasant; that is, doing him hurt or damage, by treading down his grass, or the like; in which case the owner of the soil may distrein them, till satisfaction be made him for the injury he has thereby sustained. 5thly, and lastly, for several duties and penalties inflicted by special acts of parliament, (as for assessments made by commissioners of sewers (Stat. 7 Ann. c. 10.) or for the relief of the poor) (Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 3.) remedy by distress and sale is given; and such distresses (4 Burr. 589.) are partly analogous to the antient distress at common law, as being repleviable, and the like; but more resembling the common law process of execution, by seizing and selling the goods of the debtor under a writ of fieri facias. 3 Black. Com. 6, 7.

II. As to the things which may be distrained, or taken in distress, it is a general rule, that all chattels personal are liable to be distrained, unless particularly protected or exempted. Instead, therefore, of mentioning what things are distrainable, it will be easier to recount those which are not so, with the reason of their particular exemptions (Co. Lit. 47.) And, 1st, as every thing which is distrained is presumed to be the property of the wrong doer, it will follow that such things, wherein no man can have an absolute and valuable property (as dogs, cats, rabbits, and all animals feræ naturæ) cannot be distrained. Yet if deer (which are feræ naturæ) are kept in a private inclosure for the purpose of sale or profit, this so far changes their nature by reducing them to a kind of stock or merchandize, that they may be distrained for rent. 2dly. Whatever is in the personal use or occupation of any man, is for the time privileged and protected from any distress; as an axe with which a man is cutting wood, or a horse while a man is riding him. But horses, drawing a cart, may (cart and all) be distrained for rent-arrere; also it was formerly held, 1 Sid. 940. that if a horse, with a man riding him, was found damage-feasant, or trespassing in another's grounds, the horse notwithstanding his rider, might be distreined and led away to the pound, but this hath been since held not to be law. 6 Ter. Rep. 138. 3dly. Valuable things in the way of trade shall not be liable to distress. As a horse standing in a smith's shop to be shoed; or in a common inn; or cloth at a tayler's house; or corn sent to a mill, or a market. For all these are protected and privileged for the benefit of trade; and are supposed in common presumption not to belong to the owner of the house, but to his customers. But, generally speaking, whatever goods and chattels the landlord finds upon the premises, whether they in fact belong to the tenant or a stranger, are distrainable by him for rent: for otherwise a door would be open to infinite frauds upon the landlord; and the stranger has his remedy over by action on the case against the tenant, if by the tenant's default, the chattels are distrained, so that he cannot render them when called upon. With regard to a stranger's beasts which are found on the tenant's land, the following distinctions are however taken. If they are put in by consent of the owner of the beasts, they are distrainable immediately afterwards for rent arrere by the landlord, (Cro. Eliz. 549.) So also, if the stranger's cattle break the fences, and commit a trespass by coming on the land, they are distrainable immediately by the lessor for his tenant's rent, as a punishment to the owner of the beasts for the wrong committed through his negligence, (Co. Litt. 47.) But if the lands were not sufficiently fenced so as to keep out cattle, the landlord cannot distrain them, till they have been levant and couchant (levantes et cuchantes) on the land; that is, have been long enough there to have laid down and rose up to feed; which in general is held to be one night at least: and then the law presumes, that the owner may have notice whither his cattle have strayed, and it is his own negligence not to have taken them away. Yet, if the lessor, or his tenant were bound to repair the fences, and did not, and thereby the cattle escaped into their grounds without the negligence or default of the owner; in this case, though the cattle may have been levant and couchant, yet they are not distrainable for rent, till actual notice is given to the owner, that they are there, and he neglects to remove them, (Lutw. 1580.): for the law will not suffer the landlord to take advantage of his own or his tenant's wrong. 4thly. There are also other things privileged by the antient common law; as a man's tools and utensils of his trade, the axe of a carpenter, the books of a scholar, and the like: which are said to be privileged for the sake of the public, because the taking them away would disable the owner from serving the commonwealth in his station. So, beasts of the plough, averia carucæ, and sheep, are privileged from distresses at common law, (Stat. 51 H. 3. st. 4. de districtione scaccarii); while goods of other sort of beasts, which Bracton calls catalla otiosa, may be distrained. But, as beasts of the plough may be taken in execution for debt, so they may be for distresses by statute, which partakes of the nature of executions, (4 Burr. 589.) And perhaps the true reason, why these and the tools of a man's trade were privileged at the common law, was because the distress was then merely intended to compel the payment of the rent, and not as a satisfaction for its non-payment: and therefore, to deprive the party of the instruments and means of paying it, would counteract the very end of the distress (4 Burr. 588.) 5thly. Nothing shall be distrained for rent, which may not be rendered again in as good plight as when it was distrained: for which reason milk, fruit, victuals, and the like, cannot be distrained; a distress at common law being only in the nature of a pledge or security, to be restored in the same plight when the debt is paid. So, antiently, sheaves or shocks of corn could not be distrained, because some damage must needs accrue in their removal: but a cart loaded with corn might; as that could be safely restored. But now by statute 2 W. & M. c. 5. corn in sheaves or cocks, or loose in the straw, or hay in barns or ricks, or otherwise, may be distrained as well as other chattels. 6thly. Lastly, things fixed to the freehold may not be distrained; as caldrons, windows, doors, and chimney-pieces: for they savour of the realty. For this reason also, corn growing, could not be distrained; till the statute 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. empowered landlords to distrain corn, grass, or other products of the earth, and to cut and gather them when ripe. 3 Black. Com. 8, 9, 10.

How distresses may be taken, disposed of, or avoided.] Distresses formerly were looked upon in no other light than as a mere pledge or security, for payment of rent or other duties, or satisfaction for damage done. And so the law still continues with regard to distresses of beasts taken damage-feasant, and for other causes, not altered by act of parliament; over which the distrainor has no other power than to retain them till satisfaction is made. But, distresses for rent arrere being found by the legislature to be the shortest and most effectual method of compelling the payment of such rent, many beneficial laws for this purpose have been made in the present century, which have much altered the common law, as laid down in our antient writers. 3 Black. Com. 10.

In the first place then, all distresses must by the common law, be made on the premises, and by day, unless in the case of damage-feasant; an exception being there allowed, lest the beasts should escape before they are taken (Co. Litt. 142.) And when a person intends to make a distress, he must, by himself or his bailiff, enter on the demised premises: formerly during the continuance of the lease, but now (Stat. 8 Ann. c. 14.) he may distrain within six months after the determination of such lease whereon rent is due during the tenant's possession. If the lessor does not find sufficient distress on the premises, formerly he could resort no where else; and therefore tenants, who were knavish, made a practice to convey away their goods and stock fraudulently from the house or lands demised, in order to cheat their landlords. But now (by stat. 8 Ann. c. 14. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19.) the landlord may distrain any goods of his tenant, carried off the premises clandestinely, wherever he finds them, within thirty days after, unless they have been bona fide sold for a valuable consideration: and all persons privy to, or assisting in, such fraudulent conveyance, forfeit double the value to the landlord. The landlord may also distrain the beasts of his tenant, feeding upon any commons or wastes, appendant or appurtenant to the demised premises. The landlord might not formerly break open a house, to make a distress, for that is a breach of the peace. But when he was in the house, it was held that he might break open an inner door (Co. Litt. 161. Comberb. 17.): and now by Stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. he may, by the assistance of the peace officer of the parish, break open in the day time any place, locked up to prevent a distress; oath being first made, in case it be a dwelling-house, of a reasonable ground to suspect that goods are concealed therein. 3 Black. Com. 11.

Where a man is intitled to distrain for an entire duty, he ought to distrain for the whole at once; and not for part at one time, and part at another. (2 Lutw. 1532.) But if he distrains for the whole, and there is not sufficient on the premises, or he happens to mistake in the value of the thing distrained, and so takes an insufficient distress, he may take a second distress to complete his remedy. (Cro. Eliz. 13. stat. 17 Car. 2. c. 7. 4 Burr. 59.)

Distresses must be proportioned to the thing distrained for. By the statute of Malbridge, 52 Hen. 3. c. 4. if any man takes a great or unreasonable distress, for rent-arrere, he shall be heavily amerced for the same. As if (2 Inst. 107.) the landlord distrains two oxen for twelve pence rent; the taking of both is an unreasonable distress; but if there were no other distress nearer the value to be found, he might reasonably have distrained one of them. But for homage, fealty, or suit, as also for parliamentary wages, it is said that no distress can be excessive. (Bro. Abr. t. assise. 291. prerogative, 98.) For as these distresses cannot be sold, the owner, upon making satisfaction, may have his chattels again. The remedy for excessive distresses is by a special action on the statute of Marlbridge; for an action of trespass is not maintainable upon this account, it being no injury at the common law. 1 Vent. 104. Fitzgibb. 85. 4 Burr. 590. 3 Black. Com. 12.

When the distress is thus taken, the next consideration is, the disposal of it. For which purpose the things distrained, must in the first place be carried to some pound, and there impounded by the taker. But, in their way thither, they may be rescued by the owner, in case the distress was taken without cause, or contrary to law: as if no rent be due; if they were taken, not on the premises, but upon the highway, or the like; in these cases, the tenant may lawfully make rescue. (Co. Litt. 160, 161.) But if they be once impounded, even though taken without any cause, the owner may not break the pound and take them out; for they are then in the custody of the law. Co. Lit. 160, 161. 3 Black. Com. 12.

A pound (parcus, which signifies any inclosure) is either pound-overt, that is, open over head; or pound-covert, that is close. By the statute 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 12. no distress of cattle can be driven out of the hundred where it is taken, unless to a pound-overt within the same shire; and within three miles of the place wherein it was taken. This is for the benefit of the tenants, that they may know where to find and replevy the distress. And by statute 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. which was made for the benefit of landlords, any person distraining for rent may impound the distress taken upon any part of the same for securing of such distress. If a live distress, of animals, be impounded in a common pound-overt, the owner must take notice of it at his peril; but if in any special pound-overt, so constituted for this particular purpose, the distrainor must give notice to the owner; and, in both these cases, the owner and not the distrainor, is bound to provide the beasts with food and necessaries. But if they be put in a pound-covert, as in a stable or the like, the landlord or distrainor must feed and sustain them (Co. Litt. 47.) A distress of household goods, or other dead chattels, which are liable to be stolen or damaged by weather, ought to be impounded in a pound-covert, else the distrainor must answer for the consequences. 3 Black. 13.

When impounded, the goods were formerly, as was before observed, only in the nature of a pledge or security to compel the performance of satisfaction; and upon this account it hath been held (Cro. Jac. 148.) that the distrainor is not at liberty to work or use a distrained beast. And thus the law still continues with regard to beasts taken damage-feasant, and distresses for suit or services; which must remain impounded, till the owner makes satisfaction, or contests the right of distraining, by replevying the chattels. And as a distress is at common law only in nature of a security for the rent or damages done, a replevin answers the same end to the distrainor as the distress itself: since the party replevying gives security to return the distress, if the right be determined against him. 3 Black. 13, 14.

A distress for a debt due to the crown, unless paid within forty days, was always saleable at the common law (Bro. Abr. t. distress, 71.) And for an amercement imposed at a court-leet, the lord might also sell the distress (6 Rep. 41.); partly because, being the king's court of record, its process partakes of the royal prerogative (Bro. Ibid. 12 Mod. 330): but principally because it is in the nature of an execution to levy a legal debt. 3 Black. 14.

By 2 Will. & Mar. c. 5. where a distress is taken it may be replevied within five days after taken, and if the tenant and owner of the goods do not within five days, (that is, five days inclusive, 1 Hen. Black. 13.) after the day on which the same shall be taken, and notice given, and of the cause, left at the dwelling house, &c. replevy the same according to law; then the person distraining, may, with the under sheriff of the county, or constable of the place, &c. (who are required to be assisting) cause the goods to be appraised by two sworn appraisers, and sold to satisfy the rent, &c. leaving the overplus in the constable's hands for the use of the owner.

And by 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. distresses made for rent justly due, shall not be unlawful, nor distrainers, trespassers ab initio, for any irregularity in the disposition thereof; but the parties grieved to have satisfaction for special damage in an action on the case, &c. But no tenant shall recover by such action, if tender of amends hath been made before the action brought. And in all actions of trespass, or on the case, relating to the entry, distress, or sale, made by landlords for rents, the defendants may plead the general issue, and if the plaintiffs become non-suit, &c. shall recover double costs of suit.

Incidental to a distress, is the right of the party whose goods are distrained to replevy (replegiare) that is, to take back the pledge, upon giving to the sheriff good security to try the right of taking the distress in a suit at law, and if that be determined against him to return the cattle or goods once more to the hands of the distrainor. See Replevin.

DISTRESS OF THE KING. The king may distrain for rent-service, or fee-farm, in all the lands of the tenant wheresoever they be; not only on lands held of himself, but of others: where his tenant is in actual possession, and the land manured with his own beasts, &c. 2 Inst. 132. 2 Danv. Abr. 643.

DISTRESS OF A TOWN. If a town be assessed to a certain sum, a distress may be taken in any part, subject to the whole duty. 2 Danv. 643.

DISTRIBUTION of intestates' estates according to custom.] The statute of distribution (which see under title Administrator) expressly excepts and reserves the custom of the city of LONDON, of the province of YORK, and of all OTHER PLACES HAVING PECULIAR CUSTOMS OF DISTRIBUTING INTESTATES' EFFECTS. So that, though in those places the restraint of devising is removed by the stautes 4 & 5 Wil. & Mar. c. 2. explained by 2 & 3 Ann. c. 5. for York, 7 & 8 Wil. 3. c. 38. for Wales, and 11 Geo. 1. c. 18. for London, whereby it is enacted, that persons within those districts, and liable to those customs, may if they think proper, dispose of all their personal estates by will; and the claims of the widow, children and other regulations, to the contrary are barred: YET their antient customs es- main in full force, with respect to the estates of intestates.

In the first place, therefore, we may observe, that in the city of London, Ld. Raym. 1329. and province of York, 2 Burn. Eccl. Law, 746. as well as in the kingdom of Scotland, Ibid. 782. and probably also in Wales, (concerning which there is little to be gathered, but from the statute 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 38.) the effects of the intestate, after payment of his debts, are in general divided according to the antient universal doctrine of the pars rationabilis. If the deceased leaves a widow and children, his substance (deducting for the widow's apparel and the furniture of her bed-chamber, which in London is called the widow's chamber) is divided into three parts; one of which belongs to the widow, another to the children, and the third to the administrator: if only a widow, or only children, they shall respectively, in either case, take one moiety, and the administrator the other, 1 P. Wms. 341. Salk. 246.; if neither widow nor child, the administrator shall have the whole, 2 Show. 175. And this portion, of dead man's part, the administrator was accustomed to apply to his own use, 2 Freem. 85. 1 Vern. 133. till the statute 1 Jac. 2. c. 17. declared that the same should be subject to the statute of distribution. So that if a man dies worth 1800*l.* personal estate, leaving a widow and two children, this estate shall be divided into eighteen parts; whereof the widow shall have eight, six by the custom, and two by the statute; and each of the children five, three by the custom and two by the statute: if he leaves a widow and one child, she shall still have eight parts, as before; and the child shall have ten, six by the custom and four by the statute: if he leaves a widow and no child, the widow shall have three fourths of the whole, two by the custom and one by the statute; and the remaining fourth shall go by the statute to the next of kin. It is also to be observed that if the wife be provided for, by a jointure before marriage, in bar of her customary part, it puts her in a state of non-entity, with regard to the custom only, 2 Vern. 665. 3 P. Wms. 16; but she shall be entitled to her share of the dead man's part under the statute of distributions, unless barred by special agreement, 1 Vern. 15. 2 Chanc. Rep. 252. And if any of the children are advanced by the father in his life time with any sum of money (not amounting to their full proportionable part) they shall bring that portion into hotchpot with the rest of the brothers and sisters, but not with the widow, before they are entitled to any benefit under the custom, 2 Freem. 279. 1 Equ. Cas. Abr. 155. 2 P. Wms. 526.: but, if they are fully advanced, the custom entitles them to no further dividend, 2 P. Wms. 527.

Thus far in the main the customs of London and of York agree; but, besides certain other less material variations, there are two principal points in which they considerably differ. One is, that in London, the share of the children (or orphanage part) is not fully vested in them till the age of twenty-one, before which they cannot dispose of it by testament, 2 Vern. 558.: and, if they die under that age, whether sole or married, their share shall survive to the other children; but after the age of twenty-one, it is free from any orphanage custom, and in case of intestacy, shall fall under the statute of distributions, Prec. Chanc. 537. The other, that in the province of York, the heir at common law, who inherits any land either in fee or in tail, is excluded from any filial portion or reasonable part, 2 Burn. 754. But, notwithstanding these provincial variations, the customs appear to be substantially one and the same. 2 Black. 519.

DISTRICTIONE SCACCARII, a statute so called. 51 H. 3. stat. 4.

DISTRICT, (districtus) a territory, or place of jurisdiction.

DISTRINGAS, is a writ directed to the sheriff, or other officer, commanding him to distrain a man for a debt to the king, &c. or for his appearance at a day therein affixed. F. N. B. 138.

DISTRINGAS JURATORES, is a compulsory writ issued from B. R. and directed to the sheriff, commanding him to have the bodies of the jurors at a day appointed, or to distrain; and return issues on their lands and goods for non-appearance. 1 Lil. Abr. 483. And the writ of distringas jur' ought to be delivered to the sheriff so timely, that he may warn the jury to appear four days before the writ is returnable, if the jurors live within forty miles of the place of trial; and eight days if they live further off. Ibid. 484.

And a distringas in the latter case, is the usual process where a defendant neglects to appear upon a summons under a clausum fregit in C. B. or a venire in the Exchequer.

DIVIDEND of Bankrupts' Effects. See BANKRUPTS.

DIVIDEND IN THE EXCHEQUER, is taken for one part of an indenture. 10 Ed. 1. c. 11. Cowel. Blount.

DIVIDEND IN THE UNIVERSITY, is that part or share which every one of the fellows do justly and equally divide among themselves of their annual stipend. Ibid.

DIVISA, hath various significations: sometimes it is used for a devise, award or decree: sometimes for devise of a portion or parcel of lands, &c. by will: and sometimes it is taken for the bounds or limits of division of a parish or farm, &c. As divisas perambulare, to walk the bounds of a parish; in which sense it has been extended to the divisions between counties, and given name to towns, as to the Devises, a town in Wiltshire, situate on the confines of the West Saxon and Mercian kingdoms. Leg. H. 2. cap. 9. Leg. Inæ, c. 44. Leg. H. 1. c. 57. Cowel.

DIVIL ON THE NECK. A tormenting engine made of iron, straightening and winching the neck of a man with his legs together; formerly in use among the persecuting papists. Cowel. Blount.

DIVORCE, (divortium a divertendo) is a separation of two, de facto married together, made by law: it is a judgment spiritual; and therefore, if there be occasion, it ought to be reversed in the spiritual court. Co. Lit. 335.

The usual divorces are only of two kinds, i. e. A MENSA ET THORO, from bed and board; and A VINCULO MATRIMONII, from the very bond of marriage.—A divorce a mensa & thoro dissolveth not the marriage; for the cause of it is subsequent to the marriage, and supposes the marriage to be lawful: and this divorce may be by reason of adultery in either of the parties, for cruelty or the like. Co. Lit. 235. 3 Inst. 89. 7 Rep. 43.—A divorce a vinculo matrimonii, absolutely dissolves the marriage, and makes it void from the beginning, the cause of it being precedent to the marriage; as precontract with some other person, consanguinity or affinity, within the levitical degrees, impotency, impuberty, &c. On this divorce, dower is gone; and if by reason of pre-contract, consanguinity, or affinity; the children begotten between them are bastards. Co. Lit. 335. 2 Inst. 93, 697.

Also by 26 Geo. 2. c. 33. marriages by licence, without consent of parents or guardians, where either of the parties, not being a widower or widow, shall be under age, shall be null and void.

DIURNALIS, signifies as much land as can be ploughed in a day, with an ox; in some authors, it is written diuturna. Blount.

DOCKET, or DOGGET, a record in the courts containing an entry of judgments: thus when rolls of judgments are brought in, they are docketted, i. e. entered on the docket of that term.

DOCTRINES, illegal. See SEDITION.

DOGS. By 10 Geo. 3. c. 18. persons stealing dogs from the owner or person intrusted therewith, or selling, buying, receiving, or detaining dogs, knowing the same to be stolen, and convicted on the oath of one witness before two justices, shall pay not more than 30*l.* nor less than 20*l.* for the first offence, with charges, and on non-payment may be committed for twelve months, and not less than six.

For the second offence to pay 50*l.* and not less than 30*l.* with charges, one moiety to the informer and the other to the poor, and on non-payment, may be committed for eighteen months, and not less than twelve, and to be publicly whipped in three days. Ibid.

Search may be made for dogs and skins stolen, and the person in whose custody found liable to the same penalties; appeal lies to the quarter sessions, where costs may be given, but no certiorari. Ibid.

DOG-DAYS, (dies caniculares) are the hottest time of the year, by reason the sun is then in Leo: they are reckoned 64 in all, a tertio idus Julii usque in idus Septembris. Cowel. Blount.

DOG-DRAW, is a manifest deprehension of an offender against venison in a forest, when he is found drawing after a deer by the scent of a hound led in his hand; or where a person hath wounded a deer, or wild beast, by shooting at him, or otherwise, and is caught with a dog drawing after him to receive the same. Manwood, par. 2. cap. 8.

DOGGER, a light ship or vessel, as a Dutch dogger. &c. thus dogger-fish are fish brought in those ships; and dogger-men, fishermen that belong to dogger-ships. Cowel. Blount.

DOITKIN, or doit, was a base coin of small value, prohibited by the stat. 3 H. 5. c. 1.

DO LAW, (facere legem) is the same with to make law. Stat 23 H. 8. c. 14.

DOLE, (dola) a Sax. word signifying as much as pars or portio in the Latin; and anciently where a meadow was divided into several shares it was called a dole meadow. Cowel. Blount.

DOLEFISH, seems to be the share of fish which the fishermen, yearly employed in the North seas, do customarily receive for their allowance. Ibid. 35 H. 8. c. 7.

DOLG-BOTE, (Sax.) a recompense or amends for a scar or wound. Cowel. Blount.

DOLLAR, a piece of foreign coin going for about 4*s.* 6*d.* Lex Mercat.

DOM-BOT, (Sax.) signifies liber judicialis, as appears by the laws of king Ed. 1. This, it is conjectured, was a book of statutes of the English Saxons, wherein the laws of the ancient Saxon kings were contained. Leg. Inæ. c. 29. See Dome-book. Cowel. Blount.

DOME, or DOOM, (from the Sax. dom) a judgment, sentence, or decree.

DOME-BOOK, or liber judicialis, was a book (now lost) composed under the direction of Alfred, for the general use of the whole kingdom, containing the local customs of the several provinces of the kingdom. 1 Black. Com. 64, 65. 4, 404. and see also Dom-boc.

DOMESDAY, (liber judicialis, vel censualis Angliæ) is a most ancient record, made in the time of William the conqueror, and now remaining in the Exchequer, fair and legible, consisting of two volumes, a greater and a less; the greater containing a survey of all the lands in England, except the counties of Northumberland, Cumberland, Westmorland, Durham, and part of Lancashire, which it is said were never surveyed, and except Essex, Suffolk, and Norfolk, which three last are comprehended in the lesser volume. There is also a third book, which differs from the others in form more than matter, made by the command of the same king. And there is a fourth book kept in the exchequer which is called domesday; and, though a very large volume, is only an abridgment of the others. Likewise a fifth book is kept in the remembrancer's office in the exchequer, which has the name of domesday, and is the very same with the fourth before mentioned..

Domesday was begun by five justices, assigned for that purpose in each county, in the year 1081, and finished anno 1086. And it is generally known, that the question whether lands are ancient demesne, or not, is to be decided by the domesday of Will. 1. from whence there is no appeal.

DOMES-MEN, judges, or men appointed to doom, and determine suits and controversies. Cowel. Blount.

DOMICELLI. The domicelli were the better sort of servants in monasteries. Ibid.

DOMIGERIUM, danger, or perhaps more properly, power over another; sub domigerio alicujus vel manu esse. Bract. lib. 4. tr. 1. cap. 19. Cowel. Blount.

DOMINA, (dame) a title given to honourable women, who anciently in their own right of inheritance held a barony. Paroch. Antiq.

DOMINICA IN RAMIS PALMARUM, Palm-Sunday. Anno 23 Ed. 1.

DOMINIUM, signifies right, or regal power. Paroch. Antiq. 498.

DOMINUS. This word prefixed to a man's name, in ancient times usually denoted him a knight, or a clergyman; and sometimes a gentleman, not a knight, especially a lord of a manor. Cowel. Blount.

DOMO REPARANDA, is a writ that lies for one against his neighbour by the fall of whose house he fears a damage and injury to his own. Reg. Orig. 153.

DOMUS CONVERSORUM. See Conversos.

DOMUS DEI, the hospital of St. Julian in Southampton, so called. Mon. Ang. tom. 2. 440.

DONATIO MORTIS CAUSA, a death-bed disposition of property, so called, viz. when a person in his last sickness, apprehending his dissolution near, delivers or causes to be delivered to another the possession of any personal goods, (under which have been included bonds, and bills drawn by the deceased upon his banker) to keep in case of his decease. This gift, if the donor dies, needs not the assent of his executor; yet it shall not prevail against creditors; and is accompanied with this implied trust, that if the donor lives the property thereof shall revert to himself, being only given in contemplation of death, or mortis causa. Prec. Chan. 269. 1 P. Wms. 406. 411. 3 P. Wms. 357. 2 Black. Com. 514.

DONATIVE, (donativum) is a benefice merely given and collated by the patron to a man, without either presentation to, or institution by, the ordinary, or induction by his order. F. N. B. 35.

DONIS, Statute de, the stat. of Westm. 2. viz. 13 Ed. 1. c. 1, called the stat. de donis conditionalibus. This statute revives, in some sort, the ancient feudal restraints which were originally laid on alienations, by enacting that from thenceforth the will of the donor be observed; and that the tenements so given (to a man and the heirs of his body) should at all events go to the issue, if there were any, or if none should revert to the donor. 2 Black. Com. 112. Tenant in fee-tail is by virtue of this statute. Lit. sec. 3. But he may bar the entail by fine, and also the remainders and reversions expectant thereon, by recovery.

DONOR and DONEE. Donor is he who gives lands or tenements to another in tail, &c. And the person to whom given is the donee.

DORTURE, (dormitorium) is the common room or chamber where all the friars, or religious of one convent slept and laid all night. Cowel. Blount.

DOSSALR, a word used for hangings or tapestry. Ibid.

DOTE ASSIGNANDA, was a writ that laid for a widow, where it was found by office that the king's tenant was seised of lands in fee, or fee-tail at the day of his death, and that he held of the king in chief, &c. In which case the widow came into the chancery, and there made oath that she would not marry without the king's leave; whereupon she had this writ to the escheator, to assign her dower, &c. But it was usual to make the assignment of the dower in the chancery, and to award a writ to the escheator to deliver the lands assigned unto her. Stat. 15 Ed. 4. cap. 4. Reg. Orig. 297. F. N. B. 263. See Dower.

DOTE UNDE NIHIL HABET, is a writ of dower, that lies for the widow against the tenant of land whereof her husband in his life-time was solely seised in fee-simple or fee-tail, and of which she is dowable. F. N. B. 147.

DOTIS ADMENSURATIONE. See Admeasurement of dower.

DOUBLE PLEA, (duplex placitum) is where a defendant alleges for himself two several matters in bar of the plaintiff's action, when one of them is sufficient, which shall not be admitted. Kitch. 223. 18 Ed. 4. 17. Hob. 197. Jenk. Cent. 75.

For all pleas ought to be single, that the jury may not be troubled and perplexed with too many things at once. Smith's Rep. Angl. lib. 2, c. 13.

But by stat. 4 Ann. c. 16. sect. 4, it shall be lawful for any defendant or tenant in any action or suit, or for any plaintiff in replevin, in any court of record, with the leave of the same court, to plead as many several matters thereto as he shall think necessary for his defence: that is, in so many separate and distinct pleas, and where there are more pleas than one. By virtue of this statute defendant is said to plead double, by leave of the court.

After a judge's order for time to plead, pleading issuably, the court on motion will give defendant leave to plead double, pleading issuable pleas, and taking short notice of trial. Notes in C. B. 244.

But after a defendant has pleaded a single plea he cannot have leave to plead double. Ibid. 245.

DOUBLE QUARREL, (duplex querela) is a complaint made by any clerk, or other, to the archbishop of the province, against an inferior ordinary, for delaying or refusing to do justice in some cause ecclesiastical, as to give sentence, institute a clerk, &c. and seems to be termed a double quarrel, because it is most commonly made against both the judge and him at whose suit justice is denied or delayed: the effect whereof is, that the archbishop, taking notice of the delay, directs his letters under his authentical seal to all clerks of his province, commanding them to admonish the ordinary within a certain number of days, to do the justice required, or otherwise to appear before him or his official, and there allege the cause of his delay; and to signify to the ordinary, that if he neither perform the thing enjoined, nor appear and show cause against it, he himself, in his court of audience, will forthwith proceed to do the justice that is due. Cowel. Blount.

DOUBLES, (Fr.) signify as much as letters patent. Stat. 14 H. 6. c. 6. Ibid.

DOZEN PEERS, were twelve peers assigned at the instance of the barons in the reign of king Hen. 3. to be privy-councillors to the king, or rather conservators of the kingdom. Ibid.

DOVER CASTLE. The constable of Dover castle shall not hold plea of any foreign county within the castle gates, except it concern the keeping of the castle; nor shall he distrain the inhabitants of the ports to plead elsewhere, or otherwise than as they ought, according to the charters, &c. Stat. 28 Ed. 1. c. 7.

DOW, to give or endow, from the Latin word do. Cowel. Blount.

DOWAGER, (dota a dotissa) a widow endowed; applied to the widows of princes, dukes, earls, and other great personages. Ibid.

DOWAGER, (queen) is the widow of the king, and as such enjoys most of the privileges belonging to her as queen consort. But it is not high treason to conspire her death, or violate her chastity, because the succession to the crown is not thereby endangered. But no man can marry her without special license from the king, on pain of forfeiting his lands and goods. 2 Inst. 18. See Riley's Plac. Parl. 672. 1 Black. Com. 224.

DOWER, (dotarium) is the portion which a widow has of the lands of her husband after his decease, for the sustenance of herself, and education of her children. 1 Inst. 30.

And at this day dower is only of two sorts, that is to say, 1st, by the common law; 2ndly, by custom.

1. Dower by the common law; which is a third part of such lands or tenements whereof the husband was solely seised in fee-simple or fee-tail during the coverture; and this the widow is to enjoy during her life. Co. Lit. 30.

2. Dower by custom; which is that part of the husband's estate to which the widow is entitled after the death of her husband by the custom of any manor or place, so long as she lives sole and chaste; and this is more than one third part, for in some places she shall have half the land, as by gavelkind; and in divers manors the widow shall have the whole during her life, which is called her free-bench; but as custom may enlarge, so it may abridge dower to a fourth part. Co. Lit. 33.

And by Magna Charta, 9 Hen. 3. c. 7, a widow shall immediately after her husband's death have her marriage inheritance, and remain in his chief house 40 days, within which time dower is to be asigned her of the third part of all his lands, &c.

But a woman entitled to dower cannot enter till it be assigned to her, and set out either by the heir, tertenant, or sheriff in certainty. 1 Rol. Abr. 681. Dyer 343. Plowd. 529. Bro. 16. Co. Lit. 34 b. 37. a. b.

And none can assign dower but those who have a freebold, or against whom a writ of dower lies; therefore a tenant by statute merchant, statute staple, or elegit, or lessee for years, cannot assign dower, for none of these have an estate large enough to answer the plaintiff's demand. Perk. 403, 404. Co. Lit. 35, Bro. 63, 94. 1 Rol. Abr. 681. 6 Co. 57.

Bar of Dower. If a wife levies a fine with her husband, she bars herself of her dower: and if a common recovery be had against the husband and wife, of the husband's lands, it shall bar the wife of her dower. 2 Rep. 74. Plowd. 514. Where a woman releases her right to him in reversion, her dower may be extinguished. 8 Rep. 151. If a wife commits treason or felony; or if she elope from her husband, and live with the adulterer willingly, without being reconciled to the husband, she shall lose and forfeit her dower; but if the husband be reconciled to her, and she lives with him again, she shall be endowed. 2 Inst. 433. Dyer 106. And if after elopement of the wife, her husband and she demean themselves as husband and wife, it is evidence of reconciliation. Dyer 196. If a man grants his wife with her goods to another, and the wife by virtue of the grant lives with the grantee during the life of the husband, this shall forfeit her dower; for she lived in adultery, notwithstanding the grant. Co. Lit. 135. 2 Danv. 662. 2 Inst. 435.

When a jointure is made of lands after marriage, the wife may wave it, and demand her dower: and though during the coverture the husband and wife levy a fine thereof, yet this is no bar to her dower of any other lands of her husband, because the jointure being made after the marriage, she had election after the death of the husband to refuse it, and claim dower, and not before, and then the fine levied of the jointure before her time for election of dower was come can be no bar for electing of dower when it is come. 1 Bulst. 173. 1 Leon. 285. Dyer. 358.

If a woman takes a lease for life of her husband's lands after his death, she shall have no dower, because she cannot demand it against herself; and if she takes a lease for years only, yet she shall not sue to have dower during these years, because it was her own act to suspend the fruit and effect of her dower during that time. Perk. 350. F. N. B. 149. Mo. pl. 403.

If the husband levy a fine with proclamation of his lands, and dies, his wife is bound to make her claim within five years after his death, otherwise she shall be barred of her dower; for though her title of dower was not consummate at the time of the fine levied, yet it being initiate by the marriage and seisin of the husband, the fine begins to work upon it presently after the husband's death; and if she does not claim it within five years after she shall be barred. 2 Co. 93. 10 Co. 49. 99. 4 Inst. 216. Hob. 265. Mo. pl 154. 879. Dyer 224. 13 Co. 20.

DOWL and DEAL, a division. Hence comes the word dealing. So the stones which are laid to the boundaries of lands are called dowle-stones, i. e. such as divide the lands. Cowel. Blount.

DOWRY, (dos mulieris) was in ancient time applied to that which the wife brings her husband in marriage, otherwise called maritagium, or marriage-goods: but these are termed more properly goods given in marriage, and the marriage portion. Co. Lit. 31.

DOWRY-BILL. Among the Jews the bridegroom at the time of marriage gave his wife a dowry-bill. Cowel. Blount.

DOZEIN, a territory or jurisdiction, mentioned in the statute of View and Frankpledge. 18 Ed. 2. See Decincrs. Cowel. Blount.

DRACO REGIS, the standard, ensign, or military colours borne in war by our ancient kings, having the figure of a dragon painted on them. Ibid.

DRAGIUM, Drag; a coarser sort of bread, corn: or a kind of malt, made of oats mixed with barley, Ibid.

DRAGS, seem to be floating pieces of timber so joined together, that by swimming on the water they may bear a burden or load of other things down a river. 6 H. 6. c. 15. Ibid.

DRANA, a drain or water-course; sometimes written drecca. Ibid.

DRAW-GERE, signifies any harness belonging to cart-horses, for drawing a waggon, or other carriage. Paroch. Antiq. p. 549. Cowel. Blount.

DRAW-LATCHES, were thieves and robbers: Lambert in his Eiren. lib. 1, c. 6, calls them thieves, wasters, and roberdsmen: the two last words are grown out of use. They are mentioned in 5 E. 3. c. 14, and 7 R. 2. c. 5. Cowel. Blount.

DREDGERMEN, are fishers for oysters, &c. Stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 19.

DREIT-DREIT, or Droit, are words signifying formerly a double right, viz. of possession, and of property or interest. Bract. lib. 4. cap. 27. Co. Lit. 266.

DRENCHED, (from the Germ.) an old word, used where a person was overcome. Cowel. Blount.

DRENCHES, or DRENGES, (drengi) were tenants in capite, and such as at the coming of Will. the Conqueror were put out of their estates, and afterwards restored thereunto on their making it appear that they were owners thereof, and neither in auxilio, or consilio, against him. Spelm. Cowel. Blount.

Hence Drengage, (drengagium) is the tenure by which the drenches or drenges held their lands. Ibid.

DRIFT OF THE FOREST, (agitatio animalium in foresta) is a view or examination of what cattle are in the forest, that it may be known whether it be surcharged or not; and whose the beasts are, and whether they are commonable, &c. These drifts are made at certain times in the year by the officers of the forest, when all the cattle of the forest are driven into some pound, or place enclosed, for the purposes aforementioned, and to the end it may be discovered whether any cattle of strangers be there which ought not to common. Manw. par. 2, c. 15. Stat. 32 Hen. 8, c. 13. 4 Inst. 309.

DRINKLEAN, in some records potura drinklean, was a contribution of tenants, in the time of the Saxons, towards a potation, or ale, provided to entertain the lord, or his steward. Cowel. Blount.

DROFDENE, signified, with our Saxon ancestors, a grove, or woody place, where cattle were kept, and the keeper of them was called drofman. Domesday. Cowel. Blount.

DROPLAND, or DRYFLAND, another Saxon word, signifying a tribute or yearly payment made by some tenants to the king, or their landlords, for driving their cattle through a manor to fairs or markets. Cowel. Blount.

DROIT, right, is the highest writ of all other real writs whatsoever, and hath the greatest respect and the most assured and final judgment; and therefore is called a writ of right, and in the old books droit. Co. Lit. 158. and there are divers of these writs used in our law, such as the droit de advowson; droit de dower; droit de garde; droit patent; droit rationabili parte; droit sur disclaimer. Booth on Real Actions.

DROMONES, DROMOS, DROMUNDA, high ships of great burden, but afterwards those which we now call men of war. Cowel. Blount.

DROVERS, those who buy cattle in one place to sell in another. 5 Eliz. c. 12. 1 Car. 1, c. 1.

DRUGGERIA, a place of drugs, or druggster's shop. And druggists and their wares. Vide Coffee.

DRUNKENNESS, is an offence for which a man may be punished in the ecclesiastical court, as well as by justices of peace by statute. And he who is guilty of any crime through his own voluntary drunkenness, shall be punished for it as if he had been sober. Co. Lit. 247. 1 Hawk. P. C. 2.

And equity will not relieve against a bond, &c. given by a man when drunk, unless the drunkenness is occasioned through the management or contrivance of him to whom it is given. 3 P. Will. 130.

By 1 Jac. 1. c. 9, alehouse-keepers permitting townsmen to sit tippling are liable to 10*s.* penalty, and on non-payment to be imprisoned till paid; and persons tippling therein are to forfeit 3*s.* 4*d.* or sit in the stocks 4 hours.

By 4 Jac. 1. c. 5, persons convicted of drunkenness are to forfeit 5*s.* or be put in the stocks 6 hours.

If convicted a second time to be bound over to their good behaviour; but the prosecution must be within 6 months. Ibid.

By 7 Jac. 1, c. 10, an alehouse-keeper, convicted under either of the two last acts is disabled to keep an alehouse for three years.

By 21 Jac. 1. c. 7, one witness, or the party's own confession, shall be sufficient; and the oath of the party confessing shall convict others.

By 1 Car. 1. c. 14, alehouse-keepers permitting any person whatsoever to sit tippling shall incur the penalty of 1 Jac. 1. c. 9. Vintners keeping inns or victualling-houses to be also liable.

DRY EXCHANGE, (cambium siccum) a term invented in former times for the disguising and covering of usury, in which something was pretended to pass on both sides, whereas in truth nothing passed but on one side, in which respect it was called dry. 3 Hen. 7, c. 5, Cowel. Blount.

DRY RENT, a rent reserved without clause of distress.

DUCES TECUM, is a writ commanding a person to appear at a certain day in the court of chancery, and to bring with him some writings, evidences, or other things which the court would view. Reg. Orig. So a subpœna with a clause duces tecum, is often sued out at common law, to compel witnesses to produce, on trials at Nisi prius, deeds, bonds, bills, notes, books, or memorandums, in their custody or power, and which relate to the issue in question. But as this clause is of modern introduction, and not justified by the form in the register, and the practice interferes with the jurisdiction of the courts of equity to enforce the production of such things by a bill for a discovery, it was at first doubted, in the case of Amey v. Long, whether the party is upon such a subpœna obliged to produce what is thereby required. But after solemn argument, and time taken by the court to consider, LORD Ellenborough, CHIEF JUSTICE, delivered the unanimous opinion of the judges, that the writ of duces tecum, is a writ of compulsory obligation on a witness to produce the papers in his possession thereby demanded, having no lawful or reasonable excuse for not producing the same, of the validity of which excuse, the court is to decide, and not the witness. Ea. Ter. 48 Geo. 3. 9 East's Rep. 473.

DUCES TECUM LICET LANGUIDUS, a writ, now in disuse, and anciently directed to the sheriff upon a return that he cannot bring his prisoner without danger of death, he being adeo languidus, in which case the court grants a habeas corpus in the nature of a duces tecum licet languidus. Book. Entr.

DUCKING-STOOL. See Castigatory.

DUES, ecclesiastical. The non-payment of ecclesiastical dues to the clergy, as pensions, mortuaries, compositions, offerings, and whatsoever falls under the denomination of surplice-fees for marriage, or other ministerial offices of the church. 3 Black. Com. 90. are cognizable in the spiritual court, which makes decrees for their actual payment.

But by 7 and 8 Will. 3, c. 6, all offerings, oblations, and obventions, not exceeding the value of 40*s.* may be recovered in a summary way before two justices of the peace.

DUEL, (Duellum) in our ancient law, is a fight between persons in a doubtful case for the trial of the truth. Fleta. But this kind of duel is disused, and what we now call a duel is a fighting between two, upon some quarrel precedent; wherein, if a person is killed, both the principal and his seconds are guilty of murder, whether the seconds fight or not. H. P. C. 47. 51. 1 Hawk. 82.

And where two persons in cool blood meet and fight upon a precedent quarrel, and one of them is killed, the other is guilty of murder, and cannot excuse himself by alleging that he was first struck by the deceased, or that he had declined to meet him, was prevailed on to do it by his importunity, or that it was not his intent to kill, but only to vindicate his reputation, &c. 1 Hawk. P. C. 81.

And whenever it appears that one who kills another in a duel, or fighting on a sudden quarrel, was master of his temper at the time, he is guilty of murder; as if after the quarrel he fall into another discourse, and talk calmly thereon, or the like.

It is also a very high offence to challenge another, either by word or letter, to fight a duel, or to be the messenger of such a challenge, or even barely to endeavour to provoke another to send a challenge, or to fight, or by dispersing letters for that purpose, full of reflection, &c. And persons convicted thereof may be fined, imprisoned, and bound to their good behaviour. 1 Sid. 186. 3 Inst. 158. 1 Hawk. P. C. 135, 138.

DUKE, (Lat. dux, Fr. duc, a ducendo) signified, among the ancient Romans, ductorem exercitus, such as led their armies; since which they were called duces, and were governors of provinces, &c. In England the title of duke is the next dignity to the prince of Wales; and the first duke we had in England was Edward the Black Prince, who was created duke of Cornwall in the 11th year of king Ed. 3. 1 Black. Com. 397, 408.

DUM FUIT INFRA ÆTATEM, is where an infant makes a feoffment of his lands; when he comes of full age he may have this writ to recover those lands and tenements which were so alienea; and within age he may enter into the land and take it back again, and by his entry he shall be remitted to his ancestor's right. New N. B. 426.

DUM NON FUIT COMPOS MENTIS, a writ that lies where a man that is not of sound memory aliens any lands or tenements, then he shall have this writ against the alienee. And he shall allege that he was not of sane memory, but being visited with infirmity, lost his discretion for a time, so as not to be capable of making a grant, &c. New Nat. Br. 449.

DUN, down, in which termination it hath varied into don, signifies a mountain or high open place; so that the names of thos, towns which end in dun, or don, as Ashdone &c. were either built on hills, or near them in open places; hence dunsetts are those who dwell on hills or mountains, and dunum and duna, a down or hill. Cowel. Blount.

DUODENA, a jury of twelve men. Ibid.

DUODENA MANU, (jurare duodecima manu) twelve witnesses to purge a criminal of an offence. 3 Black. Com. 343.

DUPLEX QUERELA, a process ecclesiastical. See Double Quarrel.

DUPLICATE, anciently signified the second letters patent, granted by the lord chancellor, in a case wherein he had before done the same, which were therefore thought void. Cromp. Jurisd. fol. 215. But in more common acceptation it signifies a copy or transcript of any deed, writing, or account.

DUPLICITY, in pleading. Every plea must be simple, entire, connected, and confined to one single point: it must never be entangled with a variety of distinct independent answers to the same matter, which must require as many different replies, and introduce a multitude of issues upon one and the same point. 3 Black. Com. 311. See DOUBLE PLEA.

DURANTE ABSENTIA, administration. An administration granted when the executor is out of the realm, to continue in force until his return. Cowel. Blount.

DURANTE MINORE ÆTATE, administration. An infant cannot act as executor until seventeen, during which minority this administration is granted. Ibid.

DURDEN, a thicket of wood in a valley. Ib.

DURESS, (Duritia) is where one is wrongfully imprisoned or restrained of his liberty contrary to law, till he seals a bond or other deed to another; or threatened to be killed, wounded, or beaten if he doth not do it: and a bond or deed so obtained is void in law. And if one under a just fear of being imprisoned, killed, &c. enters into a bond to him that threatens him, it is duress per minas; and may be pleaded to avoid the bond: but it must be a threatening of life or member, or of imprisonment; and not of battery only; or to take away goods, &c. Co. Lit. 162, 253. 2 Inst. 483.

And a warrant of attorney given by a man in custody to confess judgment, no attorney on his part being present, is by the rules of the court void. 2 Lill. Abr. 682.

DURHAM. See COUNTIES PALATINE.

DURSLEY, signifies blows without wounding or bloodshed, vulgo dry blows. Blount.

DUSTY FATTS, dusty foots, pedlars or traders who have no settled habitation, and they have their name from their feet being covered with dust, by their continual travelling. See Piepoudre Court.

DUTCHY COURT OF LANCASTER, is a court of the Dutchy chamber of Lancaster held at Westminster before the chancellor, for matters concerning the lands and franchises of the dutchy. And the proceedings in this court are by English bill, as in chancery. 4 Inst. 204.

This special jurisdiction, is a thing very distinct from the county palatine, and comprizes much territory which lies at a vast distance from it, as particularly a very large district within the city of Westminster. But the courts of chancery and exchequer, on he equity side have a concurrent jurisdiction with this court. 4 Inst. 206. 1 Chanc. Rep. 55. Toth. 145. Hardr. 171. 3 Black. Com. 78.

DUTIES of persons. Allegiance is the duty of the people, protection the duty of the magistrate; yet they are reciprocally the rights, as well as duties of each other. Allegiance is the right of the magistrate, and protection the right of the people. 1 Black. Com. 123.

DUTY. Any thing that is known to be due by law, and thereby recoverable, is a duty before it is recovered, because the party interested in the same has power to recover it. 1 Lill. 495.

DWELLING-HOUSE. A man may assemble people together lawfully (at least if they do not exceed eleven) without danger of raising a riot, or unlawful assembly, in order to protect and defend his house, which he is not permitted to do in any other case. 1 Hal. P. C. 547. 4 Black. Com. 224.

DWINED, signifies any thing consumed, whence comes the word dwindle. Cowel. Blount.

DYKE-REED, or REEVE, an officer who has the care and oversight of the dykes and drains in fenny countries; as of Dieping fens, &c. See 16 and 17 Car. 2, c. 11.

DYRGE, or DIRGE, a mournful laudatory song over the dead (from the Teutonic dyrke, laudare, to praise and extol) and hence dyrenum, a ditty or song. Cowel. Blount.

E

EABALUS, (from the Sax. eale, cervisia, et hus, domus,) an alehouse. Cowel. Blount.

EALHORDA, the privilege of assising and selling ale and beer. Ibid.

EALDERMAN, (or ealdorman) among the Saxons was as much as earl with the Danes. Cambd. Brit. 107. Also an elder, senator, &c. Ealdermen or aldermen, are now those that are associated to the mayor or chief officer in the common council of a city or borough town. Stat. 24 H. 8. c. 13. 1 Black. Com. 398.

EARL. (Sax. eorle, Lat. comes) This it is said was a great title among the Saxons, and is the most ancient of the English peerage, there being no title of honour used by our present nobility that was likewise in use by the Saxons except this of earl. Verstegan derives this word from the Dutch eer, i. e. honour, and ethel, which signifies noble. Cowel.

Their place is now next to a marquis, and before a viscount. See Countee.

EARNEST, money paid in part of a larger sum, or part of the goods delivered on any contract, &c. which being done by way of earnest, the property of the goods is absolutely bound by it, and the buyer may recover the goods by action, as well as the vendor may the price of them. And by 29 Car. 2. c. 3, no contract for sale of goods to the value of 10*l.* or more, to be valid unless such earnest is made or given. 2 Black. Com. 447, 448.

EASEMENT, Aisiamentum, from the Fr. Aise, (i. e. commoditas) is defined to be a service or convenience, which one neighbour has of another, by charter or prescription, without profit, as a way through his land, a sink, watercourse, or the like. Kitch. 105. Cro. Jac. 170. 3 Leon. 254. 3 Mod. 294. Lil. Abr. 496.

EASTER, is the feast of the Passover.

EASTINTUS, (Sax. east-tyne) is an easterly coast or country; also the east street, east side of a river, or the like. Cowel. Blount.

EAST-INDIA COMPANY. A corporation styled by 6 Ann. c. 17. s. 13. "The united Company of Merchants of England trading to the East Indies," that is, according to 9 & 10 Will. 3. c. 44. s. 61. trading "in, to, and from, the East Indies in the countries and parts of Asia and Africa, and in, to, and from the islands, ports, havens, cities, creeks, towns, and places of Asia, Africa, and America, or any of them beyond the Cape of Good Hope to the Straights of Magellan, where any trade or traffic of merchandize is, or may be used or had, and to and from every of them.

After the discovery of the passage by sea, to the peninsula of India, at about the close of the 15th century, several attempts were made by private individuals to open a trade in that part of the world: but these proving unsuccessful, Q. Eliz. by a charter, dated Dec. 31, 1600, established an incorporated company under the name of The London East India Company."

This company on an accidental failure in the payment of a small duty imposed on their capital stock, (4 & 5 W. & M. c. 15. s. 10, 12.) forfeited their charter: but afterwards in the same year, the crown revived their powers and exclusive privileges by a new charter. However, by stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 44. two new companies were established, and the subscribers to a loan of 2,000,000 for carrying on the then war, were incorporated into a general society, with liberty for each individual member to trade to India within the exclusive limits of the said company to the extent of his share of this loan, and power was granted to such of the subscribers as should choose to convert their subscriptions into a joint-stock, to do so, and they were to be incorporated by a separate charter, by the name of "The English East-India Company."

The old company to whose prejudice these two new corporations were to be erected, became subscribers for a very large proportion of the loan of two millions, and united with the English company in 1702, which union was afterwards confirmed by parliament, by stat. 6 Ann. c. 17. and the separate traders of the general society, whose subscription to the loan amounted to only 2700*l.* at the time of the union, soon afterwards joined the united company.

This is a brief account of the rise and progressive establishment of the present East-India Company, whose concerns are now regulated by divers statutes, too numerous and diffuse to be inserted in this work.

EAVES-DROPPERS, persons that listen under walls or windows, or the eaves of a house, to hearken after discourse, and thereupon to frame slanderous and mischievous tales, are a common nuisance, and presentable at the court-leet, or are indictable at the sessions, and punishable by fine and finding sureties for good behaviour. Kitch. of Courts, 20. 1 Hawk. P. C. 132. 4 Black. Com. 169.

EBDOMADARIUS. An ebdomary was an officer appointed weekly in cathedral churches, to supervise the regular performance of divine service, and prescribe the particular duties of each person attending in the choir, as to reading, singing, praying, &c. Cowel. Blount.

EBEREMORTH or EBEREMORS, (Sax.) bare, or downright murder. Leg. H. 1. c. 12. Cowel. Blount. Hence also Eberemurder, (apertum murdrum) Spelm.

ECCLESIA, (Lat.) a church; but in law proceedings it intends a parsonage. F. N. B. 32. 2 Inst. 363.

ECCLESIÆ SCULPTURA. The image or sculpture of a church in ancient times, which was often cut out or cast in plate or other metal, and preserved as a religious treasure or relique, and to perpetuate the memory of some famous churches. Mon. Ang. tom. 3, p. 309.

ECCLESIASTICAL, belonging to or set apart for the church; as distinguished from civil or secular with regard to the world.

ECCLESIASTICAL CORPORATIONS, were erected in the furtherance of religion, and perpetuating the rights of the church. 1 Black. Com. 470. See Corporation.

ECCLESIASTICAL COURTS, are various, as the archdeacon's, the consistory, the court of arches, of peculiars, the prerogative, and the great court of appeal of all ecclesiastical causes, viz. the court in delegates, appointed by the king's commission, under his great seal, &c. 3 Black. Com. 61. See Courts Ecclesiastical.

ECCLESIASTICAL JURISDICTION and LAW. See Canon, and Courts Ecclesiastical.

ECCLESIASTICAL PERSONS, (ecclesiastici) are churchmen whose functions consist in performing the service and keeping up the discipline of the church. Cowel. Blount. See Clergy.

EDESTIA, from ædes, used for buildings. Ibid.

EDIA, aid, or help: according to Du Fresne, but according to Cowel, ease.

EDICT, (edictum) an ordinance or command; a statute, Cowel. Blount.

EDUCATION of children. See PARENT and CHILD.

EEL-FARES, a fry or brood of eels. See 25 H. 8.

EFFORCIALITER, is used for military force. Cowel. Blount.

EFFRACTORES, (Lat.) breakers applied to burglars, that break open houses to steal. Ibid.

EFTERS, (Sax.) ways, walks or hedges Blount.

EFFUSIO SANGUINIS, the mulct, fine, or penalty imposed by the old English laws for the shedding of blood, which the king granted to many lords of manors. Ibid.

EGYPTIANS, (Egyptiani) outlandish persons calling themselves Egyptians or Gypsies, from a strange kind of commonwealth among themselves of wandering impostors and jugglers, who were first taken notice of in Germany, about the beginning of the fifteenth century, and have since spread themselves all over Europe. 4 Black. 165.

Munster, who is followed and relied upon by Spelman, fixes the time of their first appearance to the year 1417 under passports, real or pretended, from the emperor Sigismund, king of Hungary, and pope Pius II, (who died A. D. 1464.) mentions them in his history, as thieves and vagabonds, then wandering with their families over Europe, under the name of Zigari, whom he supposes to have migrated from the country of the Zigi, which nearly answers to the modern Circassia. 4 Black. 165.

In the compass of a few years, they gained such a number of idle proselytes (who imitated their language and complexion, and betook themselves to the same arts of chiromancy, begging, and pilfering) that they became troublesome and even formidable to most of the states of Europe; hence they were expelled from France in the year 1560, and from Spain 1591, and the government in England took the alarm much earlier: for in 1530, they are described by stat. 22 H. 8. c. 10. as "outlandish people, "calling themselves Egyptians, using no "craft nor feat of merchandize, who have "come into this realm, and gone from shire "to shire, and place to place in great com- "pany, and used great subtel and crafty "means to deceive the people, bearing them "in hand, that they by palmistry, could "tell men's and women's fortunes; and so "many times by craft and subtelty have "deceived the people of their money, and "also have committed many heinous felo- "nies and robberies." Wherefore they are directed to avoid the realm, and not to return, under pain of imprisonment and forfeiture of their goods and chattels, and upon their trials for any felony which they may have committed, they shall not be entitled to a jury de medietate linguæ, and afterwards it was enacted by stat. 1 & 2 Phil. & Mar. c. 4. and 5 Eliz. c. 20. that if any such persons were imported into this kingdom, the importer was to forfeit 40*l.* and if the Egyptians themselves remained one month in this kingdom, or if any person being fourteen years old, whether natural born subject or stranger, which had been seen or found in the fellowship of such Egyptians, or which had disguised him or herself, should remain in the same one month, at one or several times, it was made felony without benefit of clergy: and Sir Matthew Hale informs us, that at one Suffolk assizes, no less than 13 Gypsies were executed upon these statutes a few years before the restoration. 4 Black. 166. 1 Hale, P. C. 671.

But the felonies created by these very severe statutes have been lately repealed by stat. 23 Geo. 3. c. 51. And Gypsies are now only punishable under the vagrant act. 17 Geo. 2. c. 5. which declares, that all such gypsies shall be deemed rogues and vagabonds. See title VAGRANT.

EIA, (from the Sax. eig.) signifies an island. Cowel. Blount.

EJECTA, a woman ravished or deflowered; or cast forth from the virtuous. Ejectus, a whoremonger. Blount.

EJECTIONE CUSTODIÆ, (ejectment de garde) is a writ which anciently lay against him that casteth out the guardian from any land during the minority of the heir. Reg. Orig. 162. F. N. B. 139.

EJECTIONE FIRMÆ, or EJECTMENT. A writ de ejectione firmæ, or action of trespass in ejectment, lieth, where lands or tenements are let for a term of years; and afterwards the lessor, reversioner, remainderman, or any stranger, do'h eject or oust the lessee of his term (F. N. B. 220.) In this case he shall have this writ of ejection, to call the defendant to answer for entering on the lands so demised to the plaintiff for a term, that is not yet expired, and ejecting him. And by this writ the plaintiff shall recover back his term, or the remainder of it, with damages. 3 Black. 199.

Since the disuse of real actions, this mixed proceeding is become the common method of trying the title to lands or tenements. It is therefore proper to detail with some degree of minuteness, its history, the manner of its process, and the principles whereon it is grounded.

The writ of covenant, for breach of the contract contained in the lease for years, was antiently the only specific remedy for recovering against the lessor a term from which he had ejected his lessee, together with damages for the ouster. But if the lessee was ejected by a stranger, claiming under a title superior to that of the lessor, or by a grantee of the reversion, (who might at any time by a common recovery have destroyed the term) though the lessee might still maintain an action of covenant against the lessor for non-performance of his contract or lease, yet he could not by any means recover the term itself. If the ouster was committed by a mere stranger, without any title to the land, the lessor might indeed by a real action recover possession of the freehold, but the lessee had no other remedy against the ejector but in damages, by a writ de ejectione firmæ, for the trespass committed in ejecting him from his farm. But afterwards, when the courts of equity began to oblige the ejector to make a specific restitution of the land to the party immediately injured, the courts of law also adopted the same method of doing complete justice; and, in the prosecution of a writ of ejectment, introduced a species of remedy, not warranted by the original writ, nor prayed by the declaration (which go only for damages merely, and are silent as to any restitution) viz. a judgment to recover the term, and a writ of possession thereupon. This method seems to have been settled as early as the reign of Edward VI: though it hath been said to have first begun under Henry VII. because it probably was then first applied to its present principal use, that of trying the title to the land, 3 Black. 200, 1.

This remedy by ejectment is in its original, an action brought by one who hath a lease for years, to repair the injury done him by dispossession. In order therefore to convert it into a method of trying titles to the freehold, it is first necessary that the claimant do take possession of the lands, to empower him to constitute a lessee for years, that may be capable of receiving this injury of dispossession. For it would be an offence, called in our law maintenance, to convey a title to another, when the grantor is not in possession of the land: and indeed it was doubted at first, whether this occasional possession, taken merely for the purpose of conveying the title, excused the lessor from the legal guilt of maintenance. When therefore a person, who hath right of entry into lands, determines to acquire that possession, which is wrongfully withheld by the present tenant, he makes (as by law he may) a formal entry on the premises; and being so in possession of the soil, he there, upon the land, seals and delivers a lease for years to some third person or lessee: and, having thus given him entry, leaves him in possession of the premises. This lessee is to stay upon the land, till the prior tenant, or he who had the previous possession, enters thereon afresh and ousts him; or till some other person (either by accident or by agreement before hand) comes upon the land, and turns him out or ejects him. For this injury, the lessee is entitled to his action of ejectment against the tenant, or this casual ejector, whichever it was that ousted him, to recover back his term and damages. But where this action is brought against such a casual ejector as is before mentioned, and not against the very tenant in possession, the court will not suffer the tenant to lose his possession without any opportunity to defend it. Wherefore it is a standing rule, that no plaintiff shall proceed in ejectment to recover lands against a casual ejector, without notice given to the tenant in possession (if any there be) and making him a defendant, if he pleases. And, in order to maintain the action, the plaintiff must, in case of any defence, make out four points before the court; viz. title, lease, entry, and ouster. First, he must shew a good title in his lessor, which brings the matter of right entirely before the court; then, that the lessor, being seised by virtue of such title, did make him the lease for the present term; thirdly, that he, the lessee or plaintiff, did enter or take possession in consequence of such lease; and then, lastly, that the defendant ousted or ejected him. Whereupon he shall, in consequence, have a writ of possession, which the sheriff is to execute by delivering him the undisturbed and peaceable possession of his term. 3 Black. 201, 2.

This was the regular method of bringing an action of ejectment, in which the title of the lessor comes collaterally and incidentally before the court, in order to shew the injury done to the lessee by this ouster. And at this day the same method must be still continued in due form and strictness, save only as to the notice to the tenant, whenever the possession is vacant, or there is no actual occupant of the premises; and also in some other cases. But as much trouble and formality were found to attend the actual making of the lease, entry, and ouster, a new and more easy method of trying titles by writ of ejectment, where there is any actual tenant or occupier of the premises in dispute, was invented somewhat more than a century ago, by the lord chief justice Rolle, who then sat in the court of upper bench; so called during the exile of king Charles the second. This new method entirely depends upon a string of legal fictions: no actual lease is made, no actual entry by the plaintiff, no actual ouster by the defendant; but all are merely ideal, for the sole purpose of trying the title. To this end, in the proceedings a lease for a term of years is stated to have been made, by him who claims title, to the plaintiff who brings the action; as by John Rogers to Richard Smith; which plaintiff ought to be some real person, and not merely an ideal fictitious one who has no existence, as is frequently, though unwarrantably practised (6 Mod. 309): it is also stated, that Smith, the lessee, entered; and that the defendant William Stiles, who is called the casual ejector, ousted him; for which ouster he brings this action. As soon as this action is brought, and the complaint fully stated in the declaration, Stiles, the casual ejector, or defendant, sends a written notice to the tenant in possession of the lands, as George Saunders, informing him of the action brought by Richard Smith, and transmitting him a copy of the declaration; withal assuring him, that he, Stiles the defendant, has no title at all to the premises, and shall make no defence; and therefore advising the tenant to appear in court and defend his own title: otherwise he, the casual ejector, will suffer judgment to be had against him; and thereby the actual tenant Saunders will inevitably be turned out of possession. On receipt of this friendly caution, if the tenant in possession does not within a limited time apply to the court, to be admitted a defendant in the stead of Stiles, he is supposed to have no right at all; and, upon judgment being had against Stiles, the casual ejector, Saunders the real tenant will be turned out of possession by the sheriff. 3 Black. 203.

But, if the tenant in possession applies to be made a defendant, it is allowed him upon this condition, that he enter into a rule of court to confess, at the trial of the cause, three of the four requisites for the maintenance of the plaintiff's action, viz. the lease of Rogers the lessor, the entry of Smith the plaintiff, and his ouster by Saunders himself, now made the defendant instead of Stiles: which requisites, as they are wholly fictitious, should the defendant put the plaintiff to prove, he must of course be nonsuited for want of evidence; but by such stipulated confession of lease, entry, and ouster, the trial will now stand upon the merits of the title only. This done, the declaration is altered by inserting the name of George Saunders instead of William Stiles, and the cause goes down to trial under the name of Smith (the plaintiff) on the demise of Rogers, (the lessor) against Saunders, the new defendant. And therein the lessor of the plaintiff is bound to make out a clear title, otherwise his fictitious lessee cannot obtain judgment to have possession of the land for the term supposed to be granted. But, if the lessor makes out his title in a satisfactory manner, then judgment and a writ of possession shall go for Richard Smith the nominal plaintiff, who by this trial has proved the right of John Rogers his supposed lessor. Yet, to prevent fraudulent recoveries of the possession, by collusion with the tenant of the land, all tenants are obliged by stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. on pain of forfeiting three years rent, to give notice to their landlords, when served with any declaration in ejectment: and any landlord may, by leave of the court, be made a co-defendant to the action; which indeed he had a right to demand, long before the provision of this statute (7 Mod. 70. Salk. 257.): in like manner as (previous to the statute of Westm. 2. c. 3.) if in a real action, the tenant of the freehold made default, the remainder-man or reverrioner had a right to come in and defend the possession; lest, if judgment were had against the tenant, the estate of those behind should be turned to a naked right (Bracton, l. 5. c. 10. sect. 14.) But if the new defendant fails to appear at the trial, and to confess lease, entry, and ouster, the plaintiff Smith must indeed be there nonsuited, for want of proving those requisites; but judgment will in the end be entered against the casual ejector Stiles: for the condition on which Saunders was admitted a defendant is broken, and therefore the plaintiff is put again in the same situation as if he never had appeared at all; the consequence of which would have been, that judgment would have been entered for the plaintiff, and the sheriff, by virtue of a writ for that purpose, would have turned out Saunders, and delivered possession to Smith. The same process therefore as would have been had, provided no conditional rule had been ever made, must now be pursued as soon as the condition is broken. But execution shall be stayed, if any landlord after the default of his tenant applies to be made a defendant, and enters into the usual rule, to confess lease, entry, and ouster (11 Geo. 2. c. 19.) 3 Black. 205.

The damages recovered in these actions, though formerly their only intent, are now usually (since the title has been considered as the principal question) very small and inadequate; amounting commonly to one shilling, or some other trivial sum. In order therefore to complete the remedy, when the possession has been long detained from him that has right, an action of trespass also lies, after a recovery in ejectment, to recover the mesne profits which the tenant in possession has wrongfully received. Which action may be brought in the name of either the nominal plaintiff in the ejectment, or his lessor, against the tenant in possession; whether he be made party to the ejectment, or suffers judgment to go by default. 3 Black. 205.

Such is the modern way of obliquely bringing in question the title to lands and tenements, in order to try it in this collateral manner; a method which is now universally adopted in almost every case. It is founded on the same principle as the antient writs of assise, being calculated to try the mere possessory title to an estate; and hath succeeded to those real actions, as being infinitely more convenient for attaining the ends of justice; because, the form of the proceedings being intirely fictitious, it is wholly in the power of the court to direct the application of that fiction, so as to prevent fraud and chicane, and eviscerate the very truth of the title. The writ of ejectment, and its nominal parties (as was resolved by all the judges) are "judicially to be considered as "the fictitious form of an action, really "brought by the lessor of the plaintiff "against the tenant in possession: invented, under the control and power of the "court, for the advancement of justice in "many respects; and to force the parties "to go to trial on the merits, without being "intangled in the nicety of pleadings on "either side." 3 Black. 206.

But a writ of ejectment is not an adequate means to try the title of all estates; for on those things whereon an entry cannot in fact be made, no entry shall be supposed by any fiction of the parties. Therefore an ejectment will not lie of an advowson, a rent, a common, or other incorporeal hereditament; except for tithes in the hands of lay appropriators, by the express purview of statute 32 Hen. 8. c. 7. which doctrine hath since been extended by analogy to tithes in the hands of the clergy; nor will it lie in such cases, where the entry of him that hath right is taken away by dissent, discontinuance, twenty years dispossession, or otherwise. 3 Black. 206.

This action of ejectment is, however, rendered a very easy and expeditious remedy to landlords, whose tenants are in arrear, by statute 4 Geo. 2. c. 28. which enacts, that every landlord, who hath by his lease a right of re-entry in case of non-payment of rent, when half a year's rent is due, and no sufficient distress is to be had, may serve a declaration in ejectment on his tenant, or fix the same upon some notorious part of the premises, which shall be valid, without any formal re-entry or previous demand of rent. And a recovery in such ejectment shall be final and conclusive, both in law and equity, unless the rent and all costs be paid or tendered within six calendar months afterwards. 3 Black. 206.

The writ of quare ejecit infra terminum lieth, by the antient law, where the wrong doer or ejector is not himself in possession of the lands, but another who claims under him. As where a man leaseth lands to another for years, and, after, the lessor or reversioner entereth, and maketh a feoffment in fee, or for life, of the same lands to a stranger: now the lessee cannot bring a writ of ejectione firmæ or ejectment against the feoffee; because he did not eject him, but the reversioner: neither can he have any such action to recover his term against the reversioner, who did oust him; because he is not now in possession. And upon that account this writ was devised, upon the equity of the statute Westm. 2. c. 24, as in a case where no adequate remedy was already provided. And the action is brought against the feoffee for deforcing, or keeping out, the original lessee during the continuance of his term: and herein, as in the ejectment, the plaintiff shall recover so much of the term as remains, and also damages for that portion of it whereof he has been unjustly deprived. But since the introduction of fictitious ousters, whereby the title may be tried against any tenant in possession (by what means soever he acquired it) this action is fallen into disuse. 3 Black. 207.

EIGNE, (Fr. aisne) eldest or first-born; thus bastard eigne is the elder son of a woman, born out of wedlock; and mulier puisne, quasi melior the younger son afterwards born in marriage.

EINECIA, (Fr. aisne, i. e. primogenitus) signifies eldership. Cowel. Blount.

EIRE, or EYRE, (Fr. eire, i. e. iter) justices in eyre, justiciarii itineranles, were appointed by the great council of the realm, A. D. 1176, 22 H. 2, with a delegated power from the king's great court, or aula regia, and they made their circuit round the kingdom once in seven years for the purpose of trying causes. They were afterwards directed by Mag. Char. to be sent into every county once a year, to take or try certain actions or assises, the most difficult of which they were directed to adjourn into the court of common pleas, to be there determined; and from these the present justices of assise have originated. 3 Black. 57.

ELECTION, (electio) is when a man is left to his own free will to take or do one thing or another which he pleases. And if it be of several things, he who is the first agent, and ought to do the first act, shall have the election. Co. Lit. 144.

As if I give to you one of my horses in my stable, there you shall have the election, for you shall be the first agent by taking or seizure of one of them. Co. Lit. 145.

Where the election creates the interest nothing passes till election, and if no election can be made, no interest will arise. Hob. 174. Also if the election is given to several persons, there the first election made by any of the persons shall stand. Co. Lit. 145. 2 Rep. 36.

If a man has an election to do one of two things, and he cannot by any default of a stranger, or of himself, or the obligee, or by the act of God, do the one, he must at his peril do the other. 1 Lil. Abr. 606.

Where the law allows a man two actions to recover his right, it is at his election to bring which he pleases; and when a man's act may work two ways, both arising of his interest, he hath election given him to use it either way. Dyer 20. 2 Roll. Abr. 787.

If a person hath election to pay or perform one of two things at a day, and he do neither of them at that day, his election is gone. 2 Rep. 37.

In some cases where one has cause of suit he may sue one person or another at his election, for there is an election of persons as well as of things. Dyer 206, 207.

ELECTION OF A CLERK OF STATUTE-MERCHANT. A writ anciently laid for the choice of a clerk assigned to take bonds called statutes-merchant, granted out of the chancery, upon suggestion that the clerk formerly assigned was gone to dwell at another place, or under some impediment to attend the duty of his office, or had not lands sufficient to answer his transgressions, if he should act amiss, &c. F. N. B. 164.

ELECTION OF ECCLESIASTICAL PERSONS. By 9 Ed. 2, c. 14, there is to be a free election for the dignities of the church. And by 31 Eliz. c. 6, none shall disturb any person from making free election, on pain of great forfeiture. If any persons that have a voice in elections, take any reward for an election in any church, college, school, &c. the election shall be void: and if any of such societies resign their places to others for reward, they incur a forfeiture of double the sum; and the party giving it, and the party taking it, is incapable of such place.

ELECTION OF MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT. See Parliament.

ELECTION OF A VERDEROR OF THE FOREST (electione viridariorum foreste). For the choice of a verderor, where any of the verderors of the forest were dead, or removed from their office, &c. a writ was directed to the sheriff, and the verderors were to be elected by the freeholders of the county, in the same manner as coroners. New Nat. Br. 366. Cowel. Blount.

ELEEMOSYNÆ, the possessions belonging to the churches. Blount.

ELEEMOSYNA REGIS, or eleemosyna cratri, a penny ordered by king Æthelred to be paid for every plough in England, towards the support of the poor: and so called because it was first appointed by the king. Leg. Æthelred, cap. 1. Cowel. Blount.

ELEEMOSYNARIA, the place in a religious house, where the common alms were reposited, and thence by the almoner distributed to the poor. Ibid.

ELEEMOSYNARIUS, the almoner or peculiar officer who received eleemosynary rents and gifts, and in due method distributed them to pious and charitable uses. Ibid.

ELEEMOSYNARY CORPORATIONS, are corporate bodies appointed over hospitals, &c. constituted for the perpetual distribution of the free alms, or bounty of the founder o fthem. 1 Black. Com. 471.

ELEGIT, (from the words in it, elegit sibi liberar) is a writ of execution that lies for him who hath recovered debt or damages, or, upon a recognizance in any court against one not able in his goods to satisfy the same; directed to the sheriff, commanding him to make delivery of a moiety of the party's lands, and all his goods, beasts of the plough excepted. And the creditor shall hold the said moiety of the land so delivered unto him, until his whole debt and damages are paid and satisfied; and during that term he is tenant by elegit. Reg. Orig. 299. Co. Lit. 289. See title Execution.

ELF-ARROWS, were flint-stones sharpened on each side in shape of arrow-heads, made use of in war by the ancient Britons. Cowel. Blount.

ELISORS. If the sheriff be not an indifferent person, as if he be a party in the suit, or be related, either by blood or affinity, to either of the parties, he is not then trusted to return a jury; but the venire shall be directed to the coroners, who in this, as in many other instances, are the substitutes of the sheriff, to execute process when he is deemed an improper person: if any exception lies to the coroners, the venire shall be directed to two clerks of the court, or two persons of the county, named by the court, and sworn, and these two, who are called elisors or electors, shall indifferently name the jury, and their return is final. 3 Black. 355.

ELKE, a kind of yew to make bows of. 32 H. 8. cap. 9. Also the name of the wild beast somewhat like a deer. Cowel. Blount.

ELOINE, (from the Fr. esloigner) to remove or send a great way off: and by 13 Ed. 1. c. 15. If such as are within age be eloined, so that they cannot come to sue personally, their next friends shall be admitted to sue for them.

ELONGATA, a return to the sheriff that cattle are not to be found, or removed, so that he cannot make deliverance, &c. in replevin. 2 Lil. Abr. 454, 458. 3 Black. 129. 149.

ELOPEMENT, (derived from the Belg. E, viz. matrimonio & loopen, currere) is where a married woman of her own accord goes away and departs from her husband, and lives with an adulterer. And in this case her husband is not obliged to allow her any alimony, nor shall he be chargeable for necessaries for her. And where the same is notorious, whoever gives her credit, doth it at his peril: but on elopement, the putting a wife in the Gazette, or other news-paper is no legal notice to persons in general not to trust her; though personal notice to particular persons given by the husband, will be good not to be chargeable to them. 1 Rol. 350. 1 Vent. 42. Also by Stat. 13 Ed. 1. c. 34, if the wife goes away from the husband, and tarrieth with the adulterer, without returning and being reconciled to her husband, she forfeits her dower.

Also an action lies against the adulterer for carrying away another person's wife.

ELY, is only a royal franchise, and not a county palatine, though sometimes erroneously called so. 1 Black. Com. 116. 3 Ib. 78.

EMBARGO, a prohibition upon shipping, not to go out of any port. Cowel. Blount. 1 Black. 270.

EMBASSADORS. See Ambassadors.

EMBLEMENTS, (from the Fr. emblavence de bled, viz. corn sprung or put up above ground) signifies properly the profits of sown land: but is sometimes used more largely for any products that arise naturally from the ground, as grass, fruit, and other crops. 5 Rep. 116.

A tenant for life, or his representatives, shall not be prejudiced by any sudden determination of his estate, because such a determination is contingent and uncertain; therefore if a tenant for his own life sows the lands and dies before harvest, his executors shall have the emblements, or profits of the crop, and not the lessor or reversioner: for the estate was determined by the act of God; and it is a maxim of the law that actus Dei nemini facit injuriam: the representatives, therefore, of the tenant for life shall have the emblements to compensate for the labour and expense of tilling, manuring, and sowing the lands; and also for the encouragement of husbandry, which being a public benefit, tending to the increase and plenty of provisions, ought to have the utmost security and privilege that the law can give it. Co. Lit. 55. 2 Black. 122. Cro. Eliz. 463. 2 Danv. Abr. 765.

Also if a man be tenant for the life of another, and cestui que vie, or he on whose life the land is held, dies after the corn sown, the tenant pur autre vie shall have the emblements. Ibid.

The same is also the rule if a life estate be determined by the act of law: therefore if a lease be made to husband and wife during coverture (which gives them a determinable estate for life) and the husband sows the land, and afterwards they are divorced a vinculo matrimonii, the husband shall have the emblements in this case, for the sentence of divorce is the act of law. Ibid.

But if an estate for life be determined by the tenant's own act, (as by surrender to the lessor before severance, forfeiture for waste committed, or, if a tenant during widowhood thinks proper to marry, in these and similar cases, the tenants having thus determined the estate by their own acts, shall not be entitled to the emblements. 1 Lil. Abr. 511. 2 Black. 122, 3.

The doctrine of emblements extends not only to corn sown, but to roots planted, or other annual artificial profits; but it is otherwise of fruit trees, grass, and the like, which are not planted annually at the expense and labour of the tenant, but are either a permanent or natural profit of the earth. Co. Lit. 55, 56. 1 Rol. Abr. 728. For when a man plants a tree he cannot be presumed to plant it in contemplation of any present profit, but merely with a prospect of its being useful to himself in future, and to future successions of tenants. 2 Black. 123.

The advantages also of emblements are particularly extended to the parochial clergy by stat. 28 Hen. 8, c. 12, which enables an incumbent to bequeath by will the corn and grain growing upon the glebe land: for all persons who are presented to any ecclesiastical benefice, or to any civil office, are considered as tenants for their own lives, unless the contrary be expressed in the form of donation. 2 Black. 123, 4.

With regard to emblements, or the profits of lands sown by tenant for years, there is this difference between him and tenant for life, that where the term of tenant for years depends upon a certainty, as if he holds from Midsummer for ten years, and in the last year he sows a crop of corn, and it is not ripe and cut before Midsummer, the end of his term, the landlord shall have it; for the tenant knew the expiration of his term, and therefore it was his own folly to sow what he never could reap the profits of. Lit. s. 68. 2 Black. 144, 5.

But where the lease for years depends upon an uncertainty, as upon the death of the lessor, being himself only tenant for life, or being a husband seised in right of his wife, or if the term of years be determinable upon a life or lives, in all these cases the estate for years not being certainly to expire at a time foreknown, but merely by the act of God, the tenant or his executors shall be entitled thereto: but it is not so if it determine by the act of the party himself: as if tenant for years does any thing that amounts to a forfeiture, in which case the emblements shall go to the lessor, and not to the lessee, who hath determined his estate by his own default. Ibid.

These emblements are distinct from the real estate in the land, and subject to many, though not all, the incidents attending personal chattels; but they are not the subject of larceny until severed. 2 Black. 403.

If husband and wife are jointenants, though the husband sow the land with corn, and dies before ripe, the wife and not his executors shall have the corn, she being the surviving jointenant. Co. Lit. 199.

So if a widow is endowed with lands sown, she shall have the emblements, and not the heir. 2 Inst. 81. And a tenant in dower may dispose of corn sown on the ground; or it may go to her executors, if she die before severance. 2 Inst. 80, 81.

If tenant by statute-merchant sows the land, and before severance a casual profit happens, by which he is satisfied, yet he shall have the corn. Co. Lit. 55. Also if lands sown are delivered in execution, the person to whom delivered shall have the corn on the ground. 2 Leon. 54.

A person seised in fee of land dies, having a daughter, and his wife privement ensient with a son; the daughter enters and sows the land, and before severance of the corn, the son is born; in this case the daughter shall have the corn, her estate being lawful, and defeated by the act of God; and it is for the public good that the land should be sown. Co. Lit. 55.

A man seised in fee-simple sows land, and then devises the land by will, and dies before severance; the devisee shall have the corn; and not the devisor's executors. Winch 52. Cro. Eliz. 61. But if he dies without will, it goes to the executor, and not the heir. 10 Ed. 4. 1. b. 21 H. 6. 30. a. 37 H. 6. 35. b.

Where there is a right to emblements, ingress, egress and regress are allowed by law, to enter, cut and carry them away, when the estate is determined, &c. 1 Inst. 56.

EMBLERS DE GENTS, (Fr.) a stealing from the people. Cowel. Blount.

EMBRACEOR, (Fr. embraseur) is one who, when a matter is in trial between party and party, (not being counsel or attorney in the cause) comes to the bar with one of the parties, having received some reward so to do, and speaks in the case; or privately labours the jury, or stands in the court to survey and overlook them, whereby they are awed or influenced, or put in fear or doubt of the matter. Co. Lit. 369. Hob. 294. 1 Saund. 391. So if the party himself instruct a juror, or promise any reward for his appearance, then the party is likewise an embraceor. And a juror may be guilty of embracery, where he by indirect practices gets himself sworn on the tales, to serve on one side. 1 Lil. 513.

EMBRACERY, is the act or offence of embraceors, and to attempt to influence a jury, or any way incline them to be more favourable to the one side than the other, by promises, threatenings, money, treats, or the like, whether the jurors upon whom any such attempt is made, give any verdict or not, or whether the verdict pass on his side or not, this is embracery. Co. Lit. 369. Noy's Rep. 102. 4 Black. 140.

The punishment for the person embracing is by fine and imprisonment; and for the juror so embraced, if it be by taking money, the punishment is by divers statutes of the reign of Ed. 3, perpetual infamy, imprisonment for one year, and forfeiture of tenfold the value. 4 Black. 140.

EMBRING DAYS, (from embers, cineres) so called either because our ancestors when they fasted sat in ashes, or strewed them on their heads, are of great antiquity in the church: they are observed on Wednesday,

Friday, and Saturday next after quadragesima Sunday, (or the first Sunday in Lent) after Whitsunday, Holyrood day in September, and St. Lucy's day, about the middle of December; hence in our calendar these weeks are called Ember weeks.

EMBROIDERY. See Manufactures.

EMENDALS, (emenda) an old word, used in the accounts of the Inner Temple, where so much in emendals at the foot of an account signifies the balance thereof. Cowel. Blount.

EMENDARE, emendam solvere, to make amends for any crime or trespass committed. Ibid.

EMENDATIO, the power of amending and correcting abuses, according to stated rules and measures. Ibid.

EMPANNEL a jury, ponere in assisis et juratis, &c. See Juries.

EMPEROR. (imperator) the highest ruler of large kingdoms; a title anciently given to renowned and victorious generals. This title was formerly belonging to the kings of England, as appears by a charter of king Edgar, viz. ego Edgarus Anglorum Basileus, omniumque regum insularum oceani quæ Britanniam circumjacent, &c. imperator et dominus. Cowel. Blount.

EMPHYTENSIS. By the civil law if a tenant who held lands upon payment of rent or services, or as they call it jure emphytenticro, neglected to pay or perform them per totum triennium, he might be ejected from such emphytentic lands. Cod. 466, 22. 3 Black. 232.

ENBREVER, (Fr.) to write down in short. Britton 56.

ENCHESON, a French word, signifying the cause or reason wherefore any thing is done. Stat. 5 Ed. 3. c. 3. Cowel. Blount.

ENDEAVOUR. According to the common law where one who has the use of his reason endeavours to commit felony, &c. be may be punished as for a misdemeanor, and fined and imprisoned. 3 Inst. 68, 69, 161. 11 Rep. 98.

And now by stat. 7 Geo. 2, c. 21, it is made felony (transportable for 7 years) unlawfully and maliciously to assault another with any offensive weapon, or instrument, or by menace, or by other forcible or violent manner to demand any money or goods with a felonious intent to rob.

ENDOWMENT, signifies the bestowing or assuring of dower on a woman, but sometimes the settling a provision upon a parson, or building of a church or chapel, and the severing a sufficient portion of tithes, &c. for the vicar, towards his perpetual maintenance, when the benefice is appropriated. Stat. 15 R. 2, c. 6. 4 H. 4, c. 12.

ENEMY, (inimicus) is an alien or foreigner who under the authority of his own government acts in a hostile manner towards any other nation; and whether such persons act by themselves or in company with traitors, they cannot be punished as traitors, but shall be dealt with by martial law. H. P. C. 10, 15. 1 Hawk. 35. 1 Black. 257.

But the subjects of a foreign prince coming into England, and living under the protection of the king, if they take up arms against the government, may be punished as traitors, not as alien enemies. 1 Hawk. ibid. for such unauthorized volunteers in violence are not ranked among open enemies, but are treated like pirates and robbers, according to the rule of the civil law, hostes hi sunt qui nobis aut quibus nos publice bellum decrevimus: cæteri latrones aut prædones sunt. 1 Black. 257.

ENFRANCHISE. (Fr. enfranchir) to make free, or incorporate a man in any society, &c. Cowel. Blount.

ENFRANCHISEMENT, (Fr. franchise, i. e. libertas) signifies the act of incorporation whereby a person is incorporated into any society or body politic, and made partaker of those liberties, that appertain to the corporation. When a man is enfranchised into the freedom of any city or borough he hath a freehold in his freedom during life. 11 Rep. 91.

ENGLECERY, or ENGLESCHIRE, (Engleceria) an old word signifying the being an Englishman. Cowel. Blount.

ENGLISH. Pleas, records, bonds, and proceedings in courts of justice, are to be in English. 4 Geo. 2, c. 26. And see 5 Geo. 2, c. 27. 6 Geo. 2, c. 14.

ENGRAVINGS. By 8 Geo. 2, c. 13, persons who shall design, engrave, etch, or work in mezzotinto or chiaro obscuro, any historical or other prints, shall have the sole right of printing and publishing the same for fourteen years, so as the proprietor's name is affixed to each print.

Printsellers or others pirating or copying the same, are to forfeit the plates, and also five shillings for every copy found in their custody, if prosecuted within three months, half the penalty to the king, and half to the informer; but this act does not extend to purchasers of plates from the original proprietors. Ibid.

By 7 Geo. 3, c. 38, the original inventors, designers, or engravers of historical or other prints, and such who shall cause prints to be done from works of their own invention, and also such as shall engrave any print taken from any picture, drawing, model, or sculpture, are entitled to the benefit and protection of the above act; and those who shall engrave or import for sale copies of such prints, are liable to the like penalties, with costs, so as prosecuted within six months.

The right intended to be secured by this and the above act is extended, and vested in the proprietors for the term of twenty-eigh years from publication. Ibid.

By 17 Geo. 3, c. 57, if any engraver shall, within the above term, engrave or etch any print, without the consent of the proprietor, he shall be liable to an action for damages and double costs.

ENGROSSING, is the getting into one's possession, or buying up large quantities of corn, or other dead victuals, with intent to sell them again, this must of course be injurious to the public, by putting it in the power of one or two rich men to raise the price of provisions at their own discretion. And so the total engrossing of any other commodity with intent to sell it at an unreasonable price, is an offence indictable and finable at the common law. And the general punishment for such offence by the common law (all the statutes concerning them having been repealed) is, as in other misdemeanors, discretionary fine and imprisonment. 4 Black. 158, 9.

ENHANCE, to raise the price of goods or merchandise. Cowel. Blount.

ENPLEET, anciently used for implead. Ibid.

ENQUIRY, WRIT OF. Where a defendant suffers judgment to go against him by default, that is, by neglecting to put in any plea to the plaintiff's declaration: in such case, if the damages to be recovered, are uncertain, the judgment is interlocutory, and not final, and a writ issues to the sheriff to summon a jury to enquire what damages the plaintiff hath sustained, and when this is returned, with the inquisition thereon taken, final judgment is entered, and execution sued out. But if default be made in any action where the specific thing sued for, is to be recovered, as in detinue, or debt for a sum or thing certain, there the judgment is final and absolute in the first instance, and there is no necessity for any writ of enquiry.

ENROLMENT. Deeds were enrolled at common law for their preservation, though not to pass any estate. Style. 370. But now by the stat. 27 Hen. 8, c. 10, and 27 Hen. 8. c. 16, no deed of bargain and sale is effectual to pass any estate of inheritance, unless the same is enrolled in one of the courts at Westminster, or in the county where the lands lie, with the custos rotulorum, within six months after the date. The 5 Eliz. c. 26, also authorizes the courts in the counties palatine to enrol bargains and sales in like manner. Also the 5 Ann. c. 18, authorizes the registrars of the west riding, and 6 Ann. c. 35, s. 16, the registrars of the east riding of Yorkshire, to make like enrolments.

ENSIENT, or ENSEINT, is the being with child. Law Fr. Dict. Ibid.

ENSIENTURE, of any woman condemned for a crime, is no ground to stay judgment, but it may be afterwards alleged against execution. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 413.

ENTAIL, (Fr. entaille, i. e. incisus) is a fee entailed, viz. abridged, limited, and tied to certain conditions, at the will of the donor; where lands are given to or settled on others. See Fee and Tail.

ENTERPLEADER, (enterplaider, Fr. interplacitare, Lat.) signifies to discuss or try a point incidentally happening as it were between, before the principal cause can be determined. And enterpleader is allowed, that the defendant may not be charged to two severally, where no default is in him; as if one brings detinue against the defendant upon a bailment of goods, and another against him upon a trover, there shall be enterpleader to ascertain who has right to his action. 2 Danv. Abr. 779.

Formerly the head enterpleader made a great title in the law, but the bill of interpleader in courts of equity (which see under the head BILL in EQUITY) having been found most convenient, it is unnecessary to enlarge upon the subject in this place.

ENTIERTIE, (from the Fr. entierete, entireness) is a contradistinction in our books to moiety, denoting the whole. Cowel. Blount.

Thus if there be a devise to husband and wife, and to their heirs and assigns for ever, they take by entireties, and not by moieties; and it being uncertain until the death of one, in whom the whole entirety will vest, the husband alone cannot by his own conveyance divest the estate of the wife. 5 Ter. Rep. 652.

ENTIRE TENANCY, contrary to several tenancy, and signifying a sole possession in one man, whereas the other is a joint or common possession in more. Brook. Cowel. Blount.

ENTRY, (ingressus, Fr. entrée, i. e. introitus) signifies the taking possession of lands or tenements, where a man hath title of entry, and it is also used for a writ of possession. This entry into lands is where any man enters into or takes possession of any lands, &c. in his proper person; and is an actual entry when made by a man's self, or by attorney, by warrant from him that has the right; or it is an entry in law, for a continual claim is an entry implied by law, and has the same force with it. Lit. sec. 419.

Where a stranger who has no right hath taken possession of lands, in this case the legal owner may make a formal but peaceable entry thereon, declaring that thereby he takes possession; which notorious act of ownership is equivalent to a feodal investiture by the lord; or he may enter on any part of it in the same county, declaring it to be in the name of the whole, but if it lies in different counties he must make different entries; for the notoriety of such entry or claim to the pares or freeholders of Westmorland, is not any notoricty to the pares or freeholders of Sussex. Also if there be two disseisors the party disseised must make his entry on both: or if one disseisor has conveyed the lands with livery to two distinct feoffees, entry must be made on both; for as their seisin is distinct, so also must be the act which devests that seisin. If the claimant be deterred from entering by menaces or bodily fear, he may make claim as near to the estate as he can, with the like forms and solemnities, which claim is in force for a year and a day only. And therefore this claim, if it be repeated once in the space of every year and day (which is called continual claim), has the same effect with, and in all respects amounts to, a legal entry. Such an entry gives a man seisin, or puts him into immediate possession that hath right of entry on the estate, and thereby makes him complete owner, and capable of conveying it from himself either by descent or purchase. 3 Black. 175.

This remedy by entry takes place in three only of the five species of ouster, viz. abatement, intrusion, and disseisin: for, as in these the original entry of the wrongdoer was unlawful, they may therefore be remedied by the mere entry of him who hath right. But, upon a discontinuance or deforcement, the owner of the estate cannot enter, but is driven to his action: for herein the original entry being lawful, and thereby an apparent right of possession being gained, the law will not suffer that right to be overthrown by the mere act or entry of the claimant. Ibid.

On the other hand, in case of abatement, intrusion, or disseisin, where entries are generally lawful, this right of entry may be tolled, that is, taken away, by descent. Descents, which take away entries, are when any one, seised by any means whatsoever of the inheritance of a corporeal hereditament, dies, whereby the same descends to his heir: in this case, however feeble the right of the ancestor might be, the entry of any other person who claims title to the freehold is taken away; and he cannot recover possession against the heir by this summary method, but is driven to his action to gain a legal seisin of the estate. And this, first, because the heir comes to the estate by act of law, and not by his own act; the law therefore protects his title, and will not suffer his possession to be devested, till the claimant has proved a better right. Secondly, because the heir may not suddenly know the true state of his title, and therefore the law, which is ever indulgent to heirs, takes away the entry of such claimant as neglected to enter on the ancestor, who was well able to defend his title, and leaves the claimant only the remedy of a formal action against the heir. Thirdly, this was admirably adapted to the military spirit of the feodal tenures, and tended to make the feudatory bold in war, since his children could not by any mere entry of another, be dispossessed of the lands whereof he died seised. And, lastly, it is agreeable to the dictates of reason and the general principles of law. 3 Black. 176.

For, in every complete title to lands there are two things necessary, the possession or seisin, and the right or property therein, or, as it is expressed in Plato, the juris et sasinæ conjunctio. Now, if the possession be severed from the property, if A has the jus proprietatis, and B by some unlawful means has gained possession of the lands, this is an injury to A, for which the law gives a remedy, by putting him in possession, but does it by different means according to the circumstances of the case. Thus, as B, who was himself the wrongdoer, and hath obtained the possession by either fraud or force, hath only a bare or naked possession, without any shadow of right; A, therefore, who hath both the right of property and the right of possession, may put an end to his title at once, by the summary method of entry. But if B, the wrongdoer, dies seised of the lands, then B's heir advances one step farther towards a good title: he hath not only a bare possession, but also an apparent jus possessionis, or right of possession: for the law presumes that the possession, which is transmitted from the ancestor to the heir, is a rightful possession until the contrary be shown; and therefore the mere entry of A is not allowed to evict the heir of B, but A is driven to his action at law to remove the possession of the heir, though his entry alone would have dispossessed the ancestor. 3 Black. 176, 177.

So that in general it appears, that no man can recover possession by mere entry on lands which another hath by descent. Yet this rule hath some exceptions; wherein those reasons cease upon which the general doctrine is grounded, especially if the claimant were under any legal disabilities during the life of the ancestor, either of infancy, coverture, imprisonment, insanity, or being out of the realm: in all which cases there is no neglect or laches in the claimant, and therefore no descent shall bar, or take away his entry. And this title of taking away entries by descent, is still farther narrowed by the statute 32 Hen. 8. c. 33, which enacts, that if any person disseises or turns another out of possession, no descent to the heir of the disseisor shall take away the entry of him that has right to the land, unless the disseisee had peaceable possession five years next after the disseisin. But the statute extendeth not to any feoffee or donee of the disseisor, mediate or immediate; because such a one by the genuine feodal constitutions always came into the tenure solemnly and with the lord's concurrence, by actual delivery of seisin or open and public investiture. On the other hand, it is enacted by the statute of limitations, 21 Jac. 1. c. 16, that no entry shall be made by any man upon lands, unless twenty years after his right shall accrue. And by statute 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16. no entry shall be of force to satisfy the said statute of limitations, or to avoid a fine levied of lands, unless an action be thereupon commenced within one year after, and prosecuted with effect. 3 Black. 177, 8.

Upon an ouster, by the discontinuance of tenant in tail, we have said that no remedy by mere entry is allowed; but that, when tenant in tail alienes the lands entailed, this takes away the entry of the issue in tail, and drives him to his action at law to recover the possession. For, as in the former cases the law will not suppose, without proof, that the ancestor of him in possession acquired the estate by wrong; and therefore, after five years peaceable possession, and a descent cast, will not suffer the possession of the heir to be disturbed by mere entry without action; so here, the law will not suppose the discontinuor to have aliened the estate without power so to do, and therefore leaves the heir in tail to his action at law, and permits not his entry to be lawful. Besides, the alienee, who came into possession by a lawful conveyance, which was at least good for the life of the alienor, hath not only a bare possession, but also an apparent right of possession; which is not allowed to be devested by the mere entry of the claimant, but continues in force till a better right be shown and recognized by a legal determination. And something also, perhaps, in framing this rule of law, may be allowed to the inclination of the courts of justice, to go as far as they could in making estates-tail alienable, by declaring such alienations to be voidable only, and not absolutely void. 3 Black. 178.

In case of deforcements also, where the deforciant had originally a lawful possession of the land, but now detains it wrongfully, he still continues to have the presumptive prima facie evidence of right, that is, possession lawfully gained: which possession shall not be overturned by the mere entry of another, but only by the demandant's showing a better right in a course of law. 3 Black. 178, 9.

This remedy by entry must be pursued, according to the statute 5 Ric. 2, stat. 1. c. 8, in a peaceable and easy manner, and not with force or strong hand. For if one turns or keeps another out of possession forcibly, this is an injury of both a civil and a criminal nature. The civil is remedied by immediate restitution, which puts the ancient possessor in statu quo: the criminal injury, or public wrong, by breach of the king's peace, is punished by fine to the king. For by the stat. 8 Hen. 6. c. 9, upon complaint made to any justice of the peace of a forcible entry, with strong hand, on lands or tenements, or a forcible detainer after a peaceable entry, he shall try the truth of the complaint by jury, and, upon force found, shall restore the possession to the party so put out; and in such case, or if any alienation be made to defraud the possessor of his right (which is declared to be absolutely void) the offender shall forfeit for the force found treble damages to the party grieved, and make fine and ransom to the king. But this does not extend to such as endeavour to keep possession manu forti, after three years peaceable enjoyment of either themselves, their ancestors, or those under whom they claim, by a subsequent clause of the same stat. enforced by stat. 31 Eliz. c. 11. Ibid. See Forcible Entry.

ENTRY, WRITS OF. The ancient writs of entry were of four degrees:

I. The first a writ of entry sur disseisin, for the disseisee against a disseisor, upon a disseisin done by himself, and was called a writ of entry in the nature of an assise:

II. A writ of entry sur disseisin in le per, for the heir by discent, who is said to be in the per, as he comes in by his ancestor; and so it is if a disseisor make a feoffment in fee, gift in tail, &c. the feoffee and donee are in the per by the disseisor.

III. A writ of entry sur disseisin in le per & cui, where the feoffee of a disseisor makes a feoffment over to another, when the disseisee shall have this writ of entry sur disseisin, &c. of the lands in which such other had no right of entry but by the feoffee of the disseisor, to whom the disseisor demised the same, who unjustly and without judgment disseised the demandant:

IV. A writ of entry sur disseisin in le post, which lieth when after a disseisin the land is removed from hand to hand beyond the degrees, in case of a more remote seisin, whereunto the other three degrees do not extend. Co. Lit. 238.

The writ of entry in le post is so called, because the words of the writ are, Post disseisinam quam B. injuste & sine judicio fecit, &c. And the words, in le per, in le per & cui, and in le post, signified nothing but divers forms of this writ, applied to the case whereupon it was brought. F. N. B. 193.

ENTRY AD COMMUNEM LEGEM, an ancient writ of entry which laid where tenant for term of life, or for term of another's life, or by the curtesy, &c. aliened and died, when he in the reversion had this writ against whomsoever was in possession of the land. New Nat. Br. 461. Cowel. Blount.

ENTRY AD TERMINUM QUI PRETERIIT, a writ of entry brought against a tenant for years, who held over his term, and thereby kept out the lessor. New Nat. Br. 447, 448. But an ejectment is now the usual course of proceeding to recover the possession.

ENTRY IN CASU CONSIMILI. See Casu Consimili.

ENTRY IN CASU PROVISO. See Casu Proviso.

ENTRY SINE ASSENSU CAPITALI, a writ of entry that laid where a bishop, abbot, &c, aliened lands or tenements of the church, without the assent of the chapter or convent. F. N. B. 195. Cowel. Blount.

ENURE, signifies in the law to take place or be available; and is as much as effectum, as for example; a release made to tenant for life, shall enure, and be of force and effec to him in the reversion. Ibid. Co. Lit. 193. a. b. 273.

EODORBRICE, (from the Sax. eodor, a hedge, and brice, ruptura) hedge-breaking. Cowel. Blount.

EORLE, Sax. for earl. See Earl. Ibid.

EPIMENIA, expenses or gifts. Cowel. Blount.

EPIPHANY, the day when the star appeared to the wise men at Christ's nativity, generally called Twelfth-day. Ibid.

EPISCOPALIA, synodals, or other customary payments from the clergy to their bishop or diocesan; formerly collected by the rural deans, and by them transmitted to the bishop. Ibid.

EPISCOPUS PUERORUM. A custom in former times in some places, (long since abolished) for some lay person, at a particular festival, to put on the garments of a bishop, and in them exercise episcopal jurisdiction, and do several ludicrous actions, for which reason he was called bishop of the boys. Mon. Ang. tom. 3. pag. 169. Cowel. Blount.

EQUALITY, It is a maxim in Equity that "equality is equity." Fran. Max. 9. And at common law if a charge is made upon one, and divers ought to bear it, he shall have relief against the rest. 2 Rep. 25. Also under a power to give an estate, or bequeath monies to younger children, in such proportions as the party shall think fit, the party executing such power must give to each an equal or at least a substantial share, and not an illusory, nominal, or trifling one, unless good reason be given for doing otherwise. Prec. Canc. 256.

EQUES AURATUS, (Lat.) a knight, because anciently none but knights were allowed to beautify and gild their armour with gold. 4 Inst. 5. Cowel. Blount.

EQUITY (æquitas, quasi equalitas). Equity, in its true and genuine meaning, is the soul and spirit of all law, and is synonimous to justice. But the terms of a court of equity and a court of law, as contrasted to each other, are apt to confound and mislead us: as if the one judged without equity, and the other was not bound by any law: whereas every illustration to be met with, which now draws a line between the two jurisdictions, by setting law and equity in opposition to each other, will be found either totally erroneous, or erroneous to a certain degree. 3 Black. 429.

1. Thus, in the first place it is said, that it is the business of a court of equity in England to abate the rigour of the common law. But no such power is contended for. Hard was the case of bond-creditors, whose debtor devised away his real estate; rigorous and unjust the rule, which put the devisee in a better condition than the heir: yet a court of equity had no power to interpose. Hard is the common law still subsisting, that land devised, or descending to the heir, shall not be liable to simple contract debts of the ancestor or devisor, although the money was laid out in purchasing the very land *, and that the father shall never immediately succeed as heir to the real estate of the son, but a court of equity can give no relief; though in both these instances the artificial reason of the law, arising from feodal principles, has long ago entirely ceased. The like may be observed of the descent of lands to a remote relation of the whole blood, or even their escheat to the lord in preference to the owner's half-brother, and of the total stop to all justice, by causing the parol to demur, whenever an infant is sued as heir or is party to a real action. In all such cases of positive law, the courts of equity, as well as the courts of law, must say with Ulpian, hoc quidem perquam durum est, sed ita lex scripta est. 3 Black. 429.

2. It is said that a court of equity determines according to the spirit of the rule, and not according to the strictness of the letter. But so also does a court of law. Both, for instance, are equally bound, and equally profess, to interpret statutes according to the true intent of the legislator. In general laws all cases cannot be foreseen; or, if foreseen, cannot be expressed: some will arise that will fall within the meaning, though not within the words of the legislator, and others, which may fall within the letter, may be contrary to his meaning, though not expressly excepted. These cases, thus out of the letter, are often said to be within the equity, of an act of parliament; and so cases within the letter are frequently out of the equity. Here by equity we mean nothing but the sound interpretation of the law; though the words of the law itself may be too general, too special, or otherwise inaccurate or defective. These then are the cases which, as Grotius says, 'lex non exacte definit, sed arbitrio boni viri permittit,' in order to find out the true sense and meaning of the law-giver, from every other topic of construction. But there is not a single rule of interpreting laws, whether equitably or strictly, that is not equally used by the judges in the courts both of law and equity: the construction must in both be the same; or, if they differ, it is only as one court of law may also happen to differ from another. Each endeavours to fix and adopt the true sense of the law in question; neither can enlarge, diminish, or alter, that sense in a single tittle. 3 Black. 430.

3. Again, it has been said that fraud, accident, and trust, are the proper and peculiar objects of a court of equity. But every kind of fraud is equally cognizable, and equally adverted to, in a court of law; and some frauds are only cognizable there, as frauds in obtaining a devise of lands, which are always sent out of the equity courts to be there determined. Many accidents are also supplied in a court of law, as, loss of deeds, mistakes in receipts or accounts, wrong payments, deaths, which make it impossible to perform a condition literally, and a multitude of other contingencies: and many cannot be relieved even in a court of equity; as if by accident a recovery is ill suffered, a devise ill executed, a contingent remainder destroyed, or a power of leasing omitted in a family settlement. A technical trust, indeed, created by the limitation of a second use, was forced into the courts of equity, in the manner formerly mentioned: and this species of trusts, extended by inference and construction, has ever since remained as a kind of peculium in those courts. But there are other trusts, which are cognizable in a court of law, as deposits, and all manner of bailments, and especially that implied contract, so highly beneficial and useful, of having undertaken to account for money received to another's use, which is the ground of an action on the case, almost as universally remedial as a bill in equity. 3 Black. 431.

* But traders are now placed, in this respect, on a different footing; for by 47 Geo. 3. sess. 2, c. 84, when a trader shall die entitled to any estate, or interest in real estates, the same shall be assets.

4. Once more; it has been said that a court of equity is not bound by rules or precedents, but acts from the opinion of the judge, founded on the circumstances of every particular case: whereas the system of our courts of equity is a laboured, connected system, governed by established rules, and bound down by precedents, from which they do not depart, although the reason of some of them may perhaps be liable to objection. Thus, the refusing a wife her dower in a trust-estate, yet allowing the husband his curtesy; the holding the penalty of a bond to be merely a security for the debt and interest, yet considering it sometimes as the debt itself, so that the interest shall not exceed that penalty; the distinguishing between a mortgage at 5 per cent. with a clause of reduction to four, if the interest be regularly paid, and a mortgage at 4 per cent. with a clause of enlargement to five, if the payment of the interest be deferred; so that the former shall be deemed a conscientious, the latter an unrighteous bargain: all these and other cases that might be instanced, are plainly rules of a positive law, supported only by the reverence that is shown, and generally very properly shown, to a series of former determinations; that the rule of property may be uniform and steady. Nay, sometimes a precedent is so strictly followed that a particular judgment, founded upon special circumstances, gives rise to a general rule. 3 Black. 432.

In short, if a court of equity in England did really act, as a very ingenious writer in the other part of the island supposes it (from theory) to do, it would rise above all law, either common or statute, and be a most arbitrary legislator in every particular case. No wonder he is so often mistaken: Grotius or Puffendorff, or any other of the great masters of jurisprudence, would have been as little able to discover, by their own light, the system of a court of equity in England, as the system of a court of law, especially as the notions beforementioned, of the character, power, and practice of a court of equity, were formerly adopted and propagated (though not with approbation of the thing) by our principal antiquarians and lawyers, Spelman, Coke, Lambard, and Selden, and even the great Bacon himself. But this was in the infancy of our courts of equity, before their jurisdiction was settled, and where the chancellors themselves, partly from their ignorance of law (being frequently bishops or statesmen) partly from ambition and lust of power (encouraged by the arbitrary principles of the age they lived in) but principally from the narrow and unjust decisions of the courts of law, had arrogated to themselves such unlimited authority as hath totally been disclaimed by their successors for now above a century past. The decrees of a court of equity were then rather in the nature of awards formed on the sudden pro re nata with more probity of intention than knowledge of the subject; founded on no settled principles, as being never designed, and therefore never used, for precedents. But the systems of jurisprudence, in our courts both of law and equity, are now equally artificial systems, founded on the same principles of justice and positive law, but varied by different usages in the forms and mode of their proceedings; the one being originally derived (though much reformed and improved) from the feodal customs, as they prevailed in different ages in the Saxon and Norman judicatures; the other (but with equal improvements) from the imperial and pontifical formularies introduced by their clerical chancellors. 3 Black. 433.

The suggestion indeed of every bill to give jurisdiction to the courts of equity (copied from those early times) is, that the complainant hath no remedy at the common law: but he who should from thence conclude that no case is judged of in equity where there might have been relief at law, and at the same time casts his eye on the extent and variety of the cases in our equity-reports, must think the law a dead letter indeed. The rules of property, rules of evidence, and rules of interpretation in both courts are, or should be exactly the same; both ought to adopt the best, or must cease to be courts of justice. Formerly some causes, which now no longer exist, might occasion a different rule to be followed in one court from what was afterwards adopted in the other, as founded in the nature and reason of the thing: but the instant these causes ceased the measure of substantial justice ought to have been the same in both. Thus the penalty of a bond, originally contrived to evade the absurdity of those monkish constitutions which prohibited taking interest for money, was therefore very pardonably considered as the real debt in the courts of law, when the debtor neglected to perform his agreement for the return of the loan with interest: for the judges could not, as the law then stood, give judgment that the interest should be specifically paid. But when afterwards the taking of interest became legal, as the necessary companion of commerce, nay after the stat. of 37 Hen. 8, c. 9, had declared the debt or loan itself to be "the just and true interest" for which the obligation was given, their narrow-minded successors still adhered wilfully and technically to the letter of the ancient precedents, and refused to consider the payment of principal, interest, and costs, as a full satisfaction of the bond. At the same time more liberal men, who sat in the courts of equity, construed the instrument according to its "just and true intent," as merely a security for the loan: in which light it was certainly understood by the parties, at least after these determinations; and therefore this construction should have been universally received. So in mortgages, being only a landed as the other is a personal security for the money lent, the payment of principal, interest, and costs ought at any time, before judgment executed, to have saved the forfeiture in a court of law, as well as in a court of equity. And the inconvenience, as well as injustice, of putting different constructions in different courts upon one and the same transaction, obliged the parliament at length to interfere, and to direct by the statutes 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16. and 7 Geo. 2. c. 20. that, in the cases of bonds and mortgages, what had long been the practice of the courts of equity should also for the future be followed in the courts of law. 3 Black. 434.

Again; neither a court of equity nor of law can vary men's wills or agreements (in other words) make wills or agreements for them. Both are to understand them truly, and therefore both of them uniformly. One court ought not to extend, nor the other abridge, a lawful provision deliberately settled by the parties, contrary to its just intent. A court of equity, no more than a court of law can relieve against a penalty in the nature of stated damages; as a rent of 5*l.* an acre for ploughing up ancient meadow: nor against a lapse of time, where the time is material to the contract; as in covenants for renewal of leases. Both courts will equitably construe, but neither pretend to controul or change a lawful stipulation or engagement. 3 Black. 435.

The rules of decision are in both courts equally opposite to the subjects of which they take cognizance. Where the subject matter is such as requires to be determined secundum æquum et bonum, as generally upon actions on the case, the judgments of the courts of law are guided by the most liberal equity. In matters of positive right, both courts must submit to and follow those ancient and invariable maxims "quæ relicta sunt et tradicta." Both follow the law of nations, and collect it from history and the most approved authors of all countries, where the question is the object of that law: as in case of the privileges of embassadors, hostages, or ransom-bills. In mercantile transactions they follow the marine law, and argue from the usages and authorities received in all maritime countries. Where they exercise concurrent jurisdiction, they both follow the law of the proper forum: in matters originally of ecclesiastical cognizance they both equally adopt the canon or imperial law, according to the nature of the subject; and, if a question came before either, which was properly the object of a foreign municipal law, they would both receive information what is the rule of the country, and would both decide accordingly. 3 Black. 436.

Such then being the parity of law and reason which governs both species of courts, wherein (it may be asked) does their essential difference consist? it principally consists in the different modes of administering justice in each; in the mode of proof, the mode of trial, and the mode of relief. Upon these, and upon two other accidental grounds of jurisdiction, which were formerly driven into those courts by narrow decisions of the courts of law, viz. the true constructions of securities for money lent, and the form and effect of a trust or second use; upon these main pillars hath been gradually erected that structure of jurisprudence which prevails in our courts of equity, and is inwardly bottomed upon the same substantial foundations as the legal system; however different they may appear in their outward form, from the different tastes of their architects. 3 Black. Com. 436.

EQUITY OF REDEMPTION, where money is due on mortgage, and not paid at the day appointed, the mortgagee may enter and take possession, without any possibility at law, of being afterwards evicted by the mortgagor: but here the courts of equity interpose, and though a mortgage be thus forfeited, and the estate absolutely vested in the mortgagee at the common law, yet they will consider the real value of the tenements compared with the sum borrowed, and if the estate be of greater value than the sum lent thereon, they will allow the mortgagor at any reasonable time to recall or redeem his estate, paying to the mortgagee his principal, interest, and expences: for otherwise, in strictness of law, an estate worth 1000*l.* might be forfeited for non-payment of 100*l.* or a less sum: this reasonable advantage allowed to mortgagors, is called the EQUITY OF REDEMPTION: and it is this which enables a mortgagor to call on the mortgagee, who has possession of his estate, to deliver it back and account for the rents and profits received on payment of his whole debt and interest. 2 Black. 158. 2 Vent. 364.

But in general, if the mortgagee has been 20 years in possession, the courts of equity, in conformity with the statute of limitations which restricts the time of bringing ejectments, will not permit the mortgagor to redeem, unless during part of the time the mortgagor has been an infant, or a married woman, or unless the mortgagee admits he holds the estate as a mortgage; or he has kept accounts upon it, and treated it as redeemable within 20 years; or there are some other special circumstances which form an exception to the general rule. Eq. Ca. Abr. 313. 2 Bro. 399. 2 Ves. Jun. 83. And where two different estates are mortgaged by the owner to the same person, one cannot be redeemed without the other. Amb. 733.

EQUIVALENT, commissioners were appointed by statute to examine and state the debts due to Scotland on the union by way of equivalent. 1 Geo. 1. c. 27. 5 Geo. 1. c. 20.

EQUUS COOPERTUS, a horse equipped with saddle and furniture. Cowel. Blount.

ERIACH. By the Irish Brehon law, in case of murder, the brehon or judge compounded between the murderer and the friends of the deceased who prosecuted, by causing the malefactor to give unto them, or to the child or wife of him that was slain, a recompence, which was called an eriach. 4 Black. 309.

ERMINS, (from the Fr. ermine) a fur used in robes of state. Cowel. Blount.

ERN, (from the Sax. ern, locus secretus) places ending in ern, signify a melancholy situation. Ibid.

ERNES, loose scattered ears of corn, left on the ground, after binding or cocking, derived from the Teutonic, ernde, harvest; ernden, to cut or mow corn: hence to ern is in some places to glean. Kennett's Gloss. Cowel. Blount.

ERRANT, (itinerant). See Eyre.

ERRATICUM, a waif, or stray. Cowel. Blount.

ERROR, (Fr. erreur) signifies something wrong in pleading or process, &c. whereupon a writ is brought for remedy thereof, called a writ of error, in Lat. de errore corrigendo. And a writ of error is a writ which issues out of chancery, and lies where any one is grieved by the proceedings and judgment in any court of record, having power to hold plea of debt, or trespass above 40*s.* for to amend error in a base court not of record, a writ of false judgment lies. Finch. L. 484. And where they are in a summary way, or in a new course different from the common law, the remedy on an erroneous judgment is by certiorari. 1 Salk. 263. Bac. Abr. tit. Er.

A writ of error is a commission to judges of a superior court, by which they are authorised to examine the record upon which a judgment was given in an inferior court, and on such examination to affirm or reverse the same according to law. Jenk. Rep. 25. 2 Inst. 40. Yelv. 202. Rep. Temp. Hardw. per Annaly. 340.

The writ of error only lies upon matter of law arising upon the face of the proceedings; so that no evidence is required to substantiate or support it: and there is no method of reversing an error in the determination of facts, but by an attaint, or a new trial, to correct the mistakes of the former verdict. 3 Black. 405, 6.

Formerly the suitors were much perplexed by writs of error brought upon very slight and trivial grounds, as misspellings and other mistakes of the clerks, all which might be amended at the common law, while all the proceedings were in paper (4 Burr. 1099.); for they were then considered as only in fieri, and therefore subject to the controul of the courts. But, when once the record was made up, it was formerly held, that by the common law no amendment could be permitted, unless within the very term in which the judicial act so recorded was done: for during the term the record is in the breast of the court; but afterwards it admitted of no alteration (Co. Litt. 260.) But now the courts are become more liberal; and, where justice requires it, will allow of amendments at any time while the suit is depending, notwithstanding the record be made up, and the term be past. For they at present consider the proceedings as in fieri, till judgment is given; and therefore that, till then, they have power to permit amendments by the common law: but when judgment is once given and enrolled, no amendment is permitted in any subsequent term (Stat. 11 Hen. 4. c. 3.) Mistakes are also effectually helped by the statutes of amendment and jeofails: so called, because when a pleader perceives any slip in the form of his proceedings, and acknowledges such error (jeo faile) he is at liberty by those statutes to amend it; which amendment is seldom actually made, but the benefit of the acts is attained by the courts overlooking the exception (Stra. 1011.) By these statutes all trifling exceptions are so thoroughly guarded against, that writs of error cannot now be maintained, but for some material mistake assigned. 3 Black. 406.

The following is the substance of the several acts here referred to.

By 14 Ed. 3. stat. 1. c. 6. errors in record, owing to the misprision of clerks, of a letter, or syllable, may be amended, as well after judgment given, as before. Also 9 Hen. 5. c. 4.

But by 4 Hen. 6. c. 3. such acts are not to extend to Wales, or outlawries.

By 8 Hen. 6. c. 12. no record shall be reversed for error assigned by reason of rasing, interlineation, addition, or diminution.

The judges may reform all defects in any record, process, writ, or return, (appeals, indictments of treason, or felony, and outlawries thereupon excepted) and variance between a record and the certificate shall be amended by the judges. Ibid. and 8 Hen. 6. c. 15.

No judgment shall be reversed, for a variation from the exemplification, where the record is exemplified or inrolled. Ibid.

By 32 Hen. 8. c. 30. after verdict, judgment shall be given, notwithstanding any mispleading, jeofail, misjoining of issue, or want of warrant of attorney.

By 18 Eliz. c. 14. after verdict, judgment shall not be stayed for default in form, variance, or want of form, in any writ, count, return of sheriff, or for want of any warrant of attorney.

But this does not extend to information on any penal statute, nor to appeals, indictments, or presentments of felony and murder.

By 21 Jac. 1. c. 13. after verdict no judgment shall be stayed or reversed for variance in form between the writ and the declaration, or want of averment for the life of parties, or that the venire was awarded to a wrong officer, or that the sheriff's name is not to the return, or that the plaintiff being an infant did appear by attorney, if the verdict passed for him.

This does not extend to appeals, indictments, or informations.

By 16 & 17 Car. 2. c. 8. after verdict, judgment shall not be stayed or reversed for default in form, want of pledges, or want of alleging profert, &c. not being against the right of the suit. Nor shall the death of either party between the verdict and judgment, be alleged for error, so as such judgment be entered within two terms after the verdict.

But this likewise does not extend to appeals, indictments or informations.

By 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16. after demurrer joined, judgment shall be given on the very right, without regarding defect in any writ, return, pleading, or process, though taken to be substance, so as sufficient matter appear, unless the party demurs specially. And all the acts shall extend to judgments by confession or default.

By 5 Geo. 1. c. 13. writs of error varying from the record may be amended; except in criminal matters.

And by the 10 & 11 W. 3. cap. 14. it is enacted, "that no fine or common recovery, nor judgment in any real or personal action, shall be reversed or avoided for any error or defect therein, unless the writ of error, or suit for the reversing such fine, recovery or judgment be commenced or brought, and prosecuted with effect, within twenty years after such fine levied, or such recovery suffered, or judgment signed or entered of record." Saving the rights of infants, femecoverts, persons non compos, in prison, or beyond sea.

He that brings writ of error, to reverse a judgment in a superior court, in all cases after a verdict, or in any action of debt, upon bond for payment of money only, or on a contract, must put in good sureties to prosecute his writ of error with effect, and pay the debt and damages if judgment be affirmed: but inferior courts, as well upon verdicts as other judgments, by default, or on demurrer, &c. have their writs of error allowed without putting in bail, they being omitted in the statute. 3 Jac. 1. cap. 8. If bail be not put in, on the writ of error brought upon a judgment in the courts at Westminster, in those cases where bail is required, the writ of error is no supersedeas to the execution; though such writ is in being, until a nolle prosequi is entered, or judgment affirmed, &c. And it is the same where insufficient bail is given, on rule to put in better bail, or justify those put in, which if the plaintiff doth not do, execution is ordered upon the judgment, with a non obstante to the writ of error, &c. Mich. 9 W. 3. B. R.

The court will not let the plaintiff in error quash his own writ of error; though they may grant leave to discontinue it. 5 Mod. 67. If a verdict is for a defendant in error, and judgment is affirmed, costs are allowed by stat. 3 Hen. 7. c. 10. occasione dilationis executionis. And by 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16. Upon quashing writs of error, for defect or variance from the record, &c. the defendant is to have costs as if judgment were affirmed.

A writ of error lies from the inferior courts of record in England into the king's bench, and not into the common pleas. It likewise may be brought from the common pleas at Westminster to the king's bench; and from the king's bench the cause is removeable to the house of lords. From proceedings on the law side of the exchequer a writ of error lies into the court of exchequer chamber before the lord chancellor, lord treasurer, and the judges of the court of king's bench and common pleas: and from thence it lies to the house of peers. From proceedings in the king's bench, in debt, detinue, covenant, account, case, ejectment, or trespass originally begun therein (except where the king is party) it lies to the exchequer chamber, before the justices of the common pleas, and barons of the exchequer; and from thence also to the house of lords: but where the proceedings in the king's bench, are commenced by original writ, sued out of chancery, this takes the case out of the general rule laid down by the statute; so that the writ of error then lies, without any intermediate stage of appeal, directly to the house of lords, the dernier resort for the ultimate decision of every civil action. Each court of appeal, in their respective stages, may, upon hearing the matter of law in which the error is assigned, reverse or affirm the judgment of the inferior courts; but none of them are final, save only the house of peers, to whose judicial decisions all other tribunals must therefore submit and conform their own. 3 Black. 410.

ERTHMIOTUM, a meeting of the neighbourhood to compromise differences among themselves, customary in former days. Cowel. Blount.

ESBRANCATURA, (from the Fr. esbrancher) cutting off branches or boughs in forests, &c. Ibid.

ESCALDARE, to scald: escaldare porcos, was one of our ancient tenures in serjeanty, within the counties of Essex and Hertford. Ibid.

ESCAMBIO, (derived from the Span. cambier, to change) was a licence granted to make over a bill of exchange to another beyond the sea, under stat. 5 Ric. 2. c. 2. Ibid.

ESCAPE, (escapium, from the Fr. eschapper, i. e. effugere) to fly from.

Escape in civil cases.] Wherever a sheriff or other officer hath a person in custody by virtue of an authority from a court which hath jurisdiction over the matter, the suffering such person to go at large is an escape, but if the court has no jurisdiction of the matter, then all is void, and consequently the officer not punishable for suffering a person taken upon such void authority to escape. Moor 274. Dyer 66. 175, 306. Pepb. 203. 1 Leon. 30. 5 Co. 64. 8 Co. 141, b. Cro. Jac. 280, 289. 2 Bulst. 64. 257. 256.

The sheriff cannot be charged with an escape before he had the party in actual custody by a legal authority; and therefore if an officer, having a warrant to arrest a man, see him shut up in a house, and challenge him as his prisoner, but never actually have him in his custody, and the party get free, the officer cannot be charged with an escape. Bro. Escape, 22.

Every person in prison by process of law is to be kept in salva & arcta custodia, in order to compel them the more speedily to pay their debts, and make satisfaction to their creditors. Plowd. 36. 3 Co. 44. 2 Inst. 381. 1 Rol. Abr. 806.

Persons in the King's Bench and Fleet prisons are to be actually detained within the said prisons; and if they escape action of debt lies against the warden, &c. 1 R. 2. c. 12. But now the marshal or warden grant the liberty of the rules to such as they think proper, (not criminally charged) on proper security. Keepers of those prisons suffering prisoners either upon contempt or mesne process, or in execution, to be out of the rules (except on rule of court, &c.) is an escape; and persons conniving at an escape shall forfeit 500*l.* &c. by 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 27. And by this statute, where any prisoner in execution escapes, the creditor may have any other new execution against him.

By Stat. 5 Ann. c. 9, if any person in custody, for not performing any decree in Chancery, &c. escape, the party for whom the money is decreed may have the same remedy against the sheriff as if the prisoner had been in custody on execution. A prisoner in execution should not be allowed to go out of gaol; for if he goes out, though he returns again, even though he go out with the gaoler, it is an escape. 3 Rep. 43, 44. 2 Inst. 260. 381.

But it has been adjudged no escape on mesne process to let a prisoner go, where the sheriff has a prisoner in custody, if it be before the return of the writ; for it is sufficient on mesne process if the officer have the party at the return of the writ, &c. Moor 299. 1 Salk. 401. 2 Neb. 759, 740.

And an escape in one place is an escape in all places; for a prisoner being once escaped, and at large, it shall be intended he is confined to no place, and so the action is transitory, and may be laid in any county. 1 Lil. Abr. 537.

On a judgment against two, and both in execution, if the sheriff suffer one to escape he shall be answerable for the whole debt, though he has one of them still in custody. 1 Rol. Abr. 810.

And by 8 & 9 Wil. 3, cap. 27, if the marshal or warden, or their deputies, or keeper of any prison, shall, after one day's notice in writing, refuse to show any prisoner committed in execution to the creditor at whose suit such prisoner was committed, or to his attorney, every such refusal shall be adjudged to be an escape in law.

In civil actions the sheriff is to answer for the escape of his bailiff by action on the case. Cro. Eliz. 622, 625. 1 Danv. Abr. 183. See also Cro. Jac. 419. Dyer 241. See Ni. Pri. 59, 60.

Where one has the custody of a gaol of freehold or inheritance, and commits it to another person, who is insufficient, the superior is answerable for all escapes suffered by his inferior; but if the inferior be sufficient, the action should be brought against him, and not against the superior. 9 Co. 98. 2 Jon. 60. 2 Lev. 158. 1 Vent. 314. 2 Mod. 119. 4 Rep. 98.

But by 8 & 9 W. 3, cap. 27, the marshal of the King's Bench and warden of the Fleet shall be answerable for their deputies, and for all forfeitures, escapes, and other misdemeanors in their office by such deputies permitted, &c. and the profits and inherit-ances of the said offices shall be sequestered, &c. to make satisfaction. s. 11.

And an action of escape will lie against the marshal or warden for an escape upon mesne process though the prisoner returns the same day, and the plaintiff afterward proceeds to final judgment against him. 2 Wils. Rep. 294.
