And according to Blackstone, 2 Com. 36. Offices are a right to exercise a public or private employment, and to take the fees and emoluments thereunto belonging, are also incorporeal hereditaments: whether public, as those of magistrates; or private, as of bailiffs, receivers, and the like. For a man may have an estate in them, either to him and his heirs, or for life, or for a term of years, or during pleasure only: save only that offices of public trust cannot be granted for a term of years, especially if they concern the administration of justice, for then they might perhaps vest in executors or administrators, (9 Rep. 37). Neither can any judicial office be granted in reversion: because though the grantee may be able to perform it at the time of the grant, yet before the office falls he may become unable and insufficient: but ministerial offices may be so granted, (11 Rep. 4); for those may be executed by deputy. Also, by statute 5 and 6 Edw. 6. c. 16. no public office (a few only excepted) shall be sold, under pain of disability to dispose of or hold it. For the law presumes that he, who buys an office, will by bribery, extortion, or other unlawful means, make his purchase good, to the manifest detriment of the public. And if two offices are incompatible, by the acceptance of the latter, the first is relinquished and vacant, even if it should be a superior office. 2 T. R. 81.

And by 49 Geo. 3. c. 126. the statute 5 and 6 Ed. 6. c. 16. is extended to Scotland and Ireland, and to all offices in the gift of the crown, or of any office appointed by the crown, and all commissions, civil, naval, or military, and to all places and employments, and to all deputations to any such departments, or under the appointment of the treasury, secretary of state, admiralty, ordnance, commander in chief, secretary at war, paymaster-general, commissioners of India, of the excise, treasurer of the navy, commissioners of the navy, victualling transports, commissary-general, store-keeper-general, and also the principal officers of any other public departments of his majesty's government in any part of the united kingdom, or the dominions or plantations thereof, s. 1. And when the right of appointment under the former, or this act, shall be forfeited, the same shall go to his majesty. s. 2.

Persons buying or selling offices, or receiving or paying money or rewards for offices, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. s. 3.

Persons receiving or paying money for soliciting offices, and entering into any negociations or pretended negociations relating thereto, shall be also guilty of a misdemeanour. s. 4.

Persons opening or advertising houses for transacting business, relating to the sale of offices, also guilty of a misdemeanour. s. 5.

And persons advertising or publishing the names of brokers, or agents, shall forfeit 50*l.* with full costs to the informer, in any court of record. s. 6.

But this act is not to extend to the purchase or sale of commissions, for the regulated prices or authorized regimental agents, acting in such cases according to regulation, without fee or reward. s. 7.

Officers in the army giving more than the regulated prices or paying agents for negociating, are to forfeit their commissions and be cashiered, their commission to be sold, and half of the produce when not exceeding 500*l.* to go to the informer, and exceeding it according to his Majesty's regulations in that behalf to be made. s. 8.

But this act is not to extend to offices, excepted in former acts, nor to securities or transactions under legal securities, in respect of offices legally saleable. s. 9. Nor to lawful deputations, where the payment of the principal or deputy is out of the fees. s. 10. Nor does the act extend to annual payments out of the fees of any office, to any person formerly holding such office. s. 11.

Offenders in Scotland may be fined and imprisoned, or by one or both of such punishments. s. 13.

Offences committed abroad, shall be tried in the court of King's Bench. s. 14.

OFFICE FOUND, is where an inquisition is made to the king's use, of any thing by virtue of his office who inquireth, and it is found by the inquisition. Staundford's Prerog. pag. 60. To traverse an office, is to traverse an inquisition taken of office: and to return an office, is to return that which is found by virtue of the office. Kitch. 177. And if any office be wrongfully found, those who are grieved, may be relieved by a traverse, or Monstrans de Droit, by pleading or petition: For every office is in nature of a declaration, to which any man may plead, and either deny or confess, &c. Plowd. 448. Bro. 506.

OFFICIAL, (officialis) the minister of or attendant upon a magistrate. And in the canon law, one to whom any bishop generally commits the charge of his spiritual jurisdiction; and there is in every diocese officialis principalis, whom the law styles chancellor; and the rest, if there are more, are termed officialis forane, i. e. commissaries. Wood's Inst. 50, 505.

OFFICIARIIS NON FACIENDIS VEL AMOVENDIS, a writ directed to the magistrates of a corporation, requiring them not to make such a man an officer, or to put one out of the office he hath, until inquiry is made of his manners, &c. Reg. Orig. 126.

OFFICIO, OATH EX. By stat. 13 Car. 2. c. 12, it is enacted, that it shall not be lawful for any bishop or ecclesiastical judge, to tender or administer to any person whatsoever, the oath usually called the oath EX OFFICIO, or any other oath whereby he may be compelled to confess, accuse, or purge himself of any criminal matter or thing, whereby he may be liable to any censure or punishment.

OLERON LAWS, (Oliarenses Leges) are the laws of King Rich. 1. relating to maritime affairs, so called, because made by him when he was at Oleron; which is an island lying in the bay of Aquitain, at the mouth of the river Charent, and now belongs to the French king. Co. Lit. 260.

OLYMPIAD, (Olympias) an account of time among the Greeks, consisting of four complete years, having its names from the olympic games, which were kept every fourth year, in honour of Jupiter Olympius, near the city of Olympia: The first Olympiad began in the year 3938 of the Julian period, 505 years after the taking of Troy, 776 before the birth of Christ, and 24 years before the founding of Rome. Æthelred, king of the English Saxons, computed his reign by Olympiads. Spelm.

OMER, a measure made use of by the Jews, of three pints and a half. Merch. Dict.

OMISSIONS, are placed among crimes and offences; and omission to hold a court-leet, or not swearing officers therein, &c. are causes of forfeiture. 2 Hawk. P. C. 73. Omissions in law proceedings render them vicious and defective, as want of warrants of attorney entered, &c. 1 Keb. 204, 222.

ONCUNNE, (Sax. Oncunnen) signifies as much as accused, Accusatus. Leg. Alfred. c. 29. Cowel.

ONERANDO PRO RATA PORTIONIS, a writ that lay for a jointenant, or tenant in common, who was distrained for more rent than his proportion of the land came to. Reg. Orig. 182.

O. NI, is the course of the exchequer, that as soon as the sheriff enters into and makes up his account for issues, amerciaments, and mean profits, to mark upon each head, O. Ni. which denotes oneratur, nisi habeat sufficientem exoneralionem, and presently he becomes the king's debtor, and a debet is set upon his head; whereupon the parties paravaile become debtors to the sheriff, and are discharged against the king, &c. 4 Inst. 116.

ONUS EPISCOPALE, customary payments from the clergy to their diocesan bishop, at Synodals, Pentecostals, &c. Cowel.

ONUS PROBANDI, i. e. the burden of proving. 14 Car. 2. c. 11.

OPEN LAW, (lex manifesta) is the making of law, which bailiffs may not put men to, upon the bare assertion, except they have witnesses to prove the truth of it. Mag. Chart. c. 21.

OPEN THEFT, (Sax. Opentheof) is a theft that is manifest. Leg. Hen. c. 13.

OPEN-TIDE, i. e. when corn is carried out of the common fields. Brit.

OPERARII, tenants who had some little portions of land by the duty of performing many bodily labours and servile works for their lord, being no other than the servi bondmen. Cowel.

OPERATIO, one day's work. Ibid.

OPPRESSION, in a private sense, is the trampling upon or bearing down one, on pretence of law, which is unjust: but where the law is known and clear, though it be unequitable, the judges must determine according to that. Vaugh. 37.

OPTION. When a new suffragan bishop is consecrated, the archbishop of the province by a customary prerogative claims the collation of the first vacant dignity or benefice in that see, at his own choice; which is called his option. Cowel.

OPTIONAL WRIT, a præcipe is an optional writ, i.e. it is in the alternative, commanding the defendant to do the thing required, or shew the reason wherefore he hath not done it. There is another species of original writs called peremptory, or a si fecerit te securum, from the words of the writ, which directs the sheriff to cause the defendant to appear in court, without any option given him, provided the plaintiff gives the sheriff security effectually to prosecute his claim. 3 Black. 274.

ORA. A Saxon coin, valued at sixteen pence, and sometimes according to variation of the standard at twenty pence.

ORANDO PRO REGE ET REGNO, an ancient writ, common in the time of king Edw. 3. Cowel.

ORARIUM, the hem, or border of a garment. Cowel.

ORBIS, Anglice, a bonney, a swelling or knot in the flesh, caused by a blow. Bract. lib. 3.

ORCHARDS AND GARDENS, robbing them, or destroying trees in them. See Trespass.

ORCHEL, or ORCHAL, a kind of cork, or rather a kind of stone like alum, which dyers use in their colours.

ORDEAL, or ORDAL, (ordalium) a kind of purgation practised in ancient times, and in the canon law called purgatio vulgaris. There were of this two sorts, one by fire, another by water. Cowel.

Anciently, when an offender being arraigned, pleaded not guilty, he might choose whether he would put himself for trial upon God and the country, by twelve men, as at this day, or upon God only; and then it was called the judgment of God, presuming that he would deliver the innocent. Terms de Ley. 9 Rep. 32.

This trial was two ways, one by water, and another by fire: the water ordeal was performed either in hot or cold; in cold water the parties suspected were adjudged innocent, if their bodies were not borne up by the water contrary to the course of nature; in hot water, they were to put their bare arms or legs into scalding water, which if they brought out without hurt, they were taken to be innocent of the crime.

Those that were tried by the fire ordeal, passed bare-footed and blind-fold over nine hot glowing plough-shares; or were to carry burning irons in their hands, usually of one pound weight, which was called simple ordeal; or of two pounds, which was duplex; or of three pounds weight, which was triplex ordalium; and accordingly as they escaped, they were judged innocent or nocent, acquitted or condemned: this fire ordeal was for freemen, and persons of better condition; and the water ordeal for bondmen and rustics. Glanv. lib. 4. c. 1.

ORDEFFE, or ORDELFE, (effossio metalli, derived from the Saxon ore, metallum, and delfan effodere) a liberty, whereby a man claims the ore found in his own ground, or more properly, the ore lying under ground: also a delfe of coal, is coal lying in veins under ground, before it is dug up. Cowel.

ORDELS, oaths and ordels, privileges granted in old charters, meaning the right of administering oaths, and adjudging ordeal trials, within a precinct or liberty. Cowel.

ORDERS. Orders of the Court of Chancery are, either of course or otherwise, obtained on the petition or motion of one of the parties in a cause, or of some other interested in or affected by it; and they are sometimes made on a full hearing of the matter, sometimes by consent of parties.

Orders of the King's Bench and Common Pleas, are rules made by the court in causes there depending; and when they are drawn up and entered, they become orders of the court. 2 Lil. 261.

Orders of Justices of the Peace. Justices of peace at the quarter sessions may rectify defects of form in orders, &c. upon appeals, and then shall determine the matters according to the merits of the case; and no orders shall be removed into B.R. without entering into recognizance of 50*l.* to prosecute with effect, &c. otherwise the justices to confirm their order, by stat. 5 Geo. 2. c. 19; and by the stat. 26 Geo. 2. c. 27. No order of justices shall be set aside for not inserting that one of them is of the quorum. See Poor.

ORDINALE, a book which contains the manner of performing divine offices. Cowel.

ORDINANCE, (ordinatio) is a law, decree, or statute, variously used. Lit. Dict. Cowel.

ORDINANCE OF THE FOREST, (ordinatio forestæ) is a statute made touching matters and causes of the forest, anno 34 Ed. 1. Cowel. Blount.

ORDINANCE OF PARLIAMENT, is said to be the same with act of parliament; but originally there was this difference between them; that an ordinance was but a temporary act, by way of prohibition, which the commons might alter or amend at their pleasure; and an act of parliament is a perpetual law not to be altered but by king, lords, and commons. Rot. Parl. 37 Ed. 3. Prynne's Animadver. on 4 Inst. 13.

ORDINARY, (ordinarius) is a civil law term, for any judge who hath authority to take cognizance of causes in his own right, and not by deputation. Co. Lit. 344. Stat. Westm. 2. 13 Ed. 1. cap. 19.

This name is applied to a bishop who hath original jurisdiction; and an archbishop is the ordinary of the whole province, to visit and receive appeals from inferior jurisdictions, &c. 2 Inst. 398. 9 Rep. 41. Wood's Inst. 25. The word ordinary is also used for every commissary or official of the bishop, or other ecclesiastical judge, having judicial power: thus an archdeacon is an ordinary; and ordinaries may grant administration of intestate's estates, &c. Stat. 31 Ed. 3. c. 11. 9 Rep. 36.

ORDINARY OF NEWGATE, is one who is attendant in ordinary upon condemned malefactors in that prison, to prepare them for death; and he records the behaviour of such persons. Cowel.

ORDINATIONE CONTRA SERVIENTES, a writ that lays against a servant, for leaving his master contrary to the statute. Reg. Orig. 189.

ORDINATION OF CLERGY. By common law, a deacon, of any age, might be instituted and inducted to a parsonage or vicarage: but it was ordained by statute 13 Eliz. c. 12. that no person under twenty-three years of age, and in deacon's orders, should be presented to any benefice with cure; and if he were not ordained priest within one year after his induction, he should be ipso facto deprived; and now, by statute 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 4. no person is capable to be admitted to any benefice, unless he hath been first ordained a priest; and then he is, in the language of the law, a clerk in orders. But if he obtains orders, or a licence to preach, by money or corrupt practices (which seems to be the true, though not the common, notion of simony) the person giving such orders forfeits 40*l.* and the person receiving, 10*l.* and is incapable of any ecclesiastical preferment for seven years afterwards.

Any clerk may be presented to a parsonage or vicarage; that is, the patron, to whom the advowson of the church belongs, may offer his clerk to the bishop of the diocese to be instituted. Of advowsons, or the right of presentation, being a species of private property, we have already treated in another part of this dictionary, (see Advowson). But when a clerk is presented, the bishop may refuse him upon many accounts. As, 1. If the patron is excommunicated, and remains in contempt forty days. Or, 2. If the clerk be unfit: which unfitness is of several kinds. First, with regard to his person: as if he be a bastard, an outlaw, an excommunicate, an alien, under age, or the like.—Next, with regard to his faith or morals. By 24 Geo. 3. c. 35. the bishop of London, or any other bishop by him appointed, may admit aliens to be order of deacon or priest, without their taking the oaths of allegiance.

But persons so ordained, shall not exercise their office in his majesty's dominions, and the name and country of the person ordained shall be inserted in the letters testimonial. Ibid.

By 26 Geo. 3. c. 84. the archbishop of Canterbury or York, with such other bishops as they shall think fit to assist, may consecrate subjects of foreign states, bishops, without the king's licence for the election, or requiring them to take the usual oaths; but not without first obtaining his majesty's royal licence for performing the consecration.

No persons so consecrated, shall thereby be enabled to exercise their offices in his majesty's dominions. Ibid.

Certificates of consecration shall be given by the archbishops. Ibid.

By 44 Geo. 3. c. 43. none shall be admitted deacon before twenty-three, nor priest before twenty-four; nor be capable of holding a benefice: but no title by lapse shall accrue, without six months notice, from the ordinary to the patron: but the right of granting faculties by the archbishop of Canterbury or Armagh, is saved.

ORDINES. A general chapter, or other solemn convention of the religious of such a particular order. Paroch. Antiq. p. 576.

ORDINES MAJORES ET MINORES. The holy orders of priest, deacon, and subdeacon, any of which did qualify for presentation and admission to an ecclesiastical dignity or cure, were called ordines majores; and the inferior orders of chanter, psalmist, ostiary, reader, exorcist and acolyte, were called ordines minores. Cowel.

ORDINUM FUGITIVI, signified those of the religious who deserted their houses, and throwing off the habits, renounced their particular order, in contempt of their oath and other obligations. Paroch. Antiq. 383.

ORDO, that rule which the monks were obliged to observe. Cowel. Blount.

ORDO ALBUS, the White Friars, or Augustines; the Cistercians also wore white. Ibid.

ORDO NIGER, were the Black Friars. Ibid.

ORFGILD, or CHEAPGELD, (from the Saxon, orf, pecus, and gild, solutio vel redemptio,) a delivery or restitution of cattle. Also, a restitution made by the hundred, or county, for any wrong done by one who was in pledge. Arch. pag. 125, or, rather a penalty for taking away cattle. Ibid.

ORFRAIES, (aurifrisium) a sort of cloth of gold, frizzled or embroidered, formerly made and used in England, worn by our kings and nobility; and the clothes of the king's guards were called orfraies, because adorned with such works of gold. Ibid.

ORGALLOUS, from the French orgueil, pride, high-minded. 4 Inst. 89.

ORGEYS, (mentioned in stat. 32 E. 2. st. 3. c. 3.) Is the greatest sort of North-sea fish, (for the statute says they are greater than lob-fish) which we now call organling, corruptly from Orkney-ling, because the best are near that island. Cowel.

ORGILD, (sine compensatione) without recompence; as where no satisfaction was to be made for the death of a man killed, so that he was judged lawfully slain. Spelm.

ORIGINAL. The original, or original WRIT, is the bringing, or foundation of a suit in the King's superior courts of law at Westminster. When a person hath received an injury and seeks that redress which the law has given for the injury, he is thereupon to make application or suit to the crown for that specific remedy which he is advised to pursue. As, for money due on bond, an action of debt: for goods detained without force, an action of detinue or trover: or, if taken with force, an action of trespass vi et armis: or to try the title of lands, a writ of entry, or action of trespass in ejectment; or, for any consequential injury received, a special action on the case. To this end he is to sue out, or purchase by paying the stated fees, an original or original writ, from the court of chancery, which is the officina justitiae, the shop or mint of justice, wherein all the king's writs are framed. It is a mandatory letter from the king in parchment, sealed with his great seal (Finch L. 237.) and directed to the sheriff of the county wherein the injury is committed or supposed so to be, requiring him to command the wrong-doer or party accused, either to do justice to the complainant, or else to appear in court, and answer the accusation against him. Whatever the sheriff does in pursuance of this writ, he must return or certify to the court of common pleas, together with the writ itself: which is the foundation of the jurisdiction of that court, being the king's warrant for the judges to proceed to the determination of the cause. For it was a maxim introduced by the Normans, that there should be no proceedings in common pleas before the king's justices without his original writ; because they held it unfit that those justices, being only the substitutes of the crown, should take cognizance of any thing but what was thus expressly referred to their judgment. (Flet. l. 2. c. 34.)

Original writs are either optional or peremptory; or, in the language of our law, they are either a praecipe, or a si te fecerit securum. (Finch. L. 257.) The praecipe is in the alternative, commanding the defendant to do the thing required, or shew the reason wherefore he hath not done it. The use of this writ is where something certain is demanded by the plaintiff, which is in the power of the defendant himself to perform; as, to restore the possession of land, to pay a certain liquidated debt, to perform a specific covenant, to render an account, and the like: in all which cases the writ is drawn up in the form of a praecipe or command, to do thus, or shew cause to the contrary; giving the defendant his choice, to redress the injury or stand the suit. The other species of original writs is called a si fecerit te securum, from the words of the writ; which directs the sheriff to cause the defendant to appear in court, without any option given him, provided the plaintiff gives the sheriff security effectually to prosecute his claim. This writ is in use where nothing is specifically demanded, but only a satisfaction in general; to obtain which, and minister complete redress, the intervention of some judicature is necessary. Such are writs of trespass, or on the case, wherein no debt or other specific thing is sued for in certain, but only damages to be assessed by a jury. For this end the defendant is immediately called upon to appear in court, provided the plaintiff gives good security of prosecuting his claim. Both species of writs are teste'd, or witnessed, in the king's own name; "witness ourself at "Westminster," or wherever the chancery may be held. 3 Black. 274.

The security here spoken of, to be given by the plaintiff for prosecuting his claim, is common to both writs, though it gives denomination only to the latter. The whole of it is at present become a mere matter of form; and John Doe and Richard Roe are always returned as the standing pledges for this purpose. The antient use of them was to answer for the plaintiff; who, in case he brought an action without cause, or failed in the prosecution of it when brought, was liable to an amercement from the crown for raising a false accusation; and so the form of the judgment still is. (Finch. L. 189, 252.)

The day on which the defendant is ordered to appear in court, and on which the sheriff is to bring in the writ, and report how far he has obeyed it, is called the return of the writ; it being then returned by him to the king's justices at Westminster. And it is always made returnable at the distance of at least fifteen days from the date or teste, that the defendant may have time to come up to Westminster, even from the most remote parts of the kingdom, and upon some day in one of the four terms, in which the court sits for the dispatch of business.

ORIGINALIA. In the treasurer's remembrancer's office in the Exchequer, the transcripts, &c. sent thither out of the chancery are called by this name, and distinguished from recorda; which contain the judgments and pleadings in suits tried before the barons. Cowel.

ORPED. Some orped knight, i.e. a knight whose clothes shone with gold. Blount.

ORPHAN, (orphanus) is a fatherless child; and in the city of London there is a court of record established for the care and government of orphans. 4 Inst. 248. See Distributive.

ORTELLI, (Fr.) is a forest word, and signifies the claws of a dog's foot. Kitch. Cowel.

ORYAL, (oriolum) a room, or cloister, in a monastery, priory, &c. whence it is presumed that Oriel or Oryel college in Oxford took name. Matt. Paris, in vit. Abb. St. Alban. Cowel.

OSCULUM PACIS. A custom formerly of the church, that in the celebration of the mass, after the priest had spoke these words, viz. pax domini vobiscum, the people kissed each other, which was called osculum pacis. Cowel.

OSMONDS, a kind of iron ore, anciently brought into England. Stat. 32 H. 8. cap. 14.

OSTENSIO, a tribute paid by merchants for leave to expose their goods for sale in markets.

OSWALD'S LAW, (lex Oswaldi) the law by which was understood the ejecting married priests, and introducing monks into churches, by Oswald bishop of Worcester, about the year 964. Cowel.

OSWALD'S LAW HUNDRED, an ancient hundred in Worcestershire, so called from bishop Oswald who obtained it of king Edgar, to be given to St. Mary's church in Worcester; it is exempt from the jurisdiction of the sheriff, and comprehends 300 hides of land. Camb. Brit.

OTHO, a deacon-cardinal of St. Nicholas, in carcere Tulliano, a legate for the people here in England, 22 H. 3. Cowel. Blount.

OTHOBONUS, a deacon-cardinal of St. Adrian, and the pope's legate here in England, 15 H. 3. His constitutions, together with those of Otho, are (some of them at least) in use at this day, in our ecclesiastical courts. Ibid.

OUCH, a collar of gold, or such like ornament, worn by women about their necks. 24 H. 8. c. 13.

OVER, (Sax. ofer, ripa) in the beginning or ending of the names of places, signifies a situation near the bank of some river; as St. Maryover in Southwark, Andover in Hampshire, &c. Cowel. Blount.

OVERCYTED, (from the Sax. ofer, i.e. super, and cythan, offendere) used where a person was convicted of any crime; that it is found upon the offender. Ibid.

OVERHERNISSA, contumacy, or contempt of court. Ibid.

OVERSAMESSA, an ancient fine before the statute for hue and cry, laid upon those, who, hearing of a murder or robbery, did not pursue the malefactor. 3 Inst. 116.

OVERSEERS OF THE POOR. See Poor.

OVERT, (Fr.) is used for overture, an opening, also a proposal. Law Fr. Dict.

OVERT-ACT, (opertum factum) an open act, capable by law of being manifestly proved. 3 Inst. 12. See Treason.

OVERT MARKET, an open market.

OVERT-WORD, is an open plain word, not to be mistaken. Stat. 1 Mar. Sess. 2, 3.

OVRES, (Fr.) acts, deeds, or works: and ovrages, or ouvrages, are days works. 8 Rep. 131.

OURLOP, the leirwite or fine paid to the lord by the inferior tenant, when his daughter was corrupted or debauched. Cowel.

OUSTED, (from the Fr. ouster, to put out) one removed or put out of possession. 3 Cro. 349.

OUSTER LE MAIN, (amovere manum) a livery of land out of the king's hand, or a judgment given in chancery, for him that sued a monstrans de droit; that the king's hands be amoved, whereupon an amoveas manum was awarded to the escheator, to restore the land. Staundf. Prærog. cap. 24. 28 Ed. 1. cap. 19. F.N.B. 256. 25 Hen. 8. cap. 22. But ouster le mains, &c. are taken away by stat. 12 Car. 2. cap. 24.

OUSTER LE MER, (oultre, i.e. ultra, & le mer, mere) beyond the seas. Cowel. Blount.

OUTFANGTHEF, (from the Sax. ut, i. e. extra, fang, captus, and theof, fur) a liberty or privilege, used in the ancient common law, whereby a lord was enabled to call any man dwelling in his manor, and taken for felony in another place out of his fee, to judgment in his own court. Rastal. Cowel. Blount.

OUTHEST, the same as outhorn; which was a calling men out to the army, by the sound of an horn. Ibid.

OUT-HOUSES, are those belonging and adjoining to dwelling houses. See Felony.

OUTLAND. The Saxon Thanes divided their hereditary lands into inland, such as lay nearest their dwelling, which they kept to their own use; and outland, which lay beyond the demeans, and was granted out to tenants, at the will of the lord, like copyhold estates. Spelm. de Feud. cap. 5.

OUTLAW, Sax. utlaghe, Lat. utlagatus, one deprived of the benefit of the law, and out of the king's protection. Fleta, lib. 1. cap. 47. 1 Inst. 128. But a woman cannot be an outlaw, because women are not sworn to the king as men are, to be ever within law; therefore they are said to be waived, as not regarded but forsaken of the law. F. N. B. 160. Co. Lit. 122.

OUTLAWRY, (utlagaria), is a punishment inflicted for a contempt, in refusing to be amenable to the justice of that court which hath authority to call him before them; and as this is a crime of the highest nature, being an act of rebellion against that state or community of which he is a member, so it subjects the party to forfeitures and disabilities; for he loseth his liberam legem, is out of the king's protection, &c. Co. Lit. 128. Dyct. and Stud. dial. 2. cap. 3. 1 Roll. Abr. 802.

But as to forfeitures for refusing to appear, the law distinguishes between outlawries in CAPITAL cases, and those of an inferior nature; for as to outlawries in treason and felony, the law interprets the party's absence a sufficient evidence of his guilt, and without requiring further proof, accounts him guilty of the fact, on which ensues corruption of blood, and forfeiture of his estate, real and personal. Co. Lit. 128. 3 Inst. 161.

But outlawry in PERSONAL ACTIONS does not occasion the party to be looked on as guilty of the fact, nor does it occasion an entire forfeiture of his real estate, yet it is very fatal and penal in its consequences; for hereby he is restrained of his liberty, if he can be found, forfeits his goods and chattels, and the profits of his lands, while the outlawry remains in force. Plow. 541. 9 H. 6, 20. b. Show. Parl. Ca. 73.

Anciently outlawry was looked upon as so horrid a crime, that any one might as lawfully kill a person outlawed as he might a wolf, or other noxious animal; but now no man is intitled to kill an outlaw wantonly or wilfully; but in so doing is guilty of murder, (1 Hal. P.C. 497.) unless it happens in the endeavour to apprehend him. Bracton, fol. 125.

Also from the heinousness of the offence the sheriff may, on a capias utlagatum, break open the house of the person outlawed; for it would be unreasonable, that the protection allowed in other cases, should extend to him who is declared a contemner and violater of the law; therefore the seizing him as an outlaw, implies the liberty of entering and seizing him wherever he lies hid. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 202. 9 Co. 91. 1 Buls. 146. Cro. Eliz. 908. Moor 606, 668. Yelv. 28. Cro. Car. 537. 4 Leon. 41. 2 Jon. 253.

An outlawry in PERSONAL ACTIONS may be reversed by the defendant's appearing personally in court; and in the King's Bench without any personal appearance; so that he appears by attorney, according to the STAT. 4 and 5 W. & M. c. 18. by which it is enacted, that "no person who shall be outlawed in the "court of B. R. for any cause whatsoever,

" (treason and felony only excepted) shall be " compelled to appear in person in the said " court to reverse such outlawry, but may " appear by attorney and reverse the same " without bail in all cases, (except where " special bail shall be ordered by the said " court.)"

And any plausible cause, however slight, will in general be sufficient to reverse, it being considered only as a process to compel an appearance: but then the defendant must pay full costs, and put the plaintiff in the same condition as if he had appeared before the writ of exigi facias awarded. 3 Black. 284.

After an outlawry of treason or felony is reversed, the party shall be put to plead to the indictment, for that still remains good, and he may be tried at the King's Bench bar; or the record may be remitted into the country, if it were removed into the King's Bench by certiorari, with a command to the justices below, to proceed by the statute of 6 Hen. 6. cap. 1. Cro. Jac. 646. Cro. Car. 365. 3 Mod. 42. 6 Mod. 115. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 209.

So if a man be outlawed by process in an information, and comes in and reverses the outlawry, he must plead instanter to the information. 1 Salk. 371. Rex v. Hill, 5 Mod. 141. S. P.

A person shall, after outlawry reversed, be restored to his law, and be of ability to sue. Co. Litt. 288. b.

OUTPARTERS, (mentioned in stat. 9 H. 5. st. 1. c. 7.) A kind of thieves in Riddesdale, that stole cattle or other things without that liberty. Cowel.

OUTRIDERS, bailiffs errant anciently employed by the sheriffs, or their deputies, to ride to the farthest place of their counties or hundreds, with the more speed to summon such as they thought good to their county or hundred courts. 14 E. 3. st. 1. c. 9.

OWEL, (L. Fr.) signifieth equal. Cowel. Blount.

OWELTY, (Owelty of services) was where there was lord, mesne, and tenant, and the tenant held of the mesne by the same service that the mesne holds over of the lord above him. F. N. B. 136. And owelty is equality of services. Co. Litt. 169.

OWLERS, persons that carry wool to the sea side by night, in order to be shipped off contrary to law, prohibited by 28 Geo. 3. c. 38.

OWLING, is an offence so called from its being usually carried on in the night, and is the offence of transporting wool or sheep out of this kingdom, to the detriment of its staple manufacture. See 28 Geo. 3. c. 38.

OXFILD, a restitution made by a hundred or county, of any wrong done by one that was within the same. Lamb. Archaion. 125.

OXGANG, (from ox, i. e. bos, and gang, or gate, iter) commonly taken for fifteen acres of land, or as much as one ox can plough in a year.

OYER, anciently used for what we now call assises. Anno 13 Ed. 1.

OYER OF A DEED, where a man brings an action of debt upon a bond, deed, or other written testament, and defendant may pray that he may hear the bond, &c. wherewith he is charged read to him, which shall be allowed him. 2 Lil. Abr. 266.

For defendants in the times of ancient simplicity were supposed incapable to read it themselves. And therefore on craving oyer, the whole is entered verbatim upon the record, and the defendant may take advantage of any condition or other part of it, not stated in the plaintiff's declaration. 3 Black. 299.

OYER DE RECORD, (audire recordum) is a petition made in court, that the judges, for better proof-sake, will hear or look upon any record. 2 Lutw. 1641. Doct. Plac. 270, 2.

Thus if the defendant pleads another action depending for the same cause, in the same court, the plaintiff may pray oyer of the record, being in the same court; and if there is no oyer of the record, the plaintiff may sign judgment by default, the plea being as no plea. Ld. Raym. 347. Keilw. 95, 96. Carth. 453. 3 Salk. 119.

OYER AND TERMINER, (Fr. Ouir & Terminer, Lat. Audiendo & Terminando) a commission directed to the judges, and other gentlemen of the county to which it is issued, by virtue whereof they have power to hear and determine treasons, and all manner of felonies and trespasses. Cromp. Jurisd. 121. 2 Inst. 419. 4 Inst. 152. It is the first and largest of the five commissions, by which our judges of assise sit in their several circuits: and is general, for trying all offenders and offences, or special, to try only particular persons, or offences: when any sudden insurrection, or trespass is committed, which requires speedy reformation, in which case a special commission is immediately granted. 4 Inst. 162. Westm. 2. 13 Ed. 1. c. 29. F. N. B. 110.

O YES, (from the Fr. oyez, i. e. Audite, hear ye) is the usual proclamation to enjoin silence and attention.

OYSTER-FISHERY, See Fishery.

OZE, or oozy ground, (Solum uliginosum) moist, wet, and marshy land. Lit. Dict.

PACARE, to pay, as tolnetum pacare is to pay toll. Ibid.

PACE, (passus) a step in going, containing two feet and an half, the distance from the heel of the hinder foot to the toe of the fore foot; and there is a pace of five feet, which contains two steps, a thousand whereof make a mile; but this is called passus major. Ibid.

PACEATUR. Leg. Inæ, cap. 45: Let him be free, or discharged, for the time to come. Ibid.

PACIFICATION, (pacificatio) a peace-making, quieting, or appeasing; relating to war. Ibid.

PACK OF WOOL, a horse-load, of 17 stone and two pounds, or 240 pounds weight. Merch. Dict. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 12. Cowel.

PACKAGE, ancient rates payable to the corporation of London and other places, for all goods and merchandises packed, casked, piped, barrelled, or any wise repelled, in order to be transported to parts beyond the seas, although the mayor and commonalty, or their officers, do not pack the said goods when they are ready, and upon reasonable request and proper notice given. See 43 Geo. 3, c. 68, s. 1.

PACKING WHITES, an ancient kind of cloth so called. See 1 Ric. 3, c. 8.

PACT (Fr.) a contract or agreement. Cowel.

PAGUS, used in ancient records, and meaning a county.

PAIN (or PEINE) FORT ET DURE, (Lat. pœna fortis & dura, Fr. peine forte et dure) a special punishment, formerly inflicted on those, who being arraigned of felony refused to put themselves on the ordinary trial, but stubbornly stood mute. It was vulgarly called pressing to death. Stat. West. 1, c. 12. See Mute.

PAINS AND PENALTIES. Acts of parliament to attaint particular persons of treason or felony, or to inflict pains and penalties beyond or contrary to the common law, to serve a special purpose, are new laws, made pro re nata, and by no means an execution of such as are already in being. 3 Black. 256.

Thus in the 9 Geo. 1, pains and penalties were inflicted on the bishop of Rochester, Kelly, and others, for being concerned in Layer's conspiracy, and these were condemned by parliament for want of such evidence as is strictly required in the common law courts. 9 Geo. 1, c. 16, 17.

PAIS, a county; thus a trial in pais is a trial by the county, i. e. by a jury, and not per recordum.

PAISSO, pasnage, or liberty for hogs to run in forests or woods to feed on mast. Mon. Angl. tom. 1. p. 682. See Pasture.

PALACE COURT. See Mar-shalsea.

PALAGIUM, a duty anciently paid to lords of manors for exporting and importing vessels of wine in any of their ports. Cowel.

PALATINE. CHESTER, DURHAM, and LANCASTER, are called counties palatine. The two former are such by prescription, or immemorial custom; or at least as old as the Norman conquest (Seld. tit. hon. 2. 5. 8.): the latter was created by king Edw. 3, in favour of Henry Plantagenet, first earl and then duke of Lancaster; (Pat. 25 Edw. 3, p. 1. m. 18. Seld. ibid. Sandford's Gen. Hist. 112. 4 Inst. 204.) whose heiress being married to John of Gant the king's son, the franchise was greatly enlarged and confirmed in parliament, (Cart. 36 Edw. 3, n. 9.) to honour John of Gant himself, whom, on the death of his father-in-law, the king had also created duke of Lancaster. (Pat. 51 Edw. 3, m. 33. Plowd. 215. 7 Rym. 138.) Counties palatine are so called a palatio, because the owners thereof, the earl of Chester, the bishop of Durham, and the duke of Lancaster, had in those counties jura regalia, as fully as the king hath in his palace; regalem potestatem in omnibus, as Bracton expresses it (l. 3. c. 8, § 4.). They might pardon treasons, murders, and felonies; they appointed all judges and justices of the peace; all writs and indictments ran in their names as in other counties in the king's; and all offences were said to be done against their peace, and not, as in other places, contra pacem domini regis. (4 Inst. 204.) And indeed by the ancient law, in all peculiar jurisdictions, offences were said to be done against his peace in whose court they were tried: in a court-leet, contra pacem domini; in the court of a corporation, contra pacem ballivorum; in the sheriff's court or tourn, contra pacem vice-comitis. (Seld. in Heng. magn. c. 2.) These palatine privileges (so similar to the regal independent jurisdictions usurped by the great barons on the continent, during the weak and infant state of the first feudal kingdoms in Europe) were in all probability originally granted to the counties of Chester and Durham, because they bordered upon inimical countries, Wales and Scotland: in order that the inhabitants, having justice administered at home, might not be obliged to go out of the county, and leave it open to the enemy's incursions; and that the owners, being encouraged by so large an authority, might be the more watchful in its defence. And upon this account also there were formerly two other counties palatine, Pembrokeshire and Hexhamshire; the latter now united with Northumberland; but these were abolished by parliament, the former in 27 Hen. 8, the latter in 14 Eliz. And in 27 Hen. 8, likewise, the powers before mentioned of owners of counties palatine were abridged; the reason for their continuance in a manner ceasing, though still all writs are witnessed in their names, and all forfeitures for treason by the common law accrue to them. 4 Inst. 205.

Of these three, the county of Durham is now the only one remaining in the hands of a subject. For the earldom of Chester, as Camden testifies, was united to the crown by Henry 3, and has ever since given title to the king's eldest son. And the county palatine, or duchy, of Lancaster, was the property of Henry Bolingbroke, the son of John of Gant, at the time when he wrested the crown from king Richard 2, and assumed the title of king Henry 4. But he was too prudent to suffer this to be united to the crown; lest if he lost one, he should lose the other also. For, as Plowden (215.) and sir Edw. Coke (4 Inst. 205.) observe, "he knew he had the duchy of "Lancaster by sure and indefeasible title, "but that his title to the crown was not so "assured: for that after the decease of "Richard 2, the right of the crown was in "the heir of Lionel duke of Clarence, second "son of Edward 3; John of Gant, father to "this Henry 4, being but the fourth son." And therefore he procured an act of parliament, in the first year of his reign, ordaining that the duchy of Lancaster, and all other his hereditary estates, with all their royalties and franchises, should remain to him and his heirs for ever, and should remain, descend, be administered and governed in like manner as if he never had attained the regal dignity: and thus they descended to his son and grandson, Henry 5, and Henry 6, many new territories and privileges being annexed to the duchy by the former. (Parl. 2 Hen. 5, n. 30. 3 Hen. 5, n. 15.) Henry 6 being attainted in 1 Edw. 4, this duchy was declared in parliament to have become forfeited to the crown (1 Vent. 155.), and at the same time an act was made to incorporate the duchy of Lancaster, to continue the county palatine (which might otherwise have determined by the attainder) and to make the same parcel of the duchy: and further, to vest the whole in king Edw. 4, and his heirs, kings of England, for ever; but under a separate guiding and governance from the other inheritances of the crown. And in 1 Hen. 7, another act was made, to resume such part of the duchy lands as had been dismembered from it in the reign of Ed. 4, and to vest the inheritance of the whole in the king and his heirs for ever, as amply and largely, and in like manner, form, and condition, separate from the crown of England and possession of the same, as the three Henries and Ed. 4, or any of them, had and held the same. (1 Black. 118.)But the isle of Ely is not a county palatine, though sometimes erroneously called so, but only a royal franchise; the bishop having by grant of king Hen. 1, jura regalia, within the isle of Ely, whereby he exercises a jurisdiction over all causes, as well criminal as civil. 4 Inst. 220. 1 Black. 119.

PALFREY, (palfredus, palafredus, palefredus, palifredus,) one of the better sort of horses used by noblemen or others for state. See Co. on Lit. 149. Cowel.

PALINGMAN, (mentioned in stat. 22 Ed. 4, c. 23, and 11 Hen. 7, c. 23,) a merchant denizen, one born within the English pale. Cowel.

PALIA, a canopy; also an altar-cloth. Cowel. Blount.

PALLIO COOPERIRE. It was anciently a custom where children were born out of wedlock, and their parents afterwards intermarried, that those children, together with the father and mother, stood under a cloth extended while the marriage was solemnizing, which was in the nature of adoption; and by such custom the children were taken to be legitimate: but such children were never legitimate in this country at common law, though the clergy wanted to have a law pass to render them legitimate. Cowel.

PALLIUM, an ancient garment made of white wool. Cowel.

PALLS, the pontifical vesture made of lambs-wool, in breadth not exceeding three fingers, cut round that they might cover the shoulders, given or sent by the Pope to archbishops and metropolitans, and upon extraordinary occasions to other bishops. Cowel.

PANNUS, a garment made with skins. Cowel.

PAPER. See Manufactures.

PAPER BOOKS, are issues at law, &c. upon special pleadings, which paper books are to be delivered to the judges with the names of the counsellors who signed those pleas. 2 Lill. Abr. 268.

PAPER-OFFICE, is an ancient office within the palace of Whitehall, wherein all the public papers, writings, matters of state and council, letters, intelligences, negotiations of the king's ministers abroad, and generally all the papers and dispatches that pass through the offices of the two principal secretaries of state, are lodged and transmitted, and there remain disposed in the way of library. Cowel.

PAPISTS, are those who profess the popish religion in this kingdom: and since the Reformation there have been many statutes concerning them. Thus

By 3 Car. 1, c. 3, in case any person under the obedience of the king shall go or send any child, or other person, beyond the seas, to the intent to be trained up in any abbey, popish university, or school, or house of Jesuits, or in any private popish family, and shall be there by any popish person instructed in the popish religion, to profess the same, or shall send any money or other thing under the name of alms, towards the relief of any abbey or religious house, every person so sending, and every person sent, being convicted upon any information or indictment, shall be disabled to sue any action in law, or suit in equity, or to be committee of any ward, or executor or administrator to any person, or capable of any legacy, or deed of gift, or to bear any office, and shall forfeit all his goods and chattels, and all his lands during life. s. 1.

No person sent as aforesaid, that shall within six months after his return conform to the church of England, and receive the sacrament, shall incur the penalties. s. 2.

Offences against this statute may be inquired, heard and determined, before the justices of the King's Bench, or justices of assise, or gaol delivery, or of oyer and terminer, of such counties where the offenders did last dwell, or whence they departed out of this kingdom, or where they were taken. s. 5

If any person so sent shall after his return conform to the church of England, and receive the sacrament, he shall have his lands restored. s. 4.

By 30 Car. 2, st. 2, no peer shall vote or make his proxy in the house of peers, or sit there during any debate; nor shall any member of the house of commons vote in the house, or sit there during any debate, after their speaker is chosen; until such peer or member shall first take the oaths of allegiance and supremacy, and subscribe and repeat this declaration following:

"I A. B. do solemnly and sincerely, in "the presence of God, profess, testify and "declare, that I do believe, that in the sa- "crament of the Lord's supper there is not "any transubstantiation of the elements of "bread and wine into the body and blood of "Christ at or after the consecration thereof "by any person whatsoever, and that the "invocation or adoration of the Virgin "Mary, or any other saint, and the sacri- "fice of the mass, as they are now used "in the church of Rome, are superstitious "and idolatrous. And I do solemnly, in "the presence of God, profess, testify and "declare, that I do make this declaration, "and every part thereof, in the plain and "ordinary sense of the words read unto me, "as they are commonly understood by Eng- "lish protestants, without any evasion, "equivocation, or mental reservation what- "soever, and without any dispensation al- "ready granted me for this purpose by the "pope, or any other authority or person "whatsoever, or without any hope of any "such dispensation from any person or au- "thority whatsoever, or without thinking that "I am or can be, acquitted before God or "man, or absolved of this declaration, or any "part thereof, although the pope, or any "other person or persons, or power what- "soever, should dispense with or annul the "same, or declare that it was null and void "from the beginning."

Which oaths and declaration shall be made betwixt nine in the morning and four in the afternoon, by every such peer, at the table in the middle of the house, and while a full house of peers is there with the speaker in his place; and by every member of the house of commons at the table in the middle of the house, and while a full house of commons is there sitting with their speaker in his chair; and the same shall be done in either house in like order, as each house is called over. s. 2.

Every peer of this realm and of the kingdom of Scotland, or of Ireland, being of the age of 21 years, not having taken the said oaths, and made the declaration, and every member of the house of commons, not having taken the oaths, and made the declaration, and every person convicted of popish recusancy, who shall come advisedly into or remain in the presence of the king or queen, or shall come into the house where they reside, shall incur the penalties in this act, unless such peer, member, or person convicted, do in the next term take the oaths and make the declaration in chancery between nine and twelve in the forenoon. s. 3.

If any peer of this realm, or member of the house of commons, shall offend in any of the cases aforesaid, such peer and member shall be adjudged a popish recusant convict, and shall be disabled to hold any office or place of profit or trust, civil or military, in England or Ireland, Wales or Berwick, or in any of his majesty's islands or plantations, and shall be disabled to sit or vote in parliament, or make a proxy in the house of peers, or to sue in law or equity, or to be guardian of any child, or executor or administrator of any person, or capable of any legacy, or deed of gift, and shall forfeit for every wilful offence 500*l.* to be recovered by him that shall sue for the same in any of his majesty's courts at Westminster. s. 4.

It shall be lawful for the house of peers and house of commons to order the members to take the oaths, and make the declaration; and if any peer shall, contrary to such order, presume to sit without taking the oaths, &c. such peer shall be disabled to sit in the house, and give any voice by proxy or otherwise, during that parliament. And if any member of the house of commons shall, contrary to such order, presume to sit without taking the oaths, &c. such member shall be disabled to sit in the house of commons, or give any voice during that parliament. s. 5.

Where any member of the house of commons shall by this act be disabled to sit or vote, a new writ shall issue by warrant from the speaker, for the election of a new member to serve in the place of such member so disabled. s. 6.

During the time of taking the said oaths, &c. all other matters in the said houses of parliament shall cease; and the oaths, declaration and subscription, with a schedule of the names of the persons who shall by this act take the same, shall be filed in parchment rolls by the clerk of the house of lords, and the clerk of the house of commons; and none of the peers or members shall pay to any such clerk above 12*d.* for the entry of his taking the oaths, which rolls the clerks are without fee to show to any person desiring the same. s. 9.

This act shall not prejudice any person for coming into the presence of the king or queen, who have a licence so to do by warrant of six privy counsellors, by order of council, upon urgent occasion therein to be expressed; so as such licence exceed not ten days, and be first filed in the petty bag for any body to view without fee; and no person to be licenced for above thirty days in one year. s. 10.

If any offender, contrary to this act, shall take the oaths, &c. in chancery, such person shall be discharged of all penalties of this act, so as such discharge extend not to restore such person to any office, nor to any other office, till after one year, nor to discharge the forfeiture of 500*l.* s. 11.

By 1 Will. & Mar. st. 1, c. 9, it is required that the lord mayor of London, and every justice of peace of London and Westminster, and Southwark, and of Middlesex, Surry, Kent, and Sussex, [Essex by 1 Will. & Mar. c. 17,] cause to be arrested and brought before him every person (not being a merchant foreigner within the said cities, or ten miles of the same) reputed to be a papist, and tender him the declaration in 30 Car. 2, st. 2, and in case such person refuse to make the declaration, and shall after such refusal continue within the said cities, or ten miles distance from the same, he shall suffer as a popish recusant convict. s. 2.

Every justice of peace shall certify every subscription before him taken, and the name of every person refusing, into the King's Bench, the next term, or at the next quarter session; and if the person so refusing, and certified, shall not within the next term or sessions appear in the King's Bench or sessions, where such certificate shall be returned, and make the declaration, and indorse his so doing upon the certificate, he shall be adjudged a popish recusant convict. s. 3.

Nothing in this act shall relate to any foreigner that shall be menial servant to any ambassador or public agent. s. 5.

By 1 Will. & Mar. c. 15, it shall be lawful for any two justices of peace to tender to any person known or suspected to be a papist, the declaration in 30 Car. 2, st. 2, and if such person shall not make the said declaration, or shall forbear to appear before the justices, upon notice to him given or left at his place of abode, by any person authorized by warrant of the two justices, such person shall be subject to the penalties in this act. s. 2.

The justices shall certify the name and place of abode of every person who shall refuse to make the declaration, or to appear before them, as also of every person who shall make the declaration, at the next quarter-sessions to be recorded. s. 3.

No papist or reputed papist refusing or making default, as aforesaid, shall have any arms, gunpowder, or ammunition, other than such necessary weapons as shall be allowed him by order of the quarter-sessions for the defence of his house or person. And any two justices by warrant may authorize any persons in the day time, with the constable, tithingman or headborough, to search for arms and ammunition which shall be in the custody of any such papist or reputed papist, and seize the same for the use of their majesties, which justices shall at the next quarter-sessions deliver the arms and ammunition in open court. s. 4.

Every papist or reputed papist, who shall not within ten days after such refusal or default as aforesaid deliver to some of the justices of peace all arms or ammunition, which he shall have, or shall hinder any person authorized by two justices to search for and seize the same, such person shall be committed to gaol by warrant of two justices, for three months; and shall also forfeit the arms, and treble the value of them, to their majesties, to be appraised by the justices at the next quarter-sessions. s. 5.

Every person who shall be privy to the concealing the arms or ammunition of any person so refusing or making default, or shall hinder any person authorized in searching for and seizing the same, shall be committed to gaol by two justices for three months, and forfeit treble the value of the arms to their majesties. s. 6.

If any person shall discover any concealed arms, &c. belonging to any refusing or making default as aforesaid, so as the same may be seized, the justices upon delivery of the same at the quarter-sessions shall by order of sessions allow him a sum of money amounting to the value of the arms, &c. to be assessed by the sessions, and levied by distress and sale of the goods of the person offending. s. 7.

If any person, who shall have refused or made default as aforesaid, shall desire to submit, and present himself before the justices at the quarter-sessions, and shall in open court make the declaration, and take the oaths in 1 Will. & Mar. st. 1, c. 1, viz. of allegiance and supremacy, he shall be discharged of all disabilities and forfeitures. s. 8.

No papist, or reputed papist, refusing or making default as aforesaid, shall have any horse above the value of 5*l.* and any two justices of the peace by warrant may authorize any person, with the assistance of the constable, tithingman, or headborough, to search for and seize for the use of their majesties all such horses, which are declared to be forfeited. s. 9.

If any person shall be assisting in the concealing any such horse belonging to any papist, or reputed so, refusing or making default as aforesaid, such person shall be committed to prison as aforesaid for three months, and shall forfeit to their majesties treble the value of such horses, to be settled as aforesaid. s. 10.

By 1 Will & Mar. c. 17, the powers by 1 Will. & Mar. st. 1, c. 9, given to the justices of peace of Sussex are declared to extend to the justices of peace of the county of Essex. s. 2.

By 1 Will. & Mar. c. 26, every person who shall refuse to make the declaration mentioned in 1 Will. & Mar. st. 1. c. 15, or shall refuse to appear for the making thereof, and shall thereupon have his name certified and recorded at the quarter-sessions, shall be disabled to make presentation, donation, or grant of avoidance, of any ecclesiastical living, as fully as if he were a popish recusant convict [See Recusants]; and the chancellor and scholars of the university of Oxford and of Cambridge shall have the presentation in the respective limits in the act 3 Jac. 1, c. 5, s. 2.

Where any persons are seised or possessed of any advowson of any ecclesiastical living, free school, or hospital, in trust for any papist or popish recusant, such persons shall be disabled to present, or to grant any avoidance; and the respective universities shall have the presentations; and in case any trustee or mortgagee, or grantee of anyavoidance, present any person to such ecclesiastical living, &c. without giving notice of the avoidance in writing to the vice-chancellor of the university, to whom the presentation shall belong, within three months after the avoidance, he shall forfeit 500*l.* to the respective universities, to be recovered in any of their majesties courts of record. s. 3 & 4.

The universities shall not present to any ecclesiastical living any person as shall then have any other benefice with cure; and if any such presentation shall be, the same shall be void. s. 5.

If any person so presented to any benefice with cure shall be absent above sixty days in one year, the benefice shall become void. s. 6.

If any such person shall present himself before the justices at the quarter-sessions where his name was recorded, and make the declaration, and take the oaths of supremacy and allegiance, he shall be discharged of the disability. s. 7.

By 11 & 12 Will. 3, c. 4, the 100*l.* mentioned in 3 Jac. 1. c. 5, [See Recusants,] shall be to the sole use of him who shall discover and convict any person so offending. s. 6.

If any parent, in order to the compelling his protestant child to change his religion, shall refuse to allow such child a fitting maintenance, upon complaint, it shall be lawful for the lord chancellor to make such order therein as shall be agreeable to this act. s. 7.

By 12 Ann. st. 2, c. 14, every papist, or person making profession of the popish religion, and every child, not being a protestant, under the age of 21 years, of every such papist, &c. and every mortgagee, or trustee for any papist, &c. or such child, shall be disabled to present to any ecclesiastical living, school, hospital, or donative, or to grant any avoidance; and every such presentation and grant, and every admission, institution, and induction thereupon, shall be void; and the universities of Oxford and of Cambridge shall respectively have the presentation in the respective limits in the act 3 Jac. 1, c. 5, s. 1.

When any presentation shall be brought to any ordinary from any person who shall be reputed to be, or whom such ordinary shall have cause to suspect to be, a papist, or trustee of any person making profession of the popish religion, it shall be lawful for such ordinary to tender to such person, if present, the declaration against transubstantiation in 25 Car. 2, c. 2, "Recusants;" and in case such person be absent, the ordinary shall, by notice in writing to be left, at the place of habitation of such person, appoint when and where such person shall appear before such ordinary, or persons authorized under his seal of office; and upon appearance, the ordinary shall tender the declaration to the person making such presentation; and in case such person refuse to make such declaration, or to appear, such presentation shall be void; and such ordinary shall within ten days send a certificate under his seal of office of such neglect or refusal to the vice-chancellor of that university to whom such presentation would belong; and it shall be lawful for such university to present. s. 2.

When the presentation shall be brought to any ordinary, he is required, before he give institution, to examine the person presented, upon oath, whether to the best of his knowledge and belief, the person who made such presentation be the true patron, or be not trustee for papists, or the children of such, or any other person; and if such person presented shall not answer directly, such presentation shall be void. s. 3.

It shall be lawful for the respective universities to whom the presentation should belong, and their clerks, to exhibit their bill in equity against such persons presenting, and such as they have reason to believe to be the cestui que trust, or any other who they have cause to suspect may be able to make any discovery of secret trusts, to which bill the defendants shall answer; and in case they neglect to answer, the bill shall be taken pro confesso; provided that every person having fully answered, and not knowing of any such trust for a papist, or other person disabled, shall be entitled to his costs to be taxed. s. 4.

It shall be lawful for the court where any quare impedit shall be depending, at the instance of either of the universities, by motion, to make any rule, requiring satisfaction upon the oath of such patron and his clerk who shall contest the right of the university, by examination in court, or by commission, or by affidavit, as the court shall find proper; and in case it shall appear that the patron is but a trustee for other persons, then the patron and his clerk shall discover who such persons are, and where they live, and upon their refusal to make such discovery they shall be punished as persons guilty of a contempt; and in case such patron or his clerk shall discover the person for whom the patron is a trustee, the court, upon motion, shall make a rule, that the person for whom the patron is a trustee shall, in court, or before commissioners, make the declaration against transubstantiation, and likewise give such further satisfaction upon oath touching the trust, as the court shall think fit; and such person required to make the declaration, and neglecting so to do, shall be esteemed a popish recusant convict in respect of such presentation. s. 5.

The answer of such patrons, and the person for whom they are intrusted, and their clerk, and their examinations and affidavits taken by order of court, or by any ordinary, or the commissioners, as aforesaid (which examinations shall be reduced into writing, and signed by the party examined), shall be evidence against such patron and his clerk. s. 6.

Provided that no such bill, nor any discovery to be made by any answer thereto, or to any examination as aforesaid, shall be made use of to subject any person making such discovery, or not answering such bill, to any penalty other than the loss of the presentation. s. 7.

In case of any such bill of discovery exhibited by either of the universities, or their presentee, no lapse shall incur, nor plenarty be a bar, till after three months from the time that the answer shall be put in, or the bill be taken pro confesso, or the prosecution deserted, provided such bill be exhibited before any lapse incurred. s. 8.

The universities are entitled to sue any writ of quare impedit, by the name of chancellor and scholars of the universities of Oxford and Cambridge respectively, or by their proper names of incorporation, at their election. s. 9.

In case of any trust for a papist discovered by answer to such bill, or such examination as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the court to enforce the producing of the deeds relating to the trusts. s. 10.

Nothing herein before shall extend to Scotland. s. 11. See Scotland.

By 1 Geo. 1, c. 55, all persons having any estate in lands in England, Wales, or Berwick, who shall be a popish recusant, or papist, or educated in the popish religion, or whose parent shall be a papist, shall within six months after they attain the age of 21 years, take the oaths appointed by 1 Geo. 1, c. 13, and repeat the declaration in 30 Car. 2, st. 2, in the chancery, common pleas, king's bench, or exchequer, or at the quarter-sessions, where such lands, &c. lie, between nine and twelve in the forenoon: or shall within six months after they shall come into the possession of the profits of any lands, &c. register their names and lands, and who are the possessors thereof, and what interest they have in the same, and the yearly rent reserved, if the same are let, and if upon lease, by whom such lease was made, and what fine was paid for such lease, in a parchment roll, to be kept by the clerk of the peace; and every person whose name and estate ought to be registered, is to take care that his name be subscribed to such registry in the presence of two justices of peace in open sessions, or by his lawful attorney authorised under hand and seal; two of the witnesses to which letter of attorney shall make proof of such execution on oath at the quarter-sessions, and two of the justices shall subscribe their names to such entry, and in default thereof each of the justices present shall forfeit 20*l.* to the king. And the clerks of the peace are to keep rolls, and register the names of all who shall come to be registered, or who shall send any writing to such clerk desiring him to register their names; and shall also register the estate of such persons, provided they pay the fees appointed, and apply to enter such registry ten days before the sessions where the entries are to be subscribed; which books, &c. they shall carry to the quarter-sessions, that all those whose names shall be registered, or their attornies, may come to the quarter-sessions, and subscribe the names of the persons registered; and such clerk, &c. shall also keep alphabetical tables of their names, and of the places where the lands lie, and shall keep all such warrants of attorney on a file, and enter such warrants on record, and shall have for such registering and entry 3*d.* for every 200 words, and 4*d.* for every search; and such clerk is to give copies of such registers subscribed to every person desiring the same, and tendering the fees; and shall suffer such persons to examine the same with the rolls, and shall take 3*d.* for every 200 words in such copy; and if any clerk of the peace shall neglect to do any thing hereby appointed, and be convicted, he shall forfeit his office. And if any person required to take the oaths, &c. or register his name and estate, shall neither take the said oaths &c. nor register he shall forfeit the inheritance of all such lands, &c. not registered, or fraudulently registered, of which he, or any in trust for him, was seised at the time of such default, and the full value of the inheritance of all such lands where of he was not seised in fee-simple; two thirds to the king, and the other to such person, being a protestant, as will sue for the same in any the courts at Westminster, or in chancery. And the person suing in chancery shall be entitled to such discoveries as if he were a purchaser of the estate sued for, to which bill the defendant shall answer; and the person suing for such real estate may bring an ejectment upon his own demise; and if it shall appear on trial that the estate sued for is the estate of the person neglecting to register, and the defendant shall not make it appear that he took the oaths, and repeated the declaration, or that he registered his name and the estate sued for, a verdict shall be for the lessor of the plaintiff, and the lessor of the plaintiff shall have costs; and by such judgment two third parts of the lands recovered shall be vested in the king, and the other third in the lessor of the plaintiff. s. 1.

In case such person making default, or committing fraud in registering, shall before suit brought, for a valuable consideration convey or encumber any such lands, &c. the person so purchasing, &c. not knowing the offender to be within this act, shall not be prejudiced; but the offender shall forfeit the value of the lands, &c. s. 3.

This act shall not compel any person to register, &c. till he or his trustees have been seised, and have notice thereof, or possessed, or in receipt of the rents, for six months. s. 4.

Nor shall it compel any person to register lands, &c. whereof he shall be only farmer at a rack-rent, or which he shall hold by lease, whereon two thirds of the yearly value are reserved. s. 5.

Nor shall it prejudice any protestant or other creditor who hath any charge on any real estate, but the person making default shall forfeit the value of such charge; one third to the person who will sue, the other two thirds to the crown. s. 6.

By 3 Geo. 1, c. 18, no suit for any forfeiture contained in the foregoing act for refusing to register, or for any fraud in such registry shall be commenced after two years after the offence committed. s. 2.

Where any lands or entire farms lie in more counties than one, the registering in the county where the mansion-house doth lie, taking notice that the same extend to such other county, shall be a sufficient register. s. 3.

No sale for a full consideration by reputed owners, or persons in possession of the rents and profits to be made only for the benefit of protestants, shall be avoided for any of the disabilities in 11 & 12 Will. 3, c. 4, or in 1 Jac. 1, c. 4, [See Recusants], or other acts made against papists, unless the person entitled to take advantage of such disability shall have recovered, &c. or given notice of his claim to such purchaser, or before the contract for such sale shall have claimed by reason of such disability, and have entered his claim at the sessions of the peace, and with due diligence pursued his remedy. s. 4.

The clause in 11 & 12 W. 3, c. 4, by which papists are disabled from purchasing, shall not be hereby altered. s. 5.

No manors, lands, tenements, hereditaments, or interest therein, or rent or profit thereof, shall pass from any papist by any deed or will, except such deed within six months after date, and such will within six months after the testator's death, be inrolled in one of the courts of record at Westminster, or in the county where such manors, &c. lie, by the custos rotulorum and two justices and the clerks of the peace, or two of them, whereof the clerk of the peace to be one. s. 6. And by 21 Geo. 3. c. 51, the deputy clerk of the peace shall have the like power as the clerk of the peace.

By 11 Geo. 2, c. 17, every person, being reputed owner, or in possession of, any lands or hereditaments, who having been a papist, or educated in the popish religion, hath conformed, or shall conform to and profess the protestant religion, and take the oaths of allegiance, supremacy and abjuration, and subscribe the declaration in 30 Car. 2, st. 2, (which shall be recorded in one of his majesty's courts at Westminster, or quarter-sessions); and all persons being protestants claiming under such persons conforming and not for the benefit of any papist, shall hold and enjoy such lands, &c. freed from the disabilities incurred by such owners, or by any other persons through whom the title shall be derived, unless the person entitled to take advantage of such disability shall recover such lands, &c. by judgment or decree in some suit to be commenced six calendar months at least before the making of such record, and to be prosecuted with diligence. s. 1.

This act shall not prejudice the right of any person entitled to take advantage of such disability, who now is in possession, or shall have, precedent to the making of such record, been in possession, of such lands, &c. two calendar months. s. 2.

If any such person conforming shall return to the popish religion, such person shall for ever afterwards be disabled from having any benefit of this act, and shall be liable to the same disabilities as if he had not taken the oaths, &c. s. 3.

Nothing in this act shall prejudice the right of any person entitled to any remainder or reversion, in case such person shall pursue his right by suit to be commenced within twelve calendar months after the estate on which such remainder or reversion depends shall be determined, or within twelve calendar months after the 29th of September 1733, if such precedent estate be already determined by the death of any persons whose deaths have been concealed from the person entitled, by reason of their having been buried beyond the seas or in a private manner, and shall prosecute such suit with diligence. s. 4.

Every grant of any advowson of any ecclesiastical living, school, hospital or donative, and every grant of any avoidance thereof, by any papist or person making profession of the popish religion, or any mortgagee or person intrusted for any papist, &c. shall be void, unless such grant shall be made bona fide, and for a full consideration, to a protestant purchaser, and only for the benefit of protestants; and such grantee shall be deemed a trustee for a papist, and they and their presentees shall be compelled to make such discovery relating to such grants and presentations, as by the act 12 Ann. st. 2, c. 14, are directed; and every devise to be made by any papist of any such advowson, &c. with intent to secure the benefit thereof to the heirs or family of such papist, shall be void; and such devisees, and persons claiming under such devisees, and their presentees, shall be compelled to discover whether such devises were not made with the said intent. s. 5.

By 18 Geo. 3, c. 60, so much of 11 & 12 Will. 3, c. 4, as relates to the apprehending or prosecuting popish bishops, priests, or jesuits, or that subjects them, or papists keeping school, or educating or boarding youth in the realm, to perpetual imprisonment, or that disables papists to inherit, or take by devise or limitation, any estate, and gives the same to the next of kin, being a protestant, and so much of the same act as disables papists to purchase, and makes void all estates therein, was repealed. s. 1.

Every person having or claiming any lands, &c. under titles not hitherto litigated, shall enjoy the same as if the said act had not been made. s. 2.

Nothing herein shall affect any action now depending, which shall be prosecuted with effect, and without delay. s. 3.

Nothing herein shall extend to any person but such who shall within six calendar months after the passing of this act, or of accruing of his title, being of the age of 21 years, or who being under the age of 21 years shall within six months after he shall attain the age of 21 years, or being of unsound mind, or in prison, or beyond the seas, then within six months after such disability removed, take and subscribe an oath in the following words:

"I, A. B. do sincerely promise and swear "that I will be faithful, and bear true al- "legiance to his majesty king George the "Third, and him will defend to the utmost

" of my power against all conspiracies and " attempts whatever, which shall be made " against his person, crown, or dignity. " And I will do my utmost endeavour to dis- " close and make known to his majesty, his " heirs and successors, all treasons and trai- " torous conspiracies, which may be formed " against him or them: and I do faithfully " promise to maintain, support, and de- " fend, to the utmost of my power, the " succession of the crown in his majesty's " family, against any person or persons " whatsoever: hereby utterly renouncing " and abjuring any obedience, or allegiance " unto the person taking upon himself the " style and title of prince of Wales, in the " life-time of his father, and who since his " death, is said to have assumed the style " and title of king of Great Britain, by the " name of Charles the third, and to any " other person claiming or pretending a " right to the crown of these realms: and I do " swear, that I do reject and detest, as an " unchristian and impious position, that it " is lawful to murder or destroy any person " or persons whatsoever, for or under pre- " tence of their being heretics; and also " that unchristian and impious principle, " that no faith is to be kept with heretics. " I further declare, that it is no article of " my faith, and I do renounce, reject, and " abjure the opinion, that princes excom- " municated by the pope and council, or by " any authority of the see of Rome, or by " any authority whatsoever, may be depos- " ed or murdered by their subjects or any " person whatsoever: and I do declare, that " I do not believe that the pope of Rome, or " any other foreign prince, prelate, state, " or potentate, hath, or ought to have, any " temporal or civil jurisdiction, power, su- " periority, or pre-eminence, directly or " indirectly, within this realm. And I do " solemnly, in the presence of God, profess, " testify, and declare, that I do make this " declaration, and every part thereof, in " the plain and ordinary sense of the words " of the oath, without any evasion, equivoca- " tion, or mental reservation whatever, and " without any dispensation already granted " by the pope, or any authority of the see of " Rome, or any person whatever, and with- " out thinking that I am or can be acquit- " ted before God or man, or absolved of " this declaration, or any part thereof, al- " though the pope, or any other persons or " authority whatsoever, shall dispense with " or annul the same, or declare that it was " null or void."

Which oath the court of chancery, or any court of record at Westminster, the courts of great sessions within Wales, and county palatine of Chester, the courts of chancery or common pleas within the counties palatine of Lancaster and Durham, or any court of general or quarter sessions in England or Wales may administer, and they are to administer the same accordingly; of the taking and subscribing of which oaths a register shall be kept in manner prescribed by the laws requiring oaths from persons taking offices and employments. s. 4.

Nothing in this act shall extend to any popish bishop, priest, jesuit, or schoolmaster, who shall not have taken and subscribed the above oath in the above words, before he shall have been apprehended, or any prosecution commenced against him. s. 5.

By 29 Geo. 3, c. 36, every deed and will made since the 29th of September 1717, to pass any hereditaments from any person professing the popish religion, though not enrolled, shall be good, provided the same be enrolled on or before the 1st of December 1789, in such manner as by the 3 Geo. 1, c. 18, is directed. s. 1.

Nothing herein shall make good any such deed, will, or lease, of the want of enrolment whereof advantage shall have been taken, on or before 1st January 1789. s. 2.

No purchase made for full consideration of any hereditaments, by any protestant for the benefit of protestants, shall be impeached by reason that any deed or will through which the title thereto is derived hath not been enrolled, so as no advantage was taken of [the want of *] enrolment thereof before such purchase was made, and so as no decree or judgment hath been obtained for want of the enrolment of such deeds or wills. s. 3.

Nothing herein shall make good any grant, lease, or mortgage of the advowson, or right of presentation to any benefice, prebend, or ecclesiastical living, school, hospital, or donative, or any avoidance thereof, made by any papist in trust for any papist, whether such trust hath been declared in writing or not. s. 4.

PAR, is a term in exchange of money, and is defined to be a certain number of pieces of the coin of one country, containing in them an equal quantity of silver to that of another number of pieces of the coin of some other country. Lock's Cons. of Money, 18.

PARACIUM, the tenure that is between parceners, viz. that which the youngest oweth to the eldest. Domesday.

PARAGE, (paragium) equality of name, blood, or dignity; but more especially of land, in the partition of an inheritance between coheirs: hence to disparage, and disparagement. Co. Lit. 166.

PARAGIUM, the equal condition betwixt two parties, to be contracted in marriage. Cowel.

* Not in the act.

PARAMOUNT, (Fr. per, and monter, ascendere) the highest lord of the fee. F.N.B. 135. Thus the king is chief lord, or lord paramount of all the lands in the kingdom. So where there is a lord mesne, who holds of a superior under certain services, this superior lord is lord paramount. Co. Lit. 1.

PARAPHARNALIA, or PARAPHERNALIA, from the Greek παρὰ, Præter, and φερνὴ, dos,) are those goods which a wife challengeth over and above her dower or jointure, after her husband's death; as furniture for her chamber, wearing apparel, and jewels, which are not to be put into the inventory of her husband. A wife, after the death of her husband, may claim her paraphernalia or necessary apparel for her body, and cloth given her to make a garment, &c. besides her dower; so that the husband cannot give them away by will: but she shall not have excessive apparel, beyond her rank. 2 Black. 435. See Marriage.

PARASITUS, a domestic servant. Cowel. Blount.

PARAVAIL, (per-availe) the lowest tenant of the fee, or he who is immediate tenant to one who holds over of another; and he is called tenant paravail, because it is presumed he hath profit and avail by the land. F.N.B. 135. 2 Inst. 296. 9 Rep. Coney's Case. 2 Black. Com. 60.

PARCELLA TERRÆ, a piece or parcel of land.

PARCEL-MAKERS, two officers in the Exchequer, who make the parcels of the escheators accounts, wherein they charge them with every thing they have levied for the king's use, within the time of their being in office, and deliver the same to the auditors, to make up their accounts therewith. Pract. Excheq. 99.

PARCENERS, (quasi parcellers, i. e. rem in parcellas dividentes) are of two sorts, viz. according to the course of the common law, and according to custom.

An estate held in coparcenary is therefore, where lands of inheritance descend from the ancestor to two or more persons. It arises either by COMMON LAW or particular custom. By common law: as where a person seised in fee-simple or in fee-tail dies, and his next heirs are two or more females, his daughters, sisters, aunts, cousins, or their representatives; in this case they shall all inherit: and these coheirs are then called coparceners, or for brevity, parceners only (Litt. sec. 241, 242). Parceners by particular custom are where lands descend, as in gavelkind, to all the males in equal degree, as sons, brothers, uncles, &c. (Ibid. s. 265.) And, in either of these cases, all the parceners put together make but one heir; and have but one estate among them. Co. Litt. 163.

The properties of parceners are in some respects like those of joint-tenants; they having the same unities of interest, title, and possession. They may sue and be sued jointly for matters relating to their own lands (Ibid. 164): and the entry of one of them shall in some cases enure as the entry of them all (Ibid. 188. 243). They cannot have an action of trespass against each other, but herein they differ from joint tenants, that they are also excluded from maintaining an action of waste (2 Inst. 403); for coparceners could at all times put a stop to any waste by writ of partition, but till the statute of Henry the eighth joint-tenants had no such power. Parceners also differ materially from joint-tenants in four other points: 1. They always claim by descent, whereas joint-tenants always claim by purchase. Therefore if two sisters purchase lands, to hold to them and their heirs, they are not parceners, but joint-tenants (Litt. sec. 254), and hence it likewise follows, that no lands can be held in coparcenary, but estates of inheritance which are of a descendible nature; whereas not only estates in fee and in tail, but for life or years, may be held in joint-tenancy. 2. There is no unity of time necessary to an estate in coparcenary. For if a man hath two daughters, to whom his estate descends in coparcenary, and one dies before the other; the surviving daughter and the heir of the other, or, when both are dead, their two heirs, are still parceners (Co. Litt. 164. 174.); the estates vesting in each of them at different times, though it be the same quantity of interest, and held by the same title. 3. Parceners, though they have an unity have not an entirety, of interest. They are properly entitled each to the whole of a distinct moiety (Ibid. 163. 164.) and of course there is no jus accrescendi, or survivorship between them: for each part descends severally to their respective heirs, though the unity of possession continues. And as long as the lands continue in a course of descent, and united in possession, so long are the tenants therein, whether male or female, called parceners. But if the possession be once severed by partition, they are no longer parceners, but tenants in severalty; or if one parcener aliens her share, though no partition be made, then are the lands no longer held in coparcenary, but in common. Litt. sec. 309.

Parceners are so called, saith Littleton (sec. 241), because they may be constrained to make partition. And he mentions many methods of making it (sec. 245 to 264.), four of which are by consent, and one by compulsion. The first is, where they agree to divide the lands into equal parts in severalty, and that each shall have such a determinate part. The second is, when they agree to chuse some friend to make partition for them, and then the sisters shall choose each of them her part according to seniority of age; or otherwise, as shall be agreed. The privilege of seniority is in this case personal; for if the eldest sister be dead, her issue shall not choose first but the next sister. But, if an advowson descend in coparcenary, and the sisters cannot agree in the presentation, the eldest and her issue, nay her husband, or her assigns, shall present alone, before the younger (Co. Litt. 166. 3 Rep. 22). * And the reason given is, that the former privilege, of priority in choice upon a division, arises from an act of her own, the agreement to make partition, and therefore is merely personal; the latter of presenting to the living, arises from the act of the law, and is annexed not only to her person, but to her estate also. A third method of partition is, where the eldest divides, and then she shall choose last; for the rule of law is, cujus est divisio, alterius est electio. The fourth method is, where the sisters agree to cast lots for their shares. And these are the methods by consent. That by compulsion is, where one or more sue out a writ of partition against the others; whereupon the sheriff shall go to the lands, and make partition thereof by the verdict of a jury there impanneled, and assign to each of the parceners her part in severalty †.

And by stat. 8 & 9 Wil. 3, c. 31, if the high sheriff by reason of distance, &c. cannot be present at the execution of any judgment in partition, then the under sheriff, in the presence of two justices of peace of the county, shall proceed to the execution of the writ, by inquisition, and the high sheriff is to make the return, &c. Ibid. When the partition is made and returned, the persons who were tenants of the lands, or any part thereof, before divided, shall continue tenants of the lands they held, to the respective owners, under such conditions and rents as before: and no plea in abatement shall be admitted or received in any suit of partition; nor shall the same be abated by the death of any tenant, &c. Ibid.

But there are some things which are in their nature impartible: the mansion-house, common of estovers, common of piscary uncertain, or any other common without stint, shall not be divided, but the eldest sister, if she pleases, shall have them, and make the others a reasonable satisfaction in other parts of the inheritance: or if that cannot be, then they shall have the profits of the thing by turns, in the same manner as they take the advowson. Co. Litt. 164, 165.

There is yet another consideration attending the estate in coparcenary: that if one of the daughters has had an estate given with her in frankmarriage by her ancestor, (which was a species of estates-tail, freely given by a relation for advancement of his kinswoman in marriage,) in this case, if lands descend from the same ancestor to her and her sisters in fee-simple, she or her heirs shall have no share of them, unless they will agree to divide the lands so given in frankmarriage in equal proportion with the rest of the lands descending (Bracton. l. 2. c. 34. Litt. sec. 266 to 273). This mode of division was known in the law of the Lombards (l. 2. t. 14. c. 15); which directs the woman so preferred in marriage, and claiming her share of the inheritance, mittere in confusum cum sororibus, quantum pater aut frater ei dederit, quando ambulaverit ad maritum. With us it is denominated bringing those lands into hotchpot (Britton. c. 72), which term is here explained in the words of Littleton (sec. 267): "it seemeth that this word, "hotchpot, is in English a pudding; for "in a pudding is not commonly put one "thing alone, but one thing with other "things together." By this housewifely metaphor our ancestors meant to inform us (Litt. sec. 268) that the lands, both those given in frankmarriage and those descending in fee-simple, should be mixed and blended together, and then divided in equal portions among all the daughters. But this was left to the choice of the donee in frankmarriage: and if she did not choose to put her lands into hotchpot she was presumed to be sufficiently provided for, and the rest of the inheritance was divided among the other sisters. The law of hotchpot took place then only when the other lands descending from the ancestor were fee-simple; for if they descended in tail, the donee in frankmarriage was entitled to her share without bringing her lands so given into hotchpot (Litt. sec. 274). And the reason is, because lands descending in fee-simple are distributed by the policy of law, for the maintenance of all the daughters; and if one has a sufficient provision out of the same inheritance, equal to the rest, it is not reasonable that she should have more; but lands, descending in tail are not distributed by the operation of the law, but by the designation of the giver, per formam doni; it matters not therefore how unequal this distribution may be. Also no lands but such as are given in frankmarriage shall be brought into hotchpot; for no others are looked upon in law as given for the advancement of the woman, or by way of marriage-portion (Litt. 275). And therefore as gifts in frankmarriage are fallen into disuse, it would have been unnecessary to have mentioned the law of hotchpot, had not this method of division been revived and copied by the statute for distribution of personal estates.

The estate in coparcenary may be dissolved, either by partition, which disunites the possession; by alienation of one parcener, which disunites the title, and may disunite the interest, or by the whole at last descending to and vesting in one single person, which brings it to an estate in severalty.

PARDON, (pardonatio, venia) is the remitting or forgiving of an offence committed against the king. Staundf. Pl. Cor. 47.

This high prerogative of pardoning offences is inseparably incident to the crown, and is intrusted to the king upon a special confidence, that he will spare those only whose case, could it have been foreseen, the law itself may be presumed willing to have excepted out of its general rules, which the wisdom of man cannot possibly make so perfect as to suit every particular case. 1 Show. 284.

Under this head it will be proper to consider, 1. The object of pardon: 2. The manner of pardoning: 3. The method of allowing a pardon: 4. The effect of such pardon when allowed.

I. What offences may be pardoned.] First, the king may pardon all offences merely against the crown, or the public; excepting, 1. That, to preserve the liberty of the subject, the committing any man to prison out of the realm, is by the habeas corpus act, 31 Car. 2, c. 2, made a præmunire, unpardonable even by the king. Nor, 2, can the king pardon, where private justice is principally concerned in the prosecution of offenders: "non potest rex gratiam facere cum injuria et "damno aliorum," (3 Inst. 236). Therefore in appeals of all kinds (which are the suit, not of the king, but of the party injured) the prosecutor may release, but the king cannot pardon (Ibid. 237). Neither can he pardon a common nuisance, while it remains unredressed, or so as to prevent an abatement of it; though afterwards he may remit the fine: because though the prosecution is vested in the king to avoid multiplicity of suits, yet (during its continuance) this offence savours more of the nature of a private injury to each individual in the neighbourhood, than of a public wrong (2 Hawk. P. C. 391). Neither, lastly, can the king pardon an offence against a popular or penal statute, after information brought: for thereby the informer hath acquired a private property in his part of the penalty. 3 Inst. 238.

There is also a restriction of a peculiar nature, that affects the prerogative of pardoning, in case of parliamentary impeachments; viz. that the king's pardon cannot be pleaded to any such impeachment, so as to impede the inquiry, and stop the prosecution of great and notorious offenders. Therefore, when in the reign of Cha. 2, the earl of Danby was impeached by the house of commons of high treason, and other misdemeanors, and pleaded the king's pardon in bar of the same, the commons alleged (Com. Journ. 28 Apr. 1679) "that there "was no precedent that ever any pardon "was granted to any person impeached by "the commons of high treason, or other high "crimes, depending the impeachment;" and thereupon resolved (Com. Journ. 5 May, 1679), "that the pardon so pleaded was "illegal and void, and ought not to be al-"lowed in bar of the impeachment of the "commons of England:" for which resolution they assigned (Com. Journ. 26 May, 1679) this reason to the house of lords, "that the setting up a pardon to be a bar of "an impeachment defeats the whole use "and effect of impeachments: for should "this point be admitted, or stand doubted, "it would totally discourage the exhibiting "any for the future; whereby the chief "institution for the preservation of the go-"vernment would be destroyed." Soon after the Revolution the commons renewed the same claim, and voted (Com. Journ. 6 June 1689) "that a pardon is not plead-"able in bar of an impeachment." And at length it was enacted by the Act of Settlement, 12 & 13 Will. 3, c. 2, "that no par-"don under the great seal of England shall "be pleadable to an impeachment by the "commons in parliament." But after the impeachment has been solemnly heard and determined it is not understood that the king's royal grace is further restrained or abridged: for after the impeachment and attainder of the six rebel lords in 1715, three of them were from time to time reprieved by the crown, and at length received the benefit of the king's most gracious pardon.

Also after the lords have delivered their sentence of guilty, the commons have the power of pardoning the impeached convict, by refusing to demand judgment against him, for no judgment can be pronounced by the lords till it is demanded by the commons. Lord Macclesfield was found guilty without a dissenting voice in the house of Lords; but when the question was afterwards proposed in the house of Commons 'That this house will demand judgment of the lords against Thomas earl of Macclesfield,' it occasioned a warm debate, but (the previous question being first moved) it was carried in the affirmative by a majority of 136 voices against 65. (Com. Journ. 27 May 1725. 6 H. St. Tr. 762.) In the impeachment of Warren Hastings, esq. it was decided, after much serious and learned investigation and discussion, by a very great majority in each house of parliament, that an impeachment was not abated by a dissolution of the parliament, though almost all the legal characters of each house voted in the minorities.

II. As to the manner of pardoning.] 1. First, it must be under the great seal. A warrant under the privy seal, or sign manual, though it may be a sufficient authority to admit the party to bail, in order to plead the king's pardon, when obtained in proper form, yet is not of itself a complete irrevocable pardon (3 Sta. Tr. 166. 173). 2. Next, it is a general rule that wherever it may reasonably be presumed the king is deceived, the pardon is void (2 Hawk. P. C. 383). Therefore any suppression of truth, or suggestion of falsehood, in a charter of pardon will vitiate the whole; for the king was misinformed (3 Inst. 238). 3. General words have also a very imperfect effect in pardons. A pardon of all felonies will not pardon a conviction or attainder of felony; (for it is presumed the king knew not of those proceedings,) but the conviction or attainder must be particularly mentioned, (2 Hawk. P. C. 383), and a pardon of felonies will not include piracy (1 Hawk. P. C. 99), for that is no felony punishable at the common law. 4. It is also enacted by statute 13 Ric. 2, st. 2, c. 1, that no pardon for treason, murder, or rape, shall be allowed, unless the offence be particularly specified therein; and particularly in murder it shall be expressed whether it was committed by lying in wait, assault, or malice prepense. Upon which sir Edward Coke observes (3 Inst. 236), that it was not the intention of the parliament that the king should ever pardon murder under these aggravations; and therefore they prudently laid the pardon under these restrictions, because they did not conceive it possible that the king would ever excuse an offence by name, which was attended with such high aggravations. And it is remarkable enough that there is no precedent of a pardon in the register for any other homicide than that which happens se defendendo or per infortunium, to which two species the king's pardon was expressly confined by the statutes 2 Ed. 3, c. 2, and 14 Ed. 3, c. 15, which declare that no pardon of homicide shall be granted but only where the king may do it by the oath of his crown; that is to say, where a man slayeth another in his own defence, or by misfortune. But the statute of Richard the second, before-mentioned, enlarges by implication the royal power, provided the king is not deceived in the intended object of his mercy. And therefore pardons of murder were always granted with a non obstante of the statute of king Richard, till the time of the revolution; when the doctrine of non obstantes ceasing, it was doubted whether murder could be pardoned generally: but it was determined by the court of king's bench (Salk. 499.) that the king may pardon on an indictment of murder, as well as a subject may discharge an appeal. Under these and a few other restrictions, it is a general rule, that a pardon shall be taken most beneficially for the subject, and most strongly against the king.

A pardon may also be conditional, that is, the king may extend his mercy upon what terms he pleases; and may annex to his bounty a condition either precedent or subsequent, on the performance whereof the validity of the pardon will depend; and this by the common law (2 Hawk. P. C. 394). Which prerogative is daily exerted in the pardon of felons, on condition of being confined to hard labour for a stated time, or of transportation to some foreign country for life, or for a term of years; such transportation or banishment * being allowable and warranted by the habeas corpus act, 31 Car. 2, c. 2, § 14, and both the imprisonment and transportation rendered more easy and effectual by statutes 8 Geo. 3, c. 15, and 19 Geo. 3, c. 74, and still further by 24 Geo. 3, c. 56, and 31 Geo. 3, c. 46.

III. The manner of allowing pardons.] We may observe, that a pardon by act of parliament is more beneficial than by the king's charter; for a man is not bound to plead it, but the court must ex officio take notice of it (Fost. 43.); neither can he lose the benefit of it by his own laches or negligence, as he may of the king's charter of pardon (2 Hawk. P. C. 397). The king's charter of pardon must be specially pleaded and that at a proper time; for if a man is indicted, and has a pardon in his pocket, and afterwards puts himself upon his trial by pleading the general issue, he has waved the benefit of such pardon (2 Hawk. P. C. 396). But, if a man avails himself thereof, as soon as by course of law he may, a pardon may either be pleaded upon arraignment, or in arrest of judgment, or in the present stage of proceedings, in bar of execution. Anciently, by statute 10 Edw. 3, c. 2, no pardon of felony could be allowed, unless the party found sureties for the good behaviour before the sheriff and coroners of the county (*Salk.*499). But that statute is repealed by the statute 5 & 6 W. & M. c. 13, which, instead thereof gives the judges of the court a discretionary power to bind the criminal, pleading such pardon, to his good behaviour, with two sureties, for any term not exceeding seven years.

IV. The effect of such pardon by the king, is to make the offender a new man; to acquit him of all corporal penalties and forfeitures annexed to that offence for which he obtains his pardon; and not so much to restore his former, as to give him a new, credit and capacity. But nothing can restore or purify the blood when once corrupted, if the pardon be not allowed till after attainder, but the high and transcendant power of parliament. Yet if a person attainted receives the king's pardon, and afterwards hath a son, that son may be heir to his father, because the father being made a new man might transmit new inheritable blood; though, had he been born before the pardon, he could never have inherited at all. So a son born after the attainder may inherit, if he has no elder brother living born before the attainder, otherwise the land will escheat pro defectu hæredis. 1 H. P. C. 358.

PARENT, (parens) a father or mother, but generally applied to the father. Wood's Inst. 63.

The most universal relation in nature is that between parent and child, and consists of, 1st, The legal duties of parents to their legitimate children. 2dly, Their power over them. 3dly, The duties of such children to their parents.

I. The duties of parents consist in three particulars, 1st, their maintenance; 2dly, their protection; and, 3dly, their education.

1. The duty of parents to provide for the maintenance of their children is a principle of natural law; an obligation laid on them not only by nature herself, but by their own proper act in bringing them into the world; for they would be in the highest manner injurious to their issue if they only gave their children life that they might afterwards see them perish. By begetting them therefore they have entered into a voluntary obligation to endeavour, as far as in them lies, that the life which they have bestowed shall be supported and preserved. And thus the children will have a perfect right of receiving maintenance from their parents. Puffendorf 4, c. 11. Montesquieu, b. 23, c. 2.

This natural duty is enforced by our laws, it being an admitted principle of law (Raym. 500), that there is an obligation on every man to provide for those descended from his loins; and the manner, in which this obligation shall be performed, is pointed out by the stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2, which enacts that the father and mother, grandfather and grandmother, of poor impotent persons, shall maintain them at their own charges, if of sufficient ability, according as the quarter session shall direct. That is, they may respectively be compelled to allow each other 20*s.* a month, or 13*l.* a year; but that is the greatest allowance which a son can be obliged to make an aged parent, or a father a legitimate child, by our law.

Any two justices may make this order of allowance, which is in fact in aid of the parish to which the indigent person belongs. The relation, on whom the order is made, may appeal to the justices in sessions, who, upon evidence, and the consideration of the circumstances and ability of the party, can reduce the allowance, or discharge the order.

And if a parent runs away (Stat. 5 Geo. 1. c. 8), and leaves his children, the churchwardens and overseers of the parish shall seize his rents, goods, and chattels, and dispose of them toward their relief.

By the interpretations which the courts of law formerly made upon these statutes, if a mother or grandmother marries again, and was before such second marriage of sufficient ability to keep the child, the husband shall be charged to maintain it (Styles. 283. 2 Bulstr. 346): for this being a debt of hers, when single, shall like others extend to charge the husband. But it has lately been decided that the authorities here relied upon by the learned commentator never were law; and that a husband is not bound, even whilst his wife is alive, to support her parents, or her children, by a former husband, or any other relation; for the statute 43 Eliz. c. 2, extends only to relations by blood (4 T. R. 118.) But at her death, the relation being dissolved, the husband is under no further obligation.

But in general no person is bound to provide a maintenance for his issue, unless where the children are impotent and unable to work, either through infancy, disease, or accident; and then is only obliged to find them with necessaries, the penalty on refusal being no more than 20*s.* a month. For the policy of our laws, which are ever watchful to promote industry, did not mean to compel a father to maintain his idle and lazy children in ease and indolence: but thought it unjust to oblige the parent, against his will, to provide them with superfluities, and other indulgences of fortune; imagining they might trust to the impulse of nature, if the children were deserving of such favours. Yet, as nothing is so apt to stifle the calls of nature as religious bigotry, it is enacted (stat. 11 & 12 W. 3, c. 4), that if any popish parent shall refuse to allow his protestant child a fitting maintenance, with a view to compel him to change his religion, the lord chancellor shall by order of court constrain him to do what is just and reasonable. But this did not extend to persons of another religion, of no less bitterness and bigotry than the popish; and therefore in the very next year we find an instance of a Jew of immense riches, whose only daughter, having embraced christianity, he turned her out of doors; and on her application for relief it was held she was entitled to none, not because she was the daughter of a Jew, but because the order did not state that she was poor, or likely to become chargeable to the parish. But this gave occasion (Com. Journ. 18 Feb. 12 Mar. 1701) to another statute (1 Ann. st. 1, c. 30), which ordains, that if Jewish parents refuse to allow their protestant children a fitting maintenance, suitable to the fortune of the parent, the lord chancellor on complaint may make such order therein as he shall see proper.

Our law has made no provision to prevent the disinheriting of children by will, leaving every man's property in his own disposal, upon a principle of liberty in this as well as every other action; though perhaps it had not been amiss if the parent had been bound to leave them at the least a necessary subsistence. Indeed, among persons of any rank or fortune, a competence is generally provided for younger children, and the bulk of the estate settled upon the eldest by the marriage-articles. Heirs also, and children, are favourites of our courts of justice, and cannot be disinherited by any dubious or ambiguous words, there being required the utmost certainty of the testator's intentions to take away the right of an heir. 1 Lev. 130. 1 Black. 449.

2. From the duty of maintenance we may easily pass to that of protection, which is also a natural duty, but rather permitted than enjoined by any municipal laws: nature, in this respect, working so strongly as to need rather a check than a spur. A parent may, by our laws, maintain and uphold his children in their law-suits, without being guilty of the legal crime of maintaining quarrels (2 Inst. 564). A parent may also justify an assault and battery in defence of the persons of his children (1 Hawk. P. C. 131): nay, where a man's son was beaten by another boy, and the father went near a mile to find him, and there revenged his son's quarrel by beating the other boy, of which beating he afterwards unfortunately died, it was not held to be murder, but manslaughter merely (Cro. Jac. 296. 1 Hawk. P.C. 83). Such indulgence does the law show to the frailty of human nature, and the workings of parental affection. 1 Black. 450.

3. The last duty of parents to their children is that of giving them an education suitable to their station in life, a duty pointed out by reason, and of far the greatest importance of any: for, as Puffendorf very well observes (Law of Na. & G. c. 2, s. 12), it is not easy to imagine or allow that a parent has conferred any considerable benefit upon his child by bringing him into the world, if he afterwards entirely neglects his culture and education, and suffers him to grow up like a mere beast, to lead a life useless to others, and shameful to himself. Yet the municipal laws of most countries seem to be defective in this point, by not constraining the parent to bestow a proper education upon his children. Perhaps they thought it punishment enough to leave the parent, who neglects the instruction of his family, to labour under those griefs and inconveniences which his family, so unstructed, will be sure to bring upon him. Our laws, though their defects in this particular cannot be denied, have in one instance made a wise provision for breeding up the rising generation, since the poor and laborious part of the community, when past the age of nurture, are taken out of the hands of their parents by the statutes for apprenticing poor children, and are placed out by the public in such a manner as may render their abilities, in their several stations, of the greatest advantage to the commonwealth. The rich indeed are left at their own option whether they will breed up their children to be ornaments or disgraces to their family; yet in one case, that of religion, they are under peculiar restrictions: for it is provided, (stat. 1 Jac. 1, c. 4, and 3 Jac. 1, c. 5,) that if any person sends any child under his government beyond the seas, either to prevent its good education in England, or in order to enter into or reside in any popish college, or to be instructed, persuaded, or strengthened in the popish religion, in such case, beside the disabilities incurred by the child so sent, the parent or person sending shall forfeit 100*l.* which (stat. 11 & 12 Wil. 3, c. 4) shall go to the sole use and benefit of him that shall discover the offence. And (stat. 3 Car. 1. c. 2) if any parent, or other, shall send or convey any person beyond sea, to enter into, or be resident in, or trained up in, any priory, abbey, nunnery, popish university, college, or school, or house of jesuits, or priests, or in any private popish family, in order to be instructed, persuaded, or confirmed in the popish religion; or shall contribute any thing towards their maintenance when abroad by any pretext whatever, the person both sending and sent shall be disabled to sue in law or equity, or to be executor or administrator to any person, or to enjoy any legacy or deed of gift, or to bear any office in the realm, and shall forfeit all his goods and chattels, and likewise all his real estate for life. But by the 31 Geo. 3, c. 32, no person professing the Roman catholic religion, who shall take and subscribe the oath required by that statute, shall be subject to the penalties in the statutes before mentioned.

II. The power of parents over their children is derived from the former consideration, their duty: this authority being given them, partly to enable the parent more effectually to perform his duty, and partly as a recompense for his care and trouble in the faithful discharge of it. 1 Black. 452.

The power of a parent by our English laws is sufficient to keep the child in order and obedience. He may lawfully correct his child, being under age, in a reasonable manner (1 Hawk. P. C. 130), for this is for the benefit of his education. The consent of the parent to the marriage of his child under age was also directed by our ancient law to be obtained, but now is absolutely necessary, for without it the contract is void (Stat. 26 Geo. 2, c. 33. See Marriage). And this also is another means which the law has put into the parent's hands, in order the better to discharge his duty; first, of protecting his children from the snares of artful and designing persons, and next, of settling them properly in life, by preventing the ill consequences of too early and precipitate marriages. A father has no other power over his son's estate than as his trustee or guardian; for though he may receive the profits during the child's minority, yet he must account for them when he comes of age. He may indeed have the benefit of his children's labour while they live with him, and are maintained by him; but this is no more than he is entitled to from his apprentices or servants. The legal power of a father over the persons of his children ceases at the age of 21, for they are then enfranchised by arriving at years of discretion, or that point which the law has established when the empire of the father, or other guardian, gives place to the empire of reason. Yet till that age arrives this empire of the father continues even after his death; for he may by his will appoint a guardian to his children.

III. The duties of children to their parents arise from a principle of natural justice and retribution. For to those, who gave us existence, we naturally owe subjection and obedience during our minority, and honour and reverence ever after: they who protected the weakness of our infancy are entitled to our protection in the infirmity of their age; they who by sustenance and education have enabled their offspring to prosper, ought in return to be supported by that offspring in case they stand in need of assistance. Upon this principle, by our law a child is equally justifiable in defending the person, or maintaining the cause or suit of a bad parent, as a good one; and is equally compellable (stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2) if of sufficient ability, to maintain and provide for a wicked and unnatural progenitor, as for one who has shown the greatest tenderness and parental piety. 1 Black. 459.

PARES CURIÆ, vel CURTIS, the jury or homage of a court-baron for the trial of their fellow tenants.

PARISH, (parochia) the circuit of ground in which the people who belong to one church do inhabit.

PARISH CLERK. In every parish the parson, vicar, &c. hath a parish clerk under him, who is the lowest officer of the church. There were formerly clerks in orders, and their business was at first to officiate at the altar, for which they had a competent maintenance by offerings; but now they are laymen, and have certain fees with the parson, on christenings, marriages, burials, &c. besides wages for their maintenance. Count. Parr. Compan. 83, 84.

They are regarded by the common law, as persons who have freeholds in their offices; and therefore though they may be punished, yet they cannot be deprived, by ecclesiastical censures (1 Black. 395). They are generally appointed by the minister, unless there is a custom for the parishioners or churchwardens to choose them; in which case, if such custom appears, the court of B. R. will grant a mandamus to the archdeacon to swear him in, for the establishment of the custom turns it into a temporal or civil right. Cro. Car 589, 1 Black. 395.

PARISHIONER, (Parochianus) is an inhabitant of or belonging to any parish, lawfully settled therein; and those who rent lands or tenements within a parish, though not actually inhabitant or resident therein, are, for the purpose of all parochial charges and burthens, considered to be parishioners.

PARK, (Lat. parcus, Fr. parque, i. e. locus inclusus.) is a large quantity of ground inclosed and privileged for wild beasts of chase, by the king's grant or prescription. 1 Inst.

238. And according to Blackstone (2 Com. 38,) a park is an enclosed chase, extending only over a man's own grounds. The word park indeed properly signifies an enclosure; but yet it is not every field or common, which a gentleman pleases to surround with a wall or paling, and to stock with a herd of deer, that is thereby constituted a legal park: for the king's grant, or at least immemorial prescription, is necessary to make it so. (Co. Lit. 233. 2 Inst. 199. 11 Rep. 86.) Though now the difference between a real park, and such inclosed grounds, is in many respects not very material: only that it is unlawful at common law for any person to kill any beasts of park or chase, except such as possess these franchises of forest, chase or park.

To a park three things are required. 1. A grant thereof. 2. Inclosures by pale, wall or hedge. 3. Beasts of a park, such as the buck, doe, &c. And where all the deer are destroyed, it shall no more be accounted a park; for a park consists of vert, venison, and inclosure, and if it is determined in any of them, it is a total disparking. Cro. Car. 59, 60. See Deer, Forest, Game.

PARK BOTE, to be quit of inclosing a park, or any part thereof. 4 Inst. 308.

PARLIAMENT, (Parliamentum, from the Fr. Parler, i. e. loqui, & ment, mens, to speak the mind, sometimes called Commune Concilium Regni Angliæ, Magnum Concilium, &c.)

The original or first institution of parliaments is one of those matters which lie so far hidden in the dark ages of antiquity, that the tracing of it out is a thing equally difficult and uncertain. 1 Black. Com. 147.

For although it seems probable that there was in the most early periods something of the nature of a parliamentary assembly, yet it does not appear how such assemblies were constituted or composed.

It seems, however, to be generally agreed, that in the main, the constitution of parliament, as it now stands, was marked out so long ago as the seventeenth year of king John, anno Dom. 1215, in the great charter granted by that prince; wherein he promises to summon all archbishops, bishops, abbots, earls, and greater barons personally; and all other tenants in chief under the crown, by the sheriff and bailiffs, to meet at a certain place with forty days notice, to assess aids and scutages when necessary. 1 Black. Com. 149.

And this constitution has subsisted in fact, at least from the year 1266, anno 49 Hen. 3. there being still extant writs of that date to summon knights, citizens, and burgesses to parliament. 1 Black. Com. 149. Simeon's L. Elect. 3.

We shall therefore, without attempting to investigate with minuteness the rise and progress of parliamentary representation, which cannot be supposed to have been so matured at the above early period as to have existed in the same perfect manner as at this day, endeavour to shew wherein consists this constitution of parliament as it now stands.

I. Of what persons the parliament consists.
II. The manner and time of its assembling.
III. Elections—
  i. The qualifications of the electors.
  ii. The qualifications of the elected.
  iii. The proceedings at elections.
IV. Method of passing bills.
V. Privilege of parliament.
VI. The continuance, adjournment, prorogation, and dissolution of the parliament.

I. Of what persons the parliament consists.] In all tyrannical governments the supreme magistracy, or the right of both making and of enforcing the laws, is vested in one and the same man, or one and the same body of men; and wherever these two powers are united together, there can be no public liberty. The magistrate may enact tyrannical laws, and execute them in a tyrannical manner, since he is possessed, in quality of dispenser of justice, with all the power which he as legislator thinks proper to give himself. 1 Black. Com. 146.

But where the legislative and executive authority are in distinct hands, the former will take care not to entrust the latter with so large a power, as may tend to the subversion of its own independence, and therewith of the liberty of the subject. 1 Black. Com. 146.

With us, therefore, in England, this supreme power is divided into two branches; the one legislative, to wit, the parliament, consisting of king, lords, and commons; the other executive, consisting of the king alone. 1 Black. Com. 146.

And it is highly necessary, for preserving the balance of the constitution, that the executive power should be a branch, though not the whole of the legislative; for the total union of them, as before observed, would be productive of tyranny; and the total disjunction of them, for the present, would in the end produce the same effects, by causing that union against which he seems to provide. 1 Black. Com. 154.

In that case the legislature would soon become tyrannical by making continual encroachments, and gradually assuming to itself the rights of the executive power. 1 Black. Com. 154.

To hinder therefore any such encroachments, the king is himself a part of the parliament; and as this is the reason of his being so, very properly therefore the share of legislation, which the constitution has placed in the crown, consists in the power of rejecting, rather than resolving; this being sufficient to answer the end proposed: the crown has therefore not any power of doing wrong, but merely of preventing wrong from being done. 1 Black. Com. 154.

The crown cannot begin of itself any alteations in the present established law; but it may approve or disapprove of the alterations suggested and consented to by the two houses. The legislative thereof cannot abridge the executive power of any rights which it now has by law, without its own consent, since the law must perpetually stand as it now does, unless all the powers will agree to alter it. 1 Black. Com. 154.

And herein indeed consists the true excellence of the English government, that all the parts of it form a mutual check upon each other. In the legislature, the people are a check upon the nobility, and the nobility a check upon the people; by the mutual privilege of rejecting what the other has resolved: while the king is a check upon both, which preserves the executive power from encroachments. And this very executive power is again checked, and kept within due bounds by the two houses, through the privilege they have of inquiring into, impeaching, and punishing the conduct (not indeed of the king, which would destroy his constitutional independence, but which is more beneficial to the public) of his evil and pernicious counsellors. 1 Black. Com. 155.

Thus every branch of our civil policy supports, and is supported, regulates, and is regulated, by the rest; for the two houses naturally drawing into two directions of opposite interest, and the prerogative in another still different from them both, they mutually keep each other from exceeding their proper limits, while the whole is prevented from separation, and artificially connected together by the mixed nature of the crown, which is a part of the legislative, and the sole executive magistrate. Like three distinct powers in mechanics, they jointly impel the machine of government in a direction different from what either, acting by itself, would have done; but at the same time in a direction partaking of each, and formed out of all; a direction which constitutes the true line of the liberty and happiness of the community. 1 Black. Com. 155.

Of a constitution so wisely contrived, so strongly raised, and so highly finished, it is hard, saith sir William Blackstone, to speak with that praise, which is justly and severely its due; but he adds that its protection is a duty which we owe to ourselves who enjoy it; to our ancestors who transmitted it down; and to our posterity who will claim at our hands, this, the best birth-right and noblest inheritance of mankind. 4 Black. Com. 44.

The constituent parts of a parliament are therefore, the king, the lords of parliament, and the commons. Co. Lit. 109, b.

And the king and these estates together form the great corporation or body politic of the kingdom, of which the king is said to be caput, principium, et finis. 4 Inst. 1, 2, 3. 1 Black. Com. 153.

The lords of parliament (who sit together with the king in one house) are of two sorts, viz. spiritual and temporal. Co. Lit. 109. b.

The lords spiritual consist of two archbishops, and twenty-four bishops, who set in parliament by succession, in respect of their counties or baronies, parcel of their bishopricks. 4 Inst. 1, 45.

And when any parliament is holden, each of them is to have a writ of summons ex debito justitiæ. 4 Inst. 1.

But though these lords spiritual are in the eye of the law a distinct estate from the lords temporal, and are so distinguished in most of our acts of parliament, yet in practice they are usually blended together under the one name of the lords; they intermix in their votes, and the majority of such intermixture joins both estates; and from this want of a separate assembly, and separate negative of the prelates, some writers have argued very cogently, that the lords spiritual and temporal are now in reality only one estate, which is unquestionably true in every effectual sense, though the ancient distinction between them still nominally remains; for if a bill should pass their house there is no doubt of its validity, though every lord spiritual should vote against it; and on the other hand, it seems, according to Blackstone, that it would be equally good, if the lords temporal present were inferior to the bishops in number, and every one of those temporal lords gave his vote to reject the bill. 1 Black. Com. 156.

The lords temporal consist of all the peers of the realm, such as dukes, marquisses, earls, viscounts, and barons, who sit by reason of their dignities, which they hold by descent or creation: of these the number is indefinite, and may be increased at will by the power of the crown, and when any parliament is holden, each of them is to have a writ of summons ex debito justitiæ: there and also sixteen other peers, who, since the union of Scotland, sit by election, and represent the body of the Scots nobility. 4 Inst. 1. 1 Black. Com. 157.

The commons, which form the third estate of parliament, are chosen by force of the king's writ, which issues ex debito justitiæ; and they are divided into three parts, viz. into knights of shires or counties, citizens out of cities, and burgesses out of boroughs. Co. Lit. 109. b. 4 Inst. 1.

These compose the house of commons, and represent all the commons of England. 4 Inst. 1.

The number of English representatives is five hundred and thirteen, of Scots forty-five, and from Ireland one hundred, in all six hundred and fifty-eight; and every member, though chosen by one particular district, when elected and returned serves for the whole realm; for the end of his coming thither is not particular, but general; not barely to advantage his constituents, but the commonwealth; and therefore he is not bound to consult with, or take the advice of, his constituents upon any particular point, unless he himself thinks it proper or prudent to so do. 1 Black. Com. 159.

II. The manner and time of its assembling.] The parliament commences by the king's writ of summons by the advice of his privy council, agreeable to the rule established before the conquest, that all judicature proceeds from the king. 4 Inst. 4. 1 Bac. Abr. tit. Court of Par. (C)

This writ of summons issues out of chancery, at least forty days before the beginning of a parliament. 4 Inst. 4.

And every lord spiritual and temporal of full age, ought to have a distinct writ of summons ex debito justitiæ. 4 Inst. 1, 4.

But a first summons of a peer to parliament differs from an ordinary summons, because in the first summons he is called up by his proper christian and surname, not having the name and title of dignity in him till he has sat; but after he has sat, the name of dignity becomes part of his name; but the writ of creation in all other things, is the same with the ordinary writ that calls him. Co. Lit. 16.

Also the judges of the realm, and barons of the exchequer of the coif, are summoned as assistants to, and attendants upon, the house of lords to advise and assist them when required, but not to have voices. 4 Inst. 4, 50. Simeon's L. Elect. 31.

So also are the attorney and solicitor general. 4 Inst. 4. Comyns's Dig. tit. Par. D. (18)

So also the masters in chancery were used to be summoned by writ as assistants to the house of lords, so late as in Lord Coke's time: but they now only attend of course, and have a place assigned to them in the house, and are not summoned. 4 Inst. 4. Simeon's L. Elec. 29.

And indeed the present summons of assistants by writ seems little more than a matter of form, kept alive for the sake of some official perquisite; for though writs of summons still issue to the attorney and solicitor general (on which there are fees of office amounting in all to about a guinea), no return is ever made; and yet like masters they attend the house of lords, and have places assigned to them. Simeon's L. Elec. 30.

A writ of summons must also be directed to every sheriff of every county in England and Wales, for the choice and election of knights, citizens, and burgesses, within each of their respective counties. 4 Inst. 6, 10. Co. Lit. 109. b.

So a writ of summons must issue out to the lord warden of the Cinque Ports, for the election of the barons for the same, who in law are burgesses; except for the election at Dover, where it is delivered to the constable of Dover. 4 Inst. 6. Simeon's L. El. 117, 118.

In the counties palatine, the writ issues to the chamberlain, his lieutenant or deputy, who makes his precept to the sheriff; and in that of Durham, it issues to the bishop or his chancellor, who in like manner makes his precept to the sheriff. 34 & 35 H. 8. c. 13. 25 Car. 2. c. 9. Simeon's L. El. 117.

These writs are original writs, and therefore cannot be enlarged, restrained, or varied, in any material point, but by act of parliament. 3 Inst. 10. Simeon's L. El. 21.

At the return of the writ, the parliament cannot begin but by the royal presence of the king, either in person or by representation; by representation two ways; either by a guardian of England, by letters patent under the great seal when the king is out of the realm; or by commission under the great seal of England, to certain lords of parliament, representing the person of the king, he being within the realm, in respect of some infirmity. 4 Inst. 6.

But if the king pleases that the parliament shall not begin at the day of the return of the writ of summons, a writ patent under the great seal tested before the day of the return, and directed to the lords spiritual and temporal, and knights, citizens, and burgesses, shall be read at the day of the return in the upper house before the lords, and other commons there assembled, whereby the parliament shall be prorogued to another day; and in such case the parliament does not begin till the day to which it is prorogued. 4 Inst. 7.

And every lord spiritual and temporal, and every knight, citizen, and burgess, shall upon summons come to the parliament, except he can reasonably and honestly excuse himself; or he shall be amerced, that is, respectively a lord by the lords, and one of the commons by the commons. 5 Ric. 2. st. 2. c. 4. 4 Inst. 43.

Also for departing without licence the lords may fine one of their body; and so of the house of commons. 4 Inst. 44.

III. Elections.] In a free state where the territories are small, and its citizens easily known, a part of the legislative power may be exercised by the people in their aggregate or collective capacity; but this will be highly inconvenient, when the public territory is extended to any considerable degree, and the number of citizens increased. It is therefore very wisely contrived in so large a state as ours, that the people should do that by their representatives, which it is impracticable to perform in person. 1 Black. Com. 158, 159.

But as it is of the utmost importance to regulate by whom, and in what manner the suffrages are to be given, the laws have very strictly guarded against the usurpation or abuse of this power, by many salutary provisions. 1 Black. Com. 170.

These, according to the order observed by Blackstone and other writers, may be reduced to these three points:—

i. The qualifications of the electors.

ii. The qualifications of the elected.

iii. The proceedings at elections.

i. The qualifications of the electors.] The qualifications of the electors may be considered, First, as they regard electors in general; Secondly, as they regard electors of knights of the shire in particular; Thirdly, as they regard electors of citizens and burgesses in particular.

First; as to the qualifications of electors in general.] No peer hath a right to vote at elections. Comyn's Dig. tit. Peers Par. (D. 10.)

And there is a resolution of the house of commons, that it is a high infringement of the liberties and privileges of the commons of Great Britain for any lord of parliament, or any lord lieutenant of a county, to concern themselves in the elections of members to serve for the commons in parliament. Simeon's L. El. 158.

Women, ideots, and madmen, are absolutely disqualified from the exercise of this privilege. Simeon, L. El. 50.

And no persons shall be admitted to vote under the age of twenty-one years. 7 & 8 Will. 3. c. 25. s. 8.

Aliens also can have no vote. Simeon's L. El. 50.

But denizens, from the time of denization, and naturalized persons, acquire this right, being then king's subjects, and, after their adoption, supposed as much interested in the choice of representatives, by whom their lives and property are to be bound, as the natives themselves. Simeon's L. El. 50.

No person convicted of wilful and corrupt perjury, or subornation of perjury, shall be capable of voting in any election of a member to serve in parliament. 2 Geo. 2. c. 24. s. 6.

No person who shall refuse to take the oaths of allegiance and supremacy, or abjuration, or in case he be a quaker, who shall refuse to take the declaration of fidelity, and affirm the effect of the oath of abjuration, the same being tendered by the sheriff or returning officer, who is to administer the same at the request of any candidate, shall be capable of voting at any election of any knight, citizen, burgess or baron. 7 & 8 Will. 3. c. 27. s. 19.

And by 22 Geo. 3. c. 41, no commissioner, collector, supervisor, gauger, or other officer or person whatsoever, concerned or employed in the excise, or any part thereof; nor any commissioner, collector, comptroller, searcher, or other officer or person whatsoever, concerned or employed in the customs, or any part thereof; nor any commissioner, officer, or other person concerned or employed in managing any of the duties on stamps; nor any person appointed by the commissioners for distributing of stamps; nor any commissioner, officer, or other person employed in managing any of the duties on salt; nor any surveyor, collector, comptroller, inspector, officer, or other person employed in collecting, managing, or receiving the duties on windows or houses; nor any postmaster, postmasters general, or their deputies, or any person employed under them in the revenue of the post-office, or any part thereof; nor any captain, master, or mate of any ship, packet, or other vessel, employed by the postmaster general in conveying the mail to and from foreign ports, shall be capable of giving his vote for the election of any knight of the shire, commissioner, citizen, burgess, or baron, to serve in parliament; and if any person, hereby made incapable of voting, shall nevertheless presume to give his vote, during the time he shall hold, or within twelve months after he shall cease to hold or execute any of the offices aforesaid, contrary to this act, such votes shall be void; and every person so offending shall forfeit 100*l.* one moiety to the informer, and the other to be immediately paid into the hands of the treasurer of the county, to be disposed of to such purposes as the next general quarter session shall think fit; to be recovered by any person that shall sue in any court of record at Westminster. s. 1.

But nothing in this act shall extend to any commissioner of the land tax, or officer acting under the appointment of such commissioners, for the purpose of assessing, collecting, or managing the land-tax; nor to any office held by letters patent for any estate of inheritance or freehold. s. 2, 3.

And no person shall be liable to any forfeiture, unless prosecution be commenced within twelve months. s. 5.

And no collector, supervisor, gauger, or other person employed in the collecting or managing the duties of excise; nor any commissioner, or collector, or other persons employed in collecting or managing the customs; nor the postmaster-general or his deputies, or any person employed under him in the revenue of the post-office, shall, by word, message, or writing, or in any other manner, endeavour to persuade any elector to give, or dissuade any elector from giving his vote, for the choice of any knight, citizen, burgess, or baron to serve in parliament, and every person offending therein shall forfeit 100*l.* one moiety to the informer, the other moiety to the poor of the parish, to be recovered by any person that shall sue for the same in any court at Westminster; and every person convicted on any such suit, shall become disabled of bearing any office relative to the said duties or any other place under the king. 5 & 6 Will. & Mar. c. 20. s. 48. 12 & 13 Will. 3. c. 10. s. 91. 9 Ann. c. 10. s. 44.

Secondly; as to the qualifications of electors of knights of the shire in particular.] The first statute that requires a qualification of landed property is 8 Hen. 6, c. 7, and thereby every elector of a knight of the shire shall have land or tenement to the value of 40*s.* by the year at least above reprizes, and the sheriff shall have power to examine upon oath every such chooser how much he may expend by the year.

And by 10 Hen. 6. c. 2, the said 40*s.* a year shall be freehold.

Also by 18 Geo. 2. c. 18, no person shall vote in any such election, without having a freehold estate in the county for which he votes, of the yearly value of 40*s.* over and above all rents and charges, payable out of the same. s. 5.

But no public or parliamentary tax, county, church, or parish rate, or any other tax to be assessed upon any county or division, shall be deemed any charge, payable out of any freehold estate, within the meaning of this act. s. 6.

And as certain persons who held their estate by copy of court roll, pretended, notwithstanding the above acts, that they had a right to vote, it is expressly enacted by 31 Geo. 2. c. 14, that no person who holds his estate by copy of court roll, shall be intitled thereby to vote at the election of any knight of a shire; and if he do, such vote shall be void; and every person so voting shall forfeit to any candidate, for whom such vote shall not have been given, and who shall first sue for the same, 50*l.* to be recovered, with costs, by action, to be brought within nine months in any court of record at Westminster, wherein the proof shall lie on the defendant. s. 1, 3.

But according to Comyns, if a man has a freehold in ancient demesne, he may elect. Comyn's Dig. tit. Par. (D. 10.)

And although it is laid down generally by lord Coke that freeholders in ancient demesne have no right to vote, yet Mr. Simeon says, that the practice for a great many years, seems to have been agreeable to what is laid down by Comyns; and he observes, that Blackstone, in his accurate and learned treatise upon the right of copyholders to vote, does not exclude freeholders in ancient demesne from the exercise of that franchise; and the above act of parliament, which was framed on his doctrine, declares the incapacity in those only who hold their estates by copy of court roll; but he very justly adds, that the difficulty of these cases arises from the nice discrimination between customary freeholds, which are not held by copy of court roll, and estates which are so held. See Simeon's L. El. 82, 83.

No person shall have any vote in electing members for any trust estate, or mortgage, unless such trustee, or mortgagee, be in actual possession or receipt of the rents; but the mortgagor or cestui que trust in possession may vote for the estate. 7 & 8 Will. 3. c. 25. s. 7.

And all conveyances of any hereditaments, in order to multiply votes, or to split the interest in any houses or lands among several persons, to enable them to vote at elections of members, are declared to be void, and no more than one voice shall be admitted for one and the same house or tenement. 7 & 8 Will. 3. c. 25. s. 7.

But the fraudulent erection of freeholds, for the purpose of giving votes, having increased, notwithstanding the last mentioned act, the legislature was again obliged to interpose, and it was accordingly enacted by 10 Ann. c. 23, that all conveyances to qualify persons for voting, shall be against those who executed the same, free and absolute, and discharged of all trusts, conditions, and other defeasances; and all bonds, covenants, or other securities for the defeating or recovering the same shall be void. s. 1.

And every person who shall make such conveyance, or being privy to such purposes, shall prepare the same, and every person, who by colour thereof shall give any vote, at any election of knights of a shire, shall forfeit 40*l.* to any one who shall sue for the same, to be recovered with costs in any court at Westminster. 10 Ann. c. 23. s. 1.

And no person shall vote for a knight of the shire, without having been in the actual possession of the estate for which he votes, or in the receipt of the rents and profits thereof for his own use above twelve calendar months, unless the same came to him within the time aforesaid, by descent, marriage, marriage settlement, devise, or promotion to any benefice in a church, or by promotion to any office, on pain, if he vote contrary hereto, to forfeit to any candidate, for whom such vote shall not have been given, 40*l.* to be recovered, with costs by action of debt in any court at Westminster, within nine calendar months, and the proof shall lie on the defendant. 18 Geo. 2. c. 18. s. 5, 14.

Also no person shall vote more than once at the same election, under the like penalty, except that in this case the proof is not on the defendant. 18 Geo. 2. c. 18. s. 5, 14.

By 20 Geo. 3. c. 17, no person shall vote for electing of any knight of the shire to serve in parliament within England or Wales, (or for any member to serve in parliament for the borough of Cricklade in Wilts. 22 Geo. 3. c. 21.) in respect of any messuages, lands, or tenements, which have not for six months next before such election been charged towards a land tax (in case such aid be then granted), "in the name of the "person who shall claim to vote at such "election, or in the name of his tenant "actually occupying the same as tenant" of the owner thereof. s. 1.

But this act, with respect to such rating and assessing, shall not extend to annuities or fee farm rents (duly registered) issuing out of any premises, rated as aforesaid; nor shall the same extend to any person who became entitled by descent, marriage, marriage settlement, devise, or promotion to any benefice in a church, or by promotion to an office, within twelve months next before such election; but such person shall be entitled to vote, if the premises have been within two years before rated to the land tax, in the name of the person through whom such person shall derive his title; or in the name of some predecessor, within two years before such election, or in the name of the tenant actually occupying. s. 2.

And the commissioners of the land tax, at their meetings for appointing assessors, shall cause to be delivered to each of the assessors, a printed form of an assessment, as follows: s. 3.

And if any person shall occupy any premises belonging to different owners, the same shall be distinctly rated in such assessments, that the proportion of the land tax to be paid by each owner may be ascertained. s. 3.

And the said assessors are to make their assessments according to the said form; and shall make three duplicates thereof; and shall (fourteen days before such assessment shall be delivered to the commissioners cause one of the duplicates, or a fair copy thereof, to be stuck up upon one of the doors of the church or chapel of the place for which such assessment shall be made; but in case such assessment shall be made for an extra parochial or other place, where there is no church or chapel, then such assessment shall be stuck up upon one of the doors of the church or chapel next adjoining. s. 3.

"But as doubts had arisen whether if "the above form was not strictly pursued, "the suffrage of the party claiming to vote "would be admissible;" it is enacted by another statute that nothing in this act of 20 Geo. 3. c. 17, shall extend to prevent any person from voting for any premises assessed, for six months next before such election, towards a land tax, in the name of the person claiming to vote, or if they have come by descent, marriage, marriage settlement, devise, or promotion to any office, within twelve months before such election, if they have been within two years before assessed to the land tax; in the name of the predecessor of such person claiming to vote, although the name of the tenant actually occupying such premises shall not be inserted in such assessment according to the above form. See 30 Geo. 3. c. 35. s. 1.

Neither shall the said act prevent any person from voting for any premises, assessed, for six months next before such election, in the name of a tenant actually occupying the same, although the name of the person claiming to vote, or the person through whom he derives his title, or his predecessor, shall not be inserted in the assessment, according to the said form. 30 Geo. 3. c. 35. s. 2.

And the said duplicates shall be delivered to the land tax commissioners, at their meeting for the receipt of assessments. 20 Geo. 3. c. 17. s. 4.

And if the name of any owner entitled to vote, shall not appear in such assessment, such person may appeal to the commissioners, giving notice thereof in writing to one of the assessors; and the commissioners, on cause shewn, shall amend the duplicates. 20 Geo. 3. c. 17. s. 3.

And any person dissatisfied, by any determination of the commissioners, may appeal to the next general quarter sessions, giving ten days notice to one of the commissioners, signing the duplicate, and also to one of the assessors; and such sessions are, upon examination upon oath, to hear and determine such appeal, and to amend such assessments where necessary; and also to award costs; and by warrant to levy the same by distress and sale, rendering the overplus, after deducting the charges. 20 Geo. 3. c. 17. s. 10.

And if the commissioners or sessions upon appeal, find it requisite to insert the names of any person omitted, such person shall be deemed to be rated, as effectually as if the name had been originally inserted. 20 Geo. 3. c. 17. s. 11.

And the commissioners are to cause one of the duplicates so amended (after sealed and signed by them, or three of them) to be returned to the assessors; and such assessors are to deliver such duplicate, so amended, within ten days of the receipt thereof, to one of the chief constables of the hundred, taking his receipt for the same; and such chief constable is to deliver such duplicate upon oath, without any alteration, at the next general quarter sessions, in open court, the first day of such sessions, to the clerk of the peace, to be by him filed amongst the records. 20 Geo. 3. c. 17. s. 3.

And if any assessor shall neglect to deliver such duplicate so amended, to such chief constable, or if such chief constable neglect to deliver the same to such clerk of the peace, or shall wilfully alter or deface such duplicate, he shall forfeit 5*l.* 20 Geo. 3. c. 17. s. 4.

And at the Michaelmas sessions in every year, the clerk of the peace or his deputy shall, before the conclusion of such sessions, examine whether the duplicates of all the assessments for the county shall have been delivered for that year; and if it shall appear that any have not been delivered, then he shall report the same to the court, and the court shall immediately impose the said fine of 5*l.* upon such chief constables; and the said clerk of the peace shall give to such chief constables immediate notice of such fine; and if the same is not immediately paid, the justices in quarter sessions shall, by order of the court, issue a warrant of distress for the recovery thereof, directed to the constable of the parish where such chief constable shall live; and such warrant shall be delivered by the clerk of the peace, to such constable, who shall levy such fine by distress and sale, rendering the overplus after deducting the charges. 20 Geo. 3. c. 17. s. 5.

But if such chief constable shall voluntarily make oath at such sessions, that such duplicate was not delivered by the assessor, then the said fine shall be put upon such assessor or assessors; and the justices in quarter sessions shall, by order of court, issue a warrant of distress for the recovery thereof, directed to the petty constable, or such other person as they shall think proper; and also shall, by order of court, require the chief constables, or one of them, to give notice to such assessor, that such fines have been set; and such chief constables are to serve such notices upon such assessors within fourteen days after such sessions; and if such assessors shall not deliver such duplicate, or the chief constable's receipt for the same, to the clerk of the peace, or his deputy, within ten days after being served with such notice, then the said clerk of the peace shall deliver such warrant of distress against the assessor or assessors, to the person to whom the same shall be directed, who is to levy the said fine by distress and sale, rendering the overplus after deducting the charges. 20 Geo. 3. c. 17. s. 6.

But if such assessor shall within ten days after such notice, produce to the clerk of the peace, or his deputy, the receipt of such chief constable for such duplicate, then such clerk of the peace shall deliver the warrants against such chief constables, or such of them who shall have signed such receipt, to the proper constable to whom the same shall be directed, that the same may be executed as aforesaid, and the warrant for levying the fine upon such assessors shall not be executed. 20 Geo. 3. c. 17. s. 7.

And the fines imposed upon such chief constables and assessors shall, after recovered, be paid to the treasurer of the county, to be applied as part of the county stock. 20 Geo. 3. c. 17. s. 8.

And whenever any assessment shall not have been made by the assessor and returned to the chief constable, and by the chief constable to the clerk of the peace, by the neglect of any person concerned therein, the justices at quarter sessions, or two justices out of sessions, may order such assessment forthwith to be made in manner aforesaid. 20 Geo. 3. c. 17. s. 9.

And it shall be lawful for all persons to inspect the duplicates in the hands of such clerk of the peace, or his deputy, paying for every search 1*s.*; and the clerk of the peace is, upon demand, to deliver a true copy of all such duplicates, or of such part of which a copy shall be demanded, to any person who shall demand the same, signed by him or his deputy, for which copy he shall be paid at the rate of sixpence for every three hundred words or figures; which said duplicates, and also a true copy of them signed as aforesaid, and also the duplicate of any assessment in the possession of the commissioners of land tax, or the receiver general, or a copy of the said duplicates signed by such commissioners, and purporting the same to be a true copy, shall be admitted as legal evidence. 20 Geo. 3. c. 17. s. 13.

And such clerk of the peace, or his deputy, shall, upon reasonable notice, attend at every election of a knight of the shire, with the original duplicates, at the request of any candidate; such candidate paying him a satisfaction for such attendance, at the rate of two guineas per day, together with an allowance of 1*s.* 6*d.* a mile for his journey, from his place of abode, to and from the place of election. 20 Geo. 3. c. 17. s. 14.

And after issuing any writ or precept for such election, the clerk of the peace, or his deputy, shall attend gratis, from day to day, from nine in the forenoon to three in the afternoon in each day, at the place where the records of the county are kept, from the time of the delivery of such notice, to the day immediately preceding the day of election, for the purpose of receiving applications for the inspection of such duplicates, and for making copies of them. 20 Geo. 3. c. 17. s. 15.

And if any clerk of the peace, or his deputy, shall neglect or refuse to permit such duplicates to be inspected, or to deliver any copy thereof, or attend where the records are kept, or at any county election, with such duplicates, he shall forfeit 500*l.* to the party aggrieved, provided such action is brought within two months; and if no action is brought within the said time, then to any person who shall sue for the same within twelve months. 20 Geo. 3. c. 17. s. 16.

The said penalty to be recovered with full costs, in any court at Westminster. 20 Geo. 3. c. 17. s. 18.

And he shall also forfeit his office, the same to be absolutely void upon being convicted; and he shall be rendered incapable of being again appointed a clerk of the peace, or deputy, or of acting as such in any county, riding or division whatsoever. 20 Geo. 3. c. 17. s. 16.

And final judgment upon any verdict obtained against such clerk, or deputy, for the recovery of such forfeiture, shall be deemed a sufficient conviction, without any other prosecution whatsoever; and immediately after such judgment, the said office shall be absolutely void. 20 Geo. 3. c. 17. s. 17.

As some nice questions had been raised upon the husband's right of voting in right of his wife's dower before actual assignment, which in little freeholds is scarce ever done; it is also enacted by the said 20 Geo. 3. c. 17, that where any woman, the widow of a person tenant in fee or in tail, shall be entitled to dower, out of the freehold estate of which her husband died seised, and shall intermarry with a second husband, such second husband shall be entitled to vote in respect of such dower, if such dower shall be of the clear yearly value of 40*s.* although the same has not been set out by metes or bounds, if such husband shall be in the actual receipt of the profits of such dower, and the estate from whence the same issues is rated to the land tax in the name of the actual owner. s. 12.

The stat. 7 & 8 Will. 3. c. 25. s. 7, to prevent the splitting of freeholds extends to freeholders in cities and towns, counties of themselves. Simeon's L. El. 64.

And by 13 Geo. 2. c. 20, the provisions and penalties of the stat. 10 Ann. c. 23, against fraudulent conveyances are expressly extended to freeholders, and freeholds in cities and towns, counties of themselves.

Also by 19 Geo. 2. c. 28, no person shall vote for a member to serve for a city or town, which is a county of itself, in right of any freehold messuages, lands or tenements, of the yearly value of 40*s.* which have not been charged or assessed to the land tax twelve calendar months before such election, with an exception of persons voting in right of any rents, messuages, or seats belonging to any offices which have not been usually assessed to the land tax: and it is further provided, that the acting commissioners of the land tax for the time being, or any three or more of them, at their meetings, shall sign and seal one other duplicate of the copies of the assessment or assessments, to be delivered by them to the assessors after all appeals determined; and shall deliver, or cause the same to be delivered to the persons officiating as clerks of the peace within the districts of the said cities and towns, being counties of themselves, to be by them kept among the records of the sessions; to which all persons may resort and inspect the same, paying sixpence, and the said persons officiating as clerks of the peace, or their deputies, shall give copies of the said duplicates or any part thereof to any person who shall require the same, paying after the rate of sixpence for every three hundred words. s. 3.

By 3 Geo. 3. c. 24, no person shall vote for any knight of a shire, citizen, or burgess for England, in respect of any annuity or rent charge issuing out of freehold lands or tenements, unless a certificate upon oath be entered with the clerk of the peace or town clerk, twelve months before the first day of the election. s. 1.

And no person shall vote in respect of such annuity or rent charge which shall come by descent, marriage, marriage settlement, devise, or presentation to a benefice in church, or promotion to an office within twelve calendar months next before such election, unless a certificate upon oath, or affirmation if a quaker, shall have been entered with the clerk of the peace, town clerk or other officer as aforesaid, before the first day of such election. s. 2.

And the form of such certificate is directed to be as follows. s. 1, 2.

"I, A B, of ——— am really and bona "fide seized of an annuity or rent charge, "for my own use and benefit, of the clear "yearly value of forty shillings, above all "rents and charges payable out of the "same, wholly issuing out of freehold lands, "tenements or hereditaments, belonging to "C. D. of ——— situate, lying, and being "in the parish, township, or place, or in the "parishes, townships, or places of E, in the " county of ———, without any trust, " agreement, matter, or thing to the con- " trary notwithstanding; and I, or the per- " son or persons under whom I claim, was " or were seised of the said annuity or rent " charge, before the first day of June, one " thousand seven hundred and sixty-three " [or in the case of the same coming by " descent, marriage, or the like, say, And " I became seised of the said annuity or " rent charge on the ——— day of ——— " last past by descent, (or otherwise as the " case may happen)]."

And no person shall vote in respect of any such annuity or rent charge to be granted after the said first day of June, 1763, unless a memorial of the grant shall have been registered with the clerk of the peace, town clerk, or other public officer, having the custody of the records, where the premises out of which such annuity or rent charge issues, shall be twelve calendar months at least before the first day of such election:

Which memorial shall be wrote on parchment, and directed to such clerk of the peace, town clerk, or other public officer, and shall be under the hand and seal of the grantor, and attested by two witnesses, one whereof to be one of the witnesses to the execution; which witness shall upon oath before such clerk prove the sealing and delivering of such grant, and the signing and sealing of such memorial:

Which memorial shall contain the day and year of the date, and the names, additions, and abodes of the parties and witnesses, and all the premises out of which the annuity or rent charge issues, and the place where they lie:

And such grant shall, at the time of entering such memorial, be produced to such clerk, who shall thereon indorse a certificate, in which shall be mentioned the day and year on which such memorial shall be so entered. s. 3.

And no person shall vote by reason of any assignment of such annuity or rent charge, without like certificate, entry, and memorial of such grant and assignment as in case of an original grant. s. 4.

And the clerk of the peace or other officer shall keep a book for entering such certificate and memorial, and shall be allowed for the entry of every certificate 1*s.*; and of every memorial 2*s.*; and for every search 1*s.* and every person may inspect the certificates, memorials, and entries; and the clerk of the peace or other officer is to give copies thereof to any persons requiring the same, and paying for such copy if it contains no more than two hundred words 6*d.* and so on in proportion. s. 5.

And such clerks of the peace or officers may administer an oath when required, and true copies of the certificate and memorials attested by the clerk of the peace or other officer, shall be legal evidence. s. 5.

But a memorial of such grant or assignment as shall be executed in any place not within forty miles of the office of the clerk of the peace or other officer aforesaid, shall be registered by him, in case an affidavit sworn, or affirmation made before one of the judges of Westminster-hall, or a master in chancery, ordinary or extraordinary, be brought with such memorial, wherein one of the witnesses to the grant shall swear that he saw the same executed. s. 6.

And the clerk of the peace, or other officer aforesaid, shall, upon notice, attend at any election with the book of such entries as aforesaid, at the request of any candidate, he making satisfaction for such attendance. s. 7.

And any clerk of the peace, or officer aforesaid, guilty of any wilful neglect, misdemeanor or fraudulent practice, contrary to this act, shall forfeit 100*l.* to the person who shall sue for the same within twelve months in any court of record at Westminster. s. 8, 9.

In the construction of the above act, it has been determined by a committee of the house of commons, that a person who was entitled to a salary of 20*l.* a year issuing out of the great tithes of the parish, had a right to vote, although he had not registered it as an annuity; and the same committee held unanimously, that neither reserved nor fee farm rents need be registered, as not being within the meaning of the act. Simeon's L. El. 67.

Thirdly; as to the qualifications of electors of citizens and burgesses in particular.] The right and qualification of voters in cities, towns, and boroughs, is various, depending intirely on the several charters, customs, and constitutions of the respective places, as have prevailed in them time immemorial. 1 Black. Com. 174.

These general rights may be ranked under three divisions: 1st. the right by tenure, which includes the burgage tenures; 2dly. right by charter, which includes all cases where the right of voting is in a body corporate; and 3dly. right popular, which last class comprehends all the other rights of voting. Simeon's L. El. 94.

1. It is part of the constitution of England, that burgage tenure boroughs shall elect members to serve in parliament: and such right of election is a privilege annexed to the burgage land, and is a real privilege. 6 Mod. Rep. 51, 52. 2 Lord Raym. 951.

And this real privilege cannot be lost though the tenements are destroyed, so long as the evidence of the right remains. Simeon's L. El. 94, 95.

2. The corporate right of election is prescribed by charters, which are mostly existing. Simeon's L. El. 97.

3. Under the third class of rights popular, are included every species of right not falling within the other two. The most general and largest right of this kind is that which is comprehended under the words commonalty, populacy, or potwallers, which mean much the same. Simeon's L. El. 100.

Respecting these rights infinite disputes have arisen, and it was enacted by 2 Geo. 2. c. 24, that all votes shall be deemed legal which should be so declared by the last determination in the house of commons, which determination concerning any city, borough, or place, was to be final to all intents and purposes. s. 4.

But this clause has been since repealed by the statute 28 Geo. 3. c. 52. s. 31, so far as it relates to any determination to be made in the house of commons, subsequent to that act, and the power of finally concluding the right by determination is now transferred to and vested in the select committees of the house of commons, for it is by that act enacted, that the report of the select committee respecting the right of election, or respecting the right of appointing the returning officer, shall be entered in the journals of the house, and notice thereof sent by the speaker to the sheriff or returning officer; a true copy of which notice shall by such officer be affixed to the doors of the county hall or town hall, or of the parish church nearest to the place where such election has usually been held; and such notice shall also be inserted, by order of the speaker, in the next London Gazette. 28 Geo. 3. c. 52. s. 1.

But any person may within twelve months after the day on which such report shall be made to the house, or within fourteen days after the commencement of the next session, petition the house to be admitted to oppose that right which shall have been deemed valid in the judgment of such committee. s. 26.

And if no such petition shall be presented within the time above limited, the judgment of such committee shall be conclusive in all subsequent elections for that place, to which the same shall relate. s. 27.

Alms received within a year before the election is held a disqualification at common law. Simeon's L. El. 88.

For this dependent situation, and want of the common necessaries of life, renders it probable that the party voting will not exercise a free choice. Simeon's L. El. 88.

But this, though laid down as a general position, must be confined to elections for citizens and burgesses only; as freeholders qualified within the statutes, at the time of election, claim their privilege by statute law, which has made no exception. Simeon's L. El. 88, 89.

So persons claiming a right to vote by a burgage tenure in their possession at the election, are not, as it should seem, disqualified by the receipt of alms within the year, unless alms-men are excepted by usage, or the last determination. Simeon's L. El. 89.

And the word alms, in this case, seems to be understood to be parish relief. See Simeon's L. El. 91.

For where there is a charitable foundation, in which the members have a permanent interest, as in the case of Chelsea and Greenwich pensioners, and the like; this does not disable them from voting, for it is their estate. See Simeon's L. El. 91.

Also, where the right of election is large enough to comprehend certificate persons, and there is no special usage to the contrary, such persons have a right to vote; for though they are not parishioners, they are not paupers, and may be very substantial persons. Simeon's L. El. 93.

By 3 Geo. 3. c. 15, (which is to be read at the time of election by the returning officer, openly, where the right of election is in the whole or in part, in freemen, immediately after the reading of the act for preventing bribery), no person claiming to vote as a freeman, at any election for any city, town, port or borough, where such voter's right is as a freeman only, shall be admitted to vote, unless he shall have been admitted to the freedom twelve months before the first day of election: and if he vote contrary hereto, he shall forfeit 100*l.* to him who shall inform, to be recovered, with costs, in any court at Westminster, within one year; and the vote given shall be void. s. 1, 5, 6, 7.

But nothing herein shall extend to any person entitled to freedom by birth, marriage, or servitude, nor to the cities of London or Norwich. s. 2. 8.

And if any mayor, or other officer of any corporation, or other person whatsoever, shall wilfully antedate, or cause to be antedated, any admission, he shall forfeit 500*l.* to him who shall inform, to be recovered as above. s. 3.

And the mayor, or any other officer of any corporation, having the custody of the records, shall, upon the demand of any candidate, or his agent, or two freemen, on the payment of one shilling, permit them between nine in the morning and three in the afternoon, at any time before, and within one month after the election, to inspect the books and papers wherein admissions are entered, and have copies thereof, paying a reasonable charge for writing the same; and such books and papers shall, if demanded by such candidate, be produced by such officer at the election, and be referred to in case of dispute; and if such officer shall refuse or neglect to do what is above required, he shall in every case forfeit 100*l.* to him who shall inform to be recovered as aforesaid. s. 4.

By 26 Geo. 3. c. 100, no person shall vote for any city or borough, as "an inhabitant "paying scot and lot, or as an inhabitant "householder, housekeeper, and pot-waller "legally settled, or as an inhabitant house-"holder, housekeeper, and potwaller, or as "an inhabitant-householder resiant, or as "an inhabitant of such city or borough," unless he shall have been actually an inhabitant paying scot and lot, &c. within such city or borough six months previous to the day of election; and if any person shall vote contrary to this act, his vote shall be void, and he shall forfeit to any person who shall sue, 20*l.* to be recovered by action of debt, at Westminster; and in such action the proof of inhabitancy shall lie upon the person against whom the same shall be brought. s. 1.

But nothing in this act shall extend to any person acquiring the possession of any house by descent, marriage, or marriage settlement, or promotion to any office or benefice. s. 1.

And it shall relate only to those persons who claim to exercise the franchise of voting as inhabitants paying scot and lot, or as inhabitants, householders, housekeepers, and potwallers legally settled, or as inhabitants, householders, housekeepers, and potwallers, or as inhabitants householders resiants, or as inhabitants within such cities or boroughs, and shall not extend to any other persons who claim to vote by any other title. s. 2.

II. The qualifications of the elected.] There are some persons who are disqualified and incapable of being elected to that trust, which is the most important, both in its nature and consequences, that can be conferred by subjects upon a fellow citizen in a free country—a voice in the legislation to lay down the rules by which the life, liberty, and the property of the subject is regulated and controuled. Simeon's L. El. 23.

And there are some disqualifications which are general, as arising from a principle acknowledge by the common law of the land, and are implied, though they are not expressed in the parliamentary writ. There are also disqualifications which are special; but which having been introduced, or arisen from circumstances subsequent to the formation of the parliamentary writ, have not been literally made exceptions within it. Simeon's L. El. 23.

Of the first kind is that disqualification, which is grounded on the supposed want of discretion or imbecility. Simeon's L. El. 24.

Thus infants and women are ineligible. 4 Inst. 47. Simeon's L. El. 24.

Persons deaf and dumb are said to be ineligible, and ideots and madmen seem to be clearly so; as having no judgment, and therefore incapable of executing the trust. Simeon's L. El. 24.

Aliens also, as being ignorant of the laws and customs of the realm, and unable or unlikely to promote the interest of the state, to which they are not naturally allied, were always ineligible. 4 Inst. 47. Simeon's L. El. 24.

So though they are made denizens, which gives them in most other respects the rights of subjects from the date of the patent of denization, yet such grant does not make them eligible to parliament. 4 Inst. 47. Simeon's L. El. 24.

Persons naturalized by act of parliament, though unfit to be trusted, yet by the fiction of naturalization, being made completely, in all respects, citizens of the state from their birth, were formerly capable of being elected. 4 Inst. 47. Simeon's L. El. 24.

But by 12 & 13 Will. 3. c. 2, no person born out of the kingdoms of England, Scotland, or Ireland, or the dominions thereunto belonging (although he be naturalized), shall be capable to be a member of either house of parliament. s. 3.

And by 1 Geo. 1. st. 2. c. 4, no person shall hereafter be naturalized, unless in the bill there be a clause or particular words inserted, to declare that such person shall not thereby be enabled to be a member of either house of parliament, nor shall any bill be received in either house of parliament, without such clause, c. 2.

A man attainted for treason or felony cannot be elected. 4 Inst. 47.

But outlawry in civil suits does not render the person outlawed ineligible. Simeon's L. El. 25, 26.

Peers of parliament, who compose a distinct and separate part of the constitution, are, and always were ineligible, and incapable of sitting in the house of commons. Simeon's L. El. 26, 27.

The judges of the King's Bench, Common Pleas, and barons of the Exchequer also, being summoned as assistants to, and attendants upon the house of lords to advise and assist them when required, and being also one of the executive parts of the constitution, are ineligible to the house of commons. 4 Inst. 47. Whitel. 70. Simeon's L. El. 27.

But any who have a judicial place in the duchy court, or other court, ecclesiastical or civil, are eligible. 4 Inst. 47.

And the master of the rolls is not considered as a judge, and therefore there is no doubt but that he is perfectly eligible. Simeon's L. El. 27.

It seems also certain that, at the present day, the attorney-general, and solicitor general, and also masters in chancery, are eligible. Simeon's L. El. 28, 29, 30.

Sheriffs of counties, and mayors and bailiffs of boroughs are not eligible in their respective jurisdictions, as being returning officers. 1 Black. Com. 175.

Neither is a sheriff eligible to a borough, within the county of which he is sheriff at the time of election Simeon's L. El. 43.

But sheriffs of one county are eligible to be knights of another. 1 Black. Com. 175.

Also the sheriff of a county is eligible for a town, which is a county of itself, though lying within the district of which he is sheriff. Simeon's L. El. 43.

And any other under the degree of a baron may be elected knight, citizen, or burgess. 4 Inst. 47.

Such as a knight banneret, or the heir apparent of a peer. 4 Inst. 47. Comyns's Dig tit. Par. (D. 9).

Also, although the eldest sons of Scots peers have been by a great number of resolutions formerly declared incapable of sitting in the house of commons, yet they are now deemed eligible, except for places in Scotland. Simeon's L. El. 31.

No papist shall sit in either house of parliament. 30 Car. 2. st. 2. c. 1.

And every person chosen, before he can take his seat as a member of the house, must take the oaths of supremacy, allegiance, and abjuration, and subscribe the declarations against popery. 30 Car. 2. st. 2. 1 Geo. 1. st. 2. c. 13. s. 1, 16, 17.

It does not appear to be clearly settled, whether prisoners in execution for debt, or persons abroad, are ineligible. Simeon's L. El. 31.

But ambassadors, ministers, officers in the army or navy, or others being abroad at the time of election upon national affairs, are clearly eligible. Upon a contrary doctrine, the most meritorious might be excluded from that trust, which of all others they would be most able to perform, and might best deserve. Par. Deb. 1620. vol. i. p. 40, 50. Simeon's L. El. 32.

Also persons to be elected members of the house of commons must not be of the clergy, for they are represented in convocation. 4 Inst. 47. 1 Black. Com. 175.

And it has been recently declared in positive and express terms by a modern statute, THAT NO person having been ordained a priest or deacon, or being a minister of the church of Scotland, shall be capable of being elected to serve in parliament, as a member of the house of commons. See 41 Geo. 3. sess. 2. c. 63. s. 1.

And if any such person shall be elected, such election and return shall be void. s. 2.

And if any person being elected shall after his election be ordained to the office of priest, or deacon, or become a minister of the church of Scotland, then the seat of such person shall immediately become void. s. 2.

And if such person shall in any of the aforesaid cases presume to sit or vote he shall forfeit 500*l.* for every day to any person who shall sue for the same, in any of the courts at Westminster, within twelve calendar months. s. 1, 3.

And every person against whom any such penalty shall be recovered shall be from thenceforth incapable of taking, holding, or enjoying any benefice, living or promotion ecclesiastical, or any office of honour or profit under his majesty. s. 2.

And proof of the celebration of divine service according to the rites of the church of England or of the church of Scotland in any church or chapel consecrated or set apart for public worship, shall be prima facie evidence. s. 4.

There is another disqualification for a limited time, as it creates an ineligibility either to a county, city, or borough during the time it lasts, which cannot be beyond the period of one parliament; that is, where a person is declared by a solemn resolution of the house of commons to be incapable of sitting as a member thereof during that parliament. Simeon's L. El. 35.

The exercise of this power of removing a member by a vote of the house of commons seems grounded on continued usage, which is called the law of parliament. Ibid.

And such a power seems naturally, and even necessarily to belong to all aggregate bodies; they cannot exist honourably, and fulfil the object of their creation without it. The use, however, of this power should be regulated by the strictest justice; for if once the violence of party is let loose upon an object, and a representative of the people is discharged of the trust conferred upon by his constituents without good cause, the representative body assumes a power of controul over the constituent body, inconsistent with the freedom of election Ibid.

Any crime which renders a man infamous has been made a ground, sometimes of actual and express expulsion;—sometimes, which amounts to the same, clothed only in gentler terms, of being discharged from sitting as a member of that house. Ibid.

Thus bribery before, as well as since the stat. of king William, has been held a sufficient reason for expulsion; so a breach of trust in an office of the state, or corruption in that office, has been resolved a good cause; and a conviction for an obscene and blasphemous libel, followed by a judgment of the King's Bench, of fine and imprisonment, and actual execution under it, have been determined sufficient to call forth this mark of censure from the house. Simeon's L. El. 36.

But it seems necessary for the house to follow up its resolution of expulsion, by an actual declaration of the party expelled being incapable of sitting as a member, to make him actually ineligible. Ibid.

Any person already a member of parliament, after he is returned, is ineligible for any other place, unless he vacates his former seat. Ibid.

But persons elected before they are returned, are eligible, and frequently are elected for other places also, and they cannot make their election till fourteen days after their return. Simeon's L. El. 38.

It has been held also that a petitioner, depending his petition in parliament, may be chosen for another place. Ibid.

The acceptance of almost any public office of emolument under government, will also by various acts of parliament since the revolution, render the acceptor ineligible. Ibid.

For by 5 Will. & Mar. c. 7, no member of the house of commons shall be concerned, or any other in trust for him, in the collecting or managing any of THE DUTIES ON SALT. s. 57.

And by 11 & 12 Will. 3. c. 2, no member of the house of commons shall be capable of being a commissioner, or farmer of THE DUTY OF EXCISE, or a commissioner for appeals concerning the said duty, or controuling or auditing the account of the said duty, or of holding in his name, or in trust for his use, any office or employment touching the farming, collecting, or managing the said duty. s. 150.

Also by 12 & 13 Will. 3. c. 10, no member of the house of commons shall be capable of being a commissioner or farmer of the CUSTOMS, or of holding or enjoying in his own name, or in trust for him, any place or employment touching the farming, collecting, or managing the customs. s. 89.

And if any member shall enjoy or execute such place or employment, such person is declared incapable of sitting or voting in such parliament. s. 90.

Also no register or deputy register for the east or north riding of Yorkshire; or for Middlesex, shall be capable of being chosen a member of parliament. 2 & 3 Ann. c. 4. s. 22. 6 Ann. c. 35. s. 32. 7 Ann. c. 20. s. 21. 8 Geo. 2. c. 6. s. 37.

Also by 6 Ann. c. 7, no person who shall have in his own name or in trust for him, any new office or place of profit under the crown which since the 25th of October, 1705, have been created, or hereafter shall have been created,—nor any person who shall be a commissioner or sub-commissioner of prizes,—secretary or receiver of prizes,—nor any comptroller of the accompts of the army,—nor any commissioner of the transports,—nor any commissioner of the sick and wounded,—nor any agent for any regiment,—nor any commissioner for wine licences,—nor any governor or deputy governor of the plantations,—nor any commissioner of the navy employed in the out ports,—nor any person having "any pension from the "crown during pleasure, shall be capa-"ble of being elected, or of sitting or vot-"ing as a member of the house of commons:" s. 25.

"And if any person chosen a member of "the house of commons, shall accept of any "office of profit from the crown, his elec-"tion shall be void, and a new writ shall "issue for a new election; but such person "shall be capable of being again elected." s. 27.

But nothing herein shall extend to any member of the house of commons, being an officer in the army or navy, who shall receive any new commission in the army or navy.

And if any person hereby disabled to sit or vote in parliament shall be returned, such election and return are declared to be void: and if any person so disabled shall sit or vote as a member, he shall forfeit 500*l.* to be recovered by such as shall sue. s. 29.

Also by 1 Geo. 1. c. 56, no person having "any pension from the crown for any "term of years," either in his own name, or in trust for him, shall be capable of being elected a member of any house of commons. s. 1.

And if any person who shall have such pension shall presume to sit or vote, he shall forfeit 20*l.* for every day in which he shall sit or vote there, to him who shall sue for the same in any of the courts at Westminster, with costs. s. 2.

Also by 7 Geo. 2. c. 16, no judge of the court of session, or justiciary, or baron of the court of Exchequer in Scotland, shall be capable of being elected a member of the house of commons. s. 4.

And by 32 Geo. 3. c. 53, no justices of the peace appointed under that act to officiate at the seven police offices thereby established in and near the metropolis shall, during their continuance in such appointment, be capable of being elected, or of sitting as members of the house of commons. s. 13.

Also by 15 Geo. 2. c. 22, no person who shall be a commissioner of the revenue in Ireland,—or commissioner of the navy or victualling offices,—nor any deputies or clerks in any of the said offices,—or in any of the several offices of the lord high treasurer, or the commissioners of the treasury, —or of the auditor of the receipt of his majesty's exchequer, or of the tellers of the exchequer, or of the chancellor of the exchequer, or of the lord high admiral, or the commissioners of the admiralty,—or of the paymasters of the army—or of the navy,—or of his majesty's principal secretaries of state,—or of the commissioners of the salt, —or of the stamps,—or of appeals,—or of wine licences,—or of hackney coaches,—or of hawkers and pedlars, nor any person having an office, civil or military, within the island of Minorca, or in Gibraltar, other than officers having commission in any regiment there only, shall be capable of being elected, or of sitting or voting as a member of the house of commons. s. 1.

And if any person thereby disabled shall be returned as a member to serve in parliament, such election and return are hereby declared void. And if any person disabled by this act to be elected, shall presume to sit or vote as a member in the house of commons, he shall forfeit 20*l.* with costs, for every day in which he shall sit or vote in the said house, to such persons who shall sue for the same in any court at Westminster, and shall from thenceforth be incapable of taking or holding any office of honour or profit under his majesty. s. 2.

"But nothing in this act shall exclude the "treasurer or comptroller of the navy, the "secretaries of the treasury, the secretary "to the chancellor of the Exchequer, or se- "cretaries of the Admiralty, the under se- "cretary to any of the principal secretaries "of state, or the deputy paymaster of the "army, or any person having any office or "employment for life, or for so long as he "shall behave himself well in his office." s. 3.

Also by 22 Geo. 3. c. 45, any person who shall, directly or indirectly, himself, or by any person in trust for him, or for his use, or on his account, undertake, execute, hold, or enjoy, in the whole or in part, any contract, agreement, or commission, made or entered into with the commissioners of the treasury, or of the navy or victualling office, or with the master general or board of ordnance, or with any of such commissioners, or with any other person on account of the public service; or shall knowingly furnish, in pursuance of such agreement, any money to be remitted abroad, or any wares to be used in the service of the public, shall be incapable of being elected, or of sitting or voting as a member of the house of commons, during the time he shall enjoy such contract, or any share thereof, or any benefit arising from the same. s. 1.

And if any member shall enter into any such contract as aforesaid, his seat shall be void. s. 2.

And if any person hereby disabled to sit or vote shall nevertheless be returned, such election and return are void; and if any person incapable to be elected shall presume to sit or vote, he shall forfeit 500*l.* with costs for every day, to any person who shall sue within twelve months, and also from thenceforth be incapable of holding any contract, or any share thereof, or benefit from the same. s. 9, 11.

Also in every contract, &c. there shall be inserted an express condition, that no member of the house of commons be admitted to any share, or to any benefit therefrom, and in case any person who shall enter into the same, shall admit any member to any share thereof, or to receive any benefit thereby, he shall forfeit 500*l.* to be recovered, with costs, by any person who shall sue for the same within twelve months. s. 10, 11.

But nothing herein shall extend to any contract, agreement, or commission, by any incorporated trading company, nor to any company now established and consisting of more than ten persons, where it is for the general benefit of such company. s. 3.

By 41 Geo. 3. sess. 2. c. 52. [in pursuance of the stat. 39 & 40 Geo. 3. c. 67. for the union of the kingdoms of Great Britain and Ireland,] it is enacted, that from and after 20th June, 1801, all persons disabled from or incapable of being elected, or sitting and voting in the house of commons of any parliament of Great Britain, shall be disabled from being elected, or sitting and voting in the house of commons of any parliament of the united kingdom, for any county, stewarty, city, borough, cinque port, town, or place in Great Britain. s. 1.

And all persons disabled from or incapable of being elected, or sitting and voting in the house of commons of any parliament of Ireland, shall be disabled from being elected, or sitting and voting in the house of commons of any parliament of the united kingdom, for any county, city, borough, town, or place in Ireland. s. 2.

But nothing in this act shall enable persons, heretofore disabled by any act of the parliament of Great Britain, to sit or vote in the united parliament as knights, citizens, or burgesses for any county, city, borough, town or place in Ireland; nor enable persons heretofore disabled by any acts of the parliament of Ireland, to sit or vote in the said united parliament, as knights, citizens, or burgesses, for any county, stewartry, city, borough, cinque port, town, or place in Great Britain. s. 3.

And no person who shall by himself, or deputy, or any other in trust for him, or for his benefit, take, hold, or execute, any of the offices herein-after mentioned, in Ireland, shall be capable of being elected a member of, or of sitting or voting in any parliament of the united kingdom; viz.—No commissioners of customs, excise, or stamps, or who shall be concerned, directly or indirectly, in the farming, collecting, or managing, any of the duties, (except the commissioners of the treasury, and their secretary), nor any commissioner for determining appeals concerning the duties of customs, excise, or stamps, or for controlling or auditing the account of the said duties (except the auditor general of the exchequer): nor any commissioner of imprest accounts:—nor any agent for any regiment:—nor any person who shall, directly or indirectly, himself, or by any person whatsoever in trust for him, or for his use, or on his account, undertake, execute, hold, or enjoy, in the whole, or in part, any contract, agreement, or commission, under the commissioners of the treasury in Ireland, or with any other persons whomsoever, on account of the public service in Ireland; or who shall furnish, in pursuance of any such agreement, contract, or commission, any money to be remitted abroad, or any wares, or merchandize, to be used in the service of the public (except persons who shall be members of any incorporated trading company, consisting of more than ten persons, as to contracts entered into by such company in its corporate capacity:)—nor any deputies or clerks in any of the offices following; that is to say, the office of lord high treasurer, or the commissioners of the treasury (except the secretary of the treasury); or of the auditor of the receipt of the exchequer, or of the tellers of the exchequer (except the secretary of the chancellor); or of the commissioners of stamps, or of the commissioners of appeals.

And no person who shall have in his own name, or in the name of any person in trust for him or his benefit, any office or place of profit, by the nomination, or by any appointment subject to the approbation of the lord lieutenant or chief governor of Ireland, created after the act of the parliament of Ireland 33 Geo. 3. c. 41. "for securing "the freedom and the independence of the "house of commons," shall be capable of being elected, or of sitting or voting in the house of commons of any parliament of the united kingdom. s. 5.

And if any person hereby disabled, shall nevertheless be elected, such election or return are declared to be void; and if any person so elected, and disabled, shall presume to sit or vote, such person shall incur such pains, penalties, and forfeitures, as are inflicted by the several acts of parliament heretofore passed in Great Britain or Ireland; and if such person shall be disabled by the having, holding, or accepting of any office, in this act particularized, then such person shall forfeit 500*l.* for every day, to be recovered by such person as shall sue for the same in any court of record in any part of the united kingdom. s. 6.

But nothing in this act shall exclude any person having any office for life, or for so long as he shall behave himself well (except the commissioners of imprest accounts, and persons concerned in the managing, collecting, or farming of any duties). s. 8.

And if any person being chosen a member of the house of commons shall accept of any office of profit whatever, immediately from the crown, or by the nomination, or by any other appointment, subject to the approbation of the lord lieutenant or chief governor of Ireland, his seat shall thereupon become vacant, and a writ issued for a new election; but such person (if he is not incapacitated by any thing herein-before contained), shall be capable of being again elected. s. 9.

Also by 43 Geo. 3, c. 25, all the officers belonging to the excise, customs, stamps, and post-office in Ireland, are rendered incapable of voting in any election of members to serve in parliament for Ireland.

Formerly it was required that all members should be inhabitants of the places for which they were chosen; but this having been long disregarded, was at length entirely repealed by stat. 14 Geo. 3. c. 58. 1 Black. Com. 175.

Knights of the shire were also required to be actual knights, or such notable esquires and gentlemen as had estates sufficient to be knights, and by no means of the degree of yeomen. 1 Black. Com. 176.

But no particular rank or quality was necessary for citizens and burgesses. Simeon's L. El. 48.

It is, however, now enacted, by 9 Ann. c. 5, that no person shall be capable to sit or vote as a member of the house of commons for any county, city, borough, or cinque port, who shall not have an estate, freehold or copyhold, for his own life, or some greater estate in law or equity for his own benefit, in lands or hereditaments, over and above what will clear all incumbrances that may affect the same, of the respective annual value hereafter limited, viz. the annual value of 600*l.* for every knight of a shire,—and of 300*l.* for every citizen, burgess, or baron of the cinque ports; and if any person who shall be elected or returned, shall not at the time of such election and return be seised of, or entitled to, such estate, such election and return shall be void. s. 1.

But nothing in this act shall make the eldest son, or heir apparent of any peer, or of any person qualified to serve as knight of a shire, incapable of being elected. s. 2.

Nor shall this act extend to either of the universities. s. 3.

And no person shall be qualified within the meaning of this act, by virtue of any mortgage, whereof the equity of redemption is in any other, unless the mortgagee shall have been in possession seven years before his election. s. 4.

Also every person (except as aforesaid) who shall appear as a candidate, or be proposed to be elected, shall upon reasonable request (at the time of such election, or before the day prefixed in the writ of summons) by any other candidate, or by any two persons having a right to vote at such election, take an oath to the effect following:

"I, A. B. do swear, that I truly and bona "fide have such an estate in law or equity, "to and for my own use and benefit, of or "in lands, tenements, or hereditaments "(over and above what will satisfy and clear "all incumbrances that may affect the "same) of the annual value of 600*l.* above "reprizes, as doth qualify me to be elected "and returned to serve as a member for the "county [illegible] according to the " tenor and true meaning of the act of par" liament in that behalf; and that my said

" lands, tenements, or hereditaments, are " lying or being within the parish, township,
" or precinct, of ——— or, in the several " parishes, townships, or precincts, of ——
" ——— in the county of ——— or, in " the several counties of ——— (as the " case may be)."

And in case such candidate is to serve for any city, borough, or cinque port, then the oath shall relate only to the value of 300*l.* per annum. s. 5.

And the oaths aforesaid may be administered by the sheriff, or under-sheriff, or by the mayor, bailiff, or other officer, who shall take the poll, or make the return, or by any two justices of the peace; and they who shall administer the oaths, are to certify the taking thereof into the Chancery, or Queen's Bench, within three months, under the penalty of 100*l.*: one moiety to the queen, and the other to such as will sue, to be recovered with costs in any court at Westminster; and if any of the candidates shall refuse to take the oath, the election and return shall be void. s. 6.

But no fee shall be taken for administering such oath, or making or filing the certificate, except 1*s.* for administering the oath, and 2*s.* for making the certificate, and 2*s.* for filing the same, under the penalty of 20*l.* to be recovered as aforesaid. s. 7.

Also by 33 Geo. 2. c. 20, every person (except the eldest son or heir apparent of any peer, or of any person qualified to serve as knight of a shire, or the members of either of the universities, s. 3.) who shall be elected a member, shall, before he presumes to vote in the house of commons, or sit there during any debate, after the speaker is chosen, deliver in to the clerk of the house, at the table in the middle of the house, and whilst the house is there duly sitting, with their speaker in the chair, an account, signed by such member, containing the names of the parishes, townships, or precincts, and of the counties in which the lands or hereditaments lie, whereby he makes out his qualification, declaring the same to be of the annual value of 600*l.* above reprizes, if a knight of the shire; and of the annual value of 300*l.* above reprizes, if a citizen, burgess or baron; and shall at the same time take and subscribe the following oath: viz.

" I, A B, do swear, that I truly and bona " fide have such an estate in law or equity,
" and of such value, to and for my own use
" and benefit, of or in lands, tenements, or " hereditaments, over and above what will " satisfy and clear all incumbrances that " may affect the same, as doth qualify me
" to be elected and returned to serve as a " member for the place I am returned for,
" according to the tenor and true meaning
" of the acts of parliament in that behalf;
" and that such lands, tenements, or here-
" ditaments, do lie as described in the paper
" or account signed by me, and now deli" vered to the clerk of the house of com-
" mons. So help me God."

And the house of commons is to administer the said oath and subscription immediately after the party shall have taken the oaths of allegiance, supremacy, and abjuration, at the table. And the said oath and subscription shall be entered in a parchment roll, to be provided by the clerk of the house of commons; and the accounts so signed and delivered to the said clerk shall be filed and kept by him. s. 1.

And if any person presume to sit or vote as a member, before he has delivered in such account, and taken such oath, or shall not be qualified according to 9 Ann. c. 5, and this act; his election shall be void, and a new writ shall be issued to elect another member. s. 2.

Subject to the foregoing restrictions and disqualifications, every subject of the realm is eligible of common right, even against their inclination. 1 Black. Com. 177. Simeon's L. El. 49.

And after their election, they cannot renounce their return, but must serve in the trust conferred upon them, it being a trust not for their own, but for the public benefit. Simeon's L. El. 49.

And for the same reason it is, that the king cannot grant to a subject an exemption from serving as a representative of the people. Simeon's L. El. 49.

iii. The proceedings at elections.] It has been before shewn, that upon the summons of a new parliament a warrant issues signed by the king, and addressed to the lord chancellor or keeper of the great seal, directing him upon the receipt thereof, to cause such and so many writs to be made and sealed, under the great seal, as has been used and accustomed. Simeon's L. El. 114.

And when any new parliament shall be summoned, there shall be forty days between the teste and return of the writ. 7 & 8 Wil. 3. c. 25. s. 1.

But the issuing of the writ by the chancellor is only upon the first summons of the parliament; for if a vacancy happens after the first day of sitting, the house, whether it be actually sitting or not, at the time of such vacancy, has the sole power of ordering such writ to issue. 2 Grey's Deb. 6. Simeon's L. El. 115.

And in order the better to supply any vacancies that may happen during a prorogation or an adjournment, and that the full number of members may be present at its meeting, it is enacted by 24 Geo. 3. c. 26, that the speaker may issue his warrant to the clerk of the crown to make out a new writ for electing a member of the house of commons, in the room of any member who shall die or become a peer, either during the recess, or previous thereto, as soon as he shall receive notice by a certificate thereof, under the hands of two members; but he is to cause notice of receiving of such certificate, to be inserted in the London Gazette, the publisher whereof is to give a receipt for the same, and the speaker is not to issue his warrant until fourteen days after such insertion. s. 2, 3, 9.

Also nothing herein shall enable the speaker to issue such warrant, unless the return of the writ by which the member deceased or become a peer was elected, shall have been brought into the office of the clerk of the crown fifteen days before the end of the last sitting of the house; nor unless the application be made so long before their next meeting, that the writ for election may be issued before the day of such next meeting, nor in case such application be made with respect to any seat vacated by any member against whose election and return a petition was depending, at the time of prorogation or adjournment. s. 4.

And to prevent the inconveniences that may arise from the death of the speaker, or by his seat becoming vacant, or by his absence out of the realm, the speaker is to authorize not more than seven, nor less than three members of the house of commons to execute the powers given to him by this act; and when such number shall be reduced to less than three, a new appointment shall be made; but such persons are only to act, in the case of there being no speaker, or one that is out of the realm, and only while they are members of the house; and the said appointment is to be entered in the journals of the house, and published in the Gazette. s. 5, 6, 7, 8.

As the messenger of the great seal is responsible for the due delivery of the writ, any one may have the carriage of it to whom he chuses to entrust it. Simeon's L. El. 117.

But as to the due delivery thereof, it is expressly enacted by 7 & 8 Wil. 3. c. 25, that as well upon the calling of any new parliament, as upon a vacancy in parliament time, the writ shall be delivered to the proper officer to whom the execution thereof doth belong, and to no other person. s. 4.

And every such officer upon the receipt of the writ shall endorse thereon the day that he received the same, and forthwith make out the precept to each borough, town corporate, or place within his jurisdiction; and within three days (or if it be for the cinque ports within six days, 10 & 11 Will. 3. c. 7. s. 2.) after receipt of the writ deliver such precept to the proper officer of every such borough, town corporate, or place, and to no other person; and such officer upon the back of the precept shall endorse the day of the receipt thereof, in the presence of the party from whom he received such precept, and shall forthwith cause public notice to be given of the time and place of election, and shall proceed to election thereupon within eight days after his receipt of the precept, and give four days notice at least of the day appointed for the election. 7 & 8 Wil. 3. c. 25. s. 1.

And in a city or town being a county of itself, the sheriff, or under sheriff, or such person as he shall depute, shall forthwith on receipt of the writ, give public notice of the time and place of election, and proceed to election thereupon within eight days next after the receipt of the writ, and give three days notice thereof at least, exclusive of the day of receipt of the writ and of the day of election. 19 Geo. 2. c. 28. s. 7.

And he shall allow a cheque-book for every poll-book for each candidate, to be kept by their inspectors at the place of taking the poll. s. 6.

Upon every election of any knight of the shire, the sheriff shall, within two days after the receipt of the writ, cause proclamation to be made, at the place where the ensuing election ought by law to be holden, of a special county court to be there holden for the purpose of such election only, on any day, Sunday excepted, not later from the day of making such proclamation than the sixteenth day, nor sooner than the tenth day, and shall proceed in such election at such special county court in the same manner as if the said election was to be held at a county court, or an adjournment thereof, according to the laws then in being. 25 Geo. 3. c. 84. s. 4.

Provided that the usual county court for all other purposes, or any adjournment thereof, may be held and proceeded in by the sheriff, in the same manner, and at the same times and places as if the writ for the election of a knight of the shire had not been received. Ibid.

And all notices to be given of the time and place of any election for members to serve in parliament, shall be publicly given at the usual place or places within the hours of eight o'clock in the forenoon and four o'clock in the afternoon, from 25th October to 25th of March inclusive, and within the hours of eight o'clock in the forenoon, and six o'clock in the afternoon, from 25th of March to 25th October inclusive, and not otherwise: and no notice shall be valid for any purposes whatsoever, which shall not be published in manner aforesaid. 33 Geo. 3. c. 64.

And upon every election of any knight of the shire, the sheriff shall hold his county court for the election at the most public and usual place of election, and where the same has most usually been for forty years. 7 & 8 Will. 3. c. 25. s. 3.

And the sheriff shall not adjourn such county court to any other place without the consent of the candidates. s. 5.

But it shall be lawful for the sheriff of the county of Southampton, after any poll for the said county shall have closed at Winchester, and which shall always be closed within fifteen days at most, to adjourn the poll to Newport in the Isle of Wight, in case the same shall be required by one of the candidates, so that such adjourned poll shall commence within four days from the close of the poll at Winchester, and shall not continue longer than three days. 25 Geo. 3. c. 84. s. 16.

The writ having been delivered to the sheriff as before directed, and notice of the time and place of election given in manner aforesaid, the sheriff must by stat. 23 Hen. 6. c. 14. s. 2, under the penalty of 100*l.* to the king, and 100*l.* to him who will sue against him, his executors or administrators, with costs, proceed to the election of every knight of the shire betwixt the hours of eight and eleven in the forenoon, and in case the election be not determined on a view, the sheriff, if required, must take the poll.

And where a poll is demanded, the same shall commence on the day on which such demand is made, or upon the next day at farthest (unless it be Sunday, and then on the day after), and shall be duly and regularly proceeded in from day to day (Sundays excepted) until the same be finished; but so as not to continue more than fifteen days at most (Sundays excepted), and if the same shall continue for fifteen days, then to be finally closed before the hour of three in the afternoon. 25 Geo. 3. c. 84. s. 1.

And every returning officer, unless prevented by some unavoidable accident, shall cause the said poll to be kept open for seven hours at least in each day, between eight in the morning and eight at night. s. 3.

And for the better taking of the poll, the sheriff or under sheriff, with such others as shall be deputed by him, shall forthwith proceed to take the poll. 7 & 8 Will. 3. c. 25. s. 3.

And such sheriff or under sheriff, or such as he shall depute, shall appoint such number of clerks as he shall think fit for taking the poll in his presence. Ibid.

And he shall also appoint for each candidate, such one person as shall be nominated by each candidate, to be inspectors of every clerk. Ibid.

And in order to facilitate the poll, and to prevent confusion, it is enacted by 18 Geo. 2. c. 18, that the sheriff, or in his absence the under sheriff, or such as he shall depute, shall erect at the expence of the candidates, such number of booths or places for taking the poll, as any of the candidates shall, three days before the commencement of the poll desire, so as the same do not exceed the number of hundreds or like divisions, and not exceeding in the whole the number of fifteen; and shall affix on the most public part of each, the name of the hundred for which such booth is designed. s. 7.

And shall make out a list for each booth of the several towns, parishes, and hamlets, wholly or in part within such hundred; and shall upon request deliver a copy thereof to any of the candidates or their agents, taking for each copy 2*s.* and no more. Ibid.

And no person shall be admitted to vote for any freehold estate sworn to be at some parish or place not mentioned in the list so made out for such booth, unless such estate lie in some place not mentioned in any of the lists. s. 8.

And the sheriff or under sheriff, or such as he shall depute, shall also appoint a clerk or clerks at each booth to take the poll, who shall at the expence of the candidates be paid, not exceeding one guinea per day each clerk. s. 7.

And he shall at every such election allow a cheque book for every poll book for each candidate, to be kept by their respective inspectors, at every place where the poll shall be taken. s. 9.

As it is essential to the very being of parliament, that elections should be absolutely free, all undue influences upon the electors are illegal and strongly prohibited. 1 Black. Com. 179.

Thus it is commanded by the stat. 3 Ed. 1. c. 5, upon great forfeiture, that no man by force of arms, nor by malice or menacing, shall disturb any to make free election.

And by stat. 1 Will. & Mar. sess. 2. c. 2, it is declared that elections of members of parliament ought to be free.

Also by 8 Geo. 2. c. 30, on notice of an election either in counties or boroughs, the secretary at war shall send orders for the removal of all soldiers quartered in the place, to the distance of two miles, one day at least before the election, and not to return till one day after the poll is ended; but this is not to extend to the guards, nor to any castle or fortified place where a garrison is usually kept; nor to any officer or soldier having right to vote at such election.

Likewise if there be riots, it will be a good ground to avoid the election, and the principal rioters, if duly criminated, will be committed by the house. 1 Black. Com. 179. Simeon's L. El. 158.

And the lord wardens of the cinque ports having claimed, as of right, a power of nominating to each of the cinque ports of the two ancient towns and their members, one person whom they ought to elect as a baron or member of parliament; it was by 2 Will. & Mar. st. 1. c. 7, s. 1. expressly declared that all such nominations are contrary to law and void.

It has also been declared by vote of the house of commons, as has been before observed, that no lord of parliament or lord lieutenant of a county hath any right to interfere in the election of commoners.

And by the several statutes herein before noticed, if any officer of the excise, customs, stamps, or post office, presume to intermeddle in elections by persuading any voter, or dissuading him, he forfeits 100*l.* and is disabled to hold any office.

Thus, saith sir William Blackstone, are the electors of one branch of the legislature secured from any undue influence from either of the other two, and from all external violence and compulsion; but the greatest danger is that in which themselves co-operate by the infamous practice of bribery and corruption, to prevent which the following statutes have been made. 1 Black. Com. 179.

By 7 Will. 3. c. 4, no person to be elected to serve in parliament for any place after the teste of the writ of summons, or after the ordering of the writs of election upon the calling of any parliament, or after such place becomes vacant in time of parliament, shall before his election give or allow to any person having voice in such election, any money, meat, drink, entertainment or provision, or make any present, gift, reward, or entertainment, or any promise, agreement, obligation, or engagement, to give or allow any money, meat, drink, provision, present, reward or entertainments, to or for any such person in particular, or to such place in general, in order to be elected. s. 1.

And every person so giving, presenting, or allowing, making, promising or engaging, doing, acting, or proceeding, shall be disabled upon such election to serve in parliament for such place. s. 2.

And by 2 Geo. 2. c. 24, which is required to be read by the returning officer immediately after the reading of the writ; if any person who shall claim a right to vote in any election for members to serve for the commons in parliament, shall receive any money or other reward, or agree for any money, gift, office, or employment, or other reward, to give his vote, or to forbear to give his vote, in any such election; or if any person shall by any gift or reward, or by any promise or security for any gift or reward, corrupt or procure any person to give his vote, or to forbear to give his vote; the offender shall forfeit 500*l.* to be recovered with costs. s. 7.

And any person offending in the said cases, after judgment obtained against him in any action, or being otherwise lawfully convicted, shall be for ever disabled to vote in any election of members to serve in parliament: and shall be for ever disabled to hold or enjoy any office or franchise, as a member of any city, borough, or cinque port. s. 7.

Bribery however was, and still remains an offence at common law, punishable by indictment or information, and there are several instances where this mode of prosecution has been adopted. 3 Burrow's Rep. 1358. Simeon's L. El. 160.

And it has been said that the above statutory incapacities attach upon a common law conviction. Simeon's L. El. 160.

Undue influence being thus guarded against, the election is to be proceeded to, and to this purpose it is enacted by the said stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 24, that every sheriff, or other returning officer, shall, immediately after reading the writ or precept for the election, take and subscribe the following oath, viz.

"I, A B, do solemnly swear, that I have "not directly or indirectly received any sum "or sums of money, office, place or employ- "ment, gratuity or reward, or any bond, "bill or note, or any promise or gratuity "whatsoever, either by myself, or any other "person to my use, or benefit, or advantage, "for making any return of the present elec- "tion of members to serve in parliament; "and that I will return such person (or per- "sons) as shall to the best of my judgment "appear to me to have the majority of legal "votes."

Which oath any justice of peace of the county, city, corporation or borough, where the election shall be made, or in his absence any three of the electors, are required to administer; and the oath shall be entered among the records of the sessions. s. 3.

And by 25 Geo. 3. c. 84, at every election every person whom the returning officer shall retain to act as a clerk in taking the poll, shall, before beginning to take such poll, be sworn by such returning officer "truly and "indifferently to take the poll, and to set "down the name of each voter, and his addi- "tion, and place of abode, and for whom he "shall poll; and to poll no person who is "not sworn or put to his affirmation," where by statute required, which oath, of such poll clerk, the returning officer is to administer. s. 7.

By 42 Geo. 3. c. 62, when a poll shall be demanded at any election for any county, city, borough, or other place in England or Wales, or for the town of Berwick-upon-Tweed, the returning officer after such poll shall be demanded, shall, at the instance and request in writing of any candidate, under his hand, immediately after such request, and before he shall proceed in taking the poll, appoint two or more persons at different places, and separate from the place where the poll shall be taken to administer all the oaths, and take the declarations and affirmations now required to be taken and made by voters, and to certify the names of the electors who shall take such oaths and make such declarations and affirmations in the manner prescribed by 34 Geo. 3. c. 73, hereinafter mentioned, and the persons appointed as aforesaid shall have full power to administer such oaths and take such declarations and affirmations. s. 1.

But the oath or affirmation required by 2 Geo. 2. c. 24, shall be taken or made by every freeholder, citizen, freeman, burgess or person at the poll, and immediately before he is admitted to poll at such election, in the manner prescribed by the said act, in case the same shall be demanded by either of the candidates or any two of the electors. 43 Geo. 3. c. 74.

And every person so appointed shall immediately after appointment, and before he shall act, take the following oath: 42 Geo. 3. c. 62.

"I do swear, that I will faithfully and "impartially administer the oaths, and take "the declarations and affirmations, now required by law to be taken or made by "voters at elections for members to serve "in parliament, to and from such persons "as shall lawfully apply to me in that behalf, in order to qualify themselves to vote "at this election; and that I will, on being "thereunto requested, fairly and truly give "to every such person, or any of them, who "shall take such oaths, or make such declarations or affirmations, respectively, "or any of them, before me, a certificate "thereof; and that I will not give such certificate to any person before he shall have "taken such oath or oaths, or made such "declaration or declarations, affirmation "or affirmations respectively, as shall be "mentioned in such certificate, before me "and in my presence."

Which oath the returning officer, or his deputy, is to administer. s. 1.

And if the number of persons so appointed shall be insufficient, the returning officer may, at the like instance of any of the candidates, appoint a further number at any time during the poll. 34 Geo. 3. c. 73. s. 4.

And the returning officer shall appoint a proper place for every person so appointed, to execute his duty, to which place the electors may have free access, without interrupting the poll, and so as to enable the persons appointed to act separately, without interfering with each other; and each of the places appointed shall be open, and attended by the person appointed, during all such times as the poll shall be kept open, and continue at least eight hours in every day, between eight in the morning and eight in the evening, until the final close of the poll; and the said oaths and declarations or affirmations shall be administered to as many of the electors, being ready, and desiring to take the same, as can conveniently take the same together, not exceeding twelve at one time; and the returning officer shall find, provide, and deliver to each person so appointed, a sufficient number of printed forms of the declaration of fidelity required to be made and subscribed by quakers, one of which shall be filled up with the name of, and subscribed by, the person desiring to make and subscribe the declaration of fidelity: and the returning officer shall also find, provide, and deliver to each person so appointed, a sufficient number of printed certificates, agreeable to the form after directed, to be filled up, and delivered to each elector. s. 5.

And in case any of the candidates shall, three days before any election, give notice in writing to the returning officer to provide such places, then the same shall be provided, so as to be ready before the day of election; and in case there shall not be a sufficient number of fit places at the town or place where the election shall be had, then the returning officer shall cause such booths or temporary erections to be made, as shall be necessary, the expence of which booths, and of the said printed forms, and also the allowance to be made to the persons appointed to administer the said oaths, &c. for their trouble and attendance, not exceeding 1*l.* 1*s.* a-day to every of them, for each day, shall be defrayed and repaid by the candidates, in equal proportions, to be recovered by the returning officer in any court of record. s. 6.

And the electors may apply to the persons appointed as aforesaid before voting, who shall administer the oaths, &c. and give certificates thereof in the following form:

"A. B [naming the person taking the oath] "of [naming the place of such person's abode, "and his addition or occupation] has taken the "oath [or oaths] of [naming the said oath or "oaths so administered] before me this —— "—— day of ——."

Or if a quaker:

"A. B. [naming the person subscribing or "affirming] of [naming the place of such per"son's abode, and his addition or occupation] "has made and subscribed the declaration "of fidelity, and affirmed the effect of the "oath of abjuration [or if only one of those "acts has been done, then naming such one "act only] before me this —— —— day "of ——."

And every such voter, to whom such certificate shall be given, shall, on producing the same to the returning officer, or person taking the poll, be permitted to poll. s. 2.

Persons offering to vote without producing such certificate, being required to take the said oaths, shall immediately withdraw, and take the same before one of the persons appointed as aforesaid. s. 3.

By 2 Geo. 2. c. 24, upon every election for any member to serve for the commons in parliament, every freeholder, citizen, freeman, burgess, or person having a right to vote, shall, before he is admitted to poll, take the following oath (or being a quaker make the solemn affirmation), in case the same be demanded by either of the candidates, or any two electors, viz.

"I A. B. do swear (or being a quaker, do "solemnly affirm) I have not received or "had, by myself, or any person whatsoever "in trust for me, for my use and benefit, "directly or indirectly, any sum or sums of "money, office, place or employment, gift "or reward, or any promise or security "for any money, office, employment or "gift, in order to give my vote at this elec"tion; and that I have not been polled at "this election."

Which oath the officer taking the poll is to administer gratis, on pain to forfeit 50*l.* to the person that shall sue. And no person shall be admitted to poll until he has taken the oath, if demanded, before the returning officer, or others legally deputed by him. s. 1.

And if any sheriff, or other returning officer, shall admit any person to be polled without such oaths, if demanded, he shall forfeit 100*l.* with costs; and if any person shall vote without having first taken the oath, if demanded, he shall incur the same penalty. s. 2.

Also by 18 Geo. 2. c. 18, upon every election of any knight of the shire to serve in parliament, every freeholder, before he is admitted to poll, shall, if required by any of the candidates, or any person having a right to vote, first take the oath (or being a quaker the affirmation) following, viz.

"You shall swear (or being a quaker, solemnly affirm) that you are a freeholder "in the county of ——— and have a "freehold estate consisting of——(specifying "the nature thereof; and if it consists in messuages, lands or tythes, in whose occupation "the same are; and if in rent, the names of "the owners or possessors of the tenements out "of which such rent is issuing, or of some of "them), lying or being at ——— in the "county of ——— of the clear yearly "value of forty shillings, over and above all "rents and charges payable out of, or in "respect of the same; and that you have "been in the actual possession or receipt "of the rents and profits thereof, for your "own use, above twelve calendar months, "or that the same came to you, within the "time aforesaid, by descent, marriage, "marriage settlement, devise, or promotion to a benefice in a church, or by promotion to an office; and that such freehold "estate has not been granted or made to "you fraudulently, on purpose to qualify "you to give your vote; and that the place "of your abode is at ——— in ——— "and that you are twenty-one years of age, "as you believe, and that you have not "been polled before at this election."

Which oath (or affirmation) the sheriff, under sheriff, or such sworn clerk as shall be by him appointed for taking the poll, is to administer. And in case any person taking the said oath or affirmation, shall thereby commit wilful perjury, and be convicted; and if any person do corruptly procure or suborn any person to take the said oath or affirmation in order to be polled, whereby he shall commit such wilful perjury, and shall be convicted; they for every such offence shall incur such penalties as are inflicted by 5 Eliz. c. 9. & 2 Geo. 2. c. 25. on persons guilty of perjury. s. 4.

And the sheriffs and clerks shall enter not only the place of his freehold, but also the place of his abode, as he shall declare the same at the time of giving his vote; and shall enter jurat against the name of every such voter who hath taken the oath. 10 Ann. c. 23. s. 5.

And the above act of 10 Geo. 2. is extended by stat. 19 Geo. 2. c. 28, to cities and towns that are counties of themselves, where every person has a right to vote in respect of any freehold estate of 40*s.* a year.

And although from the various and disputed rights of voting in several cities, boroughs and other places, a positive oath of qualification cannot be required from the electors, yet as unqualified persons may be deterred from polling at such elections, under fictitious names or otherwise, by requiring from electors previously to their polling the oath or affirmation hereinafter mentioned: IT IS ENACTED by 25 Geo. 3. c. 84, that upon every election of members of parliament, in all cases where no oath or affirmation of qualification, other than those against bribery, or of allegiance, supremacy and abjuration, can now by law be required, every person claiming to give his vote at such election, shall, if required by any candidate, or any person having a right to vote, before he is admitted to poll, take the oath, or being a quaker affirm as follows:

"I do swear [or being a quaker do affirm] "that my name is A. B. and that I am [specifying the addition, profession or trade] and "that the place of my abode is at ——— "in the county of ——— [and if it is "a town consisting of more streets than one, specifying what street], and that I have not "before polled at this election, and that I "verily believe myself to be of the full age "of twenty-one years.

Which oath or affirmation the returning officer and his deputies, and poll clerks, are to administer. s. 5.

The poll being ended, and the numbers cast up, if the returning officer is perfectly satisfied without a scrutiny, he declares the election according to the majority of votes; and when the poll is once declared and acknowledged, the election is complete. Simeon's L. El. 132. 135.

The poll being thus taken, closed and declared, the returning officer must make his return of the persons duly chosen according to the mode prescribed by the writ, and statutes relating thereto. Simeon's L. El. 136.

That is to say, the returning officer in boroughs is to return his precept to the sheriff, with the persons elected by the majority: and the sheriff is to return the whole, together with the writ for the county, and the knights elected thereupon, to the clerk of the crown in Chancery. 1 Black. Com. 180, 181.

And to this purpose it is enacted, that the returning officer at every election for members to serve for any county, city, borough or other place, shall immediately after the final close of the poll, or on the day next after, truly, fairly, and publicly declare, the names of the persons who have the majority of votes, and shall forthwith make a return of such persons; unless the returning officer, upon a scrutiny being demanded by any candidate, or any two electors, shall deem it necessary to grant the same; in which case he shall proceed thereon, but so as that in all cases of a general election, every returning officer having the return of the writ, shall cause a return of the member to be filed in the crown office, on or before the day on which such writ is returnable: and every other returning officer acting under a precept or mandate, shall make a return of the member in obedience thereto, six days before the day of the return of the writ; and so that in case of any election upon a writ issued during a session or prorogation of parliament, and a scrutiny being granted as aforesaid, then that a return shall be made within thirty days after the close of the poll, or sooner if the same can be done. 25 Geo. 3. c. 84. s. 1.

And whenever a scrutiny shall be granted as aforesaid, and there shall be more parties than one; the returning officer shall decide alternately on the votes given for the different candidates who shall be parties to such scrutiny, or against whom the same shall be carried on. s. 2.

And it shall be lawful for such returning officers, if they see cause during the continuance of any scrutiny, to administer an oath to any person consenting to take the same, touching the right of any person having voted at such election, or touching any other matter material towards carrying on such scrutiny. s. 6.

And if any person taking an oath or affirmation before any returning officer, shall commit wilful perjury, or if any person shall suborn any other person to take any such oath or affirmation, whereby he shall commit perjury, he shall incur such pains as are inflicted in 5 Eliz. c. 9. and 2 Geo. 2 c. 25, on persons guilty of wilful perjury. s. 8.

But nothing in this act shall affect, alter, or regulate the election for any place where particular regulations, touching the duration of polls and scrutinies, are enacted by statute. s. 9.

And by 7 & 8 Will. 3. c. 25, every sheriff, under-sheriff, mayor, bailiff, and other officer, to whom the execution of any writ or precept shall belong for electing members, shall forthwith deliver to such as shall desire the same a copy of the poll, paying a reasonable charge for writing the same, on pain to forfeit to every party grieved 500*l.* to be recovered by him or his administrators with costs. s. 6.

And as to the form of the return, it is enacted, that after the election, the names of the persons chosen, whether present or absent, shall be written in an indenture under the seals of the choosers, and tacked to the writ, which indenture so sealed and tacked, shall be holden for the sheriff's return to the said writ for the knights of the shires. 7 Hen. 4. c. 15.

And the certificate of the election is required to be the same both in county and borough elections, that is, by indentures under under the seals of the electors, and of the returning officer, who seals a counterpart thereof. Simeon's L. El. 137.

And in order the more particularly to enforce a regularity in the making of such return, and to prevent negligent, false, and double returns, various statutes have been enacted from time to time, and some of them at an early period. Simeon's L. El. 139, 140.

Thus by 5 Ric. 2. st. 2. c. 4, if a sheriff be negligent in making his return, or leave out of his return any city or borough bound, or of old wont to come to parliament, he shall be amerced, or otherwise punished as was accustomed in times past.

Also by 7 Hen. 4. c. 15, the sheriff is commanded, that he do certify the election made, at the day and place in the writ contained.

And by 11 Hen. 4. c. 1, justices of assize may inquire of returns made to writs of parliament, and if found by inquest that the return is contrary to the stat. 7 Hen. 4. c. 15, the sheriff shall incur 100*l.* to the king.

And by 10 & 11 Will. 3. c. 7, the sheriff or other officer having the execution and return of any writ for the choice of a member, shall on or before the day that any parliament shall be called, and with all convenient expedition, not exceeding fourteen days after election, make return of the same to the clerk of the crown in Chancery, to be filed; and he shall pay to the clerk of the crown the ancient fees of 4*s.* for every knight of the shire, and 2*s.* for every citizen, burgess, or baron of the cinque ports, and have allowance thereof in his account. s. 1.

And every sheriff or other officer, who shall not make the returns according to this act, shall forfeit 500*l.* one moiety to his majesty, and the other moiety to him shall sue for the same in any of his majesty's courts at Westminster. s. 3.

As to false returns, the stat. 23 Hen. 6. c. 14, "after reciting that the sheriff often "returned citizens and burgesses not duly "chosen, and sometimes such as were not "returned by the mayor or other returning "officer; and sometimes embezzled the "writ, making no precept, ENACTS," that if any sheriff shall make a return contrary to that or any other statute for elections, he shall incur the penalty of st. 8 Hen. 6. c. 7, viz. 100*l.* to the king, and a year's imprisonment without bail, and also pay to every person chosen and not duly returned 100*l.* to be recovered with costs in debt against the sheriff, his executors or administrators, by the party grieved, if he sue in three months after the beginning of the parliament, or in his default by any that will sue. s. 1.

And if any mayor or bailiff return to the sheriff any not duly chosen, he shall forfeit 40*l.* to the king, and 40*l.* to every person chosen and not returned, to be recovered as above. Ibid.

Moreover by stat. 7 & 8 Will. 3. c. 7, all false returns, wilfully made, are declared to be against law; and in case any person shall return any member to serve in parliament for any place contrary to the last determination in the house of commons of the right of election in such place, such return shall be deemed to be a false return. s. 1.

And every person who shall be duly elected to serve for any place, on such false return, may sue the officers and persons making or procuring the same, or any of them, and shall recover double damages with costs, on action brought within two years. s. 2.

And in order to prevent the evil of double returns it was by the same stat. 7 & 8 Will. 3. c. 7. enacted, that if any officer shall wilfully, falsely, and maliciously, return more persons than are required to be chosen by the writ or precept, the like remedy may be had against him, and the parties that willingly procure the same, by the party grieved. s. 3.

And it is enacted by 25 Geo. 3. c. 84, that if upon any writ issued for election of members, no return shall be made to the same on or before the day on which such writ is made returnable;—or if a writ shall have been issued during any session or prorogation, and no return shall be made to the same 52 days after the day on which such writ bears date;—or if the return made in either of such cases shall not be a return of members, according to the requisition thereof, but contain special matters only concerning such election,—it shall be lawful for any person, having a right to vote at such election, or claiming to have had a right to be returned, as duly elected thereat, who shall think himself aggrieved, to petition the house of commons concerning the same; and upon such petition being presented, a day and hour shall be appointed for taking the same into consideration, and notice thereof in writing shall be forthwith given by the speaker to the petitioners, and to the returning officer, accompanied with an order to them to attend the house at the time appointed, according to 10 Geo. 3. c. 16, and 11 Geo. 3. c. 42. for regulating the trial of controverted elections; which committee shall try "whether any, and "which of the persons named in such petition ought to have been returned, or whether a new writ ought to issue;" which determination shall be final; and the house being informed thereof by the chairman of the select committee, shall order the same to be entered on their journals, and give directions for ordering a return to be made, or for altering the return, if made, or for issuing a new writ, or for carrying the said determination into execution. s. 10.

And the rules, prescribed by the said acts, shall be in full force with respect to select committees appointed by virtue of this act. s. 11.

And if the returning officer cannot be found, to be served with the notice or order before mentioned, or being served, shall not appear by himself, counsel or agents, at the day appointed for taking such petition into consideration, the house may authorise any person to appear in the stead of him; and in case there shall be more petitions than one presented, complaining of such return, or omission of a return, on distinct interests, or different grounds, the house shall determine from the nature of the case, whether the returning officer, or person appearing in the stead of him, shall, together with such petitioners, be entitled to strike off from the list of members drawn by lot, as directed by 11 Geo. 3, in the case where there shall be more than two parties before the house, or whether such list shall be reduced by the parties, severally presenting the said petitions only. s. 12.

And if any sheriff, or other returning officer who shall preside at any election, shall wilfully act contrary to this act, such person shall be liable to be prosecuted within one year after the fact, or six months after the conclusion of any proceedings in the house of commons, by information or indictment in the King's Bench, or at any court of oyer and terminer, grent sessions, or gaol delivery, in which no noli prosequi or cesset processus shall be granted. s. 13.

And if any sheriff or returning officer shall wilfully delay, neglect or refuse duly to return any person who ought to be returned, such person may, in case it shall be determined by a select committee, appointed as before directed, that such person was entitled to have been returned, sue the sheriff or officer, and shall recover double the damages he shall sustain, together with costs. s. 14.

All contracts and securities given to procure any return of any member shall be adjudged void; and whoever makes such contract or security, or any gift or reward, to procure such false or double return, shall forfeit 500*l.* one third part to his majesty, another third part to the poor of the county or place concerned, and one third part to the informer with costs, to be recovered on action brought within two years. 7 & 8 Will. 3. c. 7. s. 4.

By stat. 7 & 8 Will. 3. c. 25, neither the sheriff or his under-sheriff, nor the mayor, bailiff, constable, port-reeve, or other officer, of any borough or town, to whom the execution of any writ or precept for electing doth belong, shall pay or take any fee for the making out, receipt, delivery, return, or execution, of any such writ or precept, on pain to forfeit 500*l.* to the party grieved, to be recovered by him or his administrators, with costs. s. 2.

Lastly, by 10 Ann. c. 23, the sheriff, or returning officer, shall, within 20 days after such election, deliver over upon oath (which oath the two next justices of the peace, one of the quorum, are to administer) unto the clerk of the peace, all the poll books of such elections, without any alteration, and in such counties where there are more than one clerk of the peace, the original poll-books to one of such clerks of the peace, and attested copies thereof to the rest, to be kept among the records of the peace. s. 5.

IV. Method of passing bills.] An act of parliament must have the consent of the lords, the commons, and the royal assent of the king, and whatsoever passeth in parliament by this threefold consent, hath the force of an act of parliament. 4 Inst. 25. 2 Inst. 157.

And in each house the act of the majority binds the whole, and this majority is declared by votes openly and publicly given. 1 Black. Com. 181, 182.

In the house of lords, the lords give their voices from the puisne lord in due order, by the word of content or not content. 4 Inst. 34.

The commons give their voices upon the question by yea or no; and if it be doubtful, and neither party yield, two are appointed to number them, one for the yea's, another for the no's, the yea's going out and the no's sitting; and thereof report is made to the house: at a committee, though it be of the whole house, the yea's go on one side of the house, and the no's on the other, whereby it will easily appear which is the greatest number. 4 Inst. 35.

For the dispatch of business each house of parliament has its speaker. The speaker of the house of lords, whose office it is to preside there, and manage the formality of business, is the lord chancellor, or keeper of the king's great seal, or any other appointed by the king's commission; and if none be so appointed, the house of lords (it is said) may elect:—the speaker of the house of commons is chosen by the house; but must be approved by the king. And herein the usage of the two houses differs, that the speaker of the house of commons cannot give his opinion or argue any question in the house; but the speaker of the house of lords if a lord of parliament may. 1 Black. Com. 181.

To the passing of a bill, the assent of the knights, citizens, and burgesses must be in person, but the lords may give their votes by proxy; and the reason hereof is, that the barons did always sit in parliament in their own right, as part of the pares curtis of the king; and therefore as they were allowed to serve by proxy in the wars, so they had leave to make their proxies in parliament; but the commons coming only as representing the barones minores, and the socage tenants in the county, and citizens and burgesses, as representing the men of their cities and boroughs, they could not constitute proxies, because they themselves were but proxies and representatives of others, and therefore could not constitute a proxy in their place. 4 Inst. 12.

To bring a bill into the house, if the relief sought by it is of a private nature, it is first necessary to prefer a petition; which must be presented by a member, and usually sets forth the grievance desired to be remedied. This petition (when founded on facts that may be in their nature disputed) is referred to a committee of members, who examine the matter alledged, and accordingly report it to the house, and then (or otherwise upon the mere petition) leave is given to bring in the bill. In public matters the bill is brought in upon motion made to the house, without any petition at all. 1 Black. Com. 182. Comyns's Dig. tit. Par. (g. 10).

Formerly all bills were drawn in the form of petitions, which were entered upon the parliament rolls, with the king's answer thereunto subjoined; not in any settled form of words, but as the circumstances of the case required; and at the end of each parliament the judge drew them into the form of a statute, which was entered on the statute rolls. In the reign of Henry V. to prevent mistakes and abuses, the statutes were drawn up by the judges before the end of the parliament; and in the reign of Henry VI. bills in the form of acts, according to the modern custom, were first introduced. 2 Black. Com. 182.

The persons directed to bring in the bill, present it in a competent time to the house, drawn out on paper, with a multitude of blanks or void spaces, where any thing occurs that is dubious, or necessary to be settled by the parliament itself; such especially as the precise date of times, the nature and quantity of penalties, or of any sums of money to be raised; being indeed only the skeleton of the bill. 1 Black. Com. 182.

In the house of lords, if the bill begins there, it is, when of a private nature, referred to two of the judges, to examine and report the state of the facts alledged, to see that all necessary parties consent, and to settle all points of technical propriety. 1 Black. Com. 182.

This is read a first time, and at a convenient distance a second time; and after each reading the speaker opens to the house the substance of the bill, and puts the question, whether it shall proceed any farther. The introduction of the bill may be originally opposed, as the bill itself may at either of the readings; and if the opposition succeeds, the bill must be dropped for that session: as it must also, if opposed with success in any of the subsequent stages. 1 Black. Com. 183.

After the second meeting it is committed, that is, referred to a committee; which is either selected by the house in matters of small importance, or else, upon a bill of consequence, the house resolves itself into a committee of the whole house. 1 Black. Com. 183.

A committee of the whole house is composed of every member; and to form it, the speaker quits the chair (another member being appointed chairman), and may sit and debate as a private member. 1 Black. Com. 183.

In these committees the bill is debated clause by clause, amendments made, the blanks filled up, and sometimes the bill entirely new modelled. 1 Black. Com. 185.

After it has gone through the committee, the chairman reports it to the house with such amendments as the committee have made; and then the house reconsiders the whole bill again, and the question is repeatedly put upon every clause and amendment. 1 Black. Com. 183.

When the house hath agreed or disagreed to the amendments of the committee, and sometimes added new amendments of its own, the bill is then ordered to be engrossed, or written in a strong gross hand, on one or more long rolls of parchment sewed together. 1 Black. Com. 183.

When this is finished, it is read a third time, and amendments are sometimes then made to it; and if a new clause be added, it is done by tacking a separate piece of parchment on the bill, which is called a rider. 1 Black. Com. 183.

The speaker then again opens the contents; and holding it up in his hands, puts the question whether the bill shall pass. If this is agreed to, the title to it is then settled; which used to be a general one for all the acts passed in the session, till in the first year of Henry VIII. distinct titles were introduced for each chapter. 1 Black. Com. 183.

After this one of the members is directed to carry it to the lords, and desire their concurrence; who attended by several more, carries it to the bar of the house of peers, and there delivers it to their speaker, who comes down from his wool-sack to receive it. 1 Black. Com. 183, 184.

It there passes through the same forms as in the other house, except engrossing, which is already done; and, if rejected, no more notice is taken, but it passes sub silentio, to prevent unbecoming altercations. 1 Black. Com. 184.

But if it is agreed to, the lords send a message by two masters in Chancery (or upon matters of high dignity or importance, by two of the judges), that they have agreed to the same: and the bill remains with the lords, if they have made no amendment to it; but if any amendments are made, such amendments are sent down with the bill to receive the concurrence of the commons. 1 Black. Com. 184.

If the commons disagree to the amendments, a conference usually follows between members deputed from each house; who for the most part settle and adjust the difference: but if both houses remain inflexible, the bill is dropped. 1 Black. Com. 184.

If the commons agree to the amendments, the bill is sent back to the lords by one of the members, with a message to acquaint them therewith. 1 Black. Com. 184.

The same forms are observed mutatis mutandis, when the bill begins in the house of lords. 1 Black. Com. 184.

But when an act of grace or pardon is passed, it is first signed by his majesty, and then read once only in each of the houses, without any new engrossing or amendment. 1 Black. Com. 184.

And when both houses have done with any bill, it is always deposited in the house of peers, to wait the royal assent, except in the case of a bill of supply, which after receiving the concurrence of the lords, is sent back to the house of commons. 1 Black. Com. 184.

The royal assent may be given two ways; first, in person when the king comes to the house of peers, in his crown and royal robes, and sending for the commons to the bar, the titles of all the bills that have passed both houses are read; and the king's answer is declared by the clerk of the parliament in Norman French; that is to say, if the king consents to a public bill, the clerk usually declares, le roy le veut, "the king wills it so to "be;" if to a private bill, soit fait, comme il est desiré, "be it as it is desired;" if the king refuses his assent, it is in the gentle language of le roy s' avisera, "the king will advise upon it." When a bill of supply is passed, it is carried up and presented to the king by the speaker of the house of commons, and the royal assent is thus expressed, le roy remercie ses loyal subjects, accepte leur benevolence, et ausi le veut, "the king thanks his loyal subjects, accepts their benevolence, and wills it so to be." In case of an act of grace, which originally proceeds from the crown, and has the royal assent in the first stage of it, the clerk of the parliament thus pronounces the gratitude of the subject: les prelats, seigneurs, et commons, en ce present parliament assembles, au nom de touts vous autre subjects, remercient tres humblement e votre majeste, et prient a Dieu vous donner en sante bone vie et longue, "the prelates, lords, and commons in this present parliament assembled, in the name of all your other subjects most humbly thank your majesty, and pray to God to grant you in health and wealth long to live." Secondly, by stat. 33 Hen. 8. c. 21, the king may give his assent by letters patent under his great seal, signed with his hand, and notified in his absence to both houses assembled together in the high house; for it is by that statute declared, that the king's royal assent by his letters patent under his great seal, and signed with his hand, and notified in his absence to the lords and commons, is and ever was of as good strength, as though the king had been present, and assented publicly to the same, and shall hereafter be taken for effectual. 1 Black. Com. 185.

This statute or act is placed among the records of the kingdom, there needing no formal promulgation to give it the force of a law; because every man in England is, in judgment of law, party to the making of an act of parliament, being present thereat by representation. 1 Black. Com. 185.

However, a copy thereof is usually printed at the king's press for the information of the whole land. 1 Black. Com. 185.

Formerly every statute began to have effect, unless a particular time for its commencement was therein mentioned, from the first day of that session of parliament in which it was made. 1 Rol. Abr. 465. 4 Inst. 25, 27. Hob. 309. Sid. 310.

But it is now enacted by 33 Geo. 3. c. 13, that the clerk of parliament shall endorse in English, on every act immediately after the title, the day, month, and year, when the same shall have passed and received the royal assent, which indorsement shall be part of such act, and the date of its commencement, where no other commencement shall be provided.

V. Privileges of parliament.] The privileges of parliament are very large and indefinite, and were principally established in order to protect its members, not only from being molested by their fellow subjects, but also more especially from being oppressed by the power of the crown. 1 Black. Com. 163, 164.

Some of the more notorious privileges of the members of either house, are privilege of speech, of person, of their domestics, and of their lands and goods. 1 Black. Com. 164.

1. By 1 Will. & Mar. sess. 2. c. 2, it is declared that freedom of speech, and debates or proceedings in parliament, ought not to be impeached or questioned in any court or place out of parliament.

And this freedom of speech is particularly demanded of the king in person, by the speaker of the house of commons, at the opening of every new parliament. 1 Black. Com. 164.

2. By the common law, a member of parliament shall have the privilege of parliament, not only for himself and his servants, to be free from arrest, subpœna, citation, and the like; but also for his horses and goods to be free from distresses. 4 Inst. 24, 25.

But privilege of parliament doth not extend to high treason, felony, breach (or surety) of the peace, or any indictable offence whatsoever. 4 Inst. 25. 1 Black. Com. 166.

For all crimes are treated by the law as against the peace; and instances have not been wanting wherein privileged persons have been convicted of misdemeanours, and committed, or prosecuted to outlawry, even in the middle of a session, which proceeding has afterwards received the sanction and approbation of parliament. 1 Black. Com. 166.

Also peers of the realm, whether spiritual or temporal, are punishable by attachment for contempts against the king's court in many instances; as for rescuing a person arrested by due course of law; for proceeding in a cause against the king's writ of prohibition; for disobeying other writs, wherein the king's prerogative or the liberty of the subject are nearly concerned; such as for refusing obedience to a writ of habeas corpus; and for other contempts which are of an enormous nature. 2 Hawk. c. 22. s. 33. 1 Burr. Rep. 634.

This privilege of the person in civil causes, in a peer (by the privilege of peerage) is for ever sacred and inviolable; and in a commoner (by the privilege of parliament) for forty days after every prorogation, and for forty days before the next appointed meeting; which is now in effect as long as the parliament subsists, it seldom being prorogued for more than fourscore days at a time. 1 Black. Com. 165.

But by 10 Geo. 3. c. 50, any person may, at any time, commence and prosecute any action or suit, in any court of record, or court of equity, or of admiralty, and in all causes matrimonial and testamentary, in any court having cognizance of causes matrimonial and testamentary, against any peer or lord of parliament of Great Britain, or any of the knights, citizens, and burgesses, and the commissioners for shires and burghs of the house of commons of Great Britain, or against their menial or other servants, or any other persons entitled to the privilege of parliament of Great Britain, and no such action, suit, or other process or proceedings thereupon, shall be impeached, stayed, or delayed, under colour of any privilege of parliament.

"PROVIDED that this shall not subject the "person of any of the knights, citizens, and "burgesses, or the commissioners of shires "and burghs of the house of commons of "Great Britain, to be arrested or imprisoned "upon any such suit or proceedings." s. 2.

And the plaintiff may prosecute at law by summons, and distress infinite, or by original bill and summons, attachment, and distress infinite, until the defendant shall enter a common appearance, or file common bail. 12 & 13 Will. 3. c. 3. s. 2. 11 Geo. 2. c. 24. s. 2.

And the court out of which the writ (distringas) proceeds, may order the issues levied to be sold, and the money arising thereby to be applied to pay costs to the plaintiff, and the surplus to be retained until the defendant shall have appeared, or other purpose of the writ be answered. 10 Geo. 3. c. 50. s. 3.

And when the purpose of the writ is answered, the said issues shall be returned; or, if sold, what shall remain shall be repaid to the party distrained upon. s. 4.

But as the mode of proceeding by distringas is extremely dilatory and expensive, it is now enacted by 45 Geo. 3. c. 124, that the plaintiff upon affidavit of the personal service of the summons may enter an appearance for the defendant, and proceed as if such defendant had entered his appearance. s. 3.

And in equity the plaintiff may proceed by letter or subpœna; and after service thereof, may for want of appearance or answer, or non-performence of an order or decree, or for breach thereof, sequester the real and personal estate of the party, but not arrest his body. 12 & 13 Will. 3. c. 3. s. 2. 11 Geo. 2. c. 24. s. 2.

But as some persons have stood out to the return of such process of sequestration, and the same is not sufficient to enforce an appearance, it is enacted by 45 Geo. 3. c. 124, that the court upon producing the return of such sequestration may, on motion or other application of the plaintiff, appoint a clerk in court to enter an appearance for the defendant, and if after appearance, no answer shall be put in within the time allowed by the rules of the court, then the plaintiff may apply for an order that the bill may be taken pro confesso.

And the court shall make an order that such bill shall be taken pro confesso, unless the defendant within eight days shew cause to the contrary, and such bills in equity, &c. so taken pro confesso, shall be taken and read in evidence.

Also obedience may be enforced to any rule of the King's Bench, Common Pleas, or Exchequer, against any person entitled to privilege of parliament, by distress infinite. 10 Geo. 3. c. 50. s. 5.

Likewise for the benefit of commerce it is provided by 4 Geo. 3. c. 33, that the petitioning creditors, on affidavit of the debt, and that they verily believe that the debtor is a trader within the statutes of bankruptcy, may issue out a summons, or an original bill and summons, and serve him with a copy thereof; and if he shall not, within two months after service, pay the debt, or enter into bond to pay such sum as shall be recovered with costs, he shall be adjudged a bankrupt from the time of service of the summons, and the creditors may proceed against him as against other bankrupts; provided that this shall not extend to subject any person entitled to privilege to be arrested during the time of such privilege, except in cases made felony by any of the statutes of bankruptcy.

And by 45 Geo. 3. c. 124, when any summons or original bill and summons shall be sued out against any person deemed a merchant, banker, broker, factor, scrivener or trader within the description of the acts relating to bankrupts having privilege of parliament, and such affidavit of the debt duly made and filed, and such trader shall enter into such bond; every such trader shall also within two months after such personal service of such summons, cause an appearance to be entered to such action, and on default thereof, be shall be accounted a bankrupt from the time of the service of such summons, and any creditor may sue out a commission. s. 1.

And where any decree or order shall have been pronounced in the court of chancery or exchequer, or any order made in the matter of bankruptcy, or in the matter of any lunacy against any trader having privilege of parliament, thereby ordering such person to pay any money, and the person so ordered shall disobey such order, the same having been duly sued, it shall be lawful for the party to apply to the court to fix a peremptory day for the payment, and if such trader being personally served with such order, at least eight days before the day therein appointed for payment, shall neglect or omit to pay the same, then such person shall be deemed a bankrupt from the time of the service of such last mentioned order, and any creditor may sue out a commission. s. 7.

But nothing in this act shall extend to subject any person entitled to privilege of parliament to be arrested, restrained or imprisoned during the term of such privilege. s. 8.

VI. The continuance, adjournment, prorogation, and dissolution of parliament.] In order to prevent the great and continued expences of frequent elections, and the violent heats and animosities consequent thereupon, and for the peace and security of the government, it was enacted by 1 Geo. 1. st. 2. c. 38, that the then present parliament, and all parliaments that should at any time thereafter be called, assembled or held, should and might respectively have continuance for seven years and no longer, to be accounted from the day on which by the writ of summons the parliament is appointed to meet, unless sooner dissolved by his majesty, his heirs, or successors.

Thus the parliament must expire, or die a natural death at the end of every seventh year, if not sooner dissolved by the royal prerogative. 1 Black. Com. 189.

For, as the king has the sole right of convening the parliament, so also it is a branch of the royal prerogative, that he may (whenever he pleases) prorogue the parliament for a time, or put a final period to its existence. 1 Black. Com. 188.

A parliament may also be dissolved by the demise of the crown. This dissolution formerly happened immediately upon the death of the reigning sovereign; for he being considered in law as the head of the parliament, that failing, the whole body was held to be extinct. 1 Black. Com. 188.

But the calling a new parliament immediately upon the inauguration of the succe-ever being found inconvenient, and dangers being apprehended from having no parliament in being, in case of a disputed succession, this inconvenience is now provided against by statute. 1 Black. Com. 188.

For it is enacted, by 37 Geo. 3. c. 127, that in case of the demise of his majesty, subsequent to the dissolution or expiration of a parliament, and before the day appointed by the writs of summons for assembling a new parliament, then the last preceding parliament shall immediately convene and sit at Westminster, and be a parliament, to continue for six months, and no longer, as if the same parliament had not been dissolved or expired, but subject to be sooner prorogued or dissolved by the person to whom the crown shall come. s. 3.

And in case of the demise of his majesty's heir or successor within the said six months, and before the same shall have been dissolved, or after the same shall have been dissolved, and before a new parliament shall have met, then the said last preceding parliament shall immediately convene and sit, and continue to be a parliament for six months longer, to be computed from such last demise, but subject to be sooner prorogued or dissolved by the person who shall succeed to the crown, and so often as any such demise shall happen before a new parliament shall have met. s. 4.

And in case of the demise of his majesty, on the day appointed by the writs of summons for assembling a new parliament, or at any time after such day, and before such new parliament shall have met, and sat, such new parliament shall, immediately after such demise, convene and sit at Westminster, and be a parliament, to continue for six months, but subject to be sooner prorogued or dissolved. s. 5.

An adjournment is no more than a continuance of the session from one day to another, as the word signifies; and this is done by the authority of each house separately every day: and sometimes for a fortnight or a month together, as at Christmas or Easter, or upon other particular occasions, but the adjournment of one house is no adjournment of the other. 1 Black. Com. 186.

It hath also been usual, when his majesty hath signified his pleasure that both or either of the houses should adjourn themselves to a certain day, to obey the king's pleasure so signified, and to adjourn accordingly; otherwise, besides the indecorum of a refusal, a prorogation would assuredly follow, which would often be very inconvenient to both public and private business; for prorogation puts an end to the session; and then such bills as are only begun and not perfected, must be resumed de novo, if at all, in a subsequent session; whereas, after an adjournment, all things continue in the same state as at the time of the adjournment made, and may be proceeded on without any fresh commencement. 1 Black. Com. 186, 187.

By 39 & 40 Geo. 3. c. 14, in all cases where both houses of parliament shall stand adjourned for more than fourteen days from the day of the date of the proclamation hereinafter mentioned, it shall be lawful for his majesty to issue his proclamation, with the advice of his privy council, thereby declaring that the said parliament shall meet on a day not less than fourteen days from the day of the date of such proclamation, and the parliament shall thereupon stand adjourned to the day and place declared in such proclamation, notwithstanding any previous adjournment to any longer day. s. 1.

All the orders which shall have been made by either house, and appointed for the day to which such house shall have been adjourned, or to any day subsequent thereto, other than any order that shall have been specially appointed for particular days by either house, and declared to be so fixed notwithstanding any meeting of parliament under this act, and also except any order made under the provisions of any act, shall be deemed to have been appointed for the day on which the parliament shall meet in pursuance of such proclamation. s. 2.

A prorogation is the continuance of the parliament from one session to another, as an adjournment is a continuation of the session from day to day; this is done by the royal authority, expressed either by the lord chancellor in his majesty's presence, or by commission from the crown, or frequently by proclamation. Both houses are necessarily prorogued at the same time, it not being a prorogation of the house of lords or commons, but of the parliament. The session is never understood to be at an end until a prorogation; though unless some act be passed, or some judgment given in parliament, it is in truth no session at all, but a convention. 1 Black. Com. 187. 4 Inst. 28.

And by 37 Geo. 3. c. 127, whenever his majesty shall, with the advice of the privy council, issue his proclamation giving notice that parliament shall meet for the dispatch of business, on any day not less than 14 days from the date of such proclamation, the same shall be a sufficient notice to all persons, and the parliament shall thereby stand prorogued to the day and place therein declared, notwithstanding any previous prorogation to any longer day. s. 1.

PARLIAMENTUM DIABOLICUM, a parliament held at Coventry, 38 Hen. 6, wherein Edward earl of March, (afterwards king,) and many of the chief nobility were attainted, but the acts then made were annulled by the succeeding parliament. Holingsh. Chron.

PARLIAMENTUM INDOCTUM, a parliament 6 Hen. 4, whereunto by special precept to the sheriffs in their several counties, no lawyer, or other person skilled in the law was to come; therefore it was so termed. 1 Black. 176.

PARLIAMENTUM INSANUM, a parliament assembled at Oxford, anno 41 Hen. 3, so styled from the madness of their proceedings; and because the lords came with armed men to it, and contentions grew very high between the king, lords, and commons, whereby many extraordinary things were done. 4 Inst.

PARLIAMENTUM RELIGIOSUM. In most convents they had a common room, into which the brethren withdrew for conversation; and the conference there had was termed parliamentum. Mat. Par.

PAROL. By stat. 29 Car. 2. cap. 3, all leases, estates, interests of freehold, or terms of years, or any uncertain interest in or out of lands, &c. not put in writing, and signed by the parties, or their agents authorised by writing, shall have no greater effect than as estates at will; except leases not exceeding three years, whereof the rent shall be two thirds of the full value.

No such estates or interests, not being copyhold or customary interest, shall be assigned, granted, or surrendered, unless by deed or note in writing, signed (ut supra) or by operation of law. No action shall be brought to charge an executor on a special promise to answer damages out of his own estate, or to charge the defendant upon any promise to answer for the debt or miscarriage of another, or upon an agreement or consideration of marriage, or on any contract of sale of lands, &c. or any interest concerning them, or on any agreement not to be performed within a year after the making, unless such agreement, or some note thereof, be in writing, signed by the party to be charged, or some other by him authorized.

All devises of lands or tenements shall be in writing, and signed by the party devising, or some other in his presence, and by his direction, and subscribed in his presence by three or four witnesses, or else shall be void.

No such devises in writing shall be revocable otherwise than by writing or burning, tearing, or cancelling the same by the testator, or in his presence, and by his consent.

All declarations or creations of trusts shall be made by some writing, signed by the party, or by his last will in writing, or else be void.

Assignments of trust shall be in writing, signed by the party granting or assigning by such last will, or else shall be of no effect.

Trusts resulting by implication of law, or transferred or extinguished by act of law, shall be as if this statute had not been made.

No contract for the sale of any goods for 10*l.* or upwards, shall be good, except the buyer actually receive part of them, or give something in earnest, or some note thereof in writing be made and signed by the parties to be charged, or their agents.

No will in writing of any personal estate shall be repealed by words only, except the same be in the life of the testator committed to writing, and read to him, and allowed by him, and that be proved by three witnesses.

PAROL ARREST, any justice of peace may by word of mouth authorize any one to arrest another who is guilty of a breach of the peace in his presence, &c. Dalt. 117.

PAROL, DEMUR OF, is a privilege allowed an infant who is sued concerning lands which came to him by descent; and the court thereupon will give judgment, quod loquela predicta remaneat quousque the infant comes to the age of 21 years. And where the age is granted on parol demurrer the writ doth not abate, but the plea is put sine die, until the infant is of full age, and then there shall be a re-summons. 2 Lill. Abr. 280. 2 Inst. 258. Rast. Entr. 563.

PAROL EVIDENCE. See Evidence.

PAROL, or PLEADINGS, are the mutual altercations between the plaintiff and defendant; which at present are set down and delivered into the proper office in writing, though formerly they were usually put in by their counsel ore tenus, or viva voce, in court, and then minuted down by the chief clerks, or prothonotaries; whence in our old law French the pleadings are frequently denominated the parol. 3 Black. 293.

PARRICIDE, (patricida) is properly he who kills his father, and may be applied to him who kills his mother. Law Lat. Dict. See Homicide.

PARSON (persona ecclesiæ), is one that hath full possession of all the rights of a parochial church. He is called parson, persona, because by his person the church, which is an invisible body, is represented; and he is in himself a body corporate, in order to protect and defend the rights of the church (which he personates) by a perpetual succession (Co. Litt. 300.) He is sometimes called the rector, or governor, of the church: but the appellation of parson (however it may be deprecated by familiar, clownish, and indiscriminate use) is the most legal, most beneficial, and most honourable title that a parish priest can enjoy; because such a one, (sir Edward Coke observes,) and he only, is said vicem seu personam ecclesiæ gerere. A parson has, during his life, the freehold in himself of the parsonage house, the glebe, the tithes, and other dues. But these are sometimes appropriated; that is to say, the benefice is perpetually annexed to some spiritual corporation, either sole or aggregate, being the patron of the living; which the law esteems equally capable of providing for the service of the church, as any single private clergyman. See Appropriation.

PARSON IMPARSONEE. (persona impersonata) is he who is in possession of a church, be it presentative or impropriate, and with whom the church is full. Co. Lit. 300.

PARSONAGE, (personatus, personagium) is sometimes taken for a dignitary in a church, and sometimes for the benefice itself. Cowel.

But generally the parsonage, or rectory, is a parish church, endowed with a house, glebe, tithes, &c. Pars. Coun. 190. Hugh's Pars. Law 188.

PARSON MORTAL. The rector instituted and inducted, for his own life, was called persona mortalis; and any collegiate or conventual body, to whom the church was for ever appropriated, were termed persona immortalis. Cartular. Reading. MS. fol. 182.

PARTES FINIS NIHIL HABUERUNT, is an exception taken against a fine levied, viz that the cognizors had not estate or interest in the tenement. 3 Rep. 88. The case of Fines.

PARTICIPATIO, the charity so called, by which the poor were made participes of other mens goods. 2 Monast. 321. Cowel.

PARTIES, are those who are named in a deed of fine, as parties to it; as those who levy the fine, and to whom the fine is levied; so they who make any deed, and they to whom it is made, are called parties to the deed. Cowel.

PARTICULAR ESTATE, is that estate and interest which is vested in any one precedent to the remainder or reversion invested thereon.

PARTITION, (partitio) is dividing land descended by the common law, or custom, among coheirs or parceners. In Kent, where the land is of gavelkind nature, they call their partition shifting, from the Saxon shiftan, to divide. In Latin it is called hercisseré. Partition also may be made by joint-tenants, or tenants in common, by deed, or writ. 31 H. 8. 1. 32 H. 8. 32. See Joint-tenants. Parceners.

PARTITIONE FACIENDA, a writ that laid for those who held lands or tenements pro indiviso, and would sever to every one his part, against those who refused to join in partition, as copartners, tenants in gavelkind, &c. Old Nat. Brev. 142. F. N. B. 61.

PARTNERS. Where two or more persons agree to come in share and share alike, or in any other proportion, to any trade or bargain, these are partners in trade.

Partners are joint-tenants in all the stock and partnership effects, and they are so not only of the particular stock in being at the time of entering into the partnership, but they continue joint-tenants throughout, whatever changes may take place in the course of trade; for if it were otherwise it would be impossible to carry on partnership trade. 1 Vez. 242.

Hence assignees under a commission of bankrupt against one partner can only be tenants in common of an undivided share, subject to all the rights of the other partner; and if a creditor of one partner takes out execution against the partnership effects, he can only have the undivided share of his debtor, and must take it in the same manner the debtor himself had it, and subject to the rights of the other partner. Cowper 449.

But in this case the sheriff must seize all, because the moieties are undivided; for if he seize but a moiety, and sell that, the other will have a right to a moiety of that moiety; therefore he must seize the whole, and sell a moiety thereof undivided, and the vendee will be tenant in common with the other partner. Salk. 392. Show. 173. Comb. 217.

The whole of this doctrine seems to arise out of the very principle upon which partnership is founded, namely, probable profit, and the risk of loss, the advantages or disadvantages of which cannot in common justice be confined to one side only, but must be reciprocal throughout. 12 Mod. 446.

But in order to constitute a copartnership, and to make a person liable as a partner, there must be an agreement between him and the ostensible person to share in all risks of profit or loss, or he must have permitted him to use his credit, and to hold him out as jointly liable with himself. Doug. 571.

But although partners are joint tenants, yet there is no right of survivorship between them, and therefore there is no necessity to provide in the copartnership deed against survivorship, it being a maxim of the common law jus accrescendi inter mercatores locum non habet; and this is for the benefit of commerce, that the fruits of each person's labour and industry should go to his executors or administrators for the benefit of his children and family. Vin. 217.

PART OWNERS, are those who are concerned in ship matters, and have joint shares therein. And when there are part-owners of a ship, the majority may fit her out, without consent of the rest, and if they do, such majority run all hazard, and are to partake of the profits. Show. 13, 30.

PARVISE (parvisa, parvisus, non à parvus, sed à Gal. le parvis) an afternoon's exercise, or moot for the instruction of young students, bearing the same name originally with the parvisiæ at Oxford. Seld. 56.

PASCHA CLAUSUM, the octaves of Easter, or Low Sunday, which closes that solemnity. Cowel.

PASCHA FLORIDUM, the Sunday before Easter, called Palm Sunday. Ibid.

PASCHAL RENTS, rents or yearly tributes paid by the clergy to the bishop or archdeacon, at their Easter visitations. Ibid.

PASCUA, a meadow or pasture ground. Ibid.

PASCUAGE, (pascuagium, Fr. pascage) the grazing or pasturing of cattle.

PASNAGE, pathnage in woods, &c. See Pannage.

PASSAGE, (passagium,) is properly over water, as way is over land; it relates to the sea and great rivers, and is a French word, signifying transitum. Cowel.

Also passagio is a writ directed to the keepers of the ports to permit a man to pass over sea, who has the king's leave. Reg. Orig. 193.

PASSAGIUM REGIS, a voyage or expedition to the Holy Land. Cowel.

PASSATOR, he who has the interest or command of the passage of a river, or the lord to whom a duty is paid for passage. Cowel.

PASSPORT, (from the French passar, transire, and port, portus, a haven.) It signifies a licence, for the safe passage of any man from one place to another. 1 Black. 260.

PASSIAGIARIUS, a ferry-man. Cowel. Blount.

PASTITIUM, a pasture field. Ibid.

PASTORAL STAFF. The form of it was straight, which signified rectum regimen. All the top part of it was crooked, and the other part sharp: The crooked signified, that the bishop presided over the people; and the sharp signified, to punish the stubborn. Ibid.

PASTURE, is generally any place where cattle may feed; and feeding for cattle is called pasture, wherefore feeding grounds are called common of pasture: But common of pasture is properly a right of putting beasts to pasture in another man's soil, and in this there is an interest of the lord and of the tenant. Wood's Inst. 196, 197. For in those waste grounds, which are usually called commons, the property of the soil is generally in the lord of the manor; as in common fields it is in the particular tenants. And common of pasture is either appendant, appurtenant, because of vicinage, or in gross. 1 Black. 32.

PASTUS, the same with procuration, or the provision which tenants were bound to make for their lords at certain times, or as often as they made a progress to their lands: this in many places was turned into money. Cowel.

PATENTEE, one to whom the king grants his letters patent. 7 Ed. 6. c. 3.

PATENTS. See King. Monopolies. Peers. Precedence.

PATRIA, the country; but in law the men or jury of the neighbourhood. Cowel. 3 Black. 349.

PATRIMONY, an hereditary estate, or right descended from ancestors. Cowel.

PATRINUS, a godfather, and matrina, a godmother.

PATRITIUS, an honour conferred on men of the first quality in the time of the English-Saxon kings. Cowel. Blount.

PATRON (patronus). He who has the right of advowson is called the patron of the church. For, when lords of manors first built churches on their own demesnes, and appointed the tithes of those manors to be paid to the officiating ministers, which before were given to the clergy in common, (from whence arose the division of parishes) the lord, who thus built a church, and endowed it with glebe or land, had of common right a power annexed of nominating such minister as he pleased (provided he were canonically qualified) to officiate in that church, of which he was the founder, endower, maintainer, or, in one word, the patron. 2 Black. 21. See Advowson. Parson. Presentation, &c. And 3 Black. 242.

PAVAGE, (Pavagium) money paid towards paving the streets or highways.—Cowel. Blount.

PAUPER, a poor man. Thus we have a term in law, to sue in forma pauperis.

It is said, that if a pauper gives notice of trial, and does not proceed, he shall be dispaupered. 1 Salk. 506.

But notwithstanding the stat. 23 Hen. 8. c. 15, whereby it is provided "That whoever sues in forma pauperis shall not pay costs, but shall suffer such other punishment as the court shall think fit," if he be dispaupered or nonsuited, the usual practice is to tax the costs, and for non-payment to order him to be whipped. 2 Salk. 506. Stile 386. See Forma Pauperis.

And paupers or such as will swear themselves not worth five pounds, are, by statute 11 Hen. 8, c. 12, to have original writs and subpœnas gratis, and counsel and attorney assigned them without fee; and are excused from paying costs, when plaintiffs, by the statute 23 Hen. 8, c. 15, but shall suffer other punishment at the discretion of the judges. And it was formerly usual to give such paupers, if nonsuited, their election either to be whipped or pay the costs (1 Sid. 261. 7 Mod. 114); though that practice is now disused (Salk. 506). It seems however agreed, that a pauper may recover costs, though he pays none; for the counsel and clerks are bound to give their labour to him, but not to his antagonist (1 Equ. Cas. Abr. 125).

PAWN, (pignus) a pledge or gage for payment of money lent. (Lit. Dict.) The party who pawns goods, hath a general property in them; they cannot be forfeited by the party who hath them in pawn for any offence of his, nor be taken in execution for his debt; neither may they otherwise be put in execution, till the debt for which they are pawned is satisfied. Lit. Rep. 332.

He who borrows money on a pawn, is to have the pledge again when he repays it, or he may have action for the detainer; and his tender of the money revests the special property. (2 Cro. 243.) And where a broker or pawnee refuses (upon tender of the money) to redeliver the goods in pawn, he may be indicted; because, being secretly pawned, it may be impossible to prove a delivery for want of witnesses, if trover should be brought for them. (3 Salk. 268.) Also if goods are lost, after the tender of the money, the pawnee is liable to make them good to the owner; for after tender he is a wrongful detainer. But if they are lost before a tender, it is otherwise; for the pawnee is not liable, if his care of keeping them was exact; and the law requires nothing of him, but only that he should use an ordinary care in keeping the goods, that they may be restored on payment of the money for which they were deposited; and in such case if the goods are lost, the pawnee hath still his remedy against the pawner for the money lent. 2 Salk. 522. 3 Salk. 268. See Bailment.

But a factor cannot pawn the goods of his principal, nor can he to whom goods are delivered for safe custody pawn them. (Strange 1178 1187.) Also there can be no market-overt for pawning, for the purpose of changing property stolen or embezzled. Ibid.

PAWNBROKERS. By 43 Geo. 3, c. 69, pawnbrokers trading in gold or silver plate are to take out an excise license, and pay a duty of 5l. 15*s. per annum*; and also by 44 Geo. 3, c. 48, within the bills of mortality, an annual stamp-duty of 10*l.* elsewhere 5*l.*

By 39 &40 Geo. 3, c. 99, pawnbrokers are allowed to take the following rates for profit, viz.

For every pledge not exceeding 2*s.* 6*d.* one halfpenny, for any time it shall remain in pawn, not exceeding one month; and the same for every other month, including the current month in which such pledge shall be redeemed, although such month shall not be expired.

For every pledge upon which there shall have been lent 5*s.* one penny; 7*s.* 6*d.* one penny halfpenny; 10*s.* two pence; 12*s.* 6*d.* two pence halfpenny; 15*s.* three pence; 17*s.* 6*d.* three pence halfpenny; and 1*l.* four pence, and so on, and in proportion for not exceeding 40*s.*; exceeding 40*s.* and not 42*s.* eight pence; exceeding 42*s.* and not 10*l.* three pence, and no more, for every 20*s.*

The pawnbroker may take for any pledge above 2*s.* 6*d.* and not more than 40*s.* after the rate of 4*d.* for the loan of 20*s.* per month. s. 3.

But parties may redeem within seven days after the end of the first month, without paying any thing extra for the seven days, or within fourteen days, upon paying for one month and a half: but parties applying to redeem after the fourteen days must pay for the second month; and the like regulations are observable in every subsequent month when application shall be made to redeem. s. 5.

And pawnbrokers are to give farthings in exchange. s. 4.

Pawns shall be entered in books, with a description of the goods, the money lent, the date and the name and place of abode of the person pawning; and the pawnbrokers shall give to the person pawning a note describing the goods, the money lent, the date, the name and place of abode of the person pawning, with the name and place of abode of the pawnbroker; which note shall be given gratis if the sum lent is under 5*s.* but where the money lent is 5*s.* and under 10*s.* the pawnbroker may take a halfpenny for the same; for 10*s.* and under 20*s.* one penny; 20*s.* and under 5*l.* two pence; 5*l.* or more, four pence; upon the production of which notes the pawnbrokers shall deliver up the goods pawned. s. 6.

The interest taken shall be indorsed on the duplicates of pledges redeemed, and kept by the pawnbrokers for one year. s. 7.

Persons unlawfully pawning goods, not being authorised by the owner, shall forfeit not exceeding 5*l.* nor less than 20*s.* and the full value of the goods; and on default of payment, may be committed to hard labour for not more than three months, and if the penalties are not paid within three days before the expiration of the imprisonment, the party may, upon the application of the prosecutor be whipped: the penalties go to the party injured; but if he will not accept the same, to the poor. s. 8.

Persons forging, or counterfeiting notes, or not giving an account of themselves, on offering to pawn or redeem goods, may be seized and carried before a justice, who, on conviction, may send the offender to the house of correction for not more than three months. s. 9.

Persons not giving a good account of themselves on offering to pawn goods, may be detained and taken before a magistrate to be examined, and committed to be dealt with according to law, when necessary, or otherwise, for not exceeding three months. s. 10.

Persons buying or taking in pledge unfinished goods, or linen or apparel intrusted to others to wash or mend, shall forfeit double the sum lent, and restore the goods; and peace officers, under a warrant may search for such things, which if found, are to be restored to the owner. s. 11, 12.

Where goods are unlawfully pawned the pawnbroker shall restore them; the party may have a search warrant, and if found, the justice may direct them to be restored. s. 13.

Where a pawnbroker will not deliver up goods to the pawner upon production of a note, and tender of the principal and interest within a year, or one year and three months, as the case is, the justice may upon proof thereof convict the pawnbroker, and send him to prison without bail, there to remain till he deliver up the goods, or make such compensation as the justice thinks fit. s. 14.

Persons producing notes or memorandums shall be deemed the owners; and where notes or memorandums are lost, the pawnbroker shall deliver a copy, with the form of an affidavit, according to the case, taking for such copy and form of an affidavit, where the goods pawned do not exceed 5*s.* one halfpenny; exceeding 5*s.* and not 10*s.* one penny; and if above 10*s.* according to the rates payable for the original notes: which affidavit, being made before a justice, shall authenticate the same, and the pawnbroker shall thereupon permit the pawner to redeem. s. 15.

Pawned goods shall be deemed forfeited at the end of one year, and shall be sold by public auction, where the goods are pawned for more than 10*s.* and not above 10*l.* and the auctioneer shall expose the same to view, publish catalogues, and advertise the time and place of sale, with the name of the pawnbroker, in some newspaper two days before the sale; but on notice in writing in the presence of a witness, from persons having goods in pledge not to sell, three months further shall be allowed beyond the year for redemption. s. 17—19.

But pictures, prints, books, bronzes, statues, busts, carvings, in ivory and marble, cameos, intaglios, musical, mathematical, and philosophical instruments, and china, shall only be sold four times in the year; viz. on the first Monday and following days in January, April, July, and October, in each year, and to be regularly advertised, on pain of not exceeding 5*l.* nor less than 40*s.* s. 20.

An account of sales of pledges above 10*s.* shall be entered by the pawnbrokers in a book, and the overplus paid to the owner of the goods pawned or sold, on pain of 10*l.* and treble the sum lent. s. 40.

Pawnbrokers shall not purchase, or agree to purchase, any goods whilst they are in their custody, in pledge, except at auction; nor shall they take pawns from persons appearing to be under twelve years of age, or intoxicated with liquor; nor shall they purchase, or take in pawn, the notes of other pawnbrokers; nor shall they buy any goods before eight in the forenoon, or after seven in the evening; nor receive pawns before eight in the forenoon or after eight in the evening, between Michaelmas and Lady-day, or before seven in the morning, or after nine in the evening, during the remainder of the year, Saturday evenings, and the evenings preceding Good Friday and Christmas-day excepted. s. 21.

Pawnbrokers shall place in view the table of profits, and the price of notes. s. 22.

Pawnbrokers' names and business shall be placed over the door, on penalty of 10*l.* for every shop so used, for one week, without; to be levied by distress and sale, and in default thereof, the party may be imprisoned for not more than three months, nor less than fourteen days. s. 23.

Pawnbrokers selling goods before the limited time, or injuring them, shall make such satisfaction as the justice shall award, on penalty of 10*l.* s. 24.

Pawnbrokers shall produce their books when necessary, on penalty of not exceeding 10*l.* nor less than 5*l.*; and pawnbrokers offending against this act, in neglecting to keep books, or make entries, shall forfeit not exceeding 10*l.* and for every other offence, where no forfeiture is provided, not less than 40*s.* nor more than 5*l.* s. 25, 26.

All forfeitures are to be recovered before any justice, so that prosecutions be commenced within twelve months. s. 27.

The churchwardens and overseers nominated by a justice, are obliged to prosecute, and any inhabitant may be a witness. s. 28—31.

This act is not to extend to persons lending money at 5*l. per cent.* without further profit. s. 30.

It extends to the executors and administrators of pawnbrokers, s. 31. and an appeal from the justice's conviction lies to the sessions, s. 35; and no person convicted of fraud or obtaining money under false pretences, or any felony, shall be allowed to prosecute. s. 36.

PAYMENT of money before the day appointed, is in law payment at the day, (5 Rep. 117.) but payment of a lesser sum is satisfaction for the whole, unless the payment be before the day. (4 Mod. 89.). And upon the plea of solvit ad diem it is good evidence to prove payment at any time after the day, and before action brought; and payment, although after the day, may be pleaded to any action of debt, upon bill, bond, or judgment, or scire facias upon a judgment. 2 Ld. Ray. 287.

PAYMENT OF MONEY INTO COURT, is a species of confession of the right of action. It is for the most part necessary upon pleading a tender, and is itself a kind of tender to the plaintiff; by paying into the hands of the proper officer of the court as much as the defendant acknowledges to be due, together with the costs hitherto incurred, in order to prevent the expence of any further proceedings. This may be done upon motion, for leave to pay the money into court. If, after the money paid in, the plaintiff proceeds in his suit, it is at his own peril: for, if he does not prove more due than is so paid into court, he shall be nonsuited, and pay the defendant costs; but he shall still have the money so paid in, for that the defendant has acknowledged to be his due. So if a defendant pleads a set-off, he must pay the remaining balance into court. 3 Black. 304.

PEACE, (Pax) in a legal sense intends a quiet behaviour toward the king and his subjects. And if any man is in danger from another, and makes oath of it before a justice of peace, he shall be secured by good bond, which is called binding to the peace. Lamb. Eiren. lib. 2. cap. 2. 77. Crowp. Just. of Peace, 118, 129.

PEACE OF GOD AND THE CHURCH, (Pax Dei & Ecclesiæ) was anciently used for that cessation which the king's subjects had from trouble and suit of law between the terms. Cowel. See King and Prerogative.

PECIA, a small piece or small quantity of ground. Cowel. Blount.

PECTORALE, is the same with that garment called rationale, which the high priest in the old law wore on his shoulders, as a sign of perfection. Ibid.

PECTORAL, from the Lat. pectus, armour for the breast, a breast-plate or petrel, for a horse. Ibid.

PECULIAR, (Fr. peculier, i. e. private) a particular parish or church, that hath jurisdiction within itself, and power to grant administration or probate of wills, &c. exempt from the ordinary.

The Court of Peculiars of the archbishop of Canterbury, is a branch of, and annexed to the Court of Arches, and hath a particular jurisdiction in the city of London, and over all those parishes in other dioceses, &c. within his province, these are exempt from the ordinary's jurisdiction, and subject to the metropolitan only. 4 Inst. 338.

For where a man dies, leaving goods in several peculiars, the archbishop is to grant administration or probate. Sid 90. 3 Mod. 239. 16 Vin. Abr. tit. Peculiars.

And by stat. 25 Hen. 8. c. 19, an application from this court to the Court of Delegates under the king's commission from the court of Chancery.

PECUNIA, properly money, but anciently used for cattle, and sometimes for other goods as well as money. Cowel.

PECUNIA SEPULCHRALIS, (L. Canuti.) 102.) money anciently paid to the priest at the opening of the grave for the good of the departed soul.

PECUNIARY CAUSES, cognizable in the ecclesiastical courts, are such arise either from the withholding tithes and other ecclesiastical dues, or the doing or neglecting some act relating to the church, whereby damage accrues to the plaintiff; towards obtaining a satisfaction for which he is permitted to instityte a suit in the spiritual court. For the principal of these causes, See 3 Black. 88.

PECUNIARY LEGACY. See Legacy.

PEDAGE, (pedagium) money given for the passing by foot or horse through a country. Spelm. Cowel. Blount.

PEDALE, a foot cloth, or piece of tapestry, laid on the ground to tread on for greater state and ceremony. Ingulph. pag. 41.

PEDIS ABSCISSIO, cutting off the foot, was a punishment of criminals, inflicted here, instead of death. Leg. Wil. Con. 1. cap. 7. Ingul. 856. Fleta, lib. 1. c. 38. Bracton, lib. 3. cap. 32. Cowel.

PEDONES, foot soldiers. Cowel. Blount.

PEDLAR, one who travels from place to place on foot, selling small wares. See Hawkers.

PEER, or PIER, (Pera, Fr. pierre, saxum, quod e saxis fieri solebat), a mole or rampart made to resist the force of the sea, or great rivers, for the better security of ships that lie at harbour in any haven, such as the peer of Dover and the like. Hence the duty or imposition for maintenance of a sea peer is called Peerage.

PEERAGE, the dignity of the lords or peers of the realm.

PEERS, (Pares) signify in law, those who are empannelled in an inquest upon a man, for convicting or clearing him of any offence; the reason is, because the custom of the realm is, to try every man in such case by his peers or equals. Westm. 1. cap. 6. Mag. Car. c. 29.

PEERS OF FEES. The word peer denoted originally one of the same rank; afterwards it was used for the vassals or tenants of the same lord, who were obliged to serve and attend him in his courts, being equal in function: these were termed peers of fees, because holding fees of the lord, or because their business in court was to sit and judge under their lord, of disputes arising on fees; but if there were too many in one lordship, the lord usually chose twelve, who had the title of peers, by way of distinction, from whence it is said we derive our common juries, and other peers. Cowel.

PEERS OF THE REALM, (Pares, regni proceres) S. P. C. lib. 3. The peers of the realm are by their birth hereditary counsellors of the crown, and may be called together by the king to impart their advice in all matters of importance to the realm, either in time of parliament, or which hath been their principal use, when there is no parliament in being. Co. Lit. 110.

Accordingly, Bracton speaking of the nobility of his time, says they might probably be called consules, a consulendo; reges enim tales sibi associant ad consulendum (Brac. L. 1. c. 8), and in our law books it is laid down that peers are created for two reasons: 1, ad consulendum, 2, ad defendendum regem, on which account the law gives them certain great and high privileges, such as freedom from arrests, and others which will be noticed hereafter, because it intends that they are always assisting the king with their counsel for the commonwealth, or keeping the realm in safety by their prowess and valour, 7 Rep. 34. 9 Rep. 49. 12 Rep. 96. 1 Black. 227.

When a lord is newly created he is introduced into the house of peers by two lords of the same form in their robes, Garter king at arms going before, and his lordship is to present his writ of summons, &c. to the lord chancellor; which being read, he is conducted to his place: and lords by descent, where nobility comes down from the ancestor, and is enjoyed by right of blood, are introduced with the same ceremony, the presenting of the writ excepted. Lex Constitution. 79.

Though dignities of peerage are granted from the crown, yet they cannot be surrendered to the crown, except it be in order to new and greater honours. Lex Constit. 85, 86, 87.

All peers of the realm are looked upon as the king's hereditary counsellors, and may be called together by the king to impart their advice in all matters of importance to the realm, either in time of parliament, or, which hath been their principal use, when there is no parliament in being. Co. Litt. 110. Bract. l. 1. c. 8.

Instances of conventions of the peers, to advise the king, have been in former times very frequent, though now fallen into disuse, by reason of the more regular meetings of parliament. Many instances of this kind of meeting are to be found under our ancient kings; though the former method of convoking them had been so long left off, that when Charles 1, in 1640, issued out writs under the great seal to call a great council of all the peers of England to meet and attend his majesty at York, previous to the meeting of the long parliament, the earl of Clarendon mentions it as a new invention, not before heard of, that is, as he explains himself, so old, that it had not been practised in some hundreds of years. But, though there had not so long before been an instance, nor has there been any since, of assembling them in so solemn a manner, yet, in cases of emergency our princes have at several times thought proper to call for and consult as many of the nobility as could easily be got together, as was particularly the case with king James 2, after the landing of the prince of Orange, and with the prince of Orange himself before he called that convention parliament which afterwards called him to the throne. 1 Black. 228.

Besides this general meeting it is usually looked upon to be the right of each particular peer of the realm to demand an audience of the king, and to lay before him, with decency and respect, such matters as he shall judge of importance to the public. 4 Inst. 53. See 2 Black. Com. 227, 228, 229.

1. A DUKE, though he be with us, in respect of his title of nobility, inferior in point of antiquity * to many others, yet is superior to all of them in rank; his being the first title of dignity after the royal family. (Camden Britan. tit. ordines.) And Dr. Henry, in his History of England, informs us, that "about a year before Edw. 3 assumed the title of king of France, he introduced a new order of nobility, to inflame the military ardour and ambition of his earls and barons, by creating his eldest son prince Edward DUKE of Cornwall, which was done with great solemnity in full parliament at Westminster, March 17, A. D. 1337." 8 Hen. Hist. 135.

However, in the reign of queen Elizabeth, A. D. 1572, the whole order became utterly extinct; but it was revived about fifty years afterwards by her successor, who was remarkably prodigal of honours, in the person of George Villiers duke of Buckingham. Camd. Brit. tit. ordines. Spel. Gloss. 191.

2. A marquis, marchio, is the next degree of nobility. His office formerly was (for dignity and duty were never separated by our ancestors) to guard the frontiers and limits of the kingdom; which were called the marches, from the Teutonic word, marche, a limit: such as, in particular, were the marches of Wales and Scotland, while each continued to be an enemy's country. The persons, who had command there, were called lords marchers, or marquisses; whose authority was abolished by stat. 27 Hen. 8, c. 27, though the title had long before been made a mere ensign of honour; Robert Vere, earl of Oxford, being created marquis of Dublin, by Richard 2 in the eighth year of his reign. 2 Inst. 5. 1 Black. 397.

3. An earl is a title of nobility so ancient, that its original cannot clearly be traced out. Thus much seems tolerably certain: that among the Saxons they are called ealdormen, quasi elder men, signifying the same as senior or senator among the Romans; and also schiremen, because they had each of them the civil government of a several division or shire. On the irruption of the Danes, they changed the name to eorles, which, according to Camden (Britan. tit. ordines) signified the same in their language. In Latin they are called comites (a title first used in the empire) from being the king's attendants; "a societate nomen sumpserunt, "reges enim tales sibi associant." (Bract. l. 1, c. 8. Flet. l. 1. c. 5.) After the Norman conquest they were for some time called counts or countees, from the French; but they did not long retain that name themselves, though their shires are from thence called counties to this day. The name of earls or comites is now become a mere title, they having nothing to do with the government of the county; which, as has been more than once observed, is now entirely devolved on the sheriff, the earl's deputy, or vice-comes. In writs and commissions, and other formal instruments, the king, when he mentions any peer of the degree of an earl, usually styles him, "trusty and well "beloved cousin:" an appellation as ancient as the reign of Henry 4; who being either by his wife, his mother, or his sisters, actually related or allied to every earl then in the kingdom, artfully and constantly acknowledged that connection in all his letters and other public acts: from whence the usage has descended to his successors, though the reason has long ago failed.

4. The name of vice-comes or viscount was afterwards made use of as an arbitrary title of honour, without any shadow of office pertaining to it, by Henry the sixth; when, in the eighteenth year of his reign, he created John Beaumont a peer, by the name of viscount Beaumont, which was the first instance of the kind. 2 Inst. 5.

5. A baron's is the most general and universal title of nobility; for originally every one of the peers of superior rank had also a barony annexed to his other titles (2 Inst. 5, 6.) But it hath sometimes happened that, when an antient baron hath been raised to a new degree of peerage, in the course of a few generations the two titles have descended differently; one perhaps to the male descendants, the other to the heirs general; whereby the earldom or other superior title hath subsisted without a barony: and there are also modern instances, where earls and viscounts have been created without annexing a barony to their other honours: so that now the rule doth not hold universally, that all peers are barons. The original and antiquity of baronies have occasioned great inquiries among our English antiquaries. The most probable opinion seems to be, that they were the same with our present lords of manors; to which the name of court baron (which is the lord's court, and incident to every manor) gives some countenance. It may be collected from king John's Magna Charta, (cap. 14,) that originally all lords of manors, or barons, that held of the king in capite, had seats in the great council or parliament: till about the reign of that prince the conflux of them became so large and troublesome, that the king was obliged to divide them, and summon only the greater barons in person, leaving the small ones to be summoned by the sheriff, and (as it is said) to sit by representation in another house; which gave rise to the separation of the two houses of parliament. Gilb. Hist. of Exch. c. 3. Seld. tit. of Hon. 2, 5, 21.

Peers how created.] The right of peerage seems to have been originally territorial; that is, annexed to lands, honours, castles, manors, and the like, the proprietors and possessors of which were (in right of those estates) allowed to be peers of the realm, and were summoned to parliament to do suit and service to their sovereign: and, when the land was alienated, the dignity passed with it as appendant. Thus the bishops still sit in the house of lords in right of succession to certain antient baronies annexed, or supposed to be annexed, to their episcopal lands (Glan. l. 7. c. 1,) and thus, in 11 Hen. 6, the possession of the castle of Arundel was adjudged to confer an earldom on its possessor (Seld. tit. of hon. b. 2. c. 9, s. 5.) But afterwards, when alienations grew to be frequent, the dignity of peerage was confined to the lineage of the party ennobled, and instead of territorial became personal. Actual proof of a tenure by barony became no longer necessary to constitute a lord of parliament; but the record of the writ of summons to him or his ancestors was admitted as a sufficient evidence of the tenure.

Peers are now created either by writ, or by patent: for those who claim by prescription must suppose either a writ or patent made to their ancestors; though by length of time it is lost. The creation by writ, or the king's letter, is a summons to attend the house of peers, by the style and title of that barony, which the king is pleased to confer: that by patent is a royal grant to a subject of any dignity and degree of peerage. The creation by writ is the more ancient way; but a man is not ennobled thereby, unless he actually take his seat in the house of lords; and some are of opinion that there must be at least two writs of summons, and a sitting in two distinct parliaments, to evidence an hereditary barony, (Whitelocke of parl. ch. 114.) and therefore the most usual, because the surest, way is to grant the dignity by patent, which enures to a man and his heirs according to the limitations thereof, though he never himself makes use of it (Co. Litt. 16). Yet it is frequent to call up the eldest son of a peer to the house of lords by writ of summons, in the name of his father's barony, because in that case there is no danger of his children losing the nobility in case he never takes his seat, for they will succeed to their grandfather *. Creation by writ has also one advantage over that by patent: for a person created by writ holds the dignity to him and his heirs, without any words to that purport in the writ †; but in letters patent there must be words to direct the inheritance, else the dignity enures only to the grantee for life (Co. Litt. 9, 16). For a man or woman may be created noble for their own lives, and the dignity not descend to their heirs at all, or descend only to some particular heirs: as where a peerage is limited to a man, and the heirs male of his body by Elizabeth his present lady, and not to such heirs by any former or future wife.

Let us next take a view of a few of the principal incidents attending the nobility, exclusive of their capacity as members of parliament, and as hereditary counsellors of the crown; both of which we have before considered. And first we must observe that in criminal cases a nobleman shall be tried by his peers ‡. The great are always obnoxious to popular envy: were they to be judged by the people they might be in danger from the prejudice of their judges, and would moreover be deprived of the privilege of the meanest subjects, that of being tried by their equals, which is secured to all the realm by magna charta, c. 29. It is said that this does not extend to bishops, who, though they are lords of parliament, and sit there by virtue of their baronies, which they hold jure ecclesiæ, yet are not ennobled in blood, and consequently not peers with the nobility (3 Inst. 30, 31.) As to peeresses, there was no precedent for their trial when accused of treason or felony, till after Eleanor duchess of Gloucester, wife to the lord protector, was accused of treason and found guilty of witchcraft, in an ecclesiastical synod, through the intrigues of cardinal Beaufort. This very extraordinary trial gave occasion to a special stat. 20 H. 6. c. 9, which declares (Moor. 769. 2 Inst. 50. Staund. P.C. 152. 6 Rep. 52) the law to be, that peeresses, either in their own right or by marriage, shall be tried before the same judicature as other peers of the realm. If a woman, noble in her own right, marries a commoner, she still remains noble ‖, and shall be tried by her peers; but if she be only noble by marriage, then by a second marriage with a commoner she loses her dignity; for as by marriage it is gained, by marriage it is also lost ¶ (Dyer 79. Co. Litt. 16). Yet if a duchess dowager marries a baron she continues a duchess still; for all the nobility are pares, and therefore it is no degradation (2 Inst. 50). A peer, or peeress (either in her own right or by marriage,) cannot be arrested in civil cases (Finch. L. L. 355. 1 Vent. 298): and they have also many peculiar privileges annexed to their peerage in the course of judicial proceedings. A peer, sitting in judgment, gives not his verdict upon oath, like an ordinary juryman, but upon his honour (2 Inst. 49.) he answers also to bills in chancery upon his honour, and not upon his oath (1 P.

* And where the father's barony is limited by patent to him and the heirs male of his body, and his eldest son is called up to the house of lords by writ with the title of this barony, the writ in this case will not create a fee or a general estate tail, so as to make a female capable of inheriting the title, but upon the death of the father the two titles unite, or become one and the same. Case of the claim to the barony of Sidney of Penshurst disallowed. Dom. Proc. 17 June 1782.

† Though this is the authority of lord Coke, it is now understood to be erroneous; a creation by writ does not confer a fee-simple in the title, but only an estate-tail general; for every claimant of the title must be descended from the person first ennobled. 1 Woodd. 37.

‡ A nobleman is tried by his peers only in treason and felony, and misprision of the same; but in all misdemeanors, as libels, riots, perjury, conspiracies, &c. he is tried like a commoner by a jury. 3 Inst. 30. 2 Hawk. 424.

‖ But she communicates no rank or title to her husband. Harg. Co. Litt. 326. b. There have been claims, and these are supported by authorities, by a husband after issue to assume the title of his wife's dignity, and after her death to retain the same as tenant by the courtesy; but from Mr. Hargrave's statement of this subject, in Co. Litt. 29. b. n. 1, there is no probability that such a claim would now be allowed.

¶ Yet she is commonly called and addressed by the style and title which she bore before her second marriage, but this is only by courtesy; as the daughters of dukes, marquisses, and earls are usually addressed by the title of lady, though in law they are commoners. In a writ of partition brought by Ralph Haward and lady Ann Powes his wife, the court held that it was a misnomer, and that it ought to have been by Ralph Haward and Ann Haward his wife, late wife of lord Powes deceased. Dyer 79.

Wms. 146) ; but when he is examined as a witness either in civil or criminal cases, he must be sworn (Salk. 512) * : for the respect which the law shows to the honour of a peer, does not extend so far as to overturn a settled maxim, that in judicio non creditur nisi juratis (Cro. Car. 64). The honour of peers is however so highly tendered by the law that it is much more penal to spread false reports of them and certain other great officers of the realm, than of other men ; scandal against them being called by the peculiar name of scandalum magnatum, and subjected to peculiar punishments by divers ancient statutes. 3 Edw. 1, c. 34. 2 Ric. 2, st. 1, c. 5. 12 Ric. 2. c. 11. PEN, a high mountain. Camd. Britan.

PENAL LAWS. Penal statutes are to be construed strictly, and not extended by equity ; but the words may be interpreted beneficially, according to the intent of the legislators. 1 Inst. 54, 268. See Conviction.

PENALTY OF BONDS. If a man brings an action of debt upon a bond he shall recover the whole penalty, because in debt the judgment must be according to the demand, and the demand is to be for the whole penalty.

But by the stat. 8 & 9 W. 3, c. 11, s. 8, in actions on bonds for performance of covenants, the plaintiff may assign as many breaches as he pleases, and jury may assess damages. Defendant paying the damages, execution may be stayed, but the judgment to remain, to answer any further breach, and plaintiff may have sci. fac. against the defendant.

And by the statute 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16, in the case of a bond conditioned for the payment of money, the defendant upon bringing the principal, interest, and costs, into court shall be discharged of the penalty. s. 13.

PENANCE, an ecclesiastical punishment, which affects the body of the penitent ; by which he is obliged to give a public satisfaction to the church, for the scandal he hath given by his evil example.

In the case of incest, or incontinency, the sinner is usually enjoined to do a public penance in the cathedral or parish church, or public market bare legged and bare headed in a white sheet, and to make an open confession of his crime in a prescribed form of words.

So in smaller faults, a public satisfaction or penance as the judge shall decree, is to be made before the minister, churchwardens, or some of the parishioners, respect being had to the quality of the offence, as in the case of defamation, or laying violent hands on a minister, or the like. God. Append. 18. Wood's Inst. 507. Penance may be changed into a sum of money to be applied to pious uses called commuting. 3 Inst. 150. 4 Inst. 336. 4 Black. 105. 217, 272. 361.

PENITENTIARY HOUSES. By the stat. 19 Geo. 3, c. 74, all offenders liable to transportation may in lieu thereof, at the discretion of the judges, be employed, if males (except in the case of petty larceny) in hard labour for the benefit of some public navigation ; or, whether males or females, may in all cases be confined to hard labour in certain PENITENTIARY HOUSES, to be erected by virtue of the said act, for the several terms therein specified, but in no case exceeding seven years ; with a power of subsequent mitigation, and even of reward, in case of their good behaviour. But if they escape and are re-taken, for the first time an addition of three years is made to the term of their confinement ; and a second escape is felony without benefit of clergy.

In forming the plan of these penitentiary houses, the principal objects have been, by sobriety, cleanliness, and medical assistance, by a regular series of labour, by solitary confinement during the intervals of work, and by due religious instruction, to preserve and amend the health of the unhappy offenders, to inure them to habits of industry, to guard them from pernicious company, to accustom them to serious reflection, and to teach them both the principles and practice of every christian and moral duty. And if the whole of this plan be properly executed, and its defects be timely supplied, there is reason to hope that such a reformation may be effected in the lower classes of mankind, and such a gradual scale of punishment be affixed to all gradations of guilt, as may in time supersede the necessity of capital punishment, except for very atrocious crimes. 4 Black. 371.

PENNY WEIGHT. As every pound contained 12 ounces, each ounce was formerly divided into 20 parts, called penny-weights; and though the penny-weight be altered, yet the denomination still continues. Every penny-weight is subdivided into 24 grains. Cowel.

PENON, (mentioned in stat. 11 Eliz. c. 1,) is a standard, banner, or ensign, carried in war. Cowel.

PENSA SALIS, Casei, &c. A wey of salt, or cheese, containing 256 pounds. Cowel.

PENSAM, ad pensam, the ancient way of paying into the Exchequer as much money for a pound sterling, as weighed twelve ounces troy. Lowndes 4.

PENSION, (Fr. pension,) a salary or allowance made by the crown to any one for meritorious services performed, or other good cause. And to receive a pension from a foreign prince or state, without leave of our king, has been held to be criminal, because it may incline a man to prefer the interest of such foreign prince to that of his own country. 1 Hawk. P. C. 58.

Persons having pensions from the crown during pleasure, or for term of years, are declared incapable of being elected or sitting as members of parliament, &c. by statute 6 Ann. c. 7. 1 Geo. 1, c. 56. See Parliament.

PENSION OF CHURCHES, are certain sums of money paid to clergymen in lieu of tithes.

PENSIONS OF THE INNS OF COURTS, are annual payments of each member to the houses. And also that which in the two Temples is called a parliament, and in Lincoln's Inn a council, in Gray's Inn is termed a pension, being usually an assembly of the benchers to consult of the affairs of the society.

PENSIONERS, (pensionarii) are a band of gentlemen so called, who attend as a guard on the king's person: They were instituted anno 1539, and have an allowance of fifty pounds a year, to maintain themselves and two horses for the king's service. Stow's Annals 973.

PENSION-WRIT. When a pension writ is once issued, none sued thereby in any inns of court, shall be discharged or permitted to come into commons, till all duties be paid. Order in Gray's Inn, whereby it seems to be a peremptory order against such of the society as are in arrear for pensions and other duties. Cowel.

PENTECOSTALS, (pentecostalia) were certain pious oblations made at the feast of pentecost, by parishioners to their priest, and sometimes by inferior churches or parishes, to the principal mother church. Cowel.

PENY, (San. penig) was our ancient current silver. 2 Inst. 575.

PERAMBULATION, (perambulatio) a travelling through, or over; as perambulation of the forest is the surveying or walking about the forest, and the utmost limits of it, by justices, or other officers thereto assigned, to set down and preserve the metes and bounds thereof. 17 Car. c. 16. 20 Car. 2, c. 3. 4 Inst. 30.

So perambulation of parishes is to be made by the minister, churchwardens and parishioners, by going round the same once a year, in or about Ascension week; and the parishioners may well justify going over any man's land in their perambulation, according to usage; and it is said may abate all nusances in their way. Cro. Eliz. 441.

There is also a perambulation of manors; and a writ perambulatione faciendâ, which lies where any encroachments have been made by a neighbouring lord, &c. Also a commission may be granted to other persons to make perambulation, and to certify the same in the Chancery, or the Common Pleas, &c. And this commission is issued to make perambulation of towns, counties, &c. New Nat. Br. 206.

PERCAPTURA, a place in a river made up with banks, &c. for the better preserving and taking fish. Provch. Antiq. 129. Cowel.

PERCH, is a rod or pole of sixteen feet and a half in length, whereof forty in length and four in breadth, make an acre of ground. Cromp. Juriscl. 222.

PER MY ET PER TOUT. Joint-tenants are said to be seised per my et per tout, by the half or moiety, and by all; that is, they each of them have the entire possession, as well of every parcel as of the whole. They have not one of them a seisin of one half or moiety, and the other of the other moiety; neither can one be exclusively seised of one acre, and his companion of another; but each has an undivided moiety of the whole, and not the whole of an undivided moiety. 2 Black. 182.

PER QUOD, are words made use of by a plaintiff in his declaration in the averring of particular damage to have happened, without which his action would not have been maintainable. As in slander, to say that such a clergyman is a bastard, he cannot for this bring any action against me, unless he can shew some special loss by it: in which case he may bring his action against me, for saying he was a bastard per quod he lost the presentation to such a living. 4 Rep. 17. 1 Lev. 248. 2 Black. 124.

PERDINGS, the dregs of the people, men of no substance. Cowel.

PERDONATIO UTLAGARIÆ, a pardon for a man outlawed, and who afterwards of his own accord surrendered. Reg. Orig. 28.

PEREMPTORY, (peremptorius, from the verb perimere, to cut off,) joined with a substantive, as a peremptory action or exception, signifies a final and determinate act, without hope of renewing or altering. Nat. Brev. 35, 38. 104. 108. Idem, 5, 11. Cowel.

PEREMPTORY CHALLENGE, in criminal cases, or at least in capital ones, there is, in favorem vitæ, allowed to the prisoner an arbitrary and capricious species of challenge to a certain number of jurors, without showing any cause, that is to the number of 35, being under the number of three full juries, which is called a peremptory challenge. 4 Black. 353. See Afrute.

PEREMPTORY MANDAMUS. If the inferior judge or other person to whom a writ of mandamus is directed, returns or signifies an insufficient reason, then there issues a peremptory mandamus, to do the thing absolutely; to which no other return will be admitted, but a certificate of perfect obedience and due execution of the writ. 3 Black. 111. 265.

PEREMPTORY WRIT, a species of original writ, called a si fecerit te securum, from the words of the writ; which directs the sheriff to cause the defendant to appear in court, without any option given him, provided the plaintiff gives the sheriff security effectually to prosecute his claim. This writ is in use where nothing is specifically demanded, but only a satisfaction in general; to obtain which, and minister complete redress, the intervention of some judicature is necessary. 3 Black. 274.

PERFECTION OF THE KING. Besides the attribute of sovereignty, the law also ascribes to the king, in his political capacity, absolute perfection, as the fundamental maxim is that the king can do no wrong. Plowd. 487. 1 Black. 246. See King.

PERINDE VALERE, a term in the ecclesiastical law, signifying a dispensation granted to a clerk, who being defective in capacity for a benefice, or other ecclesiastical function, is de facto admitted to it; and it hath the appellation from the words, which make the faculty as effectual to the party dispensed with as if he had been actually capable of the thing for which he is dispensed with at the time of his admission. 25 Hen. 8, c. 21, it is called a writ. Cowel.

PERINDINARE, to stay, remain, or abide in a place. Ibid.

PERIPHRASIS. No periphrasis, or circumlocution, will supply words of art, which the law hath appropriated for the description of offences in indictment. Cro. Eliz. 535, 749. 2 Hawk. P. C. 224, 249.

PERJURY, (perjurium est mendacium cum juramento firmatum.) 3 Inst. 163.

The crime of wilful and corrupt perjury is defined by sir Edward Coke to be a crime committed when a lawful oath is administered, in some judicial proceeding, to a person who sweara wilfully, absolutely, and falsely, in a matter material to the issue or point in question. 3 Inst. 164.

The law takes no notice of any perjury but such as is committed in some court of justice, having power to administer an oath; or before some magistrate or proper officer, invested with a similar authority, in some proceedings relative to a civil suit or a criminal prosecution: for it esteems all other oaths unnecessary at least, and therefore will not punish the breach of them*. For which reason it is much to be questioned, how far any magistrate is justifiable in taking a voluntary affidavit in any extrajudicial matter, as is now too frequent upon every petty occasion: since it is more than possible, that by such idle oaths a man may frequently in foro conscientiæ, incur the guilt, and at the same time evade the temporal penalties, of perjury. The perjury must also be corrupt (that is, committed malo animo) wilful, positive, and absolute; not upon surprize, or the like: it also must be in some point material to the question in dispute; for if it only be in some trifling collateral circumstance, to which no regard is paid, it is no more penal than in the voluntary extrajudicial oaths before mentioned *. Subornation of perjury is the offence of procuring another to take such a false oath, as constitutes perjury in the principal. The punishment of perjury and subornation, at common law, has been various. It was antiently death; afterwards banishment, or cutting out the tongue; then forfeiture of goods; and now it is fine and imprisonment, and never more to be capable of bearing testimony (3 Inst. 163). But the stat. 5 Eliz. c. 9, (if the offender be prosecuted thereon) inflicts the penalty of perpetual infamy, and a fine of 40*l.* on the suborner: and in default of payment, imprisonment for six months, and to stand with both ears nailed to the pillory. Perjury itself is thereby punished with six months imprisonment, perpetual infamy, and a fine of 20*l.* or to have both ears nailed to the pillory. But the prosecution is usually carried on for the offence at common law; especially as to the penalties before inflicted, the stat. 2 Geo. 2, c. 25, superadds a power, for the court to order the offender to be sent to the house of correction for a term not exceeding seven years, or to be transported for the same period; and makes it felony without benefit of clergy to return or escape within the time. 4 Black. 137.

* Where an oath is required by an act of parliament, but not in a judicial proceeding, the breach of that oath does not seem to amount to perjury, unless the statute enacts that such oath, when false, shall be perjury, or shall subject the offender to the penalties of perjury. Christian's N. 4 Black. 137.

It is remarkable that the house of commons have no power to administer an oath, except in those particular instances in which that power is granted to them by express acts of parliament. It is supposed that the reason they have never obtained the general authority of administering an oath, is owing to the jealousy of the upper house, which, by securing this privilege to itself prevents the commons from participating in the judicature of parliament. Ibid.

PERMISSIVE WASTE. Waste is either voluntary, which is a crime of commission, as by pulling down a house; or it is permissive, which is a matter of omission only, as by suffering it to fall for want of necessary reparations. 2 Black. 281.

PERMIT, (from permitto) a license granted to remove goods liable to the custom duties, or excise.

PERMUTATIONE ARCHIDIACONATUS ET ECCLESIA EIDEM ANNEXÆ CUM ECCLESIA ET PRÆBENDA, a writ to an ordinary, commanding him to admit a clerk to a benefice, upon exchange made with another. Reg. Orig. 307.

PERNANCY, (from the Fr. prendre) signifies a taking or receiving; as tithes in pernancy are tithes taken, or that may be taken in kind. 2 Black. 163.

PERNOR OF PROFITS, he who receives the profits of lands, &c. and is all one with cestui que use. Ibid.

PERPARS, a part of the inheritance.

PERPETUATING THE TESTIMONY OF WITNESSES. If witnesses to a disputable fact are old and infirm, it is usual to file a bill to perpetuate the testimony of those witnesses, although no suit is depending; for it may be, a man's antagonist only waits for the death of some of them to commence his suit. 3 Black. Com. 450.

PERPETUITY. A perpetuity is, where if all who have interest join, yet they cannot bar or pass the estate. But if by concurrence of all having interest the estate-tail may be barred, it is no perpetuity. Ch. Cases, 213.

A perpetuity is a thing odious in law, and destructive to the commonwealth; it would put a stop to the commerce, and prevent the circulation of the property of the kingdom. Vern. 164.

And any attempt to make a perpetual succession of estates for life is vain, and not practicable. 2 Vern. 738. See Executory Devise.

PERPETUITY OF THE KING. The law ascribes to the king, in his political capacity, an absolute immortality: for though the reigning monarch may die, yet the king survives still: and immediately upon the decease of the reigning prince in his natural capacity, his kingship or imperial dignity, by act of law, without any interregnum, or interval, is vested at once in his heir, who is, eo instanti, king to all intents and purposes. 2 Black. 249.

PER QUÆ SERVITIA, a judicial writ, issuing from the note of a fine, for the cognisee of a manor, seigniory, chief-rent, or other services, to compel him who was tenant of the land at the time of the note of the fine levied, to attorn unto him. Old Nat. Brev. 155.

PERQUISITE, (perquisitum) any thing got by industry, or purchased with money, different from that which descends from an ancestor; so used by Bracton, lib. 2, cap. 30. n. 3, and lib. 4, cap. 22.

PERQUISITES OF COURTS, profits which arise to lords of manors, from their court baron. Perk. 20, 21.

PER QUOD CONSORTIUM AMISIT, and per quod servitium amisit, are words necessary in declarations for trespass, &c. where a man's wife or servant is beaten, or taken from him, by which means he loses their service, &c. 2 Lil. Abr. 595, 596.

PERSONABLE, (personabilis,) signifies as much as enabled to maintain plea in court; as for example the defendant was judged personable to maintain this action. Old Nat. Brev. 142. and in Kitchen, 214.

PERSONAL, (personalis) being joined with the substantives, things, goods or chattels, as things personal, goods personal, chattels personal; signifies any moveable thing, quick or dead. West. Symbol. part 2. ff. 58. Cowel.

PERSONAL ACTION, (actio personalis) Personal actions are such whereby a man claims a debt, or personal duty, or damages in lieu thereof; and, likewise, whereby a man claims a satisfaction in damages for some injury done to his person or property. The former are said to be founded on contracts, the latter upon torts or wrongs: and they are the same which the civil law calls "actiones in personam, que adversus eum "intenduntur, qui ex contractu vel delicto "obligatus est aliquid dare vel concedere." (Inst. 4, 6, 15.) Of the former nature are all actions upon debt or promises; of the latter, all actions for trespasses, nuisances, assaults, defamatory words, and the like. 3 Black. 117.

In actions merely personal, arising ex delicto, for wrongs actually done or committed by the defendant, as trespass, battery, and slander, the rule is that actio personalis moritur cum persona (4 Inst. 315.); and it never shall be revived either by or against the executors or other representatives. For neither the executors of the plaintiff have received, nor those of the defendant have committed, in their own personal capacity, any manner of wrong or injury. But in actions arising ex contractu, by breach of promise and the like, where the right descends to the representatives of the plaintiff, and those of the defendant have assets to answer the demand, though the suits shall abate by the death of the parties, yet they may be revived against or by the executors: (Mar. 14.) being indeed rather actions against the property than the person, in which the executors have now the same interest that their testator had before.

PERSONAL SECURITY. The right of personal security consists in a person's legal and uninterrupted enjoyment of his life, his limbs, his body, his health, and his reputation. 1 Black. 129.

PERSONAL TITHES, are tithes paid of such profits as come by the labour of a man's person, as buying and selling, gains of merchandise, and handicrafts, &c. 2 Black. 24.

PERSONALTY, (personalitas) signifies things personal, as contra-distinguished from the realty.

PERSONATE, to represent by a fictitious or assumed character, so as to pass for the person represented. Johns. See Felony.

PERSONS, are divided by law into either natural persons, or artificial. Natural persons are such as the God of Nature formed us; artificial are such as are created and devised by human laws for the purposes of society and government, which are called corporations or bodies politic. 1 Black. 123. 467.

PERTICATA TERRÆ, the fourth part of an acre. Cowel.

PERTICULAS, poor scholars of the Isle of Man.

PERVISE, the area in front of Westminster Hall, now called Palace Yard. Cowel.

PESA, pensa, pisa, a wey or weigh of cheese and wool, &c. containing 256 pounds. Cowel.

PESAGE, (pesagium) a custom or duty paid for weighing merchandise, or other goods, and hence pesarius, a weigher. Cowel.

PESSONA, mast of oaks, &c. or money taken for mast, or feeding hogs. Ibid.

PESSURABLE, PESTARBLE, or PESTARABLE WARES, seem to be such wares or merchandise as pester and take up much room in a ship. Ibid.

PETER-CORN. In some of the ancient registers of our bishops there is a grant thereof by the king. Ibid.

PETER-PENCE, (denarii sancti Petri,) called in the Saxon tongue Romefeoh, the fee of Rome, or due to Rome; a tribute to the pope, so called because collected on the day of St. Peter ad Vincula, and was a penny for every house. Cowel.

It was prohibited by Edw. 3, and by 25 Hen. 8, c. 21, but revived by 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 8, and was wholly abrogated 1 Eliz. c. 1. 4 Black. 106.

PETITION, (petitio) a supplication made by an inferior to a superior, and especially to one having jurisdiction. S. P. C. c. 15. Standf. Prærog. c. 22. 3 Black. 256.

By stat. 13 Car. 2, st. 1, c. 5, (which is still in force, and no wise repealed, (Doug. 592) the soliciting, labouring, or procuring the putting the hands or consent of above 20 persons to any petition, remonstrance, or address to the king, or both or either house of parliament, for alterations in church or state, unless by assent of three or more justices of peace of the county, or a majority of the grand jury at the assises or sessions; &c. or if in London by the mayor, aldermen, and common council, and repairing to the king or parliament to deliver such petition, with above the number of ten persons, is subject to a fine of 100*l.* and three months imprisonment, being proved by two witnesses within six months in the court of B. R. or at the assises, &c.

If what is required by this statute be observed, care must be taken that petitions to the king contain nothing which may be interpreted to reflect on the administration; for if they do, it may come under the denomination of a LIBEL: and it is remarkable that the petition of the city of London, for the sitting of a parliament was deemed libellous; because it suggested that the king's dissolving a late parliament was an obstruction of justice. Read. Stat. Vol. 4, 353.

To subscribe a petition to the king, to frighten him into a change of his measures, intimating that, if it be denied many thousands of his subjects will be discontented, &c. is included among the contempts against the king's person and government, tending to weaken the same, and punishable by fine and imprisonment. 1 Hawk. P. C. 60.

But if there should happen any uncommon injury, or infringement of the rights of the subject, which the ordinary course of law is too defective to redress, there remains a right, appertaining to every individual, namely, the right of petitioning the king or either house of parliament for the redress of grievances. There are doubtless restrictions to this right, but, while they promote the spirit of peace they are no check upon that of liberty. Care only must be taken, lest, under the pretence of petitioning, the subject be guilty of any riot or tumult; to prevent which the stat. 13 Car. 2, st. 1, c. 5, above mentioned was enacted. 1 Black. 142.

But under these regulations, it is declared by the stat. 1 W. & M. st. 2, c. 2, that the subject hath a right to petition; and that all commitments and prosecutions for such petitioning are illegal.

PETITION IN CHANCERY, is a statement in writing addressed to the lord chancellor, or master of the rolls, showing some matter whereupon the petitioner prays some order of the court. P. R. C. 269.

But the master of the rolls is not to be petitioned for rehearings, but the chancellor; also the chancellor only is to be petitioned touching pleas, demurrers, or exceptions, or touching decrees or special orders made before the chancellor. P. R. C. 270. See 16 Vin. Abr. 337, 338.

PETITION OF RIGHT. See Liberties and Rights.

PETIT CAPE. See Cape.

PETIT LARCENY. See Larceny.

PETIT SERJEANTY, parva serjeantia. To hold by petit serjeanty was to hold lands or tenements of the king, yielding him a knife, a buckler, an arrow, a bow without a string, or other like service, at the will of the first feoffor, abolished by 12 Car. 2, c. 24.

PETIT SESSION. In both corporations and counties at large there is sometimes kept a special or petty sessions, by a few justices, for dispatching smaller business in the neighbourhood between the times of the general sessions, as for licensing alehouses, passing the accounts of parish officers, and the like, which petty sessions must be held by two justices at the least.

PETIT TREASON (parva proditio). See Homicide.

PETRA, a sort of weight which we now call a stone, but differing in many parts of England; in some places consisting of 16, in others of 14, 12, or 8 pounds. Cowel.

PETRARIA, a quarry of stones, or a great gun called petrard: often mentioned in both senses. Cowel.

PEWS, in a church, may descend by immemorial custom, without any ecclesiastical concurrence, from the ancestor to the heir, as appurtenant to an ancient messuage of inheritance. 3 Inst. 202. 12 Rep. 105.

For the right to sit in a particular pew in a church arises either from prescription as appurtenant to a messuage, or from a faculty or grant from the ordinary, for he has the disposition of all pews which are not claimed by prescription. Gibs. Cod. 221.

And in an action upon the case for a disturbance of the enjoyment of a pew, if the plaintiff claims it by prescription, he must state it in the declaration as appurtenant to a messuage in the parish. This prescription may be supported by an enjoyment for 36 years, and perhaps any time above 20 years. 1 T. R. 428. But where a pew was claimed as appurtenant to an ancient messuage, and it was proved that it had been so annexed for 30 years, but that it had no existence before that time, it was held this modern commencement defeated the prescriptive claim. 5 T. R. 296

PHAROS, (from Pharus, a small island in the mouth of the Nile, wherein stood a high watch tower) a watch tower or seamark: and no man can erect a pharos, light-house, beacon, &c. without lawful warrant and authority. 3 Inst. 204.

PHYSICIANS. By 14 & 15 Hen. 8. c. 5, if any practise physic in the city of London, or within 7 miles of it, without licence of the college under their seal, he shall forfeit 5*l.* per month, half to the king and half to the college. Also persons practising physic in other parts of England, are to have letters testimonial from the president and 3 elects, unless they be graduate physicians of Oxford or Cambridge, &c.

The fees of a physician are honorary, and not demandable of right, consequently a physician cannot maintain an action for them. 4 Ter. Rep. 317.

PHILOSOPHER'S STONE. Henry 6 granted letters patent to certain persons, who undertook to find out the philosopher's stone, and to change other metals into gold, &c. to be free from the penalty of the Stat. 5 Hen. 4, made against the attempts of chymists of this nature. Pat. 34 Hen. 6. 3 Inst. 74.

PICARDS, boats of 15 tons or upwards, used on the Severn, 34 & 35 Hen. 8, c. 3. Also a fisher-boat. 13 Eliz. 11.

PICCAGE, (piccagium, from the Fr. piquer, i. e. effodere) is a sum of money paid for leave to break up ground to set up booths, stalls, or standings in fairs, payable to the lord or owner of the soil. Palmer 77. This stands upon the same footing as Stallage, which see.

PICLE, (pictellum) a small parcel of land enclosed with a hedge; a little close. In some parts of England it is called pightel. Cowel.

PIE-POUDRE COURT, (curia pedis pulverizati) from the Fr. pied, i. e. pes, and poudreux, i. e. pulverulentus. The lowest, and at the same time the most expeditious, court of justice known to the law of England is the court of pie poudre, curia pedis pulverizati: so called from the dusty feet of the suitors; or according to Sir Edward Coke (4 Inst. 272), because justice is there done as speedily as dust can fall from the foot. Upon the same principle that justice among the Jews was administered in the gate of the city (Ruth, chap. 4), that the proceedings might be the more speedy, as well as public. But the etymology given us by a learned modern writer (Barrington's Observations on the Statutes, 397), is much more ingenious and satisfactory; it being derived, according to him, from pied puldreaux, a pedlar in old French, and therefore signifying the court of such petty chapmen as resort to fairs or markets. It is a court of record, incident to every fair and market; of which the steward of him, who owns or has the toll of the market, is the judge. It was instituted to administer justice for all injuries done in that very fair or market, and not in any preceding one. So that the injury must be done, complained of, heard, and determined, within the compass of one and the same day. The court hath cognizance of all matters that can possibly arise within the precinct of that fair or market; and the plaintiff must make oath that the cause of an action arose there (Stat. 17 Edw. 4, c. 2). From this court a writ of error lies, in the nature of an appeal, to the courts at Westminster (Cro. Eliz. 774). The reason of its institution seems to have been to do justice expeditiously among the variety of persons, that resort from distant places to a fair or market: since it is probable that no other inferior court might be able to serve its process, or execute its judgments on both or perhaps either of the parties; and therefore, unless this court had been erected, the complaint must necessarily have resorted even in the first instance to some superior judicature. 3 Black. 32.

PIES, freres pies, monks, so called because they were black and white garments, like magpies. Cowel.

PIETANTIA, a small portion of meat and drink, distributed to the members of some collegiate body, or other people, upon a high festival, or stated anniversary; hence PIETANTIARIUS, the pittancer or officer who was to distribute the pittances. Cowel.

PIG OF LEAD. See Fother.

PIGHTLE OF LAND, a little close of land.

PIGEONS. By 2 Geo. 3, c. 29, any person who shall wilfully shoot at, with an intent to kill, or shall by any means whatever kill or take with a wilful intent to destroy any house-dove or pigeon belonging to other persons, shall forfeit on conviction 20*s.* to the prosecutor; and if not forthwith paid, the offender may be committed and kept to hard labour for any time not exceeding three months, nor less than one, unless the forfeiture be sooner paid. The owners of dove-cotes or other places built for the preservation or breeding of pigeons, and those appointed by them, excepted. Offender is liable only to one conviction for same offence; and prosecutions are to be commenced and carried on with effect within two months after the offence; and where persons suffer imprisonment, they are not liable afterwards to pay the penalty. But it seems that if pigeons come upon my land I may kill them, and the owner hath not any remedy. Cro. Jac. 498.

PIGEON-HOUSE. Formerly none but the lord of the manor, or the person, might erect a pigeon-house; though it has been since held, that any freeholder may build a pigeon-house on his own ground. 5 Rep. 104. Cro. Eliz. 548. Cro. Jac. 382, 410.

PILA, that side of money which is called pile, because it is the side on which there was an impression of a church built on piles. Fleta, lib. 1. c. 39. Cowel.

PILETTUS, anciently used for an arrow, which had a round knob, a little above the head, to hinder it from going far into a mark; from the Lat. pila, which signifies generally any round thing like a ball. Cowel.

PILEUS SUPPORTATIONIS, a cap of maintenance. Cowel.

PILLORY, (collistrigium, collum stringens; pilloria, from the Fr. pilleur, i. e. depeculator, or pelor, derived from the Greek Πύλη, Janua, a door, because one standing on the pillory, puts his head, as it were through a door, and Ὄψις, video,) is an engine made of wood to punish offenders, by exposing them to public view. There is a statute of the pillory, 51 H. 3. And by statute, it is appointed for bakers, forestallers, and those who use false weights, perjury, forgery, &c. (3 Inst. 219.) Lords of leets are to have a pillory and tumbrel, or it will be cause of forfeiture of the leet; and a vill may be bound by prescription to provide a pillory, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. 73.

PILOT, is one employed to conduct ships into roads and harbours, or over bars and sands. Also the steersman who stands at the helm, and manages the rudder.

By 43 Geo. 3, c. 152, the warden of the Cinque Ports, or his deputy, with assent of the court of Lord Manage, shall make rules and orders for the regulation of pilots at Dover, Deal, and other ports, undertaking the navigation of vessels there, and on the coasts of France, Flanders, Holland, and the Baltic, which rules shall be printed; pilots refusing to obey such rules may be convicted by the lord warden or deputies; and the conviction shall be returned to the court of Load Manage, to which the party aggrieved may appeal. s. 1—3.

Pilots navigating vessels during their suspension, shall forfeit 10*l.* s. 4.

By 48 Geo. 3, c. 104, for the better regulation of pilots and the pilotage of vessels navigating the British seas, the corporation of Trinity-house of Deptford shall license fit persons, as pilots, to conduct all vessels within certain limits in the Thames and Medway, and none other shall act, and certain rates of pilotage are to be paid; which pilots are to pay, annually, three guineas to the corporation of Trinity-house, on pain of suspension. s. 1—4.

No person shall be licensed as a pilot, unless he has served either as a mate for three years, or commander of a square-rigged vessel for one year, or been employed as a pilot by the Trinity-house for seven years, or served an apprenticeship of five years to some licensed pilot vessel. s. 5.

Till a pilot has acted three years, he shall not take charge of a ship drawing more than fourteen feet water, on pain of 10*l.* and the like on the master. s. 6.

No Cinque Port pilot shall take charge of any ship till he has been admitted; on pain to forfeit, for the first offence, 10*l.*; the second, 20*l.*; and every other offence, 40*l.* s. 7.

A sufficient number of Cinque Port pilots shall constantly ply to take charge of ships coming from the westward; and upon making signals of fleets from the westward, all pilots shall prepare to go off, on pain to forfeit, for the first offence, 20*l.*; for the second, to be suspended for twelve months; and for the third offence, to forfeit his licence and be incapacitated. s. 10.

Masters of ships, coming from the westward, not having a Cinque Port pilot, shall display a signal for one, and facilitate his getting on board, under the same pain as for refusing to take one on board. s. 11.

Cinque Port pilots quitting ships before arrival at the place to which bound in the Thames or Medway, without the consent of the master, are to forfeit their pay, and be subject to such penalty as by this act, or any rules made by the corporations aforesaid by virtue thereof, shall be imposed on pilots quitting their ships before their arrival at the place of destination. s. 12.

Rules and regulations are to be made by the two corporations for the government of their respective pilots. s. 13—16.

Pilots shall qualify themselves to conduct, and shall conduct, ships into and out of Ramsgate, Dover, Sandwich, and Margate, harbours, on pain of forfeiting their pilotage, and such fine as may be imposed by the rules. s. 17—19.

Pilots suspended, or deprived of licence, are liable to the same penalty as for acting without a licence; and on suspension may appeal to the privy council. s. 25, 26.

No owner or master shall be answerable for any loss, nor owners of ships, or consignee of goods, prevented from receiving insurance, by reason of a pilot not being on board. s. 25.

The act is not to extend to ships belonging to the king, nor vessels not exceeding sixty tons. s. 27.

The act is not to prevent masters of ships, residing at Dover, Deal, or the Isle of Thanet, from piloting their own ships in the Thames or Medway. s. 30.

Licensed pilots may supersede those not licensed for the limits; and masters continuing unlicensed pilots, or those acting out of their limits, after a proper pilot shall have offered to take charge of the ship, are to forfeit not exceeding 50*l.* nor less than 20*l.* s. 31.

Masters of vessels bound to the river Thames, repairing to Stangate Creek, to pay full charges of pilotage during the quarantine; and pilots quitting ships at Standgate Creek before arrival at the place to which bound, are to forfeit their pay, and be liable to the penalty in the rules. s. 39.

A description of the pilot is to be indorsed on his licence, which shall be inspected by masters, who, if they suspect the party not to be the right person, they are to send a copy to the corporation granting the same. s. 40.

If any pilot shall keep a public-house, unless authorised by his corporation, or shall offend against the revenue laws, he shall be dismissed or suspended. s. 41.

No pilot shall act till his licence has been registered at the custom-house office near his residence, nor without having his licence in his custody, on pain to forfeit, for the first offence, not exceeding 30*l.* nor less than 10*l.* and for every other offence not exceeding 50*l.* nor less than 30*l.* s. 42.

On the death of the pilot, the licence is to be returned by his personal representative, to the corporation that granted it, on pain of not exceeding 20*l.* nor less than 40*s.* s. 43.

Pilot-boats, in the service of the corporations, shall be fitted, with the name and number of the principal pilot painted thereon; and if the name or number shall be hid by any one on board, the penalty is 20*l.* to be paid by the pilot; and boats not in the service of the corporations shall carry a flag to show she has a pilot. s. 45.

Penalty on carrying such flag without having such pilot on board, 100*l.* s. 46.

Pilots declining to take charge of vessels, or exacting more than due, getting drunk, or otherwise misbehaving, to forfeit not exceeding 100*l.* nor less than 10*l.* and be liable to be dismissed or suspended. s. 47.

Pilot employing, or requiring masters to employ, any boat, matter, or thing, beyond what is necessary, thereby to increase expence, to forfeit not exceeding 50*l.* nor less than 10*l.* and be liable to lose his licence, or be suspended. s. 48.

Any person whatever, under colour of pilotage, conducting any vessel into danger, or unnecessarily cutting cables or the like, is to forfeit not exceeding 100*l.* nor less than 10*l.* and being a pilot to be dismissed or suspended. s. 49.

Pilot-boats running before vessels not having a pilot on board are entitled to pilotage. s. 50.

No pilot shall be taken to sea without his consent, except in case of necessity, and then shall receive 10*s.* 6*d.* per day. s. 51.

Masters of vessels, piloted by any other than a licensed pilot, to forfeit double the amount of the pilotage, and 5*l.* for every 50 tons burthen of his vessel, except in the case of its being piloted by himself up and down channel, or in passing any part of the coast not being a port or place, to which any act or charter extends, or the case of no licensed pilot offering himself, or distress of weather.

Persons reporting to pilots a false account of the draught of water of vessels, to forfeit double the amount of the pilotage; and altering the marks, to denote such draught, to forfeit 500*l.* s. 56.

PIMP-TENURE.—Willielmus Hoppeshort, tenet dimidiam vergatam terræ in Rockampton de Domino Rege, per servitium custodiendi sex demisellas, scil meretrices, ad usum Domini Regis. 12 Ed. 1. viz. by Pimp-Tenure. Blount's Ten. 89.

PINNAS BIBERE, or ad pinnas bibere, a custom of drinking brought in by the Danes, which was to fix a pin in the side of the bowl, and to drink exactly to the pin. Cowel.

PIPE, (pipa) is a roll in the Exchequer, called the Great Roll; it is also a measure of wine, containing two hogsheads, or half a ton, that is, one hundred and twenty-six gallons. 1 R. 3. c. 3.

PIQUANT, a French word for sharp, made use of to express malice or rancour against any one. Law Fr. Dict.

PIRATES, (Piratæ) are common sea rovers, without any fixed place of residence, who acknowledge no sovereign and no law, and support themselves by pillage and depredations at sea. Spelm. Cowel.

The crime of piracy, or robbery and depredation upon the high seas, is an offence against the universal law of society; a pirate being, according to sir Edward Coke (3 Inst. 113,) hostis humani generis. As therefore he has renounced all the benefits of society and government, and has reduced himself afresh to the savage state of nature, by declaring war against all mankind, all mankind must declare war against him: so that every community hath a right, by the rule of self-defence, to inflict that punishment upon him, which every individual would in a state of nature have been otherwise entitled to do, for any invasion of his person or personal property.

By the ancient common law, piracy, if committed by a subject, was held to be a species of treason, being contrary to his natural allegiance; and by an alien to be felony only, but now, since the statute of treasons, 25 Edw. 3. c. 2, it is held to be only felony in a subject (Ibid). Formerly it was only cognisable by the admiralty courts, which proceed by the rules of the civil law (1 Hawk. P. C. 98). But, it being inconsistent with the liberties of the nation, that any man's life should be taken away, unless by the judgment of his peers, or the common law of the land, the statute 28 Hen. 8. c. 15. established a new jurisdiction for this purpose; which proceeds according to the course of the common law, and of which we shall say more hereafter.

The offence of piracy, by common law, consists in committing those acts of robbery and depredation upon the high seas, which, if committed upon land, would have amounted to felony there (1 Hawk. P. C. 100).

But, by statute some other offences are made piracy also: as, by stat. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 7, if any natural born subject commits any act of hostility upon the high seas, against others of his majesty's subjects, under colour of a commission from any foreign power; this, though it would only be an act of war in an alien, shall be construed piracy in a subject. And further, any commander, or other seafaring person, betraying his trust, and running away with any ship, boat, ordnance, ammunition, or goods; or yielding them up voluntarily to a pirate; or conspiring to do these acts; or any person assaulting the commander of a vessel to hinder him from fighting in defence of his ship, or confining him, or making or endeavouring to make a revolt on board; shall, for each of these offences, be adjudged a pirate, felon, and robber, and shall suffer death, whether he be principal, or merely accessory by setting forth such pirates, or abetting them before the fact, or receiving or concealing them or their goods after it. And the stat. 4 Geo. 1, c. 11, expressly excludes the principals from the benefit of clergy. By the stat. 8 Geo. 1, c. 24, the trading with known pirates, or furnishing them with stores or ammunition, or fitting out any vessel for that purpose, or in any wise consulting, combining, confederating, or corresponding with them; or the forcibly boarding any merchant vessel, though without seizing or carrying her off, and destroying or throwing any of the goods over board, shall be deemed piracy: and such accessories to piracy as are described by the statute of king William are declared to be principal pirates, and all pirates convicted by virtue of this act are made felons without benefit of clergy. By the same statutes also, (to encourage the defence of merchant vessels against pirates,) the commanders or seamen wounded, and the widows of such seamen as are slain, in any piratical engagement, shall be entitled to a bounty, to be divided among them, not exceeding one fiftieth part of the value of the cargo on board: and such wounded seamen shall be entitled to the pension of Greenwich hospital; which no other seamen are, except only such as have served in a ship of war. And if the commander shall behave cowardly, by not defending the ship, if she carries guns or arms, or shall discharge the mariners from fighting, so that the ship falls into the hands of pirates, such commander shall forfeit all his wages, and suffer six months imprisonment. Lastly, by stat. 18 Geo. 2. c. 30, any natural born subject, or denizen, who in time of war shall commit hostilities at sea against any of his fellow-subjects, or shall assist an enemy on that element, is liable to be tried and convicted as a pirate.

PIRATES GOODS. In the patent to the admiral he has granted to him bona piratæ: but the proper goods of pirates only pass by this grant; and not piratical goods. So it is of a grant de bonis felonum, the grantee shall not have goods stolen, but the true and rightful owner. But the king shall have piratical goods, if the owner be not known. 10 Rep. 109. Dyer 269. Jenk. Cent. 325.

PISCARY, (piscaria, vel privilegium piscandi) is a right or liberty of fishing: and there are three sorts of piscaries, libera piscaria, or a free fishery, separalis piscara, or a several fishery, and communis piscaria, or common of fishery.

1. A free fishery. It is an exclusive right of fishing in a public river, and is considered as a royal franchise in all countries where the feodal polity has prevailed; and with us this franchise of free fishery must now be at least as old as the reign of Hen. 2.

2. A several fishery. He that has a several fishery must also be the owner of the soil, which in a free fishery is not requisite.

3. Common of Piscary is a liberty of fishing in another man's water, and differs from a free fishery in that the free fishery is an exclusive right, the common of piscary is not so; and therefore in a free fishery a man has property in the fish before they are caught; in a common of piscary not till afterwards.

PISCENARIUS, used in ancient records for a fishmonger. Pat. 1 Edw. 3, part. 3, m. 13.

PIT, is a hole wherein the Scots used to drown women thieves; and to say condemned to the pit is as when we say condemned to the gallows. Skene.

PITCHING-PENCE, money (commonly a penny) paid for pitching, or setting down every bag of corn, or pack of goods, in a fair or market. Cowel.

PITTANCE, (pittancia modicum) a little repast, or refection of fish or flesh, more than the common allowance. Ibid.

PLACARD, (Fr. placart, Dutch placcaert) hath several significations: in France it is a bill, or paper posted up, a proclamation, a libel: in Holland it is an edict, or proclamation; also it signifies a writing of safe conduct; with us it is little used, but was mentioned as a license to shoot with a gun, or use certain games, &c. See stat. 2 & 3 Ph. & Mar. c. 7. 33 Hen. 8, c. 6.

PLACE, (locus) the place where a fact was committed must be alleged in appeals of death, indictments, &c. Co. Lit. 282. Shep. Epit. 700. See Venue.

PLACEMEN. No persons concerned in the management of any duties or taxes created since 1692, except the commissioners of the treasury, (5 & 6 W. & M. c. 7), nor any of the officers following, (11 & 12 Will. 3, c. 2,) (viz. commissioners of prizes, transports, sick and wounded, wine licences, navy, and victualling; secretaries or receivers of prizes; comptrollers of the army accounts; agents for regiments; governors of plantations and their deputies; officers of Minorca or Gibraltar; officers of the excise and customs; clerks or deputies in the several offices of the treasury, exchequer, navy, victualling, admiralty, pay of the army or navy, secretaries of state, salt, stamps, appeals, wine licences, hackney coaches, hawkers and pedlars,) nor any persons that hold any new office under the crown created since 1705 (Stat. 6 Ann. c. 7.) are capable of being elected or sitting as members *. 6. That no person having a pension under the crown during pleasure, or for any term of years, is capable of being elected or sitting (stat. 6 *Ann. c.*7. 1 Geo. I, c. 56). If any member accepts an office under the crown, except an officer in the army or navy accepting a new commission, his seat is void; but such member is capable of being re-elected. Stat. 6 Ann. c. 7.

* All the persons enumerated above are utterly incapable of sitting in the house of commons, whilst they continue in their respective situations; and amongst these are all persons who accept from the crown any office created since 1705. But by the 26th PLACITA, pleas, or pleadings. Placita is a word used in the intituling of pleadings at law, as pleas before our sovereign lord the king, &c.

PLACITARE, i. e. litigare et causas agere, to plead; hence placitator, a pleader. Cowel. Blount.

PLAINT (Fr. plainte, Lat. querela). The first process in an inferior court is a plaint, which is in the nature of an original writ, because therein is briefly set forth the plaintiff's cause of action; and on this plaint there may issue a pone, till the return of a nihil, upon which a capias will lie against the body of the defendant. 2 Lill. Abr. 294.

Where a plaint is levied in an inferior court, the defendant must be first distrained for non-appearance, by something of small value; then, if he doth not appear, a farther distress is to be taken to a greater value, and so on; if all his goods are distrained on the first distress, attachment may be issued out of B. R. against the officers, &c. Ibid. 3 Black. 273.

PLAINT in a superior court, is said to be the cause for which the plaintiff complains against the defendant; and for which he obtains the king's writ: For as the king denies his writ to none, if there be cause to grant it; so he grants not his writ to any, without there be cause alleged for it. 2 Lill. 294.

PLANCHIA, a plank of wood. Cowel.

PLANTATION, (plantatio, colonia,) is a place where people are sent to dwell; or to which a company of people voluntarily emigrate with the sanction of government. Lit. Dict.

Our plantations abroad are chiefly islands in America, the Leeward Islands, and at New South Wales. In settlements acquired by conquest the laws and customs by which the people were governed before the conquest bind them until new laws are given; for there is a necessity that the former shall be in force till the new are obtained. But if an uninhabited country be newly found out by English subjects, all the laws of the kingdom of England are immediately in force there. 2 Salk. 411. 3 Mod. 159. 4 Mod. 225, 226.

With respect to interior polity our colonies and plantations are properly of three sorts,

1. Provincial establishments:
2. Proprietary governments:
3. Charter governments.

But the form of government in most of them is borrowed from that of England. They have a governor named by the king, (or in some proprietary colonies by the proprietor) who is his representative or deputy. They have courts of justice of their own, from whose decisions an appeal lies to the king in council here in England. Their general assemblies, which are their house of commons, together with their council of state, being their upper house, with the concurrence of the king or his representative the governor, make laws suited to their own emergencies. But all laws, &c. in the plantations that are repugnant to any law made, or to be made in this kingdom, are void, 1 Black. 106.

PLATE, a boy, or small water-vessel. 13 Eliz. cap. 15. Also vessels, &c. of gold and silver. Cowel. Blount. See Manufactures.

PLAYHOUSE. Playhouses were originally instituted with a design of recommending virtue and exposing vice and folly; therefore are not in their own nature nuisances: but a common playhouse may become a nuisance, if it draw together such great numbers as to prove generally inconvenient to the places adjacent. 5 Mod. 142.

By 3 Jac. 1, c. 21, any person in a stage play or entertainment profanely using the name of God or the Trinity, shall forfeit 10*l.*

By 10 Geo. 2. c. 19, stage players acting for gain, in or within five miles of either of the universities, may be committed as rogues and vagabonds, by the vice chancellor.

By 10 Geo. 2. c. 28, persons acting plays in any place where they have not a legal settlement, for hire, gain, or reward, without royal authority, or licence from the lord chamberlain, shall be deemed rogues section of the same act, 6 Ann. c. 7, if any member shall accept of any office of profit from the crown, his election or seat becomes void, but he may be re-elected. This means an office of profit, which was in existence prior to 1705.

The office or trust of a member of parliament cannot be resigned, and every member is compellable to discharge the duties of it, unless he can shew such a cause, as the house in its discretion will think a sufficient excuse for his non-attendance upon a call of the house. The only way therefore of vacating a seat, is by accepting a situation, in consequence of which the law declares his seat vacant. So where members wish to vacate their seats and retire from parliament, it is now usual for the crown to grant them the office of the stewardship of the Chiltern Hundreds. Mr. Hatsell observes, that "the practice of accepting this nominal office, which began, he believes, only about the year 1750, has been now so long acquiesced in from its convenience to all parties, that it would be ridiculous to state any doubt about the legality of its proceedings; otherwise (he believes) it would be found very difficult from the form of these appointments, to shew that it is an office of profit under the crown." 2 Hats. 41.

and vagabonds; and, whether they have a settlement or not, they are to forfeit 50*l.* but if they pay that sum, they are discharged of the other penalties.

No new plays, or additions to old ones, shall be acted unless a copy thereof be sent to the lord chamberlain fourteen days before. Ibid.

The lord chamberlain may prohibit the acting any play or part thereof; and persons acting the same before such copy be sent, or contrary to such prohibition, shall forfeit 50*l.* and their licence. Ibid.

No persons shall be authorised to act plays, by royal patent or licence from the lord chamberlain, but in the city and liberties of Westminster, or places of his majesty's residence. Ibid.

Plays acted in public houses shall be deemed performed for gain; and prosecutions must be within six months. Ibid.

By 25 Geo. 2. c. 36, made perpetual by 28 Geo. 2 c. 19, houses, gardens, or places, for public entertainment, music, dancing, or singing, within twenty miles of London, without a licence from the preceding Michaelmas quarter sessions, shall be deemed disorderly houses. Constables may seize persons found therein, and the persons keeping the same shall forfeit 100*l.*

Licensed places shall have an inscription over them declaratory thereof, and they are not to be opened before five in the evening: on breach of either of the conditions, the licence shall be revoked. Ibid.

Not to extend to the theatres royal, or performances licensed by the crown or the lord chamberlain. Ibid.

By 28 Geo. 3. c. 30, the justices in sessions on petition may license the performance of such plays as are performed at either of the patent theatres, or have been inspected by the chamberlain of the household, for not more than sixty days, to commence within the next six months, and to be within such four months as shall be specified in the licence, so as there be but one licence in use at the same time, the place be not within twenty miles of London, Westminster, or Edinburgh, or eight miles of any patent or licensed theatre, or ten miles of the royal residence, or of any place at which, within six months preceding, a licence under this act shall have been had, or within fourteen miles of either of the universities, or within two miles of the limits of any peculiar jurisdiction, and so also as no licence under this act shall have been at the same place within eight months before.

But no licence shall be granted to be exercised within any peculiar jurisdiction, unless with the consent of the majority of the justices acting for the same. Ibid.

Nor shall any such licence be granted within any town, &c. unless three weeks notice be given to the mayor or chief officer of the intended application. Ibid.

PLAYS AND GAMES. See Gaming.

PLEA (placitum) Pleas are divided into pleas of the crown, and common pleas; pleas of the crown are all suits in the king's name, for offences committed against his crown and dignity, and also against the peace. Common pleas are those that are agitated between common persons, in civil cases: and pleas may be further divided into as many branches as action; for they signify all one. S. P. C. cap. 1. 4 Inst. 10.

A plea to the action is that which goes to the merits of the cause or action, and is either a GENERAL, or a SPECIAL plea: A general plea in debt or contract is, he owes nothing: in debt on bond, it is not his deed, or he paid it at the day: in action of the case upon a promise, he did not promise: in trespass upon the case, not guilty: in covenant, performance of covenants, &c.

A special plea contains matter at large, concluding to the declaration or action; and special pleas in answer to the declaration are, PLEAS IN BAR, or in ABATEMENT; and every plea must be pleaded either in bar to the action, or in abatement of the writ or bill, upon which the action is framed, or it is but a discourse, and not a plea. Finch 362, 378. Co. Lit. 282, 372.

Special pleas are drawn up in form, setting forth the matter pleaded, &c. and must be signed by counsel. And when a defendant hath pleaded, the plaintiff answers the defendant's plea, which is called a replication; and the defendant answers the replication, by rejoinder: which the plaintiff may answer by surrejoinder; and sometimes, (though seldom,) pleadings come to rebotter, in answer to surrejoinder, and surrebutter. Co. Litt. 303. See Abatement. Bar, and other titles.

PLEAS AT LAW, are at present set down and delivered into the proper office in writing, though formerly they were usually put in by their counsel ore tenus, or viva voce, in court, and then minuted down by the chief clerks, or prothonotaries; whence in our old law French, the pleadings are frequently denominated the parol. 3 Black. 293.

PLEAS OF THE SWORD, placita ad gladium. Ranulph, the third earl of Chester, in the second year of Henry the third, granted to his barons of Cheshire, an ample charter of liberties, exceptis placitis ad gladium meum pertinentibus. Cowel. Blount.

PLEBANIA, plebanalis ecclesia, a mother church, which has one or more subordinate chapels. Ibid.

PLEBANUS, a rural dean. Ibid.

PLEBISCITUM, a law or statute made by the joint consent of the people or commons without the senate. Lit. Dict. 1 Black. 80.

PLEDGE, (plegius, may be derived from the Fr. pleige, fidejussor.) See 4 Inst. 180.

When writs were delivered to the sheriff to be by him returned, he was obliged, before the return, to take pledges of prosecution, which, when the fines and amerciaments were considerable, were real and responsible persons, and answerable for those amercements. But they being now so inconsiderable, there are only formal pledges entered, viz. John Doe and Richard Roe. Gilb. Hist. of C. B. 6, 7.

PLEDGE, a pledge is he who undertakes, or is thereby for another: and therefore every bail and mainprize is, stricte loquendo, a pledge. 4 Inst. 180.

But a pledge is such as the demandant or plaintiff finds, where the writ says, si quercus fecerit te securum de clamore suo prosequendo, for then the plaintiff was to find pledges for security of the king's amerciament, if the plaintiff be nonsuited. 4 Inst. 108.

PLEDGES OF GOODS. See Bailment and Pawnbrokers.

PLEDGERY or PLEGGERY, (Fr. plegerie, Lat. plegiagium) suretyship, an undertaking or answering for. Cowel. Blount.

PLEDGING, is where goods and chattels are delivered in security for money lent, and by such pledging the pawnee hath more than the naked possession in the nature of a bailment; for he hath the property and interest in the thing itself; and, by the better opinions, shall have a reasonable use of it, so that it be without damage to the thing pledged. Doct. and Stud. 130. 1 Rol. Abr. 338, 673. Owen 124. 2 Salk. 522. See Bailment.

PLEGIIS AD QUIETANDIS, a writ that lay for a surety, against him for whom he is surety, if he paid not the money at the day. F. N. B. 137.

PLENA FORISFACTURA, a forfeiture of all that one hath, &c. Cowel. See Forfeiture.

PLENA PROBATIO. See Evidence.

PLENARTY, is where a church is full of an incumbent, plenarty and vacation are direct contraries. Staundf. Prærog. cap. 8. fol. 32. Westm. 2. cap. 5. 6 Rep. 49.

And by the common law, where a person is presented, instituted and inducted to a church, the church is full, though the person presented be a layman; and shall not be void, but from the time of the deprivation of the incumbent for his incapacity. Count. Pars. Compan. 99. 3 Black. 243.

PLENE ADMINISTRAVIT, is a plea pleaded by an executor or administrator, that he hath administered the whole of the deceased's estate before the action brought.

PLENUM DOMINIUM, according to the Roman law was not said to subsist, unless where a man had both the right and the corporeal possession, which possession could not be acquired without both an actual intention to possess, and an actual seisin or entry into the premises, or part of them in the name of the whole. Ff. 41,2,3. Cod. 2, 3, 20.

PLIGHT, an old English word, signifying sometimes the estate with the habit, condition, and quality of the land. Co. Lit. 221. b.

PLONKETS, a kind of coarse woollen cloth, 1 R 3. c. 8.

PLOW-ALMS, (elemosynæ aratrales) 1*d.* anciently paid to the church for every plowland. Cowel.

PLOW-BOTE, a right of tenants to take wood to repair ploughs, carts and harrows; and for making rakes, forks, &c. 2 Black. 35.

PLOW-LAND, is the same with a hide of land.

PLOW-SILVER, money anciently paid by some tenants, in lieu of service to plough the lord's lands. Cowel.

PLURALITY, (pluralitas) is applied to such clergymen who have more benefices than one. And plurality of livings, is where the same person claims two or more spiritual preferments, with cure of souls; in which case the first is void ipso facto, and the patron may present to it, if the clerk be not qualified by dispensation, &c. for the law enjoins residence, and it is impossible that the same person can reside in two places at the same time. Count. Pars. Comp. 94. See Dispensation, Ecclesiastical Persons, and Residence.

PLURIES, is a writ that issues in the third place, after two former writs have been disobeyed; for first goes out the original writ or capias, which if it has not effect, then issues the alias; and if that also fails, then the pluries. Old Nat. Br. 33.

POCKET SHERIFFS. When the king appoints a person sheriff, who is not one of the three nominated by the judges in the exchequer, as he may do in the exercise of his prerogative, the person so appointed is called a pocket sheriff.

POCKET OF WOOL, a quantity of wool containing half a sack. 3 Inst. 96.

POISON. See Boiling to Death and Homicide.

POLE. See Perch.

POLEIN, a shoe, sharp or picked, and turned up at the toe. In the reign of Ric. 2. they were tied up to the knees with gold or silver chains: they were restrained in 4 Ed. 4. but not wholly laid aside till the reign of Hen. 8. Cowel. Blount.

POLICE, offences against, are all felonies, misdemeanors, breaches of the peace. See London.

POLICY OF ASSURANCE. See Insurance.

POLLARDS, or POLLENGERS, are such trees as have been usually cropped, therefore distinguished from timber-trees. Plowd. 469. Cowel.

POLL, (DEED) a deed made by one party only, is not indented, but polled or shaved quite even; and is therefore called a deed poll, or a single deed. 2 Black. 296.

POLLS, where one or more jurors are excepted against, it is called a challenge to the polls. Co. Lit. 156.

POLYGAMY, (polygamia) is where a man marries two or more wives together, or a woman has two or more husbands at the same time; when the body of the first wife or husband may be said to be injured by the second marriage, while either are living. 3 Inst. 88. Wood's Inst. 363. See Bigamy and Felony.

PONDUS, poundage, which duty, with that of tonnage, was anciently paid to the king according to the weight and measure of merchants goods. Cowel.

PONDUS REGIS, the standard weight appointed by our ancient kings, 35 Ed. 1. Now called troy weight, or le roy weight. Whereas the aver de pois was the fuller weight, with a declining scale. Cowel.

PONE, a writ whereby a cause depending in the county or other inferior court, is removed into the common pleas; and sometimes into the king's bench: as when a replevin is sued by writ out of chancery, &c. then if the plaintiff or defendant will remove that plea out of the county court into C. B. or K. B. it is done by pone. F. N. B. 4, 69. 2 Inst. 339. It also lies to remove actions of debt, and of detinue, writ of right, of nuisance, &c. New Nat. Br. Wood's Inst. 549.

PONENDIS IN ASSISIS, a writ anciently granted by the statute of Westm. 2. c. 38. which statute shews what persons sheriffs ought to impanel upon assise and juries. Reg. Orig. 175. F. N. B. 165.

PONENDUM IN BALLIUM, a writ anciently issued, commanding that prisoner be bailed in cases bailable. Reg. Orig. 193.

PONENDUM SIGILLUM AD EXCEPTIONEM, a writ by which justices were formerly required to put their seals to exceptions, exhibited by defendant against the plaintiff's evidence, verdict or other proceedings before them, according to the statute Westm. 2. Cowel.

PONE PER VADIUM, a writ commanding the sheriff to take surety of one for his appearance at a day assigned. Reg. Jud.

PONTAGE, (pontagium) a contribution towards the maintenance, or re-edifying of bridges. Westm. 2. c. 25. It also signifies toll taken to this purpose of those who passed over bridges. 1 Hen. 8. cap. 9. 22 Hen. 8. cap. 5. and 39 Eliz. cap. 25. Cowel.

PONTIBUS REPARANDIS, a writ anciently directed to the sheriff, &c. requiring him to charge one or more, to repair a bridge, to whom it belongeth. Reg. Orig. 153.

POOR. Before the reformation there was no regular provision for the poor. For although it appears by the Mirror, c. 1. s. 3. that by the common law the poor were to be sustained by parsons, rectors of the church, and the parishioners, so that none of them die for default of sustenance; yet it seems, that they were in a great measure left to such relief as the humanity of their neighbours would afford them. 1 Burrow's Rep. 450, 451. 1 Black. Com. 359.

And in this respect there seemed to be a pious contention among our ancestors who should first bring their offering to the church; and the bishop, to whom the charge of souls was committed, was for that reason thought the fittest person to be intrusted with the administration of those oblations. Shaw's Pur. L. c. 39. s. 3. 2 Shaw's Jus. 1.

By these and other superabundant offerings at altars, sepulchres, and shrines of martyrs, the church became extremely rich, and several monasteries, priories, religious houses, and hospitals, were by these means founded and plentifully endowed; at which were supported and fed a very numerous and idle poor, whose sustenance depended upon what was daily distributed in alms at the gates of such religious houses. Shaw's Pur. L. c. 32. s. 4. 2 Shaw's Jus. 1. 1 Black. Com. 359. Cowper's Rep. 560.

But upon the total dissolution of these, the inconvenience of thus encouraging the poor in habits of indolence and beggary, was quickly felt throughout the kingdom; and abundance of statutes were made in the reign of Henry VIII. and his children, for providing for the poor and impotent, which, the preambles to some of them recite, had of late years greatly increased. 1 Black. Com. 360.

These poor were principally of two sorts, sick and impotent, and therefore unable to work; idle and sturdy, and therefore able, but not willing to exercise any honest employment. To provide in some measure for both of these in and about the metropolis, Edward the sixth founded three royal hospitals, Christ's and St. Thomas's, for the relief of the impotent through infancy or sickness; and Bridewell, for the punishment and employment of the vigorous and idle: but these were far from being sufficient for the care of the poor throughout the kingdom at large, and therefore, after many other fruitless experiments, by stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2. overseers of the poor were appointed in every parish. 1 Black. Com. 360.

From this statute the present system of poor laws hath arisen, which may be arranged in the following order:

1. Overseers of the poor; 2. Poor's rate; 3. Relief and ordering of the poor. 4.

Overseers accounts. 5. Indemnity of overseers in the due execution of their office. 6. Punishment of overseers for neglect of duty and for misbehaviour. 7. Relief, and ordering of the poor in incorporated districts.

I. Appointment of Overseers.

By 43 Eliz. c. 2. "the churchwardens and four, three, or two substantial householders, according to the greatness of the parish, to be nominated yearly in Easter week, or within one month after Easter, by two justices (1 qu.) near the parish, shall be called overseers of the poor of the same parish." s. 1.

And by 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 12. (after reciting, that the inhabitants of Lancashire, Cheshire, Derbyshire, Yorkshire, Northumberland, the bishoprick of Durham, Cumberland, Westmoreland, and many other counties in England and Wales, by reason of the largeness of the parishes, cannot reap the benefit of the said act of 43 Eliz.) it is enacted, that "there shall be yearly chosen and appointed, according to the directions of 43 Eliz. c. 2. two or more overseers within every of the townships or villages respectively. s. 21.

"Also by 43 Eliz. c. 2. the mayors, bailiffs, or other head officers of every town corporate and city, shall have the same authority within their jurisdictions. And every alderman of London, within his ward, may do so much as is appointed to be done by justices. s. 8.

"And if any parish extend into more counties than one, or part be within any city or town corporate, and part without, then the justices shall deal only in so much of the parish as lieth within their liberties. s. 9.

"And if in any place there happen to be no nomination of overseers, every justice of peace, dwelling within the division, and every mayor or alderman, and head officer, of any city or place corporate, where such default shall happen, shall forfeit 5*l.* towards the relief of the poor, to be levied by warrant from the sessions." s. 10.

And by 17 Geo. 2. c. 38. "if any such overseer shall die, remove, or become insolvent, on oath thereof made, two justices may appoint another." s. 3.

By 43 Eliz. c. 2. If any persons shall find themselves grieved with any act done by the said justices, the justices, at their general quarter sessions, may take such order therein as to them shall be thought convenient, to conclude all parties. s. 6.

But by 17 Geo. 2. c. 38. s. 4. this appeal must be made to the next sessions.

II. Poor's Rate.

By 43 Eliz. c. 2. the churchwardens and overseers of every parish shall, with the consent of two justices, (1 qu.) raise weekly, or otherwise (by taxation of every inhabitant, parson, vicar, and other, and of every occupier of lands, houses, tithes impropriate, propriations of tithes, coal mines, or saleable underwoods in the parish, in such sums of money as they shall think fit,) a convenient stock of flax, hemp, wool, thread, iron, and other necessary ware and stuff, to set the poor on work; and also money for the relief of the lame, impotent, old, blind, and other, being poor and not able to work; and also for the putting out of poor children apprentices, and to do all other things concerning the premises. s. 1.

And the mayors, bailiffs, or other head officers of every town corporate and city, being justices of peace, shall have the same authority within their jurisdiction. s. 8.

Also by 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 12. which authorizes justices to appoint separate overseers in places that cannot have the benefit of 43 Eliz. c. 2. "the justices of peace within the said counties shall have like powers to raise monies within every township or village. s. 22.

And by 17 Geo. 2. c. 38. overseers of the poor within every township or place where there are no churchwardens, shall execute all powers concerning the relief of the poor, as churchwardens and overseers may do. s. 15.

And by 17 Geo. 2. c. 3. the churchwardens and overseers shall give public notice in the church of every rate for the relief of the poor, allowed by the justices, the next Sunday after the same is allowed, and no rate shall be valid, so as to collect the same, unless such notice shall have been given. s. 1.

And by 17 Geo. 2. c. 38. copies of all rates made for the relief of the poor shall be entered in a book, and shall be produced at the general or quarter sessions, when any appeal is to be heard. s 13.

And if any churchwarden, overseer, or other officer, shall neglect so to do, he shall forfeit for the use of the poor not exceeding 5*l.* nor less than 20*s.* s. 4.

And by 17 Geo. 2. c. 3. the churchwardens and overseers shall permit every inhabitant to inspect such rate at all seasonable times, paying 1*s.* and shall upon demand give copies, paying 6*d.* for every twenty-four names. s. 2.

And if any churchwarden or overseer shall not permit the same, he shall forfeit 20*l.* to the party aggrieved. s. 3.

The statute 43 Eliz c. 2. authorizes the overseers, with the concurrence of the justices, to tax the inhabitants, weekly or otherwise, to the poor.

And by 17 Geo. 2. c. 38. where any person shall come into any premises from which any person assessed shall be removed, every person removing or coming in, shall pay the rate in proportion to their occupation, s. 12.

By 17 Geo. 2. c. 38. in case any person shall neglect to pay to the overseers any sum that he shall be legally rated to, the succeeding overseers shall levy such arrears, and reimburse their predecessors all sums expended for the use of the poor, and allowed to be due to them in their accounts. s. 11.

By 43 Eliz. c. 2. if the justices perceive that the inhabitants of any parish are not able to levy among themselves a sufficient sum for the purposes aforesaid, then they shall rate any other of other parishes out of any parish within the hundred where the said parish is, to pay such sums to the churchwardens and overseers of the said poor parish for the said purposes, as the said justices shall think fit. s. 2.

And if the hundred shall not be thought by the justices able to relieve the said parishes, unable to provide for themselves, then the general quarter sessions shall rate any other of other parishes or out of any parish within the county for the purposes aforesaid. s. 3.

By 17 Geo. 2. c. 37. where there shall be any dispute in what parish waste and barren lands, and land formerly fen and marsh ground, or covered with water, heretofore improved or drained, or hereafter to be improved or drained, lie, and ought to be rated, the occupiers of such lands, houses built thereon, tenements, tythes arising therefrom, mines, and saleable underwoods therein, shall be rated to the poor, and all other parochial rates within such parish which lies nearest to such lands; and if on application to the officers to have such lands rated, any dispute shall arise, the justices at their next general quarter sessions may hear and determine the same on the appeal of any person interested. s. 1. 2.

By 43 Eliz. c. 2. the father and grandfather, and the mother and grandmother, and the children of every poor, old, blind, lame, and impotent person, or other poor person not able to work, being of a sufficient ability, shall, at their own charges, relieve and maintain every such poor person in that manner, and according to that rate, as by the justices at their general quarter sessions, shall be assessed, upon pain to forfeit 20*s.* to the use of the poor of the said parish, for every month which they shall fail therein. s. 7, 11.

Where persons run away from their places of abode, some men leaving their wives or children, and some mothers leaving children upon the charge of the parish, although such persons have some estates, by 5 Geo. 1. c. 8. it shall be lawful for the churchwardens or overseers, where any wife or children shall be left chargeable to the parish, by warrant from any two justices, to seize so much of the goods, and receive so much of the annual rents of the husband, father, or mother, as such justices shall direct, for the discharge of the parish, which order being confirmed at the next quarter sessions, the justices there may make an order for the churchwardens or overseers to dispose of such goods and chattels by sale, and to receive the rents and profits of his or her lands and tenements, for the purposes aforesaid. s. 1.

And the churchwardens and overseers shall be accountable at the quarter sessions for the money. s. 2.

Also by 17 Geo. 2. c. 5. all persons who run away or leave their wives or children chargeable to the parish, shall be deemed rogues and vagabonds, and punished as such. s. 2.

Also all persons who threaten to run away and leave their wives or children chargeable to the parish, shall be deemed idle and disorderly persons, and kept to hard labour for not exceeding one month. s. 1.

And by the 32 Geo. 3. c. 45. if it be made appear to two justices, that any person doth not use proper means to get employment, or if he be able to work, by his neglect of work, or by spending his money in alehouses or places of bad repute, or in any other improper manner, shall not apply a proper proportion of the money he earns towards the maintenance of his wife and family, by which they or any of them become chargeable to their parish, he shall be deemed an idle and disorderly person. s. 8.

By 17 Geo. 2. c. 38. if any person shall be aggrieved by any assessment, or have any material objection thereto, he may appeal to the next general or quarter sessions, and the justices there are to receive such appeal and determine the same. s. 4.

And upon all appeals from rates, the justices (where they see just cause) shall amend the same in such manner only as shall be necessary for giving relief, without altering such rates with respect to other persons, but if upon an appeal from the whole rate, it shall be found necessary to quash the same, then they shall order the churchwardens and overseers to make a new equal rate. s. 6.

And by 41 Geo. 3. sess. 2. c. 23. all notices of appeal from or against any rate, or against the account of churchwardens and overseers, shall be in writing, and signed by the person or his attorney, and shall be delivered at the place of abode of the churchwardens and overseers. s. 4.

But with the consent of the overseers, and any other person interested, the sessions may proceed to hear such appeal, although no notice shall have been given in writing. s. 5.

And upon all appeals from any rate, the sessions shall, where they see just, amend such rate, either by inserting therein or striking out the name of any person, or by altering the sum therein charged on any person, or in any other manner which the court shall think necessary for giving such relief, and without wholly setting aside such rate.

Except the said court shall be of opinion that it is necessary for the purpose of giving relief to the person appealing, that the rate should be wholly quashed. s. 1.

But nevertheless, all sums of money by such rate charged may be levied in the same manner as if no appeal had been made against such rate, and all sums of money which any person shall so pay shall be deemed payments, on account of the next effective rate. s. 1.

And all sums at which any persons are rated may be levied, notwithstanding the person so rated, or any other, shall have given notice of appeal; but if any person rated shall give notice of appeal, then until the appeal shall have been heard, no proceedings shall be carried on to recover any greater sum than the sum at which he shall have been rated in the last effective rate. s. 2.

And in case the sessions shall, upon appeal, order any rate to be quashed, the said court may order any sum in such rate not to be paid. s. 3.

Also if any person shall appeal against any rate, because any other person is rated or is omitted therein, or because any other person is rated at any greater or less sum than the sum at which he ought to be rated therein, or for any other cause that may require any alteration to be made in such rate with respect to any other person; the person appealing shall give such notice of appeal, in writing, as before mentioned, not only to the churchwardens or overseers, but also to the other person so interested. s. 6.

If upon the hearing of any appeal, the court shall order the name of any person to be inserted, or the sum rated to be increased, the sum so ordered may be recovered in the same manner as if originally in such rate. s. 7.

If upon the hearing of any appeal, the sessions shall order the name of any person to be struck out, or the sum rated to be decreased; and if it be made appear that such person hath previously paid any sum in consequence of such rate, then the court shall order such sum to be repaid by the churchwardens and overseers, together with costs. s. 8.

It shall be lawful, as well for the present as subsequent churchwardens and overseers, or any of them, by warrant from two justices, (1 qu.) to levy the said sums, and all arrearages, of every one that shall refuse to contribute according as they shall be assessed, by distress and sale. 43 Eliz. c. 2. s. 4.

And the goods of any person assessed and refusing to pay, may be levied by warrant of distress, but if any person find himself aggrieved by such distress, he may appeal to the next general or quarter sessions. 17 Geo. 2. c. 38. s. 7.

In defect of such distress, such two justices may commit the party to the common gaol until payment, 43 Eliz. c. 2. s. 4.

And if any person shall neglect to pay any sum that he shall be rated to; the succeeding overseers are to levy such arrears, and out of the money so levied reimburse their predecessors all sums which they have expended for the use of the poor, and which are allowed to be due to them in their accounts. 17 Geo. 2. c. 38. s. 11.

And all justices may execute all acts, notwithstanding such justices are rated to any such rates. 26 Geo. 2. c. 18. s. 1, 2.

And when any such distress shall be made, the distress shall not be deemed unlawful, on account of any defect in the warrant. 17 Geo. 2. c. 38. s. 8.

But where the plaintiff recovers, he shall be paid his costs. s. 9.

And no plaintiff shall recover for any irregularity, if tender of amends hath been made by the party distraining before action. s. 10.

III. Relief and ordering of the Poor.

By 43 Eliz. c. 2. the churchwardens and overseers shall take order from time to time, with the consent of two justices (1 qu.) for setting to work the children of all such whose parents shall not be able to keep and maintain them; and for setting to work all such persons, married or unmarried, having no means to maintain them, and using no ordinary and daily trade: AND ALSO, to raise weekly or otherwise (by taxation as aforesaid) a convenient stock of flax, hemp, wool, thread, iron, and other necessary stuff, to set the poor on work; AND ALSO, competent sums for the necessary relief of the lame, impotent, old, blind, and such other among them being poor and not able to work: AND ALSO, for the putting out such children to be apprentices. s. 1.

And the said churchwardens and overseers shall meet together at least once every month in the church upon the Sunday in the afternoon after divine service, to consider of some good course to be taken, and of some meet order to be set down in the premises. s. 2.

The churchwardens and overseers may, with the consent of two justices, and when there is only one, with the assent of that one justice, set up any trade for the setting on work and relief of the poor. 3 Car. 1. c. 5. s. 22.

And the said justices shall send to the house of correction or common gaol, such as shall not employ themselves to work, and two justices to commit to prison the churchwardens and overseers which shall refuse to account. 43 Eliz. c. 2. s. 4.

And the churchwardens and overseers, by leave of the lord of the manor, may build on the waste at the charges of the parish, or of the hundred or county, houses of dwelling for the poor, which cottages shall not be used for any other habitation, but only for impotent and poor of the parish. s. 5.

And for the greater ease of parishes in the relief of the poor, it shall be lawful for the churchwardens and overseers, with the consent of the major part of the parishioners, to purchase or hire any house or houses, and to contract with any person or persons for the keeping and employing the poor which shall desire to receive relief or collection; and there to keep and employ all such poor, and take the benefit of the work, labour, and service of such poor persons. 9 Geo. 1. c. 7. s. 4.

But by 36 Geo. 3. c. 23. it shall be lawful for the overseers, with the approbation of a majority of the parishioners, or of one justice, to pay collection and relief to any industrious poor person, at his or her home, under circumstances of temporary illness or distress, although such poor person shall refuse to be lodged, kept, and maintained within such house. s. 1.

And where any parish shall be too small to purchase or hire such house, two or more parishes, with the consent of the major part of the parishioners, and with the approbation of any justice, may unite in purchasing, hiring, or taking such house. 9 Geo. 1. c. 7. s. 4.

But no poor person or his apprentice, or child, shall acquire a settlement in the parish, or place to which they are removed by virtue of this act; but their settlement shall remain in such parish or place as it was before such removal. s. 4.

And by 30 Geo. 3. c. 49. it shall be lawful for any justice of peace, or any physician, surgeon, or apothecary, authorized by warrant under the hand and seal of such justice, or for the officiating clergyman of the parish, so authorized, to visit in the day time any parish workhouse, or house kept for the maintenance of the poor, to examine into the state of the poor people therein, and the food, clothing, and bedding, and the state of such house; and upon their report, the sessions, on hearing the parties, shall make such orders and regulations for the removing of any cause of complaint as to them shall seem meet. s. 1.

And in case the persons authorized as aforesaid shall find any of the poor afflicted with any infectious disease, or in want of immediate medical or other assistance, or of sufficient and proper food, or requiring separation or removal, then two justices shall make such order therein as they shall think proper, until the next sessions, who are to make such order for the further relief of the poor as to them shall seem meet. s. 2.

By 24 Geo. 2. c. 40. s. 13, 14, 15, no spirituous liquors shall be sold or used in any workhouse or house of entertainment of parish poor.

There shall be provided and kept in every parish a book, wherein the names of all persons who receive a collection shall be registered, with the day and year when they were first admitted to have relief, and the occasion which brought them under that necessity. 3 Will. & Mar. c. 11. s. 11.

And yearly in Easter week a new list shall be made and entered of such persons as they allow to receive collection. s. 11.

No other person shall be allowed to receive collection at the charge of the parish, but by authority of one justice, except in cases of pestilential diseases, plagues, or small-pox. s. 13.

But no justice shall order relief till oath be made before such justice of some matter which he shall judge to be a reasonable cause for such relief. 9 Geo. 1. c. 7. s. 1.

And the person whom such justice shall order to be relieved, shall be entered in the parish books, on forfeiture of 5*l.* s. 2.

And every such person as shall be upon the collection of any parish, and the wife and children of such person cohabiting in the same house (such child only excepted as shall be by the churchwardens and overseers permitted to live at home, in order to attend an impotent parent) shall upon the shoulder of the right sleeve of the uppermost garment, wear such a badge as is herein mentioned, viz. a large Roman P. with the first letter of the name of the parish cut in red or blue cloth, and if any such poor person shall neglect or refuse to wear such badge, any justice may punish such offender, either by ordering his allowance to be abridged, suspended, or withdrawn, or by committing such offender to the house of correction to be whipt, and kept to hard labour for not exceeding twenty-one days. 8 & 9. Wil. 3. c. 30. s. 2.

And by 9 Geo. 3. c. 37. if any churchwarden or overseer shall wilfully make any payment in base or counterfeit money, he shall forfeit not less than ten nor more than twenty shillings. s. 7.

IV. Overseers Accounts.

By 17 Geo. 2. c. 38. the churchwardens and overseers shall yearly, within fourteen days after other overseers shall be appointed, deliver in to such succeeding overseers a just account in writing, fairly entered in a book to be kept for that purpose, and signed by them, of all sums by them received or rated and not received; and also of all goods, chattels, stock and materials in their hands, or in the hands of any of the poor to be wrought, and of all monies paid by such churchwardens and overseers so accounting, and of all other things concerning the said office. s. 1.

And shall also pay and deliver over all money, goods, and other things in their hands, to the succeeding overseers. s. 1.

And the said book shall be preserved by the churchwardens and overseers in some public or other place, in every parish: persons assessed may inspect the same at all seasonable times, paying 6*d.*; and shall, upon demand, have copies, at the rate of 6*d.* for every three hundred words. s. 1.

And if they shall refuse or neglect to make and yield up such account, or to pay and deliver over such money and things, two justices may commit them to the common gaol, until they shall account, or pay and yield up such monies and things. s. 2.

And if any overseer shall remove, he shall, before such removal, deliver over to some churchwarden or other overseer, his accounts, with all rates, books, papers, money, and other things, under the like penalties. s. 3.

If any overseer shall die before the expiration of his office, his executors or administrators shall, within forty days after, deliver over all things to some churchwarden or other overseer, and shall pay out of the assets all money remaining due, before any other debts are paid. s. 3.

And in case any person shall refuse or neglect to pay any sum that he shall be rated at, the succeeding overseers are to levy such arrears. s. 11.

By 17 Geo. 2. c. 38. if any person shall find himself aggrieved by, or have any material objection to such account, he may appeal to the next general or quarter sessions,

V. Indemnity of Overseers in the due Execution of their Office.

By 43 Eliz. c. 2. if any action of trespass or other suit shall be brought against any person for any thing done by authority of this act, the defendant may either plead not guilty, or make avowry, cognizance, or justification for the taking of the distresses, making of sale, or other thing done by virtue of this act, alleging that the thing, whereof the plaintiff complained, was done by authority of this act, without expressing any other matter. To which the plaintiff may reply, that the defendant did the act of his own wrong, without any such cause alleged by the said defendant. And after such issue tried for the defendant, or nonsuit of the plaintiff after appearance, the same defendant to recover treble damages, with his costs, and that to be assessed by the same jury, or writ to inquire of the damages. s. 19.

Also by 7 Jac. 1, c 5. if any action shall be brought against any justice of peace, mayor or bailiff of any city or town corporate, headborough or constable, (or against any churchwardens, or persons called sworn men executing the office of churchwarden, or any overseers of the poor, or others, which in their aid and assistance, or by their commandment, shall do any thing concerning their office, 21 Jac. 1, c. 13. s. 5.) every such person may plead the general issue, not guilty, and give the special matter in evidence. And if the verdict shall pass with him, or the plaintiff become nonsuit, the judge before whom the matter shall be tried, shall by virtue of this act allow unto the defendant double costs.

And by 24 Geo. 2. c. 41. no action shall be brought against any constable, headborough, or other officer, or any person acting in his aid, for any thing done in obedience to any warrant of any justice of the peace, until demand hath been made or left at the usual place of his abode by the party, or his attorney, in writing, of the perusal and copy of such warrant, and no action shall be brought unless commenced within six calendar months. s. 6. 8.

VI. Punishment of Overseers for neglect of duty and misbehaviour.

By 43 Eliz. c. 2. the churchwardens and overseers being negligent in their office, or in the execution of the orders made by the justices, shall forfeit for every default 20*s.* to the use of the poor, and in default, two such justices may commit the offender to prison till the forfeitures be paid. s. 2. 11.

And by 17 Geo. 3. c. 38. if any churchwarden, overseer, or other officer, shall neglect to obey the directions of that act, where no penalty is provided, or act contrary thereto, he shall forfeit, for the use of the poor, not exceeding 5*l.* nor less than 20*s.* s. 14.

Also by 33 Geo. 3. c. 55. two justices, at any special or petty sessions, upon complaint upon oath of any neglect of duty, or of any disobedience of any lawful warrant, or order of any justice by any overseer or other parish officer, may impose upon conviction any reasonable fine, not exceeding 40*s.* but the party may appeal to the next general or quarter sessions. s. 1.

And by 3 Will. & Mar. c. 11. in all actions to be brought for recovery of any money mis-spent or taken by churchwardens or overseers of the poor to their own use, the evidence of the parishioners, other than such as receive alms, or pension, shall be admitted. s. 12.

VII. Relief and ordering of the poor in incorporated districts.

The poor in those districts are regulated by an act passed 22 Geo. 3. c. 8. but the provisions of the said stat. 22 Geo. 3. c. 83 are of considerable length: and from the consideration that they are not general, but strictly confined to such parishes only which may have united for the purpose of taking the benefit thereof, it is unnecessary in a work of this nature to go into any lengthened detail of such provisions for the settlement and removal of poor persons. See title Settlement and Removals.

POST OFFICE. This owes its first legislative establishment to the parliament of 1643; for although there existed under the authority of the crown post-masters in much earlier times, yet their business was confined to the furnishing of post-horses to persons who were desirous to travel expeditiously, and to the dispatching of extraordinary packets upon special occasions. However, on March 21, 1649, the house of commons declared that the office of postmaster was and ought to be in the sole power and disposal of the parliament (Com. Jour.) and in 1657, a regular post-office was erected by the authority of the protector and his parliament upon nearly the same model as has been ever since adopted.

The preamble of the ordinance stated, that the establishing one general post-office, besides the benefit to commerce, and the convenience of conveying public dispatches, "will be the best means to discover and prevent many dangerous and wicked designs against the commonwealth."

And the policy of having the correspondence of the kingdom under the inspection of government is still continued; for, by a warrant from one of the principal secretaries of state, letters may be detained and opened; but if any person shall wilfully detain or open a letter delivered to the post-office without such authority, he shall forfeit 20*l.* and be incapable of having any future employment in the post-office, 9 Ann. c. 10. s. 40. It has however been decided, no person is subject to this penalty but those who are employed in the post-office. 5 T. R. 101.

After the restoration, a similar office, with some improvements, was established by statute 12 Car. II. c. 35. but the rates of letters, with the privilege of franking and receiving letters free, have been altered, and farther regulations added, by divers subsequent statutes.

Under these statutes a Roman Catholic peer is not entitled to send or receive letters free of postage, for it is the sitting in parliament that gives the right, not the peerage. Lord Petre v. Lord Auckland, postmaster-general. 2 Bos. & Pul. 139.

Also no action can be maintained against the postmaster-general for the loss of bills or articles sent in letters by the post. 1 Ld. Raym. 6. Comyns 100. And when an action was brought against Lord Despenser and Mr. Carteret, postmaster-general in 1778, to recover a bank-note of 100*l.* which had been sent by the post and was lost, Lord Mansfield delivered the opinion of the court, and proved, with much perspicuity and ability, that there was no resemblance or analogy between the postmasters and a common carrier, and that no action for any loss in the post-office could be brought against any person by whose actual negligence the loss accrued, that this point seemed as fully established as if it had been declared by the full authority of parliament. Comp. 754.

For this reason it is recommended by the secretary of the post-office, to cut bank-notes into halves, and to send one half at a time. This is the only safe mode of sending bank-notes, as the bank would never pay the holder of that half which had been fraudulently obtained.

Many attempts have been made by postmasters in country towns, to charge a half-penny or a penny a letter upon delivery at the houses in the town above the parliamentary rates, under pretence that they were not obliged to carry the letters out of the office gratis; but it has been repeatedly decided, that such a demand is illegal, and that they are bound to deliver the letters to the inhabitants within the usual and established limits of the town, without any addition to the rate of postage. 5 Burr. 2709. 2 Bl. Rep. 906. Comp. 182.

POST, (Writ of entry in.) It is given by the stat. of Marlbridge, 52 Hen. 3. c. 30, which provides, that when the number of alienations or descents exceeds the usual degrees, a new writ shall be allowed, without any mention of degrees at all, viz. that the tenant had no legal entry unless after. 3 Black. 182.

POST CONQUESTUM, words inserted in the king's title, by king Edw. 1. and constantly used in the time of Edw. 3. Concl.

POST DIEM, is where a writ is returned after the day assigned. Ibid.

POST DISSEISIN, is a writ that lies for him who having recovered lands or tenement by præcipe quod reddat, on default or reddition, is again disseised by the former disseisor; then he shall have this writ and recover double damages, and the party shall be punished by imprisonment, &c. Stat. Westm. 3. c. 28. Reg. Orig. 208. F. N. B. 190.

POSTEA. Upon the trial of an issue of fact, if it be found for either plaintiff or defendant, or specially, or if the plaintiff makes default, or is nonsuit, or whatever, in short, is done subsequent to the joining of issue and awarding the trial, it is entered by indorsement on record, and is called a postea: The substance of which is, that postea, afterwards, the said plaintiff and defendant appeared, by their attornies, at the place of trial, and a jury being sworn, found such a verdict; or, that the plaintiff after the jury sworn made default, and did not prosecute his suit, or, as the case may happen. 3 Black. 386.

POSTERIORITY, (posteriorítas) signifies the being or coming after, and is a word of comparison and relation in tenures, the correlative whereof is priority: as a man holding lands or tenements of two lords, holds of the ancienter lord by priority, and of his latter lord by posteriority. 2 Inst. 392.

POST-FINE, is a duty to the king for a fine acknowledged in his court, paid by the cognisee after the fine is fully passed, and it is so much, and half so much as was paid to the king for the præfine. 2 Black. 350.

POSTHUMOUS, is where a child is born after his father's death, &c. And posthumous children are enabled to take estates by remainder in settlements, as if born in their fathers' life-time, though no estate be limited to trustees to preserve them till they come in esse. 10 & 11 W. 3. cap. 16.

POST-MAN, in the exchequer. In the court of exchequer two of the most experienced barristers, called the post-man and the tub-man, (from the places in which they sit) have a precedence in motions. 2 Black. 28.

POSTNATUS, is a word that signifieth the second son, or one born afterwards; children of persons attainted of treason, born after the king's pardon, may inherit lands, though not those born before, &c. Co. Litt. 391.

POST-TERMINUM, is the return of a writ, not only after the return thereof, but after the term; on which the custos brevium takes 20*d*. It is also used for the fee so taken. Cowel.

POSTULATION, (postulatio) signifies a petition. And formerly, when a bishop was translated from one bishopric to another, he was not elected to the new see; for the canon law is electus non potest elegi; and the pretence was, that he was married to the first church, which marriage could not be dissolved but by the pope; thereupon he was petitioned, and consenting to the petition, the bishop was translated, and this was said to be by postulation; but being an usurpation, and against law, it was restrained by 16 R. 2. and 9 H. 4. c. 8. Since which, translations of bishops have been by election, and not by postulation. 1 Jones, 160. 1 Salk. 137.

POUND, (parcus, signifies any inclosure, a pound) is either pound-overt, that is, open over head; or pound-covert, that is close. By the statute 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 12. no distress of cattle can be driven out of the hundred where it is taken, unless to a pound-overt within the same shire, and within three miles of the place where it was taken. This is for the benefit of the tenants, that they may know where to find and replevy the distress. And by statute 11 Geo. 2. c. 13. which was made for the benefit of landlords, any person distraining for rent may impound the distress taken upon any part of the same, for securing of such distress, If a live distress of animals be impounded in a common pound-overt, the owner must take notice of it at his peril; but if in any special pound-overt, so constituted for this particular purpose, the distreinor must give notice to the owner; and in both these cases the owner, and not the distreinor, is bound to provide the beasts with food and necessaries; but if they be put in a pound-covert, as in a stable, or the like, the landlord or distreinor must feed and sustain them (Co. Litt. 47). A distress of household goods, or other dead chattels, which are liable to be stolen, or damaged by weather, ought to be impounded in a pound-covert, else the distreinor must answer for the consequences. 3 Black 13.

POUNDAGE. See Sheriff.

POUND-BREACH. If a distress be taken and impounded, though without just cause, the owner cannot break the pound, and take away the distress; if he doth, the party distrained may have his action, and retake the distress wherever he finds it: And for pound-breaches, &c. action of the case lies, whereon treble damages may be recovered. Co. Litt. 261. 2 W. & M. c. 5.

POUND IN MONEY, (from the Sax. pund, i. e. pondus) is twenty shillings. In the time of the Saxons it consisted of 240 pence, as it doth now: and 240 of those pence weighed a pound. Lambard 291.

POUR FAIRE PROCLAIMER, QUE NULL INJECT FIMES OU ORDURES EN FOSSES, ou RIVERS, PRES CITIES, &c. an ancient writ heretofore directed to the mayor or bailiff of a city or town, requiring them to make proclamation that none cast filth into places near such city or town, to the nuisance thereof; and if any be cast there already to remove the same. Stat. 12. R. 2. c. 13. F. N. B. 176.

POURPARTY, (Propars, propartis, propartia) contrary to pro indiviso: for to make pourparty is to divide the lands that fall to parceners, which before partition they hold jointly and pro indiviso. Old Nat. Brev. 11.

POURPRESTURE, (pourprestura, from the Fr. pourpris, an inclosure). Pourpresture is properly when a man takes any thing he ought not, whether it be in any jurisdiction land, or franchise; and generally when any thing is done to the nuisance of the king's tenants, See Kitchen, 10. Manwood's Forest Laws, cap. 10.—Cromp. Jurls. 152.

POUR SEISIR TERRES LE FEME QUE TIENT EN DOWER, &c. was a writ whereby the king seised the land which the wife of his tenant who held in capite deceased, had for her dowry, if she married without his leave. F. N. B. 174.

POURSUIVANT, (from the Fr. poursuivre, i. e. persequi) signifies the king's messenger attending him, to be sent on any occasion or message; as for the apprehending a person accused or suspected of any offence: those employed in martial causes are called pursuivants at arms. 24 H. 8. 13. See Herald.

POURVEYANCE or PURVEYANCE. The profitable prerogative of purveyance and pre-emption, was a right enjoyed by the crown of buying up provisions and other necessaries, by the intervention of the king's purveyors, for the use of his royal household, at an appraised valuation, in preference to all others, and even without consent of the owner; and also of forcibly impressing the carriages and horses of the subject, to do the king's business on the public roads, in the conveyance of timber, baggage, and the like, however inconvenient to the proprietor, upon paying him a settled price. 3 Inst. 82. 1 Black. 297.

But by 12 Car. 2. c. 24. it is provided, "that no person by colour of buying or "making provision or purveyance shall "take any thing of any subject, without "the full and free consent of the owner, "obtained without menace or force," &c.

POURVEYOR or PURVEYOR, (provisor, derived from the Fr. pourvoir, i. e. providere) was the officer of the king or queen, or other great personage, to provide corn and other victuals for their house, restrained by stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24.

POW-DIKE. To perversely and maliciously cut down or destroy the pow-dike, in the fens of Norfolk and Ely, is felony, by 22 Hen. 8. c. 11.

POWER is an authority which one man gives another to act for him; and is sometimes a reservation which a person makes in a conveyance for himself to do some acts, as to make leases, raise portions for younger children, and the like. 2 Lill. Abr. 339.

But a power must be pursued strictly; therefore if a man has power to make leases generally, this extends to make leases in possession only, and not in reversion, or to commence in futuro. 2 Roll. 261. c. 5. *Cro. POYNING's LAW. See Ireland.

PRACTICE is that course of conduct, which the professors and practitioners of the law pursue in the courts wherein they practice, and the law will sustain plain and fair practice, and not countenance fraud in proceedings, or suffer advantage to be taken therein. 2 Lil. 342.

The rules by which the proceedings in the courts of law and equity are to be carried on, are also denominated the practice of such courts.

PRÆCEPTORIES, (præceptoriæ) were a kind of benefices having their name from being possessed by the more eminent Templars, whom the chief master by his authority created and called præceptores Templi, of which præceptores there were sixteen. Mon. Angl. tom. 2. 543. Cowel.

PRÆCIPE. Original writs are either optional or peremptory, viz. either a præcipe, or a si te fecerit securum. The præcipe is in the alternative, commanding the defendant to do the thing required, or show the reason wherefore he hath not done it; that is, either to redress the injury or stand the suit. 3 Black. 274.

PRÆCIPE IN CAPITE, was a writ issuing out of the Chancery, for a tenant holding of the king in capite, viz. in chief, as of his crown. Mag. Chart. cap. 24. Reg. Grig. 8.

PRÆCIPE QUOD REDDAT, is the form of a writ which extends as well to a writ of right as to other writs of entry or possession, beginning præcipe A quod reddat B unum messuagium, &c. Old Nat. Brev. 13. See Fines and Recoveries.

PRÆCIPITIUM, was a punishment inflicted on criminals, by casting them from some high place, Malms. lib. 5. p. 155. Cowel.

PRÆDICT, prædictus, (Lat.) in English, aforesaid, is a word used in pleadings and deeds. Hob. 6.

PRÆFECTUS VILLÆ, is the same as præpositus villæ, i. e. the mayor of a town. Leg. Ed. Confes. c. 28, Cowel.

PRÆFINE, is that fine which, on suing out the writ of covenant on levying fines, is paid before the fine is passed. See Fines.

PRÆMIUM PUDICITIÆ, is a consideration given to a previously innocent and virtuous woman by the person who may have seduced her. And equity will enforce the payment of a bond given as præmium pudicitiæ to an innocent woman, whom the obligor hath seduced; for if a man misleads a previously virtuous woman, it is both reason and justice that he should make her a reparation. 2 Peere Wms. 432. Eq. Ca. Abr. 87. 3 Br. P. C. 445. Cas. Temp. Talb. 153.

So also if an annuity is granted by one to his housekeeper, with a bond for payment of it, and the bond is lost, equity will decree payment of the annuity; for service is a consideration, and no turpis contractus shall be presumed unless proved. Abr. Eq. 24. p. 7. 93. p. 5.

Also a bond given by the seducer as præmium pudicitiæ hath been holden good at law. Turner v. Vaughan, 2 Wills. 339.

So where a provision has been made for her, by an ineffectual conveyance, equity will interpose in her behalf, both against the grantor himself and his representatives. 2 Peere Wms. 435. Ambl. 590.

But the courts of law and equity distinguish between these obligations for considerations past, and considerations in future; and therefore a voluntary bond given during cohabitation, to a woman previously of a very loose life, purporting to be in consideration of cohabitation had, (by which must be understood past and discontinued) between the obligor and obligee, was after the death of the obligor held to be good; and the bill filed by the personal representatives to have the bond delivered up, dismissed with costs. Gray v. Matthias. 5 Ves. jun. 286.

But these bonds being voluntary in their nature, they are postponed to simple contract debts in the marshalling of assets, and shall be chargeable on the real estates on a deficiency of personal assets. Forrest 148.

And where a court of equity is required to interpose, it is not only influenced by the above distinction of the consideration being past or future, but also by the character and situation of the parties to the contract; therefore if a man hath given a bond to his mistress, a common strumpet, and afterwards files a bill to be relieved against the same, it appears from the case of Whaley v. Norton, that if the bill charge such to have been her situation, equity will relieve against it. 1 Vern. 483. 1 Fonbl. 228.

So where a woman of good character went to live with the defendant, as a companion to his sister, knowing him to be married, and he having seduced her, and separated from his wife on the occasion, gave her a bond, as præmium pudicitiæ: on a bill filed to enforce the payment thereof, the same was dismissed, as arising ex turpi causa. 2 Ves. 160.

So where a man married a second wife, the first being living, and after a discovery of his former marriage gave the second wife a bond for 1000*l.* to induce her to stay with him, the court held the same to be void. So where the condition of the bond was that the parties should live together in a state of fornication. 3 Peere Wms. 339.

PRÆMUNIRE, is taken either for a writ so called, or for the offence whereon the writ is granted. The offence of præmunire is so called from the words of the writ preparatory to the prosecution thereof, "præmunire (a barbarous word for præmoneri) facias A. B." cause A. B. to be forthwarned that he appear before us to answer the contempt wherewith he stands charged; which contempt is particularly recited in the preamble to the writ. Old Na. Brev. 101, edit. 1524. 4 Black. 183.

The nature and several species of præmunire depend upon divers statutes, all of which are noticed under their proper titles; and its punishment, according to such statutes, is thus shortly summed up by sir Edward Coke: (1 Inst. 129,) "that, from the conviction, the defendant shall be out of the king's protection, and his lands and tenements, goods and chattels, forfeited to the king: and that his body shall remain in prison at the king's pleasure; or (as other authorities have it) during life." (1 Bulst. 199.) But the stat. 5. Eliz. c. 1. provides, that "it shall not be lawful to kill any person attainted in a præmunire, any law, statute, opinion, or exposition of law to the contrary notwithstanding."

PRÆPOSITUS VILLÆ, sometimes is used for the constable of a town, or petitconstable. Cromp. Jurisd. 205.

PRAYER. See Service and Sacraments.

PRAYERS OF THE CHURCH. See Common Prayer.

PREACHING. Every beneficed preacher residing on his benefice, and having no lawful impediment, shall in his own cure, or some neighbouring church, preach one sermon every Sunday of the year. No person shall be permitted to preach in any church, but such as appear to be authorized thereto, by showing their licence; and churchwardens are to note in a book the names of all strange clergymen who preach in their parish; to which book every preacher is to subscribe his name, the day he preached, and the name of the bishop of whom he had licence to preach. Can. 44. 54. 49.

PREAMBLE, (Præmium, from the preposition præ, before, and ambulo, to walk; as to walk before). The beginning of an act is called the preamble; which is a key to the intent of the makers of the act, and the mischiefs which they would remedy by the same. Cowel.

PRE-AUDIENCE. The pre-audience which usually obtains among the practisers in his majesty's courts is as follows:

1. The king's premier serjeant, (so constituted by special patent,) 2. The king's ancient serjeant, or the eldest among the king's serjeants. 3. The king's advocate-general. 4. The king's attorney-general. 5. The king's solicitor-general. 6. The king's serjeants. 7. The king's counsel, with the queen's attorney and solicitor. 8. Serjeants at law. 9. The recorder of London. 10. Advocates of the civil law. 11. Barristers.

In the court of exchequer two of the most experienced barristers, called the postman and the tubman, (from the places in which they sit) have also a precedence in motions. 3 Black. 28.

PREBEND, (præbenda) is a portion which every prebendary of a cathedral church receives, in right of his place, for his maintenance; canonica portio is properly used for that share which every canon receiveth yearly out of the common stock of the church. Dyer, 221.

PREBENDARY, (prebendarius) is he who hath such a prebend. 3 Rep. 75.

PRECARIÆ, are days works which tenants of some manors were bound, by reason of their tenure, to do for their lord in harvest. Cowel.

Married women and widows are entitled to the same rank among each other as their husbands would respectively have borne between themselves, except such rank is merely professional or official; and unmarried women to the same rank as their eldest brothers would bear among men, during the lives of their fathers.

PRECEDENTS, are authorities to follow in determinations in courts of justice. 4 Rep. 93. Cro. Eliz. 65. 2 Lil. Abr. 344. Vaugh. 160. 382. 399. 429.

There are also precedents or forms for conveyances, and pleadings in the courts of law, which are to be followed, and are of great authority.

PRECE PARTIUM, is when a suit is continued by the prayer, assent, or agreement of both parties. Cowel.

PRECEPT, (præceptum) is a command in writing, by a justice of peace, or other officer, for bringing a person before him, or the like. The civilians use mandatum in this case. Cowel.

PRE-CONTRACT, (mentioned in stat. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 23.) is a contract made before another contract, but hath relation especially to marriage. See Marriage.

PREDIAL TITHES, (decimæ prædiales) are those which are paid of things arising and growing from the ground only, as corn, hay, fruit of trees, and such like. 2 Ed. 6. 13. Co. Inst. 649. See Tithes.

PRE-EMPTION, (præ-emptio) signifies the first buying of a thing; and it was a privilege allowed the king's purveyor to have the choice and first buying of provisions for the king's house, taken away by 12 Car. 2. c. 24.

PREGNANCY (plea of). Where a woman is capitally convicted, and pleads her pregnancy, though this is no cause to stay the judgment, yet it is to respite the execution till she is delivered. See Judgment.

PREMISSES, are those parts of a deed which set forth the number of the parties, with their additions or titles, the recitals, if any, of such deeds, agreements, or matters of fact, as are necessary to explain the occasion of the present deed. Co. Lit. 21. 2 Roll. Rep. 19. 23. Cro. Jac. 476. 5 Rep. 55.

The parcels conveyed or charged by the deed, are also generally called the premisses.

PREMIUM, (præmium) the money the insured gives to the insurer for insuring the safe return of any ship or merchandise.

PRENDER, the power or right of taking a thing before it is offered; from the Fr. prendre, i. e. accipere; it lies in render, but not in prender. Rep. 1.

PRENDER DE BARON, signified literally to take an husband, and was used for an exception to disable a woman from pursuing an appeal of murder against one who killed her former husband. S. P. C. lib. 3. c. 59.

PREPENSED, (prepensus) forethought; as propensed malice is malitia præcogitata, which makes killing murder; and when a man is slain on a sudden quarrel, if there were malice prepensed formerly between the parties, it is murder; or, as it is called by the statute, prepensed murder. 12 Hen. 7. c. 7. 3 Inst. 51. See Murder.

PREROGATIVE, (from præ, ante, and rogare, to ask or demand) is a word of large extent, including all the rights which by law the king hath as chief of the commonwealth, and as intrusted with the execution of the laws. Bac. Abr. tit. Pre.

By the word prerogative is usually understood that special pre-eminence which the king hath over and above all other persons, and out of the ordinary course of the common law, in right of his regal dignity. It signifies, in its etymology, (from præ and rogo) something that is required or demanded before, or in preference to all others: and hence it follows that it must be, in its nature, singular and eccentrical; that it can only be applied to those rights and capacities which the king enjoys alone, in contradistinction to others, and not to those which he enjoys in common with any of his subjects: for if once any one prerogative of the crown could be held in common with the subject, it would cease to be prerogative any longer; and therefore Finch lays it down as a maxim, that the prerogative is that law in case of the king, which is law in no case of the subject. Finch. L. 85.

Prerogatives are either direct or incidental. The direct are such positive substantial parts of the royal character and authority, as are ooted in and spring from the king's political person, considered merely by itself, without reference to any other extrinsic circumstance; as, the right of sending embassadors, of creating peers, and of making war or peace. But such prerogatives as are incidental bear always a relation to something else, distinct from the king's person; and are indeed only exceptions in favour of the crown, to those general rules that are established for the rest of the community; such as, that no costs shall be recovered against the king; that the king can never be a joint-tenant; and that his debt shall be preferred before a debt to any of his subjects. 1 Black. 240.

PREROGATIVE COURT, (curia prærogativa archiepiscopi Cantuariensis) is the court wherein all wills are proved, and all administrations taken which belong to the archbishop by his prerogative; that is, in cases where the deceased had goods in divers dioceses of the value of 5*l.*; in which case the will must be proved, or the administration taken out, before the metropolitan of the province, by way of special prerogative; that is, either in the prerogative office of Canterbury or York. 2 Black. 508.

PRESBYTER, a priest, elder, or honourable person. Isidore, lib. 7.

PRESBYTERIUM, a presbytery, or that part of the church in which divine offices are performed, applied to the choir or chancel, because it was the place appropriated to the bishop, priests, and other clergy, while the laity were confined to the body of the church. Mon. Ang. tom. 1. p. 243.

PRESBYTERIAN, a sectarist, or dissenter from the church. 13 Car. 2. 4 Black. 53.

PRESCRIPTION, (præscriptio) is a title acquired by use and time, and allowed by law, as when a man claims any thing because he, his ancestors, or they whose estate he hath, have had or used it all the time whereof no memory is to the contrary; or it is where, for continuance of time, ultra memoriam hominis, a particular person hath a particular right against another. Kitch. 104. Co. Lit. 114. 4 Rep. 32.

But there is a great distinction between custom and prescription: 1st. That custom is properly a local usage, and not annexed to any person; such as a custom in the manor of Dale, that lands shall descend to the youngest son: 2d. That prescription is merely a personal usage; as, that Sempronius and his ancestors, or those whose estate he hath, have used, time out of mind, to have such an advantage or privilege. Co. Litt. 113.

PRESCRIPTIONS AGAINST ACTIONS AND STATUTES. See LIMITATION, statutes of.

PRESENCE. Sometimes the presence of a superior magistrate supersedes the power of an inferior. 9 Rep. 118.

PRESENTATION, (presentatio) is properly the act of a patron, offering his clerk to the bishop of the diocese, to be instituted in a church or benefice of his gift which is void. 2 Lil. Abr. 351. See Advowson.

PRESENTMENT OF COPYHOLD. See Surrender of Copyholds.

PRESENTEE, the clerk presented to a church by the patron. Cowel.

PRESENTMENT OF OFFENCES. A presentment, generally taken, is a very comprehensive term, including not only presentments properly so called, but also inquisitions of office, and indictments by a grand jury. But a presentment, properly speaking, is the notice taken by a grand jury of any offence from their own knowledge or observation, (Lamb. Eirenarch. l. 4. c. 5.) without any bill of indictment laid before them at the suit of the king, as the presentment of a nuisance, a libel, and the like; upon which the officer of the court must afterwards frame an indictment, before the party presented can be put to answer it. 2 Inst. 739.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL, is the fourth great officer of state: he is as ancient as the reign of king John; and hath sometimes been called principalis consiliarius, and other times capitalis consiliarius.

The office of president of the council was ever granted by letters patent under the great seal, durante bene placito; and this officer is to attend on the king, to propose business at the council table, and report to his Majesty the transactions there: also he may associate the lord chancellor, treasurer, and privy seal, at naming of sheriffs; and all other acts limited by any statute, to be done by them. 21 H. 8. c. 20. Black. 230.

PRESS, (liberty of). See Libel, and Liberties, and Rights.

PRESSING. See Impressing Seamen.

PRESSING TO DEATH. See Mute.

PREST, is used for a duty in money, to be paid by the sheriff on his account, in the exchequer, or for money left, or remaining in his hands. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. cap. 4.

PRESTATION-MONEY, (præstatio, a paying or performing) a sum of money paid by archdeacons yearly to their bishop pro exteriore jurisdictione—ut sint quieti a præstatione muragii. Præstatio was also anciently used for purveyance. Cowel.

PREST-MONEY, is so called from the French word prest, that is, prompt ad ditus, for that it binds those who receive it, to be ready at all times appointed, being meant commonly of soldiers. 18 H. 6. 19. 7 H. 7. l. 3. H. 8. 5. & 2 Ed. 6. 2.

PRESUMPTION, (presumptio) a supposition, opinion, or belief: next to positive proof, circumstancial evidence, or the doctrine of PRESUMPTIONS, must take place: for when the fact itself cannot be demonstratively evinced, that which comes nearest to the proof of the fact is the proof of such circumstances which either necessarily, or usually, attend such facts; and these are called presumptions, which are only to be relied upon till the contrary be actually proved. Stabitur præsumptione donec probetur in contrarium (Co. Litt. 373.); and presumptions are of three sorts: 1st. Violent presumption is many times equal to full proof, for there those circumstances appear, which necessarily attend the fact. As if a landlord sues for rent due at Michaelmas 1810, and the tenant cannot prove the payment, but produces an acquittance for rent due at a subsequent time, in full of all demands, this is a violent presumption of his having paid the former rent, and is equivalent to full proof; for though the actual payment is not proved, yet the acquittal in full of all demands is proved, which could not be without such payment; and it therefore induces so forcible a presumption, that no proof shall be admitted to the contrary. (Co. Lit. 6. Gilb. Ev. 161.) 2dly. Probable presumption, arising from such circumstances as usually attend the fact, hath also its due weight: as if, in a suit for rent due 1810, the tenant proves the payment of the rent due in 1811; this will prevail to exonerate the tenant, unless it be clearly shewn that the rent of 1810 was retained for some special reason, or that there was some fraud or mistake: for otherwise it will be presumed to have been paid before that in 1811, as it is most usual to receive first the rents of longest standing (Lit. 373.) Light, or rash, presumptions have no weight or validity at all. Lit. lib. 1. c. 1, § 1.

PRESUMPTIO, was anciently taken for intrusion, or the unlawful seizing of any thing. Leg. Hen. 1. c. 11.

PRESUMPTIVE EVIDENCE OF FELONY. See Evidence.

PRESUMPTIVE HEIRS, are such, who, if the ancestor should die immediately, would in the present circumstance of things be his heirs; but whose right of inheritance may be defeated by the contingency of some nearer heir being born: as a brother, or nephew, whose presumptive succession may be destroyed by the birth of a child; or a daughter, whose present hopes may be hereafter cut off by the birth if a son. Nay, even if the estate hath descended, by the death of the owner, to such brother, or nephew, or daughter; in the former case the estate shall be divested and taken away by the birth of a posthumous child; and, in the latter, it shall also be totally divested by the birth of a posthumous son. 2 Black. 208.

But besides the case of a posthumous child, if lands are given to a son, who dies, leaving a sister his heir; if the parents have, at any distance of time afterwards, another son, this son shall divest the descent upon the sister, and take the estate, as heir to his brother. So the same estate may be frequently divested by the subsequent birth of nearer presumptive heirs, before it fixes upon the nearest presumptive heir. As if an estate is given to an only child, who dies, it may descend to an aunt, who may be stripped of it by an after-born uncle, on whom a subsequent sister of the deceased may enter, and who will again be deprived of the estate by the birth of a brother; but every one has a right to retain the rents and profits which accrued whilst he was thus legally possessed of the inheritance. Co. Litt. 11. Doct. & Stud. 1 Dial. c. 7. Harg. Co. Litt. 11. 2 Wils. 528.

PRETENDED PRIVILEGED PLACES. See Obstructing Process.

PRETENDED TITLES. No one shall sell or purchase any pretended right or title to land, unless the vendor hath received the profits thereof for one whole year before such grant, or hath been in actual possession of the land, or of the reversion or remainder; on pain that both purchaser and vendor shall each forfeit the value of such land to the king and the prosecutor (32 Hen. 8. c. 9). This offence relates chiefly to the commencement of civil suits. 4 Black. 135.

PRETENDER AND HIS SONS. See Treason.

PRETENSED RIGHT, (jus prætensum) is where one is in possession of land, and another who is out of possession claims and sues for it; here the pretensed right or title is said to be in him who so claims and sues for the same. Mod. Cas. 302.

PRETIUM SEPULCHRI, those goods which accrue to the church when a corpse is buried. Irish Can. lib. 19. c. 6.

PRIDE-GAVEL, (from prid. the last syllable of lamprid, and gavel, a rent or tribute). In the manor of Rodeley in the county of Gloucester is a rent paid to the lord, by certain tenants, in duty and acknowledgment to him for the privilege of fishing for lampreys or lamprids in the river Severn. Cowel.

PRIESTS, in general signification, are any ministers of a church. See Ecclesiastical Persons, Parsons, and Papists.

PRIMAGE, is a duty at the water-side, due to the master and mariners of a ship; to the master for the use of his cables and ropes, to discharge the goods of the merchant; and to the mariners for loading and unloading in any port or haven; it is usually about 12*d.* per ton, or 6*d.* per pack or bale, according to custom. Merch. Dict.

PRIMER-FINE, on suing out the writ or præcipe, called a writ of covenant, there is due to the king, by ancient prerogative, a primer fine, or a noble for every five marks of land sued for; that is, one tenth of the annual value. 2 Black. 350.

PRIMICERIUS, the first of any degree of men; the nobility of England. Mon. 1 tom. p. 838.

PRIMIER SEISIN, (prima seisina) the first possession, or seisin, was heretofore used as a branch of the king's prerogative, whereby he had the first possession, that is, the entire profits for a year of all the lands and tenements, whereof his tenant (who held of him in capite) died seised in his demesne as of fee, his heir being then at full age, until he do homage, or, if under, until he were of age. (Staundf. Prærog. cap. 3. & Bracton, lib. 4. tract. 3. c. 1.) But all the charges arising by primier seisins are taken away by 12 Car. 2. c. 24.

PRIMIER SERJEANT, is the king's first serjeant at law.

PRIMO BENEFICIO, the first benefice in the king's gift, &c. See Beneficio.

PRIMOGENITURE, (primogenitura) the title of an elder brother in right of his birth: the reason of which, Co. upon Lit. says, is, Qui prior est tempore, potior est jure. Cowell. & Leg. Alfred Dodd. Treat. Nobil. 119. 1 Black. 194. 2 Black. 214. 4 Black. 414.

PRINCE, (princeps) is sometimes taken at large for the king himself; but more properly for the king's eldest son, who is called prince of Wales.

It is said by some writers, that the king's eldest son is prince of Wale by nativity; but the fact is not so, for he is born duke of Cornwall, and afterwards created prince of Wales, though from the day of his birth he is stiled prince of Wales, a title originally given by Edward 1. And all his titles are, prince of Wales, duke of Cornwall, and earl of Chester. 1 Black. 223.

PRINCE OF WALES, ESTABLISHMENT OF. By 35 Geo. 3. c. 115. when a separate establishment shall be made for any future heir apparent, his principal officer is to make out a plan of establishment, and all disbursements from the revenues are to be made by the treasurer, for which he shall be responsible: which plan may be altered. s. 1.

Treasurer to cause payments to be entered in a book, which his majesty's treasury is to inspect. s. 2.

Treasurer to cause an account of expences to be made out quarterly, which he is to examine and sign. s. 3.

Treasurer may by warrant pay the sums specified in quarterly accounts, and the arrears at the end of quarters shall be discharged. s. 4. 5.

The surplus at the end of quarters to be paid to the heir-apparent. s. 6.

Demands which shall accrue, after the first quarterly day of payment, to be delivered within ten days after the expiration of the quarter in which they accrued. s. 7.

No demand to be included in the account but which has accrued within the quarter preceding the audit, nor any paid. Ibid.

Demands not delivered within ten days after the expiration of the quarter in which they were incurred to be barred, and securities for such debts void. Ibid.

And officers neglecting to insert demands in quarterly accounts, liable to payment of them. Ibid.

No action to be brought against the heir-apparent, for any debt which shall accrue, after the first quarterly day of payment. s. 8.

For demands delivered in time limited, the creditors may sue within three months after delivery: the treasurer to be made defendant, and the judgment to be a charge on the heir-apparent's funds. s. 9.

Officer neglecting to prepare accounts, or to apply monies as settled by this act, or misapplying monies; to be liable to damages, which may be sued for in any court at Westminster. s. 10.

And by 35 Geo. 3. c. 129. the same regulations are made for the management of the present prince of Wales's establishment, as are contained in the preceding act relating to the future princes of Wales. s. 25 to 36.

PRINCIPAL, (principalium) is variously used in our law, as an heir-loom, &c. The word principal, was also sometimes used for a mortuary, or corse-present.

In Urchenfield, in the county of Hereford, certain principals, as the best beast, the best bed, the best table, &c. pass to the eldest child, and are not liable to partition. Also the chief person in some of the inns of Chancery is called principal of the house. Cowell.

PRINCIPAL AND ACCESSARY. The principal is the person who actually commits a crime: and the accessary he who is assisting in the doing thereof. 9 Lill. Abr. 355.

PRINCIPAL CHALLENGE, a species of challenge to jurors for suspicion or partiality; and takes place where the cause assigned carries with it prima facie evident marks of suspicion, either of malice or favour. See Challenge.

PRINCIPAL MONEY. See Mortgage.

PRINTERS. By 39 Geo. 3. c. 79. printers shall give a notice in writing to the clerk of the peace, of the number of their presses, who shall grant a certificate thereof and file the notice, and transmit an attested copy to the secretary of state. s. 23.

Persons keeping presses or types without notice, or using them in any place not expressed therein, to forfeit 20*l.* Ibid.

But this is not to extend to his majesty's printers, or the universities of England. s. 24.

Letter-founders and printing-press-makes shall give a notice in writing of the place where they carry on business, to the clerk of the peace, who shall grant a certificate thereof and file the notice, and transmit an attested copy to the secretary of state: and persons carrying on such businesses without giving such notices, are to forfeit 20*l.* s. 25.

An account is to be kept of types and printing-presses sold, and to whom: to be produced to any justice when required, on pain of 20*l.* s. 26.

The name and abode of the printer shall be printed on every paper or book; and printers omitting so to do, and persons dispersing papers without such name and place of abode, shall forfeit 20*l.* s. 27.

But this is not to extend to papers printed by authority of parliament. s. 28.

Printers shall keep a copy of every paper they print, and write therein the name and abode of their employer, on pain of 20*l.* for neglect, or refusing to produce the copy within six months. s. 29.

Any person in whose presence a printed paper shall be sold without the name and abode of the printer, may seize the party and convey him before a justice, to determine whether he hath offended against this act. s. 30.

This is not to extend to impressions of engravings, or the printing names and addresses, or the articles in which the party deals, or papers for the sale of estates or goods, nor to alter any provisions respecting newspapers. s. 31, 32.

A justice may empower a peace-officer to search for presses and types which he suspects to be illegally used, and to seize them and the printed papers found. s. 33.

Prosecutions for any penalty under this act (see also Seditious Practices) must be commenced within three months after the penalty incurred. s. 34.

Pecuniary penalties exceeding 20*l.* may be recovered in the superior courts with full costs; and not exceeding 20*l.* before any justice of the peace, who may levy the same by distress, and in default thereof, commit the party for not more than six nor less than three calendar months; and the penalties go one moiety to the plaintiff or informer and the other to his majesty. s. 35, 36.

PRIOR, was first in dignity next to the abbot or chief of a convent. 26 H. 8. cap. 3. 1 Black. 155.

PRIORS ALIENS (priores alieni), certain religious men, born in France and Normandy, governors of religious houses erected for foreigners here in England, suppressed by Henry V. Stow's Annals. Cowel.

PRIORITY (prioritas), is an antiquity of tenure, in comparison of another less ancient. Old Nat. Br. 94. See Posteriority.

PRIORITY OF SUIT. See Administrators, Executors, and Mortgage.

PRIORITY OF DEBTS. A prior suit depending may be pleaded in abatement of a subsequent action or prosecution for the same matter.

But there is no priority of time, in judgments; for the judgment first executed shall be first paid.

And if two informations be exhibited on the very same day for the same offence, they may mutually abate one another, because there is no priority to attach the right of the suit in one informer, more than in the other. It seems, that an information or bill the same day that they are filed, may be so far said to be depending before any process sued on them, that they may be pleaded in abatement. 2 Hawk. P. C. 275.

PRISAGE (prisagium), was a right of taking two tons of wine from every ship, (English or foreign) importing into England twenty tons or more; one before, and one behind the mast: which by charter of Edward I. was exchanged into a duty of 2*s.* for every ton imported by merchant-strangers, and called butlerage, because paid to the king's butler. Dav. 8. 2 Bulst. 254. Stat. Estr. 16 Edw. 2. Com. journ. 27 Apr. 1689.

PRISE, or PRISE (captio, præda, from the Fr. Prendre) a capture from an enemy in time of war, the sale and distribution of which captures under the admiralty jurisdiction are provided for at the commencement of every war by special act of parliament.

PRISO, a prisoner taken in war. Hoveden, 541. Cowel.

PRISON (prisona) a place of confinement for the safe custody of persons, in order to their answering any action, civil or criminal prosecution, and upon conviction of a criminal offence, a prison is, in innumerable instances, by statute appointed to be a place of punishment as well as safe custody.

PRISON-BREAKING. Breach of prison by the offender himself, when committed for any cause, was felony at the common law, (1 Hal. Pl. 607), or even conspiring to break it (Bruc. l. 3. c. 349), but this severity is mitigated by the stat. de frangentibus prisonam, 1 Ed. II. which enacts, that "no person shall have judgment of life or member for breaking prison, unless committed for some capital offence;" so that to break prison and escape, when lawfully committed for any treason or felony remains still felony as at the common law; and to break prison (whether it be the county gaol, the stocks, or other usual place of severity) when lawfully confined upon any other inferior charge, is still punishable as a high misdemeanor by fine and imprisonment; for the statute, which ordains that such offence shall be no longer capital, never meant to exempt it entirely from every degree of punishment. 2 Hawk. P. C. 128.

PRISONER, (Prisonarius, Fr. Prisonnier), one confined in prison, on an action, or commandment: and a man may be a prisoner on matter of record, or of fact; a prisoner on matter of record, is he who, being present in court, is by the court committed to prison; and the other is on an arrest, by the proper officer, for safe custody until bailed, or the like. Staundf. P. C. 34, 35.

But a prisoner at the suit of the king may not be charged in an action at the suit of the subject, without leave of the court on special motion. 1 Lev. 125. 146.

But a prisoner in custody for debt, charged with a felony, may be removed from the sheriff, warden, keeper, or marshal of the King's Bench, in whose custody he is by habeas corpus, before one of the judges. 1 Wms. Jus. 200.

PRIVATE ACTS OF PARLIAMENT are of late years become a very common mode of assurance. For it may sometimes happen, that by the ingenuity of some, and the blunders of other practitioners, an estate is most grievously entangled by a multitude of contingent remainders, resulting trusts, springing uses, executory devises, and the like artificial contrivances; so that it is out of the power of either the courts of law or equity to relieve the owner. Or it may sometimes happen, that by the strictness or omissions of family settlements, the tenant of the estate is abridged of some reasonable power, (as letting leases, making a jointure for a wife, or the like,) which power cannot be given him by the ordinary judges either in common law or equity. Or it may be necessary, in settling an estate, to secure it against the claims of infants or other persons under legal disabilities; who are not bound by any judgments or decrees of the ordinary courts of justice. In these, or other cases of the like kind, the transcendent power of parliament is called in, by a particular law, enacted for this very purpose, to unfetter an estate; to give its tenant reasonable powers; or to assure it to a purchaser, against the remote or latent claims of infants or disabled persons, by settling a proper equivalent in proportion to the interest so barred. 2 Black. 345.

Acts of this kind are however at present carried on, in both houses, with great deliberation and caution, particularly in the house of lords; they are usually referred to two judges to examine and report the facts alleged, and to settle all technical forms. Nothing also is done without the consent, expressly given, of all parties in being and capable of consent, that have the remotest interest in the matter: unless such consent shall appear to be perversely and without any reason withheld: And an equivalent in money or other estate is usually settled upon infants, or persons not in esse, or not of capacity to act for themselves, who are to be concluded by this act. And a general saving is constantly added, at the close of the bill, of the right and interest of all persons whatsoever; except those whose consent is so given or purchased, and who are therein particularly named: though it hath been holden, that, even if such saving be omitted, the act shall bind none but the parties. Co. 138. Godb. 171.

A law thus made, though it binds all parties to the bill, is yet looked upon rather as a private conveyance, than as the solemn act of the legislature. It is not therefore allowed to be a public, but merely a private statute; it is not printed or published among the other laws of the session; it hath been relieved against, when obtained upon fraudulent suggestions; it hath been holden to be void, if contrary to law and reason; and no judge or jury is bound to take notice of it, unless the same be specially set forth and pleaded to them. It remains however enrolled among the public records of the nation, to be for ever preserved as a perpetual testimony of the conveyance or assurance so made or established. Richardson v. Hamilton, Canc. 3. Jan 1733. M'Kenzie v. Stuart. Dom. Proc. 13 Mar. 1754. 4 Rep. 12.

PRIVATEERS. Private men of war, allowed during national hostilities under letters of marque and reprisal, the persons concerned in which administer at their own costs a part of the war, by fitting out these ships of force, and providing them with all military stores; and they have, instead of pay, leave to keep what they take from the enemy, under the regulations of the prize acts.

PRIVATION, (privatio), a taking away or withdrawing: most commonly applied to a bishop or rector, when by death, or other act, they are deprived of their preferments; it seems to be an abbreviation of the word deprivation. Co. Lit. 329.

PRIVEMENT ENSIENT, is where a woman is with child by her husband, but not quick with child. Wood's Inst. 662.

PRIVIES, (from the Fr. Privé, i. e. familiaris), are those who are partakers, or have an interest in any action or thing, or any relation to another: as every heir in tail is privy to recover the land entailed, &c. Old Nat. Br. 117.

There are five several kinds of privies, viz. privies of blood, such as the heir to the ancestor; privies in representation, as executors or administrators to the deceased; privies in estate, between donor and donee, lessor and lessee, &c. Privies in respect of contract; and privies on account of estate and contract together. 3 Rep. 23. 123. 4 Rep. 123. Latch. 260.

PRIVILEGE, (privilegium), is that exemption whereby a private man, or a particular corporation is exempted from the ordinary obligations of the law, and it is sometimes used in law for a place which hath some special immunity. Kitchin, 118.

Privilege is either personal or real: a personal privilege is, that which is granted to any person, either against or beyond the course of the common law: as, for example, a member of parliament may not be arrested, nor any of his servants.

Privilege real is that which is granted to a place, as to the universities, that none of either may be called to Westminster-Hall, on any contract made within their own precincts, or prosecuted in other courts. Cowell.

Privilege is therefore an exemption from some duty, burthen, or attendance, to which certain persons are entitled, from a supposition of law, that the stations they fill, or the offices they are engaged in, are such as require all their care; that therefore without this indulgence it would be impracticable to execute such offices to that advantage which the public good requires. Bac. Abr. Tit. Priv.

The officers, ministers, and clerks of the courts in Westminster-Hall are allowed particular privileges in respect of their necessary attendance on those courts; and they are regularly to sue and be sued in the courts they respectively belong to. 2 Inst. 551. 4 Inst. 71. Vaugh. 154. Dyer 377. a. pl. 80.

And an attorney, so long as he remains on record (and continues in practice), shall have his privilege. Bro. tit. Attorney 67. Tit. Bill 24. 1 Vent. 1.

And a serjeant at law, barrister, attorney, or other privileged person, whose attendance is necessary in Westminster-Hall, may lay his action in Middlesex, though the cause of action be due in another county; and the usual affidavit will not change the venue. Stil. 460. Moor 64. 2 Show. 242.

So all peers, without distinction, are entitled to privilege; for they are equally obliged to attend the service of the public, and are always supposed amenable, and to have sufficient property to answer in suits brought against them, and on these grounds are not to be arrested or molested in their persons. And this privilege extends to bishops, members of the convocation, and members of the house of commons. 4 Inst. 24. Stil. 222. 253 Dyer 314. 1 Mod. 66. Bro. Exig. 3. Moor 767. Scobel's Memorials 88. 103. Sir Simond D'Ewes's Journals 414. Finch 355. Dyer 60 a. in margin. Noy 102. Moor 78. Staundf. P. C. 38.

A peeress by birth is entitled to privilege; so of a peeress by marriage, and that as well during coverture as after. 2 Inst. 50. Stil. 222. 234. 252. 2 Cha. Ca. 224. Co. Lit. 16. 6 Co. 53. Dyer 79.

And peers and members of parliament shall have privilege of parliament, not only for their servants, but for their horses, &c. or other goods distrainable. 4 Inst. 24.

But this privilege is restrained to mœnial servants, and others necessarily employed about their estates.

In all civil causes this privilege is regularly to be allowed; so that a peer, or member of the house of commons, is not to be arrested or molested in his person or estate. Bro. Exigent.

But privilege of parliament doth not extend to high treason, felony, breach of the peace, surety of the peace, or commitments for contempts under the warrant of the speaker of the house of commons. 4 Inst. 25. and Burdett's Case, 1811.

And privileged persons are punishable by attachment for contempts in many instances: as for rescuing a person arrested; for proceeding in a cause against the king's writ of prohibition; for discharging other writs, wherein the king's prerogative, or the liberty of the subject, are nearly concerned; and for other contempts which are of an enormous nature, such as libel and the like. 2 Hawk. P. C. 152. and the Cases of Wilkes and Burdett.

In Jenkins, the following privileges are laid down as belonging to peers: 1, they are entitled to a letter missive; 2, they have a knight to try an issue which concerns them; 3, they are not to be arrested for any personal action; 4, they are exempted from serving on juries; 5, to have no day of grace against them; 6, upon the trial of a peer for treason or felony, they try him on their honour only, not on oath; 7, when they pass through any of the king's forests to attend the king, on blowing a horn they may have a buck or doe, as the season of the year is; 8, they have power in their house to reverse judgments given in the King's Bench; 9, they have the benefit of clergy, though they cannot read; 10, they are not liable to find carriages for the king, when he removes from one place to another. Jenk. 107.

But by 13 Will. 3. c. 3. all persons may sue or proceed in any suit in the courts at Westminster, Admiralty, Court of Arches, Prerogative Court of Canterbury and York, and delegates in causes matrimonial and testamentary, and all courts of appeals against any peer, or member or their servants, immediately from the dissolution, prorogation, or adjournment for more than fourteen days, till the time of meeting or re-assembling, so as they arrest not the person privileged, but proceed by summons and distress infinite, or by ex parte bill, summons, and distress infinite, till common bail filed: so also by stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 24, in any court of record, Wales, or county palatine.

And by stat. 10 Geo. 3. c. 50. peers and members may be sued at any time, and the suit shall not be impeached or stayed by privilege, but the person is not to be imprisoned.

And by 45 Geo 3. c. 124. on process by summons against persons having the privilege of parliament, an appearance on default may be entered for the defendant. s. 3.

An appearance may also be put in for a defendant, having privilege of parliament, in courts of equity, on return of a process of sequestration. s. 4.

In default of answer to a bill in equity against persons having privilege of parliament, the bill be taken pro confesso. s. 5.

And such bill shall be read in evidence as an answer admitting the facts. s. 6.

And by 47 Geo. 3. s. 2. c. 40. when any bill of complaint shall be exhibited in any court of equity against any member of the house of commons, it shall not be necessary to leave a copy of the bill with the defendant, but proceed for want of appearance to sequestrate the estate.

By 12 & 13 Will. 3. c. 3. none stayed by privilege shall be barred by the statute of limitations.

By 4 Geo. 3. c. 33. the creditors of any merchant within the description of the laws relating to bankrupts, having privilege of parliament, may, upon affidavit made of the debt, and filed in any of the courts of Westminster, sue out a summons or ex parte bill against such debtor, and if he shall not within 2 months pay so much or compound for the debt, (or enter an appearance, 45 Geo. 3. c. 124. s. 1.) he shall be adjudged a bankrupt, and a commission may be accordingly sued out against him. s. 12.

And by 45 Geo. 3. c. 124. traders having privilege of parliament, disobeying the orders of the court of chancery or exchequer, and refusing to pay money according to the tenor thereof, shall be declared bankrupts. s. 7.

But persons entitled to privilege are not to be arrested except in cases made felony by the bankrupt laws. 4 Geo. 3. c. 33. s. 3. 45 Geo. 3. c. 124. s. 8.

There is also a privilege to the person of a man, to be free from arrest, in respect of his attendance upon the courts; as where a man has a subpœna, to attend the courts of justice at Westminster, and he be arrested during his attendance there, he shall upon his oath be discharged. 1 Ca. R. 217, 2 Mod. 182.

And all persons who have relation to a cause, which calls for their attendance in court, and who attend in the course of their cause, such as the parties thereto or the bail, though not compelled by process, are privileged from arrest, provided their attendance be not for any unfair purpose. 1 Hen. Black. 636.

But a man who attends the court without process, or necessity, to do a voluntary act there, shall not be privileged. Salk. 544.

And the party shall be protected eundo et redeundo, though he goes out of his way; and upon this principle, a party who had attended his cause all day in court, and in the evening went with his attorney and witnesses to a tavern in Palace Yard to dine, was held to be privileged from arrest causâ redeundi. 4 Ed. 4, 21 a. Bro. Priv. 4. 2 Black. Rep. 1113.

But an action for false imprisonment does not lie for such an arrest; it is a breach of the privilege of the court, for which an attachment will be granted. 2 Black. Rep. 1190. Doug. 675.

This privilege extends to bail returning from court after a justification; to an attorney returning after attendance on a judge's summons; to a party attending a reference under a rule of nisi prius; to parties and witnesses attending in the inferior courts; and to a justice of peace, clerk of the peace, or other officer going to or returning from sessions. Burnes, 27. 378. 6 Com. Dig. 88. 1 Brownl. 15. Bagm. 100. 1 Lev. 159. Bro. Priv. 35. Crom. J. 162.

So a person attending commissioners of bankrupt, or other commissioners under the great seal, under their summons, is not liable to arrest. 1 Atk. 54. But a person attending such commissioners without a summons, to do a voluntary act, such as to prove a debt before commissioners of bankrupt, is not privileged from arrest. 4 Tur. Rep. 377.

So if any one be arrested within a place having privilege, as in Westminster-Hall, sedente curiâ, or in the king's palace at Westminster, or other place where the king resides. 3 Inst. 141.

But this privilege from arrest only extends to arrests for debt, and not to criminal cases. 1 Strange, 530.

PRIVILEGIUM CLERICALE. See Benefit of Clergy.

PRIVILEGIUM, PROPERTY propter. A man may have a qualified property in animals feræ naturæ, propter privilegium that is, he may have the privilege of hunting, taking, and killing them, in exclusion of other persons. 3 Black. 394.

PRIVITY, (Privitas.) There are three sorts of privities, viz. Privity in estate, in blood, and in law.

Privies in estate are as joint tenants, baron and feme, donor and donee, lessor and lessee, &c.

Privies in blood are intended of privies in blood inheritable, and this is in three manners, viz. inheritable as general heir, or as special heir, or as general and special heir.

Privies in law are, when the law without blood or privity of estate casts the land on one, or makes his entry lawful, as lord by escheat, lord who enters for mortmain, lord of villain, &c. 8 Rep. 42 b. Jo. 92.

PRIVY, (derived from the French Privé, familiaris), signifies him who is partaker, or hath an interest in any action or thing; as privies of blood. Old Nat. Brev. 117, 147.

PRIVY COUNCIL. (Consilium Regis, Privatum Consilium), counsellors in the king's court or palace, for matters of state. 4 Inst. 53.

The principal council belonging to the king is his privy council, which is generally called, by way of eminence, the council. And this, according to Sir Edward Coke's description of it, (4 Inst. 53), is a noble, honourable, and reverend assembly, of the king and such as he wills to be of his privy council in the king's court or palace, and is at present of an indefinite number. No inconvenience arises from the extension of their numbers, as those only attend who are specially summoned for that particular occasion upon which their advice and assistance are required. The cabinet-council, as it is called, consists of those ministers of state who are more immediately honoured with his majesty's confidence, and who are summoned to consult upon the important and arduous discharge of the executive authority; their number and selection depend only upon the king's pleasure; and each member of that council receives a summons or message for every attendance.

There is also, and of antient time hath been, a president of the council, who has precedence next after the lord chancellor and lord treasurer. This office was never granted but by letters-patent under the great seal durante bene placito, and is very antient; for John bishop of Norwich was president of the council anno 7 regis Johannis. Dormivit tamen hoc officium regnante magna Elizabetha. 4 Inst. 55.

Privy counsellors are made by the king's nomination, without either patent or grant; and, on taking the necessary oaths, they become immediately privy counsellors during the life of the king that chooses them, but subject to removal at his discretion. 1 Black. 230.

As to the qualifications of members to sit at this board: any natural born subject of England is capable of being a member of the privy council; taking the proper oaths for security of the government, and the test for security of the church. But, in order to prevent any persons under foreign attachments from insinuating themselves into his important trust, as happened in the reign of king William in many instances, it is enacted by the act of settlement, that no person born out of the dominions of the crown of England, unless born of English parents, even though naturalized by parliament, shall be capable of being of the privy council. 8 Stat. 12 & 13 Will. 3. c. 2.

The duty of a privy counsellor appears from the oath of office, which consists of seven articles: 1, to advise the king according to the best of his cunning and discretion; 2, to advise for the king's honour and the good of the public, without partiality through affection, love, meed, doubt, or dread; 3, to keep the king's counsel secret; 4, to avoid corruption; 5, to help and strengthen the execution of what shall be there resolved; 6, to withstand all persons who would attempt the contrary; and lastly, in general, 7, to observe, keep, and do all that a good and true counsellor ought to do to his sovereign lord. 4 Inst. 54.

The power of the privy council is to inquire into all offences against the government, and to commit the offenders to safe custody, in order to take their trial in some of the courts of law. But their jurisdiction herein is only to inquire, and not to punish, and the persons committed by them are intitled to their habeas corpus by statute 16 Car. I. c. 10. as much as if committed by an ordinary justice of the peace. And, by the same statute, the court of starchamber and the court of requests, both of which consisted of privy counsellors, were dissolved; and it was declared illegal for them to take cognizance of any matter of property, belonging to the subjects of this kingdom. But, in plantation or admiralty causes, which arise out of the jurisdiction of this kingdom; and in matters of lunacy or idiocy (3 P. Wms. 108), being a special flower of the prerogative; with regard to these, although they may eventually involve questions of extensive property, the privy council continue to have cognizance, being the court of appeal in such cases: or, rather, the appeal lies to the king's majesty himself in council.* Whenever also a question arises between two provinces in America or elsewhere, as concerning the extent of their charters and the like, the king in his council exercises original jurisdiction therein, upon the principles of feodal sovereignty. And so likewise when any person claims an island or a province, in the nature of a feodal principality, by grant from the king or his ancestors, the determination of that right belongs to his majesty in council: as was the case of the earl of Derby with regard to the Isle of Man in the reign of queen Elizabeth, and the earl of Cardigan and others, as representatives of the Duke of Montague, with relation to the island of St. Vincent in 1764. But from all the dominions of the crown, excepting Great Britain and Ireland, an appellate jurisdiction (in the last resort) is vested in the same tribunal; which usually exercises its judicial authority in a committee of the whole privy council, who hear the allegations and proofs, and make their report to his majesty in council, by whom the judgment is finally given.†

The privileges of privy counsellors, as such (abstracted from their honorary precedence,) consist principally in the security which the law has given them against attempts and conspiracies to destroy their lives. For, by statute 3 Hen. 8. c. 14. if any of the king's servants, of his household, conspire or imagine to take away the life of a privy counsellor, it is felony, though nothing be done upon it. The reason of making this statute, Sir Edward Coke tells us, (3 Inst. 58), was because such a conspiracy was, just before this parliament, made by some of King Henry the Seventh's household servants, and great mischief was like to have ensued thereupon. This extends only to the king's menial servants. But the st. 9 Ann. c. 16. goes farther, and enacts, that any person that shall unlawfully attempt to kill, or shall unlawfully assault, and strike, or wound, any privy counsellor in the execution of his office, shall be a felon without benefit of clergy. This statute was made upon the daring attempt of the Sieur Guiscard, who stabbed Mr. Harley, afterwards earl of Oxford, with a penknife, when under examination for high crimes in a committee of the privy council. 1 Black. 232.

The dissolution of the privy council depends upon the king's pleasure; and he may, whenever he thinks proper, discharge any particular member, or the whole of it, and appoint another. By the common law also it was dissolved ipso facto by the king's demise, as deriving all its authority from him. But now, to prevent the inconveniencies of having no council in being at the accession of a new prince, it is enacted by statute 6 Ann. c. 7. that "the privy council shall continue for six months after the demise of the crown, unless sooner determined by the successor."

PRIVY SEAL, (Privatum Sigillum,) is a seal which the king useth to such grants or things as pass the great seal. 2 Inst. 554.

First, they pass the privy signet, then the privy seal, and lastly, the great seal of England; and the clerks of the privy signet office write out such grants, patents, &c. as pass the sign manual, which, being transcribed and sealed with the signet, is a warrant to the privy seal, as the privy seal is warrant to the great seal. Wood's Inst. 457.

PRIVY VERDICT. See Verdict.

PRIZES. See Privateers.

PRO, is a preposition, signifying for, or in respect of a thing; as pro consilio, &c. Plowd. 412. Wood's Inst. 231.

PROBATE, in the laws of Canutus, was used as signifying, to claim a thing as a man's own. Leg. Canut. c. 44.

PROBATE OF TESTAMENTS, (probatio testamentorum) is the exhibiting and proving wills and testaments before the ecclesiastical judge: and if all the deceased's goods, chattels, and debts owing to him, were in the same diocese, then the bishop of the diocese hath the probate of the testament; but if the goods and chattels were dispersed in divers dioceses, so that there were any thing out of the diocese where the party lived, to make what is called bona notabilia, to the value of 5*l.* then the archbishop of Canterbury, or York, is the ordinary to make probate by his prerogative. Blount.

PROBATOR, an accuser, or approver, or one who undertakes to prove a crime charged upon another. Fleta, lib. 2. cap. 52. sec. 42. 44.

PROCEDENDO, is a writ which lieth where an action is removed from an inferior to a superior court, as the chancery, king's bench, or common pleas, by habeas corpus, certiorari, or writ of privilege; to send down the cause to the court from whence removed, to proceed on it, it not appearing to the higher court that the suggestion is sufficiently proved. *F. This writ of procedendo is called a procedendo in loquela. 1 Black. 353.

PROCEDENDO ON AID PRAYER. If a man pray in aid of the king, in a real action, and aid be granted, it shall be awarded that he sue to the king in chancery, and the justices in the common pleas shall stay until the writ of procedendo de loquela come to them: and if it appear to the judges by pleading, or shewing of the party, that the king hath interest in the land, or shall lose rent, &c. there the court ought to stay until they have from the king a procedendo in loquela: and then they may proceed in the plea, until they come to give judgment; when the justices ought not to proceed to judgment, without a writ for that purpose. New Nat. B. R. 342.

PROCEDENDO AD JUDICIUM, lies where the judges of any court delay the party, plaintiff or defendant, and will not give judgment in the cause, when they ought to do it. Wood's Inst. 570.

PROCESS, in civil causes, is the means of compelling a defendant to appear in court. This is sometimes called original process, being founded upon the original writ; and also to distinguish it from mesne or intermediate process, which issues, pending the suit, upon some collateral interlocutory matter, as to summon juries, witnesses, and the like (Finch, L. 436). Mesne process is also sometimes put in contradistinction to final process, or process of execution; and then it signifies all such process as intervenes between the beginning and end of a suit. 3 Black. 279.

PROCESS UPON AN INDICTMENT. The manner of issuing process, after indictment found, to bring in the accused to answer it, where the offender is not in custody, or hath not, in misdemesnors, been bound over to appear at the assises or sessions, is as follows;

The proper process on an indictment for any petit misdemesnor, or on a penal statute, is a writ of venire facias, which is in the nature of a summons, to cause the party to appear. And if by the return to such venire it appears that the party hath lands in the county whereby he may be distrained, then a distress infinite shall be issued from time to time till he appears. But if the sheriff returns that he hath no lands in his bailiwick, then (upon his non-appearance) a writ of capias shall issue, which commands the sheriff to take his body, and have him at the next assises; and if he cannot be taken upon the first capias, a second and a third shall issue, called an alias, and a pluries capias.

But, on indictments for treason or felony, a capias is the first process; and for treason or homicide, only one shall be allowed to issue, or two in the case of other felonies, by statute 25 Edw. 3. c. 14. though the usage is to issue only one in any felony; the provisions of this statute being in most cases found impracticable.

And so, in the case of misdemesnors, it is now the usual practice for any judge of the court of king's bench, upon certificate of an indictment found, to award a writ of capias immediately, in order to bring in the defendant. 4 Black. 318.

PROCESS, (obstructing the execution of). This is an offence against public justice, of a very high and presumptuous nature; but more particularly so, when it is th obstruction of an arrest upon criminal process. And it hath been holden, that he party opposing such arrest becomes hereby particeps criminis; that is, an accessary in felony, and a principal in treason. 4 Black. 129.

PROCESSION. In cathedral and conventual churches, the members had their stated processions, wherein they walked in heir most ornamental habits, with music, inging hymns, and other suitable solemnity: and, in every parish, there was a ustomary annual procession of the parish riest, the patron of the church, with the hief flag, or holy banner, and the other arishioners, to take a circuit round the imits of the parish or manor, and pray for blessing on the fruits of the earth; to which we owe our present custom of perambulation, which in most places is still alled processioning, and going in procession, though we have lost the order and levotion, as well as pomp and superstition f it. Cowell.

PROCESSUM CONTINUANDO, a writ for the continuance of process, after he death of the chief justice, or other justices in the commission of oyer and terminer. Reg. Orig. 128.

PROCHEIN AMY, (proximus amicus) is who sues as the next friend to a child in is nonage. 2 Inst. 261.

If no guardian is appointed by the father, &c. of an infant, the course of the courts of law hath been used to allow one of the officers of the court to be prochein my to the infant to sue (Terms de Ley. 2 Lil. Abr. 52). Or this prochein amy may n equity be any person who will undertake he infant's cause, and answer for costs. Black. 463.

PROCHEIN AVOIDANCE, is nothing but a power to present a minister to a church when it shall become void: as when one hath presented a clerk to a church, and hen grants the next avoidance to another. See Avoidance.

PROCLAMATION (proclamatio) is a notice publicly given of any thing, whereof he king thinks fit to advertise his subjects, and so it is used (7 Rich. 2. c. 6). And the subject is obliged, on pain of fine and imprisonment, to obey every proclamation legally made; and that though the thing prohibited were an offence before, for the proclamation is a circumstance which highly aggravates it; and on which alone the party disobeying may be punished. 12 Co. 74. Hob. 251.

PROCLAMATION OF COURTS, is used particularly in the beginning or calling of a court, and at the discharge or adjourning thereof, for the attendance of persons, and dispatch of business. 1 Lev. 63.

PROCLAMATION OF EXIGENTS. On awarding an exigent, in order to outlawry, a writ of proclamation issues to the sheriff of the county where the party dwells, to make three proclamations for defendant to yield himself, or be outlawed. Stat. 6 Hen. 8. c. 4. 31 Eliz. c. 3. 4. & 5. Wil. & Mar. c. 22. s. 4. 3 Black. 284. 314.

PROCLAMATION OF A FINE. When any fine of land is passed, proclamation is solemnly made thereof in the court of common pleas where levied, after ingrossing it; and transcripts are also sent to the justices of assise, and justices of the peace of the county in which the lands lie, to be openly proclaimed there. 1 R. 3. c. 7. 3 Black. Com. 352.

PROCLAMATION OF NUISANCES. By statute, proclamation is to be made against nuisances, and for the removal of them, &c. 12 R. 2. c. 13.

PROCLAMATION OF REBELLION, is a writ whereby a man not appearing upon a subpœna, or an attachment in the chancery, is deputed and declared a rebel, if he render not himself by a day assigned. See Commission of Rebellion. 3 Black. 444.

PROCLAMATION OF RECUSANTS. There is a proclamation of recusants, by which they shall be convicted, on non-appearance at the assises. 29 Eliz. c. 6. 3 Jac. 1. c. 4 & 5.

PRO CONFESSO, is where a bill is exhibited in chancery, to which defendant appears, and is afterwards by contempt for not answering; when the matter contained in the bill shall be taken as if it were confessed by defendant. Terms de Ley.

PROCTOR, (procurator) is he who undertakes to manage another man's cause, in any court of the civil or ecclesiastical law, for his fee. A proctor is not to practice, if a popish recusant (3 Jac. 1. c. 5). Nor to act as justice of peace. 5 Geo. 2. c. 18. 3 Black. 25.

PROCTORS OF THE CLERGY, (procuratores cleri) are those who are chosen and appointed to appear for cathedral or other collegiate churches; as also for the common clergy of every diocese, to sit in the convocation house in the time of parliament.

PROCONSULES, were those who were called justices in eyre, or justiciarii errantes, in England. Cowell.

PROCURATION MONEY. By 12 Ann, s. 2. c. 16. if any scrivener or broker shall take more than 5*s.* per cent. procuration money, or more than 12*d.* for making a bond, he shall forfeit 20*l.* with costs, and shall suffer imprisonment for half a year.

And by 17 Geo. 3. c. 26. if any person shall take more than 10*s.* per cent. for procuring any money to be advanced on any life annuity, he may be indicted as for a misdemeanor, and punished by fine and imprisonment.

PROCURATIONS, (procurationes) certain sums of money which parish priests pay yearly to the bishop or archdeacon, ratione visitationis.

These are also called proxies; and it is said there are three sorts of procurations or proxies; ratione visitationis, consuetudinis, & pacti; and that the first is of ecclesiastical cognisance, but the two last are triable at law. Hardr. 180.

There is also an indorsement of bills and notes by procuration; that is, as proxy for another.

PROCURATOR, is one who hath a charge committed to him by any person; in which general signification it hath been applied to a vicar or lieutenant, who acts instead of another; and we read of procurator regni, and procurator reipublicæ, which is a public magistrate: also proxies of lords in parliament are in our law books called procuratores; the bishops are sometimes termed procuratores ecclesiarum; and the advocates of religious houses, who were to solicit the interests, and plead the causes of the societies, were denominated procuratores monasteriî; and from this word comes the common word proctor. It is likewise used for him who gathers the fruits of a benefice for another man; and procuracy for the writing or instrument whereby he is authorised. 3 R. 2. c. 3.

PROCURATORES ECCLESIÆ PAROCHIALIS, the churchwardens. Par. Antiq. 562.

PROCURATORIUM, the procuratory, or instrument by which any person or community did constitute or delegate their proctors, to represent them in any judicial court or cause. Cowell.

PRODES HOMINES, a title often given in our old books to the barons of the realm, or other military tenants. Cowell.

PRODITORIE, (traitorously.) A word necessary to indictments of treason. 2 Hawk. P. C. 224.

PROFANENESS, (qu. procul à fano) is a disrespect paid to the name of God, and to things and persons consecrated to him. Wood's Inst. 396. See Blasphemy.

PROFER, (profrum, vel proferum, from the Fr. proferor, i. e. producere) is the time appointed for the accounts of officers in the exchequer, which is twice in the year. Stat. 51. H. 3. st. 5.

If on the conclusion of the sheriff's accounts, and after allowances and discharges had by him, it appears that there is a surplusage, or that he is charged with more than he could receive, he hath his profers paid or allowed him again. Hale's Sher. Account. 52.

There is a writ, De attornato vicecomitis pro profro faciendo. Reg. Orig. 139. Brit. c. 28. and Fleta, lib. 1. c. 38.

PROFER THE HALF-MARK, that is to offer or tender the half-mark. See Half-mark.

PROFERT IN CURIA, is where the plaintiff in an action declares on a deed, or defendant pleads a deed, he must do it with a profert in curia: that is, in these words: "And the said A. B. brings here into court the writing obligatory aforesaid, which testifies the debt aforesaid, in the form aforesaid, the date whereof is the day and year above-mentioned," to the end that the other party may, at his own charges, have a copy of it, and until then he is not obliged to answer it, but may demur. 2 Lil. Abr. 392.

PROFESSION, (professio) the entering into any religious order, &c. This entering into religion, whereby a man is shut up from all the common offices of life, is termed a civil death. 1 Black. 132, &c.

PROFITS. By a general devise of the profits of lands, the lands usually pass; unless there are other words to shew the intention of the testator to be otherwise. Moor, 753. 758. 2 Nels. Abr. 1051. Dyer, 210.

PROFITS OF COURTS. The profits arising from the king's ordinary courts of justice, make a branch of his revenue. And these consist not only in fines imposed upon offenders, forfeitures of recognizances, and amercements levied on defaulters; but also in certain fees due to the crown in a variety of legal matters, as, for setting the great seal to charters, original writs, and other forensic proceedings; and for permitting fines to be levied of lands, in order to bar entails, or otherwise to insure titles. 1 Black. 280. See King's Revenue.

PROHIBITION, (prohibitio) is a writ to forbid any court to proceed in any cause there depending, on suggestion that the cognizance thereof belongeth not to the court. F. N. B. 39.

But the awarding a prohibition is a matter discretionary; that is, that from the circumstances of the case, the superior courts are at liberty to exercise a legal discretion therein, but not an arbitrary one, in refusing prohibition, where in such like cases they have been granted, or where by law they ought to be granted. Winch, 78.

PROHIBITIO DE VASTO DIRECTA PARTI, a judicial writ usually directed to the tenant, prohibiting him from making waste on the land in controversy, during the suit. Reg. Judic. 21.

PRO INDIVISO; for undivided, is taken in law for a possession or occupation of lands or tenements belonging to two or more persons, whereof none knows his several portion, as coparceners before partition. Bract. lib. 5.

PROLES, (Lat.) In English progeny, are such issue as proceed from a lawful marriage; though, if the word be used at large, it may denote others. Cowell.

PROLOCUTOR OF THE CONVOCATION-HOUSE, (prolocutor domus consocationis) an officer chosen by ecclesiastical persons, publicly assembled in convocation by virtue of the king's writ at every parliament.

PROMISE, (promissio), is where, on a valuable consideration, persons bind themselves by words to perform such a thing as is agreed on; upon which an action may be brought: and a promise against a promise made at one and the same time, is a sufficient ground for an action. Cro. Eliz. 543. 709. 848.

But a consideration of some sort or other is so absolutely necessary to the forming of a promise or contract, that a nudum pactum, or agreement to do or pay any thing on one side, without any compensation on the other, is totally void in law: and a man cannot be compelled to perform it (Dr. & St. d. 2. c. 24). As if one man promises to give another 100*l.* here there is nothing contracted for or given on the one side, and therefore there is nothing binding on the other. And, however a man may or may not be bound to perform it, in honour or conscience, which the municipal laws do not take upon them to decide; certainly those municipal laws will not compel the execution of what he had no visible inducement to engage for: and therefore our law has adopted the maxim of the civil law, that ex nudo pacto non oritur actio. But any degree of reciprocity will prevent the pact from being nude: nay, even if the thing be founded on a prior moral obligation, (as a promise to pay a just debt, though barred by the statute of limitations) it is no longer nudum pactum.* And as this rule was principally established, to avoid the inconvenience that would arise from setting up mere verbal promises, for which no good reason could be assigned, it therefore does not hold in some cases, where such promise is authentically proved by written documents. For if a man enters into a voluntary bond, or gives a promissory note, he shall not be allowed to aver the want of a consideration in order to evade the payment: for every bond, from the solemnity of the instrument, and every note, from the subscription of the drawer, carries with it an internal evidence of a good consideration. Courts of justice will therefore support them both, as against the contractor himself; but not to the prejudice of creditors, or strangers to the contract. 2 Black. 446.

PROMISSORY NOTES, or notes of hand, are a plain and direct engagement, in writing, to pay a sum specified at a time therein limited to a person therein named, or sometimes to his order, or often to the bearer at large. 2 Black. 467. See Bill of Exchange.

PROMOTERS, (promotores) are those who in popular and penal actions prosecute offenders, in their name and the king's, as informers do, having part of the fines or penalties for their reward. 3 Inst. 191.

PROMULGE A LAW, (promulgare legem) is to declare, publish, and proclaim a law to the people. 1 Black. 45.

PRONOTARY. See Prothonotary.

PROOF. See Evidence and Witnesses.

PRO PARTIBUS LIBERANDIS, an ancient writ for partition of lands between co-heirs. Reg. Orig. 316.

PROPERTY (proprietas.) One of the absolute rights inherent in every Englishman, is that of property: which consists in the free use, enjoyment, and disposal of all his acquisitions, without any controul or diminution, save only by the laws of the land. The original of private property is probably founded in nature: but certainly the modifications under which we at present find it, the method of conserving it in the present owner, and of translating it from man to man, are entirely derived from society; and are some of those civil advantages, in exchange for which every individual has resigned a part of his natural liberty. The laws of England are therefore, in point of honour and justice, extremely watchful in ascertaining and protecting this right. Upon this principle the great charter has declared that no freeman shall be disseised or divested of his freehold, or of his liberties, or free customs, but by the judgment of his peers, or by the law of the land. And by a variety of antient statutes it is enacted, that no man's lands or goods shall be seised into the king's hands, against the great charter, and the law of the land; and that no man shall be disinherited, nor put out of his franchises or freehold, unless he be duly brought to answer, and be forejudged by course of law; and if any thing be done to the contrary, it shall be redressed, and holden for none. 1 Black. 139.

* Where a man is under a moral obligation which no court of law or equity can enforce, and promises, the honesty and rectitude of the thing is a consideration. As if a man promise to pay a just debt, the recovery of which is barred by the statute of limitations; or if a man, after he comes of age, promise to pay a meritorious debt contracted during his minority, but not for necessaries; or if a bankrupt, in affluent circumstances after his certificate, promise to pay the whole of his debts; or if a man promise to perform a secret trust, or a trust void for want of being in writing by the statute of frauds. In such, and many other instances, though the promise gives a compulsory remedy where there was none before, either in law or equity, yet as the promise is only to do what an honest man ought to do, the ties of conscience upon an upright man are a sufficient consideration. (Ld. Mansfield, 1 Comp. 290.) But if a bankrupt, after obtaining his certificate, promise to pay a prior debt when he is able, it has been held that this is a conditional promise, and that the plaintiff must prove the defendant's ability to pay. 2 Hen. Bl. 116.

PROPRIETATE PROBANDA, is a writ to the sheriff to inquire of the property of goods distrained, when defendant claimeth property on a replevin sued; for the sheriff cannot proceed till that matter is decided by writ; and if it is found for plaintiff, then the sheriff is to make replevin; but if for defendant, he can proceed no further. F. N. B. 77. Finch 316. 450. Co. Litt. 145. b.

PRO RATA, is as much as pro proportione; as joint-tenants, &c. are to pay pro rata, i. e. in proportion to their estates. 16 Car. 2. c. 6.

PROROGUE, (Prorogare,) to prolong or put off to another day: thus, prorogation of parliament, and adjournment, were anciently used as synonymous; but of late there hath been a distinction, a prorogation making a session, and an adjournment only a continuance. 1 Black. 186.

PROTECTION, (Protectio,) is that benefit and safety which every subject hath by the king's laws; every man who is a loyal subject is in the king's protection; and in this sense to be out of the king's protection, is to be excluded the benefit of the law. 25 Ed. 3. c. 22.

PROTECTION OF AMBASSADORS. See Ambassadors.

PROTECTION OF CHILDREN. See Parent and Child.

PROTECTION OF PARLIAMENT. See Privilege.

PROTECTION OF THE COURTS. See Privilege.

PROTECTIONIBUS. The statute of allowing a challenge to be entered against a protection, &c. 33 Ed. 1. st. 1.

PROTEST, (Protestaria,) hath two applications; one by way of caution, to call witnesses (as it were) or openly affirm that he doth either not at all, or but conditionally, yield his consent to any act, or unto the proceeding of a judge in a court, wherein his jurisdiction is doubtful, or to answer on his oath further than by law he is bound. See Plowden 676. and Reg. Orig. 306.

There is also amongst mariners a protest made on oath before the chief magistrate or notary public of any distant part, of the damages and circumstances of delay during a ship's voyage.

There is also a protest on Bills of Exchange.

Each peer of the realm has also a right, by leave of the house, when a vote passes contrary to his sentiments, to enter his dissent on the journals of the house, with the reasons for such dissent; which is usually stiled his protest. 1 Black. 168.

PROTESTATION, (Protestatio,) is a defence or safeguard to the party who makes it, from being concluded by the action he is about to do, that issue cannot be joined by it. Plowd. 276. whereof see Reg. Orig. 326.

It is a form of pleading when one does not directly affirm or deny any thing alleged by another, or which he himself alledgeth. Cowell. For it is frequently expedient to plead in such a manner, as to avoid any implied admission of a fact, which cannot with propriety or safety be positively affirmed or denied. And this may be done by what is called a protestation; whereby the party interposes an oblique allegation or denial of some fact, protesting (by the gerund, protestando) that such a matter does or does not exist; and at the same time avoiding a direct affirmation or denial. Sir Edward Coke hath defined a protestation (in the pithy dialect of that age) to be "an exclusion of a conclusion." For the use of it is, to save the party from being concluded with respect to some fact or circumstance, which cannot be directly affirmed or denied without falling into duplicity of pleading; and which yet, if he did not thus enter his protest, he might be deemed to have tacitly waived or admitted. Thus, if a defendant, by way of inducement to the point of his defence, alledges (among other matters) a particular mode of seisin or tenure, which the plaintiff is unwilling to admit, and yet desires to take issue on the principal point of the defence, he must deny the seisin or tenure by way of protestation, and then traverse the defensive matter. So, if an award be set forth by the plaintiff, and he can assign a breach in one part of it, (viz. the non-payment of a sum of money,) and yet is afraid to admit the performance of the rest of the award, or to aver in general a non-performance of any part of it, lest something should appear to have been performed; he may save to himself any advantage he might hereafter make of the general non-performance, by alledging that by protestation; and plead only the non-payment of the money.

PROTESTANT CHILDREN. The lord chancellor may make an order on Popish and Jewish parents refusing to allow their protestant children a maintenance. 11 & 12 Will. 3. c. 4. sect. 7. 1 Ann. st. 1. c.

PROTESTANT DISSENTERS. See Dissenters.

PROTESTANT SUCCESSION. See King, Treason.

PROTHONOTARY, (Protonotarius, vel Primus Notarius,) is a chief officer or clerk of the Common Pleas and King's Bench; and for the first court there are three prothonotaries, and the other hath but one. Cowell.

PROVINCE (Provincia,) the ecclesiastical division of England is primarily divided into two provinces, Canterbury and York; a province is the circuit of an archbishop's jurisdiction, and each contains divers dioceses or sees of suffragan bishops.

PROVINCIAL, (Provincialis,) of or belonging to a province; also a chief governor of a religious order. Cowell.

PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENTS. See Plantations.

PROVISION, (Provisio,) is used with us as in the canon law for providing a bishop, or any other person, an ecclesiastical living. Cowell.

PROVISIONS. Acts to restrain the exorbitant abuse of arbitrary power made in the parliament at Oxford 1258. Cowell.

PROVISIONS (selling unwholesome) is an offence against public health. To prevent which, the statute 51 Hen. 3. st. 6. and the ordinance for bakers, c. 7. prohibit the sale of corrupted wine, contagious or unwholesome flesh, or flesh that is bought of a Jew; under pain of amercement for the first offence, pillory for the second, fine and imprisonment for the third, and abjuration of the town for the fourth. And by 12 Car. 2. c. 25. s. 11. any brewing or adulteration of wine is punished with the forfeiture of 100*l.* if done by the wholesale merchant; and 40*l.* if done by the vintner or retail trader. And the selling corrupt and unwholesome provisions is generally a misdemeanor, for which the party offending may at common law be indicted, fined, and imprisoned.

PROVISO, is a condition inserted in any deed, on the performance whereof the validity of the deed depends; or it is sometimes only a covenant, secundum subjectam materiam. 2 Rep. 70. 2 Lill. Abr. 399.

PROVISO, Trial by. When the general day for the trial of causes is fixed, the plaintiff or his attorney must bring down the record to the assises, and enter it with the proper officer, in order to its being called on in course. If it be not so entered, it cannot be tried; therefore it is in the plaintiff's breast to delay any trial by not carrying down the record: unless the defendant, being fearful of such neglect in the plaintiff, and willing to discharge himself from the action, will himself undertake to bring on the trial, giving proper notice to the plaintiff. Which proceeding is called the trial by proviso; by reason of the clause then inserted in the sheriff's venire, viz. "proviso, provided, that if two writs come to your hands, (that is, one from the plaintiff and another from the defendant,) you shall execute only one of them." But this practice begins to be disused, since the statute 14 Geo. II. c. 17. which enacts, that if, after issue joined, the cause is not carried down to be tried according to the course of the court, the plaintiff shall be esteemed to be nonsuited, and judgment shall be given for the defendant as in case of a nonsuit. In case the plaintiff intends to try the cause, he is bound to give the defendant (if he lives within forty miles of London) eight days notice of trial; and, if he lives at a greater distance, then fourteen days notice, in order to prevent surprize: and if the plaintiff then changes his mind, and does not countermand the notice six days before the trial, he shall be liable to pay costs to the defendant for not proceeding to trial, by the same last-mentioned statute. The defendant, however, or plaintiff, may, upon good cause shewn to the court above, as upon absence or sickness of a material witness, obtain leave upon motion to defer the trial of the cause till the next assises. 3 Black. 357.

PROVISOR, was one who sued to the court of Rome for a provision, which offence was made a premunire. See Præmunire.

PROVISOR MONASTERII, the treasurer or steward of a religious house. Cowell.

PROVISOR VICTUALIUM. The king's purveyor. Cowell.

PROVOCATION. See Homicide.

PROVOST MARSHAL. An officer of the king's navy, who hath the charge of prisoners taken at sea. Cowell.

PROXIES, are persons appointed by others to represent them.

And every peer of the realm called to parliament, hath the privilege of constituting a proxy to vote for him in his absence on a lawful occasion; but such proxies are to be entered in person.

Proxies are also annual payments made by parochial clergy to the bishop, &c. on visitations. See Procurations.

PRYK, a kind of service or tenure; and, according to Blount, an old-fashioned spur, with one point only, which the tenant, holding land by this tenure, was to find for the king. Cowell. Blount.

PUBERTY, (Pubertas.) The ripe age of fourteen in men and twelve in women, when they are fit for marriage.

PUBLICATION. When all the witnesses in a court of equity are examined, then, and not before, the depositions may be published, by a rule to pass publication, after which, and not before, they are open for the inspection of all the parties, and copies may be taken of them.

There is also a publication of a will, which is a solemnity requisite to the making thereof, by declaring it to be the last will of the testator, in the presence of such a number of witnesses. 3 Nels. Abr. 23.

PUBLIC ACT of Parliament. A general or a public act is an universal rule, that regards the whole community; and of this the courts of law are bound to take notice judicially and ex officio, without the statute being particularly pleaded, or formally set forth by the party who claims an advantage under it. 1 Black. 86.

PUERITIA. See Puberty.

PUIS DARREIN CONTINUANCE, is a plea of new matter, pending an action, post ultimam continuationem, or since the last adjournment. Cowell. 3 Black. 316.

PUISNE, (F. Puisne.) Younger, puny, born after, junior. See Mulier. So the several judges and barons, not chiefs, are called puisne judges, puisne barons. Cowell. 3 Black. 40, 41, 44.

PULSATOR. The plaintiff or actor; and pulsare signifies to accuse any one. Leg. Hen. 1 c. 26.

PUNISHMENT, (Pœna.) The penalty for transgressing the law. The punishments of offences are many and various, adapted to the several degrees of crimes, and the countries wherein committed; such as beheading, hanging, imprisonment, fine, amercement, &c. 4 Black. 7.

PUR AUTER VIE, is where lands, &c. are held for another's life. 2 Black. 120. See Occupant.

PURCHASE, (Acquisitum, perquisitum, purchasium,) signifies the buying or acquisition of lands, or tenements, with money, or by deed or agreement; and not obtaining it by descent or hereditary right; and conjunctum perquisitum is where two or more persons join in the purchase. Litt. 12. Reg. Orig. 143.

One cometh in by purchase when he comes to lands by legal conveyance, and he hath a lawful estate: and a purchase is always intended by title, either from some consideration, or by gift; (for a gift is in law a purchase,) whereas descent from an ancestor cometh of course by act of law; also all contracts are comprehended under this word purchase. Co. Lit. 18. Doct. and Stud. c. 24.

Purchase, in opposition to descent, is taken largely; if an estate comes to a man from his ancestors without writing, that is a descent; but where a person takes any thing from an ancestor or others, by deed, will, or gift, and not as heir at law, that is a purchase. 2 Lill. Abr. 403.

When an estate doth originally vest in the heir, and never was nor could be in the ancestor, such heir shall take by way of purchase; but when the thing might have vested in his ancestor, though it be first in the heir, and not in him at all, the heir shall have it in nature of descent. 1 Rep. 95. 106.

PURGATION. See Ordeal.

PURIFICATIO BEATÆ MARIÆ VIRGINIS. The Purification of the Blessed Virgin Mary is one of the general returns of writs, viz. the third in Hilary term.

PURLIEU-MEN, are those who have ground within the purlieu, and being able to dispend forty shillings a year freehold; who, on these two points, are licensed to hunt in their own purlieus, observing what is required. Mainw. For. Laws 151, 157, 180, 186.

PURLUE, or PURLIEU, (from the Fr. pur, i. e. purus, and lieu, locus,) is all that ground near a forest, which being added to the ancient forests by king Hen. 2. Rich. 1. and king John, was afterwards disafforested and severed by the Charta de Foresta, and the perambulations and grants thereon by Hen. 3. so that it becomes purlue, viz. pure and free from the laws and ordinances of the forest. Mainw. For. Laws. par. 2. c. 20.

PURPARTY, (Fr. pour part, i. e. pro parte,) is that part or share of an estate, first held in common by parceners, which is by partition allotted to any of them. Old Nat. Br. 11. See Pro indiviso.

PURPRESTURE, (Pourprestura, from the Fr. pourprist, an inclosure,) is when any thing is done to the nuisance of the king's demesnes, or the highways, &c. by inclosure or buildings, endeavouring to make that private which ought to be public. Glanv. lib. 9. c. 11. Co. Lit. 38. 272. And when a man takes to himself, or incroaches any thing which he ought not, it is a purpresture. Kitch. 10. 2 Inst. 38. See Pourpresture.

PURSE. A certain quantity of money, containing 500 dollars, or 125*l.* in Turkey. Merch. Dict.

PURVEYANCE. A right formerly enjoyed by the crown of buying up provisions and other necessaries, by the intervention of the king's purveyors, for the use of his royal household, at an appraised valuation, in preference to all others, and even without consent of the owner; and also of forcibly impressing the carriages and horses of the subject, to do the king's business on the public roads, in the conveyance of timber, baggage, and the like, however inconvenient to the proprietor, upon paying him a settled price. 4 Inst. 273.

Purveyance is however now taken away by the statute 12 Car. 2. c. 24. s. 12.

PURVIEW, (Fr. Pourveu, a patent or grant,) is the body, or that part of an act of parliament which begins with, Be it enacted, &c. The statute 3 Hen. 7. stands upon a preamble and purview. 2 Inst. 403. 12 Rep. 20.

PUTAGE, (Putagium, Fornicatio ex parte fœminæ, quod vox nulla Latina expremit, quasi puttam agere: from the Fr. putain, or the Italian putta, i. e. meretrix) fornication.

PUTATIVUS, Putative, reputed, or commonly esteemed, in opposition to notorious and unquestionable. See Bastard.

PUTTING IN FEAR. See Larceny and Robbery.

PUTURA, (q. Potura.) A custom claimed by keepers in forests, and sometimes by bailiffs of hundreds, to take man's meat, horse meat, and dog's meat, of the tenants and inhabitants within the perambulation of the forest, hundred, &c. turned into the payment of money by each tenant.

PYHER, or PYCAR. A small ship or herring boat. 31 Ed. 3. c. 2.

Q

QUADRAGESIMA. The fortieth part. Also the time of Lent, from our Saviour's forty day's fast. Lit. Dict.

And Quadragesima Sunday is the first Sunday in Lent, so called because about the fortieth day before Easter. Blount.

QUADRAGESIMALIA. In former days it was the custom for people to visit their mother church on Midlent-Sunday, and their offerings were then called Quadragesimalia. Cowell. Blount.

QUADRANS. A fourth part of a penny. Ibid.

QUADRANTATA TERRÆ. The fourth part of an acre. Ibid.

QUADRIVIUM. The centre of four ways, where four roads meet and cross each other. Ibid.

QUÆ EST EADEM. An averment in pleading, is used to supply the want of a traverse. 2 Lil. Abr. 405. 1 Lev. 241. Lutw. 1457.

QUÆ PLURA. A writ which lay where an inquisition had been taken by an escheator of lands, &c. that a man died seised of, and all the land was supposed not to be found by the office or inquisition; this writ was therefore to inquire of what other lands or tenements the party died seised; but it is now useless, since the taking away the court of wards and offices post mortem. 12 Car. 2. c. 24. Reg. Orig. 293.

QUÆRE, or QUERE, is where any point of law, or matter in debate, is doubted, as not having sufficient authority to maintain it. 2. Lil. Abr. 406.

QUÆRENS NON INVENIT PLEGIUM. A return made by the sheriff, on a writ directed to him with this clause, viz. Si A. fecerit B. securum de clamore suo prosequendo, &c. F. N. B. 38.

QUÆ SERVITIA. See Per quæ servitia.

QUÆSTA. An indulgence or remission of penance exposed to sale by the Pope. Cowell.

QUÆSTUS. Is that which a man hath by purchase, as hæreditas is what he hath by descent. Ibid.

QUAKERS. A religious sect in civil causes, who, where an oath is required, are permitted to make a solemn affirmation or declaration, declaring in the presence of God the truth, &c. But they are not capable of being witnesses in a criminal cause. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 34. Unless they are sworn like others, for an affirmation is not in its nature an oath.

Thus, on the affirmation of a Quaker, the court will not grant an attachment for non-performance of an award. 1 Strange 444. Nor security for the peace. Ibid 527. Nor a rule for an information. 2 Strange 856, 872, 946.

And by 22 Geo. 2. c. 46. s. 30. an affirmation shall be allowed in all cases except criminal, where by any act of parliament an oath is required, though no provision be therein contained for admitting a Quaker to make his affirmation.

If Quakers refuse to pay tithes or church rates, justices of peace are to levy them, with costs, when the arrears exceed not 10*l.* 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 34. s. 4. 1 Geo. 1. c. 6.

QUALE JUS. A judicial writ which was brought where a man of religion had judgment to recover land, before execution was made of the judgment; it went forth to the escheator between judgment and execution, to inquire whether the religious person had right to recover, or the judgment were obtained by collusion between the parties, to the intent that the lord might not be defrauded. Reg. Judic. 8, 16, 46. Stat. Westm. 2. c. 32.

QUALIFIED (or base) FEE. Is such a one as hath a qualification subjoined thereto, and which must be determined whenever the qualification annexed to it is at an end. As, in the case of a grant to A. and his heirs, tenants of the manor of Dale; in this instance, whenever the heirs of A. cease to be tenants of that manor, the grant is entirely defeated. So when Hen. 6. granted to John Talbot, lord of the manor of Kingstone-Lisle, in Berks, that he and his heirs, lords of the said manor, should be peers of the realm, by the title of Barons of Lisle. Here John Talbot had a base or qualified fee in that dignity; and the instant he or his heirs quitted the seigniory of this manor, the dignity was at an end. Co. Lit. 27. 2 Black. Com. 109.

This estate is a fee, because by possibility it may endure for ever in a man and his heirs; yet, as that duration depends on the concurrence of collateral circumstances, which qualify and debase the purity of the donation, it is therefore a qualified or base fee. 2 Black. Com. 109.

QUALIFIED PROPERTY. See Bailment.

QUAMDIU SE BENE GESSERIT. Is a clause often inserted in letters patent of the grant of offices, that the party shall hold the same so long as he behaves himself well. 4 Inst. 117.

QUANTUM MERUIT. A count in a declaration, averring, How much he has deserved.

And if a man retains any person to do work or other thing for him, although there be not any certain agreement, he shall pay for the same, on the quantum meruit. 3 Black. 161.

QUANTUM VALEBAT, is where goods and wares sold are delivered by a tradesman at no certain price, or to be paid for them, as much as they are worth in general; then quantum valebat lies.

QUARE CLAUSUM FREGIT. Before the statute 19 Hen. 7. a. 9. giving the process of capias in all actions on the case, a practice had been introduced of commencing the suit by bringing an original writ of trespass quare clausum fregit, for breaking the plaintiff's close, vi et armis; which, by the old common law, subjected the defendant's person to be arrested by writ of capias: and then afterwards, by connivance of the court, the plaintiff might proceed to prosecute for any other less forcible injury. This practice (through custom rather than necessity, and for saving some trouble and expence, in suing out a special original adapted to the particular injury) still continues in almost all cases, except in actions of debt. 3 Black. 281.

QUARE CUM. General words used in original writs, &c. See Original.

QUARE EJECIT INFRA TERMINUM, is a writ which lies for lessee, where he is cast out of his farm before his term is expired, against a feoffee of the lands, or the lessor who ejects him; and the effect of it is to recover his term again, and damages. Reg. Orig. 227. F. N. B. 197. New Nat. Br. 459. See Ejectment.

QUARE IMPEDIT, is a writ lying for him who hath purchased an advowson, against a person who disturbs him in his right of advowson by presenting a clerk thereto, when the church is void. F. N. B. 32. Stat. Westm. 2. c. 5.

QUARE INCUMBRAVIT. A writ which lieth against the bishop, who within six months after the vacation of a benefice, confers it on his clerk, whilst two others are contending at law for the right of presentation. Reg. Orig. 32.

QUARE NON ADMISIT, is a writ which lies against a bishop where a man hath recovered his advowson, or presentation in a writ of right of advowson, or in quare impedit, or other action, and the bishop refuses to admit his clerk, on pretence of lapse, &c. it is requisite in the writ to mention the recovery; and it is to be brought in the county where the refusal was. F. N. B. 47. 7 Rep. Dyer 40.

QUARE NON PERMITTIT, is mentioned as an ancient writ which lieth for one who hath a right to present to a church for a turn, against the proprietary. Fleta, lib. 5, cap. 6.

QUARENTINE, or QUARENTAINE, (Quarentina,) is a benefit allowed by law to the widow of a man dying seised of lands, whereby she may challenge to continue in his capital messuage, or chief mansion-house, (not being a castle,) by the space of forty days after his decease, in order to the assignment of her dower, &c. And if the heir, or any other, eject her, she may bring the writ de quarentena habenda; but the widow shall not have meat, drink, &c. though if there be no provision in the house, according to Fitzherbert, she may kill things for her provision. Magna Charta, c. 7. Bract. lib. 2. c. 40. F. N. B. 161. See 2 Black. Com. 135.

QUARENTINE, is also the term of forty days wherein any persons coming from foreign parts infected with the plague, are not permitted to land or come on shore, until so many days are expired. 4 Black. 162.

QUAYS. See Ports.

QUEEN, (Lat. Regina, Sax. Cwen, i. e. Uxor, a wife, sed propter excellentiam, the wife of the king.) In our law the queen of England is either queen regent, queen consort, or queen dowager. The queen regent, regnant, or sovereign, is she who holds the crown in her own right; as the first (and perhaps the second) queen Mary, queen Elizabeth, and queen Anne; and such a one has the same powers, prerogatives, rights, dignities, and duties, as if she had been a king. This is expressly declared by stat. 1 Mary 1. stat. 3. c. 1. But the queen consort is the wife of the reigning king; and she, by virtue of her marriage, is participant of divers prerogatives above other women. Finch. L. 86.

And, first, she is a public person, exempt and distinct from the king, and not, like other married women, so closely connected as to have lost all legal or separate existence so long as the marriage continues. For the queen is of ability to purchase lands, and to convey them, to make leases, to grant copyholds, and to do other acts of ownership, without the concurrence of her lord, which no other married woman can do (6 Rep. 23,) a privilege as old as the Saxon æra. She is also capable of taking a grant from the king, which no other wife is from her husband. The queen of England hath separate courts and offices distinct from the king's, not only in matters of ceremony, but even of law; and her attorney and solicitor-general are entitled to a place within the bar of his majesty's courts, together with the king's counsel. She may likewise sue and be sued alone, without joining her husband. She may also have a separate property in goods as well as lands, and has a right to dispose of them by will. In short, she is in all legal proceedings looked upon as a feme sole, and not as a feme covert; as a single, not as a married woman. For which the reason given by Sir Edward Coke is this: because the wisdom of the common law would not have the king (whose continual care and study is for the public, and circa ardua regni) to be troubled and disquieted on account of his wife's domestic affairs; and therefore it vests in the queen a power of transacting her own concerns, without the intervention of the king, as if she was an unmarried woman.

The queen hath also many exemptions, and minute prerogatives. For instance: she pays no toll, nor is she liable to any amercement in any court. But in general, unless where the law has expressly declared her exempted, she is upon the same footing with other subjects, being to all intents and purposes the king's subject, and not his equal, in like manner as in the imperial law.

The queen hath also some pecuniary advantages, which form her a distinct revenue: as, in the first place, she is entitled to an ancient perquisite called queen-gold, or aurum reginæ; which is a royal revenue, belonging to every queen consort during her marriage with the king, and due from every person who hath made a voluntary offering or fine to the king, amounting to ten marks or upwards, for and in consideration of any privileges, grants, licences, pardons, or other matter of royal favour conferred upon him by the king; and it is due in the proportion of one tenth part more, over and above the entire offering or fine made to the king; and becomes an actual debt of record to the queen's majesty by the mere recording of the fine. As, if an hundred marks of silver be given to the king for liberty to take in mortmain, or to have a fair, market, park, chase, or free warren: there the queen is entitled to ten marks in silver, or (what was formerly an equivalent denomination) to one mark in gold, by the name of queen-gold, or aurum reginæ. But no such payment is due for any aids or subsidies granted to the king in parliament or convocation; nor for fines imposed by courts on offenders, against their will; nor for voluntary presents to the king, without any consideration moving from him to the subject, nor for any sale or contract whereby the present revenues or possessions of the crown are granted away or diminished.

The collecting of this duty of queen-gold seems to have been much neglected after the accession of the Tudor family; and there being no queen consort afterwards till the accession of James I. a period of near sixty years, its very nature and quantity became then a matter of doubt; and being referred by the king to the chief justices and chief baron, their report of it was so very unfavourable that his consort queen Anne (though she claimed it) yet never thought proper to exact it.

Another ancient perquisite belonging to the queen consort, mentioned by all old writers, and therefore only worth notice, is this: that on the taking of a whale on the coasts, which is a royal fish, it shall be divided between the king and queen; the head only being the king's property, and the tail of it the queen's. De sturgione observetur, quod rex illum habebit integrum: de balena vero sufficit, si rex habeat caput, et regina caudam.

Though the queen is in all respects a subject, yet, in point of the security of her life and person, she is put on the same footing with the king. It is equally treason (by the statute 25 Edw. III.) to compass or imagine the death of our lady the king's companion, as of the king himself; and to violate, or defile the queen consort, amounts to the same high crime, as well in the person committing the fact, as in the queen herself, if consenting. 1 Black. 222. But the stat. 25 Edw. III. which makes it treason to violate the queen, does not extend to a queen-dowager. 2 Inst. 50.

Ann Boleyn was convicted of high treason in the court of the lord high steward. One of the charges against this unhappy queen was, that she had said, "that the king never had had her heart;" a declaration, if made, in which there was probably more truth than discretion; but this was adjudged to be a slander of her own issue, and therefore high treason, according to a statute which had been passed about two years before for her honour and protection. Harg. St. Tr. 11 vol. p. 10.

QUEEN-DOWAGER. See Queen.

QUEEN-GOLD, (Aurum Reginæ,) is a royal duty or revenue formerly belonging to every queen of England, during her marriage to the king. Scac. p. 43. 12 Co. Rep. 21. 22. See Queen.

QUE ESTATE, signifies, which estate; and is a plea, where a man entitling another to land, &c. saith, that the same estate such other had he has from him. Broke 175. Co. Litt. 121.

QUE EST EADEM. See Que est eadem, &c.

QUE EST LE MESME, (signifying verbatim, the same thing,) is a word of art, in actions of trespass, &c. for a direct justification of the very act complained of by plaintiff as a wrong. Kitch. 236.

QUEM REDDITUM REDDAT. A judicial writ which lay for him, to whom a rent-seck or rent-charge is granted, by fine levied in the king's court against the tenant of the land who refuseth to attorn to him, thereby to cause him to attorn. Old Nat. Brev. 196. West, Symbol. par. 2. tit. Fines, sect. 156.

QUERELA. An action preferred in any court of justice, in which the plaintiff was querens or complainant, and his brief complaint or declaration was querela, whence our quarrel against any person. Cowell.

QUIETUS ESSE A QUERELIS, was to be exempted from the customary fees paid to the king or lord of a court, for the purchase of liberty to prefer such an action. But more usually to be exempted from fines and amercements, imposed for common trespasses and faults. Ibid.

QUERELA CORAM REGE A CONCILIO DISCUTIENDA ET TERMINANDA. A writ whereby one was called to justify a complaint of a trespass made to the king himself, before the king and his council. Reg. Orig. 124.

QUEST, QUESTUS, (Questa.) A quest or inquest, inquisition or inquiry on the oaths of an impannelled jury. Cowell.

QUESTION, or Torture. See Torture.

QUESTUS EST NOBIS. The form of a writ of nuisance against him to whom the house or other thing which occasioned the nuisance, was alienated; whereas, before the statute, this action lay only against him who first levied the thing to the annoyance of his neighbour. Cowel.

QUIA DOMINUS REMISIT CURIAM. Writ of right, to oust the lord of his jurisdiction, is restrained by Magna Charta, c. 24. 3 Black. 195.

QUIA EMPTORES. The stat. of Westm. 3. or quia emptores, 18 Ed. 1. c. 1, directs, that upon all sales or feoffments of land, the feoffee shall hold the same, not of his immediate feoffor, but of the chief lord of the fee, of whom such feoffor himself held it.

QUIA IMPROVIDO. A supersedeas granted in behalf of a clerk of the chancery sued against the privilege of that court in the common pleas, and pursued to the exigent, or in many other cases where a writ is erroneously sued. Dyer 33. a. 18.

QUICK WITH CHILD. See Pregnancy.

QUICK-SETS. See Trespass.

QUID JURIS CLAMAT. A judicial writ issuing out of the record of the fine, which remaineth with the Custos Brevium of the Common Pleas, before it be engrossed; and it lies for the grantee of a reversion or remainder, when the particular tenant will not attorn. West. Symbol. part 2. tit. Fines, sect. 118. Reg. Judic. 36, 51. See 18 Vin. Abr. 149.

QUID PRO QUO, signifieth something for somewhat; and is used in the law, for the giving one thing of value for another thing, being the mutual consideration and performance of both parties to a contract. Kitch. 184. See Promise.

QUIETANTIA, (Acquietantia.) See Acquittance.

QUIETARE. To quit, acquit or discharge, or save harmless. Cowell.

QUIETE CLAMARE, is to quit claim, or renounce all pretensions of right and title. Ibid.

QUIETUS, (freed or acquitted,) is a word made use of by the Clerk of the Pipe and Auditors in the Exchequer, in their discharges given to accountants; usually concluding with abinde recessat quietus, which is called a quietus est: a quietus est granted to the sheriff, will discharge him of all accounts due to the king. Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 5. And these quietus's are mentioned in the acts of general pardon. 12 Car. 2. c. 11. and 4 Car. 2. c. 21.

QUINQUAGESIMA SUNDAY. Shrove Sunday, so named because it is about the fiftieth day before Easter. Cowell.

QUINQUE PORTUS. The Cinque Ports: which are, 1, Hastings; 2, Romney; 3, Hythe; 4, Dover; and 5, Sandwich. To the first, Winchelsea and Rye belong, which are reckoned as part, or members of the cinque ports. Cowell. See Cinque Ports.

QUINSTEME, or QUINZIME, (Decima Quinta,) is a French word, signifying a fifteenth; with us it was a tax, so called because it was raised after the fifteenth part of men's lands or goods. Anno 10 Rich. 2. cap. 1. and 7 Hen. 7. c. 5. See Fifteenths.

QUINTAL, (Quintallus.) A weight of lead, iron, and common metals, usually one hundred pounds, at six score per cent. Cowell.

QUINTANE, (Quintena,) was a Roman military sport or exercise, by men on horseback, formerly practised in this kingdom to try the agility of the country youth. Cowell.

QUINTO EXACT', (Quintus exactus, mentioned in the statute 31 Eliz. cap. 3.) is the last call of the defendant, who is sued to outlawry, where, if he appear not, he is by the judgment of the coroners returned outlawed; if a woman, waved. 4 Black. 283.

QUI TAM. Is where an information is exhibited (or action prosecuted) against any person on a penal statute, at suit of the king and the party who is informer; where the penalty, or breach of the statute, is to be divided between them, and the party informer prosecutes as well for the king as himself. Finch, 340.

QUIT-CLAIM, (Quieta clamantia.) is a release or acquitting of a man, for any action which the releasor hath, might, or may have against him. Also a quitting of one's claim or title. Bracton, lib. 5. tract. 5. c. 9. Cowell.

QUIT-RENT, (Quietus Redditus, quasi quit-rent,) is a certain small rent, payable by the tenants of manors in token of subjection, and by which the tenant goes quiet and free. In ancient records it is called white-rent, because paid in silver money, to distinguish it from rent corn, &c. 2 Inst. 19.

QUOAD HOC (as to this,) is often used in law pleadings and arguments, to signify, as to the thing named the law is so, &c. Cowell.

QUOD CLERICI BENEFICIATI DE CANCELLARIA, was a writ to exempt a clerk of the chancery from the contribution towards the proctors of the clergy in parliament. Reg. Orig. 261.

QUOD CLERICI NON ELIGANTUR IN OFFICIO BALLIVI, &c. is a writ which lies for a clerk, who, by reason of some land he hath, is made, or about to be made bailiff, beadle, reeve, or some such officer. See Clerico infra sacros, &c. Reg. Orig. 187. and F. N. B. 261.

QUOD CUM, in indictments, &c. As A. B. was indicted quod cum C. D. he had done such a thing; and this being by way of recital, and not positively, is not good. 2 Hawk. P. C. 227. 3 Salk. 188.

QUOD EI DEFORCEAT. A writ for tenant in tail, tenant in dower, by the curtesy, or for term of life, having lost their lands by default, against him who recovers, or his heir. Reg. Orig. 171. Stat. Westm. 2. c. 4.

QUOD PERMITTAT. A writ which lays against any person who erects a building, though on his own ground, so near to the house of another, that it hangs over, or becomes a nuisance to it. 2 Lill. Abr. 413.

Quod permittat lay also for the heir of him who was disseised of his common of pasture, against the heir of the disseisor, being dead. Terms de Ley.

QUOD PERMITTAT PROSTERNERE, was a writ in the nature of a writ of right: it was a writ commanding the defendant to permit the plaintiff to abate, quod permittat prosternere, the nuisance complained of; and, unless he so permitted [illegible] him to appear in court, and shew why he would not. And this writ lay as well for the alienee of the party first injured, as against the alienee of the party first injuring. And the plaintiff was to have judgment herein to abate the nuisance, and to recover damages against the defendant. But these actions of quod permittat prosternere are now out of use, and have given way to the action on the case. 2 Inst. 405. F. N. B. 104. 5 Rep. 100, 101. Yet, as therein it is not necessary that the freehold should be in the plaintiff and defendant respectively, as it must be in these real actions, but it is maintainable by one that hath possession only, against another that hath like possession, the process is therefore easier: and the effect will be much the same, unless a man has a very obstinate as well as an ill-natured neighbour, who had rather continue to pay damages than remove his nuisance; for in such case, recourse must at last be had to the old and sure remedies, which will effectually conquer the defendant's perverseness, by sending the sheriff with his posse comitatus, or power of the county to level it.

QUOD PERSONA NEC PREBENDARII, ETC. A writ which lay for spiritual persons, distrained in their spiritual possessions, for payment of a fifteenth with the rest of the parish. F. N. B. 176.

QUO JURE. A writ which lay for him who had land, wherein another challenged common of pasture time out of mind. And it was to compel him to shew by what title he challenged it. F. N. B. 128. Reg. Orig. 156.

QUO MINUS. A writ which lay for him who had a grant of house-bote and hay-bote in another man's woods, against the grantor, making such waste as the grantee could not enjoy his grant. Old Nat. Br. 148, and Kitch. 178.

This writ also lies for the king's accountant in the exchequer, against whom he hath any cause of personal action, suggesting that he is thereby made less able to pay the king's rent; and this surmise gives jurisdiction to the court of exchequer to hear and determine the cause of any other person. Pract. Exchcq. 225.

QUORUM, (Lat.) often occurs in our statutes and commissions both of the peace and others, but particularly in commissions to justices of the peace; and a justice of the quorum is so called, from the words in the commission, quorum A. B. unum esse volumus: as where a commission is directed to five persons, whereof A. B. and C. D. to be two. In this case, A. B. and C. D.

are said to be of the quorum, and the rest cannot proceed without them. They are usually persons of greater quality or estates than the common commissioners. 3 Hen. 7. c. 3. 32 Hen. 8. c. 43. It is usual now to make almost every one (two or three excepted) of the quorum. 1 Black. 351.

QUORUM NOMINA. In the reign of Hen. 6. the king's collectors were allowed a writ of quorum nomina, and writ for suing out their quietus. Chron. Angl.

QUOTA. A tax to be levied in an equal manner. Chart. Rich. 2. Cowell.

QUO WARRANTO. A writ of quo warranto is in the nature of a writ of right for the king, against him who claims or usurps any office, franchise, or liberty, to inquire by what authority he supports his claim, in order to determine the right. Finch. L. 322. 2 Inst. 282. It lies also in case of non-user or long neglect of a franchise, or mis-user or abuse of it; being a writ commanding the defendant to shew by what warrant he exercises such a franchise, having never had any grant of it, or having forfeited it by neglect or abuse. This was originally returnable before the king's justices at Westminster. Old Nat. Brev. fol. 107. edit. 1534; but afterwards only before the justices in eyre, by virtue of the statutes of quo warranto, 6 Edw. 1. c. 1. And 18 Edw. 1. stat. 2. 2 Inst. 498. Rast. Entr. 540.; but since those justices have given place to the king's temporary commissioners of assise, the judges on the several circuits, this branch of the statutes hath lost its effect. 2 Inst. 498; and writs of quo warranto (if brought at all) must now be prosecuted and determined before the king's justices at Westminster. And in case of judgment for the defendant, he shall have an allowance of his franchise; but in case of judgment for the king, for that the party is intitled to no such franchise, or hath disused or abused it, the franchise is either seised into the king's hands, to be granted out again to whomever he shall please; or, if it be not such a franchise as may subsist in the hands of the crown, there is merely judgment of ouster, to turn out the party who usurped it. Cro. Jac. 299. 1 Show. 280.

The judgment on a writ of quo warranto (being in the nature of a writ of right) is final and conclusive even against the crown. 1 Sid. 86. 2 Show. 47. 12 Mod. 225.; which, together with the length of its process, probably occasioned that disuse into which it is now fallen, and introduced a more modern method of prosecution, by information filed in the court of king's bench by the attorney-general, in the nature of a writ of quo warranto, wherein the process is speedier, and the judgment not quite so decisive. This is properly a criminal method of prosecution, as well to punish the usurper by a fine for the usurpation of the franchise, as to oust him, or seise it for the crown; but hath long been applied to the mere purposes of trying the civil right, seising the franchise, or ousting the wrongful possessor, the fine being nominal only. 3 Black. 263.

And now, by virtue of the stat 9 Ann. c. 20. an information in nature of quo warranto is permitted to be brought with leave of the court, at the relation of any person desiring to prosecute the same (who is then styled the relator) against any person usurping, intruding into, or unlawfully holding any franchise or office in any city, borough, or town corporate; and this statute directs, that if the defendant be convicted, judgment of ouster, as well as a fine, may be given against him, and that the relator shall pay or receive costs according to the event of the suit.

Informations in the nature of a writ of quo warranto are regulated by stat. 9 Ann. c. 20. The modern information tends to the same purpose as the ancient writ, being generally made use of to try the civil rights of such franchises, though it is commenced in the same manner as other informations are, by leave of the court, or at the will of the attorney-general: being properly a criminal prosecution, in order to fine the defendant for his usurpation, as well as to oust him from his office, yet usually considered at present as merely a civil proceeding. And because an information in the nature of a quo warranto is considered merely as a civil proceeding, the court of king's bench will grant a new trial, though the verdict should have been given for the defendant. 2 T. R. 484.

R

RACK. An engine to extort confession from delinquents, but utterly unknown to the law of England. 4 Black. 329.

RACK-RENT. The full yearly value of the land. Wood's Inst. 185.

RACK-VINTAGE. A second vintage, or voyage made by our merchants for racked wines, i. e. wines drawn from the lees. Cowell.

RAGEMAN. A statute of justices assigned by Edw. I. to hear and determine complaints of injuries done throughout the realm, within the five years next before Michaelmas, in the fourth year of his reign. Cowell.

RAGLORIA. A word mentioned in the charter of Edw. III. whereby he made his eldest son Edward prince of Wales. Rhaglaw, among the Welsh, signifies seneschallus, surlogutus, præpositus. Cowell.

RAGLORIUS. A steward. Ibid.

RAGMAN'S ROLL, Ragimund's Roll, taken from the Scots by Edw. I. and redelivered to them in the beginning of the reign of Edw. III. Cowell.

RAN, (A Saxon word,) signifies aperta rapina, open or public theft. Lamb. Archai. 125.

RANGE, from the French ranger. To order, dispose of. Cowell.

RANGER. A sworn officer of the forest. To walk daily through his charge, to see, hear, and inquire of trespasses in his bailiwick; to drive the beasts of the forest both of venary and chase out of the de-afforested into the forested lands; and to present all trespasses of the forest the next court holden for the forest. This ranger is made by the king's letters patent. Cowell.

RANSOM, (Fr. Rançon, i. e. Redemptio.) Is properly the sum paid for redeeming a captive or prisoner of war; and sometimes taken in our law for a sum of money paid for pardoning some great offence, and setting the offender at liberty who was under imprisonment. Stat. 1 Hen. 4. c. 7. 11 Hen. 6. c. 11.

Ransom differs from Amerciament, being a redemption of a corporal punishment due to any crime. Lamb. Eiren. 556.

And when any statute speaks of fine and ransom, it is holden that the ransom shall be treble the fine at least. Dyer, 232.

RAPE, (Rapus vel Rapa.) Is part of a county, signifying as much as a hundred, and oftentimes contains in it more hundreds than one. Cowell.

RAPE OF THE FOREST, (Raptus Forestæ.) Trespass committed in the forest by violence. Ibid.

RAPE OF WOMEN. Is an unlicensed and carnal knowledge of a woman by force and against her will—a ravishment of the body, and violent deflowering her, which is felony by the common and statute law. Co. Lit. 190.

By statute Westm. 2. c. 34. and by stat. 18 Eliz. c. 7. it is made felony without benefit of clergy; as is also the abominable wickedness of carnally knowing and abusing any woman child under the age of ten years; in which case the consent or non-consent is immaterial, as by reason of her tender years she is incapable of judgment and discretion.

A male infant under the age of fourteen years is presumed by law incapable to commit a rape, and therefore it seems cannot be found guilty of it; for, though in other felonies malitia supplet ætatem, yet, as to this particular species of felony, the law supposes an imbecility of body as well as mind. 1 Hal. P. C. 631.

The civil law seems to suppose a prostitute or common harlot incapable of any injuries of this kind (Cod. 9. 9. 22. Ff. 47. 2. 39.), not allowing any punishment for violating the chastity of her, who hath indeed no chastity at all, or at least hath no regard to it. But the law of England holds it to be felony to force even a concubine or harlot; because the woman may have forsaken that unlawful course of life.

As to the evidence upon an indictment of rape, it is to be observed, first, that the party ravished may give evidence upon oath, and is in law a competent witness; but the credibility of her testimony, and how far forth she is to be believed, must be left to the jury upon the circumstances of fact that concur in that testimony. For instance: if the witness be of good fame; if she presently discovered the offence, and made search for the offender; if the party accused fled for it; these and the like are concurring circumstances which give greater probability to her evidence. But, on the other side, if she be of evil fame, and stand unsupported by others; if she concealed the injury for any considerable time after she had opportunity to complain; if the place, where the fact was alleged to be committed, was where it was possible she might have been heard, and she made no outcry; these and the like circumstances carry a strong, but not conclusive presumption that her testimony is false or feigned. 4 Black. 213.

Moreover, if the rape be charged to be committed on an infant under twelve years of age, she may still be a competent witness, if she hath the sense and understanding to know the nature and obligations of an oath, or even to be sensible of the wickedness of telling a deliberate lie. Nay, though she hath not, it is thought by Sir Matthew Hale that she ought to be heard without oath, to give the court information; and others have held, that what the child told her mother, or other relations, may be given in evidence, since the nature of the case admits frequently of no better proof. But it is now settled, [Brazier's case, before the twelve judges, 19 Geo. 3.] that no hearsay evidence can be given of the declaration of a child who hath not capacity to be sworn, nor can such child be examined in court without oath: and that there is no determinate age at which the oath of a child ought either to be admitted or rejected. 4 Black. 214. See Age.

RAPINE, (Rapina.) To take a thing in private against the owner's will, is properly theft; but to take it openly, or by violence, is rapine. 4 Black. 241.

RAPTU HEREDIS. A writ for taking away an heir holding in socage; of which there were two sorts, one when the heir was married, the other when he was not. See Reg. Orig. 163.

RASE, (Raseria.) Seems to have been a measure of corn now disused. "Toll shall be taken by the rase, and not by the heap or cantel." Ordinance for Bakers.

RASURE of a deed, so as to alter it in a material part, without consent of the party bound by it, will make the same void, and if it be rased in the date, after delivery, it is said it goes through the whole. 5 Rep. 23. 119.

Rasure, is most suspicious when it is in a deed poll, that there is but one part of the deed, and it makes to the advantage of him to whom made. And where a deed by rasure, addition, or alteration becomes no deed, the defendant may plead non est factum. Ibid. 2 Black. Com. 2 V. 388.

RATE. A valuation of every man's estate, or the assessing and setting down how much every one shall pay or be charged with to any tax. Stat. 43 Edw. II. Cowell.

RATE-TITHE. Was when any sheep or other cattle were kept in a parish for less time than a year, the owner was to pay tithe for them pro rata, according to the custom of the place. F. N. B. 51.

RATIFICATION, (Ratificatio.) A ratifying or confirming: it is particularly used for the confirmation of a clerk in a prebend, &c. formerly conferred on him by the bishop, where the right of patronage is doubted or supposed to be in the king. Reg. Orig. 304.

RATIHABITIO. Confirmation, agreement, consent. Cowell. Blount.

RATIO. Properly signifies reason, but we take it mostly for an account, as reddere rationem, to give an account, and so it is frequently used. According to some, it is a cause or judgment therein; and ponere ad rationem is to cite one to appear in judgment. Ibid.

RATIONABILIS DIVISIO. A writ which lay when two lords, in divers towns, had seigniories joining together, for him who found his waste by little and little to have been encroached on, against the other who had encroached, thereby to rectify their bounds. F. N. B. 128. & Reg. Orig. 157. Cowell. Blount.

RATIONABILE ESTOVERIUM. Was alimony heretofore so called. (Rot. 7. H. 3.)

RATIONABILI PARTE BONORUM. A writ which lay for a wife after the death of her husband, against the executors of the husband denying her the third part of his goods after debts and funeral charges paid. F. N. B. 2. See Intestate.

RATIONALE. Was the same with pallium. Cowell. Blount.

RAVISHMENT, (Fr. Ravissement, i. e. Direptio, raptio.) See Abduction and Rape.

RAVISHMENT DE GARD. A writ which lay for the guardian by knight's service, or in socage, against a person who took from him the body of his ward. F. N. B. 140. But by 12 Car. 2. c. 24. this writ is taken away. 317.

RAY. Cloth never coloured or dyed. 17 R. 2. cap. 3. 11 H. 4. cap. 6. and 1 R. 3. cap. 8.

READING OF DEEDS. This is requisite for the making of a good deed, whenever any of the parties desire it; and if it be not done on his request, it is void as to him; if he can he should read it himself; if he be blind, or illiterate, another must read it to him; if it be read falsely, it will be void, at least for so much as is misread, unless it be agreed by collusion, that the deed shall be read false, on purpose to make it void, for in such case it shall bind the fraudulent party. 2 Black. 308. 2 Rep. 3. 9. 11 Rep. 27.

REAFFORESTED. Is where a forest which had been disafforested is again made forest, as the forest of Dean is by stat. 20 Car. 2. c. 3.

REAL ACTIONS. See Ejectment.

REALTY. Is an abstract of real, as distinguished from personalty. Cowell.

REASON. Is the very life of law, and what is contrary to it is unlawful. When the reason of the law once ceases, the law itself generally ceases, because reason is the foundation of all our laws. And if maxims of law admit of any difference, those are to be preferred which carry with them the more perfect and excellent reason. Co. Lit. 97. 183.

REASONABLE AID. Was a duty claimed by the lord of the fee of his tenant holding by knight's service, to marry his daughter, &c. Stat. Westm. 2. c. 24. 12 Car. 2. c. 14.

REASONABLE PART. By the common law, as it stood in the reign of Henry II. a man's goods were to be divided into three equal parts: of which, one went to his heirs or lineal descendants, another to his wife, and the third was at his own disposal; or, if he died without a wife, he might then dispose of one moiety, and the other went to his children; and so e converso, if he had no children the wife was entitled to one moiety, and he might bequeath the other; but if he died without either wife or issue, the whole was at his own disposal, (Bracton, l. 2. c. 26. Flet. l. 2. c. 57.) The shares of the wife and children are called their reasonable parts; and the writ de rationabili parte bonorum was given to recover them. F. N. B. 122.

REASSURANCE. See Insurance.

REATTACHMENT, (Reattachiamentum.) A second attachment of him who was formerly attached and dismissed the court without day, by the not coming of the justices, or some such casualty. Broke Reg. Orig. 35.

REBATE. Is an abating what the interest of money comes to, in consideration of prompt payment. Merch. Dict.

REBELLION, (Rebellio.) The taking up of arms traitorously against the king, whether by natural subjects, or others when once subdued; and the word rebel sometimes applies to him who wilfully breaks a law. Stat. 25 Ed. 3. c. 6. 1 R. 2. c. 6.

REBELLIOUS ASSEMBLY. See Riots.

REBELLION, COMMISSION OF. A Process in Equity.

REBUTTER, (from the Fr. bouter, i. e. repellere, to put back or bar.) Is the answer of the defendant to the plaintiff's surrejoinder: and the plaintiff's answer to the rebutter is called a surrebutter; but it is very rare the parties go so far in pleading. Pract. Attorn. edit. 1. 86.

Rebutter is also where a man by deed or fine grants to warranty any land or hereditament to another; and the person making the warranty or his heir, sues him to whom the warranty is made, or his heir or assignee, for the same thing; if he who is sued, plead the deed or fine with warranty, and pray judgment if the plaintiff shall be received to demand the thing, which he ought to warrant to the party, against the warranty in the deed, &c.; this is called a rebutter. Terms de Ley, Co. Entr. 284. Co. Litt. 365.

RECAPTION, (Recaptio.) Signifies the taking a second distress of one formerly distrained; and it is a writ to recover damages for him whose goods being distrained for rent, or service, &c. are distrained again for the same cause, pending the replevin. F. N. B. 71, 72. Stat. 47 Ed. 3. c. 7.

RECAPTION. Is also a species of remedy by the mere act of the party injured. As when any one hath deprived another of his property in goods or chattels personal, or wrongfully detains one's wife, child, or servant; in all which cases the owner of the goods, and the husband, parent, or master, may lawfully claim and retake them, wherever he happens to find them, so it be not in a riotous manner, or attended with a breach of the peace. 3 Inst. 134. Hal. Annal. s. 46.

RECEIPT. See Resceit.

RECEIVER, (Receptor.) Is commonly used in the civil part, for such as receive stolen goods, &c. And receiving a felon, and concealing him and his offence, makes a person accessary to the felony. 2 Inst. 183. S. P. C. 41. H. P. C. 218, 219. 2 Hawk. P. C. 122, 319, 320. See Accessary and Stolen Goods.

RECEIVER. There is also a receiver of rents belonging to the king or other personage, and receivers are appointed by the courts of equity. Compt. Jurisd. 18. See Accompt.

RECEIVER OF THE FINES. An officer who receives the money of all such as compound with the king on original writs sued out of chancery. West. Symb. par. 2. sect. 106. Stat. 1 Ed. 4. c. 1.

RECEIVER GENERAL OF THE DUTCHY OF LANCASTER. An officer of the dutchy court, who collects all the revenues, fines, forfeitures, and assessments within the dutchy. 39 Eliz. cap. 7.

RECITAL, (Recitatio.) Is the setting forth or making mention in a deed or writing of something which has been done before. 2 Lill. Abr. 416.

RECOGNITION, (Recognitio.) Signifies an acknowledgment, as in stat. 1 Jac. 1, whereby the parliament acknowledged the crown of England, on the death of Queen Elizabeth, rightfully to have descended to King James.

RECOGNITIONE ADNULLANDA PER VIM ET DURITIEM FACTA. A writ to the justices of C. B. for sending a record touching a recognizance, which the recognizor suggested was acknowledged by force and duress; that, if it so appear, the recognizance might be disanoulled. Reg. Orig. 183.

RECOGNITORS, (Recognitores.) Are the jury impannelled on an assize, so called, because they acknowledge a disseisin by their verdict. Bract. lib. 5.

RECOGNIZANCE, (Fr. Recognoissance, i. e. Recognitio Obligatio.) A recognizance is an obligation of record, which a man enters into before some court of record or magistrate duly authorized, (Bro. Abr. tit. Recognizance. 24.) with condition to do some particular act; as to appear at the assises, to keep the peace, to pay a debt, or the like. It is in most respects like another bond: the difference being chiefly this: that the bond is the creation of a fresh debt or obligation de novo, the recognizance is an acknowledgment of a former debt upon record; the form whereof is, "that A. B. doth acknowledge to owe to our lord the king, to the plaintiff, to C. D. or the like, the sum of ten pounds, with condition to be void on performance of the thing stipulated; in which case the king, the plaintiff C. D. &c. is called the cognizee, "is cui cognoscitur;" as he that enters into the recognizance is called the cognizor, "is qui cognoscit." This, being either certified to, or taken by the officer of some court, is witnessed only by the record of that court, and not by the party's seal; so that it is not in strict propriety a deed, though the effects of it are greater than a common obligation, being allowed a priority in point of payment, and binding the lands of the cognizor, from the time of enrolment on record. There are also other recognizances of a private kind, in nature of a statute staple, by virtue of the statute 23 Hen. 8, c. 6. See Statute Merchant and Statute Staple, and Surety.

RECORD, (Recordum, from the Lat. Recordari, to remember.) A memorial or authentic testimony in writing, contained in rolls of parchment, and preserved in a court of record. Britton, c. 27. Co. Litt. 260, 2 Lill. Abr. 418.

There are three kinds of records, viz. A judicial record, as an attainder, &c.; a ministerial record on oath, being an office or inquisition found: and a record made by conveyance and consent, as a fine, or a deed inrolled. 4 Rep. 54. 2 Lill. 421.

Records, being the rolls or memorials of the judges, import in themselves such incontroulable verity, that they admit of no proof or averment to the contrary, insomuch that they are to be tried only by themselves; for otherwise there would be no end of controversies. But during the term wherein any judicial act is done, the roll is alterable in that term, as the judges shall direct: when the term is past, then the record admitteth of no alteration, or proof that it is false in any instance. Co. Litt. 260. 4 Rep. 52.

Matter of record is therefore to be proved by the record itself, and not by evidence, because no issue can be joined on it to be tried by a jury like matters of fact; and the credit of a record is greater than the testimony of witnesses. Hob. 124.

RECORDARE FACIAS LOQUELAM. Is a writ directed to the sheriff to remove a cause depending in an inferior court, to the King's Bench or Common Pleas, and it is called a recordare, because it commands the sheriff to make a record of the proceedings in the county court, and then to send up the cause. F. N. B. 71. 2 Inst. 339.

RECORDER, (Recordator.) Is a person whom the mayor and other magistrates of any city or town corporate, (having jurisdiction, and a court of record within their precincts), by the king's grant, associate unto them for their better direction in matters of justice, and proceedings according to law; therefore he is generally a barrister or some other person experienced in the law. Co. Lit. 288.

RECOVERY, (Recuperatio, from the Fr. recouvrer, recuperare.) Signifies, in a legal acceptation, obtaining any thing by judgment or trial of law; and there is both a true recovery and feigned one.

A true recovery is an actual or real recovery, of any thing, or the value thereof, by judgment; as if a man sue for any land, or other thing moveable or immoveable, and have a verdict or judgment for him. Cowell.

A feigned recovery is a certain form or course set down by law to be observed, for the better assuring lands or tenements. West. Sym. par. 2. tit. Recoveries, s. 1.

This assurance, by matter of record, is called a common recovery, and was invented by the ecclesiastics to elude the statutes of mortmain; and afterwards encouraged by the finesse of the courts of law in 12 Edw. 4. in order to put an end to all fettered inheritances, and bar not only estates tail, but also all remainders and reversions expectant thereon.

I. The nature of a common recovery.] A common recovery is so far like a fine, that it is a suit or action, either actual or fictitious; and in it the lands are recovered against the tenant of the freehold; which recovery, being a supposed adjudication of the right, binds all persons, and vests a free and absolute fee-simple in the recoveror.

As, for instance, suppose David Edwards to be tenant of the freehold, and desirous to suffer a common recovery, in order to bar all entails, remainders, and reversions, and to convey the same in fee simple to Francis Golding. To effect this, Golding is to bring an action against him for the lands; and he accordingly sues out a writ, called a præcipe quod reddat, because those were its initial or most operative words, when the law proceedings were in Latin. In this writ the demandant Golding alleges that the defendant Edwards (here called the tenant) has no legal title to the land, but that he came into possession of it after one Hugh Hunt had turned the demandant out of it. The subsequent proceedings are made up into a record or recovery roll, in which the writ and commplaint of the demandant are first recited: whereupon the tenant appears, and calls upon one Jacob Morland, who is supposed, at the original purchase, to have warranted the title to the tenant; and thereupon he prays, that the said Jacob Morland may be called in to defend the title which he so warranted. This is called the voucher, vocatio, or calling of Jacob Morland to warranty; and Morland is called the vouchee. Upon this, Jacob Morland, the vouchee, appears, is impleaded, and defends the title. Whereupon Golding, the demandant, desires leave of the court to imparl, or confer with the vouchee in private; which is, as usual, allowed him. And soon afterwards the demandant, Golding, returns to court, but Morland the vouchee disappears, or makes default. Whereupon judgment is given for the demandant Golding, now called the recoveror, to recover the lands in question against the tenant Edwards, who is now the recoveree; and Edwards has judgment to recover of Jacob Morland lands of equal value, in recompense for the lands so warranted by him, and now lost by his default; which is agreeable to the doctrine of warranty, (see Warranty.) This is called the recompense, or recovery in value. But Jacob Morland having no lands of his own, being usually the cryer of the court, (who, from being frequently thus vouched, is called the common vouchee), it is plain that Edwards has only a nominal recompense for the land so recovered against him by Golding; which lands are now absolutely vested in the said recoveror by judgment of law, and seisin thereof is delivered by the sheriff of the county. So that this collusive recovery operates merely in the nature of a conveyance in fee-simple, from Edwards the tenant in tail, to Golding the purchasor.

The recovery, here described, is with a single voucher only; but sometimes it is with double, treble, or farther voucher, as the exigency of the case may require. And indeed it is now usual always to have a recovery with double voucher at the least: by first conveying an estate of freehold to any indifferent person, against whom the præcipe is brought; and then he vouches the tenant in tail, who vouches over the common vouchee. For, if a recovery be had immediately against tenant in tail, it bars only such estate in the premises of which he is then actually seised; whereas, if the recovery be had against any person, and the tenant in tail be vouched, it bars every latent right and interest which he may have in the lands recovered. If Edwards therefore be tenant of the freehold in possession, and John Barker be tenant in tail in remainder, here Edwards doth first vouch Barker, and then Barker vouches Jacob Morland the common vouchee, who is always the last person vouched, and always makes default; whereby the demandant Golding recovers the land against the tenant Edwards, and Edwards recovers a recompense of equal value against Barker the first vouchee, who recovers the like against Morland the common vouchee, against whom such ideal recovery in value is always ultimately awarded.

This supposed recompense in value is the reason why the issue in tail is held to be barred by a common recovery. For, if the recoveree should obtain a recompense in lands from the common vouchee, (which there is a possibility in contemplation of law, though a very improbable one, of his doing,) these lands would supply the place of those so recovered from him by collusion, and would descend to the issue in tail. This reason will also hold with equal force, as to most remainder-men and reversioners, to whom the possibility will remain and revert, as a full recompense for the realty, which they were otherwise entitled to. But it will not always hold, and therefore, as Pigot says, the judges have been even astuti, in inventing other reasons to maintain the authority of recoveries. And, in particular, it hath been said, that, though the estate-tail is gone from the recoveree, yet it is not destroyed, but only transferred; and still subsists, and will ever continue to subsist (by construction of law) in the recoveror, his heirs and assigns; and, as the estate-tail so continues to subsist for ever, the remainders or reversions expectant on the determination of such estate-tail can never take place. Thus fines and recoveries are now considered as mere forms of conveyances or common assurances, the theory and original principles of them being little regarded. They have been in use some hundreds of years, have gained ground by time, and we must now take them, as they really are, common assurances. 1 Wils. 73.

2. The force and effect of common recoveries appear therefore to be an absolute bar not only of all estates-tail, but of remainders and reversions expectant on the determination of such estates. So that a tenant in tail may, by this method of assurance, convey the lands held in tail to the recoveror, his heirs and assigns, absolutely free and discharged of all conditions and limitations in tail, and of all remainders and reversions. But, by statute 34 and 35 Hen. 8. c. 20, no recovery had against tenant in tail, of the king's gift, whereof the remainder or reversion is in the king, shall bar such estate-tail, or the remainder or reversion of the crown. And by the statute 11 Hen. 7. c. 20. no woman, after her husband's death, shall suffer a recovery of lands settled on her by her husband, or settled on her husband and her by any of his ancestors. And by statute 14 Eliz. c. 8, no tenant for life, of any sort, can suffer a recovery, so as to bind them in remainder or reversion; for which reason, if there be tenant for life, with remainder in tail, and other remainders over, and the tenant for life is desirous to suffer a valid recovery; either he, or the tenant to the præcipe by him made, must vouch the remainder-man in tail, otherwise the recovery is void; but if he does vouch such remainder-man, and he appears and vouches the common vouchee, it is then good; for if a man be vouched, and appears, and suffers the recovery to be had against the tenant to the præcipe, it is as effectual to bar the estate-tail as if he himself were the recoveree.*

In all recoveries it is necessary that the recoveree, or tenant to the præcipe, as he is usually called, be actually seised of the freehold, else the recovery is void. For all actions, to recover the seisin of lands, must be brought against the actual tenant of the freehold, else the suit will lose its effect, since the freehold cannot be recovered of him who has it not; and though these recoveries are in themselves fabulous and fictitious, yet it is necessary that there be actores fabulæ properly qualified; but the nicety which was thought some years ago to be requisite in conveying the legal freehold, in order to make a good tenure to the præcipe, is removed by the provisions of the statute 14 Geo. 2. c. 20. which enacts, that "though the legal freehold be vested in lessees, yet those who are entitled to the next freehold estate in remainder or reversion, may make a good tenant to the præcipe, without any surrender of the leases;" that "the deed making a tenant to the writ of entry, shall be sufficient evidence of a recovery for purchasers after 20 years possession: and common recoveries, after 20 years, shall be deemed good, if it appear therein that there was a tenant to the writ, though no deed for making such tenant appear;" and that "a recovery shall be deemed good, though the deed for making the tenant be executed after the time of the judgment, so that it be executed before the end of the term."

A fine or recovery had of copyhold lands in the king's court may, if not duly reversed, alter the tenure of the lands, and convert them into frank fee; which is defined, in the old book of tenures, to be land pleadable at the common law; but upon an action in the case, in the nature of a writ of deceit, brought by the lord in the king's courts, such fine or recovery will be reversed, the lord will recover his jurisdiction, and the lands will be restored to their former state of copyhold. Fitz. N. B. 13.

RECOUPE, (from the Fr. recouper) signifies the keeping back or stopping something which is due, such as to default or discount (1 Inst.) If a rent-charge be issuing out of land, and paid by the tenant, he may recoupe the same. Terms de Ley. Dyer 2.

RECREANT, (Fr.) cowardly, faint-hearted. When trial by battle was in use, victory was obtained if either champion proved recreant; that is, yielded, and pronounced the horrible word craven, a word of disgrace and obloquy rather than of any determinate meaning: and a most horrible word it was to the vanquished champion, for as a punishment to him for forfeiting the land of his principal by pronouncing that word, he was condemned as a RECREANT, amittere librum legem: that was, to become infamous, and not be actual liber et legalis homo, being supposed by the event to be proved forsworn, and therefore never to be put upon a jury, or admitted as a witness in any cause. Cowell. Blount.

RECTITUDO, right or justice: sometimes it signifies legal dues, a tribute or payment. Ibid.

RECTO DE ADVOCATIONE ECCLESIÆ, a writ lying where a man hath right of advowson, and the parson of the church dying, a stranger presents his clerk to the church, the party who hath right not having brought his action of quare impedit, nor darrein presentment, but suffered the stranger to usurp on him: and it lieth only where an advowson is claimed in fee to him and his heirs. F. N. B. 30. 4 Ed. 3. c. 18.

* If a tenant in tail, to whom the estate has descended ex parte materna, suffers a recovery, and declares the uses to himself in fee, the estate will descend to an heir on the part of the mother, even if he had the reversion in fee from his father, and vice versa; but if he took the estate-tail by purchase, the new fee will descend to the heirs general (5 T. R. 104.) If then a person who has inherited an estate-tail from his mother, wishes to cut off the intail and to make the estate descendible to his heirs on the part of the father, after the recovery, he ought to make a common conveyance to trustees, and to have the estate reconveyed back by them, by which means he will take the estate by purchase, which will then descend to his heirs general. Christian. 2 Black. 362.

RECTO DE CUSTODIA TERRÆ ET HÆREDIS, a writ which lay for him whose tenant, holding of him chivalry, died in nonage, against a stranger who entered on the land, and took the body of the heir. F. N. B. 139. Reg. Orig. 161.

RECTO DE DOTE, a writ of right of dower, which lies for a woman who has received part of her dower, and demands the residue against the heir of the husband, or his guardian. F. N. B. 7. 8. 147. Co. Litt. 32. 38.

RECTO DE DOTE UNDE NIHIL HABET, is a writ of right, which lies in case where the husband having divers lands or tenements, hath assured no dower to his wife, and she thereby is driven to sue for her thirds against the heir, or his guardian. Old. Nat. Br. 6. Reg. Orig. 170.

RECTO QUANDO DOMINUS REMISSIT, is a writ which lieth where lands or tenements in the seigniory of any lord, are in demand by a writ of right: if the lord in such case holdeth no court at the prayer of demandant or tenant, but sends to the king's court his writ to put the cause thither for that time, (saving to him at other times the right of his seigniory) then this writ shall issue out for the other party, and hath its name from the words therein contained. F. N. B. 16.

RECTO DE RATIONABILI PARTE, a writ of right lying between privies in blood, as brothers in gavel-kind, sisters, and other co-parceners, for land in fee-simple. F. N. B. 9.

In this writ the demand shall be of a certain portion of land, to hold in severalty. Ibid.

RECTO STAT IN CURIA, signifies to be acquitted or discharged in any court of law.

RECTO SUR DISCLAIMER, a writ which lies where the lord, in the court of common pleas, avows on his tenant, and the tenant disclaims to hold of him; on which disclaimer the lord shall have this writ: and if he avers and proves that the land is holden of him, he shall recover the land for ever. This writ is grounded on the statute of Westm. 2. c. 2. N. Br. 150.

RECTOR, (Lat.) a governor; and rector ecclesiæ parochialis, is he who hath the charge and cure of a parish church, and is one who hath a parsonage where there is a vicarage endowed. 1 Black. 384. See Appropriation.

RECTORIAL TITHES. The parson or rector hath for the most part the whole right to all the tithes and ecclesiastical dues in his parish.

RECTORY, (rectoria) is taken pro integra ecclesia parochiali, cum omnibus suis juribus, prædiis, decimis aliisque pro ventum speciebus spelm. Also the word rectoria hath been often applied to the rector's mansion or parsonage-house. Par. Antiq. 549. See Vicar.

RECTUM, right; anciently it was used for a trial or accusation. Bract. lib. 3.

RECTUM esse, ad rectum in curia domini, is the same with stare ad rectum. Leg. H. 1. c. 43. See infra.

RECTUM rogare, is to petition the judge to do right. Leg. Inæ. c. 9.

RECTUM, stare ad rectum, to stand trial at law, or abide the justice of the court. Hoved. 655.

RECTUS IN CURIA, i. e. right in court, is he who stands at the bar, and no man objects any offence against him.—Smith de Repub. Angl. lib. 2. c. 3.

RECUSANTS. At the reformation, those were deemed recusants who disputed the authority of the crown in causes ecclesiastical, and denied the king's supremacy. See Papists and Roman Catholics.

RED, (Sax. ræd) is an old word signifying advice; and redbana is one who advised the death of another. Cowell. See Dedbana.

RED BOOK OF THE EXCHEQUER, (liber rubens scaccarii) is an ancient record, wherein are registered the names of those who held lands per baronium in the time of Hen. 2. Ryley, 667. Cowell.

REDDENDUM, is the clause in a lease, whereby the rent is reserved to the lessor; and anciently corn, flesh, fish, and other victuals, were and still may be reserved on leases, as well as money. 2 Rep. 72. Wood's Inst. 226.

REDDIDIT SE, is a plea to an action of scire facias against facias bail; for where a man procures bail for himself to an action in any court at law, if the party bailed at any time before the return of the second scire facias against the bail, renders himself in discharge of his bail, they are thereby discharged, and may plead the same. 2 Lill. Abr. 490. Cro. Jac. 109.

REDDITARIUS, a renter; and redditarium, hath been used for a rental of a manor, or other estate. Cowell.

REDDITION, (redditio) a surrendering or restoring; being also a judicial acknowledgment that the thing in demand belongs to the demandant, and not to the person so surrendering. Ibid.

REDDITUS ASSISUS, is set or standing rent. Ibid. See Assisus.

RE-DELIVERY, is a yielding and delivery back of a thing; but if a person has committed a robbery, and stolen the goods of another, he cannot afterwards purge the offence by any re-delivery, or the like. Co. Lit. 69. H. P. C. 72.

REDEMISE, is a regranting of lands demised or leased for 99 years, or some long term, at a nominal rent, upon an attual reserved rent: an assurance formerly much in use for securing the payment of annuities.

REDEMPTION, (redemptio) a ransom or commutation; and by the old Saxon laws, a man convicted of a crime paid such a fine, according to the estimation of his head, pro redemptione sua. Cowell. See Mortgage.

REDISSEISSIN, (redisseisina) is a disseisin made by him, who once before was found and adjudged to have disseised the same man of his lands or tenements, for which there lies a special writ called a writ of redisselsin. Old Nat. Br. 106. F. N. B. 188.

REDRESS OF INJURIES. The more effectually to accomplish the redress of injuries, courts of justice are instituted in every civilized society, in order to protect the weak from the insults of the stronger, by expounding and enforcing those laws, by which rights are defined, and wrongs prohibited: this remedy is therefore principally to be sought by application to these courts of justice; that is, by civil suit or action. 3 Black. 2.

REDUBBERS, those that bought stolen cloth, and turned it into some other colour or fashion, that it might not be known again. Britton, c. 29. 3 Inst. 134.

RE-ENTRY, (from the Fr. rentrer, i. e. rursus intrare) is the resuming or retaking a possession, as if a man makes a lease of lands, &c. to another, he thereby quits the possession; and if he covenants with the lessee, that, for non-payment of rent at the day, it shall be lawful for him to re-enter; this is as much as if he conditioned to take again the land into his own hands, and to recover the possession by his own act, without assistance of the law. But words in a deed give no re-entry, if a clause of re-entry be not added. Wood's Inst. 140.

All persons who would re-enter on their tenants for non-payment of rent, are to make a demand of the rent on the day that it is due; and, to prevent the re-entry, tenants are to tender their rent, &c. 1 Inst. 201.

RE-EXCHANGE, is the like sum of money payable by the drawer of a bill of exchange which is returned protested, for the exchange of the sum mentioned in the bill back again to the place whence it was drawn. Lex Mercat. 98.

RE-EXTENT, is a second extent on lands or tenements, on complaint that the former was partially made, &c. Broke, 313.

REFARE, (from the Sax. reaf, or ræfan) to bereave, take away, or rob. Leg. H. 1. c. 83.

REFERENCE, is where a matter is referred by the court of chancery to a master; by the court of exchequer to the deputy remembrancer; and by the courts at law to the master, prothonotary, or secondary, to examine and report to the court. 2 Lill. Abr. 432. Or by the parties to some indifferent person. See Award.

REFERENCE TO WORDS, all those messuages, &c. late in the tenure of J. S. situate, &c. in the city of W. are words of reference by reason of the word (those), as well to the will as to the tenure of J. S. 18 Vin. Abr. 272.

REFENDARY, (refendarius) an officer in the time of the English Saxons here, of the same nature as masters of requests to the king; the refendaries being those who exhibited the petitions of the people to the king, and acquainted the judges with his commands; and we read of a referendarius Angliæ. Spelm.

REFORMATION OF RELIGION. See Constitution.

REFUNDING. Where money has been improperly paid, or paid by mistake, courts of equity will decree the parties to refund. 1 Pere Wms. 355. Ver. 466.

REFUSAL, is where one hath by law a right and power of having or doing something of advantage to him, and he refuseth it. An executor may refuse an executorship, but the refusal ought to be before the ordinary; for no man can be compelled to take on him the executorship, unless he hath intermeddled with the estate.

There is also a refusal of a clerk presented to a church, for illiterature, &c. And if a bishop once refuses a clerk for insufficiency, he cannot accept of him afterwards, if a new clerk is presented. 5 Rep. 58. Cro. Eliz. 27.

In trover, a demand of the goods, and refusal to deliver them, must be proved, &c. 10 Rep. 56. 1 Danv. Abr. 20.

REFUTANTIA, a discharge, or renouncing of all future claim. Cowell.

REGALE EPISCOPORUM, the temporal rights and privileges of a bishop. Ibid.

REGALES, the king's servants, or officers of Walsingham, anno 1291. Cowell. Blount.

REGAL FISHES, (mentioned in 1 Eliz. c. 5.) are whales and sturgeons; some add porpoises. Cowell. Blount.

REGALIA, (dicuntur jura omnia ad fiscum spectantia, saith Spelman) the royal rights of a king. See King.

REGALIA FACERE, is to do homage or fealty, when he is invested with the regalia. Cowell.

REGARD, (regardum and rewardum, Fr. regard, i. e. aspectus, respectus,) signifies generally special care; also affection and respect. It is also used in matters of the forest, for there is the office of REGARDER (Crom. Jur. 175. 199. See Manwood, part 1. 194 & 198.) who has the rge of the whole forest, that is, all the und which is parcel of the forest; for re may be woods within the limits of the est, that are no parcel thereof, and those without the regard. Manwood, part 2. . num. 4. anno 20. Car. 2. c. 3.

There is also the COURT OF REGARD, or rvey of dogs, which is to be holden every rd year, for the lawing or expeditation mastiffs, which is done by cutting off the aws of the forefeet, to prevent them from nning after the deer. No other dogs but astiffs are to be thus lawed or expedited, for none other were permitted to be ept within the precincts of the forest, it eing supposed that those only were necesary for the defence of a man's house. 'ast. de Forest, c. 8, 4 Inst. 308.

REGARDANT, (Fr. seeing, marking, igilant) as a villain regardant was called egardant to the manor, because he had the harge to do all base services within the ame, and to see the same freed of all hings that might annoy it. Co. Lit. 120.

REGE INCONSULTO, a writ issued rom the king to the judges not to proceed n a cause which may prejudice the king, ntil he is advised. Cowell, Moor, 844. Jenk. Cent. 97.

REGENCY, (Fr. regence) the government or governors of a kingdom during the minority, mental incapacity, or absence of a prince; and, with us, if the throne should at any time become vacant, by abdication, or any other means whatsoever, as by the total failure of the blood royal, or the like, the right of disposing of this vacancy results to the lords and commons, who are the constitutional trustees and representatives of the nation, and fully and freely represent all the estates of the people of this realm; for the two houses of parliament are the organs by which the people express their will; the lords being as much the trustees and guardians of their country, as the members of the house of commons.

REGENT, (Fr. regent) one who governs a kingdom during the minority of a sovereign prince, or under one who is by absence, mental incapacity, or otherwise incapable of reigning.

REGIO ASSENSU, a writ whereby the king gives his royal assent to the election of a bishop. Reg. Orig, 294.

REGISTER, (registrarius) an officer who keeps a registry. Cowell.

REGISTER is the name of a book, wherein are entered most of the forms of writs, original and judicial, used at common law, called the register of writs. Co. Lit. 159.

It is the most ancient and highly venerable collection of legal forms, upon which Fitzherbert's Natura Brevium is a comment, and in which every man who is injured will be sure to find a method of relief, exactly adapted to his own case, described in the compass of a few lines, and yet without the omission of any material circumstance. 3 Black. 183.

REGISTER or THE PARISH CHURCH (registrum ecclesiæ parochialis) is that wherein baptisms, marriages, and burials, are registered in each parish every year; it was instituted anno 13 Hen. 8. Cowell. Blount.

These parish registers are to be subscribed by the minister and churchwardens; and the names of the persons shall be transmitted yearly to the bishop, &c. Ibid.

REGISTRY, (registrum, from the old Fr. gister, i. e. in lecto reponere) is properly the same with repository, and the office books, and rolls wherein the proceedings of the chancery, or any spiritual court, are recorded, &c, are called by this name. Ibid.

REGISTRY OF DEEDS. By 2 Ann, c. 4, a memorial of all deeds, conveyances, wills, and the like, made in the EAST RIDING of Yorkshire, may be registered: and, if not, shall be deemed fraudulent, and void against subsequent purchasers.

The registrar shall keep an office at Wakefield, and be elected by ballotting of all the freeholders in the west riding of 100*l.* per ann. Ibid.

Memorials shall be registered on parchment, shall be numbered, dated, filed, and entered. Ibid.

This act extends not to copyhold estates, or leases at a rack-rent. Ibid.

A memorial of deeds, &c. made in London, or elsewhere, touching any lands in the west riding, may be registered on affidavit, and the registrar shall give a certificate. Ibid.

Persons forging or counterfeiting memorials or certificates, incur the penalties of 5 Eliz. c. 14. against forgers; and persons forswearing themselves before the registrar, the same penalties as in the courts at Westminster. Ibid.

Memorials of wills registered within six months after the death of a testator, if he dies in England; and three years after, if he dies beyond sea, shall be effectual. Ibid.

No member of parliament shall be chosen registrar; nor any registrar be capable of being chosen a member of parliament. Ibid.

By 5 Ann, c. 18. bargains and sales of lands in the WEST RIDING of Yorkshire, enrolled in the registrar's office at Wakefield, shall be good in law, as if enrolled at Westminster; the same to be on parchment, certified, and allowed.

No judgment, statute, or recognizance, shall affect lands in the west riding, but from the time that a memorial thereof be entered in the registrar's office. Ibid.

On certificate that money due on mortgage, judgment, statute, or recognizance, is paid, the registrar shall make an entry thereof. Ibid.

By 6 Ann, c. 35. a register-office, under like directions, is established for the east riding of Yorkshire, and the town of Kingston-upon-Hull; which office is directed to be held at Beverley. And the 8 Geo. 2. c. 6. establishes a like office for the north riding, to be held at such place as the justices of peace adjudge most central.

By 7 Ann, c. 20. all conveyances and wills that may affect any lands in Middlesex may be registered; and every conveyance or will shall be void against any after-purchaser, unless such memorial thereof be registered before that under which the subsequent purchaser claims.

The clerk of enrolment in chancery for Middlesex (the master of the king's bench office, by 25 Geo. 2. c. 4.) the clerk of the warrants in the common pleas, and the remembrancer, or his deputy, in the exchequer, shall be registrars; the office shall be kept near the inns of court; and the deputy shall be approved by the lord chancellor, who may make rules and orders. Ibid.

Memorials shall be on parchment attested, specifying the date, and effect of the deed, and a certificate indorsed shall be evidence; and the register shall be paged, numbered, and entered, in order of time. Ibid.

Memorials of wills shall be registered in six months after the death of a testator in Great Britain; if dying beyond sea, in three years. Ibid.

The registrar shall be allowed, for the entry of every memorial of 200 words, 1*s.*; and 6*d.* for every 100 words after. Ibid.

This act does not extend to copyhold estates, or leases at a rack-rent, or to any chambers in the inns of court. Ibid.

And no judgments, statutes, or recognizances, other than to the crown, shall bind lands in Middlesex, but from the time of memorial thereof registered. Ibid. 63.

The statutes were intended to give notice of incumbrances to purchasers, that they may not be defrauded; but if a man knows of an incumbrance, and will notwithstanding purchase, he is bound, though the incumbrance was not registered. 1 Strange, 664. 1 Ves. 64.

And the registry of an assignment, or mortgage of a lease, will not bar a subsequent purchaser, if the lease itself is not registered. 2 Strange, 1064.

REGISTRY OF SEAMEN. About the middle of king William's reign a scheme was set on foot (Stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 21.) for a register of seamen, to the number of thirty thousand, for a constant and regular supply of the king's fleet, with great privileges to the registered men; and, on the other hand, heavy penalties in case of their non-appearance when called for: but this registry being judged to be ineffectual, as well as oppressive, was abolished by 9 Ann, c. 21.

A very judicious plan for supplying the navy with seamen, upon any emergency, without resorting to the expedient of impressing them, has however been laid before the editor of this dictionary by captain Patrick Holland, of North Shields, who was encouraged therein by the late lord Melville. The leading principle is to let the shipowners raise amongst themselves, upon bounties, the number of men wanted, according to the tonnage of their respective ships, and which they can on any emergency almost instantaneously do: to permit this would certainly not only encourage the increase of British seamen, who fly to neutrals to avoid the impress, but also keep down the war charges.

REGIUS PROFESSOR, a reader of lectures in the universities, founded by the king: king Hen. 8. was the founder of five lectures in each university of Oxford and Cambridge, viz. of divinity, Greek, Hebrew, law, and physic, the readers of which are called, in the university statutes, regii prof ssores. Cowell. Blount.

REGNI POPULI, a name given to the people of Surrey and Sussex, and on the sea-coasts of Hampshire. Blount.

REGNUM ECCLESIASTICUM. In some countries, formerly, the clergy held there was a double supreme power, or two kingdoms in every kingdom; the one a regnum ecclesiasticum, absolute and independent of any but the pope, over ecclesiastical men and causes, exempt from the secular magistrate; the other a regnum seculare, of the king or civil magistrate, which had subordination and subjection to the ecclesiastical kingdom; but these usurpations and absurdities were exterminated by Henry 8. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 324.

REGRATOR, (regratarius, Fr. regrateur) one who buys and sells any wares or victuals in the same market or fair; and regrators are, by stat. 5. c. 6. Ed. 6. c. 14. described to be those who buy or get into their hands, in fairs or markets, any grain, fish, butter, cheese, sheep, lambs, calves, swine, pigs, geese, capons, hens, chickens, pigeons, conies, or other dead victuals whatsoever, brought to a fair or market to be sold there, and do sell the same again in the same fair, market, or place, or in some other within four miles thereof. See Forestaller.

REGULARS, (regulares) such as professed to live under some certain rule: such as monks, or canon regulars, who were always to be under some rule of obedience. Cowell.

REGULUS, SUBREGULUS, words often mentioned in the councils of the English Saxons: the first signifies comes, the other vicecomes; but in many places they signify the same dignitary. Cowell.

REHABERE FACIAS SEISINAM, (quando vicecomes liberavit seisinam de maiore parte, quam deberet) is a writ judicial, of which there is another of the same name and nature. Reg. Judic. 13. 51. 54. Cowell. Blount.

REHABILITATION, (rehabilitatio) a restoring to former ability; one of those exactions claimed by the pope, by his bull or brief, for re-enabling a spiritual person to exercise his function who had been disabled. Cowell. Blount.

REHEARING. If by a decree either party thinks himself aggrieved, he may petition the chancellor for a rehearing, whether it was heard before his lordship, or any of the judges sitting for him, or before the master of the rolls; for whoever may have heard the cause, it is the chancellor's decree, and must be signed by him before it is enrolled, (3 Geo. 2. c. 30.) which is done, of course, unless a rehearing be desired. Every petition for a rehearing must be signed by two counsel of character, usually such as have been concerned in the cause, certifying that they apprehend the cause is proper to be reheard. And upon the rehearing all the evidence taken in the cause, whether read before or not, is now admitted to be read: because it is the decree of the chancellor himself, who only now sits to hear reasons why it should not be enrolled and perfected; at which time all omissions of either evidence or argument may be supplied; but, after the decree is once signed and enrolled, it cannot be reheard or rectified but by bill of review, or by appeal to the house of lords. 3 Black. 453. Gilb. Rep. 151. 152.

REJOINDER, (rejunctio) is where the defendant in any action makes answer to the plaintiff's replication: and it is an exception or answer thereto. 2 Lil. Abr. 433.

RELATION, (relatio) is where, in consideration of law, two different times, or other things, are accounted as one; and by some act done, the thing subsequent is said to take effect by relation from the time preceding: as if one deliver a writing to another, to be delivered to a third person, as the deed of him who made it, when such third person hath paid a sum of money; now when the money is paid, and the writing delivered, this shall be taken as the deed of him who made and delivered it, at the time of its first delivery, to which it has relation; and so things relating to a time long before, shall be as if they were done at that time; such as an admission to a copyhold, under a previous surrender, the admission has relation back to the surrender. Terms de Ley. Shep. Epit. [illegible]

This device is to help acts [illegible] and make a thing take effect: but it must relate to the same thing, the same intent, and between the same parties only; and shall never be taken so as to operate wrongly, or lay a charge upon a person that is no party. Co. Lit. 190. 1 Rep. 99. Plowd. 188.

RELATIONS, (private.) The three great relations in private life are, 1. That of master and servant, which is founded in convenience, whereby a man is directed to call in the assistance of others, where his own skill and labour will not be sufficient to answer the cares incumbent upon him. 2. That of husband and wife, which is founded in nature, but modified by civil society: the one directing man to continue and multiply his species; the other prescribing the manner in which that natural impulse must be confined and regulated. 3. That of parent and child, which is consequential to that of marriage, being its principal end and design: and it is by virtue of this relation that infants are protected, maintained, and educated; but since the parents, on whom this care is primarily incumbent, may be snatched away by death before they have completed their duty, the law has therefore provided a fourth relation; 4. That of guardian and ward, which is a kind of artificial parentage, in order to supply the deficiency, whenever it happens, of the natural. 1 Black. 422.

RELATIONS, (public) the most universal public relation by which men are connected together is that of government, namely, as governors and governed; or, in other words, as magistrates and people. 1 Black. 146.

RELATOR. Whenever it is necessary for the attorney-general, at the relation of some informant, to file an information in equity, ex officio, to have a charity properly established, or better regulated, the informer is called the relator.

RELEASE, (relaxatio) is an instrument whereby estates, or other things, are extinguished, conveyed, and transferred, abridged, or enlarged. West Symbol. part 1. lib. 2. sect. 509.

And it is a general rule in the construction of releases, that where there are general words only in a release, they shall be taken most strongly against the releasor; but where there is a particular recital in a deed, and then general words follow, the general words shall be qualified by the special words. 1 Mod. 99. 1 Ld. Raym. 235.

A release of all claims and demands is the best release to him to whom it is made; and Coke says, that the word DEMAND is the largest word in law except claim; and that a release of demands discharges all sorts of actions, rights and titles, conditions before or after breach, executions, appeals, rents of all kinds, covenants, annuities, contracts, recognizances, statutes, commons, &c. then immediately existing. Litt. sect. 508. 509. Co. Litt. 291. See also Lease and Release.

RELEGATION, (relegatio) a banishing, or sending away; as abjuration is forswearing the realm for ever, so relegation is banishment for a time only. Co. Lit. 133.

RELIEF, (relevamen: but, in domesday, relevatio, relevium) a certain sum of money which the tenant, holding by knight's service, grant serjeanty, or other tenure, (for which homage or legal service was due) and being at full age at the death of his ancestor, paid unto his lord at his entrance. Mag. Char. cap. 2. Cowell. Blount.

Reliefs had their origin while feuds were only life estates, for a feudatory or beneficiary estate in lands was at first granted only for life; and after death of the vassal it returned to the chief lord, for which reason it was called feudum caducum, viz. fallen to the lord by the death of the tenant; afterwards these feudatory estates being turned into inheritances by the connivance and assent of the chief lord, when the possessor of such an estate died, it was called hæreditas caduca, i. e. it was fallen to the chief lord, to whom the heir having paid a certain sum of money, he did then relevare hæreditatem caducam out of his hands; and the money thus paid was called a relief. 2 Black. 52. 64.

Relief was due upon socage tenure as upon tenures in chivalry, but the manner of entering it was very different; the relief on a knight's fee was 5*l.* or one quarter of the supposed value of the land: but a socage relief was one year's rent or render, payable by the tenant to the lord, be the same either great or small: and therefore Bracton will not allow this to be properly a relief, but quædam præstatio loco relevii in recognitionem domini. So too the stat. 28 Edw. 1. c. 1. declares, that a free sokeman shall give no relief, but shall double his rent after the death of his ancestor, according to that which he hath used to pay his lord, and shall not be grieved above measure. Reliefs in knight-service were only payable if the heir, at the death of his ancestor, was of full age; but in socage they were due even though the heir was under age, because the lord has no wardship over him. The statute of Charles 2. reserves the reliefs incident to socage tenures; and therefore, wherever lands in fee simple are holden by a rent, relief is still due of common right upon the death of a tenant. Litt. s. 126. L. 2. c. 5. s. 5. Litt. s. 127. 3 Lev. 145.

RELIGION, (religio). All blasphemies against God, as denying his being or providence, all profane scoffing at the holy scriptures, or exposing any part to contempt or ridicule, all impostures in religion, as falsely pretending to extraordinary commissions from God, and terrifying or abusing the people with false denunciations of judgments, &c. inasmuch as they tend to subvert all religion or morality, which are the foundation of government, are punishable by the temporal judges with fine and imprisonment, and also such corporal infamous punishment as to the court, in discretion, shall seem meet, according to the heinousness of the crime. 1 Hawk. P. C. 6. 7.

So also seditious words in derogation of the established religion are indictable, as tending to a breach of the peace. 1 Hawk. P. C. 7.

RELIGIOUS HOUSES. (religiosæ domus) houses set apart for pious uses, such as monasteries, churches, hospitals, and all other places where charity was extended to the relief of the poor and orphans, or for the use or exercise of religion. Cowell. Blount.

RELIGIOUS MEN, (religiosi) such as enter into some monastery or convent, there to live devoutly. Ibid.

RELIGIOUS ORDERS. See Ordination.

RELINQUISHMENT, is the abandonment or giving up a right or demand. Style, 175. Dyer, 66. 11 Rep. 59.

RELIQUES, (reliquiæ) are some remainders, such as the bones, &c. of saints, who are dead, preserved by persons living with great veneration, as sacred memorials of them: forbidden to be used or brought into England. Jac. 1. c. 26.

REMAINDER IN CHATTELS PERSONAL. By the rules of the ancient common law, there could be no future property, to take place in expectancy, created in personal goods and chattels; because, being things transitory, and by many accidents subject to be lost, destroyed, or otherwise impaired, and the exigencies of trade requiring also a frequent circulation thereof, it would occasion perpetual suits and quarrels, and put a stop to the freedom of commerce, if such limitations in remainder were generally tolerated and allowed. However, in last wills and testaments such limitations of personal goods and chattels, in remainder, after a bequest for life, were permitted, (1 Equ. Cas. abr. 360.) though originally that indulgence was only shewn when merely the use of the goods, and not the goods themselves, was given to the first legatee (Mar. 106.); the property being supposed to continue all the time in the executor of the devisor. But now that distinction is disregarded (2 Freem. 206.): and therefore if a man, either by deed or will, limits his books or furniture to A for life, with remainder over to B, this remainder is good. But where an estate-tail in things personal is given to the first or any subsequent possessor, it vests in him the total property, and no remainder over shall be permitted on such a limitation (P. Wms. 290.); for this, if allowed, would tend to a perpetuity, as the devisee or grantee in tail of a chattel has no method of barring the intail, and therefore the law vests in him at once the entire dominion of the goods. 3 Black. 397.

REMAINDER IN LANDS. An estate in remainder may be defined to be, an estate limited to take effect and be enjoyed after another estate is determined; as if a man seised in fee-simple granteth lands to A for twenty years, and, after the determination of the said term then to B, and his heirs for ever: here A is tenant for years, remainder to B in fee. In the first place an estate for years is created or carved out of the fee, and given to A; and the residue or remainder of it is given to B. But both these interests are in fact only one estate; the present term of years, and the remainder afterwards, when added together, being equal only to one estate in fee. They are indeed different parts, but they constitute only one whole: they are carved out of one and the same inheritance: they are both created, and may both subsist together; the one in possession, the other in expectancy. So if land be granted to A for twenty years, and after the determination of the said term to B for life; and after the determination of B's estate for life, it be limited to C and his heirs for ever: this makes A tenant for years, with remainder to B for life, remainder over to C in fee. Now here the estate of inheritance undergoes a division into three portions; there is first A's estate for years carved out of it; and after that B's estate for life; and then the whole that remains is limited to C, and his heirs. And here also the first estate, and both the remainders, for life and in fee, are one estate only, being nothing but parts or portions of one entire inheritance: and if there were a hundred remainders, it would still be the same thing, upon a principle grounded in mathematical truth, that all the parts are equal, and no more than equal to the whole. And hence also it is easy to collect, that no remainder can be limited after the grant of an estate in fee-simple; because a fee-simple is the highest and largest estate that a subject is capable of enjoying; and he that is tenant in fee hath in him the whole of the estate: a remainder therefore, which is only a portion, or residuary part of the estate, cannot be reserved after the whole is disposed of. A particular estate, with all the remainders expectant thereon, is only one fee simple; as 40*l.* is part of 100*l.* and 60*l.* is the remainder of it: wherefore, after a fee-simple once vested, there can no more be a remainder limited thereon, than after the whole 100*l.* is appropriated there can be any residue subsisting.

The rules that are laid down by law to be observed in the creation of remainders, and the reasons upon which those rules are founded, are as follows:—

I. First, there must necessarily be some particular estate precedent to the estate in remainder; as, an estate for years to A, remainder to B for life; or, an estate for life to A, remainder to B in tail. This precedent estate is called the particular estate, as being only a small part, or particula, of the inheritance, the residue or remainder of which is granted over to another. The necessity of creating this preceding particular estate, in order to make a good remainder, arises from this plain reason, that remainder is a relative expression, and implies that some part of the thing is previously disposed of: for where the whole is conveyed at once, there cannot possibly exist a remainder; but the interest granted, whatever it be, will be an estate in possession.

An estate created to commence at a distant period of time, without any intervening estate, is therefore properly no remainder: it is the whole of the gift, and not a residuary part; and such future estates can only be made of chattel interests, which were considered in the light of mere contracts by the ancient law, to be executed either now or hereafter, as the contracting parties should agree; but an estate of freehold must be created to commence immediately: for it is an ancient rule of the common law, that an estate of freehold cannot be created to commence in futuro; but it ought to take effect presently either in possession or remainder: because, at common law, no freehold in lands could pass without livery of seisin, which must operate either immediately, or not at all. It would therefore be contradictory if an estate, which is not to commence till hereafter, could be granted by a conveyance which imports an immediate possession. Therefore, though a lease to A. for seven years, to commence from next Michaelmas, is good; yet a conveyance to B. of lands, to hold to him, and his heirs, for ever, from the end of three years next ensuing, is void. So that when it is intended to grant an estate of freehold, whereof the enjoyment shall be deferred till a future time, it is necessary to create a previous particular estate, which may subsist till that period of time is completed; and for the grantor to deliver immediate possession of the land to the tenant of this particular estate, which is construed to be giving possession to him in remainder, since his estate, and that of the particular tenant, are one and the same estate in law. As, where one leases to A. for three years, with remainder to B. in fee, and makes livery of seisin to A.; here by the livery the freehold is immediately created, and vested in B. during the continuance of A.'s term of years. The whole estate passes at once from the grantor to the grantees, and the remainder-man is seised of his remainder at the same time that the termor is possessed of his term. The enjoyment of it must indeed be deferred till hereafter; but it is to all intents and purposes an estate commencing in præsenti, though to be occupied and enjoyed in futuro.

As no remainder can be created without such a precedent particular estate, therefore the particular estate is said to support the remainder. But a lease at will is not held to be such a particular estate as will support a remainder over; for an estate at will is of a nature so slender and precarious, that it is not looked upon as a portion of the inheritance; and a portion must first be taken out of it, in order to constitute a remainder. Besides, if it be a freehold remainder, livery of seisin must be given at the time of its creation: and the entry of the grantor, to do this, determines the estate at will in the very instant in which it is made; or, if the remainder be a chattel interest, though perhaps the deed of creation might operate as a future contract, if the tenant for years be a party to it, yet it is void by way of remainder: for it is a separate independent contract, distinct from the precedent estate at will; and every remainder must be part of one and the same estate, out of which the preceding particular estate is taken. And hence it is generally true, that if the particular estate is void in its creation, or by any means is defeated afterwards, the remainder, supported thereby, shall be defeated also: as where the particular estate is an estate for the life of a person not in esse, or an estate for life upon condition, on breach of which condition the grantor enters and avoids the estate, in either of these cases the remainder over is void.

II. A second rule to be observed is this, that the remainder must commence or pass out of the grantor at the time of the creation of the particular estate; as, where there is an estate to A. for life, with remainder to B. in fee: here B.'s remainder in fee passes from the grantor at the same time that seisin is delivered to A. of his life estate in possession. And it is this, which induces the necessity at common law of livery of seisin being made on the particular estate, whenever a freehold remainder is created; for, if it be limited even on an estate for years, it is necessary that the lessee for years should have livery of seisin, in order to convey the freehold from and out of the grantor, otherwise the remainder is void. Not that the livery is necessary to strengthen the estate for years; but, as livery of the land is requisite to convey the freehold, and yet cannot be given to him in remainder without infringing the possession of the lessee for years, therefore the law allows such livery, made to the tenant of the particular estate, to relate and enure to him in remainder, as both are but one estate in law.

III. A third rule respecting remainders is this, that the remainder must vest in the grantee during the continuance of the particular estate, or eo instanti that it determines. As, if A. be tenant for life, remainder to B. in tail; here B.'s remainder is vested in him, at the creation of the particular estate to A. for life; or, if A. and B. be tenants for their joint lives, remainder to the survivor in fee; here, though during their joint lives the remainder is vested in neither, yet on the death of either of them the remainder vests instantly in the survivor, wherefore both these are good remainders. But, if an estate be limited to A. for life, remainder to the eldest son of B. in tail, and A. dies before B. hath any son; here the remainder will be void, for it did not vest in any one during the continuance, nor at the determination of the particular estate: and, even supposing that B. should afterwards have a son, he shall not take by this remainder; for, as it did not vest at or before the end of the particular estate, it never can vest at all, but is gone for ever. And this depends upon the principle before laid down, that the precedent particular estate, and the remainder, are one estate in law; they must therefore subsist and be in esse at one and the same instant of time, either during the continuance of the first estate, or at the very instant when that determines, so that no other estate can possibly come between them. For there can be no intervening estate between the particular estate, and the remainder supported thereby: the thing supported must fall to the ground, if once its support be severed from it.

It is upon these rules, but principally the last, that the doctrine of contingent remainders depends; for remainders are either vested or contingent. Vested remainders (or remainders executed, whereby a present interest passes to the party, though to be enjoyed in futuro) are where the estate is invariably fixed, to remain to a determinate person, after the particular estate is spent. As if A. be tenant for twenty years, remainder to B. in fee; here B.'s is a vested remainder, which nothing can defeat, or set aside.

Contingent, or executory remainders, (whereby no present interest passes) are where the estate in remainder is limited to take effect, either to a dubious and uncertain person, or upon a dubious and uncertain event; so that the particular estate may chance to be determined, and the remainder never take effect.

First, they may be limited to a dubious and uncertain person; as if A. be tenant for life, with remainder to B.'s eldest son (then unborn) in tail; this is a contingent remainder, for it is uncertain whether B. will have a son or no: but the instant that a son is born, the remainder is no longer contingent, but vested; though if A. had died before the contingency happened, that is, before B.'s son was born, the remainder would have been absolutely gone, for the particular estate was determined before the remainder could vest. Nay, by the strict rule of law, if A. were tenant for life, remainder to his own eldest son in tail, and A. died without issue born, but leaving his wife enseint, or big with child, and after his death a posthumous son was born, this son could not take the land by virtue of this remainder; for the particular estate determined before there was any person in esse, in whom the remainder could vest. But, to remedy this hardship, it is enacted by statute 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 16. that posthumous children shall be capable of taking in remainder, in the same manner as if they had been born in their father's lifetime: that is, the remainder is allowed to vest in them, while yet in their mother's womb.*

This species of contingent remainders to a person not in being, must, however, be limited to some one, that may by common possibility, or, potentia propinqua, be in esse at or before the particular estate determines. As if an estate be made to A. for life, remainder to the heirs of B.; now, if A. dies before B. the remainder is at an end, for during B.'s life he has no heir, nemo est hæres viventis: but if B. dies first, the remainder then immediately vests in his heir, who will be entitled to the land on the death of A. This is a good contingent remainder, for the possibility of B.'s dying before A. is potentia propinqua, and therefore allowed in law. But a remainder to the right heirs of B. (if there be no such person as B. in esse) is void; for here there must two contingencies happen: first, that such a person as B. shall be born; and, secondly, that he shall also die during the continuance of the particular estate, which make it potentia remotissima, a most improbable possibility. A remainder to a man's eldest son, who hath none (we have seen) is good, for by common possibility he may have one; but if it be limited in particular to his son John, or Richard, it is bad, if he have no son of that name; for it is too remote a possibility that he should not only have a son, but a son of a particular name. A limitation of a remainder to a bastard, before it is born, is not good; for though the law allows the possibility of having bastards, it presumes it to be a very remote and improbable contingency. Thus may a remainder be contingent, on account of the uncertainty of the person who is to take it.

A remainder may also be contingent, where the person to whom it is limited is fixed and certain, but the event upon which it is to take effect is vague and uncertain. As, where land is given to A. for life, and in case B. survives him, then with remainder to B. in fee: here B. is a certain person, but the remainder to him is a contingent remainder, depending upon a dubious event, the uncertainty of his surviving A. During the joint lives of A. and B. it is contingent; and if B. dies first, it never can vest in his heirs, but is for ever gone; but if A. dies first, the remainder to B. becomes vested.

Contingent remainders of either kind, if

* A father had devised an estate to his son for life, with a remainder to the first and other sons of the son in tail; the son died, leaving his wife pregnant, who was afterwards delivered of a son: the courts of common pleas and king's bench held clearly, that the grandson not being born at the expiration of the estate for life, was not entitled to take it; but the lords, moved by the hardship of the case, reversed the judgments of the courts below, contrary to the opinions of all the judges. (Reeve v. Long, 1 Salk. 227.) But the house of commons, in reproof of this assumption of legislative authority in the lords, immediately brought in the 10 & 11 W. 3. which passed into a statute. The statute only mentions marriages, and other settlements; and it is probable, that devises were designedly omitted to be expressed, from a delicacy that the authority of the judgment of the peers might not be too openly impeached, as the statute says, the posthumous son in this case shall take the estate as if born before the death of the father, he is entitled to the intermediate profits from the death of the father (3 Atk. 203), which is different from the case of a descent devested by the birth of a posthumous child.

they amount to a freehold, cannot be limited on an estate for years, or any other particular estate, less than a freehold. Thus if land be granted to A. for ten years, with remainder in fee to the right heirs of B. this remainder is void: but if granted to A. for life, with a like remainder, it is good; for, unless the freehold passes out of the grantor at the time when the remainder is created, such freehold remainder is void: it cannot pass out of him, without vesting somewhere; and in the case of a contingent remainder it must vest in the particular tenant, else it can vest nowhere: unless, therefore, the estate of such particular tenant be of a freehold nature, the freehold cannot vest in him, and consequently the remainder is void.

Contingent remainders may be defeated, by destroying or determining the particular estate upon which they depend, before the contingency happens whereby they become vested. Therefore when there is tenant for life, with divers remainders in contingency, he may, not only by his death but by alienation, surrender, or other methods, destroy and determine his own life estate, before any of those remainders vest; * the consequence of which is, that he utterly defeats them all. As, if there be tenant for life, with remainder to his eldest son unborn in tail, and the tenant for life, before any son is born, surrenders his life-estate, he by that means defeats the remainder in tail to his son: for his son not being in esse, when the particular estate determined, the remainder could not then vest; and, as it could not vest then, by the rules before laid down, it never can vest at all. In these cases, therefore, it is necessary to have trustees appointed to preserve the contingent remainders, in whom there is vested an estate in remainder for the life of the tenant for life, to commence when his estate determines. If, therefore, his estate for life determines otherwise than by his death, the estate of the trustees, for the residue of his natural life, will then take effect, and become a particular estate in possession, sufficient to support the remainders depending in contingency. This method is said to have been invented by Sir Orlando Bridgman, Sir Geoffrey Palmer, and other eminent counsel, who betook themselves to conveyancing during the time of the civil wars, in order thereby to secure in family settlements a provision for the future children of an intended marriage, who before were usually left at the mercy of the particular tenant for life: and when, after the restoration, those gentlemen came to fill the first offices of the law, they supported this invention within reasonable and proper bounds, and introduced it into general use. See Moor, 486. 2 Roll. Abr. 797. pl. 12. 2 Sid. 159. 2 Chan. Rep. 170.

In a grant of a fee-simple to A. it is necessary to give it to A. and his heirs; of a fee-tail, to A. and the heirs of his body; and that a grant to A. without any additional words, gives him only an estate for life. Hence the word heirs, in the first case, and the word heirs of the body in the second, are said to be words of limitation, because they limit or describe what interest A. takes by the grant, viz. in one case a fee-simple, in the other a fee-tail: and the heirs in both instances take no interest any farther than as the ancestor may permit the estate to descend to them. But if a remainder is granted, or estate devised to the heirs of A. where no estate of freehold is at the same time given to A. the heir of A. cannot take by descent from A.; but he takes by purchase, under the grant, in the same manner as if the estate had been given to him by his proper name. Here the word heirs is called a word of purchase. Having premised the distinction between words of limitation and words of purchase, it may be observed, that the much-talked-of rule in Shelly's case (1. Co. 104.) is this, viz. "when the ancestor, by any gift or conveyance, takes an estate of freehold, and in the same gift or conveyance an estate is limited, either mediately or immediately, to his heirs in fee or in tail, that always in such cases the heirs are words of limitation, and not words of purchase:" and the remainder is said to be executed in the ancestor, where there is no intermediate estate; or, vested, when an estate for life or in tail intervenes.

As if an estate be given to A. for life, and, after his death, to the heirs of his body; this remainder is executed in A. or it unites with his estate for life; and the effect is the same as if the estate had at once been given to A. and the heirs of his body; which expression limits an estate tail to A. and the issue have no indefeasible interest conveyed to them, but can only take by descent from A. So also if an estate be given to A. for life, with remainder to B. for life, or in tail, remainder to the heirs, or to the heirs of the body of A.; A. takes an estate for life, in this case, with a vested remainder in fee or in tail; and his heir, under this grant, can only take by descent at his death (Fearne, 21.) But when the estate for life, and the remainder in tail or in fee unite and coalesce, and heirs is a word of limitation, the two estates must be created by the same instrument, and must be either both legal, or both trust estates (Doug. 490. 2 T. R. 444.) But an appointment in pursuance of a power, when executed, is to be considered as if it had been inserted in the original deed by which the power of appointment was created (7 T. R. 347.) The rule with regard to the execution or coalition of such estates seems now to be the same in equitable as in legal estates (1 Bro. 206.) And in all these cases where a person has an estate tail, or a vested remainder in tail, he can cut off the expectations or inheritance of his issue, by a fine, or a recovery (Doug. 323.) In order, therefore, to secure a certain provision for children, the method was invented of granting the estate to the father for life, and, after his death, to his first and other sons in tail; for the words son or daughter were held to be words of purchase, and the remainder to them did not, like the remainder to heirs, unite with the prior estate of freehold. But if the son was unborn, the remainder was contingent, and might have been defeated by the alienation of the father by feoffment, fine, or recovery: to prevent this, it was necessary to interpose trustees, to whom the estate is given upon such a determination of the life-estate, and in whom it rests, till the contingent estate, if at all, comes into existence; and thus they are said to support and preserve the contingent remainders. This is called a strict settlement, and is the only mode (executory devises excepted) by which a certain and indefeasible provision can be secured to an unborn child. But in the case of articles or covenants before marriage, for making a settlement upon the husband and wife, and their offspring, if there be a limitation to the parents for life, with a remainder to the heirs of their bodies, the latter words were generally considered as words of purchase, and not of limitation; and a court of equity will decree the articles to be executed in strict settlement. (See Fearne, 124, and examples there cited.) It being the great object of such settlements to secure fortunes for the issue of the marriage, it would be useless to give the parents an estate tail, of which they would almost immediately have the absolute disposal. And therefore the courts of equity will decree the estate to be settled upon the parent or parents for life; and upon the determination of that estate by forfeiture, to trustees to support contingent remainders for their lives; and, after their decease, to the first and other sons successively in tail, with remainder to all the daughters in tail as tenants in common, with subsequent remainders or provisions, according to the occasions and intentions of the parties. In these strict settlements, the estate is unalienable till the first son attains the age of 21, who, if his father is dead, has then, as tenant in tail, full power over the estate; or, if his father is living, he then can bar his own issue by a fine, independent of the father (Cruise, 161.) But the father, and the son at that age, can cut off all the subsequent limitations, and dispose of the estate in any manner they please, by joining a common recovery. This is the origin of the vulgar error, that a tenant of an estate-tail must have the consent of his eldest son to enable him to cut off the entail; for that is necessary where the father has only a life-estate, and his eldest son has the remainder in tail. But there is no method whatever of securing an estate to the grandchildren of a person, who is without children at the time of the settlement, for the law will not permit a perpetuity; and lord Thurlow has defined a perpetuity to be "any extension of an estate beyond a life in being, and 21 years after." (2 Bro. 90.) Hence, where in a settlement the father has a power to appoint an estate to or amongst his children, he cannot afterwards give this to his children in strict settlement, or give any of his sons an estate for life, with a remainder in tail to his eldest son; for if he could do this, a perpetuity would be created by the original settlement. 2 T. R. 241. See Executory Devise.

* But a conveyance of a greater estate than he has by bargain and sale, or by lease and release, is no forfeiture, and will not defeat a contingent remainder. 2 Leo. 60. 3 Mod. 151.

But the tenant for life may bar the contingent remainders by a feoffment, a fine, or a recovery. 1 Co. 66. Cro. Eliz. 630. 1 Salk. 224.

Where there is a tenant for life, with all the subsequent remainders contingent, and he suffers a recovery to the use of himself in fee, he has a right to this tortious fee against all persons but the heirs of the grantor or devisor. 1 Salk. 224.

REMAINDER, (formedon in). A formedon in the remainder lieth, where a man giveth lands to another for life or in tail, with remainder to a third person in tail or in fee; and he who hath the particular estate dieth, without issue inheritable, and a stranger intrudes upon him in remainder, and keeps him out of possession. In this case the remainder-man shall have his writ of formedon in the remainder, wherein the whole form of the gift is stated, and the happening of the event upon which the remainder depended. This writ is not given in express words by the statute de donis; but is founded upon the equity of the statute, and upon this maxim in law, that if any one hath a right to the land, he ought also to have an action to recover it.

A formedon in the reverter lieth, where there is a gift in tail, and afterwards by the death of the donee, or his heirs, without issue of his body, the reversion falls in upon the donor, his heirs or assigns; in such case the reversioner shall have this writ to recover the lands, wherein he shall suggest the gift, his own title to the reversion minutely derived from the donor, and the failure of issue upon his reversion takes place. This lay at common law, before the statute de donis, if the donee aliened before he had performed the condition of the gift, by having issue, and afterwards died without any.

REMANET IN CUSTODIA. Entry of an action in the marshal's book, by reman. custod. where a man is actually in custody, is a good commencement of an action in B. R. 3 Salk. 150.

REMEDY, (Remedium.) The means given by law for recovery of a right or recompence; and there is a maxim, Lex semper dabit remedium. Stud. Compan. 177. 179. Wood's Inst. 528, 529, 530.

REMEMBRANCERS, (Rememoratores.) Formerly called Clerks of the Remembrance, are officers of the exchequer, of which there are three: 1, The king's remembrancer; 2, The lord treasurer's remembrancer; and 3, The remembrancer of first-fruits.

The king's remembrancer enters into his office all recognizances taken before the barons for any of the king's debts, for appearances, &c. and he takes all bonds for such debts, and makes out process for breach of them; also he writes process against the collectors of customs, subsidies, excise, and other public payments for their accounts.

The treasurer's remembrancer issues out process of fieri facias and extents, for debts to the king; and against sheriffs, escheators, &c. not accounting; he takes the accounts of all sheriffs, and makes the record, whereby it appears whether sheriffs and other accountants pay their profers due at Easter and Michaelmas; and he makes another record, whether sheriffs and other accountants keep their days prefixed. There are also brought into his office all the accounts of customers, comptrollers, and accountants, to make entry thereof on record. All estreats of fines, issues, and amerciaments, set in any of the courts at Westminster, or at the assises or sessions, are certified into his office, and by him delivered to the clerk of the estreats to make out process on them; and he may issue process for discovery of tenures, and all such revenue as is due to the crown by reason thereof, &c.

The remembrancer of the First-Fruits office is to take all compositions, and bonds for payments of first-fruits and tenths; he makes process against all such persons as do not pay the same. Stat. 35 Eliz. cap. 3. 5 R. 2. c. 14.

REMITTER, (from the Lat. remittere, to restore or send back.) Remitter is where he, who hath the true property or jus proprietatis in lands, but is out of possession thereof, and hath no right to enter without recovering possession in an action, hath afterwards the freehold cast upon him by some subsequent, and of course, defective title. In this case he is remitted, or sent back, by operation of law, to his ancient and more certain title. The right of entry, which he hath gained by a bad title, shall be ipso facto annexed to his own inherent good one; and his defeasible estate shall be utterly defeated and annulled, by the instantaneous act of law, without his participation or consent. As if A. disseises B, that is, turns him out of possession, and dies leaving a son C.; hereby the estate descends to C. the son of A., and B. is barred from entering thereon till he proves his right in an action. Now, if afterwards C. the heir of the disseisor makes a lease for life to D., with remainder to B. the disseisee for life, and D. dies, hereby the remainder accrues to B., the disseisee; who thus gaining a new freehold by virtue of the remainder, which is a bad title, is by act of law remitted, or invested of his former and surer estate. For he hath hereby gained a new right of possession, to which the law immediately annexes his ancient right of property.

If the subsequent estate, or right of possession, be gained by a man's own act or consent, as by immediate purchase being of full age, he shall not be remitted; for the taking such subsequent estate was his own folly, and shall be looked upon as a waiver of his prior right. Therefore it is to be observed, that to every remitter there are regularly these incidents: an ancient right, and a new defeasible estate of freehold, uniting in one and the same person; which defeasible estate must be cast upon the tenant, not gained by his own act or folly. The reason given by Littleton, why this remedy, which operates silently and by the mere act of law, was allowed, is because otherwise he who hath right would be deprived of all remedy. For as he himself is the person in possession of the freehold, there is no other person against whom he can bring an action to establish his prior right. And for this cause the law doth adjudge him in by remitter, that is, in such plight as if he had lawfully recovered the same land by suit. For, as Lord Bacon observes, the benignity of the law is such, as when, to preserve the principles and grounds of law, it depriveth a man of his remedy without his own fault, it will rather put him in a better degree and condition than in a worse. Nam quod remedio destituitur, ipsa re valet: si culpa absit. But here shall be no remitter to a right, for which the party has no remedy by action: as if the issue in tail be barred by the fine or warranty of his ancestor, and the freehold s afterwards cast upon him, he shall not be remitted to his estate tail; for the operation of the remitter is exactly the same after the union of the two rights, as that of a real action would have been before it. As, therefore, the issue in tail could not by any action have recovered his ancient estate, he shall not recover it by remitter. Moor 115. And. 286.

REMITTITUR. The entry in B. R. on a writ of error abating in the exchequer chamber, &c. is called by this name. See Error.

REMOVAL OF POOR. See Settlements and Removal's.

REMOVER. Is where a suit or cause is removed out of one court into another: and for this there are divers writs and means. 11 Rep. 41.

RENANT, or rather renant, i. e. negans, from the Fr. renier, negare, to deny or refuse. Cowell.

RENDER, (Fr. rendre, viz. reddere.) Signifies to yield, give again, or return, as in levying a double fine, is to grant and render back again the land, &c. to the cognisor. West's Symb.

RENOVANT, (from renovo.) To renew or make again: thus, a parson sued one for tithes, to be paid of things renovant, &c. Cro. Jac. 430.

RENT, (redditus, in Latin, from redeunde, because, as Fleta tells us, Retroit & quotannis redit. lib. 3. c. 14.) Signifies with us a sum of money, or other compensation or return issuing yearly out of lands or tenements corporal. Plowden 132. 138. 141. 2 Black. 41.

It must be a profit; yet there is no occasion for it to be, as it usually is, a sum of money, for spurs, capons, horses, corn, and other matters, may be rendered, and frequently are rendered by way of rent. It may also consist in services or manual operations: as, to plough so many acres of ground, to attend the king or the lord to the wars, and the like; which services in the eye of the law are profits. This profit must also be certain, or that which may be reduced to a certainty by either party. It must also issue yearly, though there is no occasion for it to issue every successive year, but it may be reserved every second, third, or fourth year; yet, as it is to be produced out of the profits of lands and tenements, as a recompence for being permitted to hold or enjoy them, it ought to be reserved yearly, because those profits do annually arise and are annually renewed. It must issue out of the thing granted, and not be part of the land or thing itself; wherein it differs from an exception in the grant, which is always of part of the thing granted. It must, lastly, issue out of lands and tenements corporeal; that is, from some inheritance whereunto the owner or grantee of the rent may have recourse to distrain. Therefore a rent cannot be reserved out of an advowson, a common, an office, a franchise, or the like. But a grant of such annuity or sum may operate as a personal contract, and oblige the grantor to pay the money reserved, or subject him to an action of debt, though it doth not affect the inheritance, and is no legal rent in contemplation of law.

There can be no doubt but the lessee of tithes, an advowson, or any incorporeal hereditament, would be liable to an action of debt for the rent agreed upon. And in 2 Wood. 69, where this passage is taken notice of, it is observed, that there are at common law three manner of rents, rent-service, rent-charge, and rent-seck. Rent-service is so called because it has some corporal service incident to it, as at the least fealty or the feodal oath of fidelity. For, if a tenant holds his lands by fealty, and ten shillings rent, or by the service of ploughing the lord's land, and five shillings rent, these pecuniary rents, being connected with personal services, are therefore called rent-service. And for these, in case they be behind, or arrere, at the day appointed, the lord may distrein of common right, without reserving any special power of distress, provided he hath in himself the reversion or future estate of the lands and tenements, after the lease or particular estate of the lessee or grantee is expired. A rent-charge is where the owner of the rent hath no future interest, or reversion expectant in the land: as where a man by deed maketh over to others his whole estate in fee simple, with a certain rent payable thereout, and adds to the deed a covenant or clause of distress, that if the rent be arrere, or behind, it shall be lawful to distrain for the same. In this case the land is liable to the distress, not of common right, but by virtue of the clause in the deed; and therefore it is called a rent-charge, because in this manner the land is charged with a distress for the payment of it. Rent-seck, reditus siccus, or barren rent, is in effect nothing more than a rent reserved by deed, but without any clause of distress.

There are also other species of rents, which are reducible to these three. Rents of assize are the certain established rents of the freeholders and ancient copyholders of a manor, which cannot be departed from or varied. Those of the freeholders are frequently called chief rents, reditus capitales; and both sorts are indifferently denominated quit-rents, quietti reditus; because thereby the tenant goes quit and free of all other services. When these payments were reserved in silver or white money, they were anciently called white-rents, or blanch-farms, reditus albi, in contradistinction to rents reserved in work, grain, or baser money, which were called reditus nigri, or black-mail. Rack-rent is only a rent of the full value of the tenement, or near it. A fee-farm rent is a rent-charge issuing out of an estate in fee, of at least one fourth of the value of the lands at the time of its reservation; for a grant of lands, reserving so considerable a rent, is indeed only letting lands to farm in fee simple instead of the usual methods for life or years.

These are the general divisions of rent, but the difference between them, in respect to the remedy for recovering them, is now totally abolished; and all persons may have the like remedy by distress for rents-seck, rents of assise, and chief rents, as in case of rents reserved upon lease, by stat. 4 Geo. 2, c. 28; that is, for such as had been paid for three years, within twenty years before the passing of that act, or for such as have been since created. 4 Geo. 2. c. 28. 4. 5. Doug. 602.

Rent is regularly due and payable upon the land from whence it issues, if no particular place is mentioned in the reservation; but in case of the king, the payment must be either to his officers at the exchequer, or to his receiver in the country. And, strictly, the rent is demandable and payable before the time of sun-set of the day whereon it is reserved, though perhaps not absolutely due till midnight. If the lessor dies before sun-set on the day upon which the rent is demandable, it is clearly settled that the rent unpaid is due to his heir, and not to his executor; but if he dies after sun-set and before midnight, it seems to be the better opinion, that it shall go to the executor and not to the heir. 1 P. Wms. 178. See also Distress, Ejectment, Replevin.

In Scotland, this kind of small payment is called blanch-holding, or reditus albæ firmæ.

RENTAL, or RENT-ROLL. A roll wherein the rents of a manor are written and set down, by which the lord's bailiff collects the same. Compl. Court Keep. 473.

RENTS OF ASSISE. The certain rents of freeholders and ancient copyholders, so called because they were assised, and different from others which were uncertain, paid in corn, &c. 2 Inst. 19.

RENTS RESOLUTE, (Redditus resoluti.) Rents or tenths. Renewal of leases were anciently payable to the crown, from the lands of abbeys and religious houses; and which, after their dissolution, were still reserved, and made payable again to the crown. Cowell.

REPAIRS. A tenant for life or years may cut down timber-trees to make reparations, although he be not compelled thereto; as, where a house is ruinous at the time of the lease made, and the lessee suffers it to fall, he is not bound to rebuild it; and yet if he fell timber for reparations, he may justify the same. Co. Lit. 54.

And a lessee for years, whether there be an express covenant or not, is bound to repair, but a tenant at will is not.

REPARATIONE FACIENDA. A writ which lies in many cases; one whereof is, where there are tenants in common or joint tenants of a house, &c. which is fallen to decay, and one is willing to repair it, but the others are not. In this case the party willing to repair the same shall have this writ against the others. F. N. B. 127.

And if a man have a house adjoining to my house, and he suffer his house to lie in decay to the annoyance of my house, I may have a writ against him to repair his house. So, if a person have a passage over a bridge, and another ought to repair the bridge, who suffers it to fall to decay, &c. New Nat. Br. 281.

REPEAL, (from the Fr. rappel, i. e. revocatio.) Signifies the same with revoke; as, the repealing of a statute or will is the revoking or disannulling it. Rastal. Style. 241.

REPLEADER, (Replacitare.) Is to plead that again which was once pleaded before. Broke.

If, by the misconduct or inadvertence of the pleaders, the issue be joined on a fact totally immaterial, or insufficient to determine the right, so that the court upon the finding cannot know for whom judgment ought to be given; as if, on an action on the case in assumpsit against an executor, he pleads that he himself (instead of the testator) made no such promise; or if, in an action of debt on bond conditioned to pay money on or before a certain day, the defendant pleads payment on the day (which, if found for the plaintiff, would be inconclusive, as it might have been paid before; in these cases the court will, after verdict, award a repleader, quod partes replacitent, unless it appears from the whole record that nothing material can possibly be pleaded in any shape whatsoever, and then a repleader would be fruitless. And, whenever a repleader is granted, the pleadings must begin de novo at that stage of them, whether it be the plea, replication, or rejoinder, &c. wherein there appears to have been the first defect, or deviation from the regular course. Ventr. 196. Stra. 994. 3 Black. 395.

REPLEGIARE. Is to redeem a thing detained or taken by another, by putting in legal sureties. See Replevin.

REPLEGIARE DE AVERIIS. A writ brought by one whose cattle are distrain-ed, or put in the pound on any cause by another person, on surety given to the sheriff to prosecute or answer the action at law. F. N. B. 68. Reg. Orig. Stat. 7 H. 8. c. 4.

REPLEVIN, (Plevina from replegiare, to deliver to the owner on pledges.)

The action of replevin is founded upon a distress taken wrongfully and without sufficient cause: being a redelivery of the pledge or thing taken in distress, to the owner, upon his giving security to try the right of distress, and to restore it if the right be adjudged against him (Co. Litt. 145.) And formerly, when the party distrained upon intended to dispute the right of the distress, he had no other process by the old common law than by a writ of replevin, replegiari facias, F. N. B. 68.; which issued out of chancery, commanding the sheriff to deliver the distress to the owner, and afterwards to do justice in respect of the matter in dispute in his own county court. But this being a tedious method of proceeding, the beasts or other goods were long detained from the owner, to his great loss and damage. 2 Inst. 139. For which reason the statute of Marlbridge (52 Hen. 3. c. 21.) directs, that (without suing a writ out of chancery) the sheriff, immediately upon complaint to him made, shall proceed to replevy the goods. And, for the greater ease of the parties, it is farther provided by statute 1 Ph. & Mar. c. 12. that the sheriff shall make at least four deputies in each county, for the sole purpose of making replevins. Upon application, therefore, either to the sheriff, or one of his said deputies, security is to be given, in pursuance of the stat. of Westm. 2. 13 Edw. 1. c. 2. 1, That the party replevying will pursue his action against the destrainor, for which purpose he puts in plegios de prosequendo, or pledges to prosecute; and 2, That if the right be determined against him, he will return the distress again; for which purpose he is also bound to find plegios de retorno habendo. Besides these pledges, which are merely discretionary in the sheriff, the statute 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. requires that the officer, granting a replevin on a distress for rent, shall take a bond with two sureties in a sum of double the value of the goods distrained; which bond shall be assigned to the avowant, or person making cognizance, on request made to the sheriff; and, if forfeited, may be sued in the name of the assignee.

The sheriff, on receiving such security, is immediately, by his officers, to cause the chattels taken in distress to be restored into the possession of the party distrained upon, unless the distrainer claims a property in the goods so taken. For if by this method of distress the distrainer happens to come again into possession of his own property in goods which before he had lost, the law allows him to keep them, without any reference to the manner by which he thus has regained possession, being a kind of personal remitter. If, therefore, the distrainer claims any such property, the party replevying must sue out a writ de proprietate probanda, in which the sheriff is to try, by an inquest, in whom the property previous to the distress subsisted. (Finch, L. 316.) And if it be found to be in the distrainor, the sheriff can proceed no farther, but must return the claim of property to the court of king's bench or common pleas, to be there farther prosecuted, if thought advisable, and there finally determined. 3 Black. 148.

But if no claim of property be put in, or if, upon trial, the sheriff's inquest determines it against the distrainor, then the sheriff is to replevy the goods (making use of even force, if the distrainer makes resistance, 2 Inst. 193,) in case the goods be found within his county. But if the distress be carried out of the county, or concealed, then the sheriff may return that the goods, or beasts, are eloigned, elongata, carried to a distance, to places to him unknown; and thereupon the party replevying shall have a writ of capias in withernam, or in vetito namio, a term which signifies a second or reciprocal distress, in lieu of the first which was eloigned. It is therefore a command to the sheriff to take other goods of the distrainor, in lieu of the distress formerly taken and eloigned, or withheld from the owner. F. N. B. 69, 73. So that here is now distress against distress; one being taken to answer the other by way of reprisal and as a punishment for the illegal behaviour of the original distrainor. For which reason goods taken in withernam cannot be replevied, till the original distress is forthcoming. Raym. 475. 3 Black. Com. 149.

But, in common cases, the goods are delivered back to the party replevying, who is bound to bring his action of replevin; which may be prosecuted in the county court, be the distress of what value it may. 2 Inst. 139. But either party may remove it to the superior courts; the plaintiff at pleasure, the defendant upon reasonable cause, F. N. B. 69. 70. And also, if in the course of proceeding any right of freehold comes in question, the sheriff can proceed no farther, 2 Finch. L. 317.; so that it is usual to carry it up in the first instance to the courts of Westminster-hall. Upon this action brought, the distreinor, who is now the defendant, makes avowry; that is, he avows taking the distress in his own right, or the right of his wife, 2 Saund. 195: and sets forth the reason of it, as for rent arrere, damage done, or other cause; or else, if he justifies in another's right, as his bailiff or servant, he is said to make cognizance; that is, he acknowledges the taking, but insists that such taking was legal, as he acted by the command of one who had a right to distrein; and on the truth and legal merits of this avowry or cognizance the cause is determined. If it be determined for the plaintiff, viz. that the distress was wrongfully taken; he has already got his goods back into his own possession, and shall keep them, and moreover recover damages, F. N. B. 69. But if the defendant prevails, and obtains judgment that the distress was legal, then he shall have a writ de retorno habendo, whereby the goods or chattels (which were distreined and then replevied) are returned again into his custody; to be sold, or otherwise disposed of, as if no replevin had been made. Or, in case of rent arrere, he may have a writ to inquire into the value of the distress by a jury, and shall recover the amount of it in damages, if less than the arrear of rent; or, if more, then so much as shall be equal to such arrear; and, if the distress be insufficient, he may take a farther distress or distresses, (stat. 17 Car. 2. c. 7.): but otherwise, if, pending a replevin for a former distress, a man distreins again for the same rent or service, then the party is not driven to his action of replevin, but shall have a writ of recaption, F. N. B. 71., and recover damages for the defendant's contempt of the process of law. 3 Black. Com. 150.

REPLEVY. Tenants having their goods taken as a distress for rent, are to replevy them in five days, or they may be appraised and sold, by stat. 2 Wm. & Mar. sess. 1. c. 5.

To replevy is also used for the bailing a man. Stat. Westm. 1. c. 11. See Homine Replegiando.

REPLEVISH. Signifies to let one to mainprise on surety. 3 Edw. 1. cap. 11.

REPLICATION, (replicatio.) Is an answer made by the plaintiff to the defendant's plea. And it is also that which the complainant puts in to a defendant's answer in the courts of equity. West's Symb. par. 2.

REPLICATION IN CRIMINAL CASES. When the prisoner hath pleaded not guilty, non culpabilis, or nient culpable, which was formerly used to be abbreviated upon the minutes, thus, "non (or nient) cul," the clerk of the assise, or clerk of the arraigns, on behalf of the crown, REPLIES, that the prisoner is guilty, and that he is ready to prove him so. This is done by two monosyllables in the same spirit of abbreviation, "cul. prit." which signifies first that the prisoner is guilty, (cul. culpable, or culpabilis,) and then that the king is ready to prove him so; prit, præsto sum, or paratus verificare. This is therefore a replication on behalf of the king viva voce at the bar, which was formerly the course in all pleadings, as well in civil as in criminal causes.

REPORT, (from the Lat. reportare.) Is a public relation of cases judicially adjudged in courts of justice, with the reasons as delivered by the judges. Co. Lit. 293.

These reports are handed out to public view in the numerous volumes of reports which furnith the lawyer's library. These reports are histories of the several cases, with a short summary of the proceedings which are preserved at large in the record; the arguments on both sides, and the reasons the court gave for its judgment, taken down in short notes by persons present at the determination. And these serve as indexes to, and also to explain, the records, which always, in matters of consequence and nicety, the judges direct to be searched. 1 Black. 71.

There are likewise reports, when the court of chancery, or other court, refer the taking of accounts or making some inquiry to a master of chancery, or some other officer, whose certificate therein is called a report, on which the court makes an absolute order. Pract. Solic. 67.

REPOSITION OF THE FOREST, (reposito forestæ, i. e. a reputting to.) Was a statute whereby certain forest grounds being made purlieu on view, were by a second view put to the forest again. Manw. par. 1.

REPOSITORIUM, (Lat.) A storehouse or place wherein things are kept; also a warehouse. Cro. Car. 555.

REPRESENTATION. (repræsentatio.) Is a representing or standing in the place of another man. There is an heir by representation, where a father dies in the life of the grandfather, leaving a son, who shall inherit his grandfather's estate, before the father's brother, &c. Bro. Abr. 303. Also executors and administrators in the personal representations of the deceased, to collect and apply his assets. Co. Lit. 209.

REPRIEVE, (from the Fr. repris, though Blackstone takes it from reprendre.) Signifies to take back or suspend a prisoner from the execution and proceeding of law for that time. Terms de Ley. Every judge who hath power to order execution, hath power to grant a reprieve. Kel. 4. 2 Hawk. P. C. 463. Wood's Inst. 662.

REPRISAL, (reprisale, or reprisalia.) Is a species of remedy by the mere act of the party injured. This happens, when any one hath deprived another of his property in goods or chattels personal, or wrongfully detains one's wife, child, or servant; in which case the owner of the goods, and the husband, parent, or master, may lawfully claim and retake them, wherever he happens to find them, so it be not in a riotous manner, or attended with a breach of the peace. 3 Inst. 134. Hal. Anal. § 46. See also Recaption and Letters of Marque.

REPRISES, (Fr. resumptions, or a taking back.) Is used for deductions and payments out of a manor or lands, as rent-charges, annuities, &c. Therefore when we speak of the clear yearly value of a manor or estate or land, we say it is so much per annum besides all reprises. Cowell.

REPUBLICATION. See Will.

REPUGNANT, (repugnans.) Contrary to any thing said before: and repugnancy in deeds, grants, indictments, verdicts, &c. make them void. 3 Nels. 135. Jenk. Cent. 251. 256.

Thus, where an award was, that each should give the other a general release within four days after the award; proviso, that if either disliked the award within twenty days after made, and should pay to the other within the said twenty days ten shillings, that then the arbitrement should be void, the proviso was held repugnant. Cro. Eliz. 291.

REPUTATION, (reputatio.) That is not reputation which this or that man says, but that which generally hath been, and many men have said or thought. 1. Leon. 15. Land may be reputed parcel of a manor, though not really so. 1 Ventr. 51. 2 Mod. 69. 3 Nels. Abr. 137. And there is a parish and office in reputation, &c.

REPUTATION, or GOOD FAME. The security of reputation or good name from the arts of detraction and slander, is one of the rights to which every man is intitled, by reason and natural justice. Therefore, if a man maliciously and falsely utter any slander or false tale of another, which may either endanger him in law, by impeaching him of some heinous crime, as to say that a man hath poisoned another, or is perjured, Finch. L. 185; or which may exclude him from society, as to charge him with having an infectious disease; or which may impair or hurt his trade or livelihood, as to call a tradesman a bankrupt, a physician a quack, or a lawyer a knave, Finch. L. 186. This is such an offence, that the party may recover damages for the injury sustained, in an action upon the case.

Also a man's reputation may be affected by printed or written libels, pictures, signs, and the like, which set him in an odious and ridiculous light, and thereby diminish his reputation. For these there are two remedies, one by indictment, and another by action. The former for the public offence, inasmuch as every libel has a tendency to break the peace, or provoke others to break it; and it is immaterial whether the matter be true or false; and therefore the defendant, on an indictment for publishing a libel, is not allowed to alledge the truth of it by way of justification, 5 Rep. 125. But in the remedy by action on the case, which is to repair the party in damages for the injury done him, the defendant may, as for words spoken, justify the truth of the facts, and shew that the plaintiff has received no injury at all. 11 Mod. 99. As in regard to words spoken, (see Scandal.) the same rule holds with regard to libels by writing or printing, and the civil actions consequent thereupon; but as to signs or pictures, it seems necessary also to shew, by proper innuendoes and averments of the defendant's meaning, the import and application of the scandal, and that the same special damage has followed; otherwise it cannot appear, that such libel by picture was understood to be levelled at the plaintiff, or that it was attended with any actionable consequences.

A man's reputation may also be injured by preferring malicious indictments or prosecutions against him. For this, however, the law has given a very adequate remedy in damages, either by an action of conspiracy, which cannot be brought but against two at the least; or, which is the more usual way, by a special action on the case for a false and malicious prosecution. F. N. B. 116.

REQUEST. Where one is to do a collateral thing, agreed on making a contract, there ought to be a request to do it. 2 Lill. Abr. 464. Cro. Eliz. 74. 1 Saund. 33. 1 Lev. 289.

And if a debt or duty does not accrue on a promise, until request made, the statute of limitations runs from the time of the request only, and not from the time of the precedent promise. Cro. Car. 98.

And it must be where a thing is done on request, or reasonable request. Dyer 218. Cro. Car. 176. 3 Nels. Abr. 140. 142.

REQUESTS. See Court of Requests.

RERE COUNTY. Writs shall be delivered in the full, or rere county. Stat. 2 Ed. 3. cap. 5. Vide Rier County.

RERE FIEFS. In the Scotch law, inferior feudatories, who hold their lands under an obligation to make such returns in service, corn, cattle, or money, as might enable the chief feudatories to attend their military duties without distraction. Wright 30.

RESCEIT, (Receptio.) Is an admission or receiving of a third person to plead his right in a cause formerly commenced between two other persons; as where an action is brought against tenant for life or years, or any other particular tenant, and he makes default, in such case he in reversion may move that he may be received to defend his right, and to plead with demandant. Cowell.

Rescelt is likewise applied to the admittance of a plea, where the controversy is between the same two persons. Brooke 205. Co. Lit. 102. Nels. 3 Abr. 146.

RESCEIT OF HOMAGE, (Receptio Homagii.) The lord's receiving homage of his tenant, at his admission to the land. Kitch. 148.

RESCUE. Is the forcibly and knowingly freeing another from an arrest or imprisonment; and it is generally the same offence in the stranger so rescuing, as it would have been in a gaoler to have voluntarily permitted an escape. A rescue therefore of one apprehended for felony, is felony, for treason, treason; and for a misdemesnor, a misdemesnor also. But here likewise, as upon voluntary escapes, the principal must first be attainted or receive judgment before the rescuer can be punished: and for the same reason, because perhaps in fact it may turn out that there has been no offence committed. By statute 11 Geo. 2. c. 26, and 24 Geo. 2. c. 40, if five or more persons assemble to rescue any retailers of spirituous liquors, or to assault the informers against them, it is felony, and subject to transportation for seven years. By the statute 16 Geo. 2. c. 31. to convey to any prisoner in custody for treason or felony any arms, instruments of escape, or disguise, without the knowledge of the gaoler, though no escape be attempted, or any way to assist such prisoner to attempt an escape, though no escape be actually made, is felony, and subjects the offender to transportation for seven years: or if the prisoner be in custody for petit larceny or other inferior offence, or charged with a debt of 100*l.* it is then a misdemesnor, punishable with fine and imprisonment. And by several special statutes, (6 Geo. 1. c. 23, transportation; 9 Geo. 1. c. 22, black act; 8 Geo. 2. c. 20, destroying turnpikes; 19 Geo. 2. c. 34, smuggling; 25 Geo. 2, c. 37, murder; 27 Geo, 2. c. 15, black act) to rescue, or attempt to rescue any person committed for the offences enumerated in these acts, is felony without benefit of clergy; and to rescue, or attempt to rescue the body of a felon executed for murder, is single felony, and transportation for seven years; and even if any person be charged with any of the offences against the Black Act, 9 Geo. 1. c. 22. and being required by the order of the privy council to surrender himself, neglects so to do for forty days, both he and all that knowingly conceal, aid, abet, or succour him, are felons without benefit of clergy.

When goods are distrained, they are in the custody of the law; and the taking them back by force is looked upon as an atrocious injury, and denominated a rescous; for which the distreinor has a remedy in damages, either by writ of rescous, (F. N. B. 101,) in case they were going to the pound; or by writ de parco fracto, or pound breach, (F. N. B. 100), in case they were actually impounded. He may also at his option bring an action on the case for this injury; and shall therein, if the distress were taken for rent, recover treble damages. Stat. 2 W. & M. sess. 1. c. 5.

The term rescous is likewise applied to the forcible delivery of a defendant, when arrested, from the officer who is carrying him to prison. In which circumstances the plaintiff has a similar remedy by action on the case, or of rescous, 6 Mod. 211. Or, if the sheriff makes a return of such rescous to the court out of which the process issued, the rescuer will be punished by attachment Cro. Jac. 419. Salk. 586.

RESEISER, (Reseisire.) Is retaking lands into the hands of the king, where a general livery or ouster le main was formerly misused, contrary to the order of law. Staundf. Prærog. 26. Cowell.

RESERVATION, (Reservatio.) Is when a man lets or parts with his land, but reserves a rent out of it. Co. Lit. 143.

A reservation is sometimes also a saving or exception of part of the thing granted, as of timber and other trees, mines of coal, lead, and the like. The proper place for a reservation is next after the limitation of the estate. Co. Lit. 47.

RESIANCE, (Residentia.) Signifies a man's abode or continuance; hence comes the participle resiant, that is, continually dwelling or abiding in any place; and is all one with residence. Old Nat. Br. 85. Kitch. 83.

RESIANT-ROLLS, i. e. Rolls containing the resiants names of a tithing, &c. which are to be called over by the steward on holding courts leet. Comp. Court. Keep.

RESIDENCE, (Residentia.) One of the great duties incumbent on clergymen is, that they be resident on their livings; and on the first erecting parochial churches, every clergyman was obliged to reside on his benefice, for reading of prayers, preaching, &c. by the laws and canons of the church. 6 Rep. 21. Cro. Eliz. 580.

And by statute 21 Hen. 8. c. 13. persons wilfully absenting themselves from their benefices for one month together, or two months in the year, incur a penalty of five pounds to the king, and five pounds to any person that would sue for the same, except chaplains to the king, or others therein mentioned, during their attendance in the household of such as retain them; and also except all heads of houses, magistrates, and professors in the universities, and all students there under thirty years of age, residing there, bona fide, for study.

But by 43 Geo. 3. c. 84, and 43 Geo. 3. c. 109, the penalty for non-residence under 21 Hen. 8. c. 13. is repealed, and certain permanent regulations on the subject made. See Ecclesiastical Persons and Non-residence.

RESIDUARY LEGATEE. Is he to whom the residuum of the estate is left by will, 6 Hen. 7. 1 Chan. Rep. 238. Show. 26.

RESIDUE of Intestate's Estates. By the statute 22 and 23 Car. 2. c. 10. explained by 29 Car. 2. c. 30. it is enacted, that the surplusage of intestate's estates, (except of femes covert, which are left as at common law,) shall, after the expiration of one full year from the death of the intestate, be distributed in the following manner. One third shall go to the widow of the intestate, and the residue in equal proportions to his children, or if dead, to their representatives, that is, their lineal descendants: if there are no children or legal representatives subsisting, then a moiety shall go to the widow, and a moiety to the next of kindred in equal degree and their representatives: if no widow, the whole shall go to the children: if neither widow nor children, the whole shall be distributed among the next of kin in equal degree and their representatives: but no representatives are admitted, among collaterals, farther than the children of the intestate's brothers and sisters.

RESIGNATION, (Resignatio.) Is the yielding up of an ecclesiastical dignity or benefice; and every parson who resigns a benefice, must make the resignation to his superior; as an incumbent to the bishop, a bishop to the archbishop, and an archbishop to the king, as supreme ordinary; and a donative is to be resigned to the patron, not the ordinary, for in that case the clerk received his living immediately from the patron. 1 Rep. 137.

But if any incumbent corruptly resign his benefice, or take any reward for resigning the same, he shall forfeit double the value of the sum, &c. given, and the party giving it be incapable to hold the living. Stat. 31 Eliz. cap. 6. See also Simony.

RESIGNATION OF OFFICES. The declaring at an assembly of the corporation that he would hold the place of alderman no longer is a good resignation, especially since the corporation accepted it, and chose another in his place; but till such election he had power to waive his resignation, but not afterwards (2 Salk. 433.) And if a man can have no title to the profits of an office, without the admission or confirmation of a superior, there the resignation of that office must be to him. 3 Nels. Abr. 158.

RESORT, (resortum) the authority or jurisdiction of a court. Dernier resort, the last refuge. Spelm. Cowell.

RESPECTU COMPUTI VICECOMITIS HABENDO, a writ for respiting a sheriff's account, directed to the treasurer and barons of the exchequer. Reg. Orig. 139.

RESPITE, (respectus) a delay, forbearance, or continuation of time. Glanvil. lib. 12. c. 9. See Reprieve.

RESPITE OF HOMAGE, (respectus homagii) such as held in knight-service and in capite, formerly paid into the exchequer every fifth term some small sum of money to be respited their homage, taken away by the stat. 12 Car. 2.

RESPITE OF JURY. See Jury.

RESPONDEAS, or RESPONDEAT OUSTER, is a judgment, to answer over to the merits of the cause, &c.; thus, if a demurrer is joined on plea to the jurisdiction, person, or writ, &c. and it be adjudged against defendant, it is a respondeat ouster. Jenk. Cent. 306. See Judgment.

RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR. If sheriffs of London are insufficient, the mayor and commonalty must answer for them: and pur insufficience del bailiff d'un liberty, respondeat dominus libertates. 4 Inst. 114. Stat. 44. Ed. 3. c. 13.

RESPONDENTIA. See Bottomry.

RESPONSALIS, (qui responsum defert) is he who appears and answers for another in court at a day assigned. Glan. lib. 12. c. 1. Fleta, lib. 6. c. 21.

RESTITUTION, (restitutio) is restoring any thing unjustly taken from another: it signifies also the setting him in possession of lands or tenements, who had been unlawfully disseised of them. Cro. Just. 144.

RESTITUTION OF CONJUGAL RIGHTS. The suit for restitution of conjugal rights is a matrimonial cause, which is brought whenever either the husband or wife is guilty of the injury of subtraction, or lives separate from the other without any sufficient reason; in which case the ecclesiastical jurisdiction will compel them to come together again, if either party be weak enough to desire it, contrary to the inclination of the other.

RESTITUTION OF STOLEN GOODS. On a conviction of larceny in particular, the prosecutor shall have restitution of his goods, by virtue of the statute 21 Hen. 8. c. 11; for by the common law there was no restitution of goods upon an indictment, because it is at the suit of the king only, and therefore the party was enforced to bring an appeal of robbery, in order to have his goods again. But, it being considered that the party, prosecuting the offender by indictment, deserves to the full as much encouragement as he who prosecutes by appeal, this statute was made, which enacts, that if any person be convicted of larceny by the evidence of the party robbed, he shall have full restitution of his money, goods, and chattels, or the value of them, out of the offender's goods, if he has any, by a writ to be granted by the justices. And the construction of this act having been in great measure conformable to the law of appeals, it has therefore in practice superseded the use of appeals of larceny. For instance: as formerly upon appeals, so now upon indictments of larceny, this writ of restitution shall reach the goods so stolen, notwithstanding the property of them is endeavoured to be altered by sale in market overt. And though this may seem somewhat hard upon the buyer, yet the rule of law is, that "spoliatus debet, ante omnia, restitui;" especially when he has used all the diligence in his power to convict the felon. And, since the case is reduced to this hard necessity, that either the owner or the buyer must suffer, the law prefers the right of the owner, who has done a meritorious act by pursuing a felon to condign punishment, to the right of the buyer, whose merit is only negative, that he has been guilty of no unfair transaction. And it is now usual for the court, upon the conviction of a felon, to order (without any writ) immediate restitution of such goods as are brought into court, to be made to the several prosecutors. Or else, secondly, without such writ of restitution, the party may peaceably retake his goods wherever he happens to find them (See Recaption) unless a new property be fairly acquired therein. Or, lastly, if the felon be convicted and pardoned, or be allowed his clergy, the party robbed may bring his action of trover against him for his goods, and recover a satisfaction in damages. But such action lies not before prosecution: for so felonies would be made up and healed; and also recaption is unlawful, if it be done with intention to smother or compound the larceny; it then becoming the heinous offence of theft-bote. 1 Hal. P. C. 546.

The owner of goods stolen, who has prosecuted the thief to conviction, cannot recover the value of his goods from a person who has purchased them, and sold them again, even with notice of the theft, before conviction. 2 T. R. 750.

And if the owner of goods loses them by a fraud, and not by a felony, and afterwards convicts the offender, he is not entitled to restitution, or to retain them, against a person, as a pawnbroker, who has fairly acquired a new right of property in them. 5 T. R. 175.

RESTITUTION ON AN INDICTMENT FOR A FORCIBLE ENTRY. An indictment lies for one joint-tenant against another for a forcible entry, and the court of king's bench hath power to award restitution, upon a removal of the indictment by certiorari. And per Hardwicke, C. J. there must be a writ of restitution, unless the defendant pleads in a reasonable time. Rep. Temp. Hard. 174. Latch. 172. 4 Inst. 176.

RE-RESTITUTION. A writ of re-restitution may be granted on motion, if the court see cause to grant it. And on quashing an indictment of forcible entry, the court of B. R. may grant a writ of re-restitution, &c. 2 Lill. Abr. 474.

RESTITUTIONE EXTRACTI AB ECCLESIA, a writ to restore a man to the church, which he had recovered for his sanctuary, being suspected of felony. Reg. Orig. 69.

RESTITUTIONE TEMPORALIUM, a writ directed to the sheriff to restore the temporalties, or barony of a bishopric to the bishop elected and confirmed. F. N. B. 169. 1 Rol. Abr. 880.

RESTRAINING STATUTE. See Title, Statutes.

RESULTING USE. Whenever the use limited by a deed expires, or cannot vest, it returns back to him who raised it, after such expiration, or during such impossibility, and is stiled a resulting use. As, if a man makes a feoffment to the use of his intended wife for life, with remainder to the use of her first-born son in tail: here, till he marries, the use results back to himself; after marriage, it is executed in the wife for life; and, if she dies without issue, the whole reversion results back to him in fee. Bacon of Uses, 350. 1 Rep. 120. 2 Black. 335. Com. Dig. tit, Uses (K. 7.)

But there must be an outstanding reversion; for where the whole fee or legal estate is devised away, and no residue left in the grantor, to commence in possession after the determination of the estate granted by him, there can be no resulting trust for the heir at law, (1 Ath. 621.) nor where the intention to disinherit the heir is manifest. 3 Ves. Jun. 210. Bro. Ch. Cas, 492.

RE-SUMMONS, (resummonitio) signifies a second summons, or calling a man to answer an action, where the first summons is defeated by any occasion. There is also a writ of re-summons, which issues after parol demurrer. Cowell.

RESUMPTION, (resumptio) the taking again into the king's hands such lands or tenements, &c. as before, on false suggestion, he had granted by letters patent to any man. Brooke, 298.

RETAINER OF DEBTS. If a person indebted to another makes his creditor or debtor his executor, or if such creditor obtains letters of administration to his debtor; in these cases the law gives him a remedy for his debt, by allowing him to retain so much as will pay himself before any other creditors whose debts are of equal degree. 1 Roll. Abr. 992. Plowd. 543. 3 Black. 19.

RETAINER OF SERVANTS. The retaining a man's hired servant before his time is expired, is an illegal act; for every master has by his contract purchased, for a valuable consideration, the service of his domestics for a limited time, and the inveigling or hiring his servant, which induces a breach of this contract, is therefore an injury to the master, and for that injury the law has given him a remedy by a special action on the case: and he may also have an action against the servant for the non-performance of his agreement. But if a new master was not apprized of the former contract, no action lies against him, unless he refuses to restore the servant upon demand. F. N. B. 167. Ibid. Winch. 51.

RETAINING FEE, (merces retinens) is a fee given to any serjeant or barrister to retain him; that is, secure his services against the contrary party.

RETALIATION. The lex talionis, or law of retaliation, can never be in all cases an adequate or permanent rule of punishment. In general, the difference of persons, place, time, provocation, or other circumstances, may enhance or mitigate the offence; and in such cases retaliation can never be a proper measure of justice. If a nobleman strikes a peasant, all mankind will see, that if a court of justice awards a return of the blow, it is more than a just compensation. On the other hand, retaliation may, sometimes, be too easy a sentence; as, if a man maliciously should put out the remaining eye of him who had lost one before, it is too slight a punishment for the maimer to lose only one of his. Besides, there are very many crimes that will in no shape admit of these penalties, without manifest absurdity and wickedness. Theft cannot be punished by theft, defamation by defamation, forgery by forgery, adultery by adultery, and the like. It was, however, once attempted to introduce into England the law of retaliation, as a punishment for such only as preferred malicious accusations against others; it being enacted by stat. 37 Edw. 3. c. 18. that "such as preferred any suggestions to the king's great council should put in sureties of taliation;" that is, "to incur the same pain that the other should have had, in case the suggestion were found untrue. But, after one year's experience, this punishment of taliation was rejected, and imprisonment adopted in its stead. Stat. 38 Edw. 3. c. 9. 4 Black. 12. 14.

RETENEMENTUM, is a word used for detaining, withholding, or keeping back. Cowell.

RETINENTIA, a retinue, or persons retained to a prince or nobleman. Pat. 14. R. 2. Cowell.

RETORNO HABENDO. See Replevin.

RETRACTUS AQUÆ, the ebb or return of a tide. Plac. 30 Edw. 1. Cowell.

RETRAXIT, is where the plaintiff cometh in person in court where his action is brought, and saith he will not proceed in it, and this is a bar to that action for ever. And it must be always in person; for if it is by attorney it is error. 8 Rep. 58. 3 Salk. 245.

A retraxit differs from a nonsuit, in that one is negative, and the other positive: the nonsuit is a default and neglect of the plaintiff, and therefore he is allowed to begin his suit again, upon payment of costs; but a retraxit is an open and voluntary renunciation of his suit, in court, and by this he for ever loses his action. Ibid.

RETTE, (Fr.) a charge or accusation. Stat. West. 1. c. 2.

RETURN, (returna, or retorna, from the Fr. retour, i. e. redditio, recursos) is most commonly used for the return of writs, which is the certificate of the sheriff of what he hath done touching the execution of any writ directed to him, indorsed on the back of the writ, and delivered into the court whence the writ issued, at the day of the return thereof, in order to be filed. Stat. Westm. 2. c. 39. 2 Lill. Abr. 476.

If the sheriff doth not make a return of a writ, the court will amerce him: so if he makes an insufficient return; and if he makes a false return, the party grieved may have an action on the case against him. Wood's Inst. 71.

RETURN-DAYS, are days in term called by that name; or days in bank. See Term.

RETURNING FROM TRANSPORTATION, or being seen at large in Great Britain before the expiration of the term for which the offender was ordered to be transported, is a capital offence, and made felony, without benefit of clergy, in all cases, by statutes 4 Geo. 1. c. 11. 6 Geo. 1. c. 23. 16 Geo. 2. c. 15. and 18 Geo. 3. c. 15. as is also the assisting them to escape from such as are conveying them to the port of transportation. Previous to the 24th Geo. 3. c. 56. it was thought, that where a convict was pardoned upon condition of transporting himself for life, or a certain number of years, if he did not comply with that condition, he might be remitted to his original sentence, and in some cases that he was subject to no other punishment. But the statute 24 Geo. 3. c. 56. now includes every possible case by enacting, that "if any offender shall be ordered by the court to be transported, or shall agree to transport himself on certain conditions, either for life, or any number of years, and shall be afterwards at large before the expiration of the term, without lawful cause, in any part of Great Britain or Ireland, he shall, being lawfully convicted thereof, suffer death, without benefit of clergy."

RETURNO HABENDO. See Replevin.

RETURNUM AVERIORUM, a judicial writ, the same with returno habendo. Reg. Judic. 4.

RETURNUM IRREPLEGIABILE, is a writ judicial, directed to the sheriff for the final restitution or return of cattle to the owner when unjustly taken or distrained, and so found by verdict; and it is granted after a nonsuit in a second deliverance. Reg. Judic. 27. Cowell.

REVE, or GEREVE, (from the Saxon word græfa, præfectus. Lambard's explication of Saxon words, verb præfectus) signifies with us the bailiff of a franchise or manor, especially in the western part of England: hence shire-reve for sheriff. See Kitchen, 43. Cowell.

REVELACH, rebellion, from revellare, to rebel. Cowell. Blount.

REVELAND, (domesday-book). The lands here said to have been thane-land, in the time of Edw. 3. and after converted into reveland, seems to have been such land as being reverted to the king after the death of his thane, who had it for life, was not since granted out to any by the king, but rested in charge on the account of the reve or bailiff of the manor, who concealed the land from the auditor, and kept the profit of it, till the surveyors discovered the falsehood, and presented to the king that furtim aufertur regi. Cowell. Blount.

REVELS, sports of dancing and masking, formerly used in princes' courts, the inns of court, or other noblemen's houses, commonly performed by night; hence master of the revels. Cowell.

REVENUE, (Fr.) the yearly rent which accrues to any man from his lands and possessions, and the public revenue arising from customs, excise, stamps, and other taxes.

REVERSAL OF JUDGMENT, is the making it void for error. 2 Lill. Abr. 481.

The eldest judge of the court, or, in his absence, the next in seniority, always pronounces the reversal of an erroneous judgment openly in court, on the prayer of the party; but the judge only says, judgment affirmed, or judgment reversed, as the case happens. 2 Lill. 482.

REVERSION, (reversio, from revertor) signifies a returning again. 1 Inst. 142.

And an estate in reversion is the residue of an estate left in the grantor, to commence after the determination of some particular estate granted out by him. Sir Edward Coke describes a reversion to be the returning of land to the grantor, or his heirs, after the grant is over. As, if there be a gift in tail, the reversion of the fee is, without any special reservation, vested in the donor by act of law: and so also the reversion, after an estate for life, years, or at will, continues in the lessor; for the fee-simple of all lands must abide somewhere, and if he, who was before possessed of the whole, carves out of it any smaller estate, and grants it away, whatever is not so granted remains in him. A reversion is therefore never created by deed or writing, but arises from construction of law.

In order to assist such persons as have any estate in remainder, reversion, or expectancy, after the death of others, against fraudulent concealments of their deaths, it is enacted by the statute 6 Ann. c. 18. that all persons on whose lives any lands or tenements are holden, shall (upon application to the court of chancery, and order made thereupon) once in every year, if required, be produced to the court, or its commissioners; or, upon neglect or refusal, they shall be taken to be actually dead, and the person entitled to such expectant estate may enter upon and hold the lands and tenements, till the party shall appear to be living. Ord. in Chan. 69. 3 Black. 464.

REVERTER, (formedon in). See Remainder.

REVIEW, (bill of). A bill of review may be had upon apparent error in judgment, appearing on the face of the decree; or, by special leave of the court, upon oath made of the discovery of new matter or evidence, which could not possibly be had or used at the time when the decree passed. But no new evidence or matter then in the knowledge of the parties, and which might have been used before, shall be a sufficient ground for a bill of review. 3 Black. 454.

REVIEW, (commission of). A commission of review is a commission sometimes granted, in extraordinary cases, to revise the sentence of the court of delegates, when it is apprehended they have been led into a material error. This commission the king may grant, although the statutes 24 and 25 Henry 8. declare the sentence of the delegates definitive: because the pope, as supreme head by the canon law, used to grant such commission of review; and such authority, as the pope heretofore exerted, is now annexed to the crown, (4 Inst. 341.) by statutes 26 Hen. 8. c. 1. and 1 Eliz. c. 1. But it is not matter of right, which the subject may demand ex debito justitiæ, but merely a matter of favour, and which therefore is often denied; and the sum of 20*l.* must be deposited in court, on bringing this bill, as a security for costs and delay, if the matter be found against the party, &c. 3 Black. 67.

REVILING CHURCH ORDINANCES is a positive offence against religion, that affects the established church. See Religion.

REVIVAL OF PERSONS HANGED. If, on judgment to be hanged by the neck till dead, the criminal be not thoroughly killed, but revives, the sheriff must hang him again (2 Hal. P. C. 412. 2 Hawk. P. C. 463.) for the former hanging was no execution of the sentence unless he be dead. Fitzh. Abr. t. corone, 335. Finch. L. A. 67. 4 Black. 399.

REVIVING, a word metaphorically applied to rents and actions, and signifies renewing them after they are extinguished; such as the revival of a cause of action barred by the statute of limitations, by making a new promise.

REVIVOR, (bill of). When a bill hath been exhibited in equity against any one, and either party dies, a bill of revivor must be brought, praying the former proceedings to stand revived. See Bill in Equity.

REVOCATION, (revocatio) signifies the calling back of a thing granted; or a destroying or making void of some deed or instrument that had existence until the act of revocation made it void. 2 Lil. Abr. 185.

Letters of attorney, and other personal authorities, under seal, may be revoked by instruments of the same solemnity, viz. by deeds, under seal, by the persons giving the powers; and, as they are revocable in their nature, it has been adjudged that they may be revoked, though they are made irrevocable, (8 Rep. 82. Wood's Inst. 286) and there ought to be notice to the party; but if once the power be executed, a revocation after will come too late. Dyer, 310.

REVOCATIONE PARLIAMENTI, an ancient writ for recalling a parliament; and anno 5 Ed. 3. the parliament being summoned, was recalled by such writ before it met. Prym's Animad. on 4 Inst. fol. 44.

REWARDS. In order to encourage the apprehending of certain felons, rewards and immunities are bestowed on such as bring them to justice, by divers acts of parliament. The statute 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 8. enacts, that such as apprehend a highwayman, and prosecute him to conviction, shall receive a reward of 40*l.* from the public; to be paid to them (or, if killed in the endeavour to take him, their executors) by the sheriff of the county; besides the horse, furniture, arms, money, and other goods taken upon the person of such robber; with a reservation of the right of any person from whom the same may have been stolen: to which the statute 8 Geo. 2. c. 16. superadds 10*l.* to be paid by the hundred indemnified by such taking. By statutes 3 & 7 W. 3. c. 17. and 15 Geo. 2. c. 28. persons apprehending and convicting any offender against those statutes, respecting the coinage, shall (in case the offence be treason or felony) receive a reward of 40*l.*; or 10*l.* if it only amount to counterfeiting the copper coin. By statute 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 23. any person apprehending and prosecuting to conviction a felon guilty of burglary, housebreaking, horsestealing, or private larceny, to the value of 5*s.* from any shop, warehouse, coach-house, or stable, shall be excused from all parish offices. And by statute 5 Ann, c. 31. any person so apprehending and prosecuting a burglar, or felonious housebreaker, (or, if killed in the attempt, his executors), shall be entitled to a reward of 40*l. By statute 6 Geo. 1. c. 23. persons discovering, apprehending, and prosecuting to conviction, any person taking reward for helping others to their stolen goods, shall be entitled to 40*l.* By statute 11 Geo. 2. c. 6. explained by 15 Geo. 2. c. 34. any person apprehending and prosecuting to conviction such as steal, or kill with intent to steal, any sheep or other cattle specified in the latter of the said acts, shall for every such conviction receive a reward of 10*l.* Lastly, by 16 Geo. 2. c. 15. and 8 Geo. 3. c. 15. persons discovering, apprehending, and convicting felons and others being found at large during the term for which they are ordered to be transported, shall receive a reward of 20*l.* The statutes 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 8. 6 & 7 W. 3. c. 17. and 5 Ann, c. 31. (together with 3 Geo. 1. c. 15. s. 4. which directs the method of re-imbursing the sheriffs) are extended to the county palatine of Durham, by statute 14 Geo. 3. c. 46. See Approver, Accomplice, and Stolen Goods.

REWEY, a term among clothiers, signifying cloth unevenly wrought, or full of rewes. 43 Eliz. c. 10.

RHANDIR, a part in the division of Wales, before the conquest: every township comprehended four gavels, and every gavel had four rhandirs, and four houses or tenements constituted every rhandir. Cowell. Blount.

RIAL, (from the Span. reale, i. e. royal money, because it is stamped with the king's effigies). Here, in England, a rial was a piece of gold coin, current for 10*s.* in the reign of king Henry 6. at which time there were half-rials passing for 5*s.* and quarter-rials, or rial farthings, going for 2*s.* 6*d.* In the beginning of queen Elizabeth's reign, golden rials were coined at 15*s.* a-piece; and 3 Jac. 1. there were

* If any person apprehends and prosecutes to conviction any of the felons described by 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 23. and 5 Ann, c. 31. he shall be entitled to a certificate from the judge, which will exempt him from all parish offices in the parish in which the felony was committed. And before it is used for that purpose it may be assigned, that is, sold once, and the assignee or buyer shall be privileged to the same exemption from it. This certificate of exemption, or Tyburn ticket, as it is sometimes called, is the only reward given to the prosecutors of horsestealers, and of felons, who steal to the value of 5*s.* privately from shops, warehouses, coach-houses, and stables.

RIBAUD, (Fr. ribauld, ribaldus) a rogue, vagrant, whoremonger, or person given to all manner of wickedness. Cowell.

RICHMOND, (in Yorkshire). Spiritual persons in the archdeaconry of Richmond, shall not exact portions of the deceased's goods. 26 Hen. 8. c. 15.

RIDER ROLL, is a schedule, or small piece of parchment, often added to some part of a roll or record. Cowell.

RIDGE WASHED KERSEY, Kersey cloth made of fleece wool, washed only on the sheep's back. See stat. 35 Eliz. c. 10.

RIDING ARMED, with dangerous and unusual weapons, is an offence at common law. 4 Inst. 160. See Affray.

RIDING-CLERK, is one of the six clerks in Chancery, who in his turn, for one year, keeps the controulment books of all grants that pass the great seal. Cowell. Blount.

RIDINGS, are the names of the parts or divisions of Yorkshire, which are three, viz. East Riding, West Riding, and North Riding, mentioned in the stat. 22 H. 8. c. 5. And, in indictments for offences in that county, the town and the riding must be expressed, &c. (West's Symb. p. 2.) The word riding is a corruption from trithing. 1 Black. 116. See Registry.

RIENS ARREAR, a plea used in an action of debt for arrearages of account, whereby the defendant alledges that there is nothing in arrear. Cowell. Blount.

RIENS PASSE PER LE FAIT, signifies that nothing passes by the deed, and is the form of an exception taken in some cases to an action. Ibid.

RIENS PER DESCENT, is the plea of an heir, where he is sued for his ancestor's debt, that he hath no land from him by descent, or assets in his hands. 3 Cro. 151.

RIER COUNTY, (retro comitatus, from the Fr. arrear, i. e. posterior) is opposed to full and open county, and appears to be some public place, which the sheriff appoints for receipt of the king's money, after the end of his county court. 2 Ed. 3. c. 5. Stat. Westm. 2. c. 38. Fleta, lib. 2. c. 57. Cowell. Blount.

RIFFLARE, (from the Sax. riefe, rapina) is to take away any thing by force; from whence comes our English word rifle. Leg. Hen. 1. c. 57. Cowell.

RIFFLURA, a slight wound in the flesh. Fleta, lib. 1. c. 41. Cowell.

RIGHT, (jus) in general signification includes not only a right for which a writ of right lies, but also any title or claim, either by virtue of a condition, mortgage, or the like, for which no action is given by law, but only an entry. Co. Lit. lib. 3. c. 8. s. 445.

RIGHT CLOSE, writ of, (secundum consuetudinem manerii) is a writ which lies for the king's tenants in ancient demesne, and others of a similar nature, to try the right of their lands and tenements in the court of the lord exclusively. 3 Black. 195. See Writ of Right.

RINGILDRE, a kind of bailiff or serjeant; and such rhingyl signifies in Welsh. Cowell.

RIOT. A riot seems to be a tumultuous disturbance of the peace by three persons, or more, assembling together of their own authority, with an intent mutually to assist one another against any who shall oppose them, in the execution of some enterprize of a private nature, and afterwards actually executing the same in a violent turbulent manner, to the terror of the people, whether the act intended was of itself lawful or unlawful. Hawk. P. C. 155. c. 65. s. 1.

A RIOT seems to be, according to the general opinion, a disturbance of the peace by persons assembling together with an intent to do a thing which, if it be executed, will make them rioters, and actually making a motion towards the execution thereof; but, by some books, the notion of a riot is confined to such assemblies only as are occasioned by some grievance common to all the company, as the inclosure of land in which they all claim a right of common, &c. However, in as much as it generally agrees with a riot, as to all the rest of the above-mentioned particulars, requisite to constitute a riot, except only in this, that it may be a complete offence without the execution of the intended enterprize, it seems not to require any farther explication. Hawk. P. C. 158. c. 65. s. 8.

An unlawful assembly,* according to

* Nearly related to this head of riots, is the offence of tumultuous petitioning, which was carried to an enormous height in the times preceding the grand rebellion. Wherefore by the statute 13 Car. 2. st. 1. c. 5. it is enacted, that not more than twenty names shall be signed to any petition to the king, or either house of parliament, for any alteration of matters established by law in church or state, unless the contents thereof be previously approved, in the country, by three justices, or the majority of the grand jury at the assises or quarter-sessions; and, in London, the common opinion, is a disturbance of the peace by persons barely assembling together, with an intention to do a thing, which, if it was executed, would make them rioters, but neither actually executing it, nor making a motion toward the execution of it; but this seems to be much too narrow a definition; for any meeting whatsoever of great numbers of people, with such circumstances of terror, as cannot but endanger the public peace, and raise fears and jealousies among the king's subjects, seems properly to be called an unlawful assembly; as where great numbers, complaining of a common grievance, meet together armed in a warlike manner, in order to consult together concerning the most proper means for the recovery of their interests; for no one can foresee what may be the event of such an assembly. Hawk. P. C. 158. c. 65. s. 9.

But if a man be menaced or threatened that if he comes to the house of B. or to W. that he shall be beat, he cannot make an assembly of people to assist him to go there, and this in safeguard of his person; for he need not go there, and he may have remedy by surety of the peace. 1 Hawk. c. 65. s. 10.

These offences are either felonious, or not felonious. The felonious offences are by virtue of the following statutes:—

1. The riotous assembling of twelve persons, or more, and not dispersing upon proclamation. This was first made high treason by statute 3 & 4 Edw. 6. c. 5. when the king was a minor, and a change in religion to be effected: but that statute was repealed by statute 1 Mar. c. 1. among the other treasons created since 25 Edw. 3. though the prohibition was in substance re-enacted, with an inferior degree of punishment, by statute 1 Mar. st. 2, c. 12. which made the same offence a single felony. These statutes specified and particularized the nature of the riots they were meant to suppress; as, for example, such as were set on foot with intention to offer violence to the privy council, or to change the laws of the kingdom, or for certain other specific purposes: in which cases, if the persons were commanded by proclamation to disperse, and they did not, it was by the statute of Mary made felony, but within the benefit of clergy; and also the act indemnified the peace-officers, and their assistants, if they killed any of the mob in endeavouring to suppress such riot. This was thought a necessary security in that sanguinary reign, when popery was intended to be re-established, which was like to produce great discontents: but at first it was made only for a year, and was afterwards continued for that queen's life. And by statute 1 Elizabeth, c. 16. when a reformation in religion was to be once more attempted, it was revived and continued during her life also, and then expired. From the accession of James the first to the death of queen Anne, it was never once thought expedient to revive it: but, in the first year of George the first, it was judged necessary, in order to support the execution of the act of settlement, to renew it, and at one stroke to make it perpetual, with large additions. For, whereas the former acts expressly defined and specified what should be accounted a riot: the statute 1 Geo. 1. c. 5. enacts, generally, that if any twelve persons are unlawfully assembled, to the disturbance of the peace, and any one justice of the peace, sheriff, under-sheriff, or mayor of a town, shall think proper to command them by proclamation, to disperse, if they contemn his orders, and continue together for one hour afterwards, such contempt shall be felony, without benefit of clergy. And further, if the reading of the proclamation be by force opposed, or the reader be in any manner wilfully hindered from the reading of it, such opposers and hinderers are felons without benefit of clergy: and all persons to whom such proclamation ought to have been made, and knowing of such hinderance, and not dispersing, are felons, without benefit of clergy. There is the like indemnifying clause, in case any of the mob be unfortunately killed in the endeavour to disperse them, being copied from the act of queen Mary. And, by a subsequent clause of the new act, if any person, so riotously assembled, begin even before proclamation to pull down any church, chapel, meeting-house, dwelling-house, or out-houses, they shall be felons, without benefit of clergy. And, in another clause of the same act, persons injured by any buildings being demolished by a riotous assembly, may recover damages in an action against the hundred. And it was determined, after the riots in 1780, that the owners of houses might recover damages also for the destruction of furniture, or for any injury to their property done at the same by the lord mayor, aldermen, and common-council, in common-council assembled:* and that no petition shall be delivered by a company of more than ten persons, on pain, in either case, of incurring a penalty not exceeding 100*l.* and three months imprisonment.

* It is only under this statute that the corporation of London, since the restoration, have usually taken the lead in petitions to parliament for the alteration of any established law; but it certainly does not warrant any petition from what is called the common-hall.

time that the buildings were demolished, or were in part pulled down. Doug. 673.

The punishment of unlawful assemblies, if to the number of twelve, we have just seen, may be capital, according to the circumstances that attend it; but, from the number of three to eleven, is by fine and imprisonment only. The same is the case in riots and routs by the common law; to which the pillory, in very enormous cases, has been sometimes superadded. And by the statute 13 Hen. 4. c. 7. any two justices, together with the sheriff or under-sheriff of the county, may come with the posse comitatus, if need be, and suppress any such riot, assembly, or rout, arrest the rioters, and record upon the spot the nature and circumstances of the whole transaction; which record alone shall be a sufficient conviction of the offenders. In the interpretation of which statute it hath been holden, that all persons, noblemen and others, except women, clergymen, persons decrepid, and infants under fifteen, are bound to attend the justices in suppressing a riot, upon pain of fine and imprisonment; and that any battery, wounding, or killing the rioters, that may happen in suppressing the riot, is justifiable. So that our ancient law, previous to the modern riot act, seems pretty well to have guarded against any violent breach of the public peace; especially as any riotous assembly on a public or general account, as to redress grievances or pull down all inclosures, and also resisting the king's forces, if sent to keep the peace, may amount to overt acts of high treason, by levying war against the king.

RIPARIA, (from ripa, a bank of a river) is a water running between the banks. Magn. Chart. c. 5. Westm. 2. c. 47. 2 Inst. 478.

RIPIERS, (riparii, a fiscella, qua in devehendis piscibus utuntur, Anglice, a rip) those that bring fish from the sea-coast to the inner parts of the land. Cowell. Blount.

RIPPERS, reapers, or cutters down of corn; and rip-towel was a gratuity or reward given to customary tenants when they had reaped their lord's corn. Ibid.

RIVAGIUM, (rivage, or riverage) a duty formerly paid to the king on some rivers for the passage of boats or vessels. Ibid.

RIVEARE. To have the liberty of a river for fishing and fowling. Pat. 2. Ed. 1. Cowell. Blount.

RIVERS. For annoyances in rivers, either positively by actual obstructions, or negatively, by want of reparations, the persons so obstructing, or such individuals as are bound to repair and cleanse them, or (in default of these last) the parish at large, may be indicted, and distrained to repair and amend them, and in some cases fined. 4 Black. 167.

And to pull down or destroy any lock, sluice, or floodgate, erected by authority of parliament on a navigable river, or rescuing any person in custody for the same, is made felony, without benefit of clergy, by 8 Geo. 2. c. 20.; and it may be inquired of and tried in any adjacent county, as if the fact had been therein committed.

By the statute 4 Geo. 3. c. 12. maliciously to damage or destroy any banks, sluices, or other works on such navigable river, to open the floodgates, or otherwise obstruct the navigation, is again made felony, punishable with transportation for seven years.

ROBA, a robe, coat, or garment; and those who robas accipiebant of another, are accounted of his family. Walsingh. 261. Cowell. Blount.

ROBBERY, (robaria). Robbery is a felony by the common law, committed by a violent assault upon the person of another, by putting him in fear, and taking from his person his money, or other goods of any value whatsoever. 3 Inst. 68. c. 16.

And this offence was called robbery, either because they bereaved the true man of some of his robes or garments, or because his money or goods were taken out of some part of his garment or robe about his person. Co. 3 Inst. c. 16. See Highway Larceny, Hue-and-Cry, and Hundred.

ROBBERS, (Robatores.) Are interpreted to be mighty thieves by Lambard in his Eiren. lib. 2. c. 6. Cowell. Blount.

ROBBERSMEN, or ROBERDSMEN. Were a sort of great thieves mentioned in the statutes 5 Edw. III. c. 14. and 7 R. II. c. 5. of whom Sir Edward Coke says, that Robin Hood lived in the reign of king Richard 1, on the borders of England and Scotland, by robbery, burning of houses, rapine and spoil, &c. and that these Roberdsmen took name from him. 3 Inst. 197.

ROCHET. Is that linen garment which is worn by bishops, gathered at the wrists, and differs from a surplice, for that hath open sleeves hanging down, but a rochet hath close sleeves. Lindewode, lib. 3. tit. 27. Cowell.

ROD, (Roda terræ.) A measure of sixteen feet and a half long, otherwise called a perch. Cowell.

ROD-KNIGHTS, (from the Sax. Rad, i. e. Equitatio & Cnys, Famulus, quasi Ministri Equitantes.) Certain servitors who held their land by serving their lords on horseback. Bract. lib. 2. c. 35. Cowell.

ROLLS OF THE TEMPLE. In the two temples there was anciently a roll called the Calves-head Roll, wherein every bencher, barrister, and student, was taxed yearly at so much to the cook and other officers of the houses, in consideration of a dinner of calves heads provided in Easter term. Orig. Jurid. 199. Cowell.

ROMAN CATHOLICS. The Roman Catholics or Papists, might, as well as the Protestant Dissenters, be generally tolerated, provided their separation from the established church was founded only upon difference of opinion in religion, and their principles did not also extend to a subversion of the civil government. For if once they could be brought to renounce the supremacy of the Pope, they might quietly enjoy their seven sacraments, their purgatory, and auricular confession; their worship of reliques and images; nay, even their transubstantiation. But while they acknowledge a foreign ecclesiastical power superior to the sovereignty of the kingdom, they cannot complain if the laws of that kingdom will not treat them upon the footing of good subjects. 4 Black. 54.

The laws in force against the Papists, previous to 18 Geo. 3. c. 60, and 31 Geo. 3. c. 32, may be divided into three classes: first, persons professing popery; secondly, popish recusants convict; and thirdly, popish priests.

1. Persons professing the popish religion, besides the penalties for not frequenting their parish church, are disabled from taking their lands either by descent or purchase, after eighteen years of age, until they renounce their errors: they must, at the age of twenty-one, register their estates before acquired, and all future conveyances and wills relating to them; they are incapable of presenting to any advowson, or granting to any other person any avoidance of the same; they may not keep or teach any school under pain of perpetual imprisonment; and, if they willingly say or hear mass, they forfeit the one two hundred, the other one hundred marks, and each shall suffer a year's imprisonment. Thus much for persons, who, from the misfortune of family prejudices or otherwise, have conceived an unhappy attachment to the Romish church from their infancy, and publicly profess its errors. But if any evil industry is used to rivet these errors upon them, if any person sends another abroad to be educated in the popish religion, or to reside in any religious house abroad for that purpose, or contributes to their maintenance when there; both the sender, the sent, and the contributor, are disabled to sue in law or equity, to be executor or administrator to any person, to take any legacy or deed of gift, and to bear any office in the realm, and shall forfeit all their goods and chattels, and likewise all their real estate for life. And where these errors are also aggravated by apostacy or perversion, where a person is reconciled to the see of Rome, or procures others to be reconciled, the offence amounts to high treason.

2. Popish recusants, convicted in a court of law of not attending the service of the church of England, are subject to the following disabilities, penalties, and forfeitures, over and above those before mentioned. They are considered as persons excommunicated: they can hold no office or employment; they must not keep arms in their houses, but the same may be seized by the justices of the peace; they may not come within ten miles of London, on pain of 100*l.*; they can bring no action at law, or suit in equity; they are not permitted to travel above five miles from home, unless by licence, upon pain of forfeiting all their goods; and they may not come to court under pain of 100*l.* No marriage or burial of such recusant, or baptism of his child, shall be had otherwise than by the ministers of the church of England, under other severe penalties. A married woman, when recusant, shall forfeit two-thirds of her dower or jointure, may not be excom-trix or administratrix to her husband, nor have any part of his goods; and during the coverture may be kept in prison, unless her husband redeems her at the rate of 10*l.* a month, or the third part of all his lands. And lastly, as a feme-covert recusant may be imprisoned, so all others must, within three months after conviction, either submit and renounce their errors, or, if required so to do by four justices, must abjure and renounce the realm: and if they do not depart, or if they return without the king's licence, they shall be guilty of felony, and suffer death as felons without benefit of clergy. There is also an inferior species of recusancy, (refusing to make the declaration against popery, enjoined by stat. 30 Car. 2. st. 2. when tendered by the proper magistrate,) which, if the party resides within ten miles of London, makes him an absolute recusant convict; or, if at a greater distance, suspends him from having any seat in parliament, keeping arms in his house, or any horse above the value of five pounds. This was till lately the state, by the laws now in being, of a lay papist.*

3. The remaining species or degree, viz. popish priests, are in a still more dangerous condition. For by statute 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 4. popish priests or bishops celebrating mass, or exercising any part of their functions in England, except in the houses of ambassadors, are liable to perpetual imprisonment. And by the statute 27 Eliz. c. 2. any popish priest, born in the dominions of the crown of England, who shall come over hither from beyond sea, (unless driven by stress of weather, and tarrying only a reasonable time (3 Raym. 377, Latch. 1.) or shall be in England without conforming and taking the oaths, is guilty of high treason; and all persons harbouring him are guilty of felony without the benefit of clergy.

These rigorous laws against Papists are rather to be accounted for from their history, and the urgency of the times which produced them, than to be approved (upon a cool review) as a standing system of law. The restless machinations of the Jesuits during the reign of Elizabeth, the turbulence and uneasiness of the Papists under the new religious establishment, and the boldness of their hopes and wishes for the succession of the Queen of Scots, obliged the parliament to counteract so dangerous a spirit by laws of a great, and then perhaps necessary severity. The powder treason, in the succeeding reign, struck a panic into James I. which operated in different ways: it occasioned the enacting of new laws against the Papists; but deterred him from putting them in execution. The intrigues of Queen Henrietta in the reign of Charles I., the prospect of a popish successor in that of Charles II., the assassination plot in the reign of King William, and the avowed claim of a popish pretender to the crown in that and subsequent reigns, will account for the extension of these penalties at those several periods of our history. But if a time should ever arrive, adds Blackstone, when all fears of a pretender shall have vanished, and the power and influence of the Pope shall become feeble, ridiculous, and despicable, not only in England, but in every kingdom of Europe, it probably would not then be amiss to review and soften these rigorous edicts.

This hath partly been done by statute 18 Geo. 3. c. 60. with regard to such papists as duly take the oath therein prescribed, of allegiance to his majesty, abjuration of the pretender, renunciation of the pope's civil power, and abhorrence of the doctrines of destroying and not keeping faith with heretics, and deposing or murdering princes excommunicated by authority of the see of Rome: in respect of whom only the statute of 11 & 12 W. 3. is repealed, so far as it disables them from purchasing or inheriting, or authorizes the apprehending or prosecuting the popish clergy, or subjects to perpetual imprisonment either them or any teachers of youth. Also by the statute 31 Geo. 3. c. 32. which may be called the toleration act of the Roman Catholics, all the severe and cruel restrictions and penalties above enumerated are removed from those Roman Catholics who are willing to comply with the requisitions of that statute, which are, that they must appear at some of the courts of Westminster, or at the quarter-sessions held for the county, city, or place where they shall reside, and shall make and subscribe a declaration, that they profess the Roman Catholic religion, and also an oath which is exactly similar to that required by 18 Geo. 3. c. 60. the substance of which is stated as above. On this declaration and oath being duly made by any Roman Catholic, the officer of the court shall grant him a certificate; and such officer shall yearly transmit to the privy council lists of all persons who have thus qualified themselves within the year in his respective court. The statute then provides that a Roman Catholic, thus qualified, shall not be prosecuted under any statute for not repairing to a parish church, nor shall he be prosecuted for being a papist, nor for attending or performing mass or other ceremonies of the church of Rome; provided that no place shall be allowed for an assembly to celebrate such worship until it is certified to the sessions; nor shall any minister officiate in it, until his name and description are recorded there. And no such place of assembly shall have its doors locked or barred during the time of meeting or divine worship.

And if any Roman Catholic whatever is elected constable, churchwarden, overseer, or into any parochial office, he may execute the same by a deputy, to be approved as if he were to act for himself as principal. But every minister, who has qualified, shall be exempt from serving upon juries, and from being elected into any parochial office. And all the laws for frequenting divine service on Sundays shall continue in force, except where persons attend some place of worship allowed by this statute, or the toleration act of the Dissenters, 1 W. & M.

Also if any person disturb a congregation allowed under this act, he shall, as for disturbing a dissenting meeting, be bound over to the next sessions, and upon conviction there shall forfeit 20*l.*

But no Roman Catholic minister shall officiate in any place of worship having a steeple and a bell, or at any funeral in a church or church-yard, or shall wear the habits of his order, except in a place allowed by this statute, or in a private house, where there shall not be more than five persons besides the family. This statute shall not exempt Roman Catholics from the payment of tithes, or other dues, to the church; nor shall it affect the statutes concerning marriages, or any law respecting the succession to the crown. No person, who has qualified, shall be prosecuted for instructing youth, except in an endowed school, or a school in one of the English universities; and except also, that no Roman Catholic schoolmaster shall receive into his school the child of any Protestant father; nor shall any Roman Catholic keep a school until his or her name be recorded as teacher at the sessions.

But no religious order is to be established; and every endowment of a school or college by a Roman Catholic shall still be superstitious and unlawful. And no person henceforth shall be summoned to take the oath of supremacy, and the declaration against transubstantiation. Nor shall Roman Catholics, who have qualified, be removable from London and Westminster; neither shall any peer, who has qualified, be punishable for coming into the presence, or palace, of the king or queen. And no papists whatever shall be any longer obliged to register their names and estates, or enroll their deeds and wills. And every Roman Catholic, who has qualified, may be permitted to act as a barrister, attorney, and notary.

Roman Catholics, however, cannot sit in either house of parliament, because every member of parliament must take the oath of supremacy, and repeat and subscribe the declaration against transubstantiation. 1 Black. 162. Nor can they vote at elections for members for the house of commons, because, before they vote, they must take the oath of supremacy. Ibid. 180.

But the Roman Catholics in Ireland are permitted to vote at elections, though they cannot sit in either house of parliament.

ROMA-PEDITÆ. Pilgrims that travel to Rome on foot. Matt. Paris, anno 1250. Cowell.

ROME, CHURCH OF. Its incroachment of power here was suppressed by stat. 25 Hen. 8. c. 19. See Papists and Præmunire.

ROME-SCOT, (Romefeoh vel Romefee, Romepeny, alias denarius Sancti Petri & hearth-peny.) An annual tribute of one penny from every family, paid yearly to Rome, at the feast of St. Peter ad Vincula, being the first of August, forbidden by Edward III. See Præmunire.

ROMNEY-MARSH. Is a large tract of land in the county of Kent, containing 24,000 acres; and is governed by certain ancient and equitable laws of sewers composed by Henry de Bathe, a venerable judge in the reign of king Henry 3; from which laws all commissioners of sewers in England may receive light and direction. 4 Inst. 276. The commissioners of sewers, in other parts of England, may act according to the laws and customs of Romney-marsh, or otherwise at their own discretion. 3 Black. Com. 74. But they are subject to the discretionary coercion of the court of King's Bench. Ibid.

ROOD, or Holy Rood. Signifies the Holy Cross. Cowell.

ROOD OF LAND, (Rodata Terræ.) Is the fourth part of an acre. Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 5. See Rod.

ROOTS, destroying of. See Trespass.

ROPE-DANCERS, &c. are public nuisances, and may, upon indictment, be suppressed and fined. 1 Hawk. P. C. 198. 225. See Theatres.

ROS. A kind of rushes, which some tenants were obliged, by their tenures, to furnish their lords. Cowell.

ROSETUM. A low watery place of reeds and rushes. Ibid.

ROSLAND. Heathy land, or ground full of ling; also watery and moorish land. 1 Inst. 5.

ROTHER-BEASTS. Oxen, cows, steers, heifers, and such like horned beasts. Cowell.

ROTULUS WINTONIÆ. Was an exact survey of all England, per Comitatus, Centurias, & Decurias, made by king Alfred, not unlike that of Domesday, because it was of old kept at Winchester among other records of the kingdom; but this roll time hath consumed. Ingulph. Hist. 516. Cowell.

ROUBLE. Coin in Muscovy, going for 10*s* sterling. Merch. Dict. Cowell.

ROUT. See Riot.

ROYAL ASSENT, (Regius assensus.) Is that assent which the king gives to a thing formerly done by others, as to the election of a bishop by dean and chapter: which given, then he sends a special writ for the taking of fealty. F. N. B. 170. And to a bill passed in both houses of parliament, Cromp. Jur. fo. 8.; which assent in parliament being once given, the bill is indorsed with these words, Le Roy le veult, i. e. It pleases the king. But if he refuse to agree to it, then thus: Le Roy avisera, i. e. The king will advise. 1 Black. 154. 183.

ROYALTIES, (Regalitates.) See King.

ROYNES. Streams, currents, or other usual passages of rivers and running waters. Cowell.

RUBRICKS, (a rubro colore, because anciently written in red letters) are constitutions of our church, founded upon the statutes of uniformity and public prayer, viz. 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 1. 1 Eliz. c. 2. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 2.

RUDMAS-DAY, (from the Sax. Rode, i. e. Crux, and mass-day, i. e. feast-day.) The feast of the Holy-Cross, of which there are two, viz. on the 3d of May, the invention of the cross, and the 14th of September, Holy Rood Day, or the Exaltation of the Cross. Cowell.

RULES OF COURT. Attornies are bound to observe the rules of the court, to avoid confusion; also the plaintiff and defendant in a cause are at their peril to take notice of the rules made in court touching the cause between them. 2 Lill. Abr. 492. 493.

RUMNEY-MARSH. King Henry the Third granted a charter to Rumney-marsh, in the county of Kent, impowering twenty-four men thereunto chosen to make distresses equally upon all those who have lands and tenements in the said marsh, to repair the walls and water-gates of the same, against the dangers of the sea. And there are several laws and customs observed in the said marsh, established by ordinance of justices thereto appointed, in the 42d year of king Henry 3. 16 Edw. 1. 33 Edw. 3. &c. RUNCARIA, (from Runca.) Land full of brambles and briars. 1 Inst. fol. 5. a.

RUNCILUS and RUNCINUS. Used in Domesday for a load-horse or a sumpter-horse, and sometimes for a cart-horse. Cowell.

RUNLET. Is a measure of wine, oil, &c. containing eighteen gallons and a half. 1 R. 3. c. 13.

RUNNERS OF FOREIGN GOODS. Who to be deemed so, and how punished. See 8 Geo. 1. c. 18. under Customs.

RUNNING away with Women. See Forcible Marriage.

RUPTARII. Were soldiers, or rather robbers, called also ruptarii; and ruptia was a company of robbers. Hence we derive the word rout and bankrupt. Cowell.

RUPTURA. Arable land, or ground broke up, as used in ancient charters. Ibid.

RURAL DEANS, are very ancient officers of the church, but almost grown out of use, though their deaneries still subsist as an ecclesiastical division of the diocese or archdeaconry: they seem to have been deputies of the bishop planted all round his diocese, the better to inspect the conduct of the parochial clergy, to inquire into and report dilapidations, and to examine the candidates for confirmation, and armed in minuter matters with an inferior degree of judicial and coercive authority. Kennet's Par. Ant. 633. Gibs. Cod. 972. 1530.

RURAL DEANRY. As every diocese is divided into archdeaconries, (of which there are sixty), so each archdeaconry is divided into rural deanries, which are the circuit of the archdeacon's and rural dean's jurisdiction: and every deanry is divided into parishes. 1 Black. 111.

RUSCA. A tub or barrel of butter. Cowell.

RUSCATIA. The place where knee-holm or broom grows. Co. Lit. 5.

RUSTICI. The churls, clowns, or inferior country tenants, who held cottages and lands by the services of ploughing and other labours of agriculture for the lord. The land of such ignoble tenure was called by the Saxons Gafalland, as afterwards socage tenure, and was sometimes distinguished by the name of terra rusticorum. Paroch. Antiq. 136. Cowell.

RYDER. If a new clause is added to a bill upon its third reading, it is done by tacking a separate piece of parchment on the bill, which is called a ryder. Nov. 84.

S

SABAIA. Poor small beer. Lit. Dict.

SABBATARIUS. A Sabbatarian, or Jew; of or belonging to the Sabbath. Cowell.

SABBATH. Profanation of the Lord's day, vulgarly, but improperly, called sabbath-breaking, is a ninth offence against God and religion, punished by the municipal law of England. For, besides the notorious indecency and scandal of permitting any secular business to be publicly transacted on that day, in a country professing christianity, and the corruption of morals which usually follows its profanation, the keeping one day in seven holy, as a time of relaxation and refreshment as well as for public worship, is of admirable service to a state, considered merely as a civil institution. It humanizes by the help of conversation and society the manners of the lower classes, which would otherwise degenerate into a sordid ferocity and savage selfishness of spirit; it enables the industrious workman to pursue his occupation in the ensuing week with health and cheerfulness; it imprints on the minds of the people that sense of their duty to God, so necessary to make them good citizens, but which yet would be worn out and defaced by an unremitted continuance of labour, without any stated times of recalling them to the worship of their Maker. And therefore the laws of king Athelstan (c. 24) forbad all merchandizing on the Lord's day, under very severe penalties. 4 Black. 62.

By the statute 27 Hen. VI. c. 5, no fair or market shall be held on the principal festivals, Good Friday, or any Sunday, (except the four Sundays in harvest,) on pain of forfeiting the goods exposed to sale.

And by the statute 1 Car. I. c. 1. "no person shall assemble out of their own parishes, for any sport whatsoever upon this day; nor, in their parishes, shall use any bull or bear baiting, interludes, plays, or other unlawful exercises or pastimes, on pain that every offender shall pay 3*s.* 4*d.* to the poor." This statute, however, does not prohibit, but rather impliedly allows, any innocent recreation or amusement within their respective parishes, even on the Lord's day, after divine service is over. 4 Black. 63.

But by 1 Jac. I. c. 22. no shoemaker shall shew, to the intent to put to sale any shoes, boots, buskins, startops, or pentofles, upon the Sunday, on pain of 3*s.* 4*d.* a pair, and the value thereof to be recovered at the assises, or sessions; one third to the king, one third to him who will sue, and one third to the town or vill. s. 28. c. 46. 50.

By 3 Car. I. c. 2. no carrier with horses or waggons, nor carman with carts, nor drover with cattle, shall travel upon the Lord's day, upon pain of 20*s.*; or if any butcher shall kill or sell, he shall forfeit 6*s.* 8*d.* to be recovered on the view of or before one justice, on the oaths of two witnesses or confession; to be levied by distress and sale, and go to the poor of the parish, rewarding the informer.

Also by 29 Car. 2. c. 17. no person shall do any worldly labour or work of their ordinary callings upon the Lord's day, works of necessity and charity excepted, on pain of 5*s.*

And no person shall publicly cry, shew forth, or expose to sale any wares, merchandizes, fruit, herbs, goods or chattels whatsoever upon the Lord's day, upon pain to forfeit the same goods. s. 1.

And no drover, post carrier, waggoner, butcher, or higgler, shall travel or come into their inn or lodging upon the Lord's day, upon pain to forfeit 20*s.* And no person shall travel upon the Lord's day with any boat, wherry, lighter, or barge, except upon extraordinary occasions to be allowed by some justice, (except 40 watermen on the Thames, 10 & 11 Will. 3. c. 24. s. 14.) upon pain to forfeit 20*s.* s. 2.; which penalties may be recovered on view or confession, or the oaths of two witnesses before one justice, who may levy the same by distress and sale, and for default set the offender in the stocks for two hours, and the penalties are to go to the poor, rewarding the informer in not exceeding one third part thereof. s. 2.

But this is not to prohibit the dressing of meat in families, or at inns, cook-shops, or victualling-houses, nor the crying of milk before 9 in the morning and after 4 in the afternoon, s. 3.; nor selling of mackarel before or after divine service, 10 & 11 Will. 3. c. 24. s. 14.; nor hackney-coaches, 9 Ann. c. 23.; nor any fish carriages passing on Sundays either laden or empty, 2 Geo. 3. 15. s. 7. And the prosecution under 29 Car. II. c. 7. must be within ten days. s. 4.

Persons exercising their calling on a

Sunday are only subject to one penalty; for the whole is but one offence, or one act of exercising, though continued the whole day. Cowp. 640.

Bakers were permitted to dress dinners on a Sunday, as a work of necessity. 5 T. R. 449. But by 24 Geo. III. c. 61. and 50 Geo. 3. c. 73. no master, mistress, journeyman, or other person exercising the trade of a baker, shall on Sunday make or bake any household or other bread, rolls, or cakes, or shall on any part of the said day, excepting between the hours of ten in the forenoon and half past one in the afternoon, on any pretence whatsoever, sell any bread, rolls, or cakes of any sort, or bake or deliver any meat, pudding, pie, tart, or victuals, at any time after half-past one of the clock in the afternoon; and no meat, pudding, pie, tart, or victuals shall be brought to or taken from the bakehouse during the time of divine service; and every person offending against the foregoing regulations, being convicted before any justice within two days, forfeits for the first offence five shillings, for the second ten shillings, for the third and every subsequent offence fifteen shillings, and pay the costs of the prosecution; which penalty, allowing thereout for loss of time to the prosecutor at the rate of 3*s.* per day, shall go to the poor of the parish; and in case of non-payment, the party is to be committed to the house of correction on a first offence for not exceeding seven days, on the second fourteen, and on the third or any subsequent offence twenty-one days.

The 21st Geo. 3. c. 49. was also passed to restrain an indecent practice, which had become very prevalent in London and Westminster. It enacts, that if any house, room, or place is opened upon a Sunday for any public entertainment, or for debating upon any subject whatever, to which persons are admitted by money or tickets, the keeper of it shall forfeit 200*l.* to any person who will prosecute, the manager or president 100*l.* and the receiver of the money or tickets 50*l.*; and every person advertising, or printing an advertisement of such a meeting, shall in like manner forfeit 50*l.* for every offence.

SABBATUM. The Sabbath, or day of rest; the seventh day from the creation. Cowell.

SABALLINÆ PELLES. Sable furs. Ibid.

SABULONARIUM. A gravel pit; or liberty to dig gravel and sand; also the money paid for the same. Pet. Parl. temp. Edw. III. Cowell.

SAC. (Saca vel sacha.) An ancient privilege which a lord of a manor claimed to have in his court, of holding plea in causes of trespass arising among his tenants, and of imposing fines and amercements touching the same. By some it is the amercement and forfeiture itself. Rastal.

SACA. In the Saxon, properly signifies as much as causa in Latin. Hence we still retain the expression, For whose sake, i. e. For whose cause, &c. Cowell.

SACABURH, or SACABERE. Is he that is robbed, or by theft deprived of his money or goods, and puts in surety to prosecute the felon with fresh suit. Brit. c. 15 & 29. Bracton, lib. 3. c. 32.

SACCINI. Monks so called, because they wore next their skins a garment of goat's hair; and saccus is applied to coarse cloth made of such hair. Walsing. Cowell.

SACCIS, (Fratres de saccis.) The sackcloth brethren, or the penitential order. Cowell.

SACCUS CUM BROCHIA. A service or tenure of finding a sack and a broach to the king, for the use of his army. Bract. lib. 2. c. 16. Cowell.

SACK OF WOOL. A quantity of twenty six stone of sheep's wool; and of cotton wool, from one hundred and a half to four hundred. Stat. 14 Edw. III. c. 2. Cowell.

SACRAMENT, (Sacramentum.) Is the most solemn act of worship amongst us, and by the Rubrick there must be three at the least to communicate. But the sacrament is not to be administered to such who refuse to be present at the prayers of the church, or to strangers; for a minister is not obliged to give it to any but those of his own parish; and the partakers of the Sacrament ought to signify their names to the curate at least a day before it is administered. Can. 27. Count. Paris. Com. 36, 37, 38.

By the statute, no person shall be chosen into any office of magistracy, or place of trust, &c. unless they receive the Sacrament according to the rites of the church of England, and deliver a certificate thereof to the court of King's Bench or quarter-sessions, under the hand of the minister, and prove it by witnesses. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 4. 25 Car. 2. c. 2. In every parish church the Sacrament is to be administered three times in the year, (whereof the feast of Easter to be one), and every layman is bound to receive it thrice every year, &c. In colleges and halls of the universities, the Sacraments are to be administered the first or second Sunday of every month; and in cathedral churches, upon all principal feast-days, Canon 21, 22, 23. The churchwardens, as well as the minister, are to take notice whether the parishioners come so often to the Sacrament as they ought, and on a churchwarden's presenting a man for not receiving the Sacrament, he may be libelled in the ecclesiastical court and excommunicated, &c. Reviling the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper is punishable by fine and imprisonment. 1 Eliz. c. 1.

SACRAMENTUM. Is used for an oath.

SACRAMENTUM ALTARIS. The sacrifice of the mass, or what is now called the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper. Paroch. Antiq. 488.

SACRAMENTUM DECISIONIS. See Wager of Law.

SACRILEGE, (Sacrilegium.) Is church larceny, or a taking of things out of a holy place; as where a person steals any vessels, ornaments, or goods of the church: and it is said to be a robbery of God, at least what is sacred to his service. 3 Cro. 153.

Common law distinguished this crime from other robberies: for it denied the benefit of the clergy to the offenders, which it did not do to other felons. But by statute it is put upon a footing with other felonies, by making it felony excluded of clergy, as most other felonies are. 2 Inst. 250.

All persons not in holy orders, who shall be indicted, whether in the same county where the fact was committed, or in a different country, of robbing any church, chapel, or other holy place, are excluded from their clergy by 23 Hen. 8. c. 1. 25 Hen. 8. c. 3. 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 10. And all persons in general are ousted of their clergy for the felonious taking of any goods out of any parish church, or other church or chapel, by 1 Ed. 6. c. 12. But the word robbing being always taken to carry with it some force, it seems no sacrilege is within these statutes, which is not accompanied with the actual breaking of a church, &c. Kel. 58. 60. Dyer 224. And the statute 23 Hen. 8. c. 1. is the only act which extends to accessaries to these robberies, except the offence amount to burglary, in which case accessaries before are ousted of clergy, by 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 9. 2 Hawk. P. C. 351.

SACRILEGE, Signifies also alienation to laymen and to profane or common purposes of what was given to religious persons and to pious uses. Paroch. Antiq. 390.

SACRISTA, (Lat.) A sexton, belonging to a church. Cowell.

SAFE-CONDUCT, (Salvus conductus.) Is a security given by the prince, under the great seal, to a stranger, for his safe-coming into and passing out of the realm. Reg. Orig. 25.

The violation of safe-conducts or passports, expressly granted by the king or his ambassadors to the subjects of a foreign power in time of mutual war; or committing acts of hostilities against such as are in amity, league, or truce with us, who are here under a general implied safe-conduct, are breaches of the public faith, without the preservation of which there can be no intercourse or commerce between one nation and another; and such offences may, according to the writers upon the law of nations, be a just ground of a national war, since it is not in the power of the foreign prince to cause justice to be done to his subjects by the very individual delinquent, but he must require it of the whole community. And as during the continuance of any safe-conduct, either express or implied, the foreigner is under the protection of the king and the law; and, more especially, as it is one of the articles of magna charta, that foreign merchants should be entitled to safe conduct and security throughout the kingdom; there is no question but that any violation of either the person or property of such foreigner may be punished by indictment in the name of the king, whose honour is more particularly engaged in supporting his own safe-conduct. And when this malicious rapacity was not confined to private individuals, but broke out into general hostilities, by the statute 2 Hen. V. st. 1. c. 6. breaking of truce and safe-conducts, or abetting and receiving the truce-breakers, was (in affirmance and support of the law of nations) declared to be high treason against the crown and dignity of the king; and conservators of truce and safe-conducts were appointed in every port, and empowered to hear and determine such treasons (when committed at sea) according to the ancient marine law then practised in the admiral's court; and, together with two men learned in the law of the land, to hear and determine according to that law the same treasons, when committed within the body of any county. Which statute, so far as made these offences amount to treason, was suspended by 14 Hen. VI. c. 8. and repealed by 20 Hen. VI. c. 11. but revived by 29 Hen. VI. c. 2. which gave the same powers to the lord chancellor, associated with either of the chief justices, as belonged to the conservators of truce and their assessors; and enacted, that notwithstanding the party be convicted of treason, the injured stranger should have restitution out of his effects, prior to any claim of the crown. And it is farther enacted by the statute 31 Hen. VI. c. 4. that if any of the king's subjects attempt or offend, upon the sea, or in any port within the king's obeysance, against any stranger in amity, league, or truce, or under safe-conduct; and especially by attaching his person, or spoiling, or robbing him of his goods; the lord chancellor, with any justices of either the king's bench or common pleas, may cause full restitution and amends to be made to the party injured.

SAFE-GUARD, (Salva guardia.) A protection of the king to one who is a stranger that fears violence from some of his subjects, for seeking his right by course of law. Reg. Orig. 26.

SAFE-PLEDGE, (Salvus plegius.) A surety given for a man's appearance at a day assigned. Bracton, lib. 4. cap. 2. Cowell.

SAGAMAN, (from the Sax. Saga, i. e.

Fabula.) Signifies a tale-teller, or secret accuser. Leg. Hen. 1. cap. 69. Cowell.

SAGIBARO, alias SACHBARO. Is the same that we now call justiciarius, a judge. Leg. Inæ. c. 6.

SAGITTA BARBATA. A bearded arrow. Sancti Michaelis, &c. Blount.

SAGITTARII. A sort of small ships or vessels, with oars. Cowell. Blount

ST. MARTIN LE GRAND, Court of. The chief of the several courts in London are the sheriffs courts, holden before their steward or judge; from which a writ of error lies to the court of hustings, before the mayor, recorder, and sheriffs; and from thence to justices appointed by the king's commission, who used to sit in the church of St. Martin le Grand, (F. N. B. 32.) and from the judgment of those justices a writ of error lies immediately to the house of lords. 3 Black. 80. n.

SAIO ET SAIONES, Fori vel Magistratus Ministri. A tipstaff or serjeant at arms. Cowell. Blount.

SALARY, (Salarium.) Is a recompence or consideration made to a person for his pains and industry in another man's business. See Taxes.

SALE, (Venditio.) Sale or exchange is a translation of property from one man to another in consideration of some price or recompence in value, for there is no sale without a recompence; there must be a quid pro quo. Noy's Max. 42.

But with regard to the law of sales and exchanges, there is no difference, and both fall under the denomination of sales only.

Where the vendor hath in himself the property of the goods sold, he hath the liberty of disposing of them to whomever he pleases, at any time, and in any manner, unless judgment has been obtained against him for a debt or damages, and the writ of execution is actually delivered to the sheriff. For then, by the statute of frauds, 29 Car. II. c. 3. the sale shall be looked upon as fraudulent, and the property of the goods shall be bound to answer the debt from the time of delivering the writ. Formerly it was bound from the teste or issuing of the writ, 3 Rep. 171. 1 Mod. 188. and any subsequent sale was fraudulent; but the law was thus altered in favour of purchasers, though it still remains the same between the parties; and therefore, if a defendant dies after the awarding and before the delivery of the writ, his goods are bound by it in the hands of his executors.

If two writs are delivered to the sheriff on the same day, he is bound to execute the first which he receives; but if he levies and sells under the second, the sale to a vendee, without notice of the first, is irrevocable, and the sheriff makes himself answerable to both parties. 1 Salk. 320. 1 T. R. 729.

If a man agrees with another for goods at a certain price, he may not carry them away before he hath paid for them, for it is no sale without payment, unless the contrary be expressly agreed. And therefore, if the vendor says, the price of a beast is four pounds, and the vendee says he will give four pounds, the bargain is struck, and they neither of them are at liberty to be off, provided immediate possession be tendered by the other side. But if neither the money be paid, nor the goods delivered, nor tender made, nor any subsequent agreement be entered into, it is no contract, and the owner may dispose of the goods as he pleases. Hob. 41. Noy's Max. c. 42.

But if any part of the price is paid down, if it be but a penny, or any portion of the goods delivered by way of earnest, (which the civil law calls arrha, and interprets to be "emptionis-venditionis contractæ argumentum, Inst. 3. tit. 24.) the property of the goods is absolutely bound by it, and the vendee may recover the goods by action, as well as the vendor may the price of them, Noy. ibid.

But the property does not seem to be absolutely bound by the earnest; for Lord Holt has laid down the following rules, viz. "That notwithstanding the earnest, the money must be paid upon fetching away the goods, because no other time for payment is appointed; that earnest only binds the bargain, and gives the party a right to demand; but then a demand without the payment of the money is void; that after earnest given the vendor cannot sell the goods to another, without a default in the vendee; and therefore if the vendee does not come and pay, and take the goods, the vendor ought to go and request him; and then if he does not come and pay, and take away the goods in convenient time, the agreement is dissolved, and he is at liberty to sell them to any other person. 1 Salk. 113.

SALE OF DISTRESS. See Distress.

SALET. Is a head-piece (from the Fr. Salut, i. e. Salus.) A salet or scull of iron, &c. 20 R. 2. c. 1. 4 & 5 P. & M. Cowell.

SALICETUM. The soil where willows grow, or an osier bed. 1 Inst. 4.

SALINA. A salt-pit, or place wherein salt is made. Cowell.

SALIQUE LAW, (Lex Salica.) A law by which males only were to inherit. Cowell. Blount.

SALMON. See Fisheries.

SALMON-PIPE. An engine to catch salmons or such like fish. 25 Hen. 8. c. 7.

SALTATORIUM. Signifies a deer-leap. Cowell. Blount.

SALT. By 9 & 10 Will. 3. c. 6. no retailer shall sell salt otherwise than by weight, on pain of 5*l.* And by 38 Geo. 3. c. 89. s. 4. and 45 Geo. 3. c. 14. s. 4. salty-five pounds avoirdupoise weight of rock salt shall be deemed a bushel, and fifty-six pounds of every other kind of salt.

The lord-mayor and aldermen of London, and the justices of the peace elsewhere, at their general sessions, may set the price of salt, and the prices so set are to be observed: and if any one sell at any higher price, or refuse to sell at the price set, he shall forfeit 20*l.* to be levied by distress by warrant of one justice, or otherwise be imprisoned till he pay, half to the king and half to the informer. 38 Geo. 3. c. 88. s. 143.

SALT-SILVER. One penny paid at the feast of St. Martin, by the tenants of some manors, as a commutation for the service of carrying their lord's salt from market to his larder. Paroch. Antiq. 496. Cowell.

SALTUS. A high thick wood or forest. Cowell.

SALVA-GARDA. A security given by the king to a stranger, fearing the violence of some of his subjects, for seeking his right by course of law. Reg. Orig. 26.

SALVAGE. Is an allowance made for saving of ships or goods from danger of seas, enemies, &c. Merch. Dict. See Wreck.

SALVAGIUS. Wild, savage; as salvagius catus, the wild cat. Rot. Cart. 1 Joh. Cowell.

SALUTE, (Salus.) A coin made by Hen. V. after his conquest in France, whereon the arms of France and England were stamped and quartered. Stowe's Chr. 589. Cowell. Blount.

SANCTA. The relics of the saints; and jurare super sancta was to make oath on those relics. Leg. Canut. c. 57. Cowell.

SANCTION OF LAWS. Legislators have for the most part chosen to make the sanction of their laws rather vindicatory than remuneratory, or to consist rather in punishments than in actual particular rewards. 1 Black. 56.

And of all the parts of a law, the most effectual is the vindicatory. For it is but lost labour to say, "do this, or avoid that," unless we also declare, "this shall be the consequence of your non-compliance." We must therefore observe, that the main strength and force of a law consists in the penalty annexed to it. 1 Black. 57.

SANCTUARY, (Sanctuarium.) A place privileged for the safe-guard of offenders lives, being founded upon the law of mercy, and the great reverence and devotion which the prince bears to the place whereunto he grants such privilege. Matt. West. Ann. 187. S. P. C. lib. 2. cap. 33. Fleta, lib. 1. cap. 29.

Formerly, on indictments for felonies, a plea, now abrogated, viz. that of sanctuary (which was originally introduced and continued during the superstitious veneration that was paid to consecrated ground in the times of popery) was a lowed. Thus, if a person accused of any crime (except treason, wherein the crown, and sacrilege, wherein the church was too nearly concerned) had fled to any church or churchyard, and within forty days after went in sackcloth and confessed himself guilty before the coroner, and declared all the particular circumstances of the offence; and thereupon took the oath in that case provided, viz. that he abjured the realm, and would depart from thence forthwith at the port that should be assigned him, and would never return without leave from the king; he by this means saved his life, if he observed the conditions of the oath, by going with a cross in his hand, and with all convenient speed, to the port assigned, and embarking. For if, during this forty days privilege of sanctuary, or in his road to the sea-side, he was apprehended and arraigned in any court, for this felony he might plead the privilege of sanctuary, and had a right to be remanded, if taken out against his will. But by this abjuration his blood was attainted, and he forfeited all his goods and chattels. The immunity of these privileged places was very much abridged by the statutes 27 Hen. 8. c. 19. and 32 Hen. 8. c. 12. And now, by the statute 21 Jac. 1. c. 28. all privilege of sanctuary, and abjuration consequent thereupon, is utterly taken away and abolished.

SANDAL. A merchandise brought into England; and a kind of red bearded wheat. See 2 R. II. c. 1.

SAND-GAVEL. Is a payment due to the lord of the manor of Rodley, in the county of Gloucester, for liberty granted to the tenants to dig sand for their common use. Tayl. Hist. Gavel. 113. Cowell.

SANE MEMORY, i. e. Perfect and sound mind and memory to do any lawful acts, &c. See Ideots.

SANGUINEM EMERE. Was where villeins were bound to buy or redeem their blood or tenure, and make themselves freemen. Cowell.

SANGUIS. Is taken for that right or power which the chief lord of the fee had to judge and determine cases where blood was shed. Mon. Angl. tom. 1. p. 1021. Ibid.

SANG, and SANKE. Words used for blood. Ibid.

SARABARA. A covering for the head. Ibid.

SARCLIN-TIME, (from the Fr. Sarcler, Lat. Sarclare.) Is the time or season when husbandmen weed their corn. Ibid.

SARCULATURA. Weeding of corn. Ibid.

SARK. See Guernsey.

SARKELLUS. An unlawful net or engine for destroying fish. Cowell. Blount.

SARPLER OF WOOL, (Serplera lanæ, otherwise called a pocket.) Is half a sack. Fleta, lib. 2. c. 12. Cowell.

SART, or ASSART. A piece of woodland turned into arable. See Assart. Cowell.

SARUM, is intended for the city of Salisbury. It was a form of church service called secundum usum Sarum, and was composed by Osmond, the second bishop of Sarum, in the time of William the Conqueror. Hollingshead, p. 17. col. B. Cowell.

SASSE. Is a kind of wear with floodgates, most commonly in navigable and cut rivers, from the damming and shutting up and loosing the stream of water, as occasion requires, for the better passing of boats and barges. This in the west of England is called a lock, and in some places a sluice. Cowell. Stat. 16 & 17 Car. 2. c. 12.

SASSONS. The corruption of Saxons, a name of contempt formerly given to the English, while they affected to be called Angles; they are still so called by the Welch.

SATISFACTION. Is the giving of recompence for an injury done; or the payment of money due on bond, judgment, &c. In which last case, it must be entered on record. 2 Lil. Abr. 495.

SATURDAY'S STOP. A space of time from even-song on Saturday till sun-rising on Monday, in which it was not lawful to take salmon in Scotland and the northern parts of England. Cowell.

SAVER-DEFAULT. A law term, signifying to excuse: as when a man having made default by not appearing in court, &c. comes afterwards and alledges good cause for it, viz. imprisonment at the time; or the like. Book Ent. Cowell.

SANKEFIN, (Fr. from Sang. i. e. Sanguis, Fin, & Finis.) Is the determination or final end of the lineal race and descent of kindred. Britton, c. 119. Cowell.

SAURUS. A hawk of a year old. Bract. lib. 5. tract. 1. c. 2. par. 1. Cowell.

SAXON-LAGE, (Saxon-laga, Lex Saxonum.) The law of the West Saxons by which they were governed. See Merchenlage. 4 Black. 403, 4, 5.

SCABINI. A word used for wardens at Lynn, in Norfolk. Cowell.

SCALAM, Ad scalam. The old way of paying money into the exchequer. The sheriff, &c. is to make payment ad scalam, i. e. solvere præter, quam libet numeratum librum sex denarios. Stat. W. 1. And at that time sixpence superadded to the pound made up the full weight, and near the intrinsic value, and was told for the pound sterling. Hale's Sher. Ac. 21.

SCALE OF CRIMES AND PUNISHMENTS. Beccaria has ingeniously proposed, that in any state a scale of crimes should be found with a corresponding scale of punishments, descending from the greatest to the least; but Blackstone treats this as too romantic to be reduced to practice. Bec. c. 6. 1 Black. 17.

SCALINGA. A quarry or pit of stones, or rather slates, for covering houses. Cowell.

SCANDAL. An unfounded defamation, or words of abuse. Rep. Temp. Hard. 305. See Defamation, Libel, and Reputation.

SCANDAL IN EQUITY. If a bill in equity contain matter either scandalous or impertinent, the defendant may refuse to answer it, till such scandal or impertinence is expunged, which is done upon an order to refer it to one of the masters, if in chancery, or the deputy remembrancer in equity. The like is also done as to answers, and if the bill or answer is reported to be scandalous or impertinent, great costs are allowed as a punishment to the party, such as 50*l.* or 500*l.* Pr. R. 383. And scandal is the introduction of such language as is unbecoming the court to hear, or which is contrary to all good manners; also to charge any one with a crime not necessary to be set forth is scandal. Impertinence is setting forth something not necessary to be set forth, as being recitals and discussions not material. Ibid.

SCANDALUM MAGNATUM. Is the name of a statute, and also of a wrong done to any high personage of the land, as prelates, dukes, earls, barons, and other nobles; and also to the chancellor, treasurer, clerk of the privy seal, steward of the house, justice of one bench or other, and other great officers of the realm, by false news, or horrible or false messages, whereby debates and discords betwixt them and the commons, or any scandal to their persons might arise. Cowell.

The law on which an action is grounded for this is 2 Rich. II. st. 1. c. 5. which, after speaking of "devisors of false news and horrible lies of prelates, dukes, earls, barons, and other nobles and great men of the realm, and also of the chancellor, treasurer, clerk of the privy seal, steward of the king's house, justices of the one bench or of the other, and other great officers of the realm," ENACTS, "that none contrive or tell any false things of prelates, lords, and of others aforesaid, whereof discord or slander might rise within the realm, and he who doth the same shall be imprisoned till he have brought him forth that did speak the same." This statute is recited by 12 R. II. cap. 11. and thereby it is further provided, that the offender shall be punished by the advice of the council. 4 Inst. 51. 4 Co. 12. b.

Scandalum magnatum lies if a man speak against them any words which are actionable when spoken against a common person, and even though the words are not so certain as to maintain an action against a common person; for if they sound a slander, an action lies as if a man say, my lord P. sent after me to take my purse, though he do not say feloniously—that he is an unworthy man—no man considers him a dog—he bid me compound in robbery—cares not how he comes by goods, or the like. Com. Dig. tit. Acc. upon the case for Defamation.

SCANDAL. See Slander.

SCATINIA LEX, a law against buggery. Cowell.

SCAVAGE, SCEVAGE, or SCHEWAGE, (from the Sax. scheawian, i. e. ostendere) a kind of toll or custom, exacted by mayors, sheriffs, &c. of merchant strangers, for wares shewed or exposed to sale within their liberties, prohibited by the statute 19 H. 7. c. 7. But the city of London still retains this ancient custom. 49 Geo. 3. c. 98. s. 2.

SCAVALDUS, the officer who collected the scavage money, which was sometimes done with great extortion. Cowell.

SCAVENGERS, (from the Belg. schaven, to scrape or carry away) persons chosen in cities and corporate towns, to cleanse the streets, and carry the dirt and filth thereof away. These officers are still chosen, in some places, according to the local custom of the town; but in most places of consequence they are now appointed under the authority of some special act of parliament.

SCEAT, (Sax.) a small coin among the Saxons, equal to four farthings. Cowell.

SCEITHMAN, (Sax.) a pirate or thief. Ibid.

SCEPPA SALIS, an ancient measure of salt, the quantity now not known. Ibid.

SCEURUM, a barn or granary. Ibid.

SCHAFFA, a sheaf, as schaffa sagittarum, a sheaf of arrows. Ibid.

SCHARPENY, a small duty, or compensation. Some customary tenants were obliged to pen up their cattle at night in the pound or yard of the lord, for the benefit of their dung; or, if they did not so, they paid a small compensation called sharpenny or sharnpenny, i. e. dung penny, or money in lieu of dung. Ibid.

SCHAVALDUS, the officer who collected the scavage-money. Cowell.

SCHEDULE, is a little roll, or long piece of paper or parchment, in which are contained particulars of goods in a house let by lease. Morg.

Schedules are likewise frequently annexed to answers in a court of equity, containing an account of estates or effects, monies, debts, &c. received or disposed of, or expended by the person putting in the answer: and schedule is a term frequently used, instead of inventory.

SCHETES, formerly a term for usury. Cowell.

SCHILLA, a little bell, used in monasteries. Ibid.

SCHIRMAN, (Sax. scir-man) a sheriff. LL. Inæ. Regis apud Brompton. See Shireman.

SCHIRRENS-GELD, (shire-geld) was a tax paid to sheriffs for keeping the shire, or county court. Cowell.

SCHISM, (schisma) a rent or division in the church. Black. 52. 53.

SCHOOLMASTER. By our canons, no man shall teach in a public school, or private house, but such as is examined and allowed by the bishop, and of sober life, and all schoolmasters are to teach the catechism of the church in English or Latin, and bring their scholars to church, and afterwards examine them how they have benefited by sermons, &c. Can. 77. 79.

No person shall keep or maintain a schoolmaster who does not constantly go to church, or is not allowed by the ordinary, on pain of 10*l.* a month; and the schoolmaster shall be disabled, and suffer a year's imprisonment. (Stat. 23 Eliz. c. 1.) Recusants are not to be schoolmasters in any public grammar school, nor any other, unless the persons be licensed by the bishop, under the penalty of forfeiting 40*s.* a day. 1 Jac. 1. c. 4.

Every schoolmaster keeping any public or private school, and every tutor in any private family, shall subscribe the declaration, that he will conform to the liturgy of the church of England, as by law established, and be licensed by the ordinary, or he shall, for the first offence, suffer three months imprisonment; and for the second, and every other offence, be imprisoned three months, and forfeit 5*l.* to the king. 13 & 14 Car. 2. s. 4.

Persons keeping schools, without a licence from the bishop (except tutors in reading, writing, and arithmetic), shall be committed to the common gaol for three months, &c. 12 Anne, s. 2. c. 7.

Though the act of uniformity obliges schoolmasters only to assent to and subscribe the declaration, yet it adds, according to the laws and statutes of this realm, which presupposes some necessary qualification; and therefore a bishop may take time to inquire into the character of an elected schoolmaster, before he licences him. 2 Strange, 1023.

If any papist shall be convicted of keeping a school, or take upon him the education of youth, he shall be adjudged to perpetual imprisonment. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 4.

But, by stat. 18 Geo. 3. c. 60. this act of 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 60. which subjects such teachers to perpetual imprisonment, is repealed, as to such persons who shall take the oaths therein prescribed. See Papists.

Also, by 19 Geo. 3. c. 44. "no dissenting minister, or other protestant dissenter, who shall take the oaths, and subscribe the declaration against popery, and the declaration that he is a protestant, shall be prosecuted for teaching and instructing youth as a tutor and schoolmaster; but this does not extend to colleges or endowed schools, unless founded since 1 W. & M. for the immediate use of protestant dissenters. s. 2.

And, finally, by 31 Geo. 3. c. 32. no person who has qualified shall be prosecuted for instructing youth, except in an endowed school, or a school at one of the English universities; and except also, that no roman catholic schoolmaster shall receive into his school the child of any protestant father; nor shall any roman catholic keep a school until his or her name be recorded as a teacher at sessions.

SCILICET, an adverb, signifying that is to say, or to wit, often used in law proceedings. It is not a direct and separate clause, but it is rather to usher in the sentence of another. Hob. 171, 172.

SCIRE FACIAS, is a writ judicial, most commonly to call a man to shew cause to the court whence it issues, why execution of a judgment passed should not be made out. Old Nat. Brev. f. 151.

Thus, in detinue, after judgment, the plaintiff shall have a distringas, to compel the defendant to deliver the goods. by repeated distresses of his chattels; or else a scire facias against any third person, in whose hands they may happen to be, to shew cause why they should not be delivered: and, if the defendant still continues obstinate, the sheriff shall summon an inquest to ascertain the plaintiff's damages, which shall be levied (like other damages) by seisure of the person or goods of the defendant.

So if a capias ad satisfaciendum is sued out against a defendant, on a judgment obtained, and a non est inventus is returned thereon, the plaintiff may sue out a process against the bail, if any were given: who stipulate in this triple alternative, that the defendant shall, if condemned in the suit, satisfy the plaintiff his debt and costs; or surrender himself a prisoner; or, that they will pay it for him: as, therefore, the two former branches of the alternative are neither of them complied with, the latter must immediately take place (Lutw. 1269. 1273.) In order to which a writ of scire facias may be sued out against the bail, commanding them to shew cause why the plaintiff should not have execution against them for his debt and damages: and on such writ, if they shew no sufficient cause, or the defendant does not surrender himself on the day of the return, or of shewing cause (for afterwards is not sufficient) the plaintiff may have judgment against the bail, and take out a writ of capias ad satisfaciendum, or other process of execution against them. 3 Black. 417.

All the different writs of execution must be sued out within a year and a day after the judgment is entered, otherwise the court concludes, prima facie, that the judgment is satisfied and extinct; yet, however, it will grant a writ of scire facias in pursuance of stat. Westm. 2. 13 Edw. 1. c. 45. for the defendant to shew cause why the judgment should not be revived, and execution had against him; to which the defendant may plead such matter as he has to alledge, in order to shew why process of execution should not be issued: or the plaintiff may still bring an action of debt, founded on this dormant judgment, which was the only method of revival allowed by the common law. Co. Litt. 290. 3 Black. 421.

On a quare impedit, and ne admittas sued out, if the bishop, after the receipt of the latter writ, admit any person, even though the patron's right may have been found in a jure patronatus, then the plaintiff, after he has obtained judgment in the quare impedit, may remove the incumbent, if the clerk of a stranger, by writ of scire facias. Black. 248.

So also a scire facias is deemed a judicial writ of execution; yet it is so far in nature of an original, that the defendant may plead to it, and is in that respect considered as an action. Litt. s. 505. Co. Litt. 290. b. 291. a. F. N. B. 267.

If one hath judgment in a quare impedit, and afterwards before execution the party is outlawed, the king may have a sci. fa. to execute the judgment, the king having privity enough in this case to have execution, because the thing, as it was in the plaintiff, vested in the king. Cro. Eliz. 44. 325. Keilw. 168. 169.

SCIRE FACIAS AD AUDIENDUM ERRORES, on writs of error. There are to be fifteen days between the teste and return of every scire fac. ad audiend. error. upon a writ of error returnable in B. R. And if on the return of two nichils, &c. the defendant in error doth not appear, it is not then with him as in case of a sci. fac. quare execution. non, &c. But the cause is to be set down to be heard by the court, and the plaintiff in error shall be held thereunto ex parte. 2 Lil. Abr. 499.

SCIRE FACIAS TO REPEAL LETTERS PATENT AND GRANTS. Where the crown hath unadvisedly granted any thing by letters patent, which ought not to be granted, or where the patentee hath done an act that amounts to a forfeiture of the grant, the remedy to repeal the patent is by writ of scire facias in Chancery. 3 Black. 248.

SCIRE FECI. Is the return of the sheriff, on a scire facias, that he hath caused notice to be given to the party, against whom the scire facias issued.

SCIREWYTE, the annual tax or prestation paid to the sheriff for holding the assizes or county courts. Cowell.

SCITE, (situs) the seat or situation of a building, or the ground whereon it stood. Cowell.

SCOLDS, are troublesome and angry women, who, by their brawling and wrangling amongst their neighbours, break the public peace, and increase discord. They are indictable in the sheriff's turn, and punished by the ducking-stool, &c. Kitch. 13.

SCOT AND LOT, (Sax. sceat, pars, and hlot, i. e. sors). Whoever, though not by equal proportion, are assessed to any contribution, are generally said to pay scot and lot. Cowell.

SCOTAL or SCOTALE, was where any officer of a forest kept an alehouse within the forest, by colour of his office, caused people to come to his house, and there spend their money, for fear of his displeasure. Cowell.

SCOTTARE. Those tenants were called scottare, whose lands were subject to pay scot. Mon. Ang. t. 1. p. 875.

SCOTLAND. The kingdom of Scotland, notwithstanding the union of the crowns on the accession of James 6. to that of England, continued an entirely separate and distinct kingdom for above a century more, though an union had been long projected; which was judged to be the more easy to be done, as both kingdoms were anciently under the same government, and still retained a very great resemblance, though far from an identity, in their laws. By an act of parliament, 1 Jac. 1. c. 1. it is declared that these two mighty, famous, and ancient kingdoms, were formerly one. And sir Edward Coke observes, how marvellous a conformity there was, not only in the religion and language of the two nations, but also in their ancient laws, the descent of the crown, their parliaments, their titles of nobility, their officers of state and of justice, their writs, their customs, and even the language of their laws. Upon which account he supposes the common law of each to have been originally the same; especially as their most ancient and authentic book, called regiam majestatem, and containing the rules of their ancient common law, is extremely similar to that of Glanvil, which contains the principles of ours, as it stood in the reign of Henry 2. And the many diversities subsisting between the two laws at present, may be well enough accounted for, from a diversity of practice in two large and uncommunicating jurisdictions, and from the acts of two distinct and independent parliaments, which have in many points altered and abrogated the old common law of both kingdoms.

However, sir Edward Coke, and the politicians of that time, conceived great difficulties in carrying on the projected union; but these were at length overcome, and the great work was happily effected in 1707, by stat. 6 Anne, c. 8. when twenty-five articles of union were agreed to by the parliaments of both nations; the purport of the most considerable being as follows:

1. That on the 1st of May, 1707, and for ever after, the kingdoms of England and Scotland shall be united into one kingdom, by the name of Great Britain.

2. The succession to the monarchy of Great Britain shall be the same as was before settled with regard to that of England.

3. The united kingdom shall be represented by one parliament.

4. There shall be a communication of all rights and privileges between the subjects of both kingdoms, except where it is otherwise agreed.

9. When England raises 2,000,000*l. by a land-tax, Scotland shall raise 48,000*l.*

16. 17. The standards of the coin, of weights, and of measures, shall be reduced to those of England, throughout the united kingdoms.

18. The laws relating to trade, customs, and the excise, shall be the same in Scotland as in England; but all the other laws of Scotland shall remain in force, though alterable by the parliament of Great Britain: yet with this caution, that laws relating to public policy are alterable at the discretion of the parliament; laws relating to private right are not to be altered but for the evident utility of the people of Scotland.

22. Sixteen peers are to be chosen to represent the peerage of Scotland in parliament, and 45 members to sit in the house of commons.

23. The 16 peers of Scotland shall have all privileges of parliament: and all peers of Scotland shall be peers of Great Britain, and rank next after those of the same degree at the time of the union, and shall have all privileges of peers, except sitting in the house of lords, and voting on the trial of a peer.

Since the union, the following orders have been made in the house of lords respecting the peerage of Scotland. Queen Anne, in the seventh year of her reign, had created James, duke of Queensbury, duke of Dover, with remainder in tail to his second son. Under this article it was, upon the 21st of January, 1708-9, resolved by the lords, that a peer of Scotland claiming to sit in the house of peers by virtue of a patent, passed since the union, under the great seal of Great Britain, and who sits in the parliament of Great Britain, has no right to vote in the election of the 16 peers who are to represent the peers of Scotland in parliament.

* Accurately, 1,997,763*l.* 8*s.* 4½*d.* the sum raised by a land-tax of 4*s.* in the pound.

And, in 1782, in the case of the duke of Hamilton, the judges were unanimously of opinion, that the peers of Scotland are not disabled, from receiving, subsequently to the union, a patent of peerage of Great Britain, with all the privileges usually incident thereto.

These are the principal of the twenty-five articles of union, which are ratified and confirmed by stat. 5 Ann, c. 8. in which statute there are also two acts of parliament recited; the one of Scotland, whereby the church of Scotland, and also the four universities of that kingdom, are established for ever, and all succeeding sovereigns are to take an oath inviolably to maintain the same; the other of England, 5 Ann, c. 6. whereby the acts of uniformity of 13 Eliz. & 13 Car. 2. (except as the same had been altered by parliament at that time) and all other acts then in force for the preservation of the church of England, are declared perpetual; and it is stipulated, that every subsequent king and queen shall take an oath inviolably to maintain the same within England, Ireland, Wales, and the town of Berwick upon Tweed. And it is enacted, that these two acts "shall for ever be observed as fundamental and essential conditions of the union."

Upon these articles and act of union, it is to be observed, 1. That the two kingdoms are now so inseparably united, that nothing can ever disunite them again, except the mutual consent of both, or the successful resistance of either, upon apprehending an infringement of those points which, when they were separate and independent nations, it was mutually stipulated should be "fundamental and essential conditions of the union." * 2. That whatever else may be deemed "fundamental and essential conditions," the preservation of the two churches of England and Scotland, in the same state that they were in at the time of the union, and the maintenance of the acts of uniformity, which establish our common prayer, are expressly declared so to be. 3. That therefore any alteration in the constitution of either of those churches, or in the liturgy of the church of England (unless with the consent of the respective churches, collectively or representatively given), would be an infringement of these "fundamental and essential conditions," and greatly endanger the union. 4. That the municipal laws of Scotland are ordained to be still observed in that part of the island, unless altered by parliament; and, as the parliament has not yet thought proper, except in a few instances, to alter them, they still (with regard to the particulars unaltered) continue in full force. Wherefore the municipal or common laws of England are, generally speaking, of

* It may be justly doubted, whether even such an infringement (though a manifest breach of good faith, unless done upon the most pressing necessity), would of itself dissolve the union: for the bare idea of a state, without a power somewhere vested to alter every part of its laws, is the height of political absurdity. The truth seems to be, that in such an incorporate union (which is well distinguished by a very learned prelate from a federate alliance, where such an infringement would certainly rescind the compact) the two contracting states are totally annihilated, without any power of a revival; and a third arises from their conjunction, in which all the rights of sovereignty, and particularly that of legislation, must of necessity reside. (See Warburton's Alliance, 195.) But the wanton or imprudent exertion of this right would probably raise a very alarming ferment in the minds of individuals; and therefore it is hinted above that such an attempt might endanger (though by no means destroy) the union.

To illustrate this matter a little farther, an act of parliament to repeal or alter the act of uniformity in England, or to establish episcopacy in Scotland, would doubtless, in point of authority, be sufficiently valid and binding; and, notwithstanding such an act, the union would continue unbroken. Nay, each of these measures might be safely and honourably pursued, if respectively agreeable to the sentiments of the English church, or the kirk in Scotland. But it should seem neither prudent, nor perhaps consistent with good faith, to venture upon either of those steps, by a spontaneous exertion of the inherent powers of parliament, or at the instance of mere individuals. So sacred indeed are the laws above-mentioned (for protecting each church, and the English liturgy) esteemed, that in the regency acts both of 1751 and 1765 the regents are expressly disabled from assenting to the repeal or alteration of either these, or the act of settlement.

no force or validity in Scotland. 1 Black. 98.

But acts of parliament, in general, passed since the union, extend to Scotland; but where a statute is not applicable to Scotland, and where Scotland is not intended to be included, the method is to declare by proviso that it does not extend to Scotland. 3 Burr. 853.

SCOTS. Assessments by commissioners of sewers are so called. 3 Black. 74.

SCRIPTURE. All profane scoffing of the holy scripture, or exposing any part thereof to contempt and ridicule, is punished by fine and imprisonment. 1 Hawk. P. C. 7.

SCRIVENER. One who is employed or entrusted to draw up and engross deeds, conveyances, and securities for money.

SCUTAGE, (scutagium, Sax. scildpenig) was a tax or contribution, raised by those that held lands by knights' service, towards furnishing the king's army, at one, two, or three marks for every knight's fee. 1 Black. 309. 2 Black. 74.

SCUTAGIO HABENDO, a writ that anciently lay against tenants by knight-service, to serve in the wars, or send sufficient persons, or to pay a certain sum, &c. F. N. B. 83.

SCUTE, a French gold coin of 3*s.* 4*d.* in the reign of king Henry 5. Cowell.

SCUTELLA, (from sutum, Sax. scutel) a scuttle, any thing of a flat and broad shape, like a shield. Ibid.

SCUTELLA ELEEMOSYNARIA, an alms basket or scuttle. Paroch. Antiq. Cowell.

SCUTUM ARMORUM, a shield, or coat of arms. Cowell.

SCYLDWIT, (Sax.) a mulct for any fault; from the Saxon scild. i. e. delictum, and wite, pœna. Leg. Hen. 1. Cowell.

SCYRA, a fine imposed on such as neglected to attend the scyregemot court, which all tenants were bound to do. Mon. Ang. t. 1. p. 52. Cowell.

SCYRE-GEMOT, (Sax.) was a court held by the Saxons twice every year by the bishop of the diocese, and the earldorman, in shires that had earldormen; and by the bishop and sheriff, where the counties were committed to the sheriff, &c. wherein both the ecclesiastical and temporal laws were given in charge to the county. Seld. Tit. Hon. 628. Cowell.

SEA, (mare.) By statute the sea is to be open to all merchants (18 Edw. 3. c. 3.) The main sea, beneath the low-water-mark, and round England, is part of England, for there the admiral hath jurisdiction. 1 Inst. 260. 5 Rep. 107.

The seas which environ England are within the jurisdiction of the king of England. 1 Roll. Abr. 528. See Admiralty.

SEA-BANKS. By the statutes 6 Geo. 2. c. 37. and 10 Geo. 2. c. 32. it is made felony, without benefit of clergy, maliciously to cut down any river or sea-bank, whereby lands may be overflowed.

SEA-LAWS, are laws relating to the sea, as the laws of Oleron, &c. Cowell.

SEALER, (sigillator) is an officer in chancery, appointed by the lord chancellor, or lord keeper of the great seal of England, to seal the writs and instruments there made in his presence.

There is also a sealer of the writs issued by the other courts of law at Westminster; the profits of which office, formerly part of the king's ancient hereditary revenues, are now vested in the duke of Grafton, by alienation from the crown, in the reign of Charles 2.

SEALING DEEDS, is one of the requisites for making a good deed (2 Black. 305.) And, if a seal is broken, it will make the deed void (2 Lev. 220. Cro. Eliz. 408. 546.) But, in case the seal be broken by accident, though no action can be brought, yet relief may be had in equity. 2 Bulst. 246.

SEA-MARKS. The erection of beacons, light-houses, and sea-marks, is a branch of the royal prerogative. By 8 Eliz. c. 13. the corporation of the trinity-house are empowered to set up any beacons or sea-marks wherever they shall think them necessary; and if the owner of the land, or any other person, shall destroy them, or shall take down any steeple, tree, or other known sea-mark, he shall forfeit 100*l.*; or, in case of inability to pay it, he shall be ipso facto outlawed.

SEAMEN. Many laws have been made from time to time for the encouragement of the increase of British seamen; but the method of ordering seamen in the royal fleet, and keeping up a regular discipline there, is directed by certain express rules, articles, and orders, first enacted by the authority of parliament; but since new modelled and altered, after the peace of Aix la Chapelle, to remedy some defects, which were of fatal consequence in conducting the preceding war. See Stat. 22 Geo. 2. c. 23. amended by 19 Geo. 3. c. 17.

In these articles of the navy (see Admiralty and Articles of the Navy) almost every possible offence is set down, and the punishment thereof annexed; in which respect the seamen have much the advantage over their brethren in the land-service, whose articles of war are not enacted by parliament, but framed from time to time at the pleasure of the crown. 1 Black. 420.

With regard to the privileges conferred on sailors, they are pretty much the same with those conferred on soldiers; and by 31 Geo. 2. c. 10. no seamen aboard his majesty's ships can be arrested for any debt, unless the same be sworn to amount to at least 20*l.*

But as the statute excepts any criminal matter, it has been decided that he may be committed for refusing to indemnify the parish against a bastard child; or for disobeying an order of justices to pay a weekly allowance for it. 5 T. R. 156. 2 T. R. 270. See Admiralty, Navy, Mariner, and Ships.

SEAMEN'S WAGES. The recovery of seamen's wages is one of the objects of the admiralty jurisdiction, even though the contract be made for them upon the land. Yet the courts of common law have jurisdiction, and an action may be maintained for work and labour. 1 Ventr. 146. 2 Black. 107.

SEAN-FISH, fish taken with a large and long net, called a sean. Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 25.

SEARCHER, an officer of the customs, whose business it is to search and examine ships outward bound, if they have any prohibited or uncustomed goods on board. Stat. 12 Car. 2.

SEA-REEVE, in villis maritimis est qui maritimam domini jurisdictionem curat, littus lustrat, & ejectum maris, (quod wreck appellatur) domino colligit. Spelm.

SEA-ROVERS, pirates and robbers at sea: Stat. 16 Car. 2. c. 6. See Pirates.

SECONDARY, (secondarius) an officer who is second, or next to the chief officer: as the secondaries to the prothonotaries of the courts of B. R. and C. B.; the secondary of the remembrancer in the exchequer; secondary of the compter, &c. 2 Lill. Abr. 506.

SECONDARY CONVEYANCES, are those which presuppose some other conveyance or precedent, and only serve to confirm, alter, restrain, restore, or transfer the interest granted by such original conveyance. 2 Black. 324.

SECONDARY USE. A use, though executed, may change from one to another by circumstances ex post facto; as, if A. makes a feoffment to the use of his intended wife and her eldest son, for their lives, upon the marriage the wife takes the whole use in severalty; and, upon the birth of a son, the use is executed jointly in them both. This is sometimes called a secondary, sometimes a shifting use. 2 Black. 334, 335.

SECOND DELIVERANCE, (secunda deliberatione) is a judicial writ that lies after a nonsuit of the plaintiff in replevin, and a returno habendo of the cattle replevied, adjudged to him that distrained them, commanding the sheriff to replevy the same cattle again, upon security given by the plaintiff in the replevin for the re-delivery of them, if the distress be justified. It is a second writ of replevin, &c. F. N. B. 68.

SECOND MARRIAGE, (secundæ nuptiæ) is when after the decease of one a man marries a second wife, which the law terms bigamus. Cowell.

SECOND SURCHARGE, (writ of). If after admeasurement of common, upon a writ of admeasurement of pasture, the same defendant surcharges the common again, the plaintiff may have this writ of second surcharge, de secunda superoneratione, which is given by the stat. Westm. 2. c. 13. Ed. 1. c. 8.; and thereby the sheriff is directed to inquire by a jury whether the defendant has in fact again surcharged the common, contrary to the tenure of the last admeasurement; and, if he has, he shall then forfeit to the king the supernumerary cattle put in, and shall also pay damages to the plaintiff. 2 Black. 239.

SECRETARIES OF STATE, so called, ab epistolis & scriptis secretis. The secretaries of state have an extraordinary trust, which renders them very considerable in the eyes of the king, and of the subject also, whose requests and petitions are for the most part lodged in their hands, to be represented to his Majesty, and to make dispatches thereupon, pursuant to his majesty's directions; they are privy counsellors, and a council is seldom or never held without the presence of one of them; they wait by turns, and one of these secretaries always attends the court, and by the king's warrant prepares all bills or letters for the king to sign, not being matter of law. And depending on them is the office called the paper office, which contains all the public writings of state, negociations, and dispatches, all matters of state and council, &c.; and they have the keeping of the king's seal, called the signet, because the king's private letters are signed with it.

The correspondence with all parts of Great Britain is managed by either of the secretaries, without distinction; but, in respect to foreign affairs, all nations which have intercourse of business with Great Britain, are divided into two provinces, the southern and the northern: of which the southern is under the senior, and the northern is under the junior secretary, &c. Our secretaries of state have power to commit persons for treason, and other offences against the state, as justices of peace all over England, and it is incident to their office (1 Salk. 347. Wood's Inst. 458.) And they are constantly named in the commissions of the peace for every county in England and Wales. 1 Black. 338.

But the secretary of state, as such, is not a conservator, or justice of the peace; nor is he, or the king's messengers in ordinary, acting under his warrant, within the meaning of the statute. 24 Geo. 2. c. 44. 2 Wilson, p. 2. f. 290. 291.

SECTA, or SUIT, (a sequendo) the witnesses or followers of the plaintiff. Seld. in Fortesc. c. 21. 3 Black. 295.

SECTA AD CURIAM, a writ that lies against him who refused to perform his suit either to the county or court-baron. F. N. B. f. 158.

SECTA AD JUSTITIAM FACIENDAM, a service which a man was bound to perform by his fee. Bracton, l. 2. c. 16. n. 6.

SECTA CURIÆ, suit and service done by tenants at the court of their lord. Par. Antiq. p. 320.

SECTA FACIENDA PER ILLAM QUÆ HABET ENICIAM PARTEM, a writ to compel the heir, who had the elder's part of the co-heirs, to perform service for all the coparceners. Reg. Orig. f. 177.

SECTA MOLENDINI, a writ which lies where a man by usage, time out of mind, &c. had ground his corn at the mill of a certain person, and afterwards went to another mill with his corn, thereby withdrawing his suit to the former: and this writ lies especially for the lord against his tenant, who holds of him to do suit at his mill. Reg. Orig. 153. F. N. B. 122.

SECTA REGALIS, a suit by which all persons were bound twice in a year to attend the sheriff's tourn; and was called regalis, because the sheriff's tourn was the king's leet wherein the people were to be obliged by oath to bear true allegiance to the king, &c. Cowell.

SECTA UNICA TANTUM FACIENDA PRO PLURIBUS HÆREDITATIBUS, a writ that lies for an heir who was distrained by the lord to do more suits than one, in respect of the land of divers heirs descended to him. Reg. Orig.

SECTIS NON FACIENDIS, a writ that lies for a woman who, for her dower, ought not to perform suit of court (Reg. Orig. f. 174.) It lay also for one in wardship to be freed of all suits of court during his wardship. Reg. Orig. f. 173.

SECUNDA SUPERONERATIONE PASTURÆ, a writ which lay where admeasurement of pasture had been made, and he that first surcharged the common did it a second time, notwithstanding the admeasurement. Old Nat. Br. 73.

SECURITATEM INVENIENDI QUOD SE NON DIVERTAT AD PARTES EXTERAS SINE LICENTIA REGIS, an ancient writ lying for the king against any of his subjects, to stay them from going out of this kingdom to foreign parts; the ground whereof is, that every man is bound to serve and defend the commonwealth, as the king shall think fit. F. N. B. 85. See Ne exeat Regno.

SECURITATIS PACIS, a writ that lay for one who was threatened death or bodily harm by another, against him which so threatened, and it issued out of Chancery, directed to the sheriff. Reg. Orig. 88.

SECURITY. See Surety of the Peace.

SE DEFENDENDO. See Homicide.

SEDITIOUS PRACTICES. The preamble of stat. 39 Geo. 3. c. 79. states, "Whereas a traitorous conspiracy has long been carried on, in conjunction with the persons from time to time exercising the powers of government in France, to overturn the laws, constitution, and government, and every existing establishment, civil and ecclesiastical, both in Great Britain and Ireland, and to dissolve the connection between the two kingdoms, so necessary to the security and prosperity of both: and whereas, in pursuance of such design, and in order to carry the same into effect, divers societies have been of late years instituted in this kingdom, and in the kingdom of Ireland, of a new and dangerous nature, inconsistent with public tranquillity, and with the existence of regular government, particularly certain societies calling themselves Societies of United Englishmen, United Scotchmen, United Britons, United Irishmen, and the London Corresponding Society. And whereas the members of many of such societies have taken unlawful oaths and engagements of fidelity and secrecy, and used secret signs, and appointed committees, secretaries, and other officers, in a secret manner; and many of such societies are composed of different divisions, branches, or parts, which communicate with each other by secretaries, delegates, or otherwise, and by means thereof maintain an influence over large bodies of men, and delude many ignorant and unwary persons into the commission of acts highly criminal;" it therefore enacts, that all these and other corresponding societies should be utterly suppressed and prohibited, as being unlawful combinations and confederacies.

And also every society of which the members shall, according to the rules of the society, be required to take an illegal oath, or an oath not authorised by law, or shall subscribe or assent to any test or declaration not required by law, or where the names of the members, or where the committees or presidents chosen are not known to the society at large; and every society which shall consist of different parts, either acting separately, or having separate presidents, or other officers, shall be deemed unlawful combinations and confederacies; and every person who shall become a member of such a society, or who shall correspond with them, or shall aid or support them with money, or otherwise, shall be guilty of an unlawful combination and confederacy.

This does not extend to a declaration subscribed to by a society, which declaration shall be approved by two justices, and afterwards confirmed at the quarter sessions, nor to persons who shall cease to act as members of such societies after the passing of the act, nor to established lodges of free-masons. But two members shall certify, and upon oath, that their society has been usually held as a lodge of free-masons, in conformity to the rules of free-masons in this kingdom; which certificate, and also an account of its place and times of meeting, and the names of all its members, shall be registered with the clerk of the peace; and the justices at the sessions, upon complaint made to them upon oath by any credible person, that such society is likely to be injurious to the public peace and good order, may direct that the meetings of such lodge be discontinued.

Persons offending against this statute may be proceeded against either in a summary way before one justice, or more, who may either fine the offender 20*l.* or imprison him three calendar months, or they may be prosecuted by indictment; and, upon conviction, the court may transport for seven years, or imprison for any time not exceeding two years.

The justices in a summary conviction may mitigate the punishment to one third. If any person shall permit the meeting of any illegal society in his house, he shall forfeit 5*l.* for the first offence, and for the second he shall be punishable as a member. And two justices, upon evidence on oath that any meeting has been held for a seditious purpose in a public-house, may declare the licence forfeited, and from the day of such declaration the licence is void and determined, and the owner of the house will be afterwards subject to penalties accordingly.

And because many places were open for lectures and debates of a seditious and immoral nature, and other places used for seditious and immoral purposes, under pretence of reading books, pamphlets, newspapers, or other publications, it is enacted, that all such places where, under any pretence, money shall be received for admission, shall be considered as disorderly houses, unless they are licensed for any time not more than one year by two justices; which licence may be revoked by the justices at the quarter sessions. Every alehouse shall be deemed licensed for reading publications; but upon evidence that publications of a seditious or immoral nature are usually distributed, in order to be read there, two justices may declare the licence void.

SEDUCTION OF WOMEN CHILDREN. By 4 & 5 P. & M. c. 8. if any person, above the age of 14, unlawfully shall convey or take away any woman child unmarried (which is held, Stra. 1162 to extend to bastards as well as to legitimate children), within the age of 16 years, from the possession, and against the will of the father, &c. he shall be imprisoned two years, or fined, at the discretion of the justices. 4 Black. 209. 210.

SEED-COD, (from the Sax. sæd, seed, and codde, a purse, or such like continent), is a basket or other vessel of wood, carried on one arm of the husbandman or sower of ground, to bear the seed or grain which he sows, and spreads abroad with the other hand. Cowell.

SEEDER, a seedsman, or one who sows the land. Blount.

SEIGNIOR, (Fr. seigneur, i.e. dominus) is, in general signification, as much as lord. F. N. B. 23. Cowell.

SEIGNIORAGE, a royalty or prerogative of the king, whereby he claims an allowance of gold and silver brought in the mass, to be exchanged for coin.

SEIGNIOR IN GROSS, seemeth to have been one that was a lord, but of no manor, and therefore could keep no court. F. N. B. f. 3. See next title.

SEIGNIORY, (dominium) borrowed from the French seigneurie, i.e. dominatus, imperium, principatus, and signifies with us a manor or lordship. Kitchin, 80.

SEISIN, (seisina, Fr. seisine) in the common law signifies possession. To seise is to take possession of a thing; and primer seisin is the first possession. Co. Lit. 152.

There is a seisin in deed or in fact, and a seisin in law; a seisin in deed is when an actual possession is taken; and seisin in law is where lands descend, and one hath not actually entered on them, but has a right to enter. 1 Inst. 31. Perk. 457. 458. 4 Rep. 9. 80. 1 Danv. Abr. 647.

SEISSINA HABENDA, (quia rex habuit annum, diem & vastum) is a writ that lies for delivery of seisin to the lord of lands or tenements, after the king in right of his prerogative hath had the year, day, and waste, on a felony committed, &c. Reg. Orig. 165.

SEISING OF HERIOTS, is the seising of the best beasts, &c. (where an heriot is due) on the death of the tenant. It is a species of self-remedy, not much unlike that of taking of cattle or goods in distress, only in the latter case they are seised as a pledge, in the former, as the property of the person for whom seised. 3 Black. 15.

SEIZURE OF GOODS FOR OFFENCES. No goods of a felon or other offender can be seised to the use of the king, before forfeited. 3 Inst. 103.

SEL, the bigness of a thing to which it is added, as selwood is a great wood. Cowell.

SELDA, (from the Sax. selde, a seat, or stool) a shop, shed, or stall in a market; also a salt-pit. Cowell. Co. Lit. 4.

SELF-BANE, (Sax. self-bana) is where a man murders himself, called felo de se. Cowell.

SELF-DEFENCE. As to the defence of one's self, or the mutual and reciprocal defence of such as stand in the relations of husband and wife, parent and child, master and servant: if the party himself, or any of these his relations, be forcibly attacked in his person or property, it is lawful for him to repel force by force; and the breach of the peace which happens is chargeable upon him only who began the affray. 2 Rol. Abr. 546. 1 Hawk. P. C. 131. 3 Black. 3. See Homicide.

SELF-MURDER. The law hath ranked this among the highest crimes, making it a peculiar species of felony, a felony committed on one's self. See Felo de se.

SELF-PRESERVATION. Every creature has implanted in it by nature a strong desire of self-preservation: and by our ancient law, if a man stole victuals merely to satisfy his present hunger, being for the preservation of life, it was not felony; but the law is now otherwise, it being larceny. Staundf. P. C.

SELION OF LAND, (selio terræ, Fr. sellion) signifies a ridge of ground rising between two furrows. Cromp. Jurisd. 221.

SEME, (Sax. seam, i. e. onus) a horse-load, or eight bushels of corn. Blount.

SEMEBOLE, a pipe, or half a ton of wine. Merch. Dict.

SEMINARIES. See Papists.

SEMINIVERBIUS, a preacher or sower of words. Pet. Blesen. Cowell.

SENAGE, (senagium, from senatus, sometimes used for synod) is money paid for sinodals. Cowell.

SENATOR, (Lat.) a parliament-man. Cowell.

SENDAL, a kind of thin fine silk. Stat. 2 R. 2. c. 1.

SENESCHAL, (senescallus, derived from the Germ. sein, a house or place, and schale, an officer) is a steward, and signifies one who hath the dispensing of justice, in some particular cases: as the high seneschal, or steward of England; seneschal de la hotel de roy, steward of the king's household; seneschal, or steward of courts, &c. Co. Lit. 61. Croke's Jurisd. 102. Kitch. 83.

SENESCHALLO ET MARESHALLO quod non teneant placita de libero tenemento, a writ directed to the steward and marshal of England, inhibiting them to take cognisance of an action in their court that concerns freehold. Reg. Orig. 185. 191.

SENEUCIA, widowhood. If a widow, having dower after the death of her husband, shall marry vel filium, vel filiam in seneucia peperit, she shall forfeit and lose her dower in what place soever in Kent. Tenen. in Gavel-kind. Plac. Trin. 17. E. 3.

SENEY-DAYS, are play-days, or times of pleasure and diversion. Cowell.

SEPARIA, (separaria) several, or severed and divided from other ground. Par. Antiq. 336. Cowell.

SEPARATION, (separatio) is the living asunder of man and wife. See Divorce.

SEPTENNIAL ELECTIONS. The utmost extent of time that the same parliament was allowed to sit, by the stat. 6 W. & M. c. 2. was three years. But by the stat. 1 Geo. 1. s. 2. c. 38. (in order to prevent the great and continued expences of frequent elections, and the violent heats and animosities consequent thereupon, and for the peace and security of the government, then just recovering from the late rebellion) this term was prolonged to seven years.

SEPTUAGESIMA, the third Sunday before Quadragesima Sunday in Lent, and is called Septuagesima, because it is about the seventieth day before Easter; as Sexagesima and Quinquagesima, are thus denominated from their being, the one sixty, and the other fifty days before the same feast, days appointed by the church to acts of penance and mortification, preparatory to Lent. From Septuagesima Sunday, until the octaves after Easter, the solemnizing of marriage is forbidden by the canon law. Cowell.

SEPTUAGINT. The seventy interpreters of the bible, who were in truth seventy-two, viz. six out of every one of the twelve tribes. Lit. Dict.

SEPTUM, an enclosure so called, because it is encompassed cum sepe & fossa, with a hedge and a ditch, at least with a hedge; and it signifies any place paled in. Cowell.

SEPULCHRE, (sepulchrum) the place where any body lies buried; but a monument is set up for the memorial of the deceased, though the corpse lie not there. Cowell.

SEPULTURA, an offering made to the priest for the burial of a dead body. Domesd.

SEQUATUR SUB SUO PERICULO, a writ that lay where a summons ad warrantizand' was awarded, and the sheriff returned that the party had nothing whereby he might be summoned: upon which there issued an alias and a pluries, and if he came not in on the pluries, this writ issued. Old Nat. Br. 168.

SEQUELA CAUSÆ, the process and depending issue of a cause for trial. Cowell.

SEQUELA CURIÆ, is used for a suit of court. Ibid.

SEQUELA MOLENDINI, the owing suit to a particular mill, or being bound to grind corn in that place only; a duty and service laid upon many tenants. Ibid.

SEQUELA VILLANORUM, the retinue and appurtenances to the goods and chattels of villeins, which were at the absolute disposal of the lord.

SEQUENDUM ET PROSEQUENDUM, signify to follow a cause; as where a guardian is admitted ad prosequend' for an infant, &c. 1 Vent. 74.

SEQUESTER, (sequestrare) is a term used in the civil law for renouncing; as when a widow comes into court, and disclaims having any thing to do, or to intermeddle with her husband's estate, who is deceased, she is said to sequester. Cowell.

SEQUESTRATION, (sequestratio) signifies the separating or setting aside of a thing in controversy, from the possession of both the parties that contend for it; and it is two-fold, voluntary and necessary; voluntary, is that which is done by consent of each party; necessary, is what the judge of his authority doth, whether the party will or will not, Fortescue, c. 50. Dyer, 232, 256.

And there is a sequestration on a person's standing out all the processes of contempt in chancery, which is a commission usually directed to seven persons therein named, and impowering them to seize the defendant's real and personal estate into their hands (or it may be some particular part or parcel of his lands), and to receive and sequester the rents and profits thereof, until the defendant shall have answered the plaintiff's bill, or performed some other matter which has been ordered and decreed him by the court, for not doing whereof he is in contempt. Curs. Canc. 89.

This sequestration is grounded on the return of the serjeant at arms, wherein it is certified that the defendant had secreted himself; and therefore this process issues, and gives authority and power to the sequestrators (who are persons of the plaintiff's own naming), to enter upon and seize his (the defendant's) real and personal estate. Cro. Eliz. 651. 1 Mod. 259. 2 Mod. 256. 2 Ch. Cas. 44.

A sequestration is also a kind of execution for debt, in the case of a beneficed clerk, of the profits of the benefice, to be paid over to him that had the judgment, till the debt is satified (2 Inst. 472. 2 Rol. Abr. 474.) But the most usual sequestration of a benefice, is upon a vacancy, for the gathering up the fruits of the benefice to the use of the next incumbent; and the profits of the church, being in abeyance, are to be received by the churchwardens by appointment of the bishop, to make provision for the cure during the vacancy, &c. Stat. 28 Hen. 8. c. 11.

Sequestration is also the act of the ordinary, disposing of the goods of one that is dead, whose estate no man will meddle with. Kennet's Gloss. Seq.

SEQUESTRATION IN LONDON, Is made upon an action of debt, and the course of proceeding is thus: the action being entered, the officer goes to the shop or warehouse of the defendant, when there is nobody within, and takes a padlock and hangs it upon the door, &c. using these words, viz.: "I do sequester this warehouse, and the goods and merchandizes therein of the defendant in the action, to the use of the plaintiff, &c." and so puts on his seal, and makes return thereof at the Compter; then four court days being past, the next court after the plaintiff may have judgment to open the doors of the shop or warehouse, and to appraise the goods therein by a serjeant, who takes a bill of appraisement, having two freemen to appraise them, for which they are to be sworn at the next court holden for that Compter; and then the officer puts his hand to the bill of appraisement, and the court giveth judgment: though the defendant in the action may put in bail before satisfaction, and so dissolve the sequestration; and after satisfaction, may put in bail ad disproband' dictum, &c. Pract. Soll. 429.

SEQUESTRATION of the estates of peers and members of parliament, not appearing to actions. See Parliament, Privilege.

SEQUESTRO HABENDO. A writ judicial for the discharging a sequestration of the profits of a church benefice granted by the bishop at the king's command, thereby to compel the parson to appear at the suit of another; and the parson, upon his appearance, may have this writ for the release of the sequestration. Reg. Judic. 36. 3 Black. 418.

SEREMENT. (Fr.) An oath which is to be taken before a person who hath power to administer it, or shall be void. 2 Keb. 284.

SERJEANT, or SERGEANT, (Lat. Servions.) Is a word diversely used in our law, and applied to sundry offices and callings. First, a serjeant at law, (servions ad legem,) otherwise called serjeant counter of the coif, is the highest degree in the common law, as a doctor is in the civil law. To these serjeants, as men best learned and experienced in the law and practice of the courts, one court is severed to plead in, by themselves, which is that of the Common Pleas, where the common law of England is most strictly observed; yet they are not so limited as to be restrained from pleading in any other court, where the judges (who cannot be such till they have taken the degree of serjeant) call them brothers, and bear them with great respect; and of which one or more are stiled the king's serjeants, being commonly chosen out of the rest in respect of their great learning, to plead for the king in all his causes, especially upon indictments for treason, &c. Serjeants at law are made by the king's writ directed unto such as are called, commanding them to take upon them that degree by a certain day; and by the writ or patent of creation it appears that the honour of serjeant at law is a state and dignity of great respect. In conferring these degrees much ceremony is used, and the serjeants chosen hold a sumptuous feast, and make presents of gold rings to a considerable amount. Fortescue, c. 50. 3 Cro. 1. Dyer 72. 2 Inst. 213, 214.

By 39 Geo. 3. c. 113. his majesty, during the vacation while the office of chief justice or judge of the courts is vacant, may cause a writ to be issued out of the court of chancery to any barrister at law he shall think fit to appear in that court, and take upon himself the dignity of a serjeant at law; and such person shall, on taking the usual oaths, be, without further ceremony, deemed a serjeant at law: and his majesty may grant to that person the office of chief justice, chief baron, or judge or baron of the courts.

SERJEANTS AT ARMS. Their office is to attend the person of the king, to arrest persons of condition offending, and give attendance on the lord high steward of England, sitting in judgment on any traitor, &c. But there may not be above thirty serjeants at arms in the realm, who shall not oppress the people, on pain to lose their offices, and be fined, by the stat. 13 R. 2. c. 6. And two of them, by the king's allowance, do attend on the two houses of parliament. The office of him in the house of commons is, the keeping of the doors, and the execution of such commands touching the apprehension and taking into custody of any offender, as that house shall injoin him. Another of them attends on the lord chancellor in the chancery; and one on the lord treasurer of England: also one upon the lord mayor of London on extraordinary solemnities, &c. They are in the old books called Virgatories, because they carried silver rods gilt with gold, as they now do maces, before the king. Stat. 7 Hen. 7. c. 3. Crompt. Jur. 9. Fleta, lib. 2. c. 38. 3 Black. 444.

SERJEANTS. Of a more inferior kind are serjeants of the mace, whereof there is a great band in the city of London, and other corporate towns, that attend the mayor or other head officer, chiefly for matters of justice, &c. and to make arrests.

SERJEANTS OF THE HOUSEHOLD. Are officers who execute several functions within the king's household, mentioned in the stat. 33 Hen. 8. c. 12.

SERJEANTY, (serjeantia.) Signified in law a service, that could not be due from a tenant to any lord but to the king only; and this was either grand serjeanty, or petit. The first was a tenure, whereby one held his lands of the king by such services as he ought to do in person to the king at his coronation; and might also concern matters military, or services of honour in peace, as to be the king's butler, carver, &c. Petit serjeanty was where a man held lands of the king, to furnish him yearly with some small thing towards his wars, and in effect payable as rent. And though all tenures are turned into socage by 12 Car. 2. cap. 24. yet the honorary services of grand serjeanty still remain, being therein excepted. Lit. 153. 159. 1 Inst. 105. 108.

SERMONIUM was an interlude or historical play, acted by the inferior orders of the clergy, assisted by youths, in the body of the church, suitable to the solemnity of some high procession day; and before the improvements of the stage, these ruder sorts of performances were even a part of the unreformed religion. Cowell. Blount.

SERPLES. A mantle or upper coat, from the Lat. superpellicium. Blount.

SERVAGE, (mentioned in stat. 1. Rich. 2. c. 6.) Was when each tenant, besides payment of a certain rent, found one or more workmen for his lord's service.

SERVANTS. Are such as men of professions and trades employ under them to assist them in their particular callings; or such persons as others retain to perform the work and business of their families, which comprehends both men and women. And servants are menial, or not so: menial, from being intra mœnia, or domestics living within the walls of the house. Wood's Inst. 51.

The contract between them and their masters arises from the hiring. If the hiring be general without any particular time limited, the law construes it to be a hiring for a year; upon a principle of natural equity, that the servant shall serve, and the master maintain him, throughout all the revolutions of the respective seasons; as well when there is work to be done as when there is not: but the contract may be made for any larger or smaller term. All single men between twelve years old and sixty, and married ones under thirty years of age, and all single women between twelve and forty, not having any visible livelihood, are compellable by two justices to go out to service in husbandry or certain specific trades, for the promotion of honest industry: and no master can put away his servant, or servant leave his master, after being so retained, either before or at the end of his term, without giving a quarter's warning, unless upon reasonable cause to be allowed by a justice of the peace. 5 Eliz. c. 4.

But it has been held that a master may turn away a servant for incontinence, or moral turpitude, for such misconduct produces a dissolution of the contract. Cald. 14.

And they may part by consent, or make a special bargain. The above statute relates only to servants employed in husbandry. It had been the practice for magistrates to exercise a jurisdiction over domestic servants, and it would be very useful to the public that they should possess such a jurisdiction, but it has lately been decided, that their authority, under 5 Eliz. c. 4. is confined to servants employed in husbandry. 6 T. R. 583.

By the common law, it was not larceny in any servant to run away with the goods committed to him to keep, but only a breach of civil trust. But by statute 33 Hen. VI, c. 1. the servants of persons deceased, accused of embezzling their master's goods, may by writ out of chancery (issued by the advice of the chief justices and chief baron, or any two of them) and proclamation made thereupon, be summoned to appear personally in the court of King's Bench, to answer their master's executors in any civil suit for such goods; and shall, on default of appearance, be attainted of felony. And by statute 21 Hen. 8. c. 7. if any servant embezzles his master's goods to the value of forty shillings, it is made felony, except in apprentices and servants under eighteen years old. But if he had not the possession, but only the care and oversight of the goods, as the butler of the plate, the shepherd of sheep, or the like, the embezzling of them is felony at common law. 1 Hal. P. C. 506.

And, to remove doubts which had existed respecting embezzlements by merchants' and bankers' clerks, it is enacted by 39 Geo. 3, c. 85. that if any servant or clerk shall, by virtue of his employment, receive any money, bills, or any valuable security, goods, or effects, in the name, or on the account of his master or employer, and shall afterwards embezzle any part of the same, he shall be deemed to have feloniously stolen the same, and shall be subject to transportation for any term not exceeding fourteen years.

By 6 Anne, c. 31. any servant negligently setting fire to a house or out-house, shall forfeit 100*l.* or be sent to the house of correction for eighteen months.

By 32 Geo. 3. c. 56. any person personating a master or mistress, or his or her executor, administrator, wife, relation, housekeeper, steward, agent, or servant, and, either personally or in writing, giving a false character to a servant; or asserting, that a servant has been hired for a period of time, or in a station: or was discharged at any other time, or had not been hired in any previous service, contrary to the fact; or any person offering him or herself as a servant, pretending to have served where he or she has not served, or with a false certificate, or who shall alter any certificate, or who, having been before in service, shall pretend not to have been in such service; shall, on conviction before two justices, forfeit 20*l.* half to the informer, and half to the parish; and the informer, though entitled to part of the penalty, is a competent witness. s. 1—7.

But parties aggrieved may appeal to the quarter sessions, where the matter may be finally determined; and the proceedings are not removable by certiorari. s. 10.

Persons not paying the penalty and 10*s.* for costs, or not giving notice of appeal, may be committed to the house of correction, and kept to hard labour, for not exceeding three months, nor less than one. s. 6. See Master and Servant.

SERVI. Bond men, or servile tenants.

SERVICE, (Servitium.) Is that duty which the tenant, by reason of his estate, oweth unto the lord.

Personal service is where something is to be done by the person of the tenant, as homage and fealty.

Annual and certain service is rent, suit of court to the lord, &c.

Accidental services, are heriots, reliefs, and the like. Co. Copyhold 22. Co. Litt. 222. 22 E. 4. 3.

As to feodal service, see Feodal Service. Com. 54. And as to heriot service, see Heriot.

SERVICE AND SACRAMENTS. See Sacrament.

SERVICE SECULAR. Worldly service, contrary to spiritual and ecclesiastical. 1 Ed. 4. c. 1.

SERVIENTIBUS. Certain writs touching servants and their masters, violating the statutes made against their abuses. Reg. Orig. 189, 190, 191.

SERVITIUM Feodale et Prædiale, Was not a personal service, but only by reason of the lands which were held in fee. Bracton. lib. 2. c. 16. par. 7.

SERVITIUM FORINSECUM. A service which did not belong to the chief lord, but to the king, because it was done foris vel extra servitium quod fit domino capitali, Cowell.

SERVITIUM INTRINSECUM. Service due to the chief lord alone from his tenants within his manor, Bracton, lib. 2. Fleta, lib. 3.

SERVITIUM LIBERUM. A service to be done by feudatory tenants, who were called liberi homines, and distinguished from vassals, as was their service; for they were not bound to any of the base services of ploughing the lord's land, &c. but were to find a man and a horse, or go with the lord into the army, or to attend his court, &c. and sometimes it was called servitium liberum armorum. Cowell. Blount.

SERVITIUM REGALE. Royal service, or the prerogatives that within a royal manor belonged to the lord of it; which were generally reckoned to be the following, viz. power of judicature in matters of property, and of life and death in felonies and murders; right to waifs and estrays; minting of money; assise of bread and beer, and weights and measures. All which privileges, it is said, were annexed to some manors by grant from the king. Paroch. Antiq. 60.

SERVI TESTAMENTALES. Covenant servants. Cowell.

SERVITIIS ACQUIETANDIS. A writ judicial that lay for a man distrained for services to one, when he owed and performed them to another, for the acquittal of such services. Reg. Judic. 27.

SERVITOR, (Servitus.) A serving-man; particularly applied to scholars in the colleges of the universities, who are upon the foundation. Cowell. Blount.

SERVITORS OF BILLS. Such servants or messengers of the marshal of the king's bench as were sent abroad with bills or writs to summon men to that court. 2 H. 4. c. 23. Cowell.

SESSEUR. The assessing or rating of wages. Cowell.

SESSION, (Sessio.) Is a sitting of justices in court upon their commission: as the Sessions of Oyer and Terminer, &c.

SESSION OF PARLIAMENT, (Sessio Parliamenti.) The sitting of the parliament; and the session of parliament continues till it be prorogued or dissolved, and breaks not off by adjournment. 4 Inst. 27.

SESSION, Great, of Wales. See Wales.

SESSION OF GAOL DELIVERY. A session held for delivering a gaol of the prisoners therein being.

SESSIONS OF THE PEACE. The court of general quarter sessions of the peace is a court that must be held in every county once in every quarter of a year. 4 Inst. 170. 2 Hal. P. C. 42. 2 Hawk. P. C. 32.; which, by statute 2 Hen. 5. c. 4. is appointed to be in the first week after Michaelmas day; the first week after the epiphany, the first week after the close of Easter, and in the week after the translation of St. Thomas the Martyr, or the 7th of July. It is held before two or more justices of the peace, one of which must be of the quorum. The jurisdiction of this court, by statute 34 Edw. 3. c. 1. extends to the trying and determining all felonies and trespasses whatsoever: though they seldom, if ever, try any greater offence than small felonies within the benefit of clergy; their commission providing, that if any case of difficulty arises, they shall not proceed to judgment, but in the presence of one of the justices of the courts of king's bench or common pleas, or one of the judges of assise. And therefore murders, and other capital felonies, are usually remitted for a more solemn trial to the assises. 4 Black. 270.

The sessions have jurisdiction over all misdemeanors, except forgery and perjury, by the common law; as these two offences were not considered to be breaches of the peace, which it was the chief object of the institution of the commission of the peace to preserve. The 5 Eliz. c. 9. however, gives the quarter-sessions expressly jurisdiction to try the perjuries specified in that statute. 2 Hawk. 40. 1 East, 173. 2 East, 18. See Perjury.

But they cannot try any new-created offence, without express power given them by the statute which creates it. 4 Mod. 379. Salk. 406. Lord Raym. 1144. There are, however, many offences, and particular matters, which by particular statutes belong properly to this jurisdiction, and ought to be prosecuted in this court: as, the smaller misdemeanors against the public or commonwealth, not amounting to felony; and especially offences relating to the game, highways, alehouses, bastard children, the settlement and provision for the poor, vagrants, servants' wages, apprentices, and popish recusants, see Williams's Justice. Some of these are proceeded upon by indictment, and others in a summary way by motion and order thereupon; which order may for the most part, unless guarded against by particular statutes, be removed into the court of king's bench, by writ of certiorari facias, and be there either quashed or confirmed. The records or rolls of the sessions are committed to the custody of a special officer denominated the custos rotulorum, who is always a justice of the quorum: and among them of the quorum (saith Lambard, lib. 4. c. 3.) a man for the most part especially picked out, either for wisdom, countenance, or credit. The nomination of the custos rotulorum (who is the principal civil officer in the county, as the lord lieutenant is the chief in military command) is by the king's sign manual: and to him the nomination of the clerk of the peace belongs, which office he is expressly forbidden to sell for money. Stat 37 Hen. 8. c. 1. 1 W. & M. stat. 1. c. 21. But the justices at the quarter-sessions, upon a complaint of his misconduct, may suspend or discharge him from his office. 1 W. c. 21. s. 6.

In most corporation towns there are quarter-sessions kept before justices of their own, within their respective limits, which have exactly the same authority as the general quarter-sessions of the county, except in a very few instances; one of the most considerable of which is the matter of appeals from orders of removal of the poor, which, though they be from the orders of corporation justices, must be to the sessions of the county, by statute 8 and 9 W. 3. c. 30. In both corporations and counties at large, there is sometimes kept a special or petty session, by a few justices, for dispatching smaller business in the neighbourhood between the times of the general sessions: as, for licensing alehouses, passing the accounts of the parish officers, and the like.

SESSIONS FOR ORDERING SERVANTS, called statute sessions, held by constables of hundreds, &c. 5 Eliz. c. 4. See Statutum Sessionum.

SESSIONS FOR WEIGHTS AND MEASURES. In London, four justices from among the mayor, recorder, and aldermen, (of which the mayor or recorder to be one) may hold a sessions to inquire into offences of selling by false weights and measures, contrary to the statutes; and to receive indictments, punish the offender, &c. Char. K. Char. I.

SET-OFF. A set-off against the demand of a plaintiff may be either by plea, or notice. In which case the defendant acknowledges the justice of the plaintiff's demand on the one hand; but, on the other, sets up a demand of his own, to counterbalance that of the plaintiff, either in the whole or in part. 2 Geo. 2. c. 22. and 8 Geo. 2. c. 24.

SETTLEMENTS AND REMOVALS. The Settlement of the Poor is as follows:

1. By Birth; for wherever a child is first known to be, that is always, prima facie, the place of settlement, until some other can be shewn (Carth. 488. Comb. 364. Salk. 485. 1 Ld. Raym. 567.) This is also generally the place of settlement of a bastard child; for a bastard having, in the eye of the law, no father, cannot be referred to his settlement as other children may (Salk. 427); but, in legitimate children, though the place of birth be prima facie the settlement, yet it is not conclusively so, for there are two settlements by parentage, being the settlement of one's father or mother: all legitimate children being really settled in the parish where their parents are settled, until they get a new settlement for themselves (Salk. 528. 2 Ld. Raym. 1473.)

If the parents acquire a new settlement, the children also follow, and belong to the last settlement of the father; or, after the death of the father, to the last settlement of the mother, whilst she is unmarried, till they are emancipated, or become independent of their father or mother's family; and, in that case, they have that settlement which their parent had at the time of emancipation.

This, it is true, is a very indefinite word; but lord Kenyon seems to have given as full and as just an explication of it as it will admit, in observing, that "the cases of emancipation have always been decided on the circumstances either of the son's being 21, or married, or having gained a settlement in his own right, or having contracted a relation, which was inconsistent with the idea of his being in a subordinate situation in his father's family." 3 T. R. 356. 8 T. R. 479.

2. A new settlement may also be acquired several ways: as, By Marriage; for, a woman marrying a man that is settled in another parish, changes her own settlement, the law not permitting the separation of husband and wife (Stra. 544); but if the man has no settlement, her's is suspended during his life, if he remains in England, and is able to maintain her: but in his absence, or after his death, or during (perhaps) his inability, she may be removed to her old settlement. Foley, 249, 251, 252. Burr. Sett. C. 370.

In the absence, or after the death of the husband, in that case the wife and her children may be removed to her maiden settlement; but it seems fully determined that they cannot be separated or removed from the husband (Burr. S. C. 818. 1 Stra. 544.) The consequence is, that the whole family must be supported as casual poor in the parish where they may happen to want relief. In the removal of a wife or a widow it is sufficient, in the first instance, to prove her maiden settlement Cald. 39, 236.

3. The other methods of acquiring settlements in any parish, are all reducible to this one, of 40 days residence therein; but this 40 days residence (which is construed to be lodging or lying there) must not be by fraud or stealth, or in any clandestine manner, but made notorious by one or other of the following concomitant circumstances:—

4. The next method therefore of gaining a settlement is by Forty Days Residence and Notice; for, if a stranger comes into a parish, and delivers notice in writing of his place of abode, and number of his family, to one of the overseers (which must be read in the church, and registered, and resides there unmolested for 40 days after such notice, he is legally settled thereby, according to stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 12. 1 Jac. 11, c. 17. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 11; for the law presumes that such a one at the time of notice is not likely to become chargeable, else he would not venture to give it, or that in such case the parish would take care to remove him; but, by the 35 Geo. 3. c. 101. it is enacted, that no person in future shall gain a settlement by such a notice.

There were also other circumstances equivalent to such notice; therefore, 5. RENTING FOR A YEAR a tenement of the yearly value of 10*l.* and residing 40 days in the parish gained a settlement without notice (stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 12.) upon the principle of having substance enough to gain credit for such a house.

It is not necessary that the renting should be for a year. If a tenement, of the yearly value of 10*l.* be taken for two months, or 40 days only, it will be sufficient to give a settlement (Burr. S. C. 474.) Nor is it necessary there should be any house upon the premises; even a renting of the after-grass or pasture will be sufficient. 4 T. R. 348.

Also a person gains a settlement by residing in the parish in which part of the premises lie, but not by residing elsewhere. 2 T. R. 48.

And it need not be one entire tenement; for, if he takes one tenement in one parish, and another in a different parish, if together they are of the value of 10*l.* a year, he will gain a settlement by residing in either parish. The value only is material: it will be sufficient to give a settlement, if the enjoyment of the tenement is gratuitous, or if no rent is to be paid for it. 1 T. R. 458.

6. BEING CHARGED TO AND PAYING THE PUBLIC TAXES AND LEVIES OF THE PARISH, excepting those for scavengers, highways (stat. 9 Geo. 1. c. 7.) and the duties on houses and windows (stat. 21 Geo. 2. c. 10, 18 Geo. 3. c. 26.) and by executing, when legally appointed, any public parochial office, for a whole year, in the parish, as church-warden, &c. are both of them equivalent to notice, and gain a settlement (stat. 3 & 4. W. & M. c. 11.) if coupled with a residence of 40 days.

But by the 35 Geo. 3. c. 101. the payment of taxes for a tenement of less yearly value than 10*l.* will not give a settlement, so that this species of settlement is in effect abolished.

7. BEING HIRED FOR A YEAR, when unmarried and childless, and serving a year in the same service, and a widower or widow, with children emancipated, is considered as childless, for such children cannot follow the settlements gained by their parents service. If an unmarried man is hired for a year, but before he enters upon the service, or during the service marries, he may gain a settlement (3 T. R. 382.) But this will not extend to the continuance in the service a second year, for he was married when this new contract was expressly or impliedly entered into (Cald. 54.) Hiring for any time certainly less than a year will not be sufficient; but from Whitsuntide to Whitsuntide is considered a year, though it will frequently happen to be a period less than 365 days. To gain a settlement as a servant there must be a hiring for a year, and a continued service for a year; but it is not necessary that the service should be subsequent to the hiring, for if there is a continued service for 11 months, or any other part of a year, by any number of modes of hirings, or with any difference of wages, and afterwards a hiring for a year, and a service to complete the year, a settlement is gained (Cald. 179.) There seemed to be great reason to think that the service, subsequent to the hiring for a year, should at least be 40 days; but it is now decided that that is not necessary (5 T. R. 98.) The settlement of a servant and an apprentice, is where they last reside 40 days in their masters employ; and where they do not reside 40 days successively at one place, but alternately in two or more parishes, and more than 40 days upon the whole in each in the course of a year, the settlement is in that parish in which they slept the last night. Doug. 683.

8. BEING BOUND AN APPRENTICE, gives the servant and apprentice a settlement without notice (stat. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 11.) in that place wherein they serve the last 40 days. This is meant to encourage application to trades, and going out to reputable services.

9. LASTLY, THE HAVING AN ESTATE OF ONE'S OWN, and residing thereon 40 days, however small the value may be, in case it be acquired by act of law, or of a third person, as by descent, gift, devise, &c. is a sufficient settlement (Salk. 524.); but if a man acquire it by his own act, as by purchase, in its popular sense, in consideration of money paid, then unless the consideration advanced bona fide be 30*l.* it is no settlement for any longer time than the person shall inhabit thereon (stat. 9 Geo. 1. c. 7.) He is in no case removable from his own property, but he shall not by any trifling or fraudulent purchase of his own acquire a permanent and lasting settlement.

All persons not so settled may be REMOVED to their own parishes on complaint of the overseers, by two justices of the peace, if they shall adjudge them likely to become chargeable to the parish, into which they have intruded, unless they are in a way of getting a legal settlement, as by having hired a house of 10*l.* per annum, or living in an annual service, for then they are not removeable.

SETTLEMENT, Act of. See Constitution, King, Liberties, and Rights.

SEVERAL ACTION, is where two or more persons are severally charged in any action. Cowell.

SEVERAL COVENANT. A covenant by two or more severally, by which such are severally and separately bound. 5 Rep. 23.

SEVERAL FISHERY. A free fishery, or exclusive right of fishing in a public river, is a royal franchise; and is considered as such in all countries where the feodal polity has prevailed. 3 Black. 39.

SEVERAL INHERITANCE. An inheritance conveyed, so as to descend, or come to two or more persons severally by moieties, or in other purpoles and proportions, &c. Vide Inheritance.

SEVERAL TAIL. Is that whereby land is given and entailed severally to two. Co. Lit.

SEVERAL TENANCY, (Tenura separatis.) A plea or exception taken to a writ that is laid against two persons as joint-tenants, who are several. Bro. 273.

SEVERALTY, Estates in. He that holds lands or tenements in severalty, or is sole tenant thereof, is he that holds them in his own right only, without any other person being joined or connected with him in point of interest, during his estate therein. 2 Black. 179.

SEVERANCE. Is the singling or severing of two or more joined in one writ or action, such as severance of the tenants in an assise. Book Intr. 81. 5 Rep. 97. F. N. B. 78. 10 Rep. 135. 6 Rep. 26.

SEVERANCE OF CORN. The cutting and carrying it from off the ground: and sometimes the setting out the tithes from the rest of the corn, is called severance. 2 Cro. 325.

SEVERANCE OF JOINT TENANCY. See Joint-Tenant.

SEVERITY OF PUNISHMENT. It is but reasonable among crimes of different natures those should be most severely punished which are the most destructive of the public safety and happiness. 4 Black. 16.

SEWARD. A Saxon word for him who guards the sea-coasts. It signifies custos maris. Cowell.

SEWER, (Scwera.) Is a fresh-water trench, or little river encompassed with banks on both sides, to carry the water into the sea, and thereby preserve the lands against inundations. Cowell.

SEWERS, COMMISSIONERS OF. The court of the commissioners of sewers is a temporary tribunal, erected by virtue of a commission under the great seal, which formerly used to be granted pro re nata at the pleasure of the crown. F. N. B. 113, but now at the discretion and nomination of the lord chancellor, lord treasurer, and chief justices, pursuant to the statute 23 Hen. 8. c, 5. Their jurisdiction is to overlook the repairs of sea-banks and sea-walls, and the cleansing rivers, public streams, ditches, and other conduits, whereby any waters are carried off: and is confined to such county or particular district as the commission shall expressly name. The commissioners are a court of record, and may fine and imprison for contempts, 1 Sid. 145.; and in the execution of their duty may proceed by jury, or upon their own view, and may take order for the removal of any annoyances, or the safe-guard and conservation of the sewers within their commission, either according to the laws and customs of Romney-Marsh, or otherwise, at their own discretion They may also assess such rates or scots upon the owners of lands lying within the level drained, as they shall judge necessary; and if any person refuses to pay them, the commissioners may levy the same by distress of his goods and chattels: or they may, by statute 23 Hen. 8. c. 5, sell his freehold lands, (and by 7 Ann, c. 10, his copyhold also) in order to pay such scots or assessments: but their conduct is under the controul of the court of king's bench, which will prevent or punish any illegal or tyrannical proceedings. Cro. Jac. 336. It is clearly held, that this (as well as all other inferior jurisdictions) is subject to the discretionary coercion of his majesty's court of king's bench. 1 Vent. 66. Salk. 146.

Romney-marsh, in the county of Kent, a tract containing twenty-four thousand acres, is governed by certain ancient and equitable laws of sewers, composed by Henry de Bathe, a venerable judge in the reign of king Henry the Third; from which laws all commissioners of sewers in England may receive light and direction. 4 Inst. 276.

SEXAGESIMA SUNDAY. The sixtieth day before Easter. See Septuagesima.

SEXTARY, (Sextarius.) Was an ancient measure, containing about our pint and a half. Ibid.

SEXTERY LANDS. Lands given to a church or religious house, for maintenance of the sexton or sacristan. Ibid.

SEXTONS. Parish clerks and sextons are regarded by the common law as persons who have freeholds in their offices: and therefore, though they may be punished, yet they cannot be deprived by ecclesiastical censures. 2 Roll. Abr. 234.

SHACKE. A custom in Norfolk to have common for hogs, from the end of harvest till seed-time, in all men's grounds without contradiction. Co. 7 Rep. fol. 5. Corbet's case. And in that country, to go at shacke, is as much as to go at large. Cowell.

SHARPING-CORN. A customary gift of corn, which, at every Christmas, the farmers in some parts of England give to their smith, for sharping their plough-irons, harrow tines, &c. Blount.

SHAW. A grove of trees, or a wood. 1 Just. 4.

SHAWALDRES. By some chevaliers, but more probable soldiers. Cowell.

SHEADING. A riding, tithing, or division in the Isle of Man. Cowell.

SHEARMAN'S CRAFT. A craft or occupation used at Norwich; the artificers whereof do shear worsteds, fustians, and all woollen cloth. 19 Hen. 7. c. 17. 22 & 23 Car. 2.

SHEEP. By 3 Hen. 6. c. 2. none shall export any sheep, on pain of forfeiture.

By 25 Hen. 8. c. 13. no man shall have above 2000 sheep, on pain of 3*s.* 4*d.* for every extra one; but this does not extend to lambs under one year old, or sheep coming by executorship, or marriage, so as the number be reduced as above within one year, nor to sheep bequeathed by will to a child within age; and every person temporal may keep upon his inheritance as many sheep as he will.

Supernumerary sheep for the maintenance of the house may be kept; and six score of sheep shall be accounted a hundred. Ibid.

No man may take above two farms, unless he be resident in the parish, on pain of 3*s.* 4*d.* a week; and spiritual persons may keep as many sheep as they please on their own lands. Ibid.

By 14 Geo. 2. c. 6. stealing sheep (lamb, bullock, or other cattle, 15 Geo. 2. c. 34.), or part of the carcase, is made felony without benefit of clergy.

By 13 Geo. 3. c. 81. no rams shall be kept in the common fields between the 25th of August and the 25th of November.

By 38 Geo. 3. c. 65. if any person shall turn out upon any forest, wood, moor, marsh, heath, common, or other unincloseed land, any sheep or lambs having the mange, or having been within six months infected therewith, he shall forfeit not more than 10*l.* nor less than 20*s.* for each offence. s. 1.

The owner of every sheep or lamb so turned out shall cause them to be marked, on pain of not exceeding 2*s.* for each. s. 2.

Any person depasturing, or having a right to depasture, may apply to a justice, who may order sheep and lambs to be driven to the next pound, and there examined, and if found to have been depastured contrary to this act, may order them back to the place from whence taken, and award damages to the owner. s. 3.

But if they are found defective, he may order them to be detained, and marked S, and on demand to be delivered to the owner, who shall pay the expences and penalties. s. 4.

Persons destroying such marks, and the owners not renewing them, are to forfeit not more than 20*s.* nor less than 2*s.* for each. s. 5.

If the sheep or lambs be not demanded in five days after they are marked, they may be sold, and the produce paid to the overseers of the poor, and if not claimed in 12 months, applied in aid of the poor rate. s. 6.

The penalties may be levied by distress, on recovery thereof, before one justice; but persons aggrieved may appeal to sessions. s. 7-12. This act does not extend to Scotland. s. 13.

SHEEP-SILVER. A service turned into money, which was paid in respect that anciently the tenants used to wash the lord's sheep. Cowell.

SHEPWAY, Court of. This is a court held before the lord warden of the cinque ports, a writ of error lies from the mayor and jurats of each port, to the lord warden, in this court of Shepway, and from thence to the king's bench. 2 Black. 79.

SHERFEE. So the body of the lordship of Cardiff, in South Wales, is called, excluding the members of it. Cowell.

SHERIFF. The sheriff is an officer of very great antiquity in this kingdom, his name being derived from two Saxon words scire, geretha, the reeve, bailiff, or officer of the shire. He is called in Latin vice-comes, as being the deputy of the earl or comes; to whom the custody of the shire is said to have been committed at the first division of this kingdom into counties. But the earls, in process of time, by reason of their high employments and attendance on the king's person, not being able to transact the business of the county, were delivered of that burden, reserving to themselves the honour, but the labour was laid on the sheriff. So that now the sheriff does all the king's business in the county; and though he be still called vice-comes, yet he is entirely independent of, and not subject to the earl, the king, by his letters-patent, committing custodiam comitatus to the sheriff, and him alone. Dalton of Sheriffs, c. 1.

Sheriffs were formerly chosen by the inhabitants of the several counties. In confirmation of which it was ordained by statute 28 Edw. I. c. 8. that the people should have election of sheriffs in every shire, when the shrievalty is not of inheritance. For anciently in some counties the sheriffs were hereditary, as they were in Scotland till the statute 20 Geo. II. c. 43, and still continue in the county of Westmoreland to this day.* The city of London having also

* The earl of Thanet is hereditary sheriff of Westmoreland. This office may descend to, and be executed by a female; for the inheritance of the shrievalty of Middlesex vested in their body by charter. 3 Rep. 72. *

The reason of these popular elections is assigned in the same statute, c. 13. "that the commons might chuse such as would not be a burden to them." And herein appears plainly a strong trace of the democratical part of our constitution, in which form of government it is an indispensable requisite that the people should chuse their own magistrates. Montesq. Sp. L. b. 2. c. 2.

This election was in all probability not absolutely vested in the commons, but required the royal approbation. For in the Gothic constitution, the judges of the county courts (which office is executed by our sheriff) were elected by the people, but confirmed by the king; and the form of their election was thus managed: the people, or incolæ territorii, chose twelve electors, and they nominated three persons, ex quibus rex unum confirmabat. Stiern. de jure Goth. l. 1. c. 3.

But with us in England these popular elections growing tumultuous, were put an end to by the statute 9 Edw. II. st. 2. which enacted, that "the sheriffs should from thenceforth be assigned by the chancellor, treasurer, and the judges," as being persons in whom the same trust might with confidence be reposed. By stat. 14 Edw. III. c. 7. 23 Hen. VI. c. 8. and 21 Hen. VIII. c. 20. "the chancellor, treasurer, president of the king's council, chief justices, and chief baron, are to make this election; and that on the morrow of All Souls in the exchequer." And the king's letters-patent, appointing the new sheriffs, used commonly to bear date the 6th day of November." Stat. 12 Edw. IV. c. 1.

The statute of Cambridge, 12 Ric. II. c. 2. ordains, that "the chancellor, treasurer, keeper of the privy seal, steward of the king's house, the king's chamberlain, clerk of the rolls, the justices of the one bench and the other, barons of the exchequer, and all other that shall be called to ordain, name, or make justices of the peace, sheriffs, and other officers of the king, shall be sworn to act indifferently, and to appoint no man that useth either privily or openly to be put in office, but such only as they shall judge to be the best and most sufficient." And the custom now is, (and has been at least ever since the time of Fortescue, who was chief justice and chancellor to Henry the Sixth), that "all the judges, together with the other great officers and privy counsellors, meet in the exchequer on the morrow of All Souls yearly, (which day is now altered to the morrow of St. Martin by the last act for abbreviating Michaelmas term,) and then and there the judges propose three persons, to be reported (if approved of) to the king, who afterwards appoints one of them to be sheriff. Fortes de L. L. c. 24.

The following is the present mode of nominating sheriffs in the exchequer on the morrow of St. Martin:—The chancellor, chancellor of the exchequer, the judges, and several of the privy council assemble, and an officer of the court administers an oath to them in old French, that they will nominate no one from favour, partiality, or any improper motive. This done, the same officer having the list of the counties in alphabetical order, and of those who were nominated the year preceding, reads over the three names, and the last of the three he pronounces to be the present sheriff; but where there has been a pocket-sheriff, he reads the three names upon the list, and then declares who is the present sheriff. If any of the ministry or judges have an objection to any person named in the list, he then mentions it, and another gentleman is nominated in his room; if no objection be made, some one rises and says, "to the two gentlemen I know no objection, and I recommend A. B. esq. in the room of the present sheriff." Chr. a. 4. 1 Black. 341.

Another officer has a paper with a number of names given him by the clerk of assize for each county, which paper generally contains the names of the gentlemen upon the former list, and also of gentlemen who are likely to be nominated; and whilst the three are nominated, he prefixes 1, 2, or 3, to their names, according to the order in which they are placed; which, for greater certainty, he afterwards reads over twice. Several objections are made to gentlemen; some, perhaps, at their own request: such as, that they are abroad, that their estates are small and incumbered,

" Ann, countess of Pembroke, had the office of hereditary sheriff of Westmoreland, and exercised it in person. At the assises at Appleby she sat with the judges on the bench." Harg. Co. Litt. 326.

* The election of the sheriffs of London and Middlesex was granted to the citizens of London for ever in very ancient times, upon condition of their paying 300*l.* a year to the king's exchequer. In consequence of this grant, they have always elected two sheriffs, though these constitute together but one officer; and if one die, the other cannot act till another is elected. (4 Bac. Abr. 447.) In the year 1748, the corporation of London made a bye-law, imposing a fine of 600*l.* upon every person, who, being elected, should refuse to serve the office of sheriff; but protestant dissenters, who cannot qualify by taking the oaths, are not compellable to serve. 2 Burn. E. L. 185.

that they have no equipage, that they are practising barristers, or officers in the militia, &c. Ibid.

The new sheriff is generally appointed about the end of the following Hilary term; this extension of the time was, probably, in consequence of the 17 Edw. IV. c. 7. which enables the old sheriff to hold his office over Michaelmas and Hilary terms. Ibid.

But notwithstanding this is expressly recognized to be the law of the land, some writers have affirmed, that the king, by his prerogative, may name whom he pleases to be sheriff, whether chosen by the judges or no.—This is grounded on a very particular case in the 5th year of queen Elizabeth, when, by reason of the plague, there was no Michaelmas term kept at Westminster, so that the judges could not meet there in crastino animarum to nominate the sheriffs; whereupon the queen named them herself, without such previous assembly, appointing for the most part one of the two remaining in the last year's list. Jenkins. 229. Dyer. 225.

And the practice of occasionally naming what are called pocket-sheriffs,* by the sole authority of the crown, hath uniformly continued to the reign of his present majesty. 1 Black. 342.

Sheriffs, by virtue of several old statutes, are to continue in their office no longer than one year; and yet it hath been said (4 Rep. 32.) that a sheriff may be appointed durante bene placito, or during the king's pleasure; and so is the form of the royal writ (Dalt. of Sheriffs, 8.) Therefore, till a new sheriff be named, his office cannot be determined, unless by his own death, or the demise of the king; in which last case it was usual for the successor to send a new writ to the old sheriff; but now, by statute 1 Ann, st. 1. c. 8. all officers appointed by the preceding king may hold their offices for six months after the king's demise, unless sooner displaced by the successor. And by statute 1 Ric. 2. c. 11. no man that has served the office of sheriff for one year can be compelled to serve the same again within three years after.

The power and duty of the sheriff are either as a judge, as the keeper of the king's peace, as a ministerial officer of the superior courts of justice, or as the king's bailiff.

1. In his judicial capacity, he is to hear and determine all causes of forty shillings value and under, in his county court. He is likewise to decide the elections of knights of the shire, (subject to the controul of the house of commons,) of coroners, and of verderors; to judge of the qualification of voters, and to return such as he shall determine to be duly elected. Dalt. 7.

2. As the keeper of the king's peace, both by common law and special commission, he is the first man in the county, and superior in rank to any nobleman therein, during his office, 1 Roll. Rep. 237. He may apprehend, and commit to prison, all persons who break the peace, or attempt to break it; and may bind any one in a recognizance to keep the king's peace. He may, and is bound ex officio to pursue, and take all traitors, murderers, felons, and other misdoers, and commit them to gaol for safe custody. He is also to defend his country against any of the king's enemies when they come into the land: and for this purpose, as well as for keeping the peace and pursuing felons, he may command all the people of his county to attend him; which is called the posse comitatus, or power of the county. Dalt. c. 95.; and this summons every person above fifteen years old, and under the degree of a peer, is bound to attend upon warning (Lamb. Eir. 315), under pain of fine and imprisonment, 2 Hen. 5. c. 8. But though the sheriff is thus the principal conservator of the peace in his county, yet, by the express directions of the Mag. Cart. c. 17. he, together with the constable, coroner, and certain other officers of the king, are forbidden to hold any pleas of the crown, or, in other words, to try any criminal offence. For it would be highly unbecoming, that the executioners of justice should be also the judges; should impose, as well as levy, fines and amercements; should one day condemn a man to death, and personally execute him the next. Neither may he act as an ordinary justice of the peace during the time of his office, 1 Mar. st. 2. c. 8; for this would be equally inconsistent, he being in many respects the servant of the justices.

3. In his ministerial capacity the sheriff is bound to execute all process issuing from the king's courts of justice. In the commencement of civil causes, he is to serve the writ, to arrest, and to take bail; when the cause comes to trial, he must summon and return the jury; when it is determined, he must see the judgment of the court carried into execution. In criminal matters, he also arrests and imprisons, he returns the jury, he has the custody of the delinquent, and he executes the sentence of the court, though it extend to death itself. 1 Black. 344.

4. As the king's bailiff, it is his business to preserve the rights of the king within his bailiwick, for so his county is frequently called in the writs; a word introduced by the princes of the Norman line, in imitation of the French, whose territory is divided into bailiwicks, as that of England into counties, Fortesc. de L. L. c. 24. He must seise to the king's use all lands devolved to the crown by attainder or escheat: must levy all fines and forfeitures; must seise and keep all waifs, wrecks, estrays, and the like, unless they be granted to some subject; and must also collect the king's rents within his bailiwick, if commanded by process from the exchequer. Dalt. c. 9.

To execute these various offices, the sheriff has under him many inferior officers: an under-sheriff, bailiffs, and gaolers, who must neither buy, sell, nor farm their offices, on forfeiture of 500*l.* Stat. 3 Geo. 1. c. 15.

The under-sheriff usually performs all the duties of the office, a very few only excepted, where the personal presence of the high-sheriff is necessary. But no under-sheriff shall abide in his office above one year, (Stat. 42 Edw. 3. c. 9.); and if he does, by statute 23 Hen. 6. c. 8. he forfeits 200*l.* a very large penalty in those early days. And no under-sheriff or sheriff's officer shall practise as an attorney during the time he continues in such office, (stat. 1 Hen. 5. c. 4.), for this would be a great inlet to partiality and oppression. But, these salutary regulations are shamefully evaded, by practising in the names of other attorneys, and putting in sham deputies by way of nominal under-sheriffs; by reason of which, says Dalton, (of sheriffs, c. 115.) the under-sheriffs and bailiffs do grow so cunning in their several places, that they are able to deceive, and it may well be feared that many of them do deceive both the king, the high-sheriff, and the county.

The sheriff's officers are either bailiffs of hundreds, or special bailiffs. Bailiffs of hundreds are officers appointed over those respective districts by the sheriffs, to collect fines therein, to summon juries, to attend the judges and justices at the assises and quarter sessions; and also to execute writs and process in the several hundreds. But, as these are generally plain men, and not thoroughly skilful in this latter part of their office, that of serving writs, and making arrests and executions, it is now usual to join special bailiffs with them, who are generally mean persons, employed by the sheriffs on account only of their adroitness and dexterity in hunting and seizing their prey. The sheriff being answerable for the misdemeanors of these bailiffs, they are therefore usually bound in an obligation with sureties for the due execution of their office, and thence are called bound-bailiffs, which the common people have corrupted into a much more homely appellation. 1 Black. 345.

Gaolers are also the servants of the sheriff, and he must be responsible for their conduct. Their business is to keep safely all such persons as are committed to them by lawful warrant; and, if they suffer any such to escape, the sheriff shall answer it to the king, if it be a criminal matter; or, in a civil case, to the party injured. Dalt. c. 118. 4 Rep. 34. c. 4. 4 Edw. 3. c. 9. 5 Edw. 3. c. 4. And to this end the sheriff must have lands sufficient within the county to answer the king and his people. Stat. 6 Edw. 2. st. 2. 2 Edw. 3. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 21. sect. 7.

The vast expence which custom had introduced in serving the office of high-sheriff, was grown such a burthen to the subject, that it was enacted, by 13 and 14 Car. 2. c. 21. that no sheriff (except of London, Westmoreland, and towns which are counties of themselves) should keep any table at the assises, except for his own family, or give any presents to the judges or their servants, or have more than forty men in livery; yet, for the sake of safety and decency, he may not have less than twenty men in England and twelve in Wales, upon forfeiture, in any of these cases, of 200*l.* See also Escape, Execution, Fieri facias, &c.

SHIP-MONEY, was an imposition charged upon the ports, towns, cities, boroughs, and counties of this realm, in the time of king Charles I. by writs commonly called ship-writs, under the great seal of England, in the year 1635 and 1636, for the providing and furnishing certain ships for the king's service, &c. which was declared to be contrary to the laws and statutes of this realm by the petition of right. Stat. 17 Car. 1. c. 14. 4 Black. 430.

SHIPPER, is a Dutch word, signifying the master of a ship, but used for any common seaman: a skipper. Cowell. Blount.

SHIPS. By 28 Edw. 3. c. 13. no ship, fraught towards England, shall be constrained to come to any port, or abide against the will of the merchants or masters, and they shall deliver their goods freely.

By 14 Ric. 2. c. 6. English merchants shall freight only in English ships, so that the owners take reasonable freight.

By 34 & 35 Hen. 8. c. 9. unlading of ballast in any haven or river running to a port, except on the land above high-water mark, is a forfeiture of 5*l.*

By 8 Eliz. c. 13. the corporation of the Trinity-House at Deptford Strond may erect beacons, marks, and signs for the sea, near the sea-coasts; and any person taking down a sea-mark, shall forfeit 100*l.* and not being worth so much, shall be deemed convict of outlawry.

By 12 Car. 2. c. 18. no goods shall be imported from the plantations but in English ships navigated by three-fourths English; and no one shall be a merchant or factor there, who is not a subject, naturalized, or made a free denizen, on forfeiture of all his goods.

No goods of the produce of Asia, Africa, or America, shall be imported, but in ships of England or Ireland, or the plantations, the master and mariners being three fourths English, on forfeiture of ship and goods. Ibid.

No goods of foreign growth or manufacture shall be imported in English ships, but only from the places of their said growth. Ibid.

No goods shall be carried from one port of England to another, in the vessel of any alien not denizened. Ibid.

By 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 11. master of a ship of 200 tons, and 16 guns, delivering her up to any pirates without fighting, is rendered incapable of future command.

Master of a ship under 200 tons, and 16 guns, shall not yield to any pirate, not having at least his double number of guns, without fighting. Ibid.

Mariners or inferior officers refusing to fight and defend the ship, shall lose all wages due, and have six months' imprisonment and hard labour. Ibid.

Where the master is forced by the mariners to yield his ship, he shall not be liable; and mariners laying hands on the commander to hinder him from fighting in defence of his ship, shall suffer as felons. Ibid.

Officers or seamen wounded in defence of their ship, shall have reward from the owners, not exceeding 2*l.* per cent. amongst them. Ibid.

Merchant ship taking a ship that first assaulted them, shall have such share thereof as usual in privateers. Ibid.

Any officer or mariner wilfully destroying the ship, shall be guilty of felony. Ibid.

By 7 & 8 Wil. 3. c. 22, to prevent colouring foreign ships under English names, English-built ships, prizes, and foreign ships allowed, shall be registered and attested at the Custom-House; and ships' names changed shall be entered again, but this does not extend to open boats used on rivers.

By 7 Geo. 2. c. 15. owners of ships shall be liable only to forfeit the value of the ship and freight, for embezzlements committed without their knowledge.

If several proprietors suffer by such embezzlement, and the value of the ship be not sufficient to compensate their loss, their proportions shall be determined by average, and the freighters or owners may exhibit a bill for discovering the amount of such losses. Ibid.

Part owners exhibiting such bills, shall annex an affidavit to it, that they do not collude with the defendant. And this act is not to abridge the remedy at law against the master or mariners for embezzlements. Ibid.

By 19 Geo. 2. c. 22. masters throwing out ballast in any harbour, but upon dry land only, justices may issue warrants, and upon proof, fine them, not more than 5*l.* nor less than 50*s.*

Ships being stranded or sunk in an harbour, and permitted to remain there, the justices may summon the owner, and upon conviction, issue warrants for seizing and removing the ship. Ibid.

By 24 Geo. 2. c. 45. persons convicted of theft to the value of 40*s.* on board any ship or vessel, in any port, navigable river, or harbour, shall be excluded from benefit of clergy.

By 26 Geo. 2. c. 19. persons convicted of plundering shipwrecked goods, or of obstructing the escape of any person from a wreck, or of putting out false lights, shall suffer death without benefit of clergy.

By 9 Geo. 3. c. 39, ships (not belonging to the royal navy) stopping at, or fastening to, the king's moorings or hulks, or so as to bear against the king's ships, unless necessitated, shall forfeit 10*l.* per tide, one moiety to Greenwich hospital, the other to the prosecutor; and may be removed for not complying on notice.

By 18 Geo. 3. c. 26. no foreigner shall purchase any share in British ships without the consent of the owners of three-fourths in value.

13 Geo. 3. c. 74. Rule for ascertaining the tonnage of ships, viz. length in a straight line along the rabbet of the keel from the back of the main stern-post to a perpendicular line, from the fore part of the main stern-post, under the bowsprit, from which subtract three-fifths of the breadth, the remainder is the length of the keel to find the tonnage; and the breadth shall be taken from the outside plank, in the broadest place of the ship, above or below the main wales, exclusive of all doubling planks wrought on the sides of the ship, multiplying the length of the keel by the breadth so taken, and that product by half the breadth, and dividing the whole by 94, the quotient is the true contents of the tonnage.

By 22 Geo. 3. c. 25. vessels captured by an enemy shall not be ransomed. All contracts made, and securities given for the same, shall be void; and persons ransoming or contracting to ransom any ship or goods, shall forfeit 500*l.*

By 26 Geo. 3. c. 60. no ship built out of his majesty's dominions, except prizes, shall be entitled to the privileges of a British ship.

No ship rebuilt, or whose repairs exceed 15*s.* per ton, in a foreign port, shall be deemed British built, unless such repairs are necessary from extraordinary damages sustained on voyages: and the expences of repairs shall be certified, on arrival, to an officer of the customs. Ibid.

The provisions of 7 & 8 Will. 3. c. 22. shall be extended to vessels of fifteen tons and upwards, and certificates of registry obtained; and no registry shall be made but at the port to which a vessel belongs, except for prizes condemned at Guernsey, Jersey, or Man, unless authorized by the commissioners of customs. Ibid.

The port from and to which a ship usually trades shall be deemed her port. No registry shall be required for any vessels belonging to the royal family: and no ship built in the United States of America, during the existence of any prohibitory acts, shall be entitled to be registered. Ibid.

No subject residing out of his majesty's dominions shall be entitled to be the owner of any ship authorized to be registered, except a member of a factory. Ibid.

The oath by Will. 3. required, is repealed, and another appointed to be taken before registry. Ibid.

Ships shall be examined before certificates are granted; and persons giving false descriptions, or making false registries of ships, forfeit 100*l.* Ibid.

Bond shall be given not to lend certificates, and to return them in case the ship is lost, or sold to a foreigner; and Mediterranean passes are to be delivered up with the certificates. Ibid.

Indorsements on certificates of registry shall specify the name and residence of the person to whom the property is transferred. Certificates shall be recited in all transfers of property; and the changes of masters of vessels shall be indorsed on certificates of registry.

No change shall be made in ships' names, which, and their ports, must be painted conspicuously on the vessels; and altering or defacing letters is a penalty of 100*l.* Ibid.

Persons applying for certificates in Great Britain, shall produce a particular account of the ships from the builders, and make oath to their identity. Ibid.

If certificates be lost, new ones shall be granted, according to 15 Geo. 2. c. 31, but security shall be given, on receiving fresh certificates, and oath made as hereinbefore directed; that is to say, the master shall make oath and give security that no illegal use shall be made of the first register, if found. 13 Geo. 2. c. 31.

Ships, if altered, must be registered anew, or be deemed foreign. The condemnation of prizes, and the particulars of the vessels, must be produced, to entitle to a certificate of registry; and prizes condemned in Guernsey, Jersey, or Man, must be registered at Southampton. 26 Geo. 3. c. 60. Ibid.

The sum, on oath, for which a prize sold in the colonies shall be subjoined to the certificate; and the certificate shall express in what part the ship was built. Ibid.

Ships already registered shall exchange their certificates for new ones; and others, now required to be registered, shall apply for certificates within a certain time after notice, to be given by the commissioners of customs, viz. in Great Britain, Guernsey, Jersey, or Man, within twelve months; in Africa or America, within eighteen months; and in Asia, within thirty months after notice; but certificates may be granted, where, from unavoidable necessity, application could not be made in time limited. Ibid.

Ships leaving port without certificates shall be forfeited. If ships be found without the port to which they belong without certificates, bond must be given that they shall be procured: and if square-rigged vessels cannot enter the ports to which they belong; certificates may be obtained, upon their being surveyed at the port where they touch. Ibid.

Certificates shall be numbered, and an account of them transmitted to the commissioners of customs by the officer, on penalty of 200*l.* and dismission. Ibid.

Copies of certificates granted in Scotland shall be annually sent to the Custom-house in England; and there shall be paid on the first registry of ships built prior to May 1, 1786, in lieu of stamp duties, the following sums, viz., For a ship of fifteen tons, and not more than fifty, 1*s.* 6*d.*; above fifty, and not more than one hundred tons, 2*s.* 6*d.*; above one hundred, and not more than two hundred tons, 3*s.* 6*d.*; and all above two hundred tons, 5*s.* But the stamp duties shall continue to be paid on transfers of property. Ibid.

The privy council may order ships to be registered, to whom they have been granted or promised in consideration of their services, though not otherwise entitled thereto; and suits commenced in the colonies touching registers granted, such ships may be stopped till his majesty's pleasure be known. Ibid.

Any persons, by virtue of their office, required to act under this act, neglecting their duty, forfeit 500*l.* for the first offence, and for the second are incapacitated, and forfeit a like sum. Ibid.

Swearing falsely is perjury; and falsifying, or using false certificates, is a penalty of 500*l.* Ibid.

Ships of Ireland lawfully qualified and registered there, shall enjoy the privileges of British-built ships. Ibid.

By 26 Geo. 3. c. 86. owners of ships shall not be liable for any loss of goods shipped without their privity, further than the value of the vessel and the freight; nor for any occasional loss by fire; nor for loss of plate or jewels, unless, at the time of shipping, declaration be made of the value.

If the produce of the ship be insufficient to answer losses, it is to be proportionably divided among the losers; and freighters and owners of vessels may exhibit bills in equity for discovery of the amount of losses and value of vessels. Ibid.

This act is not to lessen the remedy against masters and mariners for embezzlement. Ibid.

By 27 Geo. 3. c. 12. no oath taken to acquire a temporary right as a citizen during residence in a foreign state, shall be deemed an oath of allegiance to such state. Ibid.

Instead of the oath required by 26 Geo. 3. c. 60. an oath, declaring to whom the vessel belongs, may be taken by the person properly authorized by the East-India company, or any other company or body corporate having ships. Ibid.

The commissioners of the customs, or the governors or commanders in chief of the islands, may permit the bond required, on obtaining a certificate of the registry of a vessel, to be executed wherever they think proper. Ibid.

Whenever the master of a vessel is changed, fresh security shall be given. Ibid.

Vessels not exceeding thirty tons burthen, and not having a fixed deck, may be employed in the fishery at Newfoundland, without being registered. Ibid.

Vessels built at Newfoundland, Quebec, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick, for European owners, may be registered there, upon the ships' agents taking the requisite oath. But such ships, on their arrival in Europe, must be registered agreeable to 26 Geo. 3. c. 60. Ibid.

All vessels which, by 26 Geo. 3. c. 60. are declared not to be entitled to the privileges of a British-built ship, shall be deemed alien ships. Ibid.

By 28 Geo. 3. c. 34. on complaint on oath by the owner of a vessel, that the master has refused to deliver up the certificate of registry, granted according to 7 & 8 Will. 3. c. 22. and 26 Geo. 3. c. 60. before a justice, the master may be apprehended by warrant, and on proof of its not being lost, but maliciously detained, the master shall forfeit 100*l.* to be paid within two days, otherwise he is to be imprisoned for not less than six, or more than twelve months; the justice may grant a search warrant for the certificate, which, if found, is to be delivered to the owner; if not, the person who granted the first is to grant another.

By 34 Geo. 3. c. 68. after six months from the conclusion of the present war, no goods, wares, or merchandize, shall be imported into Great Britain, or Guernsey, Jersey, Alderney, Sark, or Man, nor any goods exported from thence, unless the master and three-fourths of the crew are British subjects; nor any such vessels, registered, to be otherwise navigated but as herein provided. s. 1—3.

No goods to be carried from one place to another in Great Britain or the said isles, nor any vessel to sail in ballast, nor to fish on the coasts, unless wholly manned with British subjects: but the commissioners of customs may authorize vessels to have foreign mariners to instruct British ones in fishing. s. 4.

The proportions of British mariners to continue so the whole voyage, unless reduced by death, sickness, or desertion; and the act is not to alter any regulations for which special provision has been made. s. 5.

None to be deemed British mariners but natural-born subjects, persons naturalized, denizens, or persons become subjects by conquest or cession of territory, and who shall have taken the oaths of allegiance. s. 6.

Foreign seamen serving three years in the navy in time of war, may be employed as masters; or British seamen, on certificate of their service. s. 7.

No person who has taken an oath of allegiance to any foreign state, except under the terms of some capitulation, to be qualified to be a master; or a British person disqualified, acting, to forfeit 10*l.* to be recovered before a justice. s. 8.

Vessels not to be forfeited, if the disqualification of persons was unknown to the owners. Ibid.

In America and the West Indies, and to the eastward of the Cape of Good Hope, negroes, lascars, and other natives, may be employed as heretofore. Ibid.

Goods imported contrary to this act to be forfeited with the vessels, and the same may be seized by any commissioned, warrant, or petty officer, or officer of customs; but on production of certificates of the necessity of engaging foreign mariners, no vessel to be detained; but the persons authorized to make seizures, to indorse the certificates for the consideration of the customs. s. 10—12.

After January 1, 1795, no transfer under 26 Geo. 3. c. 60. of any property in any vessel to be valid, unless made agreeably thereto; and a particular form of the indorsement on a change of property is prescribed. s. 14, 15.

If vessels be absent from the port to which they belong, when alteration in the property shall be made, the sale shall still be made as before directed. s. 16.

And particular regulations are made, for the transfer of property, where owners reside in any country not under the dominion of his majesty. s. 17.

Masters wilfully withholding their certificates of registry, (see 28 Geo. 3. c. 34.) to forfeit 100*l.* on conviction before a justice of the peace, or to be committed to gaol for not less than six nor more than 12 months. s. 18.

Justices are to certify the detainer of certificates, on which the registry may be made, de novo. s. 19.

Where property is transferred, no vessel to be registered de novo by the registrar, unless instrument of sale be produced; but the commissioners of customs may give directions for the registry. s. 20.

On alteration of property in vessels in the same port, (see 7 & 8 Will. 3. c. 22.) they may be registered de novo. s. 21.

On transfer of property to persons not subjects of his majesty, the masters are to proceed with the cargo, that may be legally taken on board, to some port of registry where the vessel may be registered de novo; and on failure of compliance, the vessels to be deemed foreign, and not entitled to the privileges of British vessels, unless the commissioners of customs think fit; and on transfer of property, vessels to be registered de novo within twelve months, if not on a voyage to the east of the Cape of Good Hope, or west of Cape Horn; and within two years if on a voyage to the east or west thereof. s. 22.

By 48 Geo. 3. c. 70. from October 1, 1808, no British-built vessel, captured by the enemy, shall afterwards be registered as a British vessel.

But by 49 Geo. 3. c. 41. notwithstanding the above act of 48 Geo. 3. c. 70. British-built ships, recaptured, may be registered and have the privilege of British ships.

See also Customs, Excise, Importation, Seamen, Quarantine, Pilots.

SHIPS, PASSENGERS. By 43 Geo. 3. c. 56. no master of any British vessel from any place in the united kingdom, shall carry to any parts beyond sea a greater number of persons than one for every two tons registered burthen of the part unladen, on pain of 50*l.* for each person, and the vessel shall be detained till the penalty be paid. s. 1, 2.

Vessels to North America shall have at least twelve weeks provisions and water; and the master for not distributing a daily allowance thereof, of not less than half a pound of meat, one pound and a half of bread or oatmeal, with a half-pint of molasses, and one gallon of water, for each person, shall forfeit 20*l.* for each omission, and demanding a clearance for vessels not properly stored, 50*l.* s. 3.

Before clearance a muster roll shall be delivered to the officer of customs; and delivering false musters is a penalty of 50*l.* per head. s. 4.

Officers of the customs, with a justice, shall muster the passengers and men before sailing, and may detain the vessel till bail be found for penalties incurred. Ibid.

No clearance shall be given until such muster; a certified copy whereof shall be delivered to the master, and the original preserved at the custom-house. Ibid.

Any passenger desirous of not proceeding on the voyage, may be taken out of the vessel by any justice, and set free from his engagement. s. 5.

No passenger shall be received on board at any place where an officer of the customs is not stationed, on pain of 500*l.* s. 6.

Vessels carrying fifty persons, shall be provided with a surgeon; and every surgeon shall have a medicine chest properly stored, on oath, on pain of 50*l*. s. 7, 8.

Bedding shall be once a day aired, and the vessel once a week fumigated, on pain of 20*l*. for each neglect. s. 9.

Master and surgeon shall give bond to keep journals during the voyage, and shall deliver them, on oath, to the officer at the port of arrival on return from the voyage; and the officer shall deliver to them copies, and transmit duplicates to the commissioners of customs; and masters or surgeons acting contrary hereto, forfeit 10*l*. s. 10.

Masters of foreign vessels shall not have on board more than one person for every five tons burthen, on pain of 5*l*. per head. s. 11.

The act does not extend to government vessels. s. 12.

Masters or others landing provisions or water, except in proportion to the persons landed, are to forfeit 200*l*. s. 13.

An abstract of the act shall be hung up in every custom-house, and a copy thereof, and of the muster-roll, in every vessel, on pain of 20*l*. s. 15.

Officers of ships of war and revenue cutters may call for muster rolls, and search ships at sea; and if the provisions of this act have not been complied with, may seize and send them to some port. s. 16.

Bond shall be given that vessels are seaworthy, and that passengers shall be duly delivered. s. 17.

Officers of the customs signing sufferances contrary to this act, are to forfeit 50*l*. s. 18.

Penalties may be recovered within three years in courts of record with double costs, half to the king and half to the informer. s. 19.

Persons taking false oaths incur the pains of perjury. s. 20.

And the act shall not alter the laws respecting artificers going to parts beyond the sea. s. 21.

But by 44 Geo. 3. c. 56. the act 43 Geo. 3. c. 56. shall not apply to vessels carrying passengers to or from the fishery at Newfoundland or the coast of Labrador.

SHIPS RIOTS. By 33 Geo. 3. c. 67. seamen, keelmen, ship-carpenters, or other persons riotously assembled, who shall forcibly prevent the loading or unloading or sailing of any vessels, being convicted at the quarter-sessions, shall be committed to hard labour for not exceeding twelve nor less than six calendar months: as also any such persons who shall forcibly prevent others from working. s. 1, 2.

Persons offending a second time, to be guilty of felony, and transported for not more than fourteen nor less than seven years. s. 3.

But nothing herein is to extend to matters done by the authority of his majesty. s. 4.

Seamen, keelmen, casters, ship-carpenters, or other persons, wilfully setting fire to any ship, to be guilty of felony without benefit of clergy. s. 5.

And destroying or damaging the same by any other means, to be transported for not more than fourteen nor less than seven years. s. 6.

Offences committed on the high seas, triable in any sessions for the trial of offences committed thereon. s. 7.

Prosecutions under this act to be commenced within one year. s. 8.

SHIRE, (comitatus, from the Sax. scyre, to part or divide), a well known part or portion of the kingdom, called also county.

SHIRE-CLERK. The person that keeps the county court. See County Court.

SHIRE-MAN, or SCYRE-MAN. Anciently the judge of the country, by whom trials for land, &c. were determined before the conquest. Cowell.

SHIREMOTE. An assembly of the county or shire at the assises, &c. Ibid.

SHOEMAKERS. See Leather.

SHOOTING. See Felony and Game.

SHOP, (shopa). A place where any thing is openly sold. Cowell.

SHOP-BOOKS. These are not allowed of themselves to be given in evidence for the owner; but a servant who made the entry may have recourse to them to refresh his memory. And if such servant (who was accustomed to make such entries) be dead, and his hand be proved, the book may be read in evidence. 3 Black. Com. 368.

SHOPLIFTERS, are those that steal goods privately out of shops, which being to the value of 5*s*. though no person be in the shop, is felony excluded clergy, by the 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 23.

SHORLING AND MORLING, are words to distinguish the fells of sheep: shorling being the fells after the fleeces are shorn off the sheep's back, and morling the fells flead off after they die or are killed.

SHORTFORD. An ancient custom of the city of Exeter, by which the lord of the fee, when he cannot be answered rent due to him out of his tenement, and no distress can be levied for the same, the tenement shall be adjudged to him to hold the same a year and a day. Izack's Antiq. Exet. 48. Cowell. Blount.

SHRIVED, or SHRIEVED, (from Sax. scrifan.) A penitent person confessed by a priest. Cowell.

SHROWD, stealing of. If any one in taking up a dead body steals the shroud, or other apparel, it will be felony; for the property thereof remains in the executor, or whoever was at the charge of the funeral. 3 Inst. 110. 12 Rep. 113. 1 Hal. P. C. 515.

SHRUBS, destroying of. See Trespass.

SI ACTIO, &c. Is the conclusion of a plea to the action, when the defendant demands judgment if the plaintiff ought to have his action, &c. Cowell.

SIB and SOM, (Sax.) i. e. pax & concordia. Spelm. Cowell.

SICA, SICHA. A ditch, from the Sax. sic, lacuna. Cowell.

SICH, (sichetum and sikettus,) Is a little current of water, which is dry in summer; a water furrow or gutter. Ibid.

SICIUS. A sort of money current among the old English, of the value of two-pence. Ibid.

SICUT ALIAS. Another writ like the former; it runs, Præcipimus tibi sicut alias præcepim', &c. 4 Co. Rep. 55.

SIDELINGS. Meers betwixt or on the sides of ridges of arable land. Cowell.

SIDESMEN, (rectius synodsmen.) Officers yearly chosen in great parishes, according to custom, to assist the churchwardens. They are called questmen, and take an oath for doing their duty; and are to present persons that do not resort to church on Sundays, and there continue during the whole time of divine service, &c. Can. 90. Canon. 117.

SI FECERIT TE SECURUM. A species of original writ, so called from the words of the writ, which directs the sheriff to cause the defendant to appear in court, without any option given him, provided the plaintiff gives the sheriff security effectually to prosecute his claim. 3 Black. 274.

SIGILLUM. A seal for the sealing of deeds and charters. Cowell.

SIGLA, (from the Sax. segel.) A sail, mentioned in the laws of king Ethelred, cap. 24. Cowell.

SIGNET, (Fr.) Is one of the king's seals, used in sealing his private letters, and all such grants as pass his majesty's hand by bill signed; which seal is always in the custody of the king's secretaries, and there are four clerks of the signet-office attending them. 2 Inst. 556. See Privy Seal.

SIGNIFICAVIT. A writ issuing out of the chancery, upon a certificate given by the ordinary of a man's standing excommunicate by the space of forty days, for the laying him up in prison till he submit himself to the authority of the church; and it is so called, because significavit is an emphatical word in the writ. Reg. Orig.

SIGNING of deeds and wills is necessary to make them binding: the signing a will by the testator is an essential circumstance, without which it is not a will; for this is expressly required by the stat. 29 Car. 2. 3. See Will.

SIGN-MANUAL. The subscription of the king at the top of grants or letters-patent, which first pass by bill, &c. 3 Black. 347. and by stat. 1 Mar. st. 2. c. 6. if any person shall falsely forge or counterfeit the sign-manual, privy signet, or privy seal, such offences shall be deemed high treason.

SIGNUM. A cross prefixed as a sign of assent and approbation to a charter or deed, used by the Saxons. See Mark.

SILENTARIUS, signifies one of the privy council; silentium was formerly taken for conventus privatus, Matt. Paris. anno 1171. According to Littleton, it is an usher, who seeth good rule and silence kept in court. Litt. Dict. Cowell.

SILK. See Manufacturers.

SILVA CÆDUA. Wood under twenty years growth, or coppice wood. 45 Ed. 3. c. 3.

SIMILITUDE OF HAND-WRITING. The mere similitude of hand-writing in two papers shewn to a jury, without other concurrent testimony, is no evidence that both were written by the same person. 2 Hawk. P. C. 431.

But the testimony of witnesses well acquainted with the party's hand, that they believe the paper in question to have been written by him is evidence to be left to a jury. 1 Burr. 644.

SIMNEL, or SIMNELL, (siminellus, vel simnellus). Mentioned in the assise of bread. The English simnel is panis purior, or the purest white bread. Stat. 51 H. 3. st. 1. Ord. pro. pistor. incerti temp. c. 1.

SIMONY, (simonia, venditio rei sacræ). Simony is the corrupt presentation of any one to an ecclesiastical benefice for money, gift, or reward. And by simony, the right of presentation to a living is forfeited and vested pro hac vice in the crown.

It is so called from the resemblance it is said to bear to the sin of Simon Magus, though the purchasing of holy orders seems to approach nearer to his offence. It was by the canon law a very grievous crime: and is so much the more odious, because, as sir Edward Coke observes, it is ever accompanied with perjury, for the presentee is sworn to have committed no simony (3 Inst. 156.). However, it was not an offence punishable in a criminal way at the common law, it being thought sufficient to leave the clerk to ecclesiastical censures (Moor. 564.) But as these did not affect the simoniacal patron, nor were efficacious enough to repel the notorious practice of the thing, divers acts of parliament have been made to restrain it by means of civil forfeitures.

By the statute 31 Eliz. c. 6. it is, for avoiding of simony, enacted, that if any patron, for any sum of money, reward, gift, profit, or benefit, or for any promise, agreement, grant, bond, covenant of, or for any sum of money, reward, gift, profit, or benefit, directly or indirectly, shall present or collate any person to an ecclesiastical benefice or dignity, such presentation shall be void, and the presentee be rendered incapable of ever enjoying the same benefice, and the crown shall present to it for that turn only. But if the presentee dies, without being convicted of such simony in his life-time, it is enacted by stat. 1 W. & M. c. 16. that the simoniacal contract shall not prejudice any other innocent patron, on pretence of lapse to the crown, or otherwise. Also by the stat. 12 Ann, st. 2. c. 12. if any person, for money or profit, shall procure in his own name, or the name of any other, the next presentation to any living ecclesiastical, and shall be presented thereupon, this is declared to be a simoniacal contract, and the party is subject to all the ecclesiastical penalties of simony, is disabled from holding the benefice, and the presentation devolves to the crown.

Upon these statutes many questions have arisen, with regard to what is, and what is not simony. And, among others, these points seem to be clearly settled: 1. That to purchase a presentation, the living being actually vacant, is open and notorious simony, this being expressly in the face of the statute (Cro. Eliz. 788. Moor. 914.) but lord Hardwicke was of opinion, that the sale of an advowson during a vacancy, is not within the statute of simony, as the sale of the next presentation is, but it is void by the common law (Amb. 268.) 2. That for a clerk to bargain for the next presentation, the incumbent being sick, and about to die, was simony, even before the statute of queen Anne (Hob. 165.) But it has been determined that the purchase of an advowson in fee, when the incumbent was upon his death-bed, without any privity of the clerk who was afterwards presented, was not simoniacal, and would not vacate the next presentation (2 Black. Rep. 1052.) However, by that statute, to purchase, either in his own name or another's, the next presentation, and be thereupon presented at any future time to the living, is direct and palpable simony. But, 3. It is held that for a father to purchase such a presentation, in order to provide for his son, is not simony, for the son is not concerned in the bargain, and the father is by nature bound to make a provision for him (Cro. Eliz. 686. Moor. 916.) 4. That if a simoniacal contract be made with the patron, the clerk not being privy thereto, the presentation for that turn shall indeed devolve to the crown, as a punishment of the guilty patron; but the clerk, who is innocent, does not incur any disability or forfeiture. 5. That bonds given to pay money to charitable uses, on receiving a presentation to a living, are not simoniacal, provided the patron or his relations be not benefited thereby; for this is no corrupt consideration, moving to the patron. 6. That bonds of resignation, in case of non-residence, or taking any other living, are not simoniacal, there being no corrupt consideration herein, but such only as is for the good of the public. So also bonds to resign, when the patron's son comes to canonical age, are legal, upon the reason before given, that the father is bound to provide for his son. 7. Lastly, general bonds to resign at the patron's request have been held to be legal, for they may possibly be given for one of the legal considerations before-mentioned; and where there is a possibility that a transaction may be fair, the law will not suppose it iniquitous without proof (Cro. Car. 180. Stra. 227.) But, if the party can prove the contract to have been a corrupt one, such proof will be admitted, in order to shew the bond simoniacal, and therefore void. Neither will the patron be suffered to make an ill use of such a general bond of resignation, as by extorting a composition for tithes, procuring an annuity for his relation, or by demanding a resignation wantonly or without good cause, such as is approved by the law; as, for the benefit of his own son, or on account of non-residence, plurality of livings, or gross immorality in the incumbent.

And, in the great case of the bishop of London v. Ffytche, it was determined by the house of lords, that a general bond of resignation is simoniacal and illegal. The circumstances of that case were briefly these: Mr. Ffytche, the patron, presented Mr. Eyre, his clerk, to the bishop of London, for institution. The bishop refused to admit the presentation, because Mr. Eyre had given a general bond of resignation; upon this Mr. Ffytche brought a quare impedit against the bishop, to which the bishop pleaded, that the presentation was simoniacal and void, by reason of the bond of resignation; and to this plea Mr. Ffytche demurred. From a series of judicial decisions, the court of common pleas thought themselves bound to determine in his favour, and that judgment was affirmed by the court of king's bench; but these judgments were afterwards reversed by the house of lords. The principal question was this, viz. whether such a bond was a reward, gift, profit, or benefit, to the patron, under the 31 Eliz. c. 6.; if it were so, the statute had declared the presentation to be simoniacal and void. 1 Bro. 286. Cunningham's Law of Simony, 52.

But, in a late case, where a bond was given to resign a rectory when the patron's son came of age, and before that time, to reside, and to keep the chancel and rectory-house in repair; as this case differed from the former, and it was understood that it was intended to carry it up to the house of lords, it was decided by the court of king's bench in favour of the bond, without an argument. 4 T. R. 395, & 78.

It has been decided, though with a difference of opinion, that a bond to resign a school or freehold office, at the request of the patron, is valid. 1 East. 391.

SIMPLE CONTRACT, (debt by.) Debts by simple contract are such, where the contract upon which the obligation arises is neither ascertained by matter of record, nor yet by deed or special instrument, but by mere oral evidence, the most simple of any; or by notes unsealed, which are capable of a more easy proof, and (therefore only) better, than a verbal promise. 3 Black. 465.

SIMPLE LARCENY. The felonious taking and carrying away of the personal goods of another. 3 Black. 230. See Larceny.

SIMPLEX, signifies simple, or single; as charta simplex is a deed-poll or single deed. Cowell.

SIMPLEX BENEFICIUM, a minor dignity in a cathedral or collegiate church, or any other ecclesiastical benefice opposed to a cure of souls; and which therefore is consistent with any parochial cure, without coming under the name of pluralities. Ibid.

SIMPLEX JUSTICIARIUS. This stile was anciently used for any puisne judge, that was not chief in any court. Ibid.

SIMUL CUM, are words used in indictments, and declarations of trespass against several persons, where some of them are known, and others not known: as the plaintiff declares against A. B. the defendant simul cum, i. e. together with C. D. E. F. and divers others unknown, for that they committed such a trespass, &c. 2 Lil. Abr. 469.

SINE ASSENSU CAPITALI, a writ that lies where a bishop, dean, prebendary, or master of an hospital, aliens the lands holden in right of his bishoprick, deanry, house, &c. without the assent of the chapter or fraternity; in which case his successor shall have this writ. F. N. B. 195. New Nat. Br. 432.

SINE-CURE, is where a rector of a parish hath a vicar under him endowed and charged with the cure, so that the rector is not obliged either to duty or residence (Degg's Pars.' Counc. 195.) But where there is only one incumbent, and a church is fallen down, and the parish becomes destitute of parishioners, it is not in law a sine-cure. Christ. in n. 20. 1 Black. 385. 386. See Appropriation.

SINE DIE, i. e. without day. Before the act for turning the law into English, when judgment was given against the plaintiff in an action, he was said to be in misericordia pro falso clamore suo; and for that the defendant eat inde sine die, and the defendant was discharged, &c. 2 Lil. 220.

SINGLE BOND, simplex obligatio, a deed whereby the obligor obliges himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, to pay a certain sum of money to another at a day appointed. 2 Black. 340.

SI NON OMNES, is a writ on association of justices, by which, if all in commission cannot meet at the day assigned, it is allowed that two or more of them may finish the business. Reg. Orig. 202. F. N. B. 111. 185.

SINKING FUND, is a provision made by parliament, consisting of surpluses of other funds, appropriated for paying the public debts of the nation. And by the 26 Geo. 3. c. 31. (see Funds) the parliament had the wisdom and firmness to vest unalienably in commissioners, the sum of 1,000,000*l.* annually for the reduction of the national debt; in which act every possible precaution was taken that could be devised, for preventing this fund from being diverted at any future time, and for carrying to the account of the commissioners, for the purposes of the act, the interest of such stock as should be purchased, and such temporary annuities as should fall in.

By that act it was provided, that when the whole sum, including the annual million, should amount to four millions, the dividends should no longer be paid upon the redeemed stock, and that the sinking fund should no longer accumulate.

By the 32 Geo. 3. c. 55. it was directed, that when the dividends amounted to 3,000,000*l.* exclusive of the annual grant, there should be no further accumulation.

And it was provided, that upon all future loans which were not to be paid off within 45 years, one per cent. should be annually appropriated for their reduction.

By the 33 Geo. 3. c. 22. an additional grant of 200,000*l.* was made for the same purpose, which has since been annually renewed.

The 42 Geo. 3. c. 71. repeals so much of the 26 Geo. 3. and 32 Geo. 3. as fixed a limit to the accumulation of the sinking fund, and consolidates the funds provided by each act, and states that by the accumulation of that joint fund the whole national debt may be redeemed in 45 years.

The wisdom of keeping this fund inviolable is striking; for during a peace it provides resources against the periods of war and difficulty, it supports public credit by keeping the funds steady and uniform, and even in the times of the greatest depression the country derives the benefit of the rapidity of their redemption.

The following was the state of this new sinking fund on the 1st of August, 1810:—

An account of the reduction of the national debt, from the 1st of August, 1786, to the 1st of August, 1810:—

Redeemed by the sinking fund - - - -	£163,527,088
Transferred by land-tax redeemed - - -	23,576,480
Ditto by life annuities purchased - - - -	1,200,386
On account of Great Britain - - - -	£188,303,954
Ditto of Ireland - -	7,132,030
Ditto of imperial loan -	1,070,173
Ditto of loan to Portugal -	43,618
Total - -	£196,542,775

And the sum to be expended in the ensuing quarter was 2,728,026*l.* 19*s.* 3½*d.*

SIPESSOCNA, what we now call a hundred. Leg. Hen. 1. c. 6. Cowell.

SI RECOGNOSCANT, a writ that, according to the old books, lies for a creditor against his debtor, who before the sheriff in the county court hath acknowledged to owe his creditor such a sum received of him. Old Nat. Br. 68.

SITE, of a messuage or manor-house, &c. See Scite.

SITHCUNDMAN, (Sax.) such a man as had the office to lead the men of a town or parish (Leg. Inæ. c. 56.) The chief officer within such a division, i. e. the high constable of the hundred. Dugd. Antiq. Cowell.

SITHESOCA, a Saxon word for franchise or liberty, a hundred. Rot. Parl. 16 H. 2. Cowell.

SIX CLERKS IN CHANCERY. These are officers in chancery of ancient continuance. They file all proceedings by bill and answer, and also issue some patents that pass the great seal, as pardons of men for chance-medley, patents for ambassadors, sheriffs patents, and some others: and all these matters are transacted by their under clerks, each of which has a seat in the office (in Chancery-lane), and whereof every six clerk has a certain number, usually about ten, besides two waiting clerks in each division; all which are accountable to their respective six clerks for the business they transact. These six clerks likewise sign all office copies in order to be read in court, and also certificates, and attend upon the court in term, by two at a time, at Westminster, and there read the pleadings. 1 Har. Cham. Pract. 25. 26.

SIXHINDI, were servants of the same nature with rod-knights, viz. bound to attend their lord wherever he went; but they were accounted among the English Saxons as freemen, because they had lands in fee, subject only to such tenure. Leg. Inæ. c. 26. Cowell. See Hindeni.

SIZEL, is where pieces of money are cut out from the flat bars of silver, after drawn through a mill, into the respective sizes or dimensions of the money to be made; the residue is called by this name, and is melted down again. Lownd. 96. Cowell. Blount.

SHARKALLA, an engine for catching of fish. 2 Inst. 38.

SKERDA, a scar or wound. Bract. lib. 3.

SKINS and SKINNERS. See Leather.

SKYVINAGE, the precincts of Calais. Stat. 27 H. 6. c. 2.

SLADES, (Sax. slæd) a long narrow piece or slip of ground. Paroch. Antiq. 465. Cowell.

SLANDER, is the defaming of a man in his reputation, profession, or livelihood. See Reputation.

SLAVES. There are no slaves in England: for a slave or negro, the instant he lands in England, becomes a freeman; that is, the law will protect him in the enjoyment of his person and his property. Salk. 666.

SLAVE TRADE. By 47 Geo. 3. s. 1. c. 36. from May 1, 1807, the slave trade shall be abolished; and penalty for trading in or purchasing slaves, 100*l.* for each slave. s. 1.

Vessels fitted out in this kingdom, or the colonies, for carrying on the slave trade, shall be forfeited. s. 2.

Persons prohibited from removing, as slaves, inhabitants of Africa, the West Indies, or America, from one place to another, or being concerned in receiving them; vessels employed on such removal to be forfeited, as also the property in the slaves; owners so employed to forfeit 100*l.* for each slave. s. 3.

Subjects of Africa, West Indies, or America, unlawfully carried away, and imported into any British colony as slaves, shall be forfeited to his majesty. s. 4.

Insurances on transactions concerning the slave trade not lawful; penalty 100*l.* and treble the amount of the premium. s. 5.

Slaves, natives of Africa, taken as prize during this or any other war, or seized as forfeitures, shall not be sold; but his majesty's officers, civil or military, may provide for them by enlisting them in his majesty's service, or binding them, whether of full age or not, as apprentices for 14 years. s. 7.

And a bounty shall be paid for such slaves to the captors, in the manner of head-money, not exceeding 40*l.* for every man, 30*l.* for every woman, or 10*l.* for every child not above 14 years old, delivered over to such officer as aforesaid. s. 8.

But certificates are to be produced by the captors to entitle them to bounty (s. 9.) and doubts of claim to bounty are to be determined by the judge of the admiralty. s. 10.

On condemnation of forfeitures of slaves for offences against this act, there shall be paid to the informer 13*l.* for every man, 10*l.* for every woman, and 8*l.* for every person under the age of 14, condemned, and delivered over in health; and also the like sums to the governor or commander in chief where such seizure shall have been made; but where such seizures shall be made at sea, the commander shall receive 20*l.* for every man, 15*l.* for every woman, and 5*l.* for every person under 14, to be distributed according to orders in council. s. 11.

Counterfeiting any certificate, copy of sentence of condemnation, or receipt, felony without benefit of clergy. s. 12.

Penalties and forfeitures to be recovered in any court of record or vice-admiralty, according to 4 Geo. 3. c. 15. s. 13. Seizures may be made by officers of customs and excise, or officers of ships of war (s. 14.) and offences may be enquired of, as if committed in Middlesex. s. 15.

His majesty may make regulations for disposal of negroes, after the expiration of their apprenticeship. s. 16.

And negroes, enlisted in his majesty's forces, are not entitled to the benefits of limited service, pensions, or allowances. s. 17.

Defendants may plead the general issue, and will be entitled to treble costs.

And by 47 Geo. 3. s. 2. c. 44. the dealing in slaves in the colony of Sierra Leone is prohibited. s. 4.

And by 51 Geo. 3. c. 23. Subjects or persons residing in the united kingdom, or any of the dominions belonging to his majesty, carrying on the slave trade, or any way engaged therein, shall be declared felons, and be transported for not exceeding fourteen years, or be kept to hard labour for not exceeding five nor less than three years, at the discretion of the court. s. 1.

Persons serving on board any ship, or underwriting any policy thereon, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and punished by imprisonment for not exceeding two years. s. 2.

And such persons shall not be deemed accessaries to felony. s. 3.

This act is not to prevent the removing of slaves from one British settlement to another, &c. nor prevent the transportation to foreign places of slaves that have been convicted of crimes. s. 4.

Governors and commanders in chief, and persons authorized by them, may seize vessels. s. 8.

And persons sailing in vessels, giving information of offences committed, are not liable to punishment. s. 9.

SLEDGE. A sledge or hurdle is generally allowed to draw offenders guilty of high treason to the gallows, to preserve them from the extreme torture of being dragged on the ground or pavement. 1 Hal. P. C. 82.

SLIPPA, a stirrup; and there was a tenure of land by holding the king's stirrup, in Cambridgeshire. Cart. 5. Hen. 7. Cowell.

SLOUGH-SILVER, a rent paid to the castle of Wigmore, in lieu of certain days work in harvest, reserved to the lord from his tenants. Pat. 43 Eliz. Cowell.

SLUICE, (exclusa) a frame to keep or let water out of a ground. By stat. 1 Geo. 2. c. 19. to destroy any sluice or lock on any navigable river, is made felony, to be punished with transportation for seven years.

SMAKA, a smack, or small light vessel. Cowell.

SMALL DEBTS, (courts for). By 27 Geo. 2. c. 16. all acts for erecting courts of conscience for recovery of small debts shall be deemed public acts.

By 26 Geo. 3. c. 38. debtors committed by courts of conscience for debts not exceeding 20*s.* shall not be imprisoned more than 20 days, and where the debt does not exceed 40*s.* not more than 40 days; but debtors found guilty of a fraudulent concealment of their effects, may be imprisoned for a longer term.

Debtors are to be discharged without paying gaol fees; and gaolers demanding the same forfeit 5*l.* Ibid.

Two justices may determine offences against this act within two months; and the penalties go half to the poor, and half to the informer. Ibid.

Process of courts of conscience shall not issue against the body and goods of the same person; and commissioners must be householders, and have 20*l.* per annum, or 500*l.* personal estate; acting without such qualification is a penalty of 20*l.* to the informer, if he sues within six months. Ibid.

SMALT, (Ital. smalto) that of which painters make their blue colouring. Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 3.

SMOAK-FARTHINGS, the pentecostals or customary oblations offered by the dispersed inhabitants within a diocese, when they made their procession to the mother cathedral church, came by degrees into a standing annual rent, called smoak-farthings. Cowell.

SMOKE-SILVER. Lands were holden in some places by the payment of the sum of 6*d.* yearly to the sheriff, called smoke-silver. Pat. 4. Ed. 6. Smoke-silver and smoke-penny are to be paid to the ministers of divers parishes, as a modus in lieu of tithe-wood: and in some manors, formerly belonging to religious houses, there is still paid, as appendant to the said manors, the ancient Peter pence, by the name of smoke-money. Cowell.

SMUGGLING is the offence of importing goods without paying the duties imposed thereon by the laws of the customs and excise. This is restrained by a great variety of statutes, which inflict pecuniary penalties and the seisure of the goods for clandestine smuggling; and affix the guilt of felony, with transportation for seven years, upon more open, daring, and avowed practices; for which see Customs and Excise.

SNOTTERING-SILVER. There was a custom in the village of Wylegh, that all the servile tenants should pay for their tenements a small duty called snottering silver, to the abbot of Colchester. Placit. 18 Edw. 1. Cowell.

SNUFF. Mixing it with fustick, yellow ebony, touchwood, logwood, red or guinea wood, braziletto or Jamaica wood, Nicaragua, Saunders, or any other wood, or any walnut tree, hop, sycamore, or other leaves, herbs or plants, incurs a penalty of 200*l.* by 29 Geo. 3. c. 68; and having any such materials in their possession is a forfeiture thereof, and of 50*l.* A very heavy duty is granted per pound on snuff imported from the Spanish West Indies, and 5*s.* for what is brought from Spain, by the Consolidated Act.

SOC, (Sax.) power, or liberty to minister justice and execute laws; also the circuit or territory wherein such power is exercised: hence soca is used for a seigniory or lordship, with the liberty of holding or keeping a court of his sockmen. Bract. l. 3. Cowell.

SOCAGE, (socagium, from the Fr. soc. that is vomer, a coulter or plough-share). Socage, in its most general and extensive signification, seems to denote a tenure by any certain and determinate service; and in this sense it is by our ancient writers constantly put in opposition to chivalry, or knight-service, where the render was precarious and uncertain. Thus (Bracton, l. 2. c. 16. s. 9.) if a man holds by a rent in money, without any escuage or serjeanty, id tenementum dici potest socagium; but if you add thereto any royal service, or escuage to any, the smallest amount, illud dici poterit feodum militare. So too the author of Fleta, l. 3. c. 14. s. 9. ex donationibus, servitia militaria vel magnæ serjantiæ non continentibus, oritur nobis quoddam nomen generale, quod est socagium. Littleton also, s. 117. defines it to be, where the tenant holds his tenement of the lord by any certain service, in lieu of all other services, so that they be not services of chivalry, or knight-service. And therefore afterwards (s. 118.) he tells us, that whatsoever is not tenure in chivalry is tenure in socage: in like manner as it is defined by Finch, L. 147, a tenure to be done out of war. The service must therefore be certain, in order to denominate it socage; as to hold by fealty and 20*s.* rent; or, by homage, fealty, and 20*s.* rent; or, by homage and fealty without rent; or, by fealty and certain corporal service, as ploughing the lord's land for three days; or, by fealty only, without any other service: for all these are tenures in socage (Litt. § 117, 118, 119.) And by the statute 12 Car. 2. c. 24. all tenures shall be adjudged and taken to be turned into free and common socage.

SOCAGERS, were those tenants whose tenure was called socage. Cowell.

SOCMANS or SOKEMANS, (socmanni) such tenants as hold their lands and tenements by socage tenure. Kitchin, 81. Cowell.

SOCMEN. The husbandmen among our Saxon ancestors were of two sorts: one that hired the lord's out-land or tenementary land, like our farmers; the other, that tilled and manured his inland or demeans (yielding operam, not censum, work, not rent) and were thereupon called his sockmen, or ploughmen. Spel. of Feuds, c. 7.

After the conquest they were taken to be those tenants who held of no servile tenure, but commonly paid their rent as a soke or sign of freedom to the lord, though they were sometimes obliged to customary duties for the service and honour of their lord. Cowell.

SOCNA, (Sax. socne) a privilege, liberty, or franchise. Ibid.

SOCOME, a custom of grinding corn at the lord's mill. Blount.

SODOMY. See Buggery.

SOKE, SOC, SOK, SOCA, signify in general the liberty or privilege of tenants excused from customary burdens and impositions; sometimes the liberty of keeping court within his own soke or jurisdiction; sometimes it signified a payment or rent to the lord. Cowell.

SOKEMANS, and SOKEMANRIES. The former certain copyhold tenants so called, the latter their tenures. Britton, c. 66.

SOLARIUM, a sollar, upper room, garret, or loft. Cowell.

SOLDIERS. The military state of England includes the whole of the soldiery, or such persons as are peculiarly appointed among the rest of the people for the safeguard and defence of the realm (Wood's Inst. 45.) And a soldier (from the Ger. sold, or sould, signifying a stipend) is a man hired for pay to serve in war. Wms. Just. tit. Sol.

In free states the profession of a soldier, taken singly, and merely as a profession, is justly an object of jealousy. In these, Blackstone observes, no man should take up arms but with a view to defend his country and its laws: he puts not off the citizen when he enters the camp; but it is because he is a citizen, and would wish to continue so, that he makes himself for a while a soldier (1 Black. 408.) The laws therefore and constitution of these kingdoms know no such state as that of a perpetual standing soldier, bred up to no other profession than that of war: and the statutes relating to the army are consequently but few.

To keep this body of troops in order, an annual act of parliament likewise passes, "to punish mutiny and desertion, and for the better payment of the army and their quarters." This regulates the manner in which they are to be dispersed among the several inn-keepers and victuallers throughout the kingdom, and establishes a law martial for their government. By this, among other things, it is enacted, that if any officer or soldier shall excite, or join any mutiny, or, knowing of it, shall not give notice to the commanding officer; or shall desert, or list in any other regiment, or sleep upon his post, or leave it before he is relieved, or hold correspondence with a rebel or enemy, or strike or use violence to his superior officer, or shall disobey his lawful commands, such offender shall suffer such punishment as a court-martial shall inflict, though it extend to death itself.

But as soldiers, by this annual act, are thus put in a worse condition than any other subjects, so by the humanity of our standing laws they are in some cases put in a much better. By statute 43 Eliz. c. 3. a weekly allowance is to be raised in every county for the relief of soldiers that are sick, hurt, and maimed: not forgetting the royal hospital at Chelsea, for such as are worn out in their duty. Officers and soldiers, that have been in the king's service, are by statutes, enacted at the close of a war, at liberty to use any trade or occupation they are fit for, in any town in the kingdom, (except the two universities) notwithstanding any statute, custom, or charter, to the contrary. And by the statute 42 Geo. 3. c 69. all officers, soldiers, and mariners, who have been employed in the king's service since 1784, and have not deserted, and their wives and children, may exercise any trade in any town in the kingdom, and shall not be removed till they are actually chargeable. The same privilege is extended to all officers and soldiers, who have served in the militia or the fencible regiments, and have been honourably discharged; but any two justices of the county or place may examine any such person with regard to his legal settlement, who shall make oath thereof; and the justices shall give such person an attested copy of his affidavit, which shall afterwards be admitted as evidence of such settlement.

And soldiers in actual military service may make nuncupative wills, and dispose of their goods, wages, and other personal chattels, without those forms, solemnities, and expences, which the law requires in other cases. Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. 5 W. 3. c. 21. s. 6. See Will.

Besides which, it is now fully established, that both the full pay and half pay of an officer, or any person in a military or naval character, cannot in any instance be assigned before it is due; as the object of such pay is to enable those who receive it always to be ready to serve their country with that decency and dignity which their respective characters and stations require. 4 T. R. 258. H. Bl. 628. See Army, Game, Poor, and Vagrants.

SOLE CORPORATIONS. A corporation sole consists of one person only and his successors, in some particular station, who are incorporated by law, in order to give them some legal capacities and advantages, particularly that of perpetuity, which in their natural persons they could not have had. In this sense the king is a sole corporation; so is a bishop; so are some deans and prebendaries, distinct from their several chapters; and so is every parson and vicar. 1 Black. 469.

SOLET ET DEBET, words inserted in writs for recovery of rights, &c. Cowell.

SOLE TENANT, (solus tenens), is he that holds land by his own right only, without any other joined; and if a man and his wife hold land for their lives, with remainder to their son for life, here the man dying, the lord shall not have an heriot, because he dies not sole tenant. Kitch. 134.

SOLICITOR, (solicitor) a person employed to follow and take care of suits depending in courts of law or equity. See Attorney.

SOLIDATUM, used in the neuter gender, is taken for that absolute right or property which a man hath in any thing. Malmsb. lib. 1.

SOLINUS TERRÆ, about 160 acres, and 7 solini are about 1120 acres, which is less than 17 carucatæ, for at the lowest carucata terræ is 100 acres. 1 Inst. 15. Cowell.

SOLLAR, (solarium) a garret or upper room, a loft. See Solarium.

SOLVENDO ESSE, is a term of art, signifying that a man hath wherewith to pay, or is a person solvent. Cowell.

SOLVERE PŒNAS, to pay the penalty, or undergo the punishment inflicted for offences. 3 Salk. 32.

SOLVIT AD DIEM, is a plea in action of debt on a bond, bill, &c. that the money was paid at the day limited. Mod. Cas. 28. 1 Strange, 652. See Payment.

SOLUTIONE FEODI MILITES PARLIAMENTI, and SOLUTIONE FEODI BURGENS. PARLIAMENTI, are writs whereby knights of the shire and burgesses may recover their allowance, if it be denied. Stat. 35 H. 8. c. 11.

SON ASSAULT DEMESNE, is a plea of justification in an action of assault and battery, stating that the plaintiff made the first assault, and what the defendant did was in his own defence. 2 Lil. Abr. 523.

SONTAGE, was a tax of 40*s.* laid upon every knight's fee. Cowell.

SORCERY, (sortilegium) witchcraft or divination by lots. By 9 Geo. 2. c. 5. no prosecution shall for the future be carried on against any person for conjuration, witchcraft, sorcery, or inchantment. But the misdemeanor of persons pretending to use witchcraft, tell fortunes, or discover stolen goods by skill in the occult sciences, shall be punished with a year's imprisonment, and standing four times in the pillory. 4 Black. 61.

SORS, in sums of money lent upon usury, the principal was anciently called sors, to distinguish it from the interest. Cowell.

SORUS ACCIPITER, is a sor or soar hawk. Ibid.

SOTHAIL, or SOTHALE, mistaken for scotale. Bract. lib. 3.

SOTHSAGA, or SOTHSAGE, an old word which signified history. Cowell.

SOVERAIGN, or SOVEREIGN, is a chief or supreme person, one highest of all, as a king. Ibid.

SOVEREIGN, a piece of gold coin current at 22*s.* in 1 H. 8. In 34 H. 8. sovereigns were coined at 20*s.* a-piece, and half sovereigns at 10*s.* But in 4 Ed. 6. the sovereign of gold passed for 24*s.*; and in 6 Ed. 6. at 30*s.* Ibid.

SOVEREIGN POWER, is the power of making laws. In our constitution the law ascribes to the king the attribute of sovereignty, but that is to be understood in a qualified sense, i. e. as supreme magistrate, not as sole legislator, the legislative power being vested in the king, lords, and commons, not in any one of the three estates alone. 1 Black. 49.

SOUL-SCOT. A mortuary is so called in the laws of Canute, c. 13. 2 Black. 425.

SOUND, is a narrow sea, as mare Balticum, the sound; and to sound, is to make trial how many fathom a sea is deep. Mer. Dict. Cowell.

SOUTH-SEA COMPANY, a company of merchants trading to the South Sea. They were incorporated, on lending the government ten millions of money. The corporation shall have the sole trade from the river Oroonoko, on the east side of America, to the southernmost part of Terra del Fuego, and from thence through the South Sea. And the company to be owners of all islands, ports, and places they can discover. Stat. 9 Ann, c. 21.

But by 47 Geo. 3. s. 1. c. 23. so much of 9 Ann, c. 21. as vests in the South Sea company the exclusive trade to and from certain limits of South America, in the possession of his majesty, is repealed.

SOWLEGROVE, an old name of the month of February, amongst the inhabitants of South Wales. Cowell.

SOWNE, (from the Fr. souvenue, i. e. remembered, is a word of art used in the exchequer, where estreats that sowne not, are those that the sheriff cannot levy, viz. such estreats and casualties as are not to be remembered, and run not in demand; and estreats that sowne, are such as he may gather and are leviable. 4 Hen. 5. c. 7. 4 Inst. 107.

SPADARIUS, (for spatharius) a sword-bearer. Blount.

SPATÆ PLACITUM, a court for the speedy execution of justice on military delinquents. Cowell.

SPATULARIA, is numbered among the holy vestments. Ibid.

SPEAKER. The lords and commons have two speakers: the one termed the lord speaker of the house of peers, and is most commonly the lord chancellor or lord keeper of the great seal of England; the other (being a member of the house of commons) is called the speaker of the house of commons. The duty of both consists in managing debates, putting questions, and thereby collecting the sense of the houses, the passing of bills, seeing the orders of each house observed, &c.

SPEAKING WITH PROSECUTOR. It is not uncommon when a person is convicted of a misdemeanor, which principally and more immediately affects some individual, as a battery, imprisonment, or the like, for the court to permit the defendant to speak with the prosecutor, before any judgment is pronounced; and, if the prosecutor declares himself satisfied, to inflict but a trivial punishment. 4 Black. 356, 357.

SPECIAL MATTER cannot be given in evidence in many cases, unless it is expressly pleaded, or the necessity of pleading the same specially is removed by the provision of some statute relating to the subject matter of the action.

SPECIALTY, (specialitas) a bond, bill, or such like instrument; a writing or deed, under the hand and seal of the parties. 2 Black. 465.

SPECIES. A relative term, expressing an idea which is comprised under some general one, called a genus; as, for instance, the action on the case we may call the genus, and of assumpsit, trover, &c. a species of that genus.

SPECIFIC LEGACY, is a bequest of any particular thing, as a piece of plate, a watch, a horse, or the like, and it cannot be taken by the devisee without the consent of the executor. Co. Lit. 111. Aleyn 39. See Legacy.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE. The want of a more specific remedy than can be obtained in the courts of law, gives a concurrent jurisdiction to a court of equity in a great variety of cases; as, for instance, in executory agreements, a court of equity will compel them to be carried into strict execution, unless where it is improper, or impossible, instead of giving damages for their non-performance. 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 16.

SPECIEUM, the cell of a monk. Cowell.

SPIGURNEL, (spigurnellus) the sealer of the king's writs, from the Sax. spicurran, to shut up or inclose. Cowell.

SPINACIUM, a vessel called a pinnace. Ibid.

SPINDULÆ, three golden pins used about the archiepiscopal pall: hence spindulatus signified to be adorned with the pall. Ibid.

SPINSTER, an addition usually given to all unmarried women. Dyer, 46, 88. 2 Co. Inst. 668.

SPIRITING AWAY MEN AND CHILDREN. This offence is commonly called kidnapping. It is a very heinous crime, which the common law of England hath punished by fine, imprisonment, and pillory. Raym. 474. 2 Show, 221. Skin. 47. Comb. 10.

By statute 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 7. if any captain of a merchant vessel shall (during his being abroad) force any person on shore, or wilfully leave him behind, or refuse to bring home all such men as he carried out, if able and desirous to return, he shall suffer three months imprisonment.

SPIRITUAL CORPORATIONS. Spiritual or ecclesiastical corporations are where the members that compose it are entirely spiritual persons, such as bishops, and the like. 1 Black. 470.

SPIRITUAL COURTS have jurisdiction in causes matrimonial, and for probate of wills of goods, and granting administrations, and for tithes, where there is no modus; also in cases of defamation, as calling a woman whore, except in London, where calling a woman whore is actionable, whores being liable to be carted by the custom of the city. 3 Black. 61.

But, by 27 Geo. 3. c. 44. suits in ecclesiastical courts for defamatory words shall be commenced within 6 months: and for fornication or incontinence, or for striking or brawling in any church or church-yard within 8 months; and there shall be no prosecution for fornication after the parties have intermarried.

SPIRITUALTIES OF A BISHOP, are those profits which he receives as a bishop, and not as a baron of parliament; such as the duties of his visitation, prestation money, his benefit growing from ordinations and institutions of priests, the income of his jurisdiction, &c. Staundf. P. C. 132.

The archbishop of the province is guardian of spiritualties when a see is vacant, and hath the jurisdiction of courts, &c. 1 Black. 380.

SPITTLE-HOUSE, is a corruption from hospital, and signifies the same thing; or it may be taken from the Teuton. spital, and hospital or alms-house, mentioned in 15 Car. 2. c. 9.

SPOLIATION, (spoliatio) a writ or suit for the fruits of a church, or the church itself, to be sued in the spiritual court, and not in the temporal, that lies for one incumbent against another, where they both claim by one patron, and the right of patronage doth not come in question: as if a parson be created a bishop, and hath dispensation to hold his benefice, and afterwards the patron presents another incumbent, who is instituted and inducted; now the bishop may have a spoliation in the spiritual court against the new incumbent, because they both claim by one patron, and the right of patronage doth not come in debate; and for that the other incumbent came to the possession of the benefice, by the course of the spiritual law, viz. by institution and induction; for otherwise, if he be not instituted and inducted, a spoliation lies not against him, but writ of trespass, or assise of novel disseisin. F. N. B. 36, 37.

SPONTE OBLATA, a free gift or present to the king, anciently so called. Cowell.

SPORTULA, signifies gifts and gratuities, forbidden to be received by the clergy. Ibid.

SPOUSALS, the betrothing of a man or woman before full marriage. Ibid.

SPOUSE-BREACH, is adultery opposed to simple fornication. Ibid.

SPRINGING USES, or CONTINGENT USES. They differ from an executory devise, in that there must be a person seised to such uses at the time when the contingency happens, else they can never be executed by the statute. 2 Black. 334.

SPULLERS OF YARN, are persons that work at the spole or wheel; or triers of yarn, to see that it be well spun, and fit for the loom. 1 Mar. c. 7. Cowell.

SPUR-ROYAL, (spurareum aureum) an ancient gold coin. Cowell.

SQUALLEY, a note of faultiness in the making of cloth. 43 Eliz. c. 10. Cowell.

SQUIBS. See Fireworks.

STABBING. See Felony and Homicide.

STABILIA, a writ called by that name, on a custom in Normandy, that where a man in power claimed lands in the possession of an inferior, he petitioned the prince that it might be put into his hands until the right was decided, whereupon he had this writ, breve de stabilia. Cowell.

STABILITIO VENATIONIS, the driving deer to a stand. Ibid.

STABLE-STAND, (stabilis statio, vel stans in stabulo) is where a man is found at his standing in the forest, with a cross or long bow bent, ready to shoot at any deer, or standing close by a tree, with greyhounds in a leash, ready to slip: and it is one of the four evidences or presumptions, whereby a person is convicted of intending to steal the king's deer in the forest: the other three are dog-draw, back-bear, and bloody-hand. Manwood, p. 2. c. 18.

STACK, a quantity of wood three feet long, as many feet broad, and twelve feet high. Merch. Dict. Cowell.

STADIUM, is accounted a furlong of land, which is the eighth part of a mile. Domesday. Cowell.

STAFF-HERDING, is the following of cattle within a forest; and where persons claim common in any forest, it must be inquired by the ministers whether they use staff-herding, for it is not allowable of common right; because by that means the deer, which would otherwise come and feed with the cattle, are frighted away, and the keeper or follower will drive the cattle into the best grounds, so that the deer shall only have their leavings; therefore if any man who hath right of common, under colour thereof use staff-herding, it is a cause of seizing his common till he pay a fine for the abuse. 1 Jon. Rep. 282.

STAGE COACHES. By 50 G o. 3. c. 48. any public stage coach drawn by four horses, shall be allowed to carry ten outside passengers, exclusive of the coachman, but including the guard, and one passenger and no more upon the box, and three of such passengers on the front of the roof, and the remaining six behind; and no such passengers shall be allowed to sit on the luggage, or that part of the roof allotted for the same; and all stage coaches drawn by two or three horses shall be allowed five outside passengers, exclusive of the coachman; and all long coaches or double-bodied coaches shall be permitted to carry eight outside passengers, and no more, exclusive of the coachman, but including the guard; but no child in the lap, or under seven years of age, shall be counted as one of such number, unless there be more than one; and if more than one, that two shall be accounted equal to one grown person; and no person paying as an outside passenger shall be permitted to sit as an inside passenger, unless with the consent of one of the inside passengers, and next to whom such outside passenger shall be placed: also, where such coach is of a construction peculiarly wide, and being so found shall be licensed for that purpose, four outside passengers, instead of three, shall be allowed to sit on the front, so that the number of outsides shall not exceed ten in all.

After the 1st of March, 1811, it shall not be lawful for any driver or proprietor of any coach to permit any luggage to be carried on the roof, or any person to go as an outside passenger on the outside of any such coach, the top of which shall be more than eight feet nine inches from the ground, or the bearing of which on the ground shall be less than four feet six inches from the centre of the track of the right or off wheel, to the centre of the track of the left or near wheel, under the penalty of 5*l.*

It shall not be lawful for any driver or proprietor to carry any luggage exceeding two feet in height on the roof of any coach drawn by four horses; and, if drawn by two or three, then not to exceed eighteen inches above the roof, on pain to forfeit 10*l.* for every inch above the spaces allowed; and, in default of payment, to be committed to gaol for two months; and all packages shall be so placed on the roof, as that no passenger shall sit thereon, under the penalty of 50*s.*; and the division on the top, allotted for luggage, shall be distinctly separated from the other part by some railing, or otherwise; and in case any driver or owner shall refuse to permit the carriage and luggage to be measured by any justice, constable, surveyor of the highway or turnpike road, inspector of coaches, or passenger, he shall forfeit the like penalty.

And in order to encourage the lowering of the present height of stage coaches, it is enacted, that it shall be lawful to carry any luggage on the roof of a greater height than two feet, provided such luggage be not a greater height from the ground, including the height of such coach, than ten feet nine inches.

In every stage coach licence there shall be specified the number of outside as well as inside passengers to be carried.

And all persons who shall be licensed (mail coaches excepted), shall paint, within six months after 9th June, 1810, on the outside of each door, or on some other conspicuous part, in legible characters of one inch in length, and in a different colour from the ground, and in words at length, the number of outside passengers which the licence shall specify, as well as the number of inside passengers, together with the names of the proprietors; or it shall be lawful for the commissioners to require, instead of such inscription, that a plate made of brass or other metal shall be fixed on the side of each coach, with the names of the proprietors, and a distinct number for each, to the end that the owners and drivers shall be known; and if any person shall be licensed to keep more than one coach, every one shall have several numbers; and if any person shall deface the number, figure, or mark, he shall forfeit 5*l.*; and if any person shall employ any such carriage without being licensed, or without having the words, and number, and name, painted on the outside, as herein directed, or shall at any time carry more outside passengers than specified in the licence, every person so offending shall forfeit 10*l.* for each outside passenger beyond the number, and double that sum if the driver be also owner or part owner.

The owners of stage coaches shall be liable to penalties in case drivers cannot be found; but if any such owner shall make out, to the satisfaction of the justice, that the offence was committed by the driver without his privity or knowledge, and that no profit, either directly or indirectly, has accrued, or could have accrued to such owner, such justice shall discharge the owner from such penalty, and levy the same upon the driver only, when found; who, on nonpayment, shall be committed to gaol for any time not exceeding six, nor less than three months.

The driver of any coach, mail coach, or other carriage, stopping at any place, where assistance can be procured, shall not quit his horses or the box until a proper person shall be employed to hold the horses or fore horses, and shall have actual hold of such horses; and such persons shall hold the same until the driver has returned to his box, or until the postboy who rides one of the horses is again mounted, and has in his hands the reins; and if such driver shall neglect so to do, he shall be subject to a penalty of not less than 10*s.* nor more than 5*l.*; but this shall not extend to hackney coaches, drawn by two horses only.

In case the driver, or person acting as guard, shall, by intoxication or by negligence, or other misconduct (unavoidable accidents always excepted), endanger the safety of the passengers in their lives, their limbs, or their property, or shall not give due care to any other property with which such driver or guard may be entrusted; or if any driver of any mail coach, or any guard, shall loiter on the road, so as to retard the arrival of the mails at the next stage; or if the driver of any mail coach shall not in all possible cases convey such mails, at the speed of such a number of miles an hour, as are fixed by the postmaster-general, unless the circumstances of the weather, or the badness of the roads, or the occurrence of any accident, prevent the same; or if any driver or guard of any such coach, mail coach, or other carriage, shall not duly account to his employers for all monies received by them, then the driver or guard shall forfeit not less than 5*l.* nor more than 10*l.* and shall return the money embezzled; and, in case of non-payment, be committed to gaol for any time not exceeding six, nor less than three months.

In case the driver or guard shall use abusive or insulting language to any passenger, or shall insist on and exact more than the sum to which he is entitled, then the driver or guard shall forfeit not less than 5*s.* nor more than 40*s.*; or, in case of non-payment, be committed to gaol for any time not exceeding one month, nor less than three days.

Any passenger may require toll collectors to count the number of passengers, and measure the height of the luggage; and if any driver shall refuse to stop, or to permit the collector to count the number of passengers, and ascertain the height of the luggage, then the driver shall forfeit 5*l.*; and shall, if more passengers shall have been carried, or the luggage shall exceed the height, forfeit double the penalty imposed by this act for such offence; one half to belong to the toll collector, and the other half to the passenger; and if any toll collector shall neglect or refuse to make such examination, he shall forfeit 5*l.*; and if any person shall endeavour to evade such examination, by descending from such coach previous to its reaching any turnpike gate, and re-ascending after it has passed such turnpike gate, he shall forfeit 10*l.*

If the coachman shall permit any other person, without the consent of a proprietor, or against the consent of the passengers, to drive, or shall quit the box without reasonable occasion (although the reins be left in the hands of the passenger on the box); or, if the coachman shall, by furiously driving, or by any negligence or misconduct overturn the carriage, or in any manner endanger the persons or property of the passengers, or the property of the owners (unavoidable accidents excepted), such coachman shall forfeit any sum not exceeding 10*l.*

If any guard shall fire off the arms, either while such coach is going on the road, or going through or standing in any town, otherwise than for the defence of such coach, such person shall forfeit 5*l.*

If any person shall receive any sum for conniving at any offence, he shall forfeit 50*l.*; and, in default of payment, be committed to any house of correction for any period not exceeding three, nor less than one month.

All stage coaches (long-bodied coaches

Promissory notes payable to bearer on demand made out of Great Britain, shall not be negotiable, whether payable in Great Britain or not, unless duly stamped; and persons circulating the same are to forfeit 20*l.* for each; but this is not to extend to notes when made and payable only in Ireland. s. 99.

Annuities.] Releases and conveyances of annuities and rent-charges, on the repurchase thereof, are exempted from the ad valorem duty, and chargeable only with the ordinary duty on deeds.

Wills.] If any person shall take possession of, and in any manner administer any part of the personal estate and effects of the deceased, without obtaining probate or letters of administration, within six calendar months, such person shall forfeit 100*l.* and also 10*l.* per cent. on the amount of the stamp duty payable on such probate or administration. s. 37.

No ecclesiastical court shall grant probate or letters of administration without an affidavit, but which need not be stamped, that the estate and effects of the deceased, exclusive of trust property, but including of copyholds, and without deducting any thing for debts, are under a certain amount, to the best of the deponent's knowledge, information and belief, in order that the proper duty may be paid, s. 38. and if the officer neglect to take such affidavit he shall forfeit 10*l.* s. 39.

Where any person shall have estimated the estate to be of greater value than it shall afterwards have proved to be, and shall have paid too high a duty; if such persons shall produce the probate or letters of administration to the commissioners of stamps within six calendar months with a particular inventory, and valuation verified on oath, the commissioners may cancel the stamp, and make an allowance, as in the cases of spoiled stamps; or if the difference be considerable repay the same in money, at their discretion. s. 40.

Where any person shall have paid too little duty, the commissioners on affidavit of the value, may cause the probate or administration to be duly stamped on payment of the full duty, and of the further penalty payable by law for stamping deeds after execution, without any deduction or allowance of the stamp duty originally paid; but if the application be made within six calendar months after the true value shall be ascertained, and if it appear that it was in consequence of mistake or misapprehension, or not knowing some particular effects belonging to the deceased, the commissioners may remit the penalty, and cause the probate or administration to be stamped, on payment only of the sum wanting, s. 41. but in cases of administration on which too little duty has been paid at first, the commissioners shall not cause the same to be so stamped until the administrator shall have given full security to the ecclesiastical court to the full sum. s. 42.

If any executor or administrator shall not within six calendar months after discovery of the mistake, apply to the commissioners and pay what is wanting, he shall forfeit 100*l.* and pay 10*l.* per cent. on the amount wanting. s. 43.

The ecclesiastical court shall not call in and revoke any probate or letters of administration, on the ground of too high or too low a stamp duty having been paid, as heretofore; and if they so do, the commissioners shall not make any allowance whatsoever for the stamp duty. s. 44.

When in the case of letters of administration the proper stamp duty hath not been paid at first, and the administrator hath not been possessed of money sufficient either of his own or of the deceased to pay the requisite stamp duty; and where it may happen that executors or persons entitled to administration may before probate or administration, find the effects so circumstanced as not to be immediately got possession of, and may not have money sufficient either of their own or of the deceased to pay the duty, it shall be lawful for the commissioners on proof of the facts by affidavit to cause the probate or administration to be stamped, and to give credit for the duty, either upon payment of the penalty, or without, when too little duty has been paid, and either with or without the allowance of the duty already paid; upon security first given by the executor or administrator with two sureties in double the duty for payment within six calendar months, and interest at the rate of 10*l.* per cent. from the expiration of such period until payment, if any default be made therein, s. 45, but if at the expiration of such period it appear that effects have not been recovered, the commissioners may give further time, upon such conditions as they think expedient. s. 46.

But the probate or letters of administration so stamped on credit shall be deposited with the commissioners; subject nevertheless, to be produced in evidence by one of their officers at the expence of the executor or administrator as occasion shall require. s. 47.

The duty for which credit shall be given shall be a debt due to the crown, and paid by the executors or administrators in preference to any debt due from the estate of the deceased on pain of 500*l.* s. 41.

If before payment of the duty for which credit shall be given, it shall become necessary to take out letters of administration de bonis non, the commissioners may cause such administration to be stamped, in the same manner as if the duty had been paid, upon having the administration de bonis non deposited, and such further security as they think expedient. s. 49.

When it shall be proved by oath and vouch ete that an executor or administrator hath paid debts to such an amount as would have occasioned a less stamp duty, the commissioners may return the difference if claimed within three years after the date of the probate or administration; or if prevented by proceedings at law, or in equity, the commissioners of the treasury may allow further time. s. 51.

, Medicine duty.] Nothing in this, or any other act shall extend to charge with any stamp duties ginger-and peppermint lozenges or any other article of confectionary unless vended as medicines, nor to compel the person vending the same to take out a license. s. 54.

STAND, is a weight from two hundred and a half to three hundred of pitch. Mar. Dict. Cowell.

STANDARD. (from the Fr. estendart, &c. signum. vexillum.) In general signification, is an ensign in war; and it is used for the standing weight or measure of the king, because it standeth constant and immoveable. Britton. c. 30. See Weights and Measures.

STANDARDUS, True standard, or legal weight or measure. Cowell.

STANDEL. A young store oak-tree, which in time may make timber; and twelve such young trees are to be left standing in every acre of wood, at the felling thereof, by stat. 35 Hen. 8. c. 17.

STANDING-ARMY, not to be kept in time of peace, without consent of parliament. 1 W. & M. s. 2. c. 2.

The army is therefore only kept on foot by an annual act called the mutiny act: the last of which, 56 Geo. 3. c. 10. declares that it is judged necessary by his majesty, and this present parliament, that a body of forces should be continued for the safety of the united kingdom, the defiance of the pretensions of his majesty's crown, and the preservation of the balance of power in Europe, and that the whole number of such forces should consist of "one hundred and seventy-six thousand six hundred and fifteen effective officers and men," exclusive of his majesty's forces employed in the territorial possessions of the East India company, the foreign corps in British pay, and the embodied militia.

STANLAW. A word anciently used for a stony hill. Dobmed. Cowell.

STANNARIES, (stannaria, from the Lat. stannum.) Are the mines and works where the metal is got and purified, as in Cornwall and Devonshire. Cam. Brit. 199.

The stannary courts in Devonshire and Cornwall, for the administration of justice among the tinners therein, are courts of record, but of a private and exclusive nature. They are held before the lord warden and his substitutes, in virtue of a privilege granted to the workers in the tin mines there, to sue and be sued in their own courts, that they may not be drawn from their business, which is highly profitable to the public, by attending their law-suits in other courts. 4 Inst. 232.

The privileges of the tinners are confirmed by a charter, 33 Edw. I. and fully compounded by a private statute, 50 Edw. 3, which has since been explained by a public act, 18 Car. 1. c. 15. What relates to this article is only this: that all tinners and labourers in and about the stannaries, shall, during the time of their working therein, bona fide, be privileged from suits of any other courts, and be only impleaded in the stannary court in all matters, excepting pleas of land, life, and member. No writ of error lies from hence to any court in Westminster-hall, as was agreed by all the judges in 44th Eliz. 1 4 Inst. 231. But an appeal lies from the steward of the court to the under-warden, and from him to the lord-warden, and thence to the privy council of the prince of Wales, as duke of Cornwall, 4 Inst. 230. when he hath had livery or investiture of the same. 3 Bulstr. 183. And from thence the appeal lies to the king himself in the last resort. Dodsridge Hist. of Corn. 94.

STANNARIUS. A pewterer or dealer in tin; of or belonging to tin. Lit. Dict. Cowell.

STAPLE, (stapulum,) comes from the Fr. estape, i. e. forum cinerium, a market or staple for wines, which are the principal commodities of France; or rather from the Germ. stapulen, which signifieth to gather, or heap any thing together. In an old French book it is written, a Calais estape de la Laine, &c. i. e. the staple for wool. And with us it hath been a public mart appointed by law to be kept at the following places, viz. Westminster, York, Lincoln, Newcastle, Norwich, Canterbury, Chichester, Winchester, Exeter, Bristol, &c. A staple court was held at the west staple in Westminster, the bounds whereof began at Temple-Bar, and reached to Tothill; in other cities and towns the bounds are within the wall; and where there are no walls, they extend through all the towns; and the court of the mayor of the staple is governed by the law merchant in a summary way, which is the law of the staple. 4 Inst. 236. See stat. 27 Edw. 3. st. 2. The staple goods of England are wool, woolfel, leather, lead, tin, cloth, butter, cheese, &c. as appears by the statute 14 R. 2. c. 1. though some allow only the five first; and yet of late staple goods are generally understood to be such as are vendible, of any kind, and not subject to parish. 1 Blacks. 274.

STAR, (starrum, a contraction from the Heb. shater, a deed or contract.) Deeds, meluded,) carrying no parcels or laggage whatsoever, excepting in the inside, or in the front boot thereof, or in a boot behind, or under the body of such carriage; and where the top of each boot behind, when the coach is empty, is not more than six feet from the ground, having obtained a special licence for that purpose, and having the name of the owners, and the number of outside and inside passengers allowed painted thereon, shall be permitted to carry two outside passengers more than the number hereby limited.

Hackney coach stages are exempted from the operation of this act.

STAGE-PLAYS. See Theatres.

STAGIARIUS. A resident; and there is a distinction between residentiarius and stagiarius, for every canon installed to the privileges and profits of residence, was residentiaries; and while he actually kept such stated residence, he was stagiarius. Stagiari, to keep residence. Hence an old stager. Cowell.

STAGNES, (stagna.) Pools of standing water. 5 Eliz. c. 21. A pool consists of water and land; and therefore, by the name of stagnum, the water and land shall pass also. Inst. 5.

STAKE. It is part of the punishment of suicide to drive a stake through the body, see Felo de se and Homicide.

STAL-BOAT. A kind of fishing-boat, mentioned in 27 Eliz. c. 21.

STALKING. The going up gently step by step, to take game; and none shall stalk with bush or beast to any deer, except in his own forest or park, under the penalty of 10*l*. Stat. 19 H. 7. c. 11. See Game.

STALKERS. Certain fishing-nets. 13 R. 2. c. 20.

STALLAGE, (stallagium, from the Sax. steal. (i. e. stabulum statio.) Is a sum of money paid to the lord or owner of the soil for the liberty to erect stalls, or to remove a stall from one part of a fair to another. Palm. 77. This is payable, whether the goods are sold or not, and the owner of the soil is entitled to the same of common right, and is paid as a satisfaction for the use of the soil; trespass therefore will lie against any one who erects a stall within his diocese, but he cannot in such case distrain the goods as damage feasant. 1 Wils. 209. 115. 2 Str. 1038. 2 Black. Rep. 1116. 2 Ld. Raym. 1589.

STALLARIUS. Mentioned in historians, signifying præfectus stabuli; the same officer which we now call master of the horse. Cowell.

STAMPS. The stamp duties were first imposed in the early part of the reign of William the Third; but these and all the subsequent duties have been since repealed, and others imposed in lieu thereof; particularly by the stat. 55 Geo. 3. c. 184.

And if any person shall forge any stamp or die, or the impression thereof; or utter, or expose to sale any paper, &c. having such forged impression; or if any person shall get off any stamp that has been used, with intent to use the same on other paper, such person shall be guilty of felony without benefit of clergy. 55 G. 3. c. 184. s. 7.

The clauses in the stamp acts of most importance are the following:

By 44 Geo. 3 c. 98. no action at law, or information before justices of the peace, for penalties, shall, in future, be commenced but in the name of the attorney-general in England, or advocate for Scotland, or some officer of the stamp duties. s. 10.

And in any case where it shall appear to the commissioners upon oath or affirmation, that any instrument whatsoever, (except bills of exchange, promissory or other notes, drafts, orders, or receipts), hath been written on paper, not duly stamped either by accident or inadvertence, or from urgent necessity and without any intention to evade the duties, and such instrument shall be brought to be stamped within twelve months after the execution thereof, the commissioners may remit the penalty or any part thereof.

But by 35 Geo. 3. c. 55. s. 11. receipts may be stamped, if brought within fourteen days after date, on payment of a penalty of 5*d*. over and above the duty; and if brought within one calendar month on payment of a penalty of 10*l*. and the duty.

And by 37 Geo. 3. c. 136. the holder of any bill, note, draft, or order, stamped with a stamp of a different denomination than required, if of equal or superior value to the stamp required, may, if produced before it be payable be stamped on payment of the duty and 40*s*. penalty: but if produced after payable then on a penalty of 10*l*. s. 5, 6.

All fines shall go to his majesty. But the commissioners are to give such part as they think fit to any person who may inform or assist in the recovery. 44 Geo. 3. c. 98.

By 48 Geo. 3. c. 149, stamps appropriated to denote the duty charged upon any particular instrument, and bearing the name of such instrument on the face thereof, shall not be used for denoting any other duty of the same amount, or, if so used, the same shall be of no avail.

But by 55 Geo. 3. c. 184. in other cases, instruments having wrong stamps, but sufficient in value shall be valid.

By 48 Geo. 3. c. 149. In all conveyances the full consideration shall be truly set forth in words at length, and if the full consideration money shall not be truly expressed, the purchaser, and also the seller, shall forfeit 50*l.* and also be charged with the payment of five times the amount of the excess of duty which would have been payable in respect of the full consideration beyond the amount of duty actually paid. s. 22.

And if either of the parties give information, the party giving the information shall not only be indemnified, but also be rewarded out of the penalty, not exceeding one half; and any other person in like manner. s. 23.

And where the full consideration shall not be set forth, the purchaser may recover back from the seller so much as shall not be set forth, together with double costs. s. 24.

And if any attorney, solicitor, or other person, shall knowingly insert any other than the full consideration, he shall forfeit 500*l.* and being thereof convicted, shall also be from thenceforth disabled to practice; or, if done, in virtue of any public office, he shall also forfeit his office, and be thenceforth incapable of holding the same. s. 25.

But no one shall be liable to any penalty, disability, or forfeiture, unless the duty paid be less than would have been payable, if the full consideration had been truly set forth. s. 26.

Parties, on surrendering copyhold lands in court, are to deliver to the steward a note in writing, stating whether the surrender is for sale or not.

And until such note shall be delivered, the lord or lady, or steward, shall not take the proposed surrender, on pain of forfeiting 50*l.*; and where the surrender shall be upon a sale, if the steward neglect to insert the consideration upon the copy of court roll, in words at length, he shall forfeit 50*l.*; and, if upon sale, any person shall in the note state the surrender to be not upon a sale, he shall forfeit 100*l.*

And the lord or steward shall not inrol any surrender out of court, or deed, executed by commissioners of bankrupt, or under the powers contained in any will or act of parliament, or accept any presentment thereof, or admit any person under the same, unless such deed or surrender, or the memorandum of such surrender, shall be stamped with the duty charged thereon, on forfeiting the sum of 50*l.*

Penalty on lords and stewards of manors for taking surrenders, or granting admissions, &c. out of court, unless duty stamped, 50*l.*

Where the freedom of any city or company is obtained by servitude, the chamberlain, or other officer, is to enter the names of all persons bound or articled, with the names and abode of the masters, the apprentice fees, and date of the indentures, on forfeiture of 20*l.*: and the notice printed under all indentures is to be printed, on forfeiture of 10*l.* Ibid.

Public officers having in their custody any books or papers, which may tend to secure the stamp duties, or discover any frauds therein, are to permit the officer authorized to inspect, and take notes gratis, on penalty of 50*l.* Ibid.

Stamps spoiled, whether the instrument hath been executed or not, may, upon oath made thereof before the commissioners, be exchanged for new stamps, at the stamp office. 5 Geo. 3. c. 46.

And the commissioners in order to prevent any fraudulent claims, may make such rules *for regulating the method and limiting the time for cancelling stamps, or allowing other stamps in lieu of such as have been damaged, as they shall find convenient. 44 Geo. 3. c. 98. s. 17.

Also by 50 Geo. 3. c. 35. the commissioners of stamps may give other stamps for such instruments as may have been executed and signed upon improper stamps, and also for all such as shall after executed and signed be rendered useless by some mistake, if application for relief be made within two calendar months after the date of the instrument. s. 14.

And where the commissioners have the power of allowing and cancelling stamps, and giving others of the same description, they may, if they see fit, give stamps of any denomination, and of equal value. s. 15.

And instruments on stamps of equal or greater value, though not of the proper denomination, shall be deemed valid, except where the stamps appropriated are marked with the name thereof, (s. 16.) that is to say, such as receipts, bills, notes, and some other instruments.

And by the last general stamp act, 55 Geo. 3. c. 184. the following important provisions have been made.

Bills and Notes.] If any person shall sign, accept or pay, any bill, draft, order or note liable to the duties, without being duly stamped, he shall forfeit 50*l.* s. 11.

If any person shall issue any bill, draft or order or note, which shall bear date subsequent to the day on which it shall be issued, so that it shall not in fact become payable in two months if after date, or in sixty days, if after sight, without the proper stamp in such case directed to be used, he shall forfeit 100*l.* s. 12.

And if any person shall issue any bill, draft or order payable to bearer, upon any banker, dated on any subsequent day, or which shall not specify the place where it issued, unless stamped as a bill of exchange, such person shall forfeit 100*l.* Persons receiving such drafts are also to forfeit 20*l.* and bankers paying the same shall not only forfeit 100*l.* but be disallowed the money paid in their accounts against the parties. s. 13.

* The time limited by the commissioners is in town, 6 months, and in the country 12 months.

obligations, &c. were anciently called stars. 2 Black. 343. 4 V. 262.

STAR AND BENT. By 15 Geo. 2. c. 33. s. 6. persons cutting star or bent from the sand-hills on the north-west coasts, shall forfeit 20*s.* for the first offence, to be levied by distress; or in default, commitment for three months, and for the second or other offence, be committed to the house of correction for one year, and there be whipt and kept to hard labour. Persons in whose possession the same shall be found, shall be deemed the pullers, and punished as above for the first offences.

STAR-CHAMBER, (camera stellata, otherwise called Chamber des estoylles.) was a chamber at Westminster, so called, because at first the cieling thereof was adorned with images of gilded stars. And by 3 Hen. 7. c. 1. and 21 Hen. 8. c. 2. the chancellor, assisted by others there named, had power to punish routs, riots, forgeries, maintenances, embraceries, perjuries, and other such misdemeanors as were not sufficiently provided for by the common law, and for which the inferior judges were not so proper to give correction. But, by the stat. 16 Car. 1. c. 10. this court, of such indefinite powers, and all jurisdictions, power, and authority thereto belonging, have been abolished.

STATED DAMAGES. A court of equity cannot, any more than a court of law, relieve against a penalty, in the nature of stated or settled damages, by deed between the parties, as a rent of 5*l.* an acre for ploughing up ancient meadow. 2 Atk. 239. 4 Burr. 2228.

STATUS DE MANERIO. The state of a manor: all the tenants within the manor met in the court of their lord, to do their customary suit, and enjoy their right and usages; which was termed omnis status de manerio. Paroch. Antiq. 456.

STATUTE, (statutum.) A statute is a law enacted by the assent of the king, lords, and commons. These statutes are either declaratory of the common law, or remedial of some defects therein. Declaratory, where the old custom of the kingdom is almost fallen into disuse, or become disputable; in which case the parliament has thought proper, in perpetuum rei testimonium, and for avoiding all doubts and difficulties, to declare what the common law is and ever hath been. Remedial statutes are those which are made to supply such defects, and abridge such superfluities in the common law, as arise either from the general imperfection of all human laws, from change of time and circumstances, from the mistakes and unadvised determinations of unlearned, or even learned judges, or from any other cause whatsoever. And this being done, either by enlarging the common law where it was too narrow and circumscribed, or by restraining it where it was too lax and luxuriant, hath occasioned another subordinate division of remedial acts of parliament into enlarging and restraining statutes. Thus, clipping the current coin of the kingdom was an offence not sufficiently guarded against by the common law; therefore it was thought expedient, by statute 5 Eliz. c. 11. to make it high treason, which it was not at the common law; so that this was an enlarging statute. At common law also spiritual corporations might lease out their estates for any term of years, till prevented by the statute 13 Eliz. before-mentioned: this was therefore a restraining statute.

The rules to be observed with regard to the construction of statutes are principally these:

1. There are three points to be considered in the construction of all remedial statutes: the old law, the mischief, and the remedy: that is, 1, how the common law stood at the making of the act; 2, what the mischief was, for which the common law did not provide; and 3, what remedy the parliament hath provided to cure this mischief. And it is the business of the judges so to construe the act, as to suppress the mischief and advance the remedy. 3 Rep. 7. Co. Litt. 11. 42.

As, for instance, in the restraining statute of 13 Eliz. c. 10. By the common law, ecclesiastical corporations might let as long leases as they thought proper; the mischief was, that they let long and unreasonable leases, to the impoverishment of their successors: the remedy applied by the statute was by making void all leases by ecclesiastical bodies for longer terms than three lives, or twenty-one years. Now in the construction of this statute it is held, that leases, though for a longer time, if made by a bishop, are not void during the bishop's continuance in his see; or, if made by a dean and chapter, they are not void during the continuance of the dean: for the act was made for the benefit and protection of the successor, Co. Litt. 45. 3 Rep. 60. 10 Rep. 58. The mischief is therefore sufficiently suppressed by vacating them after the determination of the interest of the grantors; but the leases, during their continuance, being not within the mischief, are not within the remedy. 1 Black. 87.

2. A statute, which treats of things or persons of an inferior rank, cannot by any general words be extended to those of a superior. Thus a statute, treating of "deans, prebendaries, parsons, vicars, and others having spiritual promotion," is held not to extend to bishops, though they have spiritual promotion; deans being the highest persons named, and bishops being of a still higher order. 2 Rep. 46.

3. Penal statutes must be construed strictly. Thus the statute 1 Edw. 6. c. 12. having enacted that those who are convicted of stealing horses should not have the benefit of clergy, the judges conceived that this did not extend to him that should steal but one horse, and therefore procured a new act for that purpose in the following year. 2 & 3 Edw. 6. c. 33. And, to come nearer our own times, by the statute 14 Geo. 2. c. 6. stealing sheep, or other cattle, was made felony without benefit of clergy. But these general words, "or other cattle," being looked upon as much too loose to create a capital offence, the act was held to extend to nothing but mere sheep. And therefore, in the next sessions, it was found necessary to make another statute, 15 Geo. 2. c. 34. extending the former to bulls, cows, oxen, steers, bullocks, heifers, calves, and lambs by name. But where statutes use the plural number, a single instance in such cases will be comprehended; thus the statute 2 Geo. 2. c. 25. s. 3. enacts, that it shall be felony to steal any bank-notes, and it has been adjudged to be felony to steal one bank-note. Leach 1. Nassel's Case.

4. Statutes against frauds, which are generally called remedial statutes, are to be liberally and beneficially expounded. This may seem a contradiction to the last rule; most statutes against frauds being in their consequences penal. But this difference is here to be taken: where the statute acts upon the offender, and inflicts a penalty, as the pillory or a fine, it is then to be taken strictly; but when the statute acts upon the offence, by setting aside the fraudulent transaction,* here it is to be construed liberally. Upon this footing the statute of 13 Eliz. c. 5. which avoids all gifts of goods, &c. made to defraud creditors and others, was held to extend by the general words to a gift made to defraud the queen of a forfeiture. 3 Rep. 82.

5. One part of a statute must be so construed by another, that the whole may (if possible) stand: ut res magis valeat, quam pereat. As if land be vested in the king and his heirs by act of parliament, saving the right of A; and A has at that time a lease of it for three years: here A shall hold it for his term of three years, and afterwards it shall go to the king. For this interpretation furnishes matter for every clause of the statute to work and operate upon. But,

6. A saving, totally repugnant to the body of the act, is void. If, therefore, an act of parliament vests land in the king and his heirs, saving the right of all persons whatsoever; or vests the land of A in the king, saving the right of A: in either of these cases the saving is totally repugnant to the body of the statute, and (if good) would render the statute of no effect or operation; and therefore the saving is void, and the land vests absolutely in the king. 1 Rep. 47.

7. Where the common law and a statute differ, the common law gives place to the statute; and an old statute gives place to a new one. And this upon a general principle of universal law, that "leges posteriores priores contrarias abrogant." But this is to be understood only when the latter statute is couched in negative terms, or where its matter is so clearly repugnant, that it necessarily implies a negative. As if a former act says, that a juror upon such a trial shall have twenty pounds a-year; and a new statute afterwards enacts, that he shall have twenty marks: here the latter statute, though it does not express, yet necessarily implies a negative, and virtually repeals the former. For if twenty marks be made qualification sufficient, the former statute which requires twenty pounds is at an end, (Jenk. Cent. 2. 73.). But if both acts be merely affirmative, and the substance such that both may stand together, here the latter does not repeal the former, but they shall both have a concurrent efficacy. If by a former law an offence be indictable at the quarter-sessions, and a latter law makes the same offence indictable at the assizes: here the jurisdiction of the sessions is not taken away, but both have a concurrent jurisdiction, and the offender may be prosecuted at either, unless the new statute subjoins express negative words, as, that the offence shall be indictable at the assizes, and not elsewhere. 11 Rep. 63.

* And therefore it has been held, that the same words in a statute will bear different interpretations according to the nature of the suit or prosecution instituted upon them. As by the 9 Ann. c. 14. the statute against gaming; if any person shall lose at any time or sitting 10*l.* and shall pay it to the winner, he may recover it back within three months; and if the loser does not within that time, any other person may sue for it, and treble the value besides. So where an action was brought to recover back fourteen guineas, which had been won and paid after a continuance at play, except an interruption during dinner, the court held the statute was remedial, as far as it prevented the effects of gaming, without inflicting a penalty, and therefore, in this action, they considered it one time or sitting; but they said, if an action had been brought by a common informer for the penalty, they would have construed it strictly in favour of the defendant, and would have held, that the money had been lost at two sittings. 2 Bl. Rep. 1226.

8. If a statute, that repeals another, is itself repealed afterwards, the first statute is hereby revived, without any formal words for that purpose. So when the statutes of 26 and 35 Hen. 8. declaring the king to be the supreme head of the church, were repealed by a statute 1 and 2 P. & M. and this latter statute was afterwards repealed by an act of 1 Eliz. there needed not any express words of revival in queen Elizabeth's statute, but these acts of king Henry were impliedly and virtually revived. 4 Inst. 325.

9. Acts of parliament derogatory from the power of subsequent parliaments bind not. So that the statute 11 Hen. 7. c. 1. which directs that no person for assisting a king de facto, shall be attainted of treason by act of parliament or otherwise, is held to be good only as to common prosecutions for high treason; but will not restrain or clog any parliamentary attainder. Because the legislature, being in truth the sovereign power, is always of equal, always of absolute authority: it acknowledges no superior upon earth, which the prior legislature must have been, if its ordinances could bind a subsequent parliament. 4 Inst. 43.

10. Lastly, acts of parliament that are impossible to be performed are of no validity: and if there arise out of them collaterally any absurd consequences, manifestly contradictory to common reason, they are, with regard to those collateral consequences, void. But if the parliament will positively enact a thing to be done which is unreasonable, there is no power in the ordinary forms of the constitution that is vested with authority to control it; for, where the main object of a statute is unreasonable, if the judges were at liberty to reject it, it would be to set the judicial power above that of the legislature, which would be subversive of all government. But where some collateral matter arises out of the general words, and happens to be unreasonable, there the judges are in decency to conclude that this consequence was not foreseen by the parliament, and therefore they are at liberty to expound the statute by equity, and only quoad hoc disregard it. Thus, if an act of parliament gives a man power to try all causes that arise within his manor of D., yet, if a cause should arise in which he himself is party, the act is construed not to extend to that, because it is unreasonable that any man should determine his own quarrel. 3 Rep. 118. But if we could conceive it possible for the parliament to enact, that he should try as well his own causes as those of other persons, there is no court that has power to defeat the intent of the legislature, when couched in such evident and express words, as leave no doubt whether it was the intent of the legislature or no. 1 Black. 91.

STATUTE OF FRAUDS. By stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. all leases, estates, interests of freehold, or terms of years, or any uncertain interest in lands created by livery and seisin only, or by parol, and not put in writing, and signed by the parties or their agents lawfully authorized, shall have the effect of estates at will only, any consideration for making any such parol leases or estates, or former usage to the contrary notwithstanding. s. 1.

Except leases not exceeding the term of three years, whereupon the rent reserved shall amount unto two third parts of the full value. s. 2.

Also, no leases, estates, or interests, either of freehold or terms of years, or any uncertain interest, not being copyhold or customary, shall be assigned, granted, or surrendered, unless it be by deed or note in writing, signed by the party or the agent thereunto authorized by writing or by act or by operation of law. s. 3.

No action shall be brought whereby to charge any executor or administrator, upon any special promise to answer damages out of his own estate, or whereby to charge the defendant upon any special promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriages of another person, or to charge any person upon any agreement made upon consideration of marriage, or upon any contract or sale of lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or any interest in or concerning them, or upon any agreement that is not to be performed within the space of one year from the making thereof, unless the agreement upon which such action shall be brought, or some memorandum or note thereof shall be in writing, signed by the party to be charged therewith, or some other person by him thereunto lawfully authorized. s. 4.

No contract for the sale of any goods, wares, and merchandizes, for the price of 10*l.* sterling or upwards, shall be allowed to be good, except the buyer shall accept part of the goods so sold, and actually receive the same, or give something in earnest to bind the bargain, or in part of payment; or that some note or memorandum, in writing, of the said bargain, be made and signed by the parties to be charged, or their agents thereunto lawfully authorized. s. 5. See also Agreement, Frauds, and Wills.

STATUTE-MERCHANT. A statute-merchant is a bond of record, acknowledged before the clerk of the statutes-merchant, and lord mayor of the city of London, or two merchants assigned for that purpose; and before the mayors of other cities and towns, or the bailiff of any borough, &c. sealed with the seal of the debtor and the king, upon condition, that if the obligor pays not the debt at the day, execution may be awarded against his body, lands, and goods, and the obligee shall hold the lands to him, his heirs and assigns, till the debt is levied. Terms de Ley. Stat. Acton Burnel, 11 Ed. 1. and stat. de Mercatoribus, 13 Ed. 1. stat. 3.

Statute-merchants were contrived for the security of merchants only, to provide a speedy remedy to recover their debts; but they were afterwards used by others who did not follow merchandize, and it has therefore become one of the common assurances of the kingdom. Bridg. 21. Owen 82.

STATUTE STAPLE. Is a bond of record, acknowledged before the mayor of the staple, in the presence of all or one of the constables; to this end, says the statute, there shall be a seal ordained, which shall be affixed to all obligations made on such recognizance acknowledged in the staple; this seal of the staple is the only seal the statute requires to attest this contract; but it is no more under the power or disposal of the mayor than that appointed by the statute-merchant; for though the statute appoints him the custody of it, yet it is in such a manner, that he cannot affix it to any obligation without their consent, it being to remain in the mayor's hands, under the security of their own seals. 2 Rol. Abr. 466. Stat. 27 Edw. 3. c. 9.

There is also a recognizance in nature of statute staple, which, as the words of the act declare, is the same with the former, only acknowledged under other persons; for, as the statute runs, the chief justices of the king's bench and common pleas, or in their absence, out of term, the mayor of the staple at Westminster, and the recorder of London jointly together, shall have power to take recognizances for payment of debt in the form set down in the statute; in this, as in the former cases, the king appoints a seal to attest the contract. 23 Hen. 8. c. 6. Co. Lit. 290. a. 4 Inst. 238. 2 Rol. Abr. 466. Co. Ent. 12.

But these recognizances both of the merchant and the staple, though sometimes referred to in argument, are now fallen into disuse, and the security by warrant of attorney taken in preference.

STATUTES MERCHANT AND STAPLE. He that is in possession of lands on a statute-merchant, or staple, is called tenant by statute-merchant, or statute staple, during the time of his possession. 27 Ed. 3. 2 Black. 160.

STATUTES OF A CORPORATION. An incident to a corporation as soon as it is duly erected, and which is annexed of course, is, to make bye-laws, or private statutes, for the better government of the corporation; which are binding upon themselves, unless contrary to the laws of the land, and then they are void. This is included by law in the very act of incorporation. 1 Black. 475.

STATUTO MERCATORIO. The writ for imprisoning him that had forfeited a statute-merchant bond until the debt was satisfied. Reg. Orig. 146. 148.

STATUTO STAPULÆ. A writ that lay to take the body to prison, and seize upon the lands and goods of one who had forfeited the bond called statute staple. Reg. Orig. 151.

STATUTUM DE LABORARIIS. An ancient writ for the apprehending of such labourers as refused to work according to statute. Reg. Judic. 27.

STATUTUM SESSIONUM. The statute sessions. A meeting in every hundred of constables and householders, by custom, for the ordering of servants, and debating of differences between the masters and servants, rating of servants wages, and the like. 5 Eliz. cap. 4.

STAURUM. Any store or standing stock of cattle, provision, &c. Cowell.

STEALING. Is the fraudulent taking away of another man's goods, with an intent to steal them, against or without the will of him whose goods they are. Cowell. See Larceny.

STEALING AN HEIRESS. See Abduction.

STEORESMAN. The same with the stiremannus, or sturemannus. Cowell.

STERLING, (sterlingum.) Money current within this kingdom. It took its name from this: that there was a pure coin stamped first in England by the Easterlings, or merchants of East Germany, by the command of king John; and Hoveden writes it esterling. Lowndes 14.

STEWARD, (senescallus, compounded of the Sax. steda, i. e. room, or stead and weard, a ward or keeper.) Is as much as to say a man appointed in my place or stead, and hath many applications, but always denotes an officer of chief account within his jurisdiction. The greatest of these officers is the lord high steward of England; the power of this officer being very great, of late the office of high steward of England hath not been granted to any one, only pro hac vice, either for the trial of a peer of the realm on an indictment for a capital offence; or for the determination of the pretensions of those who claim to hold by grand serjeanty, to do certain honourable services to the king at his coronation, &c. for both which purposes he holds a court, and proceeds according to the laws and customs of England; and he to whom this office is granted must be of nobility and a lord of parliament. 4 Inst. 58, 59. Crompt. Jurisd. 84. 13 Hen. 8. 11. 2 Hawk. P. C. 5. But when the special business for which he is appointed is once ended, his commission expires. Lex Constitution, 170.

There is a lord steward of the household, mentioned in stat. 24 Hen. 8. cap. 13. whose name was changed to that of great master of the household, anno 32 Hen. 8. But this statute was repealed by 1 Mar. cap. 4. and the office of lord steward of the household revived. He is the chief officer of the king's court, to whom is committed the care of the king's house; he has authority over all officers and servants of the household, except those belonging to the chapel, chamber, and stable; and the palace royal is exempted from all jurisdiction of any court but only of the lord steward, or, in his absence, of the treasurer and comptroller of the household, with the steward of the Marshalsea, who by virtue of their offices, without any commission, hear and determine all treasons, murders, felonies, breaches of the peace, &c. committed in the king's palace. Besides the treasurer and comptroller, the lord steward hath under him a cofferer, several clerks of the green cloth, &c. He attends the king's person at the beginning of parliaments, and is a white staff officer, which he breaks over the hearse on the death of the king, and thereby discharges all officers under him. Fleta, lib. 2, and F. N. B. 241. In the liberty of Westminster, an officer is chosen and appointed, called high steward, and there is a deputy steward of Westminster; and the word steward is of so great diversity, that in most corporations, and all houses of honour, an officer is found of this name and authority. 4 Black. Com. 258. 260.

STEWS, (from the Fr. estuves, i. e. thermæ balneum.) Are those places which were permitted in England to women of professed incontinency, and who for hire would prostitute themselves to all comers: so called, because dissolute persons are wont to prepare themselves for licentious acts by bathing. These stews were suppressed by king Henry 8, about the year 1546. Cowell.

STICA. A brass Saxon coin, of the value of half a farthing, four of them making a helfing. Ibid.

STICK OF EELS. A quantity or measure of twenty-five. A bind of eels contains ten sticks, and each stick twenty-five eels. Stat. of Weights and Measures.

STICKLER. An inferior officer who cuts wood within the king's parks of Clarendon. Cowell.

STILYARD, STEELYARD, otherwise called the Style-House, in the parish of Allhallows, in London, was by authority of parliament assigned to the merchants of the Hanse and Almaine, or Easterling merchants, to have their abode in for ever, with other tenements, rendering to the mayor of London a certain yearly rent. 14 Ed. 4. 19 H. 7. c. 32. and 22 H. 8. c. 8. 1 Ed. 6. c. 13.

STINT, common without. There are commons without stint, and which last all the year. By the statute of Merton, however, and other subsequent statutes, the lord of the manor may inclose so much of the waste as he pleases, for tillage or wood ground, provided he leaves common sufficient for such as are entitled thereto. 2 Black. 34.

STIPULATION in the Admiralty Courts. The first process in these courts is frequently by arrest of the defendant's person; when they take recognizances or stipulation of certain fidejussors in the nature of bail, and, in case of default, may imprison both them and their principal. 3 Black. 108, 109.

STIREMANNUS, (sturemannus, Sax. steor-man.) A pilot of a ship, or steersman. Cowell.

STIRPES, distribution per. Under the statute of distributions it will sometimes happen that personal estates are divided per capita, and sometimes per stirpes; whereas the common law knows no other rule of succession but that per stirpes only. They are divided per capita to every man an equal share, when all the claimants claim in their own rights, as in equal degree of kindred, and not jure representationis, in the right of another person. As if the next of kin be the intestate's three brothers A. B. and C. here his estate is divided into three equal portions, and distributed per capita, one to each. But if one of these brothers (A.) had been dead, leaving three children and another (B.) leaving two, then the distribution must have been per stirpes, viz. one third to A.'s three children, another third to B.'s two children, and the remaining third to C. the surviving brother. Yet if C. had also been dead, without issue, then A.'s and B.'s five children being all in equal degree to the intestate, would take in their own rights per capita, viz. each of them one fifth part. Prec. Chan. 54. 2 Black. 517.

STIRPES, succession in. The lineal descendants, in infinitum, of any person deceased, shall represent their ancestor, that is, shall stand in the same place as the person himself would have done, had he been living. 2 Black. 217.

STOCK AND STOVEL. A forfeiture where any one is taken carrying stipites & pabulum out of the woods; for stock signifieth sticks, and stovel pabulum. Cowell.

STOCK or STOKE. Syllables added to the names of places, from the Sax. Spocc. i. e. stipe, truncus: as Woodstock, Basingstoke. Ibid.

STOCK AND FAMILY. If lands were devised generally to a stock or family, it shall be understood of the heir principal of the house. Hob. 33.

STOCKJOBBERS. All stockjobbing not authorized by act of parliament, or by charter, or used by obsolete charters, shall be void, and the undertakings are declared nuisances. Stat. 6 Geo. 1. c. 18.

All præmiums to deliver or receive, accept or refuse, any public stock, or share therein, and contracts in nature of wagers, putts and refusals relating to the value of the stock, shall be void; and the præmiums returned, or may be recovered by action with double costs; and the persons entering into or executing any such contract, shall forfeit 500*l.* No money shall be given to compound any difference, for not delivering or transferring stock, or not performing contracts; but the whole money agreed is to be paid, and the stock transferred on pain of 100*l.* Persons buying, on refusal or neglect to transfer at the day, may buy the like quantity of stock of any other person, and recover the damage of the first contractor. And contracts for sale of any stock, where contractors are not actually possessed of or intitled unto the same, to be void; and the parties agreeing to sell, &c. incur a penalty of 500*l.* Brokers making agreements, &c. and doing contrary, are also liable to penalties. But this act not to hinder lending money on stocks, or contracts for redelivering or transferring thereon, so as no præmium be paid for the loan more than legal interest. Stat. 7 Geo. 2. c. 8. Made perpetual by 10 Geo. 2. c. 8. See Brokers and Felony.

STOCKS, (cippus.) A wooden engine to put the legs of offenders in, for the securing of disorderly persons, and by way of punishment in divers cases ordained by statute. And it is said that every vill within the precincts of a torn is indictable for not having a pair of stocks, and shall forfeit 5*l.* Kitch. 13.

STOCKLAND AND BONDLAND. In the manor of Wadhurst, in Sussex, there are two sorts of copyhold estates, viz. Stockland and Bondland, descendable by custom in several manors: as if a man be first admitted to stockland, and afterwards to bondland, and dies seised of both, his eldest son and heir shall inherit both estates; but if he be admitted first to bondland, and after to the other, and of these dieth seised, his youngest son shall inherit: and bondland held alone, descends to the youngest son. 2 Leon. 55.

STOLA. A garment formerly worn by priests, like unto those called hoods. And sometimes it is taken for the archiepiscopal pall. Eadmer. cap. 188. Also a vestment which matrons wore. Cowell.

STOLEN GOODS. By statute 4 Geo. 1. c. 11. whoever shall take a reward under the pretence of helping any one to stolen goods, shall suffer as the felon who stole them; unless he causes such principal felon to be apprehended and brought to trial, and also gives evidence against them.

By 6 Geo. 1. c. 23. persons prosecuting to conviction any person taking reward for helping to stolen goods, not having apprehended the felon, shall be entitled to a reward of 40*l. s.* 9, 10.

By 25 Geo. 2. c. 36. all persons advertising a reward, with no questions asked, for the return of things stolen or lost, or to pay the pawnbroker any money lent thereon, and the printer, shall respectively forfeit 50*l.*

By 29 Geo. 2. c. 30. buyers or receivers of lead, iron, copper, brass, bell-metal, or solder, knowing the same to be stolen, if convicted, shall be transported for fourteen years.

A justice may issue a search-warrant; and suspected persons found with any materials, in the night, may be apprehended by the parish officers or watchmen, and carried before two justices; the goods are to be advertised, and, till claimed, to be deposited in the hands of the churchwardens or overseers; if not claimed in thirty days they are to be sold, and the produce divided between the officer and the poor. Ibid.

Persons to whom such goods shall be offered for sale or pawn, shall, on suspicion, seize the offender and carry him before a justice, on pain of being deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and forfeiting, for the first offence 20*s.* for the second 40*s.* and for every subsequent offence 4*l.* Ibid.

Persons having such stolen materials in their possession, and not accounting satisfactorily for the same, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and forfeit 40*s.* for the first offence, for the second 4*l.* and for every other 6*l.* Ibid.

Offenders convicting the buyers or receivers of such stolen materials are entitled to a pardon. Ibid.

The forfeitures go half to the poor, and half to the informer, to be levied by distress and sale; and for want thereof the party shall be imprisoned, for the first offence, one month; for the second, two months; and for every other offence, at the discretion of the sessions. Ibid.

By 22 Geo. 3. c. 58. every person buying or receiving stolen goods shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and prosecuted accordingly.

Justices may grant search-warrants to discover stolen goods; and persons in whose custody they are found shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor. Ibid.

Constables may apprehend persons suspected of having any stolen goods between sun-setting and sun-rising, and, on conviction, they may be imprisoned not more than six nor less than three months. Ibid.

Persons offering stolen goods to be pawned or sold, shall be taken before a justice; and persons, under fifteen years of age, charged with felony within clergy, discovering two receivers, shall be entitled to his majesty's pardon. Ibid.

But this act shall not repeal any former law for punishing such offenders. Ibid. See Felony.

STONE. A weight of fourteen pounds, used for weighing of wool. A stone of wax is eight pounds; and in London the stone of beef is no more. 11 Hen. 7. c. 4. Cowell.

STORES. By 9 and 10 Will. 3. c. 41. no warlike or naval stores, except for the king's use, shall be made with the king's marks, on forfeiture of the goods and 200*l.* with costs; and the like penalty is inflicted on persons in whose custody such stores are found, unless a certificate, under the hand of his majesty's commissioners, be produced.

Commissioners of the navy, ordnance, or victualling-office, may sell any of the stores so marked, and the buyer shall have a certificate thereof, expressing the quantities. Ibid.

But this is not to hinder any chief commander, at sea, from lending any of his majesty's stores to any merchant ship in distress, so they be restored; and the borrower is to have a certificate of the same. Ibid.

By 9 Geo. 1. c. 8. persons having timber marked with the broad arrow in their custody, or concealing the same, shall suffer according to 9 & 10 Will. 3. c. 41.

Naval stores and iron are prohibited to be exported, unless pre-emption be first offered to the commissioners of the navy. c. 35.

By 39 & 40 Geo. 3. c. 89. every person (not being a contractor) who shall sell or receive any new stores of war, or who shall conceal them, shall be deemed a receiver of stolen goods, and as such transported for fourteen years, unless he produces on the trial a certificate from the navy board, ordnance, or victualling. s. 1.

Persons in whose custody shall be found canvas or buntin, with a serpentine blue streak (not being charged to be new, or not more than one-third worn), and persons who shall be convicted of any offence contrary to 9 & 10 Will. 3. shall, besides the forfeiture thereby imposed, suffer corporal punishment; but the judge or justice may mitigate the penalty of 200*l.* as they see cause. s. 2.

Nothing herein, or in the act of Will. 3. shall exempt contractors or others, except so far as concerns naval stores, which shall not have been before delivered into the king's stores, unless they have been sold or returned by the commissioners. s. 3.

If any person shall deface any mark, denoting the property of the crown, in any stores, or shall employ any person so to do, he shall be guilty of felony, and transported for fourteen years. s. 4.

If any person convicted of any offence contrary to this act, for which he shall not have been transported, or contrary to the act of Will. 3. shall be convicted of a second offence, which would not, as the first, subject him to transportation, he shall be transported for fourteen years. s. 5.

Persons returning from transportation, under this act, shall suffer as felons without clergy. s. 6.

But the court may mitigate the punishment of transportation by pillory, whipping, fine, or imprisonment; and fines are to be applied, one half to the informer, and one half to the king. s. 7.

If any person shall discover to the navy, ordnance, or victualling boards, or apprehend any offender guilty of stealing or embezzling his majesty's stores, or of any offence against the act of Will. 3. or this, which shall not be prosecuted in a summary way, he shall, on conviction, receive a reward of 20*l.* over his share of the penalty, if not more than that sum. s. 8.

If any dispute shall arise as to the title to such reward, it shall be determined by any of the commissioners of the boards. s. 9.

Reward shall be paid on certificate from the officer of the court where the offender shall be tried, for which he may charge 5*s.* s. 10.

Any commissioner of the navy, ordnance, or victualling, or any justice of the peace, may grant warrants for searching places, when oath is made that there is reason to suspect king's stores are concealed (and if any stores or goods, marked as hereinbefore, or the act of Will. 3. mentioned, shall be found, the offender shall be dealt with according to law); and if upon such search, or any seizure of stores or goods marked as aforesaid, any not marked shall be found, suspected to belong to the king, and the party shall not give a satisfactory account thereof, they shall be forfeited, and he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor. s. 11.

Persons deputed by the commissioners of the navy, ordnance, or victualling, may detain any craft in which may be suspected to be contained any articles stolen from his majesty's stores, and the parties, who shall be dealt with according to law respecting marked stores; and those not marked, suspected to belong to the crown, not satisfactorily accounted for, shall be forfeited, and the party deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, (see s. 11.); and if the person be convicted of stealing marked articles, or adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor with respect to unmarked ones, the craft in which found shall be forfeited. s. 12.

Persons, so deputed, may detain any craft, in which may be suspected to be contained any articles stolen from his majesty, and the parties, who shall be dealt with according to law, respecting marked stores; and those not marked, suspected to belong to his majesty, and not satisfactorily accounted for, shall be forfeited, and the party be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor. s. 13.

And if the person be convicted of stealing marked articles, or adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor, with respect to unmarked ones, the craft in which found shall be forfeited. Ibid.

Persons so deputed, or any police or peace officer, may apprehend persons suspected of having stolen articles, and may seize the articles, and convey them and the parties before a justice, and the like proceedings shall be had as with respect to stores found in any craft. s. 13.

Articles herein declared to be forfeited, or the parties not giving a satisfactory account of them, shall be returned into his majesty's stores, and applied for his use, unless proof be made within three months to the contrary. s. 14.

The commissioner or justice, by whom any craft shall be adjudged to be forfeited, shall issue his warrant to the officers of the customs for the sale thereof, who shall cause it and the furniture to be sold publicly; and the produce shall be paid to the commissioner or justice, and disposed of, one half to the seizer of the craft, and the other to the treasurer of the navy if naval stores, or the treasurer of the ordnance if ordnance stores. s. 15.

Persons guilty of misdemeanors, shall forfeit, for the first offence, 40*s.*; for the second, 5*l.*; for the third, 10*l.*; which may be levied by distress; to be applied, one half to the informer, and one half to the navy or ordnance board; and if distress cannot be found, the offender, who shall be kept in custody, shall be committed for three months. s. 16.

Adjudications in misdemeanors shall be certified to the next general or quarter sessions, and shall be final. s. 17.

Any commissioner of the navy, ordnance, or victualling, or justice of the peace, may determine any complaint against persons, not being contractors, for unlawfully selling or receiving stores not exceeding 20*s.* value, and may fine the offenders 10*l.* s. 18.

Which fine may be levied by distress, and applied, one half to the informer, and one half to the navy board, or ordnance; and if sufficient distress cannot be found, the offender may be committed to the common gaol, or, in lieu of the fine, may be kept to hard labour for three months: the commissioner or justice shall pay over the fines received within thirty days, or forfeit 50*l.*; and double costs by action, half to the king and half to the informer. Ibid.

The fine of 10*l.* may be mitigated to one half, besides expences. s. 19.

If in lieu of a fine the offender be imprisoned, the informer shall receive 5*l.* reward from the navy or ordnance board, upon production of a certificate from the commissioner or justices who convicted him. s. 20.

But no summary proceedings are to be had before any justice without the consent of the commissioners of the navy, ordnance, or victualling, Ibid.

Persons thinking themselves aggrieved by any judgment touching stores under the value of 20*s.* may appeal to the quarter-sessions; but no certiorari. s. 21, 22.

Witnesses neglecting to attend, shall forfeit 10*l.* s. 23.

Nothing herein shall prevent parties accused of selling or receiving stores under the value of 20*s.* from being prosecuted as receivers of stolen goods, so as offenders be not twice punished for the same offence. s. 24.

The commissioners may sell marked stores, and the buyers may keep them without incurring any penalty, on producing a certificate of their having bought them. s. 25.

Penalty for giving or publishing false certificates 200*l.* and corporal punishment (as under s. 2.), and penalty to go half to the king and half to the informer. s. 26.

If any person shall be sued for any seizure, and shall prove on the trial that the stores were marked, or if not marked might be suspected to belong to the king, or if the plaintiff shall not prove that he had a certificate, the defendant shall be acquitted. s. 27.

The commissioners shall have the benefit given to justices of the peace by 7 Jac. 1. c. 5. 21 Jac. 1. c. 12. and 24 Geo. 2. c. 44. and the peace officers acting under them, shall have the protection of the said acts. s. 28.

The act is to extend to Scotland, and the offenders there are to be tried according to the forms in trials for theft or reset of theft or in a summary way, according to the offence. s. 29—35.

If any person shall forswear himself, he shall be liable to the pains of wilful perjury. s. 36.

STOTARIUS, he who had the care of the stud or breed of young horses. Leg. Alfred, c. 9. Cowell.

STOTH, Nativi de W. solvit quilibet pro filiabus suis Maritandis Gerson Domino, & Overlop pro filiabus corruptis, & Stoth, & alia servitia, &c. Cowell.

STOW, (Sax. i. e. locus) a place, and is often joined to other words; as Godstow is a place dedicated to God. Ibid.

STOWAGE, the room where goods are laid; or, it is the money paid for such places. Ibid.

STRAITS, a narrow sea, between two lands, or an arm of the sea. Ibid.

STRAND, (Sax.) any shore, or bank of a sea, or great river; hence the street in the west suburbs of London, which lay next the shore, or bank of the Thames, is called the Strand. Ibid.

STRANDED, (from the Sax. strand) is when a ship is by tempest or ill steerage run on ground, and so perishes. 17 Car. 1. c. 14. See Ships and Wreck.

STRANGER, (derived from the Fr. estranger, alienus) signifies generally, in our language, a man born out of the realm, or unknown. In the law it hath a special signification for him that is not privy to an act: as a stranger to a judgment, is he to whom a judgment doth not belong; and in this sense it is directly contrary to party or privy. Old Nat. Br. 128.

STRAY, or going astray of beasts and cattle. See Estray.

STREAM-WORKS, works in the Stannaries. 27 H. 8. c. 23.

STREEMAN, (Sax.) robustus, vel potens vir. Cowell.

STREETS. See Felony and London.

STREPITUS JUDICIALIS, the circumstances of noise and crowd, and other turbulent formalities at a process or trial in a public court of justice. Cowell.

STRETWARD, was an officer of the streets, like our surveyor of the highways, or rather a scavenger. Ibid.

STRIKING in the king's superior courts of justice, in Westminster hall, or at the assizes, subjects the offender to the loss of the right-hand, imprisonment for life, and forfeiture of goods and chattels, and of the profits of his lands during life. Stierneff. P. C. 28. 3 Inst. 140, 141.

Maliciously striking in the king's palace, wherein his royal person resides, whereby blood is drawn, is punishable by perpetual imprisonment, and fine, at the king's pleasure, and also with loss of the offender's right-hand; the solemn execution of which sentence is described at length in the statute 33 H. 8. c. 12. 4 Black. 125, 273. See Affrays, Church, Felony, and Palaces.

STRIP, (strepitus) destruction, mutilation, from the Fr. estropier. Cowell.

STROND, an old Saxon word, signifying the same as strand. Ibid.

STRUMPET, (meretrix) a whore, harlot, or courtesan: heretofore used for an addition. Ibid.

STRYKE, the eighth part of a seam or quarter of corn, a stryke or bushel. Ibid.

STUD OF MARES, is a company of mares kept for breeding of colts: from the Sax. stodmare, i. e. equa ad fœtum. Ib.

STULTIFYING ONE'S SELF. It hath been said, that a non compos himself, though he be afterwards brought to a right mind, shall not be permitted to alledge his own insanity, in order to avoid his grant, for that no man shall be allowed to stultify himself, or plead his own disability; but late opinions, feeling the inconvenience of this rule, have in many points endeavoured to restrain it. Comb. 469. 3 Mod. 312, 311. 1 Equ. Cas. Abr. 279.

And it seems to be settled, that their acts are only binding, in case they be afterwards agreed to, when their imbecility ceases. 4 Black. 291, 292.

STURGEON. The king shall have sturgeon taken in the sea, or elsewhere within the realm, except in certain places privileged by the king. 17 Ed. 2. s. 1. c. 11.

STYLE, (appello) is to call, name, or intitle one; as the style of the king of England is George the third, by the grace of God, of the united kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland king.

There is an old and new style used in the dates of things abroad, the latter being eleven days before the former.

The new style was established by 24 Geo. 2. c. 23. And the opening of commons, and doing of other things depending on any moveable feast, must be according to this style. 25 Geo. 2. c. 30.

SUB-DEACON, an ancient officer in the church, made by the delivery of an empty platter and cup by the bishop, and of a pitcher, bason, and towel, by the archdeacon: his office was to wait on the deacon with the linen on which the body, &c. was consecrated, and to receive and carry away the plate with the offerings at sacraments, the cup with the wine and water in it, &c. Cowell.

SUBJECTION, (civil.) Civil subjection is the obligation whereby the inferior is constrained by the superior to act contrary to what his own reason and inclination would suggest. Obedience to the laws in being is undoubtedly a sufficient extenuation of civil guilt before the municipal tribunal. 4 Black. 28.

SUBJECTS, (subditos) are the members of the commonwealth under the king their head. Wood's Inst. 22.

SUBINFEUDATION, was where the inferiors, in imitation of their superiors, began to carve out and grant to others minuter estates than their own, to be held of themselves, and were so proceeding downwards, in infinitum, till the superior lords observed, that by this method of subinfeudation they lost all their feodal profits, of wardships, marriages, and escheats, which fell into the hands of the mesne or middle lords, who were the immediate superiors of the tenant, or him who occupied the land. This occasioned the statute of Westm. 3. or quia emptores, 18 Ed. 1. to be made; which directs, that upon all sales or feoffments of lands, the feoffee shall hold the same, not of his immediate feoffor, but of the chief lord of the fee of whom such feoffor himself held it. And from hence it is held, that all manors existing at this day must have existed by immemorial prescription; or, at least, ever since the 18 Ed. 1. when the statute of quia emptores was made. 2 Black. 91, 92.

SUBJUGALIS, any beast carrying the yoke. Cowell.

SUBLEGERIUS, (from the Sax. syblegger, i. e. incestus) one who is guilty of incestuous incontinence. Ibid.

SUB-MARSHAL, an officer in the marshalsea, who is deputy to the chief marshal of the king's house, commonly called the knight marshal, and hath the custody of the prisoners there. He is otherwise termed under marshal. Cromp. Juris. 104.

SUBMISSION. See Arbitrament.

SUBNERVARE, to cut the sinews of the legs or thighs, to ham-string: and it was an old custom in England, meretrices & impudicas mulieres subnervare. Cowell.

SUBORNATION, (subornatio) a secret under-hand preparing, instructing, or bringing in a false witness; hence subornation of perjury is the preparing or corrupt alluring to perjury. See Perjury.

SUBPŒNA, is a writ whereby the party is called to appear at the day and place assigned, that is, under a penalty of 100*l.*; and it is the leading process in courts of equity, to oblige the defendant to appear and answer; and by 45 Geo. 3. c. 92. the service of a subpœna on parties or witnesses in any part of the united kingdom, shall be valid, to compel an appearance in any other part, the expences being tendered. West. Symb. par. 2. Cromp. Jurisdict. 32.

In this writ the 100*l.* penalty is inserted only in terrorem, being never levied; though if a witness, served with a subpœna, refuse to appear, on tender of his charges, the party injured thereby may recover 10*l.* damages, and other recompence by action of the case; 5 Eliz. c. 9, 12. or the court may issue an attachment for the contempt. 3 Black. 382.

SUBPŒNA AD TESTIFICANDUM, a writ or process, to bring in witnesses to give their testimony in any cause, not only in chancery but all other courts. If a witness, on being served with this process, does not appear, the court will issue an attachment against him; or a party, plaintiff or defendant, injured by his non-attendance, may maintain an action against the witness. 3 Black. 369.

SUBPŒNA DUCES TECUM. This is a writ or process of the same kind with the preceding subpœna, including a cause of requisition, for the witness to bring and produce books and papers in his hands, belonging to, or wherein the parties are interested, or tending to elucidate the matter in question. 3 Black. 382. See Duces Tecum.

SUBSCRIPTION OF WITNESSES. A will of lands must, by stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. s. 5. be attested or subscribed by three credible witnesses at least; in other conveyances, the actual subscription of the witnesses is not required by law, though it is prudent for them so to do. 2 Black. 378.

SUBSEQUENT CONDITIONS, are such, by the failure or non-performance of which an estate already vested may be defeated. 2 Black. 154.

SUBSEQUENT EVIDENCE. In attaint, he that brings the attaint can give no other evidence to the grand jury, than what was originally given to the petit. 3 Black. 403.

On a re-hearing in equity, all the evidence taken in the cause, whether read before or not, is admitted to be read; because it is the decree of the chancellor himself, who only now sits to hear reasons why the decree should not be enrolled and perfected; at which time all the omissions of either evidence or argument may be supplied. Gill. Rep. 151, 152. 3 Black. 454, 455.

SUBSIDY, (subsidium) an aid, tax, or tribute, granted to the king. Jenk. Cent. 208. Dyer, 165. Lane, 24. Cro. Car. 601.

SUBSTANCE. The substance of things is most to be regarded; and therefore our law doth prefer matter of substance before matters of circumstance. 36 E. 3. c. 15. 33 H. 6. c. 10. 21 H. 7. c. 26. 23 Eliz. c. 4.

SUBSTITUTE, (substitutus) one placed under another person to transact some business, or perform some personal service. See Attorney and Militia.

SUBTRACTION OF CONJUGAL RIGHTS. This is when either husband or wife lives separate from the other without any sufficient reason; in which case the ecclesiastical jurisdiction (on a suit for restitution of conjugal rights) will compel them to come together again, if either party be weak enough to desire it, contrary to the inclination of the other. 3 Black. 94.

SUBTRACTION OF LEGACIES. This is the withholding or detaining of legacies; for this also the spiritual court administers redress, by compelling the executor to pay them. In this case the courts of equity exercise a concurrent jurisdiction with the ecclesiastical courts, to compel the executor to account; and the cause, when once brought there, receives there also its full determination. 3 Black. 98.

SUBTRACTION OF RENTS AND SERVICES, &c. This happens when any person, who owes any suit, duty, custom, rent, or service to another, withdraws or neglects to perform or pay it. 3 Black. 230.

SUBTRACTION OF TITHES. This is the withholding of tithes from the parson or vicar, whether the former be a clergyman or a lay appropriator. Stat. 27 H. 8. c. 20. 32 H. 8. c. 7. See Tithes.

SUBURBANI, are husbandmen. Cowell. Blount.

SUCCESSION AB INTESTATO. The statute of distributions bears some resemblance to the Roman law of successions ab intestato. 2 Black. 516.

SUCCESSION TO GOODS AND CHATTELS. The gaining a property in chattels, either personal or real, by succession, is, in strictness of law, only applicable to corporations aggregate of many, as dean and chapter, mayor and commonalty, master and fellows, and the like; in which one set of men may, by succeeding another set, acquire a property in all the goods, moveables, and other chattels of the corporation. 2 Black. 430.

SUCCESSOR, (Lat.) in corporations, is he that followeth or cometh in another's place; and sole corporations may take a fee-simple estate to them, and their successors, but not without the word successors. 4 Rep. 65. 1 Inst. 8, 46, 94. 4 Inst. 249. Wood's Inst. 111.

SUCCISSIONES ARBORUM, the cuttings and croppings of trees. Cowell.

SUFFERANCE. Tenant at sufferance, is he who holdeth over his term. Terms de Ley. 1 Co. Inst. 57.

SUFFERENTIA PACIS, a grant or sufferance of peace or truce. Cowell.

SUFFRAGAN, (suffraganus, chorepiscopus, episcopi vicarius) the vicar ordained by the bishop of the diocese to aid and assist him in his spiritual function; or one who supplieth the place instead of the bishop. And if any one exercise the jurisdiction of a suffragan, without the appointment of the bishop of the diocese, &c. he shall be guilty of a præmunire. 26 Hen. 8. c. 14.

SUGGESTION, (suggestio) the representing of a thing; thus suggestions are grounds to move for prohibitions to suits in the spiritual courts, &c. when they meddle with matters out of their jurisdictions. 2 Lil. Abr. 536.

So upon suggestion of the party, supported by an affidavit made of the matter suggested, the court may grant a rule for staying the proceedings upon the record. 2 Lil. 537. 1 Plowd. 76.

SUICIDE. See Felo de se.

SUIT, (secta, Fr. suite, i. e. consecutio, sequela) signifies a following another, but in divers senses. The first is a suit in law, and is divided into suit real and personal, which is all one with action real and personal. 2. Suit of court, an attendance which the tenant owes to the court of his lord. 3. Suit covenant, when a man hath covenanted to do suit in the lord's court. 4. Suit custom, where I and my ancestors owe suit time out of mind. 5. Suit is the following one in chase, as fresh suit; and this word is used for a petition made to the king, or any great personage. 3 Black. 295.

SUIT AND SERVICE. When the tenant had professed himself to be the man of his superior or lord; the next consideration was concerning the service, which, as such, he was bound to render for the land he held. This, in pure, proper, and original feuds, was only twofold: to follow, or do suit to the lord in his courts in time of peace; and in his armies, or warlike retinue, when necessity called him to the field. 2 Black. 54.

SUIT OF COURT, i. e. suit to the lord's court, is that service which the feudary tenant was bound to do at the lord's court; but all the lord's tenants were not bound to attend his courts, but only those to whom their estates were granted upon that condition. Cowell.

SUITS AT LAW, are to be prosecuted in certain times, limited by the statute 21 Jac. 1. c. 16. (See Limitations.) And persons desiring to end any suits or controversies, for which there is no remedy but by personal action, or bill in equity, may agree that their submission to the award of arbitrators shall be made a rule of court.

SUIT IN EQUITY. The first commencement is by preferring a bill in the stile of a petition, setting forth the circumstances of the case at length, as some fraud, trust, or hardship, and praying relief, and also process of subpœna against the defendant. The defendant is to answer, upon oath, to all the matter charged in the bill; or the defendant may plead and demur, or demur alone, as advised by counsel. If the defendant answers, and the plaintiff finds sufficient matter confessed in the defendant's answer to ground a decree upon, he may proceed to the hearing of the cause on bill and answer only. But, in that case, he must take the defendant's answer to be true in every point; otherwise the course is for the plaintiff to reply generally to the answer, averring his bill to be true, certain, and sufficient, and the defendant's answer to be directly the reverse, which he is ready to prove, as the court shall award; upon which the defendant rejoins, averring the like on his side, which is joining issue upon the facts in dispute. 3 Black. 442.

SUIT OF THE KING'S PEACE, is the pursuing a man for the breach of the peace. 6 R. 2. c. 1. 5 H. 4. c. 15.

SUIT-SILVER, a small sum paid in some manors to excuse the appearance of freeholders at the courts of their lords. Cowell.

SULCUSAQUÆ, a little brook, or stream of water. Ibid.

SULLERY, (from the Sax. sulth, i. e. aratrum) a plough-land. 1 Inst. 5.

SULLINGA, (sullingata terræ) is the same with swoling. Cowell.

SUMAGE, (sumagium & summagium) toll for carriage on horseback. Cromp. Juris. 191. Cowell.

SUMMARY, (summarium) a compendious abridgment.

SUMMARY CONVICTIONS, are such as are directed by act of parliament for the conviction of offenders, and the inflicting of certain penalties created by those acts of parliament. In these cases there is no intervention of a jury, but the party accused is acquitted or condemned by the suffrage of such person only, as the statute hath appointed for his judge. See Conviction.

SUMMER-HUS-SILVER, a payment to the lords of the wood in the wealds of Kent, who used to visit those places in summer-time, when their under-tenants were bound to prepare little summer-houses for their reception, or else pay a composition in money. Cowell.

SUMMONEAS, a judicial writ of great diversity, according to the divers cases wherein it is used. Ibid.

SUMMONERS, (summonitores) are petty officers that cite and warn men to appear in any court, and these ought to be boni hominis, &c.; they are also called apparitors. Fleta, l. 4. Cowell.

SUMMONITORES SCACCARII, officers who assisted in collecting the king's revenues, by citing the defaulters therein into the court of exchequer. Cowell.

SUMMONS, (summonitio) is a writ to the sheriff, to warn him to appear at a day. 6 Rep. 54. 37 H. 6. c. 26.

SUMMONS AND SEVERANCE. Although this title is distinguished in the books by the name of summons and severance, yet the proper name is severance; for the summons is only a process, which must, in certain cases, issue before judgment of severance can be given. Bar. Abr.

Severance therefore is a judgment by which, where two or more are joined in an action, one or more of these is enabled to proceed in such action without the other or others. Ibid.

And to prevent inconvenience, the law has provided, that if any one, in whose name a joint action is commenced, does not appear, or after appearance makes default, the other may have judgment ad sequendum solum, or, in other words, a judgment of severance. Hard. 48. Bro. Summ. and Selv. pl. 4. 16. F. N. B. 128. 1 Inst. 139.

SUMMONS TO PARLIAMENT. See Parliament.

SUMMONS AD WARRANTIZANDUM, summoneas ad warrantizand', the process whereby the vouchee in a common recovery is called. Co. Lit. 101.

SUMPTUARY LAWS, (sumptuaria lex, from sumptuarius, of or belonging to expences) are laws made to restrain excess in apparel, and prohibit costly clothes, of which heretofore we had many in England, but they are all repealed by 1 Jac. 1. 3 Inst. 199.

SUNDAY, (dies dominicus) is the Lord's day set apart for the service of God, to be kept religiously, and not be profaned. See Sabbath.

SUPERCARGO, a person employed by merchants to go a voyage, and oversee their cargo, and dispose of it to the best advantage. Merch. Dict. Cowell.

SUPER-INSTITUTION, (super-institutio) is one institution upon another; as where A. B. is admitted and instituted to a benefice upon one title, and C. D. is admitted and instituted on the title or presentment of another. 2 Cro. 463.

SUPER-JURARE, a term used in our ancient law, when a criminal endeavoured to excuse himself by his own oath, or the oath of one or two witnesses, and the crime objected against him was so plain and notorious, that he was convicted by the oaths of many more witnesses: this was called super-jurare. Cowell.

SUPERONERATIONE PASTURÆ, is a judicial writ that lies against him who is impleaded in the county-court for the sur-charging or overburthening a common with his cattle, in a case where he was formerly impleaded for it, in the same court, and the cause is removed into one of the courts at Westminster. Reg. Judic.

SUPER PRÆROGATIVA REGIS, a writ which formerly lay against the king's tenant's widow for marrying without the king's licence. F. N. B. 174.

SUPERSEDEAS, a writ that lies in a great many cases; and signifies, in general, a command to stay some ordinary proceedings at law, on good cause shewn, which ought otherwise to proceed. F. N. B. 296.

SUPER STATUTO, 1 Ed. 3. c. 12, 13, is a writ that lay against the king's tenants holding in chief, who alienedthe king's land without his licence. F. N. B. f. 175.

SUPER STATUTO de Articulis Cleri, c. 6. a writ that lay against the sheriff or other officer that distrained in the king's highway, or in the lands anciently belonging to the church. F. N. B. 173.

SUPER STATUTO facto pour Seneschal & Marshal de Roy, &c. a writ that lay against the steward or marshal, for holding plea in his court of freehold, or for trespass or contracts not made and arising within the king's household. F. N. B. 241.

SUPER STATUTO versus Servantes & Laboratores, a writ against him who kept servants departed out of their services contrary to law. F. N. B. 167.

SUPER STATUTO de York, quo null serra viteller, &c. is a writ lying against a person that uses victualling, either in gross or by retail, in a city or borough-town, during the time he is mayor, &c. F. N. B. 172.

SUPERSTITIOUS USES. No information can be brought in chancery, for such mistaken charters, as are given to the king by the statutes for suppressing superstitious uses; but the same must be determined in the court of exchequer, as a court of revenue. 3 Black. 428. See Uses.

SUPERVISOR, (Lat.) a surveyor or overseer: as supervisor (now surveyor) of the highways, of excise, and the like.

SUPPLEMENTAL BILL IN EQUITY. If a plaintiff hath replied to a defendant's answer, whereby the cause is at issue, and afterwards new matter arises, which did not exist before, he must set it forth by a supplemental bill. 3 Black. 448.

SUPPLETORY OATH. The civil law universally requires the testimony of two; and where there is only one witness, to make up the necessary complement of two, they admit the party himself (plaintiff or defendant) to be examined in his own behalf, and administer to him what is called the suppletory oath; and, if his evidence happens to be in his own favour, this immediately converts the half proof into a whole one. 3 Black. 270, 271.

SUPPLICAVIT, is a writ issuing out of chancery, for taking surety of the peace, when one is in danger of being hurt in his body by another; it is directed to the justices of peace and sheriff of the county, and is grounded upon the statute 1 Ed. 3. c. 16. which ordains, that certain persons shall be assigned by the chancellor to take care of the peace, &c. (F. N. B. 80, 81.) And if he, against whom the writ is sued, come into the chancery, and there find sureties that he will not do hurt or damage unto him that sueth the writ, he shall have a writ of supersedeas. New Nat. Br. 180.

To sue the writ of supplicavit, the party that desires it must go before one of the masters in chancery, and make oath that he does not desire the same through any malice, but for his own safety; upon which the master makes out a warrant, and the writ is made out by one of the clerks in the six clerks office; and when made, the supplicavit is to be delivered to the sheriff to have his warrant thereupon for arresting the party, &c.; and then, having sued out a certiorari, it is to be delivered to them that took bail thereon, and they are required to certify it, &c. Pract. Solic. 190.

SUPPLIES. Extraordinary grants to government, by parliament, to supply the exigencies of the state. 1 Black. 307.

SUPREMACY, signifies sovereign dominion, authority, and pre-eminence, the highest estate. And, by our ancient laws, this kingdom is an absolute empire and monarchy, consisting of one head, which is the king, and of a body politic, made up of many well agreeing members. And the kingly head of this politic body is furnished with prerogative and jurisdiction, to render justice and right to every part and member of this body, of what estate or degree soever, otherwise he would not be at the head of the whole. 5 Co. Rep. 8. See Constitution, King, and Oaths.

SURCHARGE, an over-charge, beyond what is just and right.

SURCHARGE OF COMMON. This is a disturbance of common of pasture, by any one, who hath right of common, putting more cattle therein than the pasture and herbage will sustain, or the party hath a right to do. This surcharging can, properly speaking, only happen where the common is appendant or appurtenant, and of course limitable by law; or where, when in gross, it is expressly limited and certain: for where a man hath common in gross, sans nombre, or without stint, he cannot be a surcharger. But even in this case there must be sufficient for the lord's own beasts; for the law will not suppose that, at the original grant of the common, the lord meant to exclude himself. The remedy for surcharging common, is by the lord's distraining the surplus number, or by his bringing trespass, or by action on the case, in which any commoner may be plaintiff. 3 Black. 237, 238.

SURCHARGE OF THE FOREST, (superoneratio foresta) is where a commoner puts on more beasts in the forest than he has a right to. Manwood, p. 2. c. 14. n. 7. 3 Inst. f. 293.

SUR CUI IN VITA, a writ that lay for the heir of a woman, whose husband had alienedher land in fee, and she neglected to bring the writ cui in vita for recovery thereof; in this case her heir might bring this writ against the tenant after her decease. F. N. B. 193.

SURETY, is a general word which comprehends bail, mainprize, pledge, and caution; and it is required either by the common law or by statute. By the common law, upon a writ ne exeat regno; upon a supplicavit for the peace, and the like (2 Inst. 40, 41. 4 Inst. 180.) And by statute, upon default of good behaviour, (34 Ed. 3. c. 1.) and the like. 1 Com. dig. B. in E.

SURETY OF THE PEACE, (securitas pacis, so called, because the party, that was in fear, is thereby secured.) This security consists in being bound, with one or more sureties, in a recognizance or obligation to the king, entered on record, and taken in some court or by some judicial officer, whereby the parties acknowlege themselves to be indebted to the crown in the sum required, (for instance 100*l.*) with condition to be void and of none effect, if the party shall appear in court on such a day, and in the mean time shall keep the peace; either generally, towards the king, and all his liege people, or particularly also with regard to the person who craves the security; or, if it be for the good behaviour, then, on condition that he shall demean and behave himself well (or be of good behaviour), either generally or specially, for the time therein limited, as for one or more years, or for life. This recognizance, if taken by a justice of the peace, must be certified to the next sessions, in pursuance of the statute 3 Hen. 7. c. 1; and if the condition of such recognizance be broken by any breach of the peace in the one case, or any misbehaviour in the other, the recognizance becomes forfeited, or absolute; and being estreated, or extracted (taken out from among the other records), and sent up to the exchequer, the parties, and his sureties, having now become the king's absolute debtors, are sued for the several sums in which they are respectively bound.

SURGEON, (chirurgus) may be deduced from the Fr. chirurgeon, signifying him that dealeth in the mechanical part of physic, and the outward cures performed with the hand; and therefore is compounded of the two Greek words Χὴρ, manus, Ἔργον, opus. Cowel. See London, article Pharmacy.

SUR LUI JUZ, i. e. upon his oath, according to ancient laws. Leg. W. c. 16.

SURMISE, something offered to a court to move it to grant a prohibition. Audita querela, or other writ grantable thereon. 2 Cro. 219, 501, 669. See Suggestion.

SURPLUSAGE, (Fr. surplus, Lat. surplusagium, corollarium) is a superfluity or addition more than needful, which sometimes is the cause that a writ abates; but in pleading many times it is absolutely void, and the residue of the plea shall stand good. Broke. Plowd. 63.

If a jury find the substance of the issue before them to be tried, other superfluous matter is but surplusage (6 Rep. 46.) And where a verdict or judgment is compleat, if there be any other matter repugnant or uncertain, it shall be rejected as surplusage. 3 Nels. 262. 2 Hawk. P. C. 441. 1 Wils. 238.

SURPLUSAGE OF ACCOUNTS, signifies a greater disbursement than the charge of the accountant amounts unto. In another sense, surplusage is the remainder or overplus of money left. Litt. Dict.

SURPLUS of Intestates Effects. See Administrator, Intestates Effects, and Residue.

SURREBUTTER, a second rebutter; or, more properly, it is the replication or answer of the plaintiff to the defendant's rebutter. 3 Black. 310.

SURREJOINDER, is a second defence of the plaintiff's declaration in a cause, and answers the rejoinder of the defendant. West. symb. p. 2. Wood's Inst. 556.

SURRENDER, (sursum redditio) is a deed or instrument, under seal, testifying that the particular tenant for life or years, of lands and tenements, doth yield up his estate to him that hath the immediate estate in remainder or reversion, that he may have the present possession thereof; and wherein the estate for life or years may merge or drown by the mutual agreement of the parties. Co. Litt. 337.

SURRENDER OF A BANKRUPT. The bankrupt, at the third meeting of the commissioners, at farthest, which must be on the 42d day after the advertisement in the Gazette, upon notice personally served upon him, or left at his usual place of abode, must surrender himself personally to the commissioners, and must thenceforth in all respects conform to the directions of the statutes of bankruptcy; or, in default thereof, shall be guilty of felony, without benefit of clergy, and shall suffer death.

and his goods and estate shall be distributed among his creditors. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30.

SURRENDER OF COPYHOLDS, is the yielding up of the estate by the tenant into the hands of the lord, for such purposes as in the surrender are expressed. As, it may be, to the use and behoof of A. and his heirs; to the use of his own will, and the like. The process, in most manors, is, that the tenant comes to the steward, either in court (or, if custom permits, out of court), or else to two customary tenants of the same manor, provided there be also a custom to warrant it; and there, by delivering up a rod, a glove, or other symbol, as the custom directs, resigns into the hands of the lord, by the hands and acceptance of his said steward, or of the said two tenants, all his interest and title to the estate, in trust, to be again granted out by the lord to such persons, and for such uses as are named in the surrender, and the custom of the manor will warrant. If the surrender be made out of court, then, at the next or some subsequent court, the jury or homage must present and find it upon their oaths; which presentment is an information to the lord or his steward of what has been transacted out of court. Immediately upon such surrender in court, or upon presentment of a surrender made out of court, the lord, by his steward, grants the same land again to cestuy que use (who is sometimes, though rather improperly, called the surrenderee), to hold by the ancient rents and customary services, and thereupon admits him tenant to the copyhold, according to the form and effect of the surrender, which must be exactly pursued; and this is done by delivering up to the new tenant the rod, or glove, or the like, in the name, and as the symbol, of corporal seisin of the lands and tenements. Upon which admission he pays a fine to the lord, according to the custom of the manor, and takes the oath of fealty. 2 Black. 365.

This method of conveyance is so essential to the nature of a copyhold estate, that it cannot properly be transferred by any other assurance. No feoffment or grant has any operation thereupon. If I would exchange a copyhold estate with another, I cannot do it by an ordinary deed of exchange at the common law, but we must surrender to each other's use, and the lord will admit us accordingly. If I would devise a copyhold, I must surrender it to the use of my last will and testament; and in my will I must declare my intentions, and name a devisee, who will then be entitled to admission.* A fine or recovery had of copyhold lands in the king's court may indeed, if not duly reversed, alter the tenure of the lands, and convert them into frank fee, which is defined in the old book of tenures to be "land pleadable at the common law:" but upon an action on the case, in the nature of a writ of deceit, brought by the lord in the king's court, such fine or recovery will be reversed, the lord will recover his jurisdiction, and the lands will be restored to their former state of copyhold. Co. Copyh. s. 36. Old Nat. Brev. t. briefe de recto clauso. F. N. B. 13.

In this peculiar assurance, its several parts are—1. the surrender; 2. the presentment; and 3. the admittance.

1. A surrender by an admittance, subsequent whereto the conveyance is to receive its perfection and confirmation, is rather a manifestation of the alienor's intention, than a transfer of any interest in possession; for, till admittance of cestue que use, the lord taketh notice of the surrenderor as his tenant; and he shall receive the profits of the land to his own use, and shall discharge all services due to the lord. Yet the interest remains in him not absolutely, but sub modo; for he cannot pass away the land to any other, or make it subject to any other incumbrance than it was subject to at the time of the surrender. But no manner of legal interest is vested in the nominee before admittance. If he enters, he is a trespasser, and punishable in an action of trespass;* and if he surrenders

* Unless a surrender is made by the testator some time before his death to the use of his last will and testament, the devise of a copyhold is in general absolutely void, and the estate descends to the heir at law; but, in three instances, a court of equity will interfere, and will supply the defect of a surrender, viz. when copyholds are devised for the payment of debts, and in favour of a wife or younger children; yet a wife or younger children will not be relieved in equity, if the heir is disinherited or unprovided for. 1 Atk. 387. 3 Bro. 229. 1 Cox's P. Wms. 60.

But a wife will be relieved against an heir, who is not the child of the testator, or one who has an equal claim to his protection and bounty as his wife, though such heir be unprovided for, for the wife will be preferred, where there is not an equal moral obligation violated by giving her relief. 3 Bro. 229.

If both freehold and copyhold estates are devised for the payment of debts, the chancellor will not supply the defect of the surrender of the copyhold, unless the freehold is insufficient. 1 Bro. 273. 2 Bro. 325.

Equity will not assist a brother, grandchildren, or a natural child. 3 Atk. 189. 2 Ves. 582.

* The surrenderee would not now be to the use of another, such surrender is merely void, and by no matter ex post facto can be confirmed; for though he be admitted in pursuance of the original surrender, and thereby acquires afterwards a sufficient and plenary interest as absolute owner, yet his second surrender previous to his own admittance is absolutely void ab initio; because at the time of such surrender he had but a possibility of an interest, and could therefore transfer nothing: and no subsequent admittance can make an act good, which was ab initio void. Yet, though upon the original surrender the nominee hath but a possibility, it is however such a possibility as may, whenever he pleases, be reduced to a certainty: for he cannot either by force or fraud be deprived or deluded of the effect and fruits of the surrender; but if the lord refuse to admit him, he is compellable to do it by a bill in chancery, or a mandamus, and the surrenderor can in nowise defeat his grant, his hands being for ever bound from disposing of the land in any other way, and his mouth for ever stopped from revoking or countermanding his own deliberate act. Co. Copyh. s. 39.

2. As to the presentment, that, by the general custom of manors, is to be made at the next court baron immediately after the surrender; but, by special custom, in some places, it will be good, though made at the second or other subsequent court. And it is to be brought into court by the same persons that took the surrender, and then to be presented by the homage; and, in all points material, must correspond with the true tenor of the surrender itself. And, therefore, if the surrender be conditional, and the presentment be absolute, both the surrender, presentment, and admittance thereupon, are wholly void: the surrender, as being never truly presented; the presentment, as being false; and the admittance, as being founded on such untrue presentment. If a man surrenders out of court, and dies before presentment, and presentment be made after his death, according to the custom, this is sufficient. So too, if cestuy que use dies before presentment, yet, upon presentment made after his death, his heir according to the custom shall be admitted. The same law is, if those, into whose hands the surrender is made, die before presentment; for, upon sufficient proof in court that such a surrender was made, the lord shall be compelled to admit accordingly. And if the steward, the tenants, or others into whose hands such surrender is made, refuse or neglect to bring it in to be presented, upon a petition preferred to the lord in his court baron, the party grieved shall find remedy. But if the lord will not do him right and justice, he may sue both the lord, and them that took the surrender, in chancery, and shall there find relief. Co. Copyh. § 40.

3. Admittance is the last stage, or perfection, of copyhold assurances. And this is of three sorts: first, an admittance upon a voluntary grant from the lord; secondly, an admittance upon surrender by the former tenant; and thirdly, an admittance upon a descent from the ancestor.

In admittances, even upon a voluntary grant from the lord, when copyhold lands have escheated or reverted to him, the lord is considered as an instrument. For though it is in his power to keep the lands in his own hands, or to dispose of them at his pleasure, by granting an absolute fee-simple, a freehold, or a chattel interest therein, and quite to change their nature from copyhold to socage tenure, so that he may well be reputed their absolute owner and lord; yet, if he will still continue to dispose of them as copyhold, he is bound to observe the ancient custom precisely in every point, and can neither in tenure nor estate introduce any kind of alteration, for that were to create a new copyhold, wherefore in this respect the law accounts him custom's instrument. For if a copyhold for life falls into the lord's hands by the tenant's death, though the lord may destroy the tenure and enfranchise the land, yet if he grants it out again by copy, he can neither add to nor diminish the ancient rent, nor make any the minutest variation in other respects; nor is the tenant's estate, so granted, subject to any charges or incumbrances by the lord.

Where a copyhold has been granted for lives, upon the death of one or more of the lives, the heir of the grantee cannot claim by custom a renewal of the grant for fresh lives upon the payment of a reasonable fine, i. e. a fine of two years value, as in the case of a copyhold of inheritance. No custom to renew a copyhold for lives is legal, unless the fine has been certain and unvaried, for copyholds grantable for lives only, if the fine is not certain, are like leases of freehold lands for lives, and renewable only upon the best terms the party can make. Wharton v. King. Anst. 659.

In admittances upon surrender of another, the lord is to no intent reputed as owner, but wholly as an instrument: and the tenant admitted shall likewise be subject to no charges or incumbrances of the lord; for his claim to the estate is solely considered a trespasser; for it has been determined that he may recover in an ejectment against the surrenderor, upon a demise laid after the surrender, where there was an admittance of the nominee before trial. 1 T. R. 600.

under him that made the surrender. 4 Rep. 27. Co. Litt. 59.

And, as in admittances upon surrenders, so in admittances upon descents by the death of the ancestor, the lord is used as a mere instrument; and, as no manner of interest passes into him by the surrender or the death of his tenant, so no interest passes out of him by the act of admittance. And therefore neither in the one case nor the other, is any respect had to the quantity or quality of the lord's estate in the manor. For whether he be tenant in fee or for years, whether he be in possession by right or by wrong, it is not material, since the admittances made by him shall not be impeached on account of his title, because they are judicial, or rather ministerial acts, which every lord in possession is bound to perform.

Admittances, however, upon surrender, differ from admittances upon descent in this, that by surrender nothing is vested in cestuy que use, before admittance, no more than in voluntary admittances; but upon descent the heir is tenant by copy immediately upon the death of his ancestor: not indeed to all intents and purposes, for he cannot be sworn on the homage, nor maintain an action in the lord's court as tenant; but to most intents the law taketh notice of him as of a perfect tenant of the land instantly upon the death of his ancestor, especially where he is concerned with any strangor. He may enter into the land before admittance; may take the profits; punish any trespass done upon the ground; nay, upon satisfying the lord for his fine due upon the descent, may surrender into the hands of the lord to whatever use he pleases. And the heir having as complete a title without admittance as with it, against all the world but the lord, the court of king's bench will not grant a mandamus to compel the lord to admit him. 2 T. R. 197. For these reasons we may conclude, that the admittance of an heir is principally for the benefit of the lord, to entitle him to his fine, and not so much necessary for the strengthening and completing the heir's title. Hence indeed an observation might arise, that if the benefit, which the heir is to receive by the admittance, is not equal to the charges of the fine, he will never come in and be admitted to his copyhold in court; and so the lord may be defrauded of his fine. But to this we may reply in the words of Sir Edward Coke, "I assure myself, if it were in the election of the heir to be admitted or not to be admitted, he would be best contented without admittance; but the custom in every manor is in this point compulsory. For, either upon pain of forfeiture of their copyhold, or of incurring some great penalty, the heirs of copyholders are inforced, in every manor, to come into court and be admitted according to the custom, within a short time after notice given of their ancestor's decease." Copyh. § 41.

But copyholds are not within the statute de donis, and cannot be intailed without a special custom within the manor; and where such a custom exists, there may also be a custom to bar the estate tail, by a recovery suffered in the lord's court; but if no such custom appears of barring by recovery, the intail may be barred by surrender, or otherwise it would amount to a perpetuity. 2 Ves. 601. Yet in some manors the custom of barring by one mode is co-existent with the custom of barring by the other. 2 Bl. Rep. 944.

SURRENDER OF LETTERS PATENT, AND OFFICES. A surrender may be made of letters-patent to the king, to the end he may grant the estate to whom he pleases, &c. and a second patent for years to the same person for the same thing is a surrender in law of the first patent. 10 Rep. 66.

SURROGATE, (Surrogatus.) Is one that is substituted or appointed in the room of another; as the bishop or chancellor's surrogate. Cowell.

SURSISE, (Supersisa.) A word especially used in the castle of Dover for penalties and forfeitures laid upon those that pay not the duties or rent of castle-ward, at their days limited. Bract. lib. 5. Cowell.

SURVEY. Is to measure, lay out, or particularly describe a manor, or estate in lands; and to ascertain not only the bounds and royalties thereof, but the tenure of the respective tenants, the rent and value of the same, &c. It is also understood to be a court; for on the falling of an estate to a new lord, consisting of manors, where there are tenants by lease, and copyholders, a court of survey is generally held; and sometimes at other times, to apprise the lord of the present terms and interests of the tenants, and as a direction on making further grants, as well as in order to improvements, &c. Comp. Court Keep. Cowell.

SURVEYOR, (compounded of two Fr. words, sur, i. e. super, and voir, cernere.) One that has the overseeing or care of lands or works. Cowell.

SURVEYOR OF THE KING'S EXCHANGE. An ancient officer belonging to the mint and coinage, mentioned in the statute 9 H. 5. c. 4. Cowell.

SURVEYOR GENERAL OF THE KING'S MANORS AND LANDS. Cro. Jurisd. 106.

SURVEYORS OF THE HIGHWAYS. Every parish is bound of common right to keep the high roads that go through it in good and sufficient repair; unless by reason of the tenure of lands, or otherwise, this care is consigned to some particular private person. As it was not (formerly) incumbent on any particular officer to call the parish together, and set them upon this work; therefore, by statute 2 & 3 Ph. & M. c. 8. surveyors of the highways were ordered to be chosen in every parish; but now they are constituted by two neighbouring justices out of such inhabitants or others as are described in stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 78, and may have salaries alloted them for their trouble.

SURVEYOR of the Navy. An officer appointed over all stores, and to survey hulls and masts of ships, &c. Chamberl. Cowell.

SURVEYOR of the King's Ordnance. This officer surveys the ordnance and provisions of war, allows bills of debt, and keeps the checks on labourers works, &c. Ibid.

SURVEYORS of the Wards and Liberties, taken away with the courts of wards and liveries. 12 Car. 2. c. 24.

SURVIVOR, (from the Fr. survivre, and Lat. supervivo.) Is the longer liver of two joint tenants, or of any two persons joined in the right of a thing. He that remaineth alive after others be dead, &c. Broke 33. See Joint-tenant.

SUSANA TERRÆ, is said to be land worn out with ploughing. Thorn. Cowell.

SUSCEPTOR, (Lat.) An undertaker or godfather, also a receiver of tribute in the Roman provinces. Litt. Dict. Cowell.

SUSPENSE, (suspensio.) Is a temporal stop, or hanging up, as it were, of a man's right, for a time; and, in legal understanding, is taken to be when either the rent or land is so conveyed, not absolutely and finally, but for a time, after which the rent will be revived again; and it differs from extinguishment, which is when it dies or is gone for ever.

SUSPENSION. A censure, whereby ecclesiastical persons are forbidden to exercise their office, or take the profits of their benefices; or where they are prohibited for a certain time in both of them, in the whole, or in part. Wood's Inst. 510.

SUSPENSION of the Habeas Corpus Act. In cases of great emergency, the parliament can authorize the crown, by suspending the habeas corpus act for a short and limited time, to imprison suspected persons without giving any reason for so doing; for should the legislature think itself in danger by some secret conspiracy against the state, or by a correspondence with a foreign enemy, it is reasonable that it should have power to authorize the executive, for a short and limited time, to imprison suspected persons, who in that case lose their liberty only for a while, to preserve it for ever. 1 Black. 210.

SUS. PER COLL. On the trial of criminals, the usage is for the judge to sign the calendar, or list of all the prisoner's names, with their separate judgments in the margin, which is left with the sheriff. As for a capital felony, it is written opposite the prisoner's name, "hanged by the neck;" formerly in the days of Latin and abbreviation, "Sus. per coll." for suspendatur per collum. See Execution.

SUSPICION. A person may be taken up on suspicion, where a felony is done; but those who are imprisoned for a light suspicion of larceny or robbery, are bailable by statute 2 Hawk. P. C. 101. And the party being a private person, that takes up one on suspicion of felony, must do it of his own suspicion, not upon that of another; and he must have reasonable cause of it, &c. Hale's Hist. P. C. 78.

SUSPIRAL, (from the Lat. suspirare, i. e. ducere suspiria.) A spring of water, passing under ground towards a conduit or cistern. 35 Hen. 8. cap. 10.

SUTHDURE, (Sax.) i. e. the south door of a church, was the place where canonical purgation was performed, by the party accused coming to the south door of the church, and there, in the presence of the people, making oath that he was innocent. Cowell.

SWAN, (Cygnus.) Is a noble bird of game; and a person may prescribe to have game of swans within his manor, as well as a warren or park. 7 Rep. 17, 18. But no person may have a swan-mark, except he have lands of the yearly value of five marks, and unless it be by grant of the king, or his officers lawfully authorized, or by prescription. Stat. 22 Edw. 4. c. 6. Stealing swans marked and pinioned, or unmarked, if kept in a mote, pond, or private river, and reduced to tameness, is felony. H. P. C. 68. And he that steals the eggs of swans out of their nests, shall be imprisoned a year and a day, and be fined at the king's pleasure. 11 Hen. 7. c. 17. And no fowl can be a stray but a swan. 4 Inst. 280.

SWANHERD. The king's swanherd, magister dedutus cygnorum. Cowell.

SWANIMOTE, or Swainmote, (swainmotus, from the Sax. swang, i. e. a country swain, and gemote, i. e. conventus.) Signifies a court touching matters of the forest, held by the charter of the forest thrice in the year, before the verderors as judges. Cromp. Jurisd 108. 3 Hen. 8. c. 18.

SWARF-MONEY, is mentioned among customs and services, and was one penny halfpenny paid before the rising of the sun; the party was to go three times about the cross, and lay down the swarf-money, and then take witness and lay it in the hole; and he was to look well that his witness did not deceive him; for if it were not so paid, he was to forfeit xxxs. and a white bull, due to the Catesbys in Ladbroke, and other places in Warwickshire.

SWATH, (Sax. swathu.) A swathe, or as in Kent, a sweath, and in some parts a sworth, is a straight row of cut grass or corn, as it lies after the scithe at the first mowing of it. Cowell.

SWEARING, (Imprecatio.) Is an offence against God and religion, and a sin of all others the most extravagant and unaccountable, as having no benefit or advantage attending it. And there are several good laws and statutes for punishing this crime.

By 21 Jac. 1. c. 20. persons swearing or cursing, shall forfeit 12*d.* a time to the poor of the parish, and for want of distress, be set in the stocks three hours. Prosecution must be within twenty days; and the act is to be read in every church twice a year.

By 6 & 7 Will. & Mar. c. 11. and 19 Geo. 2. c. 21. servant, labourer, common soldier, or seaman, convicted of swearing, shall forfeit 1*s.*; every other person 2*s.*; the second offence double, and afterwards treble; for want of distress, to be set in the stocks one hour.

Every person of or above the degree of a gentleman, swearing, shall, in like manner, forfeit 5*s.* 19 Geo. 2. c. 21.

Profane swearers, in the hearing of any justice, shall be convicted without other proof. Constables shall seize persons profanely swearing, if unknown, and bring them before the next justice, who is to convict them on the officer's oath; and if they are known, information shall be made, whereupon the justice shall order the offender to appear, and the penalty shall be paid, or security given, or the offender committed for ten days to the house of correction. Ibid.

Common soldiers and sailors not paying the penalty, shall be set in the stocks for two hours. Justices not doing their duty, forfeit 5*l.* and constables 40*s.*; who, for want of distress, are to be committed for one month to the house of correction. All offenders are to pay all charges over and above the penalties, or be committed to the house of correction for six days extraordinary. Ibid.

The penalties go to the poor; the act to be read quarterly in all churches, on pain of 5*l.* and the fee to the justice's clerk is 1*s.* Ibid.

SWEARING THE PEACE. If any man hath just cause to fear that another will burn his house, or do him a corporal injury, by killing, imprisoning, or beating him, or that he will procure others so to do, he may demand sureties of the peace against such person. And every justice of the peace is bound to grant it, if he who demands it will make oath that he is actually under fear of death or bodily harm, and will shew that he has just cause to be so, by reason of the other's menaces, attempts, or having lain in wait for him; and will also farther swear, that he does not require such surety out of malice or for mere vexation. 1 Hawk. P. C. 127. This is called swearing the peace against another; and if the party does not find such sureties as the justice in his discretion shall require, he may be immediately committed till he does. Ibid 128. See Surety of the Peace.

SWEEPAGE, is the crop of hay got in a meadow, called also the swepe in some parts of England. Co. Litt. 4.

SWEETS. By 28 Geo. 3. c. 37. no person shall be entitled to sell wines or sweets for consumption in his own house, unless he shall also have obtained an ale licence.

SWEINMOTE, Court of. The court of Sweinmote is one of the forest courts, and is to be holden before the verderors as judges, by the steward of the sweinmote, thrice in every year, the sweins and freeholders within the forest composing the jury. The principal jurisdiction of this court is, first, to inquire into the oppressions and grievances committed by the officers of the forest: de super-oneratione forestariorum, & aliorum ministrorum forestæ; & de eorum oppressionibus populo regis illatis. And, secondly, to receive and try presentments certified from the court of attachment against offenders in vert and venison. Stat. 34 Edw. 1. c. 1. And this court may not only inquire, but convict also, which conviction shall be certified to the court of justice-seat under the seals of the jury; for this court cannot proceed to judgment. 4 Inst. 289. 3 Black. 72. See Swainmote.

SWINDLERS. By 33 Hen. 8. c. 1. persons obtaining another's money, goods, or other things, by any false token or counterfeit letter, shall suffer imprisonment, pillory, or any corporal punishment, as the court, on conviction, shall adjudge.

And by 30 Geo. 2. c. 24. persons convicted of obtaining money or goods by false pretences, or of sending threatening letters in order to extort money or goods, may be punished by fine and imprisonment, or by pillory, whipping, or transportation. See Cheats, Frauds.

SWINE or HOGS shall not go unringed in woods. 35 Hen. 8. c. 17. s. 17.

SWOLING OF LAND. (Solinga vel Swolinga Terræ, in Sax. Sulung, from Sul.) Aratrum, (as to this day in the west country a plough is called a sul.) Is as much as one plough can till in a year. A son of the tenure of lands, or otherwise, this care is consigned to some particular private person. As it was not (formerly) incumbent on any particular officer to call the parish together, and set them upon this work; therefore, by statute 2 & 3 Ph. & M. c. 8. surveyors of the highways were ordered to be chosen in every parish; but now they are constituted by two neighbouring justices out of such inhabitants or others as are described in stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 78, and may have salaries alloted them for their trouble.

SWOLING OF LAND. (Solinga vel Swolinga Terræ, in Sax. Sulung, from Sul.) Aratrum, (as to this day in the west country a plough is called a sul.) Is as much as one plough can till in a year. A hide of land; though some writers say it is an uncertain quantity. Cowell.

SWORN BROTHERS, (fratres jurati.) Persons who, by mutual oath, covenanted to share each other's fortune in any notable expedition. This practice gave occasion to our proverb of sworn brothers, or brethren in iniquity, because of their dividing plunder and spoil. Cowell.

SYLVA CÆDUA. Wood under twenty year's growth: coppice-wood. 2 Inst. 642.

SYMBOLUM. Is a symbol, or sign in the sacrament. Cowell.

SYNCOPARE. A word used in several ecclesiastical councils and synods, signifying to cut short or pronounce things so as not to be understood. Ibid.

SYNDICUS. An advocate or patron; a burgess or recorder of a town, &c. Mat. Paris, anno 1245.

SYNGRAPH, (syngraphus.) A deed, bond, or writing, under the hand and seal of all the parties; and it was the custom for both the debtor and creditor in writings obligatory to write their names and the sum borrowed on a piece of paper, with the word syngraphus in large letters in the middle; which being cut through, one part of the paper was delivered to each party, for their better security, &c. 2 Black. 206. See Chirograph.

SYNOD, (synodus.) A meeting or assembly of ecclesiastical persons concerning religion. 1 Black. 279.

SYNODALE. A tribute or payment in money, paid to the bishop or archdeacon, by the inferior clergy, at Easter visitation. Cowell.

SYNODALES TESTES. The urban and rural deans, whose office was to inform of and attest the disorders of the clergy and people in the episcopal synod, and for which a solemn oath was given them to make their presentments, &c.; afterwards by degrees devolved upon churchwardens. Parock. Antiq. 649.

SYNONYMOUS. A thing of the same name, or of the like signification. Johnson.

T

PERSONS convicted of any felony, (except murder), and admitted to benefit of clergy, were formerly branded with a T. upon the brawn of the thumb. Stat. 4 Hen. 7. c. 13; but by 19 Geo. 3. c. 74. made perpetual by 39 Geo. 3. c. 75, the court may fine a felon liable to be burnt in the hand, or order him to be whipt; but this act does not take away the power to imprison.

TABACUM. Herba ab insula Tobaco, ubi copiose provenit; qui primus eam ex India ad nos adduxit, see Tobacco.

TABARD, TABARDER. The bachelor scholars on the foundation of Queen's College, Oxford, are called tabitars or tabarders, from a gown worn by them called a tabert, tabarr, or tabard. And tabert was anciently a short gown that reached not farther than the middle of the leg.

TABARDUM. A garment like a gown, and used for an herald's coat, but generally taken for the gown of ecclesiastics. Cowell.

TABELLION, (Tabellio.) A notary public or scrivener. Ibid.

TABLE-RENTS, (redditus ad mensam.) Rents paid to bishops and others, reserved and appropriated to their table or housekeeping. Cowell. See Board-land.

TABLING OF FINES. A table for every county, containing the substance of fines passed; as the name of the county, town, or place, where the lands or tenements lie, the name of the demandant and deforceant, and of the particular lands, &c. mentioned in the fine. This is done by the chirographer, who, every day of the next term after the ingrossing of any such fine, who sets up these tables in an open place on the left hand side of the court of common pleas during its sitting; and he also delivers to the sheriff of each county, his under-sheriff, or deputy, fairly written in parchment, a perfect content of the table so made for that shire, in the term next before the assises, or between the term and assises, to be set up at the as-sises in an open place of that court, and continue there so long as the justices shall sit. And if either the chirographer or sheriff fail herein, they are liable to the penalty of 5*l*. Stat. 23 Eliz. c. 3.

TABULA. See Ebdomadarius.

TAC or TAK. A customary payment of tak and toll. Blount's ten. 155.

TACFREE, is used in old charters as an exemption from payments. Cowell.

TAGTARE, for Confirmare. Fleta, lib. 2. c. 61. Cowell.

TAIL, (Fr. taille, from tailler, to cut or limit. Lat. feodum talliatum.) Is a limited fee, opposed to fee-simple: and it is that inheritance whereof a man is seised to him and some particular heirs, exclusive of others, as the heirs of his body begotten or to be begotten. And he that giveth the lands in tail is called the donor, and he to whom the gift is made, the donee. Litt. 18. See Tenant in Tail, Tenant in Fee Simple. 2 Black. 104.

TAINT, (Fr. teinct, i. e. infectus, tinctus.) A conviction, or a person convicted. See Attaint.

TAKING, felonious. See Larceny.

TAKING, unlawful. Whoever, either by fraud or force, dispossesses another of his goods or chattels, is guilty of a transgression against the laws of society. 3 Bl. 145.

TALE, or Count. The first of pleadings, or mutual altercations between the plaintiff and defendant, is the declaration, narratio, or count, anciently called the Tale, in which the plaintiff sets forth the cause of his complaint at length. 3 Black. 293.

TALENT. A weight of sixty-two pounds; also a sum of money among the Greeks of about 100*l*. value. Merch. Dict. Cowell.

TALES, is used in the law for a supply of men impannelled on a jury and not appearing, or on their appearance challenged as not indifferent; when the judge, upon motion, orders a supply to be made by the sheriff, &c. of one or more such persons present in court, equal in reputation to those that were impannelled, to make up a full jury, which he could do by the common law. 35 Hen. 8, c. 6. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 32. 14 Eliz. c. 9. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 32, &c.

Tales are of two sorts, i. e. tales de circumstantibus, and a decem tales. A tales de circumstantibus is where a full jury do not appear at the nisi prius, or so many are challenged that there is not a full jury; then, on the prayer of the plaintiff's council or attorney, the judge will grant this tales, which the sheriff returns immediately in court. A decem tales is when a full jury doth not appear at a trial at bar, and is a writ to the sheriff apponere decem tales. 10 Rep. 102. Finch 414. 2 Roll. Abr. 67.

TALES, is also the name of a book in the King's Bench office, of such persons as were admitted of the tales. 4 Inst. 93.

TALIONIS LEX. The law of retaliation. This can never be in all cases (indeed but in few) an adequate or permanent rule of punishment. In the case of murder the punishment is death. See Lex Talionis.

TALLAGE, (Tallagium.) from the Fr. taille. Is metaphorically used for a part or a share of a man's substance, carved out of the whole, paid by way of tribute, toll, or tax. Cowell. 2 Inst. 532. 1 Black. 310.

TALLAGERS. Tax or toll-gatherers. Cowell.

TALLAGIUM FACERE. To give up accounts in the exchequer, where the method of accounting is by talleys. Cowell.

TALLEY, (Tallea, Fr. Taille, Ital. Tagliare, i. e. scindere.) Is a stick cut in two parts, on each whereof is marked with notches, or otherwise, what is due between debtor and creditor; the ancient way of keeping all accounts, one part being kept by the creditor, the other by the debtor. Hence the tallier of the exchequer is now called the teller; and in the exchequer there is a talley court, where the two deputy chamberlains of the exchequer attend, and the talley cutter. Lex Constitut. 205. Cowell.

TALLIA. Every canon and prebendary in our old cathedral churches, had a stated allowance of provisions delivered to him per modum talliæ. Hence their commons in meat and drink were called tallia. Ibid.

TALLYMAN. A person that sells or lets goods, cloaths, or the like, to be paid for by so much per week. Merch. Dict.

TALWOOD, (Talliatura.) Fire-wood cleft and cut into billets of a certain length, otherwise written talywood and talshide in the ancient statutes. 34 & 35 Hen. 8. c. 3. 7 Edw. 6. c. 7. 43 Eliz. c. 14.

TAM QUAM, is in nature of a qui tam, being where a man prosecutes as well for the king as for himself, tam pro domino rege, quam pro seipso, on an information for breach of some penal law, whereby any penalty is given, one part to the king, the other, or another part, to the party that sues. 2 Inst. 118. Cro. Eliz. 655. Cro. Jac. 184. See Information.

TANGIER. An ancient city of Barbary, formerly part of the dominions of the crown of England, as Gibraltar is at present. Stat. 15 Car. 2. c. 7. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 26.

TANISTRY, seems to be derived from Thanis, and is a law or custom in some parts of Ireland, of which Sir John Davis says, that is, a man of ripe age is to be preferred before a child, as an uncle before a nephew, and the like. Dav. Rep. 28. Antiq. Hibern. p. 38. Cowell.

TANNARE. Is a word used for to dress or tan leather. Cowell.

TANNERS. See Manufacturers.

TANTAMOUNT, is where one thing doth amount to another, and then it is all one as if it was the same: as a lease and release amount to a feoffment; and licence to occupy land for years, to a lease for the term. 14 Hen. 8. c. 13. Shep. Epit. 1126.

TARE and TRET. The first is an allowance in merchandise, made to the buyer for the weight of the box, bag, or cask, wherein goods are packed. And the last is a consideration in the weight, for waste in emptying and reselling the goods by dust, dirt, or breaking. Cowel.

TARGET, (from the Lat. Targus.) A shield, originally made of leather, wrought out of the back of an ox. Blount.

TARGIA, (Tarida.) A ship of burden, called a tartan. Cowell. Blount.

TARIFF. Custom, duties, toll, or tribute payable upon merchandize exported and imported, are so called. 1 Black. 313.

TARPAULIN, or TARPAWLING. A tarred canvas to keep the weather out of ships; used also for a mariner, or dredge in a ship that does the vilest service. Merc. Dict. Cowell.

TARTARON. A sort of fine cloth or silk. Stat. 4 Hen. 8. c. 6.

TAS, (Fr.) Is a cock, heap, stack, or rick of hay or corn. Law Fr. Dict. Cowell.

TASSALE, for Casula. A priest's garment covering him over.

TASSUM, (from the Fr. Tasser, to pile up.) A mow of corn or hay. Tasser, to mow or heap up; and ad tassum furcare is to pitch to the mow. Cowell.

TATH. In the counties of Norfolk and Suffolk, the lords of manors claimed the privilege of having their tenants flocks or sheep brought at night upon their own demesne lands, there to be folded for the improvement of the ground; which liberty was called by the name of Tath. Spelm. Cowell.

TAVERN. See Alehouses, Drunkenness, Inns, and Tippling.

TAU. Signifies a cross. Cowell.

TAURI LIBERI LIBERTAS, in ancient charters, is used for a common bull; so called, because he is free and common to all the tenants within such a manor or liberty, &c. Cowell. Blount.

TAWERS. See Leather and Manufacturers.

TAX, (Taxa, from the Gr. Τάξις, i. e. Ordo. Tributum.) A tribute or imposition laid upon the subject. 4 Inst. 26. 33.

It is said, that in ancient times taxes were imposed by the king at his pleasure; but king Edward I. bound himself and his successors, in the 25th year of his reign, that from that time forward no tax should be laid upon the subject without the assent of the lords and commons in parliament. Stat. 25 Edw. 1. c. 5.

The taxes which are now raised upon the subject are the following: 1. The land-tax, where unredeemed; 2. The malt-tax: 3. The customs; 4. The excise; 5. Postages of letters; 6. The stamp-duties; 7. The assessed taxes and personal property tax: and 8. The hackney-coach and hawkers' licences.

TAXATIO BLADORUM. A tax or imposition laid upon corn. Cowell.

TAXATIO NORWICENSIS. The valuation of ecclesiastical benefices made through every diocese in England, on occasion of the Pope's granting to the king the tenth of all spirituals for three years. Which taxation was made by Walter, bishop of Norwich, delegated by the Pope to this office in 38 Hen. 3. and obtained till the 19th of Edw. I. when a new taxation, advancing the value, was made by the bishops of Winchester and Lincoln. Cowell.

TAXERS. Two officers yearly chosen in Cambridge, to see the true gauge of all weights and measures; though the name took its rise from taxing or rating the rents of houses, which was anciently the duty of their offices.

TAYLORS. See London, art. Taylors and Manufactures. Art. Buttons.

TEAM AND THEAME, (from the Sax. Tyman, i. e. propagare, to teem or bring forth.) A royalty or privilege granted by the king's charter to the lord of a manor, for the having, restraining, and judging of bondmen and villeins, with their children, goods, and chattels, in his court. Glanvil. lib. 5. c. 2.

TECHNICAL WORDS. In some cases particular words of art must be used, which are so appropriated by the law to express the precise idea which it entertains of the offence, that no other words, however synonymous they may seem, are capable of doing it. Thus, in treason, the facts must be laid to be done treasonably, and against his allegiance, else the indictment is void. In indictments for murder, it is necessary to say, that the party indicted murdered, not killed or slew the other. In all indictments for felonies, the adverb feloniously must be used; and for burglaries, burglariously; and all these to ascertain the intent. In rapes, the word ravished is necessary, and must not be expressed by any periphrasis; in order to render the crime certain. So in larcenies also, the words feloniously took and carried away are necessary to every indictment, for these only can express the very offence. 4 Black. 302.

TEDING-PENNY, Tething-penny, Tithing-penny. A small duty or payment to the sheriff from each tithing, towards the charge of keeping courts, for which some of the religious were exempted by charter from the king. Chart. Hen. 1. Cowell.

TEENAGE, (from the Sax. Tynan, to inclose or shut); is used in many parts of England for wood for fences and inclosures. Ibid.

TEINLAND, Tainland, or Thainland. The land of a thaine, or noble person. Ibid.

TELLER. Is a considerable officer of the exchequer, of which officers there are four, whose office is to receive all money due to the king, and to give the clerk of the pells a bill to charge him therewith. They also pay to all persons any money payable by the king, by warrant from the auditor of the receipt; and make weekly and yearly books of their receipts and payments, which they deliver to the lord treasurer. Ibid.

TELLIGRAPHIE. (from the Gr. τηλες, procul, and Γραφω, scribo, writing. Are written evidences of things far past. Blount.

TELIWORK. Is that work or labour which the tenant was bound to do for his lord, for a certain number of days; from the Saxon Tellan, numerare, and work, opus. Thorn. Ann. 1364. Cowell.

TEMENTALE, or TENMENTALE. A tax of two shillings upon every ploughland. How. Hist. fo. 419. Cowell.

TEMPLARS, (Templarii.) The Knights Templars were a religious order of knighthood, instituted about the year 1119, so called because they dwelt in part of the buildings belonging to the Temple at Jerusalem, and not far from the Sepulchre. They entertained christian strangers and pilgrims charitably, and in their armour led them through the Holy Land, to view the sacred monuments of christianity. This order was far spread, and particularly here in England. The Temples, which we now call the inns of court, were the places where they dwelt, and in the Middle Temple the king's treasure was kept. Cowell.

TEMPORALTIES OF BISHOPS are the revenues, lands, tenements, and lay-fees, belonging to bishops, as barons and lords of parliament, i. e. all things which a bishop hath by livery from the king, as manors, lands, tithes, and the like. 1 Rol. Abr. 881.

TEMPTATIO, or TENTATIO, is used in ancient records for a trial or proof. Cowell.

TEMPUS Pessonis. Mast time in the forest, which is from about Michaelmas to St. Martin's Day, November 11. Ibid.

TEMPUS pinguedinis et fumationis. The season of killing the buck and the doe. Ibid.

TENA. Coif, worn by ecclesiastics. Ibid.

TENANCIES. Houses or places for habitation, held of another. Ibid.

TENANT, (Tenens, from the Latin tenere, to hold.) Signifies one that holds or possesses lands or tenements by any kind of right, either in fee, for life, years, or at will. Kitch. fol. 160.

TENANTS IN COMMON. Are such as hold land for life or years, by several titles, or by one title and several rights; and as joint-tenants have one joint freehold, so tenants in common law have separate freeholds. 1 Inst. 188. 2 Lill. Abr. 559.

TENANT TO THE PRÆCIPE. Is he against whom the writ of præcipe is to be brought in suing out a recovery. 3 Mod. See Recoveries.

TENANT IN TAIL. When a fee was restrained to some particular heirs exclusive of others, as to the heirs of a man's body, by which only his lineal descendants were admitted in exclusion of collateral heirs, or to the heirs male of his body, in exclusion both of collaterals and lineal females also. This was in common law called a conditional fee, by reason of the condition expressed or implied in the duration of it; so that if the donee died without such particular heirs, the reversion not being disposed of, the land would revert to the donor. Fleta, c. 3. § 52. Black. 109.

For this was a condition annexed by law to all grants whatsoever; that, on failure of the heirs specified in the grant, the grant should be at an end, and the land returned to its ancient proprietor. Plowd. 241.

Now, with regard to the condition annexed to these fees by the common law, our ancestors held, that such a gift (to a man and the heirs of his body) was a gift upon condition that it should revert to the donor, if the donee had no heirs of his body; but, if he had, it should then remain to the donee. They therefore called it a fee-simple, on condition that he had issue.

And by the statute de donis, 13 Ed. 1. c. 1. it is enacted, that from "thenceforth the will of the donor be observed; and that the tenements so given (to a man and the heirs of his body) should at all events go to the issue, if there were any; or, if none, should revert to the donor."

Upon the construction of this act of parliament, the judges determined that the donee had no longer a conditional fee-simple, which became absolute and at his own disposal the instant any issue was born; but they divided the estate into two parts, leaving in the donee a new kind of particular estate, which they denominated a fee-tail; and vesting in the donor the ultimate fee-simple of the land, expectant on the failure of issue; which expectant estate is what we now call a reversion. 2 Inst. 335. And hence it is that Littleton tells us, that tenant in fee-tail is by virtue of the statute of Westminster the second. 2 Inst. 413.

An estate to a man and his heirs for another's life cannot be entailed: for this is strictly no estate of inheritance, (as will appear hereafter,) and therefore not within the statute de donis. 2 Vern. 225.

Neither can a copyhold estate be entailed by virtue of the statute, for that would tend to encroach upon and restrain the will of the lord: but, by the special custom of the manor, a copyhold may be limited to the heirs of the body, for here the custom ascertains and interprets the lord's will. 3 Rep. 8.

2. Estates tail are either general or special. Tail-general is where lands and tenements are given to one, and the heirs of his body begotten, which is called tail-general, because, how often soever such donee in tail be married, his issue in general by all and every such marriage, is, in successive order, capable of inheriting the estate-tail, per formam doni. Litt. s. 14, 15. Tenant in tail special is where the gift is restrained to certain heirs of the donee's body, and does not go to all of them in general. And this may happen several ways. Ibid. s. 16, 26, 27, 28, 29. As where lands and tenements are given to a man and the heirs of his body, on Mary his now wife to be begotten. Here no issue can inherit, but such special issue as is engendered between them two; not such as the husband may have by another wife, and therefore it is called special tail. And here we may observe, that the words of inheritance (to him and his heirs) give him an estate in fee; but they being heirs to be by him begotten, this makes it a fee-tail; and the person being also limited, on whom such heirs shall be begotten, (viz. Mary his present wife) this makes it a fee-tail special. 2 Black. 113.

3. There is still another species of entailed estates, now indeed grown out of use, yet still capable of subsisting in law, which are estates in liberi maritagio, or frankmarriage. These are defined to be, where tenements are given by one man to another, together with a wife, who is the daughter or cousin of the donor, to hold in frankmarriage. Now by such gift, though nothing but the word frankmarriage is expressed, the donees shall have the tenement to them, and the heirs of the two bodies begotten; that is, they are tenants in special tail. For this one word, frankmarriage, does ex vi termini not only create an inheritance, like the word frankalmoign, but likewise limits that inheritance, supplying not only words of descent, but of procreation also. Such donees in frankmarriage are liable to no service but fealty; for a rent reserved thereon is void, until the fourth degree of consanguinity be past between the issues of the donor and donee. Litt. s. 19, 20. 2 Black. 115.

4. The incidents to a tenancy in tail, under the statute Westm. 2. are chiefly these. 1. That a tenant in tail may commit waste on the estate-tail, by felling timber, pulling down houses, or the like, without being impeached, or called to account for the same. 2. That the wife of the tenant in tail shall have her dower, or thirds of the estate-tail. 3. That the husband of a female tenant in tail may be tenant by the curtesy of the estate-tail. 4. That an estate tail may be barred, or destroyed by a fine, by a common recovery, or by lineal warranty descending with assets to the heir. 2 Black. 115.

Also, by stat. 33 Hen. 8. c. 39. s. 75, all estates-tail are rendered liable to be charged for payment of debts due to the king by record or special contract. Also, by 21 Jac. 1. c. 19. they are subjected to be sold for the debts contracted by a bankrupt. And, by the construction put on the statute 43 Eliz. c. 4. an appointment (2 Vern. 453. Chan. Prec. 16.) by tenant in tail of the lands entailed, to a charitable use, is good without fine or recovery. And by the statutes for the redemption and sale of the land-tax, they may be sold for the redemption thereof.

TENANT IN TAIL, AFTER POSSIBILITY OF ISSUE EXTINCT. This happens where one is tenant in special tail, and a person, from whose body the issue was to spring, dies without issue; or, having left issue, that title becomes extinct: in either of these cases the surviving tenant in special tail becomes tenant in tail after possibility of issue extinct. As, where one has an estate to him and his heirs on the body of his present wife to be begotten, and the wife dies without issue: in this case the man has an estate-tail, which cannot possibly descend to any one; and therefore the law makes use of this long periphrasis, as absolutel necessary to give an adequate idea of his estate. For if it had called him barely tenant in fee-tail special, that would not have distinguished him from others; and besides, he has no longer an estate of inheritance, or fee, for he can have no heirs capable of taking per formam doni. 1 Roll. Rep. 184. 11 Rep. 80. Had it called him tenant in tail without issue, this had only related to the present fact, and would not have excluded the possibility of future issue. Had he been stiled tenant in tail without possibility of issue, this would exclude time past as well as present, and he might under this description never have had any possibility of issue. No definition therefore could so exactly mark him out, as this of tenant in tail after possibility of issue extinct, which (with a precision peculiar to our own law) not only takes in the possibility of issue in tail which he once had, but also states that this possibility is now extinguished and gone. 2 Black. 124.

This estate must be created by the act of God, that is, by the death of that person out of whose body the issue was to spring; for no limitation, conveyance, or other human act can make it. For, if land be given to a man and his wife, and the heirs of their two bodies begotten, and they are divorced a vinculo matrimonii, they shall neither of them have this estate, but be barely tenants for life, notwithstanding the inheritance once vested in them. A possibility of issue is always supposed to exist, in law, unless extinguished by the death of the parties, even though the donees be each of them an hundred years old.

This estate is of an amphibious nature, partaking partly of an estate-tail, and partly of an estate for life. The tenant is, in truth, only tenant for life, but with many of the privileges of a tenant in tail; as, not to be punishable for waste, &c. * for he is tenant in tail, with many of the restrictions of a tenant for life; as, to forfeit his estate if he alienes it in fee-simple; whereas such alienation by tenant in tail, though voidable by the issue, is no forfeiture of the estate to the reversioner, who is not concerned in interest, till all possibility of issue be extinct. But, in general, the law looks upon this estate as equivalent to an estate for life only, and as such will permit this tenant to exchange his estate with a tenant for life; which exchange can only be made of estates that are equal in their nature.

TENDE, seems to signify as much as render, or offer; it is mentioned in our old books, as to tend a traverse, an averment, or the like. Britton, c. 76. Staundf. Prærog. 16.

TENDER, (Fr. Tendre.) Is the offering of money, or any other thing in satisfaction, or circumspectly to endeavour the performance of a thing. Terms de Ley, 557.

To an action upon the case upon assumpsit, the defendant may plead matter in excuse, or discharge, as before, a general imparlance, he may plead a tender, and that he was always ready to pay. Lut. 226. 538. Clift. 203. Willes, 692.

And a tender of bank-notes is good, unless specially objected to on that account. 3 T. Rep. 554.

But by 38 Geo. 3. c. 1. no person, during the restriction on the bank from making payments in cash, shall be held to special bail, unless the usual affidavit adds that there has been no offer to pay in bank-notes, otherwise the same proceedings are to be had as where no affidavit is filed. s. 8.

And by 43 Geo. 3. c. 18. persons applying to be discharged, shall prove a tender in notes or in money.

Also by 38 Geo. 3. c. 1. if any person having offered to pay in bank-notes, cannot, by reason of this act, be held to special bail, the court may order him to deposit bank-notes to answer the demand; and if not done, he may be arrested and held to bail. s. 8.

So to debt upon bond, the defendant may plead a tender, and always ready. 2 Mod. Ent. 234. Bro. V. M. 213.

But where a tender is pleaded, the money must be brought into court; and if the plaintiff accept it, he cannot afterwards proceed for damages. 1 Ld. Raym. 639. Salk. 583. 2 Ld. Raym. 774. 2 Cro. 126.

And if a defendant bring money into court on a plea of tender, the plaintiff may take it out, though he reply that the tender was not made before action brought. 1 Bos. and Pull. 332.

So the defendant may plead a tender of the rent at a day, and always ready. 2 Mod. Ent. 236. Lutw. 367.

So the plaintiff may plead in bar of an avowry tender of amends. Lutw. 1232.

Also to an involuntary trespass the plaintiff may plead a tender of sufficient amends. 1 Bro. Ent. 332. Tho. Ent. 304.

And by the stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 16. to trespass quare clausum fregit, the defendant disclaiming title to the land, and shewing it to be an involuntary trespass, may plead tender of amends at any time before action brought. So to a negligent trespass by escape of cattle, or the like, 2 Rol. 570. c. 20: but tender after action brought is too late. Cro. Car. 264. 1 Rol. 538. l. 3. And the tender must be of a sum certain.

But to a voluntary trespass, or trespass by mistake, as by putting cattle into a close, or the like, tender before action brought is no plea. 2 Rol. 570. l. 25. Noy 12. 3 Lev. 37. Nor can it be pleaded in trespass for taking goods. 1 Str. 549.

And by several modern statutes, particularly 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. in case of irregularity in the method of distraining, 24 Geo. 2. c. 24. in case of mistakes committed by justices of the peace; 28 Geo. 3. c. 37. in case of error by custom-house officers; and 23 Geo. 3. c. 70. in respect of mistakes by excise officers, the party may tender sufficient amends to the party injured, and it will be a bar of all actions, whether he thinks proper to accept them or not.

* But although he is not punishable if he cuts down trees, yet they are not his property, but will belong to the first person living at the time when they are cut, who has an estate of inheritance. Harg. Co. Litt. 27. b. 3 P. Wms. 240.

To a plea of tender of amends, the plaintiff may reply that the defendant did not tender, or that the amends were not sufficient. Comyn's Dig. Plead. 3 m. 36.

TENEMENT, (Tenementum.) Signifies properly a house or home-stall; but more largely it comprehends not only house, but all corporeal inheritances which are holden of another, and all inheritances issuing out of or exerciseable with the same. Co. Lit. 6. 19. 154. And it may be said to be any thing that is any way held or possessed; but being a word of a large and ambiguous meaning, and not so certain as messuage, therefore it is not fit to be used to express any thing which requires a particular description. 2 Lill. Abr. 566.

TENEMENTARY LAND. The outland of manors granted out to tenants by the Saxon thanes, under arbitrary rents and services. Spelm. Cowell.

TENEMENTIS LEGATIS. An ancient writ lying to the city of London, or any other corporation; (where the old custom was, that men might devise, by will, lands and tenements as well as goods and chattels) for the hearing and determining any controversy touching the same. Reg. Orig. 294. Cowell.

TENENDUM, is a clause in a deed wherein the tenure of the land is created and limited. The office of a tenendum in a deed, is to limit and appoint the tenure of the land which is held, and how, and of whom it is to be held. Co. Lit. 6. a. 2 Inst. 66, 67. 500, 501, 502, 505.

The tenendum most commonly and properly succeeds the habendum, and was usually in these words, tenendum per servitium, &c. But the tenendum seems now to be incorporated with the habendum; for we say, "to have and to hold," in which clause the estate is limited. 2 Black. 298.

TENENTIBUS IN ASSISA NON QUERENDIS. A writ that lay for him to whom a disseisor had alienated the land whereof he disseised another, that he be not molested in assise for the damages, if the disseisor have wherewith to satisfy them. Reg. Orig. 214.

TENHEED, or TIENHEOFED. A Saxon word, signifying Decanus, Caput vel Princeps Decaniæ sive Decuriæ. Leg. Edw. Conf. c. 29.

TENMENTALE, (Sax. Tienmantale, i. e. decem virorum numerus) Decennaria, Tithinga. Leg. Edw. Conf. Also an ancient tax or tribute paid to the king. Hoveden 737.

TENOR, (Lat.) Of writs, records, and the like, is the substance or purport of them; or a transcript or copy. 2 Hawk. P. C. 295.

TENORE INDICTAMENTI MITTENDO. A writ whereby the record of an indictment, and the process thereupon, was called out of another court into the king's bench. Reg. Orig. 69.

TENORE PRÆSENTIUM. The tenor of these presents, is the matter contained therein, or rather the intent and meaning thereof. Cowell.

TENTATUS PANIS. The essay or assay of bread. Blount.

TENTER. A stretcher or trier of cloth, used by dyers. Cowell.

TENTHS, (Decimæ.) Are the tenth part of the annual value of every spiritual benefice, being that yearly portion or tribute which all ecclesiastical livings pay to the king. They were annexed perpetually to the crown by stat. 26 Hen. 8. c. 3. 1 Eliz. c. 4. And at last Q. Anne granted the same, with the first-fruits, towards the augmentation of the maintenance of poor clergymen. 1 Anne, c. 11.

TENTS. See Felony.

TENURE, (Tenura, from the Lat. Tenere.) Is the manner whereby lands or tenements are holden; or the service that the tenant owes to his lord. 1 Inst. 1. 93. And all the lands and tenements in England are holden either mediately or immediately of the king, and therefore he is summus dominus supra omnes. 2 Inst. 551.

Under the word tenure is included every holding of an inheritance; and it sometimes denotes the duration of the tenant's estate: as if a man holds to himself and his heirs, it is called tenure in fee simple. At other times the tenure is coupled with words pointing out the instrument by which an inheritance is held. Thus, if the holding is by copy of court-roll, it is called tenure by copy of court-roll. At other times, this word is coupled with words that shew the principal service by which an inheritance is held: as where a man holds by knight's service, it is called tenure by knight's service. Rol. Abr. title Tenure.

Burgage tenure is where land is holden of the lord of the borough, at a certain rent. Grand serjeanty, a tenure of lands by honorary services at the king's coronation. Ibid.

Of the general ancient tenures, knight service, chivalry, escuage, petit-serjeanty, villenage, &c. are taken away by stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24. The common tenures at this day are fee-simple, fee-tail, by the curtesy, in dower, for life and years, and copyhold tenure. 2 Black. 59.

TERM, (Terminus.) Signifies commonly the limitation of time or estate; as a lease for term of life, or years. Bract. lib. 2.

TERMINUM QUI PRETERIIT. Writ of entry ad. This is a writ for the reversioner, when the possession is withheld by the lessee or a stranger, after the determination of a lease for years. F. N. B. 201.

This writ is now disused, since the invention of ejectments. 3 Black. 183.

TERMOR, (Tenens ex Termino.) Is he that holds lands or tenements for term of years or life. Litt. 100.

TERMS. Are those spaces of time wherein the courts of justice are open, for all that complain of wrongs or injuries, and seek their rights by course of law or action, in order to their redress; and during which, the courts in Westminster-Hall sit and give judgments, &c. But the high court of parliament, the chancery, and inferior courts, do not observe the terms; only the court of king's bench, the common pleas, and exchequer, the highest courts at common law. Of these terms there are four in every year: viz, Hilary term, Easter term, Trinity term, and Michaelmas term.

The terms in Scotland are Martinmas, Candlemas, Whitsuntide, and Lammas. Stat. 6 Anne, c. 7.

TERMS OF THE LAW, are technical words and terms of art, particularly used in and adapted to the profession of the law. 2 Hawk. P. C. 239.

TERMS for payment of Rent, are the four quarterly feasts, upon which rent is usually paid. Cowell.

TERRA frusca. Fresh land, or such as hath not been lately ploughed. Cowell.

TERRA hydata. Land subject to the payment of hydage. Selden.

TERRA lucrabilis. Land that may be gained from the sea, or inclosed out of a waste, to a particular use. Cowell.

TERRA Normanorum. In the beginning of Hen. 3. such land in England as had been lately held by some noble Norman, who, by adhering to the French king, or dauphin, had forfeited his estate in this kingdom, which by this means became an escheat to the crown, was called Terra Normannorum, and restored, or otherwise disposed at the king's pleasure. Par. Antiq. 197. Cowell.

TERRA nova. Land newly asserted and converted from wood ground to arable. Cowell.

TERRA PUTURA. Land in forests held by the tenure of furnishing man's meat, horse-meat, and the like, to the keepers therein. Ibid.

TERRA fabulosa. Gravelly or sandy ground. Ibid.

TERRA VESTITA. Land sown with corn. Ibid.

TERRA mainabilis. Tillable land. Ibid.

TERRA marenuata. Land that has the liberty of free warren. Ibid.

TERRÆ Testamentales. Lands that were held free from feodal services, in allodio, in socage, descendible to all the sons, and therefore called gavel-kind, were deviseable by will, and thereupon called terræ testamentales, as the thane who possessed them was said to be testamento dignus. Cowell.

TERRAGE, (Terragium.) Edward the Third granted to John of Gaunt, and Blanch his wife, for their lives, quod sint quieti de thelonio, passagio, soccagio, lastagio, tallagio, caruagio, priscagio, pickagio, & TERRAGIO, which seems to be an exemption a precartis, viz. boons of ploughing, reaping, &c. and perhaps from all landtaxes, or from money paid for digging and breaking the earth in fairs and markets. Cowell.

TERRAR, or Terrier, (Terrarium, catalogus Terrarum.) Is a land-roll, or survey of lands, either of a single person, or of a town; containing the quantity of acres, tenants names, and such like. Ibid.

TERRARIUS. A landholder, or one who possesses many farms of land, Ibid.

TERRARIUS Canobialis. An officer in religious houses, whose office was to keep a terrier of all their estates. Ibid.

TERRE-TENANT, Tertenant, (Terræ Tenens.) Is he who hath the actual possession of the land. West. Symb. par. 2. Briton, cap. 29. 3 Rep. 12. Cro. Eliz. 812. Cro. Jac. 506.

TERRIS, Bonis et Catallis rehabendis post Purgationem. A writ for a clerk to recover his lands, goods, and chattels, formerly seized, after he had cleared himself of the felony of which he was accused, and delivered to his ordinary to be purged. Reg. Orig. 68.

TERRIS et Catallis tentis ultra debitum levatum. A judicial writ for the restoring of lands or goods to a debtor, that was distrained above the quantity of the debt. Reg. Judic. 38.

TERRIS liberandis. A writ which lay for a man convicted by attaint, to bring the record and process before the king, and take a fine for his imprisonment, and then to deliver him his lands and tenements again, and release him of the strip and waste. Reg. Orig. 232.

TERTIAN. A measure of 84 gallons, the third part of a tun. Cowell.

TEST ACTS. By 25 Car. 2. c. 2. commonly called the Test Act, all officers civil and military are to take the oaths and test; and if they neglect it, and execute any office within the words of that statute, being legally convicted thereof upon information, presentment, or indictment, in any of the courts at Westminster, or at the assises, they shall forfeit 500*l.* to be recovered by him who will sue for the same in any action of debt, &c. See Oaths.

TESTA de Nevil. An ancient record in the King's Remembrance Office in the Exchequer, containing an account of lands held in grand serjeanty, with fees and escheats to the king, &c. Cowell.

TESTAMENT, (Testamentum.) Is thus defined by Plowden, Testamentum est testatio mentis, a testament is a witness of the mind. It is verbum simplex, and therefore may be better defined, Testamentum est ultimæ voluntatis justa sententia, de eo quod quis post mortem suam fieri vult, &c Cowell. See Wills.

TESTAMENTARY CAUSES. A species of causes belonging to the ecclesiastical jurisdiction. 3 Black. 95. which vide.

TESTAMENTARY GUARDIAN. By 12 Car. 2. c. 24. any father may, by deed or will, dispose of the custody of his child, either born or unborn, to any person, except a popish recusant, either in possession or reversion, until such child attains the age of one and twenty years; and the guardians so appointed are called guardians by statute or testamentary guardians. 1 Black. Com. 462.

TESTAMENTARY JURISDICTION in Equity. For want of a power of discovering, at law, what rests only in the private knowledge of the party, courts of equity have acquired a concurrent jurisdiction with every other court, in all matters of account. As incident to accounts, they take a concurrent cognizance of the administration of the personal assets, consequently of debts, legacies, the distribution of the residue, and the conduct of executors and administrators. 3 Black. 437.

TESTAMENTARY JURISDICTION IN SPIRITUAL COURTS, is principally exercised in the consistory courts of every diocesan bishop, and in the prerogative court of the metropolitan, originally; and in the arches court and court of delegates by way of appeal. It is divisible into three branches: the probate of wills, the granting of administration, and the suing for legacies. The two former of which, when no opposition is made, are granted merely ex officio et debito justitiæ, and are then the object of what is called the voluntary, and not the contentious jurisdiction. But when a caveat is entered against proving the will, or granting administration, and a suit thereupon follows, to determine either the validity of the testament, or who hath a right to the administration; this claim and obstruction by the adverse party, are an injury to the party entitled, and as such are remedied by the sentence of the spiritual court, either by establishing the will, or granting the administration.

TESTAMENTO ANNEXO, Administration cum. If a testator makes his will, without naming any executors, or if he names incapable persons, or if the executors named refuse to act; in any of these cases, the ordinary must grant administration cum testamento annexo, to some other person. 2 Black. 503.

TESTATOR, (Lat.) He that makes a testament or will.

TESTATUM, is a writ in personal actions, where the defendant cannot be arrested upon a capias in the county where the action is laid, but is returned non est inventus by the sheriff; then this writ shall be sent out into any other county where such person is thought to be, or to have wherewith to satisfy: and this is termed a testatum, by reason the sheriff hath testified that the defendant was not to be found in his bailiwick. Kitch. Ret. Writs, 287.

TESTE. A word generally used in the last part of all writs, wherein the date is contained, which begin with these words, Teste meipso, &c. if it be an original writ; or teste the lord chief justice, &c. if judicial. Co. Lit. 134.

TESTIMONIAL, is a certificate under the hand of a justice of peace, or some court, testifying some special matter, such as the place and time, when and where a soldier or mariner landed, and the place of his dwelling and birth unto which he is to pass. 39 Eliz. cap. 17.

TESTIMONIALS OF CLERGY, are necessary to be made by persons present, that a clergyman inducted to a benefice hath performed all things according to the act of uniformity; to evidence that the clerk hath complied with what the law requires on his institution and induction, which in some cases he shall be put to do. Count Pars. Comp. 24. 26.

TESTIMOIGNES, is French for witnesses, and Testimoignage, testimony. Law Fr. Dict.

TESTON, or Testoon, commonly called tester, a sort of money which among the French did bear the value of 18*d.* but being made of brass lightly gilt with silver, in the reign of King Henry the Eighth, it was reduced to 12*d.* and afterwards to 6*d.* Lowndes's Ess. on Coins, 22.

THREATENING LETTERS. By 9 Geo. 1. c. 22. amended by 27 Geo. 2. c. 15. Knowingly to send any letter without a name, or with a fictitious name, demanding money, venison, or any other valuable thing, or threatening (without any demand) to kill or fire the house of any person, is made felony without benefit of clergy.

The words of these statutes are, "shall knowingly send," and therefore it has been determined, if the writer of a threatening letter delivers it himself, he is not guilty of felony. Leach. 351.

THREATS. Threats and menaces of bodily hurt, through fear of which a man's business is interrupted, is a species of injury to individuals. But a menace alone, without a consequent inconvenience, makes not the injury; but to complete the wrong, there must be both of them together. The remedy for this is in pecuniary damages, to be recovered by action of trespass vi & armis. 3 Black. 120. But where bodily harm is justly feared from any such menaces, surety of the peace may be obtained. See Surety.

THRENGUS. A vassal, but not of the lowest degree of those who held lands of the chief lord. Spelm. Cowell.

TIBLA, (Sax.) Signifies an accusation in the laws of K. Canutus. Cowell.

TILES. See Bricks.

TILLAGE, (Agricultura.) Is of great account in law, as being very profitable to the commonwealth; and therefore arable land hath the preference before meadows, pastures, and all other ground whatsoever. And so careful is our law to preserve it, that a bond or condition to restrain tillage, or sowing of lands, &c. is void. 11 Rep. 53.

TILTING. Where one kills another in fighting at tilting, by the king's command, the accident is excusable; but if it be by tilting without the command of the king, or by parrying with naked swords, covered with buttons at the points, which cannot be used without manifest hazard of life, it will be felony of manslaughter. H. P. C. 31.

TIMBER. See Trespass and Waste.

TIMBERLODE. A service by which tenants were to carry timber felled from the woods to the lord's house. Cowell.

TIME and Place. Are to be set forth with certainty in a declaration. 5 Mod. 286.

If no certain time is implied by law for the doing of any thing, and there is no time agreed upon by the parties, then the law doth allow a convenient time to the party for the doing thereof, i. e. as much as shall be adjudged reasonable, without prejudice to the doer of it. 2 Lill. Abr. 572.

Regularly, there cannot be any fraction in a day, and therefore the proceedings were set aside, where it appeared the principal surrendered on the day, though after the return of the scire facias. Rep. Temp. Hardw. per Annaly, 208.

TIME LIMITED. See Limitation.

TINEL LE ROY, (Fr.) The king's hall wherein his servants used to dine and sup. 13 R. 2. c. 3. Cowell.

TINET, (Tinettum.) is used in Monmouthshire and other places in or bordering on South Wales, for brush-wood and thorns, to make and repair hedges. In Monmouthshire, to tine a gap in a hedge is to fill it up with thorns, that cattle may not pass through it. Chart. 21 Hen. 6.

TINEWALD. The parliament or annual convention of the people of the Isle of Man. Cowell.

TINKERMEN. Those fishermen who destroyed the young fry on the river Thames, by nets and unlawful engines, till suppressed by the mayor and citizens of London. Cowell.

TINPENY. A tribute so called, usually paid for the liberty of digging in tin-hines, from the Sax. Tinnen Stannus, and Penig. Denarius. Ibid.

TIPSTAFFS. Officers appointed by the marshal of the king's bench, to attend upon the judges with a kind of rod or staff tipt with silver, who take into their custody all prisoners either committed or turned over by the judges at their chambers. Cowell.

TITHES, (Decimæ, from the Sax. Teotha, i. e. tenth.) A certain part of the fruit, or lawful increase of the earth, beasts and men's labour, which in most places, and of most things, is the tenth part, which, by the law, hath been given to incumbents, in recompence of their office. 11 Co. Rep. 13. Dyer 84.

Tithes are either prædial, personal, or mixt; and these are divided into great or small tithes.

1. The prædial tithes are such as arise from the land spontaneously, or by manurance; as tithe of corn, hay, wood, herbs, wine, flax, hops, and fruits; such as apples, pears, and the like.

2. Mixt tithes are such as arise from cattle and beasts receiving their nourishment upon the land; and are therefore due in respect of calves, lambs, kids, pigs, wool, milk, cheese, eggs, and the like.

3. Personal tithes are the tenth part of the clear gain which is raised from the personal labour of a man, his charges, and expences, according to his condition and degree, being deducted; but these are only payable in such places as had accustomably for forty years before the stat. 2 and 3 Ed. 6. c. 13, paid personal tithes.

And by that statute, neither day labourers are obliged to pay personal tithes, nor, according to 1 Roll's Abridgment, c. 646, fol. 25, husbandry servants, in respect of their wages.

4. Other ecclesiastical revenues, usually considered with tithes as part of the inheritance of the church, are oblations or obventions, pensions and mortuaries.

And they are either voluntary, or due by custom at a certain time—as upon marriage, baptism, purification of women, funerals, or the like.

And by the statute 2 and 3 Ed. 6. c. 13. all who by the laws and customs of the realm ought to pay offerings, shall yearly pay them at the four most usual days, or otherwise at Easter.

5. Great tithes are chiefly of wood, corn, or hay; and small tithes are in general, unless there has been an immemorial usage to the contrary, all other prædial tithes, besides corn, hay, and wood; and likewise those tithes which are mixed and personal.

6. Of the produce of the earth;—the tithes are to be set out and taken in manner following:

Wheat and rye, by the tenth shock, and by the tenth sheaf.

Barley and oats, by the tenth cock or shock, and also the tenth sheaf.

Beans, pease, tares, and all other pulse, by the tenth cock, heap, or bundle.

Stubble: wheat stubble, employed in purposes of husbandry and tillage of the lands of the farm on which it grew, yields no tithe, but if sold, or otherwise disposed of, then by the tenth of its value.

Hay, clover, and other artificial grasses; by the tenth grass cock after having been tedded from the swath: of the first mowing; and, also of the second mowing by the tenth cock, when made into hay.

After-mowth of grass; clover, or other artificial grasses; if eaten by barren and unprofitable stock, by an agistment tithe.

Hobbings of grass in pasture: by the tenth cock.

Seeds of clover, artificial grasses, and also turnip, cole, and rape seed; if grown for seed, by the tenth measure of the seed when threshed out; if sold, by the tenth of what it sold for.

Turnips; if pulled, by every tenth turnip or heap.

Turnips, rape and cole; if eaten, whether by profitable or unprofitable stock, by an agistment tithe; if sold, by the tenth of their value.

Barren lands; titheable when cultivated.

Flax, hemp, and madder.—The tithes thereof are ascertained at five shillings per acre, and so in proportion for small quantities.

Woad or woald; by the tenth heap or gathering.

Saffron; by a tenth when gathered, though only once in three years.

Hops; by a tenth part of the whole after picking; that is, after pulled from the bine.

Potatoes and other roots growing in fields: by a tenth of their produce when taken up.

Gardens; by a tenth of their produce.

Orchards; by a tenth of their produce, whether windfalls or gathered.

Nursery grounds. Their produce, whether fruits or plants, indigenous or exotic, if sold in the way of trade, by a tenth, or tenth of their value.

Timber-wood, or charcoal; that is, oak, ash, and elm, above twenty years' growth, yield no tithe, except when cut down and sold as fire-wood, or converted into charcoal.

Other wood. All other wood of any growth, by a tenth, according to the quantity cut down, whether sold or not, except in counties where timber wood is scarce, and any other wood is substituted, as beech and the like.

Osiers and willows; by the tenth bundle or pole, when cut.

Underwood. Underwood, coppice-wood, loppings and toppings of old bowlings, loppings and toppings of trees, reeds, and germins, cut from stumps of trees, though above twenty years growth, by a tenth of their quantity when cut.

Hedge-rows and gorse or furze; if sold, or not used upon the farm on which they grow, by every tenth kid or faggot.

7. Of Sheep. The tithes are to be taken in manner following:

Lambs; by every tenth lamb, to be taken away when able to live upon the same food the dam doth: and the tenth of the value of the odd numbers: if sold upon the fall, the tenth of what they sold for: bought in and put to ewes, by an agistment tithe, to be computed from the time of weaning, unless kept until clip day and clipped.

Ewes and lambs, sold or removed out of the parish before clip-day, by an agistment tithe, to be computed from the last clip-day.

Feeding sheep-shearlings or hogs bred or bought in; by an agistment tithe, if sold or removed before clip-day, to be computed from the last clip-day, but if bought in from that day, until sold or removed.

Sheep, bought in and kept until clip-day, by the tenth weight of their wool.

Sheep dying. Dying after clip-day of the rot, or otherwise, whether bought in or bred upon the farm, by an agistment tithe, to be computed from the last clip-day, if bred on the farm; but if bought in, from that time until they died.

Ewes removed out of the parish to lamb by the tenth lamb, according to the number of ewes, and by the tenth of the value for the odd numbers.

Ewes or other sheep removed out of the parish to be clipped; by the tenth fleece, according to the number of sheep removed, and by the tenth of the weight of the odd fleeces.

Wool; by the tenth weight at the time of clipping.

Belts and locks; by the tenth weight when washed and dried.

8. Of Beasts. The tithes are to be taken in manner following:

Calves; by the tenth if ten; to be taken at the time of weaning, and by a tenth of the value of all above or under ten; if one or more, and sold upon the fall, or fed for the butchers, by the tenth of the price sold for, and in the same manner for all above ten.

Calves reared for the plough or pail yield no tithe; but if sold or removed before they are worked or milked, by an agistment tithe, to be computed from the time they become yearlings, until sold or removed.

Working beasts yield no tithe while working, unless they work for hire or profit, or are employed in another parish than that in which the owner lives; then by an agistment tithe.

Beasts turned off to feed; by an agistment tithe, to be computed from the day turned off until sold or removed.

Cows sold before calving or dying, by an agistment tithe, to be computed from the time they were let dry until they were sold or die.

Beasts bought in and sold again, by an agistment tithe, to be computed from the day bought in, until sold, except when kept in the straw yard, and fed with straw; but no exception if fed with hay, though the hay had before paid tithe.

Milk; by the whole of the milk milked on each natural day, as well in the morning as in the evening, to be computed from the time the first cow, after calving, is brought to the pail and milked; and so of every cow after calving, and no regard is paid to what they eat.

The cow-keeper is to give notice to the tithe-owner when and where he goes to milk his cows, and the tithe is to be fetched by him from the place where the cows are milked, unless there be a custom in the parish for the cow-keeper to deliver it to the tithe-owner elsewhere, or at the church porch; and unless he milk his cows in another parish than that in which they are fed; for the tithe of milk is payable to the tithe-owner of the parish in which the cows are fed, and not in that in which they are milked; in which case he is not obliged to fetch it, but the cow-keeper must bring it to the tithe-owner.

9. Of horses. The tithes are taken in the following manner:

Foals; by the tenth, if ten, to be taken at the time of weaning; and by the tenth of the value of all above or under ten, if sold, before used for the plough, by an agistment tithe, to be computed from the time they become yearlings, until sold or removed.

Horses kept for working the farm yield no tithe while working; but if used for hire or profit, or employed in another parish than that in which the owner lives, then by an agistment tithe.

Saddle and pleasure horses. Saddle horses, and horses used for pleasure only, yield no tithe; but if used for hire or profit, by an agistment tithe.

Horses turned up or bought to feed for sale; by an agistment tithe, to be computed from the time turned up or bought in until sold or removed.

Brood mares and horses taken in to feed or agist at so much per week, by an agistment tithe for the tithe kept.

It is to be observed, that the true object of agistment is not the improvement of the animal, but the tenth of what the land is worth to let, for taking in the cattle of another person to agist; and land on which cattle are fed for slaughter should be rated at double the value of the land on which store cattle are fed.

10. Of Pigs, the tithes are to be taken by the tenth pig, if ten, to be taken at the time of weaning, and for all above or under ten, the tenth of the value thereof at weaning.

Bought in and sold again, by the tenth of the clear profit thereof.

11. Of Rabbits and deer. Rabbits, if sold, by the tenth of both skin and carcase at every killing; and in like manner deer also will yield a tithe, if sold for profit, although feræ naturæ.

12. Of Fish, no tithe is payable, except in certain places by immemorial usage.

13. Of Pigeons, the tithe is taken by the tenth of the value of all pigeons, when sold.

Pigeon manure, if not used on the farm, but sold, is also titheable by the tenth of the value sold for.

14. Of Wild Fowl taken in decoys, and sold for profit, the tithe is taken by the tenth of the value when sold.

15. Of Honey and Wax the tithe is taken by the tenth measure of honey, and the tenth weight of wax.

16. Of Eggs, the tithe is taken by the tenth egg of all turkeys, hens, geese, ducks, or any other domesticated fowl, and by the tenth weight of the feathers of geese.

17. Of Mills, the tithe of corn-mills shall be paid of the clear yearly gains and profits, after deducting rent, servants wages, repairs, and other real expences, except of ancient mills erected before the 9th year of Edward II.

18. Other parish dues, payable to the minister of the parish, consist of Easter-offerings, mortuaries, and surplice fees.

Easter-offerings are payable for every person in the parish of sixteen years of age and upwards, by the master or mistress of a family, after the rate of two-pence per head.

Mortuaries are for every person dying in the parish, possessed of moveable goods to the value of forty pounds and upwards, his debts first paid—10*s*.

If to the value of thirty pounds, and under forty pounds—6*s*. 8*d*.

If to the value of six pounds thirteen and fourpence, and under thirty pounds—3*s*. 4*d*.

Except for beneficed clergymen, for whom a mortuary is only due to the bishop of the diocese wherein he held his benefice and resided.

Surplice fees are payable for every marriage, whether by licence or by banns, for every funeral, and for every churching, according to the custom of the parish.

By 7 & 8 W. 3. cap. 6, s. 1. it is, for the more easy recovery of small tithes, where the same do not amount to above the yearly value of forty shillings, from any one person, enacted, "that if any person shall fail in payment for twenty days after demand, the parson may make complaint in writing to two justices of the peace, neither being patrons, nor interested, who, after summoning the party, are to hear and determine the complaint, give a reasonable allowance for the tithes and costs not exceeding ten shillings.

If the person complained against insists on any prescription, composition, modus decimandi, or other title, delivers the same in writing to the justices, and gives to the party complaining sufficient security to pay costs at law, if the title is not allowed, the justices are not to give judgment. The justices have power to give costs, not exceeding ten shillings, to the party prosecuted, if they find the complaint false and vexatious. The act not to extend to tithes within the city of London, or in any other place, where the same are settled by any act of parliament. An appeal is given to the sessions, and no proceedings or judgment had by virtue of this act, to be removed, or superseded, by any writ of certiorari, or other writ whatsoever, unless the title of such tithes shall be in question.

By 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 34. par. 4. where any quaker shall refuse to pay, or compound for his great or small tithes, it shall be lawful for the two next justices of the peace of the same county, other than such justice of the peace as is patron of the church, or chapel, to which the tithes belong, or any ways interested, upon the complaint to convene before them such quaker, and to examine upon oath the truth of the complaint, and to ascertain what is due from such quaker, and by order under their hands and seals to direct the payment thereof, so as the sum ordered do not exceed ten pounds; and upon refusal of the quaker to pay, to levy the money. Any person aggrieved, may appeal to the next general quarter-sessions.

No proceedings or judgment had by virtue of this act, shall be removed or superseded by any writ of certiorari, or other writ out of his majesty's courts at Westminster, or any other court whatsoever, unless the title to such tithes shall be in question.

By 1 Geo. 1. st. 2. cap. 6. par. 2. the like remedy is given for the recovery of all tithes and all other ecclesiastical dues from quakers, as by the 7 & 8 W. 3. cap. 34. is given for tithes to the value of ten pounds.

And such justices of the peace, upon complaint of any parson, vicar, curate, farmer, or proprietor of such tithes, or other person who ought to have, receive, or collect any such tithes or dues, may proceed in a similar manner as directed by the former act touching quakers.

TITHING, (Tithinga, from the Sax. Teothunge, i. e. Decuriam.) Was in its first appointment the number or company of ten men with their families, held together in a society, all being bound for the peaceable behaviour of each other. And of these companies there was one chief person who was called teothing-man, at this day tithing-man, but the old discipline of tithings is long since left off. 1 Black. 113. 4. 404.

TITHING-MEN. Petty constables, elected by parishes, and sworn into their offices in the court-leet, and sometimes by justices of peace. And there is frequently a tithing-man in the same town with a constable, who is, as it were, a deputy to execute the office in the constable's absence. Dalt. 3. When there is no constable of a parish, the office and authority of a tithing-man seems to be the same. See Constable.

TITLE, (Titulus.) The word title includeth a right, and is thus defined, titulus est justa causa possidendi quod nostrum est, and is the means whereby the owner of lands hath that just possession of his property. Co. Lit. 345. 2 Black. 195.

1. The lowest and most imperfect degree of title consists in the mere naked possession, or actual occupation of the estate; without any apparent right, or any shadow or pretence of right, to hold and continue such possession. This may happen, when one man invades the possession of another, and by force or surprise turns him out of the occupation of his lands; which is termed a disseisin, being a deprivation of that actual seisin, or corporal freehold of the lands, which the tenant before enjoyed. Or it may happen, that after the death of the ancestor and before the entry of the heir, or after the death of a particular tenant and before the entry of him in remainder or reversion, a stranger may contrive to get possession of the vacant land, and hold out him that had a right to enter. In all which cases, and many others that might be here suggested, the wrong doer has only a mere naked possession, which the rightful owner may put an end to by a variety of legal remedies. But in the mean time, till some act be done, by the rightful owner to divest this possession and assert his title, such actual possession is, prima facie, evidence of a legal title in the possessor; and it may, by length of time, and negligence of him who hath the right, by degrees ripen into a perfect and indefeasible title. And, at all events, without such actual possession, no title can be completely good. 2 Black. 196.

2. The next step to a good and perfect title is the right of possession, which may reside in one man, while the actual possession is not in himself but in another. For if a man be disseised, or otherwise kept out of possession, by any of the means before-mentioned, though the actual possession be lost, yet he has still remaining in him the right of possession, and may exert it whenever he thinks proper, by entering, upon the disseisor, and turning him out of that occupancy which he has so illegally gained. See Limitations.

And by stat. 32 H. 8. c. 9. it is provided, that no one shall sell or purchase any pretended right or title to land, unless the vendor hath received the profits thereof for one whole year before such grant, or hath been in actual possession of the land, or of the reversion or remainder; on pain that both purchaser and vendor shall each forfeit the value of such land to the king and the prosecutor.

TITLE OF ACTS OF PARLIAMENT. After the house of commons hath finally agreed (on a third reading) that a bill pass, the title to it is then settled; which used to be a general one, for all the acts passed in the session, till in the fifth year of Hen. 8. distinct titles were introduced for each chapter 1 Black. 182, 3.

TITLE TO THINGS PERSONAL. As to the title to things personal, or the various means of acquiring, and of losing such property as may be had therein. The methods of acquisition or loss are principally twelve: 1. By occupancy; 2. By prerogative; 3. By forfeiture; 4. By custom; 5. By succession; 6. By marriage; 7. By judgment; 8. By gift; 9. By contract; 10. By bankruptcy; 11. By testament; 12. By administration, which titles see.

TITLES OF CLERGY. A title, is an assurance that the party about to be ordained is to be appointed curate, or otherwise preferred to some ecclesiastical benefice, by certificate from the incumbent, or where the bishop, who ordains him, intends shortly afterwards to admit him to a benefice or curacy then void. Count. Pars. Comp. 2. 3.

And no person shall be ordained without a title; and this is required, to keep out those from the ministry who might otherwise for want of maintenance bring disgrace upon the church. And if a bishop shall admit any person into the ministry without any title, he shall maintain him till he prefers him to some ecclesiastical living; or if he refuses so to do, he shall be suspended from giving orders for one year. Can. 31.

TITLE TO THE CROWN. The crown is, by common law and constitutional custom, hereditary; and this in a manner peculiar to itself, inasmuch as that right of inheritance may, from time to time, be changed or limited by act of parliament; under which limitations the crown still continues hereditary. 1 Black. 191.

TITINYLKS. An old word for talebearers. Cowell.

TOALIA. A towel; and there is a tenure of lands by the service of waiting with a towel at the king's coronation. Ibid.

TOBACCO. By 12 Car. 2. c. 34. tobacco shall not be set in seed or plant, in England, Ireland (repealed as to Ireland, 19 Geo. 3. c. 35. and as to Guernsey, Jersey, or Scotland, by 22 Geo. 3. c. 73), on forfeiture of all such tobacco, or of 40*s.* for every pole so planted.

Not to hinder planting tobacco in any physic garden, so as the quantity exceed not one-half of one pole, in any one such place or garden. Ibid.

By 15 Car. 2. c. 7. the penalty is increased to 10*l.* a pole, besides the former penalty.

By 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 26. justices of peace shall issue warrants to constables, to search for tobacco sown, planted, or made, and destroy the same. Not destroying it, to forfeit 5*s.* for every rod of ground; and persons resisting the constable, shall forfeit 5*l.*

By 6 Anne, c. 22. no tobacco of the growth of Europe, or mixed therewith, shall be sold in any ships of war. But the same shall be the produce of the British plantations, whereon the duty has been paid, on pain of the purser's losing his place, and forfeiting 3*s.* for every pound sold.

By 1 Geo. 1. c. 46. tobacco shall not be adulterated, or mixed with leaves, herbs, or other materials; offering the same to sale, or to obtain drawback on exportation, shall forfeit 5*s.* for every pound weight, together with the leaves, and all utensils.

Houses may be searched at seasonable times, by warrant from two justices, and after seizure and condemnation, the leaves shall be burnt. Ibid.

Servants employed in adulterating tobacco, or vending the same, may be imprisoned six months. Ibid.

Persons mixing any snuff with oker, umber, or other colouring, or mixing any wood or dirt with snuff, or selling the same, shall forfeit the snuff, with 3*s.* per pound. Ibid. Also 5 Geo. 1. c. 11.

And by 29 Geo. 3. c. 68. no person shall cut walnut-tree, hop, sycamore, or other leaves, in imitation of tobacco, on penalty of forfeiture thereof and 200*l.*

TOBACCO-PIPE CLAY. Is prohibited to be exported, except to the British plantations. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 18. s. 8. 6 Geo. 1. c. 21. s. 32.

TOD OF WOOL. Twenty-eight pounds or two stone. 12 Car. 2. cap. 32.

TOFT, (Toftum.) A messuage, or rather a place or piece of ground where an house formerly stood. West's Symb. par. 2. Hence TOFTMAN, (Toftmanus.) The owner or possessor of a toft. Cowell.

TOILE, (Fr. i. e. Tela.) A net to encompass or take deer, which is forbid to be used. See Deer.

TOKENS. See False Tokens and Swindlers.

TOLERATION. See Dissenters and Roman Catholics.

TOLL. To bar, defeat, or take away; as to toll the entry, i. e. to deny or take away the right of entry. 8 Hen. 6. c. 9. Cowell.

TOLL, (Tolnetum vel Theolonium.) Is a Saxon word, and properly a payment in towns, markets, and fairs, for goods and cattle bought and sold. It is a reasonable sum of money due to the owner of the fair or market, upon sale of things tollable within the same. 2 Inst. 220. 2 Jones 207.

But if the king grants to a man a fair or market, and grants no toll, the patentee shall have no toll; for toll being a matter of private right for the benefit of the lord, is not incident to a fair or market, as a court of piepowder is, which is for the benefit of the public and the advancement of justice, &c. And therefore such a fair or market is free from toll; and, after the grant made, the king cannot grant a toll to such free fair or market, without some proportionable benefit to the subject. And if the toll granted with the fair or market be outrageous, the grant of the toll is void, and the same is counted a free fair and market. 2 Lutw. 1396.

Toll is payable only on actual sale, unless by special custom. Moor 474. 1 Wils. 115. 2 Str. 1238. 2 Inst. 220. And when by custom a toll is due upon the sale of any goods in a fair or market, and he who ought to pay it refuses, an action on the case lies against him. and this is the proper remedy where goods are fraudulently sold out of the market to avoid the tolls. Rol. Abr. 103, 104, 106. Cowp. 661. If the king, or any of his progenitors, have granted to any one to be discharged of toll, either generally or specially, this grant is good to discharge him of all tolls at any of the king's own fairs or markets; and of the tolls that have been granted for any new fair or market created subsequent to such discharge. 2 Inst. 221. Also the king himself is exempt from toll. 2 Inst. 221. Likewise tenants in ancient demesne, whether they hold in fee for life, year, or at will. Ibid. 4 Inst. 269. Roll. Abr. 321. But this privilege does not extend to one who gets his living by buying and selling, but is annexed to the person in respect of the land, and to those things which grow and are the produce of the land. Fitz. N. B. 228. 2 Leon. 191. Cro. Eliz. 227.

If excessive toll be taken in a market-town, by the lord's consent, the franchise shall be seized; and if by other officers, they shall pay double damages, and suffer forty day's imprisonment, &c. Stat. Westm. 1. 3 Edw. 1. c. 31.

And what shall be deemed reasonable is to be determined by the judges of the law, when it comes judicially before them.

There is also a prescription to have port oll for all goods coming into a man's port, and this without any consideration, but not to have toll of goods brought into a river, &c. 2 Lev. 96. 2 Lut. 1519. And the liberty of bringing goods into a port for safety, implies a consideration in itself. 3 Lev. 37. Prescription of toll for goods landed in a manor, or to have port-toll for all goods coming into port, is a good prescription. 2 Mod. 144.

—— Toll Traverse, is where one claimeth to have toll for every beast driven over his ground; for which a man may prescribe and distrain for it in via Regia. Cro. Eliz. 710. But a man cannot prescribe to have toll-traverse or thorough toll of men passing through a vill in the high street, because it is against the common law and common right; for the high street is common to all. 2 Rol. Abr. 522. 25 Ass. 58. And toll-traverse being to pass a nearer way, he that has it is to repair the way, because he receives money for it. 2 Lil. Abr. 585.

—— Thorough-Toll, is where a town prescribes to have toll for such a number of beasts, or for every beast that goeth through their town; or over a bridge or ferry, maintained at their cost, which is reasonable, though it be for passing through the king's highway, where every man may lawfully go, as it is for the ease of travellers that go that way. Terms de Ley, 561, 562. Persons may have this toll by prescription or grant; but it must be for a reasonable cause, which must be shewn, viz. that they are to repair and maintain a causeway, or a bridge, or such like. Cro. Eliz. 711.

—— Turn-Toll. A toll paid for beasts that are driven to market to be sold, and do return unsold. 6 Rep. 46.

TOLLAGE, is the same with tallage; signifying generally any manner of custom or imposition. 17 Car. 1. cap. 17. Cowell.

TOLL-BOOTH. The place where goods are weighed. Ibid.

TOLL-CORN. Corn taken for toll ground at a mill. Ibid.

TOLL-HOP. A small dish or measure by which toll is taken in a market. Ibid.

TOLSESTER, (Tolcestrum.) An ol: excise, or duty paid by the tenants of some manors to the lord, for liberty to brew and sell ale. Cowell.

TOLSEY, (from the Sax. tol, i. e. tributum, and see Sedes.) Is the place where merchants meet, in a city or town of trade. Ibid.

TOLT. A writ whereby a cause depending in a court baron is removed into the country court. Old Nat. Br. 5.

TOLTA. Wrong, rapine, extortion, any thing exacted or imposed contrary to right and justice. Cowell.

TOMIN. A weight of twelve grains used by goldsmiths and jewellers. Cowel.

TONGUE. See Felony, article Maiming.

TONNAGE, (Tonnagium.) A custom or impost paid to the king for merchandiz carried out, or brought in ships, or such like vessels, according to a certain rate upon every ton. Cowell.

TORCARE, is to comb and cleanse oxen. Ibid.

TORRA, (Sax. Tor.) A mount or hill. Ibid.

TORT, (from the Lat. Tortus.) Is a French word for injury or wrong; as, de son tort de mesne, in his own wrong. And wrong or injury is properly called tort, because it is wrested or crooked, and contrary to that which is right and straight. Co. Lit. 158.

TORTFEASOR, (Fr. Tortfaiseur.) A wrong-doer, a trespasser. Ibid.

TORTITIUM, signifies a torch. Cowell.

TORTURE. See Paine forte & dure.

TOTIES QUOTIES. As often as a thing shall happen. Cowell.

TOTTED. A good debt to the king, is by the foreign apposer or other officer in the exchequer noted for such by writing the word tot to it: and that which is paid shall be totted. Tot pecuniæ regi debetur. 42 Ed. 3. c. 9. 1 Ed. 6. cap. 15. Cowell.

TOURN. The sheriff's court so called. See Turn.

TOURNAMENTS. Martial exercises frequent in former ages, wherein the combatants fought with blunt weapons and in great companies; the intent of them was to inure men to the wars. Cowell. See Justs.

TOUT tempus prist & encore est, i. e. always was, and is at present ready; and is a kind of plea by way of excuse for him that is sued for any debt or duty. Broke 258.

TOWAGE, (towagium, Fr. towage.) Is the drawing a ship or barge along the water by another ship or boat fastened to her.

er by men or horses, &c. on land; it is also money which is given by bargemen to the owner of ground next a river where they tow a barge or other vessel. Cowell.

TOWN, (Oppidum, Villa.) Tithings, towns, and vills, are of the same signification in law. 1 Black. 114.

TRABARIÆ. Little boats, so called from their being made out of single beams, or pieces of timber cut hollow. Cowell.

TRABES in churches, what we now call branches, made usually with brass, but formerly with iron. Ibid.

TRACTUS. A trace by which horses in their gears draw a cart, plough, or waggon. Ibid.

TRADE. There is a difference between commerce and trade. The first relates to our dealings with foreign nations or our colonies abroad, the latter to our mutual traffick and dealings amongst ourselves at home together.

Persons serving seven years as apprentices to any trade, have an exclusive right to exercise that trade in any part of England. 5 Eliz. c. 4. s. 31.

This law, with respect to the exclusive part of it, has by turns been looked upon as a hard law, or as a beneficial one, according to the prevailing manner of the times, which has occasioned a great variety of resolutions in the courts of law concerning it; and attempts have been frequently made for its repeal, though hitherto without success. For at common law every man might use what trade he pleased. But this statute restrains that liberty to such as have served as apprentices: the adversaries to which provision say, that all restrictions (which tend to introduce monopolies) are pernicious to trade; the advocates for it alledge, that unskilfulness in trades is equally detrimental to the public as monopolies. This reason indeed only extends to such trades, in the exercise whereof skill is required: but another of their arguments goes much farther, viz. that "apprenticeships are useful to the common wealth, by employing of youth, and learning them to be early industrious; but that no one would be induced to undergo a seven years servitude, if others, though equally skilful, were allowed the same advantages without having undergone the same discipline. And Lord Coke says, this statute was not enacted only that workmen should be skilful, but also that youth should not be nourished in idleness, but brought up and educated in lawful sciences and trades. 11 Co. 54.

However, the resolutions of the courts, upon information for the penalty, which is 10*s.* a month, one half to the king, the other half to the prosecutor, have in general rather confined than extended the restriction; for no trades are held to be within the statute, but such as were in being at the making of it. Lord Raym. 514. for trading in a country village, apprenticeships are not requisite. 1 Ventr. 51. 2 Keb. 583.; and following the trade seven years, without any effectual prosecution, (either as a master or a servant,) is sufficient without an actual apprenticeship. Lord Ray. 1179. Wallen qui tam v. Holton. Tr. 33 Geo. 2.

If a bond or covenant restrains the exercise of a trade to a particular place only, if there was no consideration for it, it is void; but if there be a consideration, in that case it will be good. But if the restraint be general throughout England, although there be a consideration, it will be void, 2 Lill. Abr. 179. Lord Raym. 1486. 2 Strange 739.

TRADESMEN must be styled of their proper craft. 1 Black. 407. And there is in law, always, an implied contract with a workman, that he perform his business in a workmanlike manner; in which, if he fail, an action on the case lies to recover damages for such breach of his general undertaking. 11 Rep. 54. 1 Saund. 324. But if I employ a person to transact any of these concerns, whose common profession and business it is not, the law implies no such general undertaking; but, in order to charge him with damages, it must be on a special agreement. 3 Black. 160. 5.

TRAGA, A waggon without wheels. Cowell.

TRAIT. Bread of trait was formerly what we now call white-bread. Ibid.

TRAITORS. Persons guilty of high treason. See Treason.

TRANSCRIPT, is the copy of any original writing or deed, where it is written over again, or exemplified. Cowell.

TRANSCRIPTO pedes finis levati mittendo in Cancellariam. A writ for certifying the foot of a fine levied before justices in eyre, in the chancery. Reg. Orig. 669.

TRANSCRIPTO Recognitionis factæ coram Justiciariis itinerantibus, &c. is an old writ to certify a recognizance taken by justices in eyre. Reg. Orig. 152.

TRANSGRESSIONE. A writ or action of trespass. Cowell.

TRANSIRE, (from transeo.) Is used for a warrant from the custom-house, to let pass. 14 Car. 2. cap. 11.

TRANSITORY. Transitory actions are those that may be laid in any county or place; such as any personal action of debt, assumpsit, assault, or the like. See Local, and 3 Black. 294.

TRANSLATION, (translatio.) Is the removal of a bishop to another diocese, which is called translating. A bishop writes not annus consecrationis, but anno translationis nostræ, &c. And a bishop translated is not consecrated de novo: for a consecration is like an ordination, it is an indelible character, and holds good for ever. 3 Salk. 72. 1 Salk. 131.

TRANSPORTATION, is the banishing or sending away a criminal into another country. And by 24 Geo. 3. c. 56. if any offender shall be ordered by the court to be transported, or shall agree to transport himself, either for life or any number of years, and shall be afterwards at large before the expiration of the term, without lawful excuse, in any part of Great Britain or Ireland, he shall, being lawfully convicted thereof, suffer death without benefit of clergy.

TRANSUBSTANTIATION, (transubstantiatio.) Is a converting into another substance. To transubstantiate, i. e. quid piam in aliam substantiam converto. Lit. Dict. A declaration against the doctrine of transubstantiation used in the church of Rome is required by the stat. 30 Car. 2. cap. 1. See Papists and Roman Catholics.

TRAVELLERS. Innkeepers are by law obliged to receive travellers, and find them lodgings and necessary victuals. And on refusal, (a reasonable price being tendered,) they may be indicted and fined, or an action on the case lies against them. 2 Hawk. 225.

TRAVERSE, (from the Fr. traverser.) Is the denying of some matter of fact, alledged to be done in a declaration or pleadings; upon which the other side comes and affirms that it was done; and this makes a single and good issue for the cause to proceed to trial. And the formal words of a traverse are in our French Sans ceo, in Latin absque hoc, and in English without that, that such a thing was done or not, &c. Kitch. 217. West. Symb. par. 2. Cowell.

TRAVERSE OF AN INDICTMENT OR PRESENTMENT, is to take issue upon, and contradict or deny some chief point of it. As in a presentment against a person for a highway overflowed with water, for default of scouring a ditch, &c. he may traverse the matter, that there is no highway, or that the ditch is sufficiently scoured; or otherwise traverse the cause, viz. That he hath not the land, or he and they whose estate, &c. have not used to scour the ditch. Lamb. Eiren, 521. Book Entr. 4 Black. 345.

TRAVERSE OF AN OFFICE, is to prove that an inquisition made of lands or goods by the escheator, is defective and untruly made. Vaugh 64. 2 Lil. Abr. 590, 591. See Inquisition of Office.

TRAVERSUM, signifies a ferry. Cowell.

TRAWLERMEN, a kind of fishermen on the river Thames, who used unlawful arts and engines to destroy fish, of which some were termed tinckermen, or others hebbermen, and trawlermen, &c. Hence to trowl or trawl for pikes. Cowell.

TRAYLBASTON. Edward the First, in his 32d year sent out a new writ of inquisition, called Trailbaston, against intruders on other men's lands, who, to oppress the right owner, would make over their lands to great men; against batterers hired to beat men, breakers of the peace, ravishers, incendiaries, murderers, fighters, false assisors, and other such malefactors: which inquisition was so strictly executed, and such fines taken, that it brought in great treasure to the king. 4 Inst. 166. Afterwards in a parliament 1 Ric. 2. the commons petitioned the king, that no commission of Eyre or Traylbaston might be issued during the wars, or for twenty years to come. Cowell.

TRAYTOR. See Treason.

T. R. E. Tempore Regis Edwardi. These initial letters have this continual note of time in the domesday register, wherein the valuation of manors is recounted, what it was in the time of Edward the Confessor: and what since the conquest. Cowell.

TREASON, (from the French trahir, to betray, and trahison, betraying, contracted into treason. Latin proditio,) is a crime of the highest nature, and imports a betraying, treachery, or breach of faith.

It therefore only happens between allies, saith the Mirror, c. 1. § 7. for treason is indeed a general appellation made use of by the law, to denote not only offences against the king and government, but also that accumulation of guilt that arises whenever a superior reposes a confidence in a subject or inferior, between whom and himself there subsists a natural, a civil, or even a spiritual relation: and the inferior so abuses that confidence, so forgets the obligations of duty, subjection, and allegiance, as to destroy the life of any such superior or lord. This is looked upon as proceeding from the same principle of treachery in private life, as would have urged him who harbours it to have conspired in public against his liege lord and sovereign, and therefore for a wife to kill her lord or husband, a servant his lord or master, and an ecclesiastic his lord or ordinary; these being breaches of the lower allegiance of private and domestic faith, are denominated petit treasons.

But when disloyalty so rears its crest as to attack even majesty itself, it is called by way of distinction high treason, alta proditio; being equivalent to the crimen laesae majestatis of the Romans, as Glanvil denominates it also in our English law.

As this is the highest civil crime, which (considered as a member of the community) any man can possibly commit, it ought therefore to be the most precisely ascer-ained. And yet, by the ancient common aw, there was a great latitude left in the reast of the judges, to determine what ras treason, or not so: whereby the creaures of tyrannical princes had opportuity to create abundance of constructive reasons; that is, to raise, by forced and rbitrary constructions, offences into the rime and punishment of treason, which vere never suspected to be such. Thus he accroaching, or attempting to exercise, oyal power (a very uncertain charge) vas in the 21 Edw. 3. held to be treason in knight of Hertfordshire, who forcibly ssaulted and detained one of the king's ubjects till he paid him 90*l.* a crime well leserving of punishment: but which seems o be of a complexion very different rom that of treason. Killing the king's ather, or brother, or even his messenger, as also fallen under the same denomination. But however, to prevent the inconveniences which began to arise in England rom this multitude of constructive treaons, the stat. 25 Edw. 3. c. 2. was made; vhich defines what offences only for the uture should be held to be treason. This tatute comprehends all sorts of high treaon under seven distinct branches.

1. "When a man doth compass or imagine he death of our lord the king, or of our ady his queen, or of their eldest son and eir." Under this description it is held hat a queen regnant (such as queen Elizaeth and queen Anne) is within the words of the act, being invested with royal power nd entitled to the allegiance of her subects: but the husband of such a queen is ot comprised within these words, and herefore no treason can be committed gainst him; 3 Inst. 7. 1. Hal. P. C. 106. The king here intended is the king in possession, without any respect to his title: for t is held, that a king de facto and not de jure, or in other words an usurper that hath got possession of the throne, is a king within the meaning of the statute; as there is a temporary allegiance due to him, for his administration of the government, and temporary protection of the public: and therefore treasons committed against Henry VI. were punished under Edward IV. though ill the line of Lancaster had been previously declared usurpers by act of parliament. But the most rightful heir of the rown, or king de jure and not de facto, vho hath never had plenary possession of he throne, as was the case of the house of York during the three reigns of the line of Lancaster, is not a king within this statute gainst whom treasons may be committed. And by stat. 11 Hen. 7. c. 1. which is declaratory of the common law, all subjects are excused from any penalty or forfeiture 'which do assist and obey a king de facto." It is, however, to be observed, that the statute of Henry VII. does by no means command any opposition to the king de jure; but only excuses the obedience paid to a king de facto. When therefore a usurper is in possession, the subject is excused and justified in obeying and giving him assistance: otherwise, under a usurpation, no man could be safe; if the lawful prince had a right to hang him for obedience to the powers in being, as the usurper would certainly do for disobedience, 4 Black. 76. Also a king who has resigned his crown, such resignation being admitted and ratified in parliament, is according to sir Matthew Hale no longer the object of treason. And the same reason holds, in case a king abdicates the government; or by actions subversive of the constitution, virtually renounces the authority which he claims by that very constitution: since, when the fact of abdication is once established, and determined by the proper judges, the consequence necessarily follows, that the throne is thereby vacant, and he is no longer king. 1 Black. 212.

As to what is a compassing or imagining the death of the king, these are synonymous terms; the word compass signifying the purpose or design of the mind or will, and not, as in common speech, the carrying such a design to effect. And therefore an accidental stroke, which may mortally wound the sovereign, per infortunium, without any traiterous intent, is no treason: as was the case of sir Walter Tyrrel, who, by the command of king William Rufus, shooting at a hart, the arrow glanced against a tree, and killed the king on the spot. But as this compassing or imagining is an act of the mind, it cannot possibly fall under any judicial cognizance, unless it be demonstrated by some open or overt act of a full and explicit nature, to convict the traitor upon. The statute expressly requires, that the accused "be thereof upon sufficient proof attainted of some open act by men of his own condition." Thus, to provide weapons or ammunition for the purpose of killing the king, is held to be a palpable overt act of treason in imagining his death. To conspire to imprison the king by force, and move towards it by assembling company, is an overt act of compassing the king's death; for all force used to the person of the king, in its consequence may tend to his death, and is a strong presumption of something worse intended than the present force, by such as have so far thrown off their bounden duty to their sovereign; it being an old observation, that there is generally but a short interval between the prisons and the graves of princes. There is no question also, but that taking any measures to render such treasonable purposes effectual, as assembling and consulting on the means to kill the king, is a sufficient overt act of high-treason. 1 Hawk. P. C. 38. 1 Hal. P. C. 119.

And in every indictment for this species of treason, and indeed for levying war, or adhering to the king's enemies, an overt act must be alledged and proved. For the overt act is the charge, to which the prisoner must apply his defence. But it is not necessary, that the whole of the evidence intended to be given, should be set forth; the common law never required this exactness, nor doth the statute of king William require it. It is sufficient, that the charge be reduced to a reasonable certainty, so that the defendant may be apprized of the nature of it, and prepared to give an answer to it. Fost. 194.

On this subject Mr. Justice Foster observes that, in the case of the king the statute of treasons hath, with great propriety, retained the rule voluntas pro facto. The principle upon which this is founded, is too obvious to need much enlargement. The king is considered as the head of the body-politic, and the members of that body are considered as united and kept together by a political union with him and with each other. His life cannot, in the ordinary course of things be taken away by treasonable practices, without involving a whole nation in blood and confusion; consequently every stroke levelled at his person is, in the ordinary course of things, levelled at the public tranquillity. The law, therefore, tendereth the safety of the king with an anxious concern; and with a concern bordering upon jealousy. It considereth the wicked imaginations of the heart in the same degree of guilty as if carried into actual execution from the moment measures appear to have been taken to render them effectual. And therefore, if conspirators meet and consult how to kill the king, though they do not then fall upon any scheme for that purpose, this is an overt-act of compassing his death; and so are all means made use of, be it advice, persuasion, or command, to incite or encourage others to commit the fact, or join in the attempt; and every person who but assenteth to any overtures for that purpose will be involved in the same guilt. Fost. 194.

The care the law hath taken for the personal safety of the king is not confined to actions or attempts of the more flagitious kind, to assassination or poison, or other attempts directly and immediately aiming at his life. It is extended to every thing wilfully and deliberately done or attempted, whereby his life may be endangered. And, therefore, the entering into measures for deposing or imprisoning him, or to get his person into the power of the conspirators, these offences are overt acts of treason within this breach of the statute. For experience has shewn, that between the prisons and the graves of princes the distance is very small. Fost. 194.

And this was the species of treason with which the state prisoners were charged, who were tried in 1794. And the question, as stated by the court for the jury to try was, Whether their measures had been entered into with an intent to subvert the monarchy and to depose the king. Hardy's trial.

How far mere words, spoken by an individual, and not relative to any treasonable act or design then in agitation, shall amount to treason, has been formerly matter of doubt. We have two instances in the reign of Edward the Fourth, of persons executed for treasonable words: the one a citizen of London, who said he would make his son heir of the crown, being the sign of the house in which he lived; the other a gentleman, whose favourite buck the king killed in hunting, whereupon he wished it, horns and all, in the king's belly.* These were esteemed hard cases, and the chief justice Markham rather chose to leave his place than assent to the latter judgment. But now it seems clearly to be agreed, that by the common law and the statute of Edward III. words spoken amount only to a high misdemeanor, and no treason. For they may be spoken in heat, without any intention, or be mistaken, perverted, or mis-remembered by the hearers; their meaning depends always on their connexion with other words and things; they may signify differently even according to the tone of voice with which they are delivered; and sometimes silence itself is more expressive than any discourse. As, therefore, there can be nothing more equivocal and ambiguous than words, it would indeed be unreasonable to make them amount to high treason. And accordingly in 4 Car. 1. on a reference to all the judges, concerning some very atrocious words spoken by one Pyne, they certified to the king, "that though the words were as wicked as might be, yet they were no treason; for, unless it be by some particular statute, no words will be treason. But if words are attended or followed by a consultation, meeting, or any act, then they will be evidence, or a confession, of

* There was even a refinement and degree of subtlety in the cruelty of that case, for he wished it, horns and all, in the belly of him who counselled the king to kill it; and as the king killed it of his own accord, or was his own counsellor, it was held to be a treasonable wish against the king himself. 1 Hal. P. C. 115.

the intent of such consultation, meeting, or act; yet loose words not relative to facts, are at the worst no more than bare indications of the malignity of the heart. Fost. 202.

If the words be set down in writing, it argues more deliberate intention: and it has been held that writing is an overt act of treason; for scribere est agere. But even in this case the bare words are not the treason, but the deliberate act of writing them. And such writing, though unpublished, has in some arbitrary reigns convicted its author of treason: particularly in the cases of one Peachum, a clergyman, for treasonable passages in a sermon never preached; and of Algernon Sydney, for some papers found in his closet; which, had they been plainly relative to any previous formed design of dethroning or murdering the king, might doubtless have been properly read in evidence as overt acts of that treason, which was specially laid in the indictment. But being merely speculative, without any intention (so far as appeared) of making any public use of them, the convicting the authors of treason upon such an insufficient foundation has been universally disapproved. Peachum was therefore pardoned; and though Sydney indeed was executed, yet it was to the general discontent of the nation; and his attainder was afterwards reversed by parliament. There was then no manner of doubt but that the publication of such a treasonable writing was a sufficient overt act of treason at the common law, though of late years that has been questioned. 4 Black. 79.

2. The second species of treason is, "if a man do violate the king's companion, or the king's eldest daughter unmarried, or the wife of the king's eldest son and heir." By the king's companion is meant his wife; and by violation is understood carnal knowledge, as well without force as with it: and this is high treason in both parties, if both be consenting; as some of the wives of Henry the Eighth by fatal experience evinced. The plain intention of this law is to guard the blood royal from any suspicion of bastardy, whereby the succession to the crown might be rendered dubious; and therefore, when this reason ceases, the law ceases with it; for to violate a queen or princess dowager is held to be no treason: in like manner as, by the feodal law, it was a felony, and attended with a forfeiture of the fief, if the vassal vitiated the wife or daughter of his lord; but not so, if he only vitiated his sloow.

3. The third species of treason is, "if a man do levy war against our lord the king in his realm." And this may be done by raising arms, not only to dethrone the king, but under pretence to reform religion, or the laws, or to remove evil counsellers, or other grievances whether real or pretended.* For the law does not, neither can it, permit any private man, or set of men, to interfere forcibly in matters of such high importance; especially as it has established a sufficient power, for these purposes, in the high court of parliament: neither does the constitution justify any private or particular resistance for private or particular grievances. 4 Black. 81, 2.

To resist the king's forces, by defending a castle against them, is a levying of war; and so is an insurrection with an avowed design to pull down all inclosures, all brothels, and the like; the universality of the design making it a rebellion against the state, an usurpation of the powers of government, and an insolent invasion of the king's authority. But a tumult with a view to pull down a particular house, or lay open a particular inclosure, amount at most to a riot; this being no general defiance of public government. So, if two subjects quarrel and levy war against each other, (in that spirit of private war which prevailed all over Europe in the early feodal times,) it is only a great riot and contempt, and no treason. Thus it happened between the earls of Hereford and Gloucester in 20 Edward I. who raised each a little army, and committed outrages upon each other's lands, burning houses, attended with the loss of many lives: yet this was held to be no high treason, but only a great misdemeanor. 1 Hal. P. C. 136.

A bare conspiracy to levy war does not amount to this species of treason; but if particularly pointed at the person of the king or his government, it falls within the first, of compassing or imagining the king's death.

4. "If a man be adherent to the king's enemies in his realm, giving to them aid and comfort in the realm, or elsewhere," he is also declared guilty of high treason. This must likewise be proved by some overt act, as by giving them intelligence, by sending them provisions, by selling them arms, by treacherously surrendering a fortress, or the like. By enemies are here understood the subjects of foreign powers with whom we are at open war. As to foreign pirates or robbers, who may happen to invade our coasts, without any open hostilities between their nation and our own, and without any commission from any prince or state at enmity with the crown of Great Britain, the giving them any assistance is also clearly treason; either in the light of adhering to the public enemies of the king and kingdom, or else in that of levying war against his majesty. And, most indisputably, the same acts of adherence or aid, which (when applied to foreign enemies) will constitute treason under this branch of the statute, will (when afforded to our own fellow-subjects in actual rebellion at home) amount to high treason under the description of levying war against the king. But to relieve a rebel, fled out of the kingdom, is no treason: for the statute is taken strictly, and a rebel is not an enemy; an enemy being always the subject of some foreign prince, and one who owes no allegiance to the crown of England. And if a person be under circumstances of actual force and constraint, through a well-grounded apprehension of injury to his life or person, this fear or compulsion will excuse his even joining with either rebels or enemies in the kingdom, provided he leaves them whenever he hath a safe opportunity.

5. "If a man counterfeit the king's great or privy seal," this is also high treason. But if a man takes wax bearing the impression of the great seal off from one patent, and fixes it to another, this is held to be only an abuse of the seal, and not a counterfeiting of it: as was the case of a certain chaplain, who in such manner framed a dispensation for nonresidence. But the knavish artifice of a lawyer much exceeded this of the divine. One of the clerks in chancery glewed together two pieces of parchment; on the uppermost of which he wrote a patent, to which he regularly obtained the great seal, the label going through both the skins. He then dissolved the cement; and taking off the written patent, on the blank skin wrote a fresh patent, of a different import from the former, and published it as true. This was held no counterfeiting of the great seal, but only a great misprision; and Sir Edward Coke mentions it with some indignation, that the party was living at that day. 3 Inst. 16.

6. The sixth species of treason under this statute, is, "if a man counterfeit the king's money; and if a man bring false money into the realm counterfeit to the money of England, knowing the money to be false, to merchandise and make payment withal." As to the first branch, counterfeiting the king's money; this is treason, whether the false money be uttered in payment or not. Also, if the king's own minters alter the standard or alloy established by law, it is treason. But gold and silver money only are held to be within the statute. With regard likewise to the second branch, importing foreign counterfeit money, in order to utter it here, it is held that uttering it, without importing it, is not within the statute.

7. The last species of treason ascertained by this statute, is, "if a man slay the chancellor, treasurer, or the king's justices of the one bench or the other, justices in eyre, or justices of assise, and all other justices assigned to hear and determine, being in their places doing their offices." These high magistrates, as they represent the king's majesty during the execution of their offices, are therefore for the time equally regarded by the law. But this statute extends only to the actual killing of them, and not wounding, or a bare attempt to kill them. It extends also only to the officers therein specified, and therefore the barons of the exchequer, as such, are not within the protection of this act.

By the statute 7 Anne, c. 21. it is made high treason to slay any lords of session, or lords of justiciary, sitting in judgment; or to counterfeit the king's seals appointed by the act of union. This statute 7 Anne, c. 21. has also enacted that the crimes of high treason and misprision of treason shall be exactly the same in England and Scotland; and that no acts in Scotland, except those above specified, shall be construed high treason in Scotland, which are not high treason in England.

And all persons prosecuted in Scotland for high treason, or misprision of treason, shall be tried by a jury, and in the same manner as if they had been prosecuted for the same crime in England.

And by 1 Mar. s. 1. c. 1. no act or offence shall be treason, petit treason, or misprision, but such as by 25 Ed. 3. s. 5. c. 2. are so declared.

The new treasons, created since the stat. 1 Mar. c. 1. and not comprehended under the description of statute of Edw. 3. fall under three heads: 1. Such as relate to papists; 2. Such as relate to falsifying the coin or other royal signatures; 3. Such as are created for the security of the protestant succession in the house of Hanover. 4 Black. 87.

1. The first species relates to Papists.

By stat. 5 Eliz. c. 1. to defend the Pope's jurisdiction in this realm is, for the first time, a heavy misdemeanor; and, if the offence be repeated, it is high treason. Also by statute 27 Eliz. c. 2. if any popish priest, born in the dominions of the crown of England, shall come over hither from beyond the seas, unless driven by stress of weather, and departing in a reasonable time, or shall tarry here three lays without conforming to the church, and taking the oaths, he is guilty of high reason. And by statute 3 Jac. 1. c. 4. if any natural-born subject be withdrawn from his allegiance, and reconciled to the Pope or see of Rome, or any other prince or state, both he and all such as procure such reconciliation, shall incur the guilt of high treason,

The reason of distinguishing these overt-acts of popery from all others, by setting the mark of high treason upon them, is in a civil, and not on a religious account. For every popish priest of course renounces his allegiance to his temporal sovereign upon taking orders; that being inconsistent with his new engagements of canonical obedience to the pope: and the same may be said of an obstinate defence of his authority here, or a formal reconciliation to the see of Rome, which the statute construes to be a withdrawing from one's natural allegiance; and therefore, besides being reconciled "to the pope," it also adds, "or any other prince or state. 4 Black. 87, 8.

2. In consequence of glaring outrages, publicly offered to the person of the king, innumerable seditious publications, tending to the total subversion of the government, and frequent seditious meetings, an act was passed in the 36th year of his present majesty's reign, intitled, "An act for the safety and preservation of his majesty's person and government against treasonable and seditious practices and attempts." By which it was enacted, that if any person shall compass, imagine, or intend death, destruction, or any bodily harm to the person of the king, or to depose him, or to levy war in order by force to compel him to change his measures or councils, or to overawe either house of parliament, or to excite an invasion of any of his majesty's dominions, and shall express and declare such intentions by printing, writing, or any overt-act, he shall suffer death as a traitor. s. 1.

And if any one by writing, printing, preaching, or other speaking, shall use any words or sentences to incite the people to hatred and contempt of the king, or of the government and constitution of this realm, he shall incur the punishment of a high misdemeanor; that is, fine, imprisonment, and pillory: and for a second offence he is subject to a similar punishment, or transportation for seven years, at the discretion of the court. s. 2. 3.

But a prosecution for a misdemeanor under this act must be brought within six months. And this statute shall not affect any prosecution for the same crimes by the common law, unless a prosecution be previously commenced under the statute. This statute is to continue in force until the end of the next session of parliament after the demise of the crown. 36 Geo. 3. c. 7.

3. The only two offences made treasons relative to the coin or other royal signatures, by the statute 25 Edw. 3. are the "actual counterfeiting the gold and silver coin of this kingdom; or the importing such counterfeit money with intent to utter it, knowing it to be false." But these not being found sufficient to restrain the evil practices of coiners and false moneyers, other statutes have been since made for that purpose. The crime itself is made a species of high treason; as being a breach of allegiance, by infringing the king's prerogative, and assuming one of the attributes of the sovereign, to whom alone it belongs to set the value and denomination of coin made at home, or to fix the currency of foreign money: and besides, as all money which bears the stamp of the kingdom is sent into the world upon the public faith, as containing metal of a particular weight, and standard, whoever falsifies this is an offender against the state, by contributing to render that public faith suspected. 4 Black. 88.

And by statute 1 Mar. st. 2. c. 6. 1. That "if any person falsely forge or counterfeit any such kind of coin of gold or silver, as is not the proper coin of this realm, but shall be current within this realm by consent of the crown; or, 2. shall falsely forge or counterfeit the sign manual, privy signet, or privy seal; such offences shall be deemed high treason.

And by stat. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 11. if any persons do bring into this realm such false or counterfeit foreign money, being current here, knowing the same to be false, with intent to utter the same in payment, they shall be deemed offenders in high treason. The money referred to in these statutes must be such as is absolutely current here, in all payments, by the king's proclamation; of which there is none at present, therefore to counterfeit it is not high treason, but another inferior offence.*

* That is to say, by 37 Geo. 3. c. 126. if any person shall coin or counterfeit any kind of foreign gold or silver coin, though not current within this realm, he shall be guilty of felony, and may be transported for seven years; and if any person knowingly and fraudulently shall bring any counterfeit coin into the kingdom, he shall be subject to the same punishment.

And if any person knowingly utter, or tender in payment, or pay any such counterfeit foreign coin, for the first offence he shall be imprisoned six months, and find sureties for his good behaviour for six

Clipping or defacing the genuine coin was not hitherto included in these statutes; though an offence equally pernicious to trade, and an equal insult upon the prerogative, as well as personal affront to the sovereign, whose very image ought to be had in reverence by all loyal subjects. And now, by statute 5 Eliz. c. 11. clipping, washing, rounding, or filing, for wicked gain's sake, any of the money of this realm, or other money suffered to be current here, shall be adjudged high treason; and by statute 18 Eliz. c. 1. ("because the same law, being penal, ought to be taken and expounded strictly according to the words thereof, and the like offences, not by any equity to receive the like punishment or pains") the same species of offence is therefore described in other more general words, viz. impairing, diminishing, falsifying, scaling, and lightening; and made liable to the same penalties. By statute 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 26. made perpetual by 7 Anne, c. 25. whoever, without proper authority, shall knowingly make or mend, or assist in so doing, or shall buy, sell, conceal, hide, or knowingly have in his possession, any implements of coinage specified in the act, or other tools or instruments proper only for the coinage of money; or shall convey the same out of the king's mint; he, together with his counsellors, procurers, aiders, and abettors, shall be guilty of high treason: which is by much the severest branch of the coinage law. The statute goes on farther, and enacts, that to mark any coin on the edges with letters, or otherwise, in imitation of those used in the mint; or to colour, gild, or case over any coin resembling the current coin, or even round blanks of base metal, shall be construed high treason. But all prosecutions on this act are to be commenced within three months after the commission of the offence: except those for making or amending any coining tool or instrument, or for marking money round the edges; which are directed to be commenced within six months after the offence committed.* And lastly, by statute 15 & 16 Geo. 2. c. 28. if any person colours or alters any shilling or sixpence, either lawful or counterfeit, to make them respectively resemble a guinea or half-guinea; or any halfpenny or farthing to make them respectively resemble a shilling or sixpence; this is also high treason: but the offender shall be pardoned, in case (being out of prison) he discovers and convicts two other offenders of the same kind.

4. The other new species of high treason is such as is created for the security of the protestant succession over and above such treasons against the king and government as were comprized under the statute 25 Edw. 3. For this purpose, by the stat. 1 Anne, st. 2. c. 17. if any person shall endeavour to deprive or hinder any person, being the next in succession to the crown according to the limitations of the act of settlement, from succeeding to the crown, and shall maliciously and directly attempt the same by any overt act, such offence shall be high treason. And by stat. 6 Anne, c. 7. if any person shall maliciously, advisedly, and directly, by writing or printing, maintain and affirm, that any other person hath any right or title to the crown of this realm, otherwise than according to the act of settlement: or that the kings of this realm, with the authority of parliament, are not able to make laws and statutes, to bind the crown and the descent thereof; such person shall be guilty of high treason.

In cases of high treason, whereby corruption of blood may ensue, (except treason in counterfeiting the king's coin or seals,) or misprision of such treason, it is enacted by statute 7 W. 3. c. 3. first, that no person shall be tried for any such treason, except an attempt to assassinate the king, unless the indictment be found within three years after the offence committed: next, that the prisoner shall have a copy of the indictment, (which includes the caption,) but not the names of the witnesses, five days at least before the trial; that is, upon the true construction of the act, before his arraignment; for then is his time to take any exceptions thereto, by way of plea or demurrer: thirdly, that he shall also have a copy of the pannel or jurors two days before his trial: and, lastly, that he shall have the same compulsive process to bring in his witnesses for him, as was usual to compel their appearance against him. And, more; for the second offence he shall be imprisoned two years; and for the third he shall be guilty of a capital felony.

And if any person, without lawful excuse, shall have more than five such counterfeit pieces in his custody, he may be convicted before a justice, and forfeit from 40*s.* to 5*l.* for each piece, and for failure of payment may be imprisoned three months.

* If a person is apprehended in the act of coining, or is proved to have made a considerable progress in making counterfeit pieces resembling the gold or silver coin of this realm, yet if they are so imperfect as that no one would take them, he cannot be convicted upon the charge of coining under this statute. Leach, 71. 126. But he may be convicted, if he has made blank pieces without any impression to the similitude of silver coin worn smooth by time. Welch's Case, Ibid. 293.

y statute 7 Ann. c. 21. (which did not ake place till after the decease of the late retender), all persons indicted for high reason or misprision thereof, shall have ot only a copy of the indictment, but a ist of all the witnesses to be produced, and f the jurors impannelled, with their proessions and places of abode, delivered to im ten days before the trial, and in the resence of two witnesses; the better to repare him to make his challenges and defence. But this last act, so far as it affected indictments for the inferior species of igh treason, respecting the coin and the oyal seals, is repealed by the stat. 6 Geo. . c. 53. else it had been impossible to have ried those offences in the same circuit in which they are indicted: for ten clear lays, between the finding and the trial of he indictment, will exceed the time usually allotted for any session of oyer and erminer. And no person indicted for feony is, or (as the law stands) ever can e, entitled to such copies, before the time f his trial. Fost. 250.

It is the practice to deliver the copy of he indictment, and the lists of witnesses nd jurors, ten clear days, exclusive of he day of delivery and the day of trial, nd of intervening Sundays previous to the rial. Fost. 2. 250.

And by the 39 & 40 Geo. 3. c. 93. it is nacted, that in all cases of high treason, n compassing or imagining the death of he king, or in misprision of such treaon, where the overt act of such treason hall be alleged in the indictment to be the assassination of the king, or a direct atempt against his life or person, the person accused shall be indicted and tried in he same manner in every respect and upon he like evidence, as if he was charged with murder. But the judgment and execution shall remain the same as in other ases of high treason.

The punishment of high treason in geneal, is very solemn and terrible. 1. That he offender be drawn to the gallows, and ot be carried or walk; though usually (by connivance, at length ripened by humaity into law) a sledge or hurdle is allowed, to preserve the offender from the exreme torment of being dragged on the ground or pavement. 2. That he be hanged by the neck, and then cut down alive. 3. That his entrails be taken out, and burned, while he is yet alive. 4. That his head be cut off. 5. That his body be divided into four parts. 6. That his head and quarters be at the king's disposal. 1 Hal. P. C. 382. 3 Inst. 211.

The king may, and often doth, discharge all the punishment, except beheading, especially, where any of noble blood are attainted. For, beheading, being part of the judgment that may be executed, though all the rest be omitted by the king's command. 1 Hal. P. C. 351. But where beheading is no part of the judgment, as in murder or other felonies, it hath been said that the king cannot change the judgment, though at the request of the party, from one species of death to another.

In the case of coining, which is a treason of a different complexion from the rest, the punishment is milder for male offenders; being only to be drawn, and hanged by the neck till dead. And in treasons of every kind, the punishment of women, from the decency due to the sex, which forbids the exposing and publicly mangling their bodies, the sentence is now, by the statute 30 Geo. 3. c. 48. that women convicted in all cases of treason, shall receive judgment to be drawn to the place of execution, and there be hanged by the neck till dead.

For the consequences of this judgment, see Titles, Attainder, Forfeiture, and Corruption of Blood.

PETIT-TREASON. See Homicide.

TREASURE, (thesaurus,) signifies riches and wealth; and as the king's treasure is the honour and safety of the king, for this reason mines of gold and silver belong to the king. Cowell.

TREASURER, (thesaurarius.) Is an officer to whom the treasure of another is committed to be kept, and truly disposed of. Thus we have the lord treasurer of England, who is a lord by his office, and one of the greatest men of the kingdom. He holds his place durante bene-placito, by the delivery of a white staff. He is also treasurer of the exchequer, by letters patent. Under the charge and government of the lord treasurer, is all the king's wealth contained in the exchequer; he has the check of all the officers employed in collecting the customs and royal revenues; all the offices of the customs in all ports of England are in his gift and disposition; escheators in every county are nominated by him; and he makes leases of all the lands belonging to the crown, &c. Cowell.

But the high and important post of lord treasurer has of late years, like some other great offices, such as the lord high admiral, been esteemed too great a task for one person, and been generally committed by the crown to the commissioners of the exchequer. Ibid.

Besides the lord treasurer, there is a treasurer of the king's household, who is of the privy council, a treasurer of the navy, treasurer of the ordnance, and other treasurers of corporations, &c. Ibid.

TREASURER, in Cathedral Churches. An officer whose charge was to take care of the vestments, plate, jewels, relics, and other treasure belonging to the churches. Ibid.

TREASURER of the County. Is he that keeps the county stock. See County Rates.

TREASURE-TROVE, (thesaurus inventus.) Is where any money is found hid in the earth, but not lying upon the ground, and no man knows to whom it belongs; then the property thereof belongs to the king, or the lord of the manor by special grant or prescription. But if the owner may any ways be known, it doth not belong to the king or lord of the liberty, but such owner. Bract. lib. 3. 3 Inst. 132. Kitch. 80. But nothing is said to be treasure-trove but gold and silver, and concealing treasure found, and not making it known to the coroner, is punished by fine and imprisonment. Britton. cap. 17. S. P. C. 25.

TREASURY. The place where the king's treasure is deposited. Cowell.

TREATIES. It is the king's prerogative to make treaties, leagues, and alliances with foreign states and princes. 1 Bl. 257.

TREBUCHET, Trebucket, Tribush, (terbichetum.) A tumbrel or cucking-stool. Also a great engine to cast stones, to batter walls. 3 Inst. 219. See Castigatory.

TREES. See Trespass and Waste.

TREET, (triticum.) Fine wheat. Stat. 51 Hen. 3. Cowell.

TREMAGIUM, Tremesium, Termisium. The season or time of sowing summer corn, being about March, the third month. Cowell.

TREMELLOM. A granary. Ibid.

TRENCHEATOR, (from the Fr. trancher, to cut.) A carver of meat at a table. Ibid.

TRENCHIA. A trench, or dyke newly cut. Ibid.

TRENTAL, (Fr. Trentale.) An office for the dead, that continued thirty days, consisting of thirty masses. Ibid.

TREPGET. A great engine to throw stones against a wall in storming a town. Ibid.

TRESAYLE. A writ sued on ouster by abatement, on the death of the grandfather's grandfather—now obsolete. 4 Black. 186.

TRESPASS, (Transgressio.) Is any transgression of the law under treason, felony, or misprision of either. But it is most constantly used for that wrong or damage which is done by one private man to another: and it is of two sorts; 1. Trespass general, otherwise called trespass vi & armis: and 2. Trespass special, or upon the case. Bro. Trespass. Bract. lib. 4.

Trespass, in its largest and most extensive sense, signifies any transgression or offence against the law of nature, of society, or of the country in which we live, whether it relates to a man's person or his property. Therefore, beating another is a trespass, for which an action of trespass vi et armis in assault and battery will lie: taking or detaining a man's goods are respectively trespasses, for which an action of trespass vi et armis, or on the case in trover and conversion, is given by the law; so also non-performance of promises or undertakings is a trespass, upon which an action of trespass on the case in assumpsit is grounded; and, in general, any misfeasance, or act of one man, whereby another is injuriously treated or damnified, is a transgression, or trespass in its largest sense; for which, whenever the act itself is directly and immediately injurious to the person or property of another, and therefore necessarily accompanied with some force, an action of trespass vi et armis will lie; but if the injury is only consequential, a special action of trespass on the case may be brought. 3 Black. 208. 9.

In a limited and confined sense, it signifies no more than an entry on another man's ground without a lawful authority, and doing some damage, however inconsiderable, to his real property. And every entry upon another's lands, (unless by the owner's leave, or in some very particular cases), is an injury or wrong, for satisfaction of which an action of trespass will lie, subject as to the quantum of satisfaction, by considering how far the offence was wilful or inadvertent, and by estimating the value of the actual damage sustained.

Every unwarrantable entry on another's soil the law therefore entitles a trespass by breaking his close; and the words of the writ of trespass command the defendant to shew cause, quare clausum querentis fregit. For every man's land is in the eye of the law inclosed and set apart from his neighbour's: and that either by a visible and material fence, as one field is divided from another by a hedge; or, by an ideal invisible boundary, existing only in the contemplation of law, as when one man's land adjoins to another's in the same field. And every such entry or breach of a man's close, carries necessarily along with it some damage or other; for, if no other special loss can be assigned, yet still the words of the writ itself specify one general damage, viz. the treading down and bruising his herbage.

A man must have a property (either absolute or temporary) in the soil, and actual possession by entry, to be able to maintain an action of trespass; or, at least, it is requisite that the party have a lease and possession of the vesture and herbage of the land. Thus, if a meadow be divided annually among the parishioners by lot, then, after each person's several portion is allotted, they may be respectively capable of maintaining an action for the breach of their several closes, for they have an exclusive interest and freehold therein for the time. But before entry and actual possession, one cannot maintain an action of trespass, though he hath the freehold in law. And therefore an heir before entry cannot have this action against an abator; though a disseisee might have it against a disseisor, for the injury done by the disseisin itself, at which time the plaintiff was seised of the land: but he cannot have it for any act done after the disseisin, until he hath gained possession by re-entry, and then he may well maintain it for the intermediate damage done; for after his re-entry, the law, by a kind of jus postliminii, supposes the freehold to have all along continued in him. Neither, by the common law, in case of an intrusion or deforcement, could the party kept out of possession sue the wrongdoer by a mode of redress, which was calculated merely for injuries committed against the land while in the possession of the owner. But by the statute 6 Ann. c. 18. if a guardian or trustee for any infant, a husband seised jure uxoris, or a person having any estate or interest determinable upon a life or lives, shall, after the determination of their respective interests, hold over and continue in possession of the lands or tenements, they are now adjudged to be trespassers; and the reversioner or remainder-man may once in every year, by motion to the court of chancery, procure the cestuy que vie, to be produced by the tenant of the land, or may enter thereon in case of his refusal or wilful neglect. And, by the statutes of 4 Geo. 2. c. 28. and 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. in case after the determination of any term of life, lives, or years, any person shall wilfully hold over the same, the lessor is entitled to recover by action of debt, either a rent of double the annual value of the premises, in case he himself hath demanded and given notice in writing to deliver the possession; or else double the usual rent, in case the notice of quitting proceeds from any tenant having power to determine his lease, and he afterwards neglects to carry it into due execution.

A man is also answerable for not only his own trespass, but that of his cattle also: for if by his negligent keeping they stray upon the land of another (and much more if he permits, or drives them on) and they there tread down his neighbour's herbage, and spoil his corn or his trees, this is a trespass for which the owner must answer in damages. And the law gives the party injured a double remedy in this case, by permitting him to distrain the cattle thus damage feasant, or doing damage, till the owner shall make him satisfaction, or else by leaving him to the common remedy in foro consentioso, by action. And the action that lies in either of these cases, of trespass committed upon another's land, either by a man himself, or his cattle, is the action of trespass vi et armis, whereby a man is called upon to answer, quare vi et armis clausum ipsius A. apud B. fregit, et blada ipsius A. ad valentiam centum solidorum ibidem nuper crescentia cum quibusdam averiis depastus fuit, conculcavit, et consumpsit, &c.: for the law always couples the idea of force with that of intrusion upon the property of another. And herein, if any unwarrantable act of the defendant or his beasts in coming upon the land be proved, it is an act of trespass for which the plaintiff must recover some damages; such however as the jury shall think proper to assess.

In trespasses of a permanent nature, where the injury is continually renewed, (as by spoiling or consuming the herbage with the defendant's cattle) the declaration may alledge the injury to have been committed by continuation from one given day to another, (which is called laying the action with a continuando) and the plaintiff shall not be compelled to bring separate actions for every day's separate offence. But where the trespass is by one or several acts, each of which terminates in itself, and being once done cannot be done again, it cannot be laid with a continuando; yet, if there be repeated acts of trespass committed, (as cutting down a certain number of trees) they may be laid to be done, not continually, but at divers days and times within a given period.

In some cases trespass is justifiable; or, rather, entry on another's land or house shall not in those cases be accounted trespass: as if a man comes there to demand or pay money, there payable; or to execute, in a legal manner, the process of the law. Also a man may justify entering into an inn or public-house, without the leave of the owner first specially asked; because, when a man professes the keeping of such inn or public-house, he thereby gives a general licence to any person to enter his doors. So a landlord may justify entering to distrein for rent; a commoner to attend his cattle, commoning on another's land; and a reversioner, to see if any waste be committed on the estate; for the apparent necessity of the thing. Also it hath been said, that by the common law and custom of England, the poor are allowed to enter and glean upon another's ground after the harvest, without being guilty of trespass: which humane provision seems borrowed from the mosaical law. In like manner the common law warrants the hunting of ravenous beasts of prey, as badgers and foxes, in another man's land; because the destroying such creatures is profitable to the public. But in cases where a man misdemeans himself, or make an ill use of the authority with which the law entrusts him, he shall be accounted a trespasser ab initio; as if one comes into a tavern, and will not go out in a reasonable time, but tarries there all night contrary to the inclination of the owner; this wrongful act shall affect and have relation back even to his first entry, and make the whole a trespass. But a bare nonfeasance, as not paying for the wine he calls for, will not make him a trespasser; for this is only a breach of contract, for which the taverner shall have an action of debt or assumpsit against him. So if a landlord distreined for rent, and wilfully killed the distress, this by the common law made him a trespasser ab initio: and so indeed would any other irregularity have done, till the stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. which enacts, that no subsequent irregularity of the landlord shall make his first entry a trespass; but the party injured shall have a special action on the case for the real specific injury sustained, unless tender of amends hath been made. But still, if a reversioner, who enters on pretence of seeing waste, breaks the house, or stays there all night: or if the commoner, who comes to tend his cattle, cuts down a tree; in these and similar cases the law judges that he entered for this unlawful purpose, and therefore, as the act which demonstrates such his purpose is a trespass, he shall be deemed a trespasser ab initio. So also in the case of hunting the fox or the badger, a man cannot justify breaking the soil, and digging him out of the earth: for though the law warrants the hunting of such noxious animals for the public good, yet it is held that such things must be done in an ordinary and usual manner; therefore, as there is an ordinary course to kill them, viz. by hunting, the court held that the digging for them was unlawful.

A man may also justify in an action of trespass, on account of the freehold and right of entry being in himself; and this defence brings the title of the estate in question. This is therefore one of the ways devised, since the disuse of real actions, to try the property of estates; though it is not so usual as that by ejectment, because that, being now a mixed action, not only gives damages for the ejection, but also possession of the land: whereas, in trespass, which is merely a personal suit, the right can be only ascertained, but no possession delivered; nothing being recovered but damages for the wrong committed.

But in order to prevent trifling and vexatious actions of trespass, as well as other personal actions, it is (inter alia) enacted by statutes 43 Eliz. c. 6 and 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 9. s. 136. that where the jury, who try an action of trespass, give less damages than forty shillings, the plaintiff shall be allowed no more costs than damages; unless the judge shall certify under his hand that the freehold or title of the land came chiefly in question. But this rule now admits of two exceptions more, which have been made by subsequent statutes. One is by statute 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11. hereafter more fully noticed, which enacts, that in all actions of trespass, wherein it shall appear that the trespass was wilful and malicious, and it be so certified by the judge, the plaintiff shall recover full costs. And every trespass is wilful, where the defendant has notice, and is especially forewarned not to come on the land: as every trespass is malicious, though the damage may not amount to forty shillings, where the intent of the defendant plainly appears to be to harrass and distress the plaintiff. The other exception is by stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 23. which gives full costs against any inferior tradesman, apprentice, or other dissolute person, who is convicted of a trespass in hawking, hunting, fishing, or fowling upon another's land: and upon this statute it has been adjudged, that if a person be an inferior tradesman, as a clothier for instance, it matters not what qualification he may have in point of estate; but that if he be guilty of such trespass, he shall be liable to pay full costs. Ld. Raym. 149.

—— Trespass, to things personal. As to damage that may be offered to things personal, while in the possession of the owner, as hunting a man's deer, shooting his dogs, poisoning or otherwise destroying his cattle or living animals, or making them in a worse condition than before, these are injuries, for which the law allows redress in two shapes: 1. by action of trespass vi et armis, when the act is in itself immediately injurious to another's property, and therefore necessarily accompanied with some degree of force; 2. and by special action on the case, where the act is in itself indifferent, and the injury only consequential, and therefore arising without any breach of the peace. In both of which suits the plaintiff shall recover damages, in proportion to the injury which he proves that his property has sustained. And it is not material whether the damage be done by the defendant himself, or his servants by his direction, for the action will lie against the master as well as the servant. And, if a man keeps a dog or other brute animal used to do mischief, as by worrying sheep, or the like, the owner must answer for the consequences, if he knows of such evil habit.

TRESPASSES RESTRAINED BY STATUTE. There are divers trespasses against which parliament have found it expedient to make special provision, as appears from the following statutes:

1. Pulling down Inclosures. By 13

Ed. 1. s. 1. c. 46. where sometimes it chanceth that one having a right to improve, doth then levy a dyke or an hedge, and some by night or at another season, when they suppose not to be espied, do overthrow the hedge or dyke, and it cannot be known by verdict of the assise or jury, who did overthrow the hedge or dyke, and men of the towns near, will not indict such as be guilty of the fact; the towns near adjoining shall be distrained to levy the hedge or dyke at their own cost, and to yield damages,

And by 3 & 4 Edw. 6. c. 3. such person as shall bring an assise hereupon, and have judgment to recover, shall have his damages trebled by the judgment of the court.

2. Cutting growing corn, robbing of orchards or gardens, breaking hedges, pulling up fruit-trees, or spoiling wood growing. By 43 Eliz. c. 7. if any person shall cut, or unlawfully take away any corn growing, or rob any orchards or gardens, or break or cut any hedge, pales, rails, or fence, or dig, pull up, or take up, any fruit-trees, to the intent to take the same away, or shall cut or spoil any woods or underwoods, poles or trees standing (the same not being felony by the laws of this realm), every such person, his procurers and receivers knowing the same, being convicted by confession, or one witness, before one justice of peace, mayor, or other head officer, where the offence shall be committed, or the party apprehended, shall give such recompence for the damages as by such justice shall be appointed for the first fault; and if such offenders shall be thought, in the discretion of the justice, not able, or do not make satisfaction for the damages, the justice shall commit the offenders to some constable or other inferior officer, where the offence shall be committed, or the party apprehended, to be whipped: and for every such offence for which the offenders shall be eftsoons committed, to receive the said punishment of whipping, s. 1.

And if any constable, or inferior officer, do not, at the command of any such justice, execute by himself, or some other, the punishment limited by this statute, it shall be lawful for the justice to commit him to the common gaol, until the offenders be by him, or by his procurement, whipped. s. 2.

But no such justice shall execute this statute for any offences done unto himself, unless he be assisted by one or more other justices, whom the offence doth not concern. s. 3.

3. Hedge-breakers and stealers of wood, gates, pales, &c. By 15 Car. 2. c. 2. the constable may apprehend, or cause to be apprehended, every person he shall suspect, having or carrying any kind of burden of any kind of wood, underwood, poles, or young trees, or bark, or bast of any trees; or any gates, stiles, posts, and pales, rails or hedgewood, broom or furze. And by warrant of one justice, directed to any officer, such officer shall have power to enter into and search the houses, outhouses, yards, gardens, or other places, belonging to the houses of every person they shall suspect to have any wood, underwood, poles, or young trees, or bark, or bast of any trees; or any gates, stiles, posts, pales, rails, or hedgewood, broom or furze; and where they shall find any such, to apprehend the persons suspected, for cutting and taking the same. And as well those apprehended carrying, as those in whose houses and places the same shall be found, to carry before one justice. And if such person do not then and there give a good account how he came by the same, such as shall satisfy the said justice, or else shall not in some convenient time, to be set by the said justice, produce the party of whom he bought the same: or some credible witness, to depose upon oath such sale thereof, he shall be convicted of cutting and spoiling the same, and punished according to the above statute of 43 Eliz. and further by this act. s. 2.

That is to say, he shall for the first offence give the owner such recompence or satisfaction for damages, and within such time, as the justice shall appoint; and over and above pay down presently to the overseers, for the use of the poor, such sum, not exceeding 10*s.* as the justice shall think meet; and if he do not make such recompence, and also pay the said sum to the poor, the said justice shall commit him to the house of correction for not exceeding one month, or to be whipped by the constable; and if he shall again commit the said offence, and be thereof convicted as before, he shall be sent to the house of correction for one month, to be there kept to hard labour; and if he shall again commit the said offence, and be thereof convicted as before, he shall be deemed an incorrigible rogue. s. 2, 3.

And whosoever shall buy any burdens of wood, or any poles or sticks of wood, or any other the things aforesaid, which may be justly suspected to have been stolen, or unlawfully come by, it shall be lawful for one justice, upon complaint, to examine the matter upon oath: and if he shall find that the same was bought of a person who might justly be suspected to have stolen, or unlawfully come by the same, and that the same was stolen, or unlawfully come by, he may award the party who bought the same, to pay treble value to him from whom it was unlawfully taken; and in default of present payment, may issue his warrant to levy the same by distress, and in default of distress to commit the party to gaol, at his own charge, there to remain one month without bail. s. 4.

But no person shall be punished for any offence upon this law that hath been punished for the same by any former law; nor unless he be questioned within six weeks after the offence. s. v.

4. Destroying timber-trees, fruit-trees, or other trees or plantations. By 37 Hen. 8. c. 6, if any person shall maliciously, willingly, and unlawfully bark any apple-trees, pear-trees, or other fruit-trees, he shall forfeit to the party grieved double damages, by action of trespass, at the common law, and also 10*l.* to the king.

But it is enacted by 1 Geo. 1. stat. 2. c. 48, to encourage the planting of timber-trees, fruit-trees, and other trees in fields, hedge-rows, gardens, walks, and elsewhere, either for ornament, shelter, or profit, and to prevent the malicious destroying or spoiling thereof; that, if any person shall maliciously break down, cut up, pluck up, throw down, bark, or otherwise destroy, deface, or spoil any timber-tree or trees, fruit-tree or trees, or any other tree or trees, the person damaged shall receive such satisfaction and recompence from the inhabitants of the parish, town, hamlet, villa, or place; to be viewed, and damages and costs to be recovered in the same manner as hedges and ditches overthrown in the night may by the stat. 13 Ed. 1. c. 46, unless the party offending shall by such parish or place be convicted of such offence within six months. s. 1.

And as doubts had arisen on this last act, whether such offences were punishable if committed in the day-time, the stat. 6 Geo. 1. c. 16. was passed, to explain and amend the same, and also to extend the provisions thereof to the destroyers of hedges and other fences: by which said act is enacted as follows: that is to say,

If any person whatsoever shall either by day or by night, cut, take, destroy, break, throw down, bark, pluck up, burn, deface, spoil, or carry away any wood springs, or springs of wood trees, poles, wood, tops of trees, under woods or coppice woods, thorns, or quicksets, without the consent of the owner of such woods, wood-grounds, parks, chases, or coppices, plantations, timber-trees, fruit-trees, or other trees, thorns, or quicksets, or of the person chiefly entrusted with the care and custody thereof; or shall break open, thrown down, level, or destroy any hedges, gates, posts, stiles, railing, walls, fences, dykes, ditches, banks, or other inclosures thereof, the owner may have such satisfaction and recompence from the inhabitants of the parishes, towns, hamlets, villages, or places joining on such grounds, and recover such damages against such place or places, and in the same manner and form, as by the above statute of the 13 Ed. 1. c. 46., unless the offender, by such parishes or places, be convicted within six months, 6 Geo. 1. c. 16. s. 1.

But if the offender is known, then the following proceedings shall take place:

That is to say, if any offender shall, in a riotous, open, tumultuous, or in a secret or clandestine manner, forcibly, or wrongfully, or maliciously, and without the consent of the owner, or person chiefly entrusted with the care of the above-mentioned premises, commit any of the offences restrained by the said acts of 1 Geo. 1. stat. 2. c. 48. or 6 Geo. 1. c. 16, two justices, or the justices in sessions, on complaint made by the inhabitants of such parish or place, or by the owner of the wood or trees, or any other, may cause the offender to be apprehended, and hear and determine the offence, and on conviction shall commit the offender to the house of correction to hard labour for three months; and where there is no house of correction, then to the prison for four months; and shall also order the offender to be publicly whipped by the master of such house of correction once a month during such three months, in the borough or corporation, if the offence be committed therein; or in the market-town where the house of correction stands, or in the next market-town next adjacent to such house of correction, on the market-day; and in the county where such offence shall be committed, on the market-day between the hours of eleven and two; and where there is no house of correction, the said justices shall order him to be whipped by the common hangman, once a month during such four months, on the market day of any borough or corporation where such offender shall be committed; or on the market-day of some town, between the hours of eleven and two o'clock, 1 Geo. 1. stat. 2. c. 48. s. 2. 6 Geo. 1. c. 16. s. 2.

And before such offender shall be discharged, he shall find sufficient sureties for his good behaviour for two years, 1 Geo. 1. stat. 2. c. 48. s. 3. 6 Geo. 1. c. 16. s. 2.

5. Destroying trees growing on wastes. Also by 29 Geo. 2. c. 36. if any person shall unlawfully cut, take, destroy, break, throw down, bark, pluck up, burn, deface, spoil, or carry away, any tree growing in any waste, wood, or pasture, in which any person or body politic hath right of common, every such offender shall be in like manner convicted of such offence, and incur the like penalty, as is directed by 6 Geo. 1. c. 16. s. 8.

And the parties may take their remedy for damages, either against the parish or place where the offence shall be committed, according to the above acts, 1 Geo. 1 c. 8, and 6 Geo. 1. c. 16, or on the hundred, according to the stat. 9 Geo. 1. c. 22. s. 7, as to them shall seem most meet. s. 9.

6. Destroying timber-trees in forests or chases. By 6 Geo. 3. c. 48. every person who shall wilfully cut or break down, bark, burn, pluck up, lop, top, crop, or otherwise deface, damage, spoil, or destroy, or carry away, any timber-tree, or any tree likely to become timber, or any part thereof, or the lops or tops thereof, without the consent of the owner thereof first had; or in any of his majesty's forests or chases, without the consent of the surveyor, or his deputy, or person entrusted with the care of the same, and shall be thereof convicted upon the oath of one witness, before one justice, shall, for the first offence, forfeit not exceeding 20*l.* together with the charges previous to and attending such conviction, to be ascertained by such justice; and upon non-payment thereof, such justice shall commit the offender to the common goal, for not exceeding twelve nor less than six months, or until the penalty and charges be paid; and if any person so convicted shall be guilty of the like offence a second time, and shall be thereof convicted in like manner, such person shall forfeit not exceeding 30*l.* together with the charges attending such conviction; and upon non-payment thereof, such justice shall commit the offender to the common goal for not exceeding eighteen nor less than twelve months, or until the penalty and charges be paid. And if any person so convicted shall be guilty of the like offence a third time, and shall be thereof convicted, such person shall be guilty of felony, and the court before whom he shall be tried, shall transport such person for seven years s. 1.

And all oak, beech, chesnut, walnut, asp, elm, cedar, fir, ash, lime, sycamore, birch. (poplar, alder, larch, maple, and hornbeam trees, 13 Geo. 3. c. 3.) shall be deemed timber-trees within the meaning of this act. s. 2.

7. Destroying underwoods, hollies, or the like. Also every person who shall go into the woods, underwoods, or wood-grounds, of any of his majesty's subjects, not being the owner thereof, (or into any of his majesty's forests or chases, 9 Geo. 3. c. 41. s. 8,) or any of the woods or wood-grounds belonging to his majesty in Great Britain, as well in right of his duchy of Lancaster, as otherwise, and whether such woods or wood-grounds shall be within any of his majesty's forests or chases or not, 45 Geo. 3. c. 6. and shall there cut, lop, top, or spoil, split-down, or damage, or otherwise destroy, any kind of wood, or underwood, poles, sticks of wood, green stubs, or young trees, or carry or convey the same away (or shall by night or day, cut down, destroy, take, carry, or convey away, any hollies, thorns, or quicksets, there growing or being, 9 Geo. 3. c. 41. s. 8.) or shall have in his custody any kind of wood, underwood, poles, sticks of wood, green stubs, or young trees, (or any such hollies, thorns, or quicksets, 9 Geo. 3. c. 41. s. 8.) and shall not give a satisfactory account how he came by the same, and shall be thereof convicted before one justice, on the oath of one witness, shall for the first offence forfeit not exceeding 40*s.* together with the charges attending such conviction; and if the same be not forthwith paid on conviction, the justice shall by warrant commit him to the house of correction for one month, to hard labour, and to be once whipped there:—and if any person shall commit any of the offences aforesaid a second time, he shall forfeit not exceeding 5*l.* together with the charges attending such conviction; and if the same be not forthwith paid on conviction, the justice shall by warrant commit him to the house of correction for three months, and to be whipped there, once in every one of the said three months; and if a third time, such person convicted thereof shall be deemed an incorrigible rogue, and punished as such, s. 4. 6.

And the justices for the counties, cities, ridings, divisions, or places wherein any offences against this act shall be done, are to put this act in execution. s. 5.

And one moiety of all forfeitures, not otherwise directed; shall go to the informer, and the other to the person aggrieved. s. 8.

And if any person shall hinder, or attempt to prevent, the seizing or securing any person employed in carrying away any such timber or other trees, such person shall forfeit 10*l.* to the person who shall convict such offender; and if not paid on conviction, the person convicted shall be committed to the house of correction to hard labour, for not exceeding six calendar months. s. 7.

And for the better preventing the destruction of timber-trees, and other trees, underwood and covert in forests and chases, it is enacted by 4 Geo. 3. c. 31. that it shall be lawful for every surveyor of his majesty's woods, and his lawful deputy, and for the officers and keepers of any forest or chase (besides the penalties for destroying the trees or underwood,) to seize and take away for his own use, any saw, axe, hatchet, bill-hook or other instrument used by any person whom they shall find unlawfully plucking up, sawing, cutting down, topping, lopping, or destroying any timber-tree, or other tree, underwood, or covert, within such forest or chase.

8. Destroying plantations, nurseries, or gardens. Also by the said stat. 6 Geo. 3, c. 48, every person who shall pluck up, or cut, spoil, or destroy, or take away, any root, shrub, or plant, out of the fields, nurseries, gardens, or garden-grounds, or other cultivated lands, of any person whomsoever, without the consent of the owner first had, and shall be thereof convicted upon the oath of one witness, before one justice, shall for the first offence forfeit not exceeding 40*s.* together with the charges previous to and attending such conviction, to be ascertained by such justice; and if the same are not paid down upon conviction, forthwith, the said justice shall by warrant commit him to the house of correction for one month to hard labour, and to be once whipped there;—and if any person so convicted shall again commit the like offence, and be convicted in manner aforesaid, such person shall for such second offence forfeit not exceeding 5*l.* together with the charges attending the conviction; which if not paid down upon conviction, forthwith the said justice shall by warrant commit him to the house of correction for three months, and to be whipped there once in every of the said three months. And if any person so before convicted, shall a third time commit the like offence, and shall be thereof convicted, such person shall for such third offence be deemed guilty of felony, and the court before whom he shall be tried, shall transport such person for seven years. s. 3. 6.

9. Stealing turnips, potatoes, cabbages, parsnips, pease, or carrots, growing. Also by 13 Geo. 3. c. 32. and 42. Geo. 3. c. 67, if any person shall steal and take away, or maliciously pull up, injure, or destroy any turnips, potatoes, cabbages, parsnips, beans, pease, or carrots, growing or being in any garden, lands, or grounds, open or inclosed, and shall be thereof convicted, on a prosecution begun within thirty days after the offence, before any justice, either by the confession of the party offending, or by the oath of one witness, every person so offending, and being convicted, shall forfeit not exceeding 20*s.* over the value of the goods stolen, as to such justice shall seem meet; which shall be distributed between the owner of the goods and overseers, for the use of the poor, in such proportion as such justice shall think fit; or the whole shall be given to the owner or to the overseers, according to the discretion of such justice; and in default of payment, such justice shall commit such offender to the house of correction, to be kept to hard labour for not exceeding two months, unless such penalty be sooner paid. s. 1.

And in all informations, and other proceedings, the evidence of the owner and of the inhabitants of the parish shall be taken. 13 Geo. 3. c. 32. s. 2.

But where the conviction shall be upon the oath of the owner, the whole of the penalty shall be paid to the overseer for the use of the poor. s. 3.

10. Destroying timber or other trees, or any roots, plants, or shrubs in the night. By 22 and 23 Car. 2. c. 7. if any person shall, in the night-time, maliciously, unlawfully, and wittingly destroy any plantations of trees, or throw down any inclosures, he shall forfeit to the party injured treble damages, to be recovered by action of trespass, or upon the case; but upon request of the party injured, three justices of the peace may within six months inquire thereof, as well by a jury as by examination of witnesses upon oath, or by any lawful ways which to them shall seem meet. s. 5. 6, 7.

And it is enacted by 6 Geo. 3. c. 36, that every person who shall in the night-time lop, top, cut down, break, throw down, bark, burn, or otherwise spoil or destroy, or carry away any oak, beech, ash, elm, fir, chesnut, or asp, timber-tree, or other tree standing for timber, or likely to become timber, without the consent of the owner thereof; or shall in the night-time pluck up, dig up, break, spoil, or destroy, or carry away any root, shrub, or plant, roots, shrubs, or plants, of the value of 5*s.* and which shall be growing and being in the garden-ground, nursery-ground, or other inclosed ground of any person; or shall be aiding or assisting therein, or shall buy or receive such root, shrub, or plant, roots, shrubs, or plants, of the value aforesaid, knowing the same to be stolen, shall be guilty of felony and transported for seven years.

11. Damage feasant. Where an injury has been done by the cattle or goods of any one to the lands of another, he who receives the injury, may either distrain them while doing the damage, or bring his action of trespass, and recover for the damage sustained; but he should make his election of his remedy: for if he distrains, and the distress escapes, the action of trespass is gone, unless the escape was not through his fault or neglect; and it is to be observed that this action may be brought against him who has only the care, custody, or possession of the cattle which do the damage.

If the tenant's goods are distrained for tolls or customs pretended to be due, he may bring his action for the taking, in which the right to the tolls will be tried.

12. Hunting. In respect to injuries from hunting, or the pursuit of game, the following points are necessary to be noticed in this place;

Any person may justify going upon the nds of another in pursuit of ravenous easts, as foxes, badgers, and the like: for ie taking of them is of public benefit; ut he cannot justify to break the ground r dig for them.

So it will not justify any excessive or nreasonable damage to the land; for ie justification is only as to the following, nd shall be done with as little damage as ossible; and therefore if to trespass for uch cause, the defendant justifies for fol- owing a fox or such beast, and in fact has ommitted unnecessary mischief, the plain- iff must, in his pleading, newly alledge and rove excessive and unnecessary injury.

But in general it is trespass at common aw for any man to hunt on another's round; and the owner or tenant of the oil may maintain his action of trespass for he same.

Yet if the party is qualified according to he statutes to kill game, and the damage ound be under 40*s*. unless the title to the and was chiefly in question, the defendant hall, in such case, pay no more costs than lamages.

But for preventing wilful and malicious trespasses, the stat. 8 & 9 Will. 3. c. 11. s. 1, enacts, that in all actions of trespass wherein, at the trial of the cause, it shall appear and be certified by the judge, under his hand, on the back of the record, that the trespass upon which any defendant shall be found guilty was wilfully and malicious, the plantiff shall recover not only his damages, but his full costs of suit.

Under this statute, therefore, if the owner or tenant of the land expressly forwarns another not to come thereon, he will in an action of trespass, subsequent thereto, be entitled to full costs, notwithstanding the damages recovered be under 40*s*.; for every trespass is wilful where the defendant has notice, and is especially forewarned not to come on the land.

And if a general notice be given, not to trespass on certain lands, and another hunts over a close belonging to the party giving such notice, the judge on the trial of an action for such trespass is bound under the above stat. 8 & 9 Will. 3. c. 11. s. 4, to certify that it was wilful and malicious, in order to entitle the plaintiff to his full costs; notwithstanding it appear upon the trial that the defendant was anxious to avoid trespassing on the ground, and that he made frequent enquiries respecting the plaintiff's boundaries.

TRESPASSANTS, (Fr.) according to Britton, c. 29. passengers.

TRESPASSER, is one who commits a trespass; and though the law allows a man to enter a place peaceably, yet if he doth abuse the licence of the law by committing a trespass, the law will adjudge hm a trespasser ab initio. 8 Rep. 146.

TRESTORNARE, to turn or divert another way. Cowell.

TREYTS, (Fr.) Signifies taken out or withdrawn, and was applied to a juror removed or discharged. F. N. B. 159.

TRIAL, (Triatio.) Is the examination of a cause, civil or criminal, before a judge who has jurisdiction of it, according to the laws of the land; it is the trial and examination of the point in issue, and of the question between the parties, whereupon the judgment may be given. 1 Inst. 124. Finch. 36.

TRIBUCH and TREBUCHET, (Terbichetum.) A tumbrel, or cucking stool. Cowell.

TRICENNALE. See Trental.

TRICESIMA, an ancient custom in a borough in the county of Hereford, so called, because thirty burgesses paid 1*d*. rent for their houses to the bishop, who is lord of the manor. Lib. Nigr. Heref. Cowell.

TRIDINGMOTE, the court held for a triding or trithing. Cowell.

TRIENNIAL ELECTIONS. The utmost extent of time that the same parliament was allowed to sit, by the stat. 6 W. & M. c. 2. was three years; after the expiration of which, reckoning from the return of the first summons, the parliament was to have no longer continuance. But, by the stat. 1. Geo. 1. stat. 2, c. 38. to prevent heats, animosities, and expence, this term was prolonged to seven years.

TRIGINTALE. See Trental.

TRILION, used in accounts, to signify three millions. Cowell.

TRIMILCHI. The Anglo Saxons denominated the month of May, Trimilchi; because they milked their cattle three times every day in that month, Beda.

TRINITY, (Trinitas). The number of three persons in the godhead or deity; and denying any one of the persons in the trinity to be God, is subject to divers penalties and incapacities. See Blasphemy.

TRINITY-HOUSE. Is a kind of college at Deptford, belonging to a company or corporation of seamen, who have authority by the king's charter to take knowledge of those that destroy sea-marks; also to redress the faults of sailors, licensing pilots, and divers other things belonging to navigation. 8 Eliz. c. 13. See Pilots.

TRINK. A fishing-net, or engine to catch fish. 2 Hen. 6. c. 15.

TRINOBANTES, The inhabitants of Middlesex, Essex, and Hertfordshire. Cowell.

TRINODA NECESSITAS, signified a threefold necessary tax, to which all lands were liable in the Saxon times, i. e. for repairing of bridges, the maintaining of castles and garrisons, and for expeditions to repel invasions. Ibid.

TRIORS, Triours, or Triers, are such as are chosen by the court to examine whether a challenge made to the panel of jurors, or any of them, be just or not. Broke 122.

TRIORS OF JURORS on challenges to the favour; that is, where the party hath no principal challenge, but objects only some probable circumstances of suspicion, as acquaintance, and the like; the validity thereof must be left to the determination of triors, whose office it is to decide whether the juror be favourable or unfavourable. These triors, in case the first man called be challenged, are two indifferent persons named by the court; and if they try one man, and find him indifferent, he shall be sworn; and then he and the two triors shall try the next; and when another is found indifferent and sworn, the two triors shall be superseded, and the two first sworn on the jury shall try the next. Co. Lit. 158.

TRIORS OF PEERS. Formerly, on the trial of a peer in parliament, a precept was issued to summon only eighteen or twenty, selected from the body of the peers. But now, by stat. 7 W. 3. c. 3. upon all trials of peers for treason or misprision, all the peers who have a right to sit and vote in parliament shall be summoned at least twenty days before such trial, to appear and vote therein; and every lord appearing shall vote in the trial of such peer, first taking the oaths of allegiance and supremacy, and subscribing the declaration against popery.

TRIPODIUM. According to Leg. H. 1. cap. 64. for a small offence, the composition was twenty shillings; and for a great offence, three times twenty shillings, viz. tripodium. Cowell.

TRIRODA TERRÆ. Three rods or perches. Ibid.

TRISTEGA. The uppermost room in the house, or garret. Ibid.

TRISTIS, (from the Fr. traist, i. e. trust.) Was an immunity, whereby a man was freed from attendance on the lord of a forest when he was disposed to chase within the forest. Manwood. Cowell.

TRISTRA. A post or station, in hunting. Cowell.

TRITHING or TRIHING, (Sax. Trithinga.) Contains the third part of a county, or three or four hundreds. Also it was a court held within that circuit, of the nature of the court-leet, but inferior to the county-court. Cambd. 102. Magn. Chart. c. 36. The ridings in Yorkshire are corruptly called by that name, from tridings or trithings. And those who anciently governed those trithings, were termed trithing-reves, before whom were brought all causes which could not be decided in the hundreds; for from the hundred-court suits might be removed to the tithing, and thence to the county-court. Spelm. Cowell.

TRIUMVIR. A trithing-man, or constable of three hundreds. Cowell.

TRONAGE (tronagium.) Is a customary duty or toll for weighing of wool. Ibid.

TRONATOR, (from trona, i. e. statera.) An officer in the city of London, who weighed the wool brought thither. Ibid.

TROPE, (tropus, of τροπος, from τρεπω, Gr. to turn.) An elegant turning or application of a word, from its strictly proper signification to another.

TROPER, (troperium.) Was a book of alternate turns or responses in singing mass. Cowell.

TROVER, (from the Fr. trouver, i. e. invenire.) Is an action which a man hath against one, that, having found any of his goods, refuseth to deliver them up on demand: or if another hath in his possession my goods, by delivery to him, or otherwise, and he sells or makes use of them without my consent, this is a conversion for which trover lies; so if he doth not actually convert them, but doth not deliver them to me on demand. 2 Lill. Abr. 618.

This action of trover and conversion was in its original, an action of trespass upon the case, for recovery of damages against such person as had found another's goods, and refused to deliver them on demand, but converted them to his own use; from which finding and converting, it is called an action of trover and conversion. The freedom of this action from wager of law, and the less degree of certainty requisite in describing the goods, gave it so considerable an advantage over the action of detinue, that by a fiction of law actions of trover were at length permitted to be brought against any man, who had in his possession, by any means whatsoever, the personal goods of another, and sold them, or used them without the consent of the owner, or refused to deliver them when demanded. The injury lies in the conversion: for any man may take the goods of another into possession, if he finds them; but no finder is allowed to acquire a property therein, unless the owner be for ever unknown; and therefore he must not convert them to his own use, which the law presumes him to do, if he refuses to restore them to the owner; for which reason, such refusal alone is, prima facie, sufficient evidence of a conversion. The fact of the finding, or trover, is therefore now totally immaterial: for the plaintiff needs only to suggest (as words of form) that he lost such goods, and that the defendant found them; and, if he proves that the goods are his property, and that the defendant had them in his possession, it is sufficient. But a conversion must be fully proved: and then in this action the plaintiff shall recover damages, equal to the value of the thing converted; but not the thing itself, which nothing will recover but an action of detinue or replevin. 3 Black. 152.

TRUCE, (treuga.) A league or cessation of arms. And by stat. 2 Hen. 5. st. 1. c. 6. conservators of truce and safe-conducts were appointed in every port. See Safe-Conduct.

TRUG-CORN, (truga frumenti.) A measure of corn; and at Leominster the vicar hath trug-corn allowed for officiating at some chapels of ease. Cowell.

TRUNCUS. A trunk set in churches, to receive the oblations of pious people. Ibid.

TRUSSA. A truss or bundle of corn. Ibid.

TRUST, (fiducia, confidentia.) Is a confidence which one man reposes in another, and nothing more than a new name given to an use; but, as generally used in law, it is a right to receive the profits of land, and to dispose of the land itself (in many cases) for particular purposes, as directed by the lawful owner, or pointed out by the deed of settlement, or other conveyance which created the trust: and if a person in whom a trust is reposed, breaks or doth not perform the same, the remedy is by bill in chancery, the common law generally taking no notice of trusts. 2 Lill. Abr. 624. See Resulting Trust and Uses and Trusts.

TUB-MAN, in the Exchequer. In the court of exchequer, two of the most experienced barristers, called the Postman and the Tub-man, (from the places in which they sit) have a precedence in motions. 3 Black. 28 n.

TUN, (Sax.) In the end of words signifying a town, or dwelling-place. Cowell.

TUN, (Lat. tunellum.) A vessel of wine and oil, being four hogsheads. 1 R. 3. c. 12. A tun of timber is a measure of forty solid feet, cut to a square. 12 Car. 2. c. 14. And a tun is twenty hundred weight of coals. Stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 13.

TUNNAGE, (tunnagium.) A custom or impost granted to the crown for merchandize imported or exported. See Customs.

TUN-GREVE, (Sax. tungeræva, i.e. villæ præpositus,) The town-reeve or bailiff. Spelm. Cowell.

TURBAGIUM. The liberty of digging turfs. Cowell.

TURBARY, (turbaria, from turba, an obsolete Latin word for turf.) Is a right to dig turfs on a common or in another man's ground. Kitch. 94.

TURKINS. A kind of sky-coloured cloth, mentioned in 1 R. 2. c. 8.

TURN, or TOURN. Is the king's leet through all the county; of which the sheriff is judge, and this court is incident to his office; wherefore it is called the sheriff's tourn. And it had its name originally from the sheriff's taking a turn or circuit about his shire, and holding this court in several places. Crompt. Jurisd. 230. 4 Inst. 260. 2 Hawk. P. C. 55. It is a court of record. But great part of the business of the turn and leet hath, for several years past, through the negligence of sheriffs and stewards, devolved on the quarter-sessions. 4 Black. 274.

TURNIPS. See Trespass.

TURNO VICECOMITUM. Is a writ that lieth for those that are called to the sheriff's turn out of their own hundred. Reg. Orig. 173.

TURNPIKES. The turnpike roads are placed under the management and direction of certain bodies of trustees, who are usually named and appointed by the respective acts of parliament, which are occasionally passed for the purpose of making, repairing, and sustaining the particular roads therein specified: but the power of these statutes being confined to separate and distinct objects, it was thought expedient to pass some general laws, which should apply in common to all trustees and turnpike roads in general throughout the kingdom. 1 Hawk. P. C. Leach's Edit. 423. These provisions are contained in the stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 84. the most popular of which are as follows:

By this act it is enacted, that if the driver of any cart, car, dray or waggon, shall ride upon such carriage, in any street or highway, not having some other person on foot or on horseback, to guide the same (such carriages as are conducted by some person holding the reigns of the horses excepted):

Or if the driver of any carriage whatsoever shall, by negligence or misbehaviour, cause any hurt to any person or carriage passing;

Or shall quit the highway, and go on the other side the hedge or fence inclosing the same; or wilfully be at such distace from such carriage, or in such a situation, while it shall be passing on such highway, that he cannot have the direction of such cattle drawing the same:

Or shall, by negligence or misbehaviour, prevent or interrupt the free passage of any other carriage on the said highways:

Or if the driver of any empty waggon, cart, or other carriage, shall neglect or refuse to turn aside for any coach, chariot, chaise, loaded waggon, cart, or other loaded carriage:

Or if any person shall drive any such coach, post-chaise, or other carriage let for hire, or waggon, wain, or cart, not having the owner's name as hereby required, painted thereon, or shall refuse to discover the true christian and sirname of the owner:

Such driver, being convicted of any such offence, either by his own confession, the view of a justice, or by the oath of one witness before any justice, shall for every offence forfeit not exceeding 10*s.*

In case such driver shall not be the owner, and in case the offender be the owner of such carriage, then not exceeding 20*s.*; and in either of the said cases shall, in default of payment, be committed to the house of correction for not exceeding one month.

And such driver offending in either of the said cases, shall, by authority of this act, with or without any warrant, be apprehended by any person who shall see such offence committed, and shall be immediately conveyed to a constable or peace-officer, to be conveyed before some justice; and if such driver shall refuse to discover his name, it shall be lawful for the justice before whom he shall be taken, or to whom such complaint shall be made, to commit him to the house of correction, for not exceeding three months, or to proceed against him for the penalty, by a description of his person and offence, and expressing in his proceedings that he refused to discover his name. 13 Geo. 3. c. 84. s. 40.

And for the better discovering of offenders, the owner of any waggon, wain, or cart, and also of every coach, post-chaise, or other carriage let to hire, shall paint upon some conspicuous part of his waggon, wain, or cart, and upon the pannels of the doors of all such coaches, post-chaises, or other carriages, before the same shall be used upon any turnpike-roads, his christian and sirname, and the place of his abode in large letters, and continue the same thereupon so long as such waggon or carriage shall be used upon such turnpike-road, and the owner of every common stage waggon or cart employed in travelling stages from town to town, shall, above his christian and sirname, paint on the part and in the manner aforesaid the following words: "Common Stage Waggon" (or Cart, as the case may be,) and every person using such carriage without the names and descriptions painted thereon as aforesaid, or who shall paint any false name or abode on such waggon or other carriage, shall forfeit not exceeding 5*l.* nor less than 1*l.* s. 68.

If any person shall by day or night pull down, pluck up, throw down, level, or destroy any turnpike-gate, post, rail, wall, chain, bar, or other fence set up to prevent passengers from passing without paying toll, or any house erected for the use of such turnpike-gate, or any crane, machine, or engine for weighing carriages; or shall forcibly rescue any person lawfully in custody of any officer for any of the said offences, every person so offending shall be guilty of felony, and transported for seven years, or committed to prison for not exceeding three years, at the discretion of the court before whom he shall be tried; and any indictment for such offences shall be determined in any adjacent county within England, as if the facts had been therein committed. 13 Geo. 3. c. 84. s. 42.

VAGABOND, (vagabundus.) A wandering beggar or idle person who wanders about, and has no certain place of abode. See Vagrants.

VAGRANTS, (vagrantes.) The stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 5. called the Vagrant. Act, divides these offenders against good order into three classes: 1. Idle and disorderly persons; 2. Rogues and vagabonds; and 3. Incorrigible rogues.

I. Idle and disorderly persons are by 17 Geo. 2. c. 5.; 1. Those who threaten to run away, and to leave their families upon the parish. 2. Who return from the parish to which they are removed as paupers, without a certificate. 3. Who refuse to work for the usual wages. 4. Who beg within their own parishes: and 5. by 32 Geo. 3 c. 45. who neglect to work, or who spend their money idly, without making a sufficient allowance for the subsistance of their families.

II. Rogues and vagabonds are thus described by 17 Geo. 2. c. 5. 1. Gatherers of alms, under pretence of loses, or for prisons or hospitals; 2. Fencers; 3. Bearwards; 4. Players of interludes, tragedies, comedies, operas, plays, farces, or other entertainments of the stage, not being authorized by law; 5. Minstrels; 6. Jugglers; 7. Gypsies; 8. Fortune-tellers; 9. Deceivers by subtle craft: 10. Players and betters at unlawful games; 11. Persons who run away and leave their families chargeable to the parish; 12. Unlicensed pedlars; 13, Persons who wander abroad, and lodge in alehouses, outhouses, or in the open air, without giving a good account of themselves, pretending to be soldiers, mariners, or sea-faring men; 14. Persons wandering from home, under pretence of seeking harvest-work, without a certificate from the minister and one churchwarden of their parish; 15. All wandering beggars; 16. Beggars in their own parishes, who being apprehended, shall escape or resist; 17. By 32 Geo. 3. c. 45 soldiers and mariners begging; 18. By 28 Geo. 3. c. 88. all persons who are apprehended with any picklock or implement, with intent to feloniously break and enter any dwelling-house, or with any offensive weapon, with intent to feloniously assault any person; or who shall be found in or upon any dwelling-house, outhouse, yard, area, or garden, with intent to steal, shall be deemed rogues and vagabonds; 19. suspected persons and reputed thieves frequenting the Thames, and the quays and warehouses adjoining, with a felonious intent, 39 & 40 Geo. 3. c. 87. s. 11. 20. Persons to the number of two or more, who shall assemble together to destroy the game in the night-time, of persons aiding or assisting therein. 39 & 40 Geo. 3. c. 87. s. 1. 21. Every person who shall be found making any light, fire, or blaze, or signal to certain vessels hovering within eight leagues of the coasts. 42 Geo. 3. c. 82. 22. Persons setting up or playing at any Little Go or other unlawful lottery. 42 Geo. 3. c. 119.

III. Incorrigible rogues and vagabonds, 1. Who escape when they are apprehended, or refuse to go before a justice, or to be examined; 2. or who give a false account of themselves, after warning of the consequences, or who refuse to be conveyed by a pass; 3. or who escape from the house of correction; or, 4. who commit, after punishment, a second offence: 5. Offenders found with any child after it has been placed out as a servant or apprentice by the sessions; 6. Vagrants passed to Scotland, afterwards found begging: 7. Persons convicted of a third offence, against the acts 5 Geo. 3. c. 48. 9 Geo. 3. c. 41. and 45 Geo. 3. c. 16.—See Trespass.

The punishment of idle and disorderly persons is commitment to the house of correction, there to be kept to hard labour, not exceeding a month. Rogues and vagabonds are to be publicly whipped, or sent to the house of correction until the next sessions, or any less time, and after such whipping or commitment may be passed to their last legal settlement or place of birth, or if under fourteen, and have a father or mother living, to the place of abode of such father and mother. And if committed until the next sessions and adjudged a rogue or vagabond, the justices may order him to be kept in the house of correction to hard labour not exceeding six months. 17 Geo. 2. c. 5. Ibid.

A person adjudged at the sessions an incorrigible rogue, may be kept in the house of correction to hard labour, not exceeding two years, nor less than six months, and during the confinement be corrected by whipping, at such times and places as the justices shall think fit, and may then be passed as aforesaid: and if a male, and above the age of twelve years, the justices before his discharge may send him to be employed in the king's service, either by sea or land. If before the expiration of his confinement he shall escape from the house of correction, or offend again in the like manner, he shall be deemed to be guilty of felony, and transported for any time not exceeding seven years. Ibid.

Any person may apprehend and carry before a justice any persons going about from door to door, or placing themselves in streets, highways, or passages, to beg alms in the parishes where they dwell, and the justices may order the overseers of the poor to pay such person 5*s.* for every offender, which, on refusal of payment, may be levied on the overseer's goods. Any person may apprehend an offender against this act, and carry him before a justice. Ibid.

And the justice, or the court of quarter-sessions, may, if they think proper, order a vagabond, after punishment, to be conveyed to his place of settlement by a pass, but no justice of peace shall order any vagrant to be conveyed by a pass, who has not been actually whipped, or imprisoned for at least seven days, which shall be certified by the pass. 32 Geo. 3. c. 45. The object of this was to correct an abuse, which much prevailed, of removing paupers by a pass, who had committed no act of vagrancy, and who ought to have been removed by an order of removal. For the effects of an order of removal and a vagrant pass are very different; in the first case, the parish removing bears all the travelling expences of the paupers; but the expence of conveying vagrants by a pass, is borne by each county through which they are carried. And no appeal lies against a vagrant pass, so that the parish to which the vagrant is conveyed, must be at the expence of sending, by an order of removal, the vagrant back again, or to such place as, upon enquiry, may be thought his legal settlement.

VALET, (valettus vel valecta.) Was anciently a name denoting young gentlemen, though of great descent or quality; but afterwards attributed to those of lower rank, and now a servitor, or gentleman of the chamber. Cam. Selden's Tit. Hon. Bract. lib. 3. Cowell.

VALENTIA. The value or price of any thing. Ibid.

VALESHERIA. The kindred of the slain, one on the father's side, and another on the side of the mother, to prove that a man was a Welshman. Mentioned in Stat. Walliæ, 12 Ed. 1. c. 4. Cowell.

VALOR MARITAGII. Under the ancient tenures, while an infant was in ward, the guardian had the power of tendering him or her a suitable match without disparagement or inequality; which, if the infants refused, they forfeited the value of the marriage, valorem maritagii, to their guardian; that is, so much as a jury would heirs, or any one would bona fide give to he guardian for such an alliance: and if he infants married themselves without the guardian's consent, they forfeited double he value, duplicem valorem maritagii. This was one of the greatest hardships of our ancient tenures—but the tenures being taken away, the law is abolished. 2 Bl. 70.

VALUABLE CONSIDERATION. See Consideration.

VALVASORS. The first name of dignity, next beneath a peer, was anciently hat of vidames, vice domini, or valvasors, who are mentioned by our ancient lawyers s viri magnæ dignitatis. Yet they are now uite out of use, and our legal antiquarians re not agreed upon even their original or ncient office. 1 Black. 403.

VALUE, (valentia, valor.) The value f things is usually set forth in indictments, o distinguish between grand and petit larceny, and in trespass, to aggravate the ault, &c.

VALUE OF LAND. There is a distinction herein, namely, ancient and improved value. 2 Leon. 117. Lutw. 1304.

VALUE OF MARRIAGE, (valor maritagii.) A writ lay for the lord, having offered marriage to an infant without disparagement, if the man refused to take the ord's offer, and married another woman, o recover the value of the marriage. Reg. Orig. 164. See Valor Maritagii.

VANG, (Sax.) He vanged for me at he vant, i. e. stood for me at the font. Blount.

VANNUS. A Vane, Venti Index; and annus, a fan to winnow corn with. Lit. Dict. Cowell.

VANTARIUS, (præcursor,) as vantarius regis, the king's running footman. Cowell.

VARIANCE, (variantia, from the Fr. varier, i. e. alterare.) Signified any alteration of a thing formerly set forth in pleading, or where the declaration in a cause differs from the writ or from the deed upon which it is founded.

But when the pleading is good in substance, a small variance shall not hurt. 2 Lil. Abr. 629. 3 Mod. 227. 2 Str. 1131. Where the original writ varies from the declaration, it is not remedied. See Amendment.

VASSAL, (vassalus.) Is said to be quasi inferior socius, as the vassal is inferior to his master, and must serve him; and yet he is in a manner his companion, because each of them is obliged to the other. 2 Black. 53.

VASSALAGE. The state of a vassal, or servitude and dependency on a superior lord. Cowell.

VASSELERIA. The tenure of holding of vassals. Ibid.

VASTO. A writ that lies against tenants for terms of life or years, committing waste. F. N. B. 55. Reg. Orig. 72. See Waste.

VASTUM. A waste or common lying open to the cattle of all tenants who have a right of commoning. Cowell.

VASTUM Forestæ vel Bosci. That part of a forest or wood, wherein the trees and underwood were so destroyed, that it lay in a manner waste and barren. Ibid.

VAVASOR. Is one who was in dignity next to a baron. Brit. 109. Bract. lib. 1. cap. 8. Spelm. Gloss. Cowell.

VAVASORY, (vavasoria.) The lands that a vavasor held. Bract. lib. 2. Cowell.

VEAL MONEY. The tenants within the manor of Bradford, in the county of Wilts, pay a yearly rent by this name to their lord, in lieu of veal paid formerly in kind. Blount's Ten.

VECTIGAL JUDICIARIUM. Money or fines paid to the king, to defray the charge of maintaining the courts of justice, and protection of the people. 3 Salk. 33.

VEJOURS, (visores, from the Fr. veior, i. e. cernere) Viewers sent by the court, to take a view of any place in question, for the better decision of the right thereto. Old Nat. Br. 112, Bract. lib. 5. Cowell.

VELTRAIA, (Ministerium de Veltraia.) The office of dog leader or courser. Cowell.

VELTRAIAS. One who leads greyhounds. And lands are held per servitium inveniend. unum veltrarium Canes ducere, &c. Blount's Ten. 9.

VELUM QUADRAGESIMALE. A veil or piece of hanging anciently drawn before the altar in Lent, as a token of mourning and sorrow. Cowell.

VENARIA. Beasts caught in the woods by hunting. Ibid.

VENATIO. Venison, in Fr. venaison: called so from the means whereby the beasts are taken, quoniam ex venatione capiuntur, and being hunted are most wholesome: and they are termed beasts of venary (not venery) because they are gotten in hunting. 4 Inst. 316.

VENDITIONI EXPONAS. A judicial writ, directed to the sheriff, commanding him to sell goods which he hath formerly taken into his hands, for the satisfying a judgment given in the king's court, upon a return made that they remain in his hands for want of buyers. Reg. Jud. 33. Stat. 14 Car. 2 cap. 21. 13 H. 7. 1. Dyer 363. 1 Roll. Abr. 894.

VENDITOR REGIS. The king's salesman; being the person who exposed to sale goods and chattels seized or distrained to answer any debt due to the king. Cowell.

VENDOR AND VENDEE. Vendor is a person who sells any thing, and vendee the person to whom it is sold. 2 Chan. Cases 5. 21 Vin. Abr. tit. Vendor and Vendee.

VENELLA, a narrow or strait way. Cowell.

VENIA, a kneeling or low prostration on the ground, by penitents. Cowell.

VENIRE FACIAS, a judicial writ awarded to the sheriff to cause a jury of the neighbourhood to appear, when a cause is brought to issue, to try the same: and if the jury come not at the day of this writ, then there shall go a habeas corpora, and after a distress until they appear. Old Nat. Br. 157.

VENIRE FACIAS tot Matronas. See Ventre inspiciendo.

VENTER, used for the children by a woman of one marriage; as the issue of first and second venter, &c. as proceeding from the abdomen or belly of the wife.

VENTRE INSPICIENDO, is a writ to search a woman that saith she is with child, and thereby withholdeth lands from the next heir. The trial whereof is by a jury of women. Reg. Orig. 227.

VENUE, (Vicinetum or Visnetum) is taken for a neighbouring place, locus quem vicini habitant; it is the county or place from whence a jury are to come for trial of causes. F. N. B. 115. In actions of trespass and ejectment, the venue is to be from the vill or hamlet where the lands in question do lie. And in all real actions, the venue must be laid in that county where the thing is for which the action is brought. 2 Lill. Abr. 634, 635. Although the jury now come from the body of the county, in all cases, by virtue of the stat. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16.

In all transitory actions, as debt, assumpsit, trover, and the like, which may be laid in any county, the judges may alter the venue from the place where by the law it otherwise may be, if they believe, through any just cause, there cannot be an indifferent trial in the county where the venue is laid; and if a defendant will move to change the venue, he must make affidavit, that the cause of action (if any be) did arise in the county where he would have the venue to be, and not in the county where the plaintiff hath laid his action or elsewhere. And this motion to change it must be made before the rules for pleading are out; and it is a rule not to change a venue where necessary evidence arises in two counties to support the action, if the plaintiff will be bound to give some material evidence in the county where he has laid his action. 2. Salk. 698, 669. And some persons, such as barristers or attornies, are privileged to lay and keep the venue in Middlesex, or move the same into that county. 2 Strange 1049. Unless there is another defendant joined with them. 1 Strange 610.

With respect to criminal cases it is ordained by the statute 21 Jac. 1. c. 4. that all informations on penal statutes shall be laid in the counties where the offences were committed.

VERDEROR, (Viridarius, from the Fr. Verdeur, i. e. Custos Nemoris) is an officer in the king's forest, whose office is properly to look to the vert, and see it well maintained; and he is sworn to keep the assises of the forest, and view, receive, and inroll the attachments, and presentments of trespasses of vert and venison, &c. Manwood, par. 1. 332.

VERDICT, (Veridictum, quasi dictum Veritatis) is the answer of a jury given to the court, concerning the matter of fact in any cause committed to their trial; wherein every one of the twelve jurors must agree, or it cannot be a verdict. And the jurors are to try the fact, and the judges to adjudge according to the law that ariseth upon it. 1 Inst. 226.

In all cases, and all actions, the jury may give a general or special verdict; and the court is bound to receive it, if pertinent to the point in issue; and if the jury doubt, they may refer themselves to the court, but are not bound so to do. 3 Salk. 373. And if the jury will take upon them to find against the directions of the court, any thing in matter of law, the court will receive the verdict; but it may afterwards be set aside on a motion for a new trial. And the stat 32 Geo. 3. c. 60, in respect to a verdict upon an indictment or information for a libel, (see Libel,) seems to be merely declaratory of the law on this subject.

In case a jury acquit a man upon trial against full evidence, and being sent back to consider better of it, are peremptory in and stand to their verdict, the court must take it. And if the jury will by verdict convict a person against or without evidence, and against the opinion of the court, the court may reprieve him before judgment, and certify for his pardon. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 310.

VERECUNDIUM, is specially used for injury done to any one. Cowell.

VERGE, (Virgata,) the compass of the king's court, which bounds the jurisdiction of the lord steward of the household; and that seems to have been twelve miles about. Stat. 13 R. 2. c. 3. Britton 68. F. N. B. 24. A verge of land; is an uncertain quantity directed by the custom of the country, from 15 to 30 acres. Also verge has another signification, of a stick or rod, whereby one is admitted tenant to a copyhold estate. Old Nat. Br. 17. As to verge of the court, see Marshalsea.

VERGERS, (Virgatores,) are such as carry white wands before the justices of either bench. Also in cathedrals. Cowell. Fleta, lib. 2. c. 38.

VERONICA. It is said that amongst ther pretended miracles, there is preerved in St. Peter's church at Rome, an audkerchief called veronica, which bears he likeness of our Saviour, which was iraculously impressed thereon while he ras led to the cross. Cowell.

VERT, (Fr. Verd. i. e. Viridis, otherrise called Greenhue.) in the forest laws ignifies every thing that beareth a green eaf within a forest, that may cover a deer; ut especially great and thick coverts. 4 Inst. 327. And vert is sometimes taken or that power which a man hath by the ing's grant to cut green wood in the foest. 3 Black. 71.

VERVISE, a kind of cloth, stat. 1. R. 3. c. 8.

VEST, (Vestire,) to invest with, to make possessor of, to place in possession. Cowell.

VESTA, the vest, vesture, or crop on the ground. Ibid.

VESTED. See Remainder and Legacy.

VESTRY, a place adjoining to a church, where the vestments of the minister are kept; also a meeting at such place, to consult on the affairs of the church or parish. By custom there may be select vestries, or a certain number of persons chosen to have the government of the parish, make rates, and take the accounts of the churchwardens. 2 Strange 728. But in general, if a parishioner be shut out of the vestry room by the clerk of the vestry, and he makes it appear that he hath a right to come into the room, and to be present and vote in the vestry, &c. action of the case lies, as a remedy. Mod. Ca. in L. & E. 52. 354.

VESTURA, a crop of grass or corn. Cowell. Paroch. Antiq. p. 620.

VESTURE, (Vestura,) a garment, but in the law it is metaphorically applied to a possession or seisin. Stat. West. 2. c. 5.

VETITUM NAMIUM, is where the bailiff of a lord distrains beasts or goods of another, and the lord forbids his bailiff to deliver them when the sheriff comes to make replevin. The word namium signifying a taking or distress, and vetitum forbidden; and the owner of the cattle may demand satisfaction for the injury, which is called Placitum de vetito namio. 2 Inst. 140. Black. 148.

VEXATIOUS ARRESTS. By 51 Geo. 3. c. 124. after the 1st of November, 1811, no person shall be held to special bail upon any process issuing out of any court where the cause of action shall not have originally amounted to fifteen pounds over and above and exclusive of any costs, charges, and expences that may have been incurred, recovered, or become chargeable, in or about the suing for or recovering the same, (except where the cause of such action shall arise or be maintainable upon any bill of exchange, or promissory note, in which cases the parties liable thereupon may be held to special bail as formerly,) and where the cause of action shall not amount to fifteen pounds exclusive of costs, (except as before excepted) no special writ, nor any process specially therein expressing the cause of action, shall, after the 1st of November, be sued forth in order to compel any person to appear thereon.

VIA MILITARIS, a highway. Cowell.

UFFINGI. The kings of the East Angles were so termed from king Uffa, who lived in the year 578. Ibid.

VIA REGIA is the highway or common road, called the king's way, because authorised by him, and under his protection. Cowell.

VICAR, (Vicarius, quasi vice fungens rectoris,) the parson of every parish is called rector, unless the predial tithes are appropriated, and then he is stiled vicar; and when rectories are appropriated, vicars are to supply the rectors' places. Cowell. See Appropriation.

VICARAGE, (Vicaria,) Places which originally belonged to the parsonage or rectory, being derived out of it. 2 Roll. Abr. 59. And vicarage or not, is to be tried in the Spiritual Court, because it could not begin to be created but by the ordinary. 3. Salk. 378.

VICARIAL TITHES, small tithes. See Tithes.

VICARIO DELIBERANDO OCCASIONE CUJUSDAM RECOGNITIONIS, &c. An ancient writ that lay for a spiritual person imprisoned, upon forfeiture of a recognizance, &c. Reg. Orig. 147.

VICE-ADMIRALTY COURTS. There are vice-admiralty courts in America, and our other plantations. From those courts appeals may be brought before the courts of admiralty in England, as being a branch of the admiral's jurisdiction, though they may also be brought before the king in council. 3. Black. 69.

VICE-CHAMBERLAIN, a great officer next under the lord chamberlain: and in his absence hath the rule and controul of all officers appertaining to that part of his majesty's household, which is called the chamber above stairs. 13 R. 2. c. 1.

VICE-DOMINUS. The same with vicecomes.

VICE-DOMINUS EPISCOPI, the vicar-general, or commissary of a bishop. Cowell.

VICE-GERENT, a deputy or lieutenant. Ibid.

VICE-MARSHAL is mentioned with vice-constable. 4 Inst. 71.

VICE-ROY, (Pro. Rex.) the king's lord-lieutenant over a kingdom. Litt.

VICE-TREASURER, an officer under the lord-treasurer. See Under Treasurer of England.

VICINAGE, (Fr. Voisinage, Vicinetum,) the neighbourhood. And there is common because of vicinage, or neighbourhood, where the inhabitants of two townships which lie contiguous, have usually intercommoned with one another; the beasts of the one straying mutually into the other's fields, without any molestation from either. 2 Black. 33. See Jury and Venue.

VICIS ET VENELLIS MUNDANDIS, a writ which lay against a mayor or bailiff of a town, for the clean keeping of their streets. Reg. Orig. 267.

VICOUNT, or VISCOUNT, (Vicecomes) signifies as much as sheriff. See Sheriff. Viscount also signifies a degree of nobility next to an earl; first created in this country by Henry VI. who, in his eighteenth year in parliament, created John lord Beaumont, visconnt Beaumont. Selden 761.

VICOUNTIEL, or VICONTIEL, is an adjective from viscount, and signifieth any thing that belongeth to the sheriff; as writs vicontiel are such writs as are triable in the county or sheriff's court. O. N. B. 109. F. N. B. 184. Cowell.

VICOUNTIEL JURISDICTION, that jurisdiction which belongs to the officer of a county; as to sheriffs, coroners, escheators, and VICOUNTIEL, or VISCONTIEL RENTS are mentioned, 22 Car. 2. cap. 6. Hale's Sheriff's Accounts, 40.

VICTUALS, (Victus), sustenance, and things necessary to live by, as meat and provisions; victuallers are those that sell victuals; and we call now all common alehouse keepers by the name of victuallers. Selling of corrupt victuals, or exposing them to sale, is punishable by stat. 1. R. 3. c. 1. And in some manors they chuse yearly two surveyors of victuals, to see that no unwholesome victuals be sold, and destroy such as are corrupt. 1 Mod. 202. See Forestallers.

VIDAME was the same as vice-dominus, the bishop's deputy in temporal matters. 1 Black. 403.

VIDELICET, (viz.) a videlicet in a deed may make a separation, as it says habendum 100*l.* to them to be equally divided, viz. 20*l.* to one, and so to the rest, &c. 5 Mod. Rep. 29.

VIDUITATIS PROFESSIO, the making a solemn profession to live a sole and chaste widow. Cowell.

VIDIMUS. See Innotescimus.

VI ET ARMIS are words used in indictments, to express the charge of a forcible and violent committing any crime or trespass. 2 Hawk. P.C. 179. 1 Hawk. 156, 220.

VIEW, (Fr. Veue, i. e. Visus,) is generally where a real action is brought, and the tenant doth not know certainly what is in demand; in such case he may pray that the jury may view it. Briton, c. 45. F. N. B. 178. This view is for a jury to see the land or thing claimed, and in controversy; and lies in ejectment, waste, assises of novel disseisin, where at least six of the recognitors or jurors must have the view before the assizes. 2 Lil. Abr. 655. Stat. 13 Ed. 1. c. 48. 12 Ed. 2. 4 & 5 Anne. c. 16. And upon a view, the thing in question is only to be shewn to the jury; and no evidence can be given on either side. 2 Lil. 656.

VIEW OF FRANK-PLEDGE, (Visus Franci plegii,) signifies the office which the sheriff in his county court performs in looking to the king's peace, and seeing that every man be in some pledge, &c. Or it is a power of holding a court-leet, in which court formerly all persons at the age of fourteen were bound with their sureties or pledges for their truth to the king, and the steward was to certify on view. Bract. lib. 2.

VIGIL, (Vigilia) is the eve, or next day before any solemn feast; because then christians were wont to watch, fast, and pray in their churches. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 19. Cowell.

VI LAICA REMOVENDA, a writ that lay where two parsons contended for a church, and one of them entered into it with a great number of laymen, and held out the other vi et armis; then he that was holden out had this writ directed to the sheriff, that he remove the force. But the sheriff ought not to remove the incumbent out of the church, whether he is there by right or wrong, but only the force. F. N. B. 54. 3 Inst. 161. And the writ was not to be granted until the bishop had certified into the chancery such resisting and force, &c. New Nat. Br. 121.

VILL, or VILLAGE, (Villa) is sometimes taken for a manor, and sometimes for a parish or part of it. But a vill is most commonly the out-part of a parish, consisting of a few houses, as it were separate from it. 1 Inst. 115. And a manor may consist of several villages, or one alone. Fleta, lib. 6. c. 51. See Parish. Dawn.

VILLA REGIA, a title given to those country villages where the kings of England had a royal seat, and held the manor in their own demesne, having there commonly a free chapel, not subject to ecclesiastical jurisdiction. Paroch. Antiq. 53.

VILLAIN, VILLEIN, (Villanus, Fr. Vilain, i. e. Vilis,) signified a man of base or servile condition, a bondman, or servant. Of these bondmen or villains there were two sorts in England; one termed a villain in gross, who was immediately bound to the person of the lord, and his heirs. The other, a villain regardant to a manor, being bound to his lord as a member belonging and annexed to a manor, whereof the lord was owner. Cowell.

VILLAIN ESTATE or CONDITION, contra-distinguished to free estate. Stat. 8 H. 6. 11. Cowell.

VILLANIS regis subtractis reducendis, a writ that lay for the bringing back of the king's bondmen that had been carried away by others out of his manors whereto they belonged. Reg. Orig. fol. 87.

VILLANOUS JUDGMENT, (Villanum judicium,) is that which casts the reproach of villany and shame upon him against whom it is given, as a conspirator, &c. And the judgment in such a case shall be like the ancient judgment in attaint, viz. That the offender shall not be of any credit afterwards; nor shall it be lawful for him to approach the king's court; and his lands and goods shall be seized into the king's hands, his trees rooted up, and body imprisoned, &c. Staundf. P. C. 151. Lamb. Firm. 63. Stat. 4 H. 5.

VILLEIN FLEECES, bad fleeces of wool, torn from scabbed sheep. 31 Ed. 3. c. 8.

VILLENAGE, (Villenagium,) from villain, a servile kind of tenure belonging to land or tenements, whereby the tenant was bound to do all such services as the lord commanded, or were fit for a villain to do, which tenure was wholly abolished by 12 car. 2. c. 24. See Bocage Tenure.

VINAGIUM, (Tributum a vino,) a payment of a certain quantity of wine, instead of rent, to the chief lord, for a vineyard. Cowell.

VINCULO MATRIMONII, Divorce, a. a marriage is improper through some cause which existed previous to the marriage, and was such a one as rendered the marriage unlawful ab initio, as consanguinity, corporal imbecility, or the like; this case the law looks upon the marriage to have been always null and void, because contracted in fraudem legis, and decrees not only a separation from bed and board, but a vinculo matrimonii itself. 3 Black. 94. See Divorce.

VINNET, (from the Fr. Vignet,) a flower or border which printers use to ornament printed leaves of books; mentioned in Stat. 14 Car. 2. c. 33.

VINTNERS. See Alehouses.

VIOLATING THE QUEEN. See Treason.

VIOLENCE, (Violentia.) All violence is unlawful; and if a man assault another with an intention of beating him only, and he dieth, it is felony. And where a person knocks another on the head who is breaking his hedges, or the like, this will be murder, because it is a violent act beyond the provocation. Kel. Rep. 64, 131.

VIOLENT PRESUMPTION is many times equal to full proof, from the strong circumstances which appear to have attended the fact. 3 Blank. 371. See Circumstancial Evidence.

VIRGA, a rod or white staff, such as sheriffs, bailiffs, and others, carry as a badge or ensign of their office. Cowell.

VIRGATA TERRÆ, a yard land. Ibid.

VIRGE, Tenant by. A species of copyholders, viz. such as are said to hold by the virge, or rod. Calthorpe, 51, 54. 2 Black. 147, 148.

VIRIDARIO ELIGENDO, a writ that lies for the choice of a verderer in the forest. Reg. Orig. 177.

VIRIDIS ROBA, a coat of many colours; viridis being used for varius. Bract. lib. 3.

VIRILIA, the privy members of a man; to cut off which was felony by the common law, though the party consented to it. Bract. lib. 3. pag. 144.

VIS, (Lat.) is any kind of force, violence, or disturbance relating to a man's person, his goods, or right in lands. Cowell.

VISCOUNT, (Vicecomes) a degree of nobility next to an earl. See Vicount. They are now made by patent, as an earl; but their number is small in this kingdom, in comparison with the other degrees of peerage. 1 Black. 399.

VISITATION, (Visitatio) is that office which is performed by the bishop of every diocese once every three years, or by the archdeacon once a year, by visiting the churches and their rectors throughout the whole diocese. Noy. 123. 3 Salk. 370.

VISITATION BOOKS OF HERALDS. The original visitation books of heralds, compiled when progresses were solemnly and regularly made into every part of the kingdom, to enquire into the state of families, and to register such marriages and descents as were verified to them upon oath, are allowed to be good evidence of pedigrees. Comb. 63.

VISITOR, is an inspector of the government of a corporation. Thus the ordinary is visitor of spiritual corporations; but corporations instituted for private charity, if they are lay, are visitable by the founder, or whom he shall appoint, and from the sentence of such visitor there lies no appeal. 3 Salk. 381.

VISITOR OF MANNERS, in ancient time was wont to be the name of the regarder's office in the forest. Manwood, 1. p. 195.

VISNE, (Visnetum,) signifies a neighbouring place, or place near at hand. Cowell. See Venue.

VISUS, view, or things to be taken by inspection. Cowell.

VITA Justitiæ et Legis, a sheriff of the county is said to be the life of justice, as no suit begins and no process is served but by him; and after suits are ended, he hath the making execution, which is the life of the law. Cowell.

VIVARY, (Vivarium) a place by land or water, where living creatures are kept. And in law it is most commonly used for a park, warren, piscary, and the like. 2 Inst. 100.

VIVA VOCE, is where a witness is examined personally in open court. Cowell. See Deposition.

VIVO VADIO, estate in. When a man borrows a sum of another, and grants him an estate until the rents and profits shall repay the sum borrowed, he is then said to have an estate in vivo vadio, or a self-dissolving pledge.

ULCUS, a bulk of a ship of burden. Cowell.

ULLAGE is when there is want of measure in a cask. Ibid.

ULNAGE. See Aunage.

ULNA FERREA is the standard ell of iron, kept in the Exchequer for the rule of measure. Cowell.

UMPIRAGE is where there is but one arbitrator of matters submitted to award; and is usually when the parties submit themselves to the arbitrament of certain persons; and if they cannot agree, or are not ready to deliver their award in writing before such a time, then to the judgment of another as umpire. 1 Roll. Abr. 261, 262. See Arbitration.

UMPIRE, (Arbiter) one chosen to compromise and deal indifferently between both parties. Litt. See Arbitrament. Award.

UNA CUM OMNIBUS ALIIS, in the grant of a deed, is a new addition of other things than were granted before; and hath its own conclusion attending it. Hob. 175.

UNANIMITY OF JURIES. The necessity of a total unanimity of the jurors, on every trial, seems to be peculiar to our own constitution. 3 Black. 376. See Verdict.

UNCEASSATH. This is an obsolete word, mentioned in Leg. Inæ. c. 37. viz. He who kills a thief, may make oath that he killed him in flying for the fact, et parentibus ipsius occisi juret unceassath, that is, that his kindred will not revenge his death. From the Saxon ceas, litis, and un, which is a negative particle, and signifies without, and ath, which is oath; that is, to swear that there shall be no contention about it. Cowell.

UNCERTAINTY OF THE LAW. It has sometimes been said, that the uncertainty of the law, as it is improperly called, owes its origin to the number of our municipal constitutions, and the multitude of our judicial decisions; which occasion, it is alledged, abundance of rules, that militate and thwart with each other, as the sentiments or caprice of successive legislatures and judges have happened to vary. But although the fact of multiplicity is allowed, yet the people mistake variety for confusion, and complicated cases for contradictory; and the causes of the multiplicity of the English laws are the extent of the country which they govern; the commerce and refinement of its inhabitants; but above all, the liberty and property of the subject. These will naturally produce an infinite fund of disputes; which must be terminated in a judicial way. And it is essential to a free people, that these determinations be published and adhered to, that their property may be as certain and fixed as the very constitution of their state. For though in many other countries every thing is left in the breast of the judge to determine, yet with us he is only to declare and pronounce, not to make or new model the law. Hence a multitude of decisions, or cases adjudged, will arise; for seldom will it happen that any one rule will exactly suit with many cases. And in proportion as the decisions of the courts of judicature are multiplied, the law will be loaded with decrees, that may sometimes (though rarely,) interfere with each other, Either because succeeding judges may not be apprized of the prior abjudications; or because they may think differently from their predecessors; or because the same arguments did not occur formerly as at present; or, in fine, because of the natural imbecility and imperfection that attends all human proceedings. But, wherever this happens to be the case in any material point, the legislature is ready, and, from time to time, both may, and frequently does, intervene to remove the doubt; and, upon due deliberation had, determines by a declaratory statute how the law shall be held for the future. 3 Black. 325.

UNCIA TERRÆ, UNCIA AGRI. These phrases often occur in the charters of the British kings, and signify some measure or quantity of land. It was the quantity of 12 modii, and each modius possibly 100 feet square. Cowell.

UNCORE PRIST, is a plea of a defendant in nature of a plea in bar, where being sued for a debt due on bond at a day past, to save the forfeiture of the bond, he says that he tendered the money at the day and place, and that there was none there to receive it; and that he is also still ready to pay the same. 7 Ed. 6. 6. 9 Rep. 70. 3 Black. 303.

UNCUTH, a Saxon word, signifying incognitus, unknown. Bract. lib. 3. Cowell.

UNDE NIHIL HABEAT. See Dote unde nihil habet.

UNDER-CHAMBERLAIN OF THE EXCHEQUER, is an officer there that cleaves the tallies, written by the clerk of the tallies, and reads the same, that the clerk of the pell, and comptrollers thereof, may see their entries be true. He also makes searches for all records in the treasury, and hath the custody of domesday book. Cowell. See Exchequer.

UNDER ESCHEATOR, (Sub-Escheator.) See Escheator.

UNDER-SHERIFF, (Sub-Vicecomes.) See Sheriff.

UNDERTAKERS, &c. Persons that undertake funerals. See Burial.

UNDER TREASURER OF ENGLAND, (Vice Thesaurarius Angliæ,) an officer first created in the time of Hen. VII. His business was to chest up the king's treasure at the end of every term, to note the content of money in each chest, and see it carried into the king's treasury for the ease of the lord treasurer, as being a thing beneath him, but fit to be performed by a man of great trust and secrecy. And, in the vacancy of the lord treasurer's office, he did all things in the receipt, &c. This officer is mentioned in several statutes, and named treasurer of the exchequer till the reign of queen Elizabeth, when he was termed under treasurer of England. 39 Eliz. c. 7.

UN DIEU, ET UN ROY, was Littleton's motto. Cowell.

UNDRES, a word used for minors, or persons under age; not capable to bear arms, &c. Fleta, lib. 1. c. 9. Cowell.

UNFRID, one that hath no quiet or peace. Cowell.

UNGELD, a person out of the protection of the law, so that, if he were murdered, no geld or fine should be paid, or composition made by him that killed him. Leg. Ethelred. Cowell.

UNGILDA AKER. (From the Sax. un, without, gilda, solutio, and acera, ager. It signifies almost the same as ungeld, viz. were a man was killed attempting any felony, he was to lie in the field unburied, and no pecuniary compensation was to be paid for his death. Cowell.

UNIFORMITY, (Uniformitas,) one form of public prayers and administration of sacraments, and other rites and ceremonies of the church of England, prescribed by statutes, to which all must submit. 1 Eliz. c. 2. 14 Car. 2. c. 4. But see Dissenters.

UNION, (Unio,) is a combining and consolidating of two churches into one. And by assent of the ordinary, patron, and incumbent, two churches lying not above a mile distant one from the other, and whereof the value of the one is not above six pounds a year in the king's books of the first fruits, may be united into one. Stat. 37. H. 8. c. 21. Also by 17 Car. 2. c. 3. in cities and corporation towns, it shall be lawful for the bishops, patrons, and mayors, or chief magistrates of the place, &c. to unite churches therein; but where the income of the churches united exceeds 100*l.* a year, the major part of the parishioners are to consent to the same; and, after the union made, the patrons of the churches united shall present, by turns, to that church only which shall be presentative, in such order as agreed; and notwithstanding the union, each of the parishes united shall continue distinct as to rates, charges, &c. though the tithes are to be paid to the incumbent of the united church. And by 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 12. it is ordained, that where any churches have been united, by virtue of the 17 Car. 2. c. 3. and one of them is demolished; when the other church shall be out of repair, the parishioners of the parish whose church is down, shall pay in proportion towards the charge of such repairs, &c.

UNION WITH IRELAND. See Ireland.

UNION WITH SCOTLAND. See Scotland.

UNITY OF POSSESSION, (Unitas Possessionis,) is where a man hath a right to two estates, and holds them together jointly in his own hands; as if a man take a lease of lands from another at a certain rent, and after he buys the fee-simple, this is an unity of possession, by which the lease is extinguished, because that he who had before the occupation only for his rent, is now become lord and owner of the land. Terms de Ley. See Year's Tenant.

UNIVERSITY, (Universitas.) The universities with us are taken for those two bodies which are the nurseries of learning and liberal science in this kingdom, viz. Oxford and Cambridge; endowed with great privileges. And although each university was a civil corporation before, it is, by 13 Eliz. c. 27. enacted, that each of the universities shall be incorporated by a certain name; and that all letters patent, and charters granted to the universities, shall be good and effectual in law. That the chancellor, masters, and scholars, of either of the said universities shall enjoy all manors, lands, liberties, franchises, and privileges, and all other things which the said corporated bodies have enjoyed, or of right ought to enjoy, according to the intent of the said letters patent; and all letters patent, and liberties, franchises, &c. shall be established and confirmed, any law, usage, &c. to the contrary notwithstanding.

Their courts are called the chancellor's courts, and these courts of the two universities of England enjoy the sole jurisdiction, in exclusion of the king's courts, over all civil actions and suits whatsoever, where a scholar or privileged person is one of the parties; excepting in such cases where the right of freehold is concerned. And these, by the university-charter, they are at liberty to try and determine, either according to the common law of the land, or according to their own local customs, at their discretion; which has generally led them to carry on their process in a course much conformed to the civil law. 3 Black. 83.

These privileges were granted, that the students might not be distracted from their studies by legal process from distant courts, and other forensic avocations. But these particular jurisdictions, derogating from the general jurisdiction of the courts of common law, are ever taken strictly, and cannot be extended farther than the express letter of their privileges will most explicitly warrant. 3 Black. 83.

This privilege, so far as it relates to civil causes, is exercised in the chancellor's court: the judge of which is the vice-chancellor, his deputy, or assessor. From his sentence an appeal lies to delegates appointed by the congregation; from thence to other delegates of the house of convocation; and if they all three concur in the same sentence, it is final, at least by the statutes of the university, Tit. 21. sec. 19. according to the rule of the civil law. Cod. 7. 70. 1. But, if there be any discordance or variation in any of the three sentences, an appeal lies in the last resort to judges delegates, appointed by the crown under the great seal in chancery. 3 Black. 83.

By the charter of 7 Jun. 2 Hen. 4. (confirmed among the rest, by the statute 13 Eliz. c. 29.) cognizance is also granted to the universities of all indictments of treasons, insurrections, felony, and mayhem, which shall be found in any of the king's courts against a scholar or privileged person; and they are to be tried before the high steward of the university, or his deputy, who is to be nominated by the chancellor of the university for the time being. But, when his office is called forth into action, such high steward must be approved by the lord high chancellor of England; and a special commission under the great seal is given to him, and others, to try the indictment then depending, according to the law of the land and the privileges of the said university. When therefore an indictment is found at the assises, or elsewhere, against any scholar of the university, or other privileged person, the vice-chancellor may claim the cognizance of it; and (when claimed in due time and manner) it ought to be allowed him by the judges of assize: and then it comes to be tried in the high steward's court. But the indictment must first be found by a grand jury, and then the cognizance claimed: for the high steward cannot proceed originally ad inquirendum; but only, after inquest in the common law courts, ad audiendum et determinandum. 4 Black. 277.

When the cognizance is so allowed, if the offence be inter minora crimina, or a misdemesnor only, it is tried in the chancellor's court by the ordinary judge. But if it be for treason, felony, or mayhem, it is then, and then only, to be determined before the high steward, under the king's special commission to try the same. The process of the trial is this. The high steward issues one precept to the sheriff of the county, who thereupon returns a pannel of eighteen freeholders; and another precept to the bedels of the university, who thereupon return a pannel of eighteen matriculated laymen, "laicos privilegio universitatis gaudentes:" and by a jury formed de medietate, half of freeholders and half of matriculated persons, is the indictment to be tried. And if execution be necessary to be awarded, in consequence of finding the party guilty, the sheriff of the county must execute the university process: to which he is annually bound by an oath. 4 Black. 278.

There has happily been no occasion for more than a century past, nor will it perhaps ever be thought adviseable to revive them, though it is not a right that merely rests in scriptis or theory, but has formerly often been carried into execution. Ibid.

UNKNOWN PERSONS. An indictment will lie, for stealing the goods of a person unknown. Hal. P. C. 512. See Larceny.

UNLAGE, a Saxon word, denoting an unjust law. Cowell.

UNLAWFUL ASSEMBLY, (Illicita Congregatio.) See Riots.

UNNATURAL, (Præternaturalis.) That which is not of or by nature. And what is unnatural to man generally, must be the same to all men, and at all times; but what is unnatural to this or that person, is to him only, and but for the time it is so. Vaugh. 224.

UNQUES PRIST, always ready to perform a thing. Used in pleading. Kitch. 245. Cowell.

VOCIFERATIO, an out-cry, or hue and cry. Cowell.

VOIDANCE, (Vacatio,) the want of an incumbent upon an ecclesiastical benefice. See Avoidance.

VOID AND VOIDABLE. In the law some things are absolutely void and some are voidable. A thing is void which is done against law at the very time of the doing of it, and it shall bind no person. But a thing which is only voidable and not void, will remain good until it is avoided. 2 Lil. Abr. 653.

But it hath been adjudged, that a bond of an infant, or of one non compos, is void, because the law hath not appointed any thing to be done to avoid such bonds; for the party cannot plead non est factum, as the cause of nullity doth not appear upon the face of the deed. 2 Salk. 675. 3 Nels. Abr. 486.

But a deed of exchange, entered into by an infant, or one non sanæ memoriæ, is not void; but may be avoided by the infant, when arrived at age, or by the heir of him who is non sanæ memoriæ. Perk. 281.

VOIRE, a French word signifying truly. Law Fr. Dict.

VOIRE DIRE, (Fr. Veritatem dicere,) is when it is prayed upon a trial at law, that a witness may be sworn upon a voire dire before he is examined in chief, which is, that he shall on his oath speak the truth, whether he shall get or lose by the matter in controversy. Blount And this is often done, where a busy evidence, not otherwise to be excepted against, is suspected of partiality. Terms de Ley. 581.

VOLUMUS, is the first word of a clause in the king's writs of protection and letters patent. Co. Litt. 199.

VOLUNTARY, where any conveyance is made without any consideration, either of money, marriage, or the like, &c. it is found voluntary. And remainders limited in settlements, to a man's right heirs, &c. are deemed voluntary in equity, and the persons claiming under them called volunteers. Abr. Cas. Eq. 385. 3 Salk. 174. See also Escape Oaths and Waste.

VOLUNTAS, is when a tenant by lease holds lands at the will of the lessor; or a copyholder holdeth his lands at the will of the lord, by a copy of court-roll, according to the custom of the manor, &c. Cowell.

VOTUM, a vow or promise used by Fleta for nuptiæ; so dies votorum, is the wedding day. Fleta, lib. 4.

VOUCHE, (Fr. in Latin Voco,) Signifies to call one to warrant lands. Cowell.

VOUCHEE. The person who is vouched, in a writ of right. Ibid.

VOUCHER is a word of art, when the tenant in a writ of right calls another into the court, who is bound to him to warranty; that is, either to defend the right against the demandant, or yield him other lands to the value, &c. He that voucheth is called the voucher, (vocans,) and he that is vouched, is called the vouchee, (warrantatus,) &c. Co. Litt. 101.

A foreign voucher is when the tenant being impleaded within a particular jurisdiction, as in London, voucheth one to warranty in some other county out of the jurisdiction of that court, and prays that he may be summoned, &c. 2 Rep. 50. See Recovery and Warranty.

VOUCHER, is also used for a leger-book, or book of accounts, wherein are entered the acquittances or warrants for the accountant's discharge. Stat. 19 Car. 2. c. 1. Voucher signifies also, any acquittance or receipt, discharging a person, or being evidence of a payment. Cowell.

VOX, Vocem non habere. One who is not to be admitted to be a witness. Bract. lib. 3.

UPHOLSTERS. None shall put to sale any beds, bolsters, &c. except such as are stuffed with one sort of dry pulled feathers, or clean down; and not mixed with scalded feathers, fen-down, thistle-down, sand, &c. on pain to forfeit the same, or the value. And they are to stuff quilts, mattrasses, and cushions, with clean wool, and flocks; without using horse-hair, &c. therein, under the like forfeiture. Stat. 11. H. 7. c. 19. and 5 & 6. Ed. 6. c. 23.

UPLAND, high ground, or terra firma, contrary to marshy and low ground. Cow.

USA is the river Isis. Blount.

USAGE differs from custom and prescription. No man may claim a rent, common, or other inheritance by usage, though he may by prescription. 6 Rep. 65. See Prescription.

USANCE. The limitation for the payment of foreign bills drawn or payable at Amsterdam, Rotterdam, Hamburgh, Altona, Paris, or any place in France, Cadiz, Madrid, Bilboa, Leghorn, Genoa, or Venice; and this usance (instead of the limitation of payments by years, months, or days,) signifying the usage between those places and this country is as follows: An usance between this kingdom and Amsterdam, Rotterdam, Hamburgh, Altona, Paris, or any place in France, is one calendar month from the date of the bill; an usance between us and Cadiz, Madrid, or Bilboa two; an usance between us and Leghorn, Genoa, or Venice, three; A double usance is double the accustomed time, an half usance half, and where it is necesary to divide a month upon an half usance, which is the law where the usance is either one month or three, the divisions, notwithstanding the difference in the length of months, contains fifteen days. Marius 23.

USE, (Usus), is, in application of law, the profit or benefit of lands and tenements; or a trust and confidence reposed in a man for the holding of lands. That he to whose use the trust is made shall take the profits thereof. West. Symb. par. 1. 1 Inst. 272.

USES AND TRUSTS are in their original of a nature very similar, or rather exactly the same; a use being a confidence reposed in another who was tenant of the land, or terre-tenant, that he should dispose of the land according to the intentions of cestuy que use, or him to whose use it was granted, and suffer him to take the profits. As, if a feoffment was made to A and his heirs, to the use of (or in trust for) B and his heirs; here at the common law A the terre-tenant had the legal property and possession of the land, but B the cestuy que use was in conscience and equity to have the profits and disposal of it. Bacon on Uses, 306.

And the stat. 27 Hen. 8. c. 10. enacts, that, "when any person shall be seised of lands, &c. to the use, confidence, or trust of any other person or body politic, the person or corporation entitled to the use in fee-simple, fee-tail, for life, or years, or otherwise, shall from thenceforth stand and be seised or possessed of the land, &c. of and in the like estates as they have in the use, trust, or confidence; and that the estate of the person so seised to uses shall be deemed to be in him or them that have the use, in such quality, form, manner and condition as they had before in the use." The statute thus executes the use, as our lawyers term it; that is, it conveys the possession to the use, and transfers the use into possession; thereby making cestuy que use complete owner of the lands and tenements, as well at law as in equity. 2 Black. 332.

USES AND TRUSTS, covenant, to stand, seised to. This is a species of conveyance, by which a man, seised of lands, covenants, in consideration of blood or marriage, that he will stand seised of the same to the use of his child, wife, or kinsman; for life, in tail, or in fee. Here the statute executes at once the estate; for the party intended to be benefited, having thus acquired the use, is thereby put at once into corporal possession of the land, without ever seeing it. But this conveyance can only operate, when made upon such weighty and interesting considerations as those of blood or marriage. Bacon. Use of the Law. 151.

DEEDS OF REVOCATION OF USES, are founded in a previous power, reserved at the raising of the uses, to revoke such as were then declared; and to appoint others in their stead, which is incident to the power of revocation.

DEEDS TO LEAD THE USES OF FINES AND RECOVERIES, are necessary deeds to lead, or to declare the uses of fines, and of recoveries. For if they be levied or suffered without any good consideration, and without any uses declared, they, like other conveyances, enure only to the use of him who levies or suffers them. And if a consideration appears, yet as the most usual fine "sur cognisance de droit come ceo, &c." conveys an absolute estate, without any limitations, to the cognizee; and as common recoveries do the same to the recoverer, these assurances could not be made to answer the purpose of family settlements, (wherein a variety of uses and designations is very often expedient,) unless their force and effect were subjected to the direction of other more complicated deeds, wherein particular uses can be more particularly expressed. The fine or recovery itself, like a power once gained in mechanics, may be applied and directed to give efficacy to an infinite variety of movements in the vast and intricate machine of a voluminous family settlement. And if these deeds are made previous to the fine or recovery, they are called deeds to lead the uses; if subsequent, deeds to declare them. As if A, tenant in tail, with reversion to himself in fee, would settle his estate on B for life, remainder to C in tail, remainder to D in fee; this is what by law he has no power of doing effectually, while his own estate-tail is in being. He therefore usually, after making the settlement proposed, covenants to levy a fine (or if there be any intermediate remainders, to suffer a recovery) to E, and directs that the same shall enure to the uses in such settlement mentioned. This is now a deed to lead the uses of the fine or recovery; and the fine when levied, or recovery when suffered, shall enure to the uses so specified and no other. For though E, the cognizee or recoverer, hath a fee-simple vested in himself by the fine or recovery; yet, by the operation of this deed, he becomes a mere instrument or conduit-pipe, seised only to the use of B, C, and D, in successive order, which use is executed immediately by force of the statute of uses. Or, if a fine or recovery be had without any previous settlement, and a deed be afterwards made between the parties, declaring the uses to which the same shall be applied, this will be equally good as if it had been expressly levied or suffered in consequence of a deed directing its operation to those particular uses. For by stat. 4 & 5 Anne, c. 16. indentures to declare the uses of fines and recoveries, made after the fines and recoveries had and suffered, shall be good and effectual in law, and the fine and recovery shall enure to such uses, and esteemed to be only in trust, notwithstanding y doubts that had arisen on the statute frauds, 29 Car. 2. c. 3. to the contrary. And by 39 & 40 Geo. 3. c. 56. after recitg " that it was the practice of courts of uity, in cases in which money, under the ntrol of such courts, was subject to be id out in the purchase of lands to be liitted to uses capable of being barred by fine, to direct the money to be paid to e person who could bar the uses by levyg a fine, without requiring the actual ivestment of the money in the purchase of nds; but in cases where a fine would not ar the uses, and it was necessary to suffer recovery to bar the interests in remainer, it was the practice to require an acual investment of the money in lands, vhich practice was attended with great xpence and inconvenience, and did not naterially promote the interests of the parties in remainder:" it is enacted, hat upon the petition of such persons who could, by a recovery, or any other mode, bar the estates-tail, and all the interests in remainder, if the money were invested in freehold or copyhold hereditaments, the petitioners being adult, and if femes covert being duly examined and consenting, a court of equity may order the money to be paid, and applied in such manner as the petitioners shall appoint, and the court approve.

For the purpose of carrying this into execution, lord chancellor Loughborough consulted the chief justices and the master of the rolls, how this act ought to be executed; and they agreed that it would be proper not to order the money to be paid out of the court, until such time as the tenant in tail might actually have suffered a common recovery of the land; and in consequence a direction is added to the order in such cases, that it shall have no effect unless the tenant in tail shall be living on the second day of the next term. 5 Ves. jun. 12. 6 Ibid. 116.

But the court will make no order, unless the right of the petitioners is clear and indisputable. 6 Ves. jun. 156.

USES, SUPERSTITIOUS. By statute, a devise of lands or goods to superstitious uses, is where it is to find or maintain a chaplain or priest to pray for the souls of the dead, or lamp in a chapel, a stipendary priest, &c. These, and such like, are declared to be superstitious uses; and the lands and goods so devised are forfeited to the king. 1 Ed. 6. c. 14.

USER DE ACTION, is the pursuing or bringing an action in the proper county, &c. Broke 64.

USHER, (Fr. huissier, a door-keeper,) is an officer in the king's house, as of the privy chamber, and the like. And there are ushers of the courts of chancery and exchequer.

USUCAPTION, (usucaptio.) Signifies the enjoying by continuance of time; a long possession, or prescription. Terms de Ley.

USUFRUCTUARY, (usufructuarius.) One that hath the use and reaps the profit of a thing. Cowell.

USURIOUS CONTRACT. A corrupt bargain or contract, to receive or allow more interest for money than the law allows. See Usury.

USURPATION, (usurpatio.) The usurpation of a church benefice is, when one that hath no right presenteth to the church, and his clerk is admitted and instituted into it, and hath quiet possession six months after institution before a quare impedit brought. It must commence upon a presentation, not a collation; because by a collation the church is not full, but the right patron may bring his writ at any time to remove the usurper. 1 Inst. 227. 6 Rep. 30. And by usurpation, the fee of an advowson may be gained, as well as the avoidance upon which the usurpation is made. And the true patron cannot remove the incumbent to regain the possession, without a writ of right advowson, which he is driven to for recovery of the inheritance. 6 Rep. 49.

USURPATION OF FRANCHISES AND LIBERTIES, is when a subject unjustly uses any royal franchises, &c. And it is said to be an usurpation upon the king, who shall have the writ of quo warranto against the usurpers. See Quo Warranto.

USURA MARITIMA. See Bottomree.

USURY, (usura.) Is the interest or profit exacted for a loan beyond what is allowed by statute.

And by the stat. 12 Anne, c. 16. " no person shall take, directly or indirectly, for loan of any money, or any thing, above the value of 5*l.* for the forbearance of 100*l.* for a year, and so proportionably for a greater or less sum; and all bonds, contracts, and assurances made for payment of any principal sum to be lent on usury, above the rate of 5*l. per cent.* shall be void. And whoever shall take, accept, or receive by way of corrupt bargain, loan, &c. a greater interest, shall forfeit treble the value of the money lent; and scriveners, solicitors, and drivers of bargains, are not to take above 5*s.* for procuring the loan of 100*l.* for a year, on pain of forfeiting 20*l.* &c.

Although, by this statute, if a man give a bond or other assurance for payment of an interest beyond that which is allowed by the statute, yet the receipt of higher interest by virtue of an agreement subsequent to the first contract, doth not avoid an assurance fairly made; and the receipt thereof will subject the party to the forfeiture of treble value only. 1 Hawk. 246. 1 Mod. 69. For no contract legal at the time it was entered into can by any subsequent event be awarded as usurious. 3 Ter. Rep. 539.

And a bill of exchange given on an usurious consideration is void even in the hands of an innocent indorsee for a valuable consideration, without notice of the usury. Doug. 736.

And the usury is the same whether the loan be of goods or any other thing, and not money. Mo. 398.—Also if the allowance be by a mean, and indirectly, as if a country banker, discounting a bill, takes interest for the whole time it has to run, and instead of paying money for the bill, gives notes payable in London three days after sight, such country banker is guilty of usury. Peake's N. P.—So it is usury if there be an agreement for payment of 100*l.* for wares within a month, or otherwise 120*l.* at the end of a year. Mo. 397. 5 Co. 70 a. 2 Cro. 508.

But where it is in the power of the borrower of money to pay the principal within a limited time, without interest; on non-payment of the reservation of a larger sum than the statute allows, it is no usury. Comp. 115.; therefore, if a tradesman sell goods at three months credit, and stipulate, in case the money be unpaid, that the vendee shall allow him so much per month till he discharge the debt; this allowance, though above the legal rate of interest, yet being the usage of that particular trade, and the contract being a bona fide sale, is not usurious. Ibid. 112.

And the loan of money produced by the sale of stock, on an agreement that the borrower shall replace his stock on a certain day, or repay the money on a subsequent day, with such interest in the mean time as the stock itself would have produced, is not usurious, though the interest exceed 5*l.* per cent. unless the transaction be colourable, and a mere device to obtain more than legal interest. As if a wager be to give 40*l.* for 20*l.* paid, if A. should be alive at a certain day, as at the year's end, or the like. Cro. Eliz. 643.

Also interest exchange and other incidental expences on a protested bill of exchange beyond 5*l.* interest, if the charges are reasonable and warranted by usage, are not unlawful, provided they are not made a colour for usury. 2 Ter. Rep. 52.

So, if there be a hazard of the principal, it will not be usury. 3 Ter. Rep. 581. though the interest may, upon a contingency, exceed that allowed.

So when words are colourably added to avoid the statute which may be averted; as if the agreement be to pay for 100*l.* 20*l.* per ann. from Michaelmas next, if it be not repaid before Michaelmas, where it was agreed that it should not be repaid before. 5 Co. 69.

For if the substance of the contract be a borrowing and lending, a slight colourable contingency only will not take it out of the statute. Comp. 770. And there is no contrivance whatever by which a man may cover usury. Comp. 796.

Thus if the borrower of money give a bond for the principal and interest at 5*l.* per cent. and covenant at the same time also to pay to the lender a certain portion of the profits of a trade carried on by him in partnership with another person, it is an usurious contract, and the obligee cannot recover on the bond. 4 Ter. Rep. 353.

So, if on a negociation for a loan of money, the lender says he cannot advance the money, but will furnish goods, which the other takes and sells, if the security given be for a sum of money made payable at a future day, greatly exceeding the value of the goods and 5*l.* per cent., this is an usurious loan, and the security and contract are both void. Doug. 736.

If there be an agreement to pay legal interest, and a premium be paid down over and above the interest, the agreement is usurious and void. Doug. 235.

But the penalty under the statute is not immediately incurred if the premium itself do not exceed legal interest, nor until more than legal interest be actually received. Ibid.

And therefore an action may be brought for the penalty, though more than a year has elapsed since the payment of the premium, if it be not a year since what has been paid exceeded legal interest. Ibid.

The offence of usury is not complete until the lender has actually received the excess of interest in money or money's worth, therefore if a promissory note be given for repayment of a sum lent, with usurious interest, and the note when due not paid, but another note substituted for it, the offence of usury is not thereby committed, nor is the penalty incurred till the latter note be paid. 7 Ter. Rep. 184.

For when the usurious contract, the lending, the forbearance, or interest, concur, then the offence is committed, and the action must be brought on the statute within a year from that day, nor does part of the penalty being to the king avail. 3 Wils. 250. 2 Black. Rep. 792.

And before a party can entitle himself to relief by a civil action from an usurious contract, he must tender all the money really advanced; therefore when goods are pawned to a broker for a certain sum, and usurious interest agreed to be paid thereon, the pawner of the goods cannot maintain an action of trover for them, in order to get rid of the usurious contract, without rst tendering the money which had been rst actually advanced, with legal inte-est. 1 Ter. Rep. 153.

And an antecedent bona fide debt is not estroyed by being mingled with an usuri-us contract relating to it. 1 Hen. Black. 62.

UTAS, Octava. Is, in the return of writs, the eighth day following any term or feast, as the utas of St. Michael, &c.

UTENSIL. Any thing necessary for use and occupation, as household stuff; also things of necessary use in manufactories. See Excise.

UTERINUS FRATER. A brother by the mother's side. Fortes. 5.

UTFANGTHEF, (Fur extra captus, scilicet, extra dominium, vel jurisdictionem.) An ancient privilege or royalty granted to a lord of a manor, by the king, which gives him power to punish a thief dwelling out of his liberty, and committing theft without the same, if he be taken within his fee. Bract. lib. 2. tract. 2. cap. 35.

UTLAGATO CAPIENDO quando utlagatur in uno comitatu et postea fugit in alium. A writ noticed in Reg. Orig. fol. 133.

UTLEGH, (utlagus.) An outlaw. See Outlaw.

UTLAWRY, (utlagaria, vel utlagatio.) See Outlawry.

UTLEPE, (Sax.) An escape of a felon out of prison. Fleta, l. 1. c. 47. Cowell.

UTRUM. A writ now out of use. Ter. de Ley. See Assise de Utrum.

UTTER BARRISTERS, (juris consulti.) Barristers allowed only to plead without the bar. See Treason, Barrister.

UTTERING FALSE MONEY. See Felony.

VULGARIS PURGATIO. That by ordeal, distinguished by the appellation of Judicium Dei; in contra distinguishment from canonical purgation, by the oath of the party.

ULTIVA. A wound in the face. Cowell. See Mayhem.

VULTUS DE LUCA. The image of the Saviour kept at Lucca in the church of the Holy Cross. And William I. the Conqueror, often swore per sanctum vultum de Luca. Cowell.

UXORIUM. A mulct or fine paid for not marrying. Lit. Dict. Cowell.

WAFTORS, (waftores.) Ancient conductors of vessels at sea. Cowell. See Pilots.

WAGE, (vadiare, from Fr. Gage.) To give security, or pledge security for performance of any thing; as to wage or gage deliverance, to wage law, or the like. Co. Lit. 294. See Wager of Law.

WAGER OF BATTLE. Trial by wager of battle is a species of trial of great antiquity, but now disused; though still in force if the parties chuse to abide by it. See Battle.

WAGER OF LAW. (vadiare legem.) Is where an action of debt is brought against a man upon a simple contract between the parties, without deed or record; and the defendant swears in court, in the presence of his purgators, that he oweth the plaintiff nothing in manner and form as he hath declared. 2 Inst. 45.

And in the trial by wager of law, the defendant gives a pledge, gage, or vadium, that is, puts in vadios or sureties, that at such a day he will make his law, that is, take the benefit which the law has allowed him. Co. Lit. 295. For our ancestors considered, that there were many cases where an innocent man, of good credit, might be overborne by a multitude of false witnesses; and therefore established this species of trial, by the oath of the defendant himself; who if he will absolutely swear himself not chargeable, and appears to be a person of reputation, he shall go free and for ever acquitted of the debt, or other cause of action. 3 Black. 341.

The manner of waging and making law is this: He that has waged, or given security, to make his law, brings with him into court eleven of his neighbours. The defendant then, standing at the end of the bar, is admonished by the judges of the nature and danger of a false oath. And if he still persists, he is to repeat this or the like oath: "Hear this, ye justices, that I do not owe unto Richard Jones the sum of ten pounds, nor any penny thereof, in manner and form as the said Richard hath declared against me. So help me God." And thereupon his eleven neighbours or compurgators shall avow upon their oaths, that they believe in their consciences that he saith the truth; so that himself must be sworn de fidelitate, and the eleven de credulitate. And by such wager of law (when admitted) the plaintiff is perpetually barred.

It is only in actions of debt upon simple contract, or for an amercement, in actions of detinue, and of account, where the debt may have been paid, the goods restored, or the account balanced, without any evidence of either, that the defendant is admitted to wage his law. Finch. L. 423. So that wager of law lieth not, when there is any specialty, as a bond or deed, to charge the defendant; for that would be cancelled if satisfied; but when the debt groweth by word only. Nor doth it lie in an action of debt, for arrears of an account, settled by auditors in a former action. Wager of law lieth however in a real action, where the tenant alledges he was not legally summoned to appear, as well as in mere personal contracts.

A man outlawed, attainted for false verdict, or for conspiracy or perjury, or otherwise become infamous, as by pronouncing the horrible word in a trial by battle, shall not be permitted to wage his law. Neither shall an infant under the age of twenty-one, and the defendant, where an infant is plaintiff, shall not wage his law. But a feme-covert, when joined with her husband, may be admitted to wage her law: and an alien shall do it in his own language. Co. Litt. 295.

It is also a rule, that where a man is compellable by law to do any thing, as a goaler for victuals, or debt brought by an attorney for his fees, the defendant cannot wage his law, because the plaintiff as goaler cannot refuse the prisoner sustenance, or as attorney is compellable to be his attorney.

In no case where a contempt, trespass, deceit, or any injury with force, is alledged against the defendant, is he permitted to wage his law. Raym. 286.

Executors and administrators, when charged for the debt of the deceased, shall not be admitted to wage their law. The king also has his prerogative; and there shall be no such wager on actions brought by him. And this extends to his debtor and accomptant; for, on a writ of quo minus in the exchequer for a debt on simple contract, the defendant is not allowed to wage his law. Finch, L. 424.

WAGERING POLICIES. By Stat. 19 Geo. 2. c. 37. All insurances interest or no interest, or without further proof of interest than the policy itself, or by way of gaming or wagering, or without benefit of salvage to the insurer, shall be totally null and void, except upon privateers, or ships in the Spanish and Portugueze trade. See Insurance.

WAGERS in general, by the common law, were lawful contracts, and all wagers may still be recovered in an action upon a mutuatus assumpsit, in the courts of justice, which are not made upon games, or which are not such as are likely to obstruct the public peace, or to encourage immorality, or such as will probably affect the interests, characters, and feelings, of persons not parties to the wager, or such as are contrary to sound policy or the general interest of the nation. 3 Ter. Rep. 53.

WAGES of members of parliament. The rate of these wages established in the reign of Edward III. was four shillings a day for a knight of the shire, and two shillings for a citizen or burgess. See Parliament.

WAGGONS and WAGGONERS. See Carts, Highways, and Turnpikes.

WAIFS, (from the Sax. Wafian, Fr. Chose guaive, Lat. Bona Waviata,) are goods which are stolen and waved, or left by the felon on his being pursued, for fear of being apprehended; which are forfeited to the king or lord of the manor, who has the grant thereof from the crown. Kitch. 81.

WAIN, (Plaustrum) a cart, waggon, or plough to till land. Cowell.

WAINABLE, i. e. That may be ploughed or manured; land tillable. Ibid.

WAINAGE, (Wainagium,) the contenement of a villain: or the furniture of his cart or wain. 2 Inst. 28. And the villain of any other, if he fell into mercy, was to be amerced saving his wainage. Magn. Chart. c. 14. It has been also used for tillage.

WAIVE, (Waivare.) In a legal sense as applied to a woman, is the same as what is termed when applied to a man to be outlawed. Reg. Orig. 132.

WAIVER, signifies the passing by of a thing, or a refusal to accept it. Lit. Sect. 710. And an infant, or if he die, his heirs, may by waiver avoid an estate made to him during his minority. 1 Inst. 23, 348. But where a particular estate is given with a remainder over, there regularly he that hath it may not waive it, to the damage of him in remainder. Though it is otherwise where one hath a reversion; for that cannot be hurt by such waiver. 4 Shep. Abr. 192.

WAKE, the eve feast of the dedication of churches; in many places observed with feasting and rural diversion. Paroch. Antiq. 609. Cowell.

WAKEMAN, (Quasi, watchman,) the chief magistrate of the town of Rippon in Yorkshire, is so called. Cowell.

WALES. By the common law, Wales is not considered as a part of England. 1 Black. 93.

Wales had continued independent of England, unconquered and uncultivated, in the primitive pastoral state which Cæsar and Tacitus ascribe to Britain in general, for many centuries; even from the time of the hostile invasions of the Saxons, when the ancient and christian inhabitants of the island retired to those natural intrenchments, for protection from their pagan visitants. But when these invaders themselves were converted to christianity, and settled into regular and potent governments, this retreat of the ancient Britons grew every day narrower; they were over-run by little and little, gradually driven from one fastness to another, and by repeated losses abridged of their wild independence. Very early in our history we find their princes doing homage to the crown of England; till at length in the reign of Edward I. who may justly be stiled the conqueror of Wales, the line of their ancient princes was abolished, and the king of England's eldest son became, as a matter of course, their titular prince; the territory of Wales being then entirely reannexed (by a kind of feodal resumption) to the dominion of the crown of England; or, as the statute of Rhudhlan expresses it. 10 Edw. I. "Terra Walliæ cum incolis suis, prius regi jure feodali subjecta, (of which homage was the sign,) jam in proprietatis dominium totaliter et cum integritate conversa est, et coronæ regni Angliæ tanquam pars corporis ejusdem annexa et unita."* By statute also of Wales, very material alterations were made in divers parts of their laws, so as to reduce them nearer to the English standard, especially in the forms of their judicial proceedings: but they still retain very much of their original polity; particularly their rule of inheritance, viz. that their lands were divided equally among all the issue male, and did not descend to the eldest son alone. By other subsequent statutes their provincial immunities were still further abridged: but the finishing stroke to their independency was given by the statute 27 Hen. 8. c. 26. which at the same time gave the utmost advancement to their civil prosperity, by admitting them to a thorough communication of laws with the subjects of England. Thus were this brave people gradually conquered into the enjoyment of true liberty; being insensibly put upon the same footing, and made fellow-citizens with their conquerors. A generous method of triumph, which the republic of Rome practised with great success, till she reduced all Italy to her obedience, by admitting the vanquished states to partake of the Roman privileges. 1 Black. 94.

It is enacted by the stat. 27 Hen. 8. 1. That the dominion of Wales shall be for ever united to the kingdom of England. 2. That all Welchmen born shall have the same liberties as other the king's subjects. 3. That lands in Wales shall be inheritable according to the English tenures and rules of descent. 4. That the laws of England, and no other, shall be used in Wales: besides many other regulations of the police of this principality. And the statute 34 & 35 Hen. 8. c. 26. confirms the same, adds farther regulations, divides it into twelve shires,* and, in short, reduces it into the same order in which it stands at this day: differing from the kingdom of England in only a few particulars, and those too of the nature of privileges, (such as having courts within itself, independent of the process of Westminster-hall,) and some other immaterial peculiarities, hardly more than are to be found in many counties of England itself.

WALESHERIA signifies Walliæ pars. Cowell.

WALKERS are foresters with a certain space of ground assigned to their care in forests, &c. Cromp. Jurisd. 145. Cowell.

* Barrington, in his Observations on the Ancient Statutes, p. 74, states, that the Statutum Walliæ bears date apud Rothelanum, what is now called Rhuydland, in Flintshire. And though Edward says, that terra Walliæ prius regi jure feodali subjecta, yet Barrington assures us, that the feudal law was then unknown in Wales, and that there are at present in North Wales, and it is believed in South Wales, no copyhold tenures, and scarcely an instance of what we call manerial rights; but the property is entirely free and allodial. Edward, however, was a conqueror, and he had a right to make use of his own words in the preamble to his law." Ibid. 75.

* By this union of Wales with England, twenty-seven members were added to the English house of commons. By the 27 Hen. 8. c. 26. the county of Monmouth (which till that time had been part of Wales) was enabled to send two members to parliament; but the other counties and the towns in Wales represented in parliament had the privilege granted of returning one only.

WALTHAM BLACKS. In the reign of Geo. I. there sprung up a set of desperate villains called Waltham Blacks, headed by one whom they stiled king John: who blacking their faces, and using other disguises, robbed forests, parks, and warrens, destroyed cattle, levied money on their neighbours, by threats and menaces to fire their houses, and committing divers other violences and outrages, to the great terror of the people; but they were suppressed and declared felons, by stat. 9 Geo. I. c. 22. WANLASS, or driving the wanlass, is to drive deer to a stand, that the lord may have a shoot; an ancient customary tenure. Blount's Ten. 140.

WANT. A man in extreme want of food or clothing, cannot justify stealing either, the law admitting no such excuse at present. 1 Hal. P. C. 54. 4. Black. 31.

WAPENTAKE, (from the Sax. Weapen, i. e. Armatura, et Tac, tactus). The same as what we call a hundred; specially used in the north countries beyond the river Trent. Bract. lib. 3.

WAR, (Bellum) a contest between nations, in vindication of their just rights; also the state of war, or all the time it lasts. See Laws of Arms and Soldiers.

WARA, a certain quantity or measure of ground. Cowell.

WARD, (Custodia,) is variously used. A ward in London is a district or division of the city, committed to the special charge of one of the aldermen. Stow's Surv. A forest is divided into wards. Manwood. par. 1. p. 97. And a prison is called a ward. Lastly, the heir of the king's tenant, that held in capite, was termed a ward during his nonage. But this wardship is taken away by the stat. 12. Car. 2. c. 24.

WARDA, the custody of a town or castle, which the inhabitants were bound to keep at their own charge. Cowell.

WARDAGE, (Wardagium,) the same with Wardpeny.

WARDEN, (Guardianus, Fr. Gardin) is he that hath the keeping or charge of any persons or things by office; as the wardens of the companies in London.

WARDMOTE, (Wardmotus,) is a court kept in every ward in London, called the wardmote court. Cowell.

WARDPENY, money paid and contributed to watch and ward. Domesday. Cowell.

WARDWIT, is to be quit of giving money for keeping of wards. Terms de Ley. Cowell.

WARDS was a court first erected in the reign of king Henry VIII. and afterwards augmented by him with the office of liveries; wherefore it was stiled the Court of Wardens and Liveries, now abolished by the 12 Car. 2. c. 24.

WARD STAFF, the constable or watchman's staff. Cowell.

WARECTARE, to plough up land designed for wheat in the spring, in order to let it lie fallow for better improvement; which in Kent is called summer-land. Hence warectabilis campus, a fallow field; campus ad warectum, terra war actata, &c. Cowell.

WARNOTH, an ancient custom, that if any tenant holding of the castle of Dover failed in paying his rent at the day, he should forfeit double, and for the second failure treble. Ibid.

WARRANT, a precept under hand and seal to some officer to bring any offender before the person granting it, or to commit him to safe custody.

WARRANT OF ATTORNEY, is an authority and power given by a client to his attorney, to appear and plead for him; or to suffer judgment to pass against him by confessing the action, by Nil dicit, non sum informatus, &c. Strange 526. 2 Strange 807. Vide Stat. 4. & 5 Anne, c. 16.

And it is now very usual, in order to strengthen a bond-creditor's security, for the debtor to execute a warrant of attorney to any one, empowering him to confess a judgment by either of the ways just now mentioned (by nihil dicit, cognovit actionem, or non sum informatus) in an action of debt to be brought by the creditor for the specific sum due: which judgment, when confessed, is absolutely complete and binding. But if the party is in custody, it will be void unless an attorney on his behalf is present.

WARRANTIA CHARTÆ, a writ that lieth where a man is feoffed of lands with warranty, and then he is sued or impleaded. And if the feoffee be impleaded in assise, or other action, in which he cannot vouch or call to warranty, he shall have this writ against the feoffor, or his heirs, to compel them to warrant the land unto him; and if the land be recovered from him, he shall recover as much lands in value against the warrantor, &c. But the warrantia chartæ ought to be brought by the feoffee depending the first writ against him, or he hath lost his advantage. F. N. B. 134. Terms de Ley, 372, 588.

WARRANTIA DIEI, is an ancient writ, lying where one having a day assigned personally to appear in court to any action, is in the mean time employed in the king's service, so that he cannot come at the day appointed. And it is directed to the justices to this end, that they neither take nor record him in default for that time. Reg. Orig. 18. F. N. B. 17. See Essoin.

WARRANTY, (Warrantia,) is a promise or covenant by deed made by the bargainor, for himself and his heirs, to warrant or secure the bargainee and his heirs, against all men for the enjoying of the thing granted. Bract. lib. 2 & 5. West. Symb. par. 1.

A warranty is real or personal. A real warranty is a covenant real annexed to lands, whereby a man and his heirs are bound to warrant the same to some other and his heirs; and that they shall quietly hold and enjoy the lands, and upon voucher, or by writ of warrantia chartæ, to yield other lands and tenements to the value of those that shall be evicted by elder title. And warranty being a covenant real, bindeth to yield lands in recompence. 1 Inst. 365, 384.

Personal warranty is when it concerns goods and chattels; and it is created by implication; for the purchaser of goods may have a satisfaction from the seller, if he sells them as his own, and the title proves deficient although there be no express warranty to that purpose.

WARREN, (Warrenka, from Germ. Wahren, i. e. Custodire, or the Fr. Garinne.) is a franchise or place privileged, by prescription or grant from the king, for the keeping of beasts and fowls of the warren, which are hares and conies, partridges, pheasants, and some add quails, woodcocks, and water-fowl, &c. Terms de Ley 589. 1 Inst. 233.

WARSCOT, a contribution usually made towards armour, in the time of the Saxons. Cowell.

WARTH, a customary payment for castle-guard. Blount's Ten. 60.

WASH, a shallow part of a river, or arm of the sea; as the washes in Lincolnshire, &c. Knight. 1346.

WASSAILE, (Sax.) a festival song, heretofore sung from door to door about the time of the Epiphany. Cowell.

WASTE. Whatever doeth lasting damage to the freehold or inheritance is waste; and, in treating thereof, it is to be shown that it may be committed; first, in respect of houses; secondly, in respect of gardens, orchards, and the like; thirdly, in respect of land; fourthly, in respect of timber and other trees.

First, as to houses; it is clear from the stat. Marlb. 23, and stat. Glo. 5, that waste may be done in houses: thus if the tenant pull down the houses demised, it will be waste; so if he suffers a house to be uncovered, whereby the timber decays, though the timber be not thereby thrown down; so if the house was uncovered at the commencement of the lease, yet it will be waste if he pulls it down without the consent of the landlord; or if it was ruinous at the commencement, and he suffers it to be more ruinous; so if the tenant suffers glass windows to be broke or carried away, or the wainscot, benches, doors, furnaces, or the like, which are fixed to the house, to be removed, although they were originally fixed, by the tenant, by nails, screws, or otherwise. It is also waste if he permits the walls of a house to be decayed for want of plastering, whereby the timber is rotted—or the chambers of a house, though the timber be not thereby rotted; so if he does not scour a drain, whereby the ground timber is decayed—so it will be waste if the walls are suffered to go to decay, though the timber was in decay at the commencement of the lease; and it will be waste though there be no timber upon the land demised for repairs; or though the house was uncovered by or damaged by tempest, if it be suffered afterwards to remain in decay; so it will be waste if the tenant pulls down the house and rebuilds it less than before, or if he rebuilds it larger to the prejudice of the landlord; for it is more charge to repair. So if the tenant alters the house to the landlord's prejudice: as, if he converts a parlour into a a stable, or changes a corn-mill to a cotton or fulling-mill, or the like. So it may be waste to turn two rooms into one: for if it would be for the lessor's advantage it may be shown on the other side. So it will be waste if the tenant builds a new house, and afterwards suffers that to be decayed.

However, in all questions respecting waste, it is to be observed that, in regard to the repairs of the houses the tenant is not liable thereto, unless he holds the premises under a lease for a term of years, but the burthen thereof lies on the landlord. Thus, in the case of a tenancy at will, or from year to year, the landlord is under an obligation to keep the premises in tenantable repair; but where there is an actual lease, the charge of repairing, without any express covenant for that purpose, is upon the tenant, reasonable or ordinary wear and use being allowed.

But, if the house was uncovered at the commencement of the lease, it is no waste if the tenant suffers it to fall into further decay, without pulling it down; or if the walls were uncovered, or insufficiently supported; or if the house was ruinous and the tenant suffers it to be as it was, without permitting it to become more ruinous. So also it is no waste if the tenant removes furnaces, coppers, or other utensils of trade, though fixed to the freehold, if he removes them before the expiration of his term; but if he permits them to remain after the expiration of the term, he cannot remove them, for they are then vested in the reversioner or landlord.

In like manner green and hot-houses are removeable; so a barn erected on the premises upon blocks of timber; and this notwithstanding there be a covenant to leave all buildings which then were or should be erected on the premises in repair; for such covenant means that the tenant shall leave all buildings annexed to and become part of the reversionary estate; but if the tenant will actually build, he must leave the buildings for the benefit of the landlord,—thus if the tenant erect a beast-house, a carpenter's shop, cart-house, pump-house, or fold-yard wall, letting such buildings into the ground, he cannot remove the same; for there is a distinction between erections necessary to the purposes of trade or manufactures, such as hot-houses or the like, and those that are requisite in order to the enjoyment of the land demised, such as beast-houses and the like; and therefore those of the latter description are not removeable by the outgoing tenant, but must remain for the benefit of the inheritance.

Secondly; as to gardens, orchards, and the like: waste may be committed therein, if the tenant cuts down pear-trees, apple-trees, or other fruit-trees: or if they are thrown down by tempest, and the tenant afterward roots them up, or cuts down the germens growing without planting new.

So if the tenant destroys or suffers the stock of a dovecote, warren, park, fish-pond, pool, or the like, to be diminished, or throws down the pales of a park or warren, or stops up the holes of a dovecote, or throws down the banks of a fish-pond. But if the tenant kills or destroys, yet it is no waste if he leaves a sufficient stock.

Thirdly; as to land: it will be waste if the tenant suffers the sea to surround arable land, meadow, or pasture; or if he suffers a wall or bank against the sea, a river, or the like, to be ruinous; by which the water surrounds or overflows the land, and renders it useless; so if he digs up the surface of the land, and carries it away; or if the tenant converts arable land to wood, or wood-land to arable, it will be waste, or meadow to arable or pasture; or meadow to orchard or hop-ground—though it be done for the amelioration of the soil—or a hop-ground to tillage.

So if a tenant for life or years opens new mines in land, demised without mention of mines, it will be waste; so if he digs for gravel, lime, clay, brick-earth, stone, or the like, in pits not open.

But it is not waste if land is surrounded or overflowed by the violence of a tempest, or if pasture be converted to tillage for the improvement of the soil, where it has been sometimes pasture and sometimes arable; or if it was stocked with rabbits, it not being a warren by charter or prescription; so if it was a warren. So it is not waste if the land lies fallow, though it is bad husbandry; or if trenches are dug in a meadow to draw off the water; or if wood or the like be sown against the end of the term, though it is not ripe for several years.

So it is not waste to dig for ore, coal, or the like, in mines open at the time of the lease; or if mines were not demised, if the land was demised with all mines; neither will it be waste for the rector or vicar to dig for or open mines in his glebe.

Fourthly; as to timber and other trees: it is waste if a tenant cuts down timber: and oak, ash, and elm, are timber after the age of twenty years, throughout the realm; and in some counties, where such timber is scarce, beech, willow, hornbeam, and other trees, may be accounted timber, if they have been so deemed by custom and immemorial usage. And therefore if a tenant cuts down trees, which by law, or the immemorial usage and custom of the country, are esteemed timber, it will be waste; so it will be waste if the tenant does an act by which the timber decays, as if he lops and tops them; so if he cuts down birch, willow, maple, or other trees, which are not timber if they are growing in defence of the house; or if he roots up or destroys quickets of white-thorn and the like; so if he extirpates or destroys the germens of underwood, which may be cut. It will also be waste if the tenant cuts down trees for fuel, when there is dead and decayed wood sufficient; or if he cuts down, for new pales, fences, a house, or the like, where none were before; so it is waste if the tenant sells the trees, and with the money repairs, or afterwards repurchases and uses for repairs; so if he cuts down for repairs which are not necessary, or for repairs when there shall be no occasion, or for repairs which happened by his own default.

But cutting down trees which are not timber, nor stand for the defence of the house, is not waste, nor trees that are timber, when they are dead. So cutting down of trees is justifiable for house-boot, hay-boot, plow-boot, and fire-boot. For by the common law lessee shall have them, though the deed does not express it; but if he takes more than is necessary he shall be punished in waste. So the tenant may take sufficient wood to repair the walls, pales, fences, hedges and ditches, as he found them, but he cannot make new.

So also cutting of timber-trees, by a lessee for necessary repairs, and using the same therein, is not waste, and there is no difference whether the lessor or lessee covenants to repair the houses; for in either case it is not waste, if lessee cuts them.

WASTEL-BOWL, (From the Sax. Was-heal, i. e. Health be to you) A large silver cup or bowl, wherein the Saxons, at their entertainments, drank a health to one another, in the phrase of wass-heal: and this wastel or wass-heal bowl, was set at the upper end of the table in religious houses for the use of the Abbot, who began the health or poculum charitatis to strangers, or to his fraternity. Hence cakes and fine white bread, which were usually sopped in the wastel bowl were called wastel bread. Matt. Paris. 141. Cowell. Blount.

WASTERS, were a kind of thieves so called; mentioned among robbers, draw-latches, &c. Stat. 4 Hen. 4. c. 27.

WATCH AND WARD, is to stand centry or attend as a guard, &c. And watching is properly for the apprehending of rogues in the night, as warding is for like purposes in the day; and for default of watch and ward the township may be punished. In all towns, &c. between the day of Ascension and Michaelmas-day, night-watches are to be kept, in every city with six men at every gate; and six or four in towns; and every borough shall have twelve men to watch, or according to the number of the inhabitants of the place, from sun-setting to sun-rising; who are to arrest strangers suspected, and may make hue and cry after them, and justify the detaining them until the morning: And watches shall be kept on the sea coasts, as they have been wont to be. Stat. 13 Ed. 1. c. 4. 5 Hen. 4. c. 3. Every justice of peace may cause these night-watches to be duly kept; which is to be composed of men of able bodies, and sufficiently weaponed: And none but inhabitants in the same town are compellable to watch, who are bound to keep it in turn; or to find other sufficient persons for them, or on refusal, are indictable, &c. Co. Litt. 70. Cro. Eliz. 204. And by a late statute, viz. 52 Geo. 3. c. 17. (passed in consequence of the riotous behaviour of divers persons in several manufacturing towns) it is enacted, that in case of disturbance in any county, the custos rotulorum, or sheriff, or five justices of the peace may by warrant convene a special general sessions of the peace to appoint a special watch and ward for all places disturbed in such county, in the manner prescribed by the act.

WATCHES, made by artificers, are to have the makers names, &c. under the penalty of 20*l.* Stat. 9 and 10 W. 3. c. 28.

WATER-BAILIFF, an officer in port towns, for the searching of ships. Also in the city of London, there is a water-bailiff who hath the supervising and search of fish brought thither; and the gathering of the toll arising from the Thames: And he attends on the Lord Mayor, having the principal care of marshalling the guests at his table; and arrests men for debt, or other personal or criminal matters upon the river Thames. 28 H. 6. c. 5.

WATER-COURSE. A water-course does not begin by prescription, nor yet by assent, but begins ex jure naturæ, having taken this course naturally, and it cannot be diverted. Per Whitlock J. 3 Bulst. 340. in case of Surrey v. Piggot.

Action on the case lies for diverting a water-course to my prejudice. See Action on the Case, and Het. 32. Skin. 316, 389. 5 Mod. 206. and 22 Vin. Abr. 525, 528.

WATER-GAGE, a sea wall or bank, to restrain the current and overflowing of the water: and it signifies an instrument to guage or measure the quantity or deepness of any waters. Cowell. Blount.

WATER-GANG. (watergangium) Is a Saxon word for a trench or course to carry a stream of water; such as are commonly made to drain water out of marshes. Ordin. Naviac. de Remn. Chart. II. 3. Cowell. Blount.

WATER-GAVEL, was a rent paid for fishing in, or other benefit received from some river. Chart. 15 Hen. 3. Cowell. Blount.

WATER-MEASURE, is greater than Winchester measure, and used for selling of coals in the pool, &c. mentioned in the Stat. 22 Car. 2. c. 11.

WATERMEN. The Lord Mayor and court of aldermen in London, have a great power in the government of the Company of Watermen, and appointing the fares for plying on the Thames; and the justices of peace for Middlesex, and other adjoining counties, have likewise authority to hear and determine offences, &c.

WATER-ORDEAL, a way of purgation used by the Saxons. See Ordeal, and 4 Black. Com. 336.

WATERSCAPE, (From the Sax. Wætter, Aqua, and Schap, ductus) An aqueduct, or passage for water. Cowell. Blount.

WATLING-STREET, is one of those four ways which the Romans are said to have made here, and called them Consulares, Prætorios, Militares et Publicas. This street is otherwise called Werlam Street. Et strata quam filii Wethe regis ab orientali mari usque ad occidentale per Angliam straverunt. R. Hov. f. 248. a. n. 10. This street leads from Dover to London, St. Albans, Dunstable, Towecester, Atherston, and the Severn, near the Wrekin in Shropshire, extending itself to Anglesey in Wales. Anno 39 El. c. 2. The second is called Ikenild street, so called ab Icenis, stretching from Southampton over the river Isis, at Newbridge; thence by Cambden and Litchfield; then it passeth the river Derwent by Derby, so to Bolsover castle, and ends at Tynmouth. The third was called the Fosse, because in some places it was never perfected, but lies as a large ditch, leading from Cornwall through Devonshire, by Tethbury, near Stow in the Wolds, and beside Coventry to Leicester, Newark, and so to Lincoln. The fourth was called Ermine or Erminage-street, beginning at St. David's in West Wales, and going to Southampton. See the laws of Edward the Confessor, whereby these four public ways had the privilege of Pax Regis. See Hollingshed's Chron. vol. 1. cap. 19. And Henry of Huntingdon, lib. 1. in principio. And in Leg. Will. 1. c. 30. there are three ways mentioned; but Ikenild-street is omitted, which was called Iknild from the Iceni, and streat, which signifies a way. See an old description of these ways, made by Robert of Gloucester, Dug. Antiq. of Warw. p. 6. Cowell.

WAVESON, is used for such goods as after shipwreck, do appear swimming upon the waves. Chart. 18 Hen. 8. Cowell. Blount. See Jetson.

WAX-CHANDLERS. Justices of peace shall examine the goodness of wax candles; and chandlers are to take but 3d. a pound for the candle, &c. more than the common price of the wax, on pain of forfeiture and to be fined by the justices, &c. Stat. 11 H. 6. c. 12. Wax-chandlers mixing with their wax, tallow or other deceitful stuff, shall forfeit the candles; and they are to have stamps or marks, which shall not be counterfeited, under penalties, &c. 23 Eliz. c. 8.

WAXSCOT, (Ceragium) A duty anciently paid twice a year towards the charge of wax-candles in churches. Spelm. Cowell. Blount.

WAY, (Via) A passage, street, or road. Litt. And where a man has a way to his close, he cannot go further without a prescription; but it is held if he go to a mill or bridge, it may be otherwise. 1 Lord Raym. 75. 2 Black. Com. 55. 3 Black. 241.

WAYS AND MEANS, Committee of. When the commons of Great Britain in parliament assembled, have voted a supply to his Majesty, and settled the quantum of that supply, they usually resolve themselves into what is called a committee of ways and means, to consider of ways and means to raise that supply so voted. Black. Com. 307, 308.

WEALD, or WALD. In the beginning of names of places, signifies a situation near wood, from the Sax. Weald, i. e. a wood: and the woody parts of the counties of Kent and Sussex, are called the Wealds; though misprinted wildes in the statute 14 Car. 2. c. 6.

WEALREAF, (From the Sax. Weal, i. e. Strages, and Reaf Spoliatio) Is the robbing of a dead man in his grave. Leg. Etheldred. cap. 21. Cowell. Blount.

WEAR, a great dam made across a river, accommodated for the taking of fish, or to convey a stream to a mill. And all wears for the taking of fish, are to be put down, except on the sea-coasts, by the statutes 9 H. 3. c. 23. and 25 Ed. 3. c. 4. Also commissions shall be granted to justices, to keep the waters, survey wears and mills, and to inquire of and correct abuses; and where it is found by them that any new wears are made, or others altered to the nuisance of the public, the sheriff by scire facias is to give the person making them notice of it; and if he do not amend the same in three months, he shall forfeit 100 marks, &c. Stat. 1 and 4 Hen. 4. 12 Ed. 4.

WEAVERS. Persons using the trade of a weaver, shall not keep a tucking or fulling-mill, or use dying, &c. Or have above two looms in a house, in any corporation or market-town, on pain of forfeiting 20s. a week: and shall serve an apprenticeship of seven years to a weaver or clothier, or shall forfeit 20l. &c. Stat. 2 and 3 P. and M. c. 11.

WED, (Sax.) A covenant or agreement; whence to wedd, a wedded husband, wedded bond-slave. Cowell. Blount.

WEDBEDRIP, the customary service which inferior tenants paid to their lord in cutting down their corn, or doing other harvest duties. From the Sax. Wed, a covenant or agreement (whence to wedd, wedding, a wedded husband, a wedded bondslave, &c.) and biddan to pray or desire, and rippan to reap or mow. As a covenant of the tenant to reap for the lord at the time of his bidding or commanding. Paroch. Antiq. 401. Cowell. Blount.

WEEK, (Septimana) Seven days of time; four of which weeks make a month, &c. And the week was originally divided into seven days, according to the number of the seven planets. Skene. Cowell. Blount.

WEIGH, (waga) Is a weigh of cheese or wool, containing two hundred and fifty-six pounds; and in Essex the weigh of cheese is three hundred pounds. A weigh of barley or malt is six quarters, or forty-eight bushels: and we read of a weigh of salt, &c. 9 H. 6. c. 8.

WEIGHTS, (Pondera) and Measures, are used between buyers and sellers of goods and merchandize, for reducing the quantity and price to a certainty, that there may be the less room for deceit and imposition. There are two sorts of weights in use with us, viz. troy-weight and avoirdupois: troy-weight contains twelve ounces to the pound, and no more; by which are weighed gold, silver, pearl, jewels, medicines, silk, &c. and avoirdupois contains sixteen ounces in the pound, by which wheaten bread, grocery wares, copper, iron, lead, flesh, cheese, butter, tallow, hemp, wool, &c. are weighed: and here twelve pounds over are allowed to every hundred, so as one hundred and twelve pounds make the hundred weight. Dalt. 248. In the composition of troy-weight, twenty pennyweights make an ounce, twenty-four grains a pennyweight, twenty mites a grain, twenty-four droits a mite, twenty perits a droit, and twenty-four blanks a perit: and the troy-weight is said to be 20s. sterling in the pound; and the avoirdupois weight 25s. sterling. 4 Shep. Abr. 194. Fleta mentions a weight, called a trone-weight, being the same with what we now call troy-weight; and according to the same author, all our weights have their composition from the penny sterling, which ought to weigh thirty-two wheat-corns of the middle sort; twenty of which pence make an ounce, and twelve such ounces a pound; but fifteen ounces make the merchants pound. Fleta, lib. 2. c. 12. By Magna Charta, 9 H. 3. c. 25. 14 Ed. 3. c. 12. 25 Ed. 3. c. 10. 27 Ed. 3. &c. There is to be but one weight, &c. throughout the kingdom; but this is to be understood of the same species of goods, otherwise the troy and avoirdupois weights would not be permitted. Every city, borough, and town, shall have a common balance, with common weights sealed; on pain of 10l. in the city, 5l. the borough, and 40s. the town. 8 H. 6. c. 5. But only cities and market-towns are enjoined to have common balances, weights, and measures, by 11 H. 7. c. 4. And by this statute, weights are to be marked by the chief officers of places and sealed, &c. Refusing or delaying to do it, is liable to a penalty of 40s. And allowing weights not agreeable to the standard, incurs a forfeiture of 5l. &c. And the mayors and such officers are once a year to view all weights and measures, and burn and destroy those which are defective; also fine the offenders, &c. And two justices of peace have power to hear and determine the defaults of mayors. See the statutes 17 Car. 1. c. 19. 22 Car. 2. c. 8. &c. and vide Measures.

And by a late statute 35 Geo. 3. c. 102. The justices [at their petty sessions, 37 Geo. 3. c. 143.] are to appoint persons to examine weights and balances; and the persons so appointed are to visit shops and places, and seize those which are false; and the penalty for having the same is not exceeding 20s. nor less than 10s. s. 1, 2.

Penalty for obstructing inspectors, or refusing to produce weights, is not exceeding 40s. nor less than 5s. s. 3.

Quarter Sessions to allow a recompence to inspectors out of the county rate; s. 4. Persons punished under this act not to suffer by any other, s. 5. but not to lessen the authority of persons appointed at the court leet. s. 6.

Justices to cause standard weights to be purchased out of the county rate, which shall be produced to persons paying the costs of production. s. 7.

No person to be prosecuted unless information be given within one month.

By 37 Geo. 3. c. 143. the examiners when directed by the justices, may visit shops and other places, and seize false weights and balances; and persons having the same on conviction at such petty sessions, are to forfeit not exceeding 20s. nor less than 5s. to be levied by distress. s. 2.

Justices are to cause false weights and balances to be broken, and the produce of the materials, and forfeitures to be paid to the county treasurer. s. 3.

If the majority of the inhabitants of the parish wish that any persons should be specially appointed examiners, they may in vestry nominate them for the approbation of the justices. s. 4. But no such appointment shall be made till the inhabitants shall have procured standard weights, the costs of which, and the recompence to the examiners shall be paid out of the poor rates. s. 8.

WEIGHTS OF AUNCEL, mentioned in statute 14 Ed. 3. st. 1. c. 12. See Auncel-weight.

WEND, (Wendus, i. e. Perambulatio, from the Sax. Wendam) Signifies a certain quantity or circuit of ground. Rental. Regal. Maner. de Wye, pag. 31. Cowell. Blount.

WERE, (Sax. Wera) is the sum paid in ancient time for killing a man, when such crimes were punished with pecuniary mulcts, not death: or it is pretium redemptionis of the offender. Leg. Ed. Conf. cap. 11. Cowell. Blount.

WERELADA, (From the Sax. Were, i. e. Pretium Capitis Hominis Occisi, and Ladian purgare) Was where a man was slain, and the price at which he was valued not paid to his relations; but the party denied the fact; when he was to purge himself by the oaths of several persons, according to his degree and quality, which was called werelada. Leg. H. 1. c. 12. Cowell. Blount.

WERGILD, WEREGILD, (Wergildus) The price of homicide; paid partly to the king for the loss of a subject, partly to the lord whose vassal he was, and partly to the next of kin of the person slain. LL. H. 1. 4 Black. Com. 4. 188, 308, 406.

WEST-SAXONLAGE, was the law of the West-Saxons. See Merchenlage, and 1 Black. Com. 65. 4, 405.

WESTMINSTER, (Westmonasterium, Sax. West-mynster, i. e. Occidentale Monasterium) The ancient seat of our kings; and is now the well known place where the high court of parliament, and courts of judicature sit: it had great privileges granted by Pope Nicholas; among others, Ut amplius in perpetuum Regiæ constitutionis locus sit atque repositorium regalium insignium. 4 Inst. 255.

WESTMONY AND ISELAND, fishing vessels not to proceed thither till the 10th of March, 15 Car. 2. c. 15.

WHARF, (Wharfa) a broad plain place, near some creek or haven, to lay goods and wares on that are brought to or from the water. 12 Car. 2. c. 4.

WHARFAGE, (Wharfagium) is money paid for landing of goods at a wharf, or for shipping and taking goods into a boat or barge from thence: it is mentioned in the statutes 17 H. 8. c. 26. and 22 Car. 2. c. 11.

WHARFS. By statutes 1 Eliz. c. 11. and 13 and 14 Car. 2. c. 11. sect. 14. the crown is enabled by commission to ascertain the limits of all ports, and to assign proper wharfs and quays in each port, for the exclusive landing and loading of merchandize.

WHARFINGER, is he that owns or keeps a wharf. 12 Car. 2. and 22 Car. 2. And wharfingers commonly keep boats or lighters of their own, for the carrying out and bringing in of goods, in which if a loss or damage happens, they as common carriers are made answerable. Lex Mercat. 133.

WHEELAGE, (Rotagium) Tributum est quod rotarum nomine penditur; hoc est, pro plaustris et carris transeuntibus, Spelm. Cowell. Blount.

WHERLICOTES, the ancient British chariots, that were used by persons of quality before the invention of coaches. Stow's Survey Lond. pag. 70.

WHINIARD, a sword, from the Sax. Winn, i. e. to get, and Are honour; because honour is gained by the sword. Cowell. Blount.

WHIPPING, a punishment inflicted for many of the smaller offences, by divers statutes, and in particular under the vagrant act.

WHITE-ASHES. None shall ship, lade, or convey away any white-ashes, to parts beyond sea, under the penalty of 6*s.* 8*d.* a bushel. Stat. 2 and 3 Ed. 6. cap. 6.

WHITEHART SILVER, is a mulct on certain lands in or near the forest of Whitehart, paid yearly into the Exchequer, imposed by King Hen. 3. upon Thomas de la Linde, for killing a beautiful white hart which that king before had spared in hunting. Camb. Brit. 150. Cowell. Blount.

WHITE-MEATS, are milk, butter, cheese, eggs, and any composition of them, which before the reformation were forbid in Lent as well as flesh, till Hen. 8. published a proclamation allowing the eating of white-meats in Lent. Anno 1543. Cowell. Blount.

WHITE-RENTS. Payments or chief rents reserved in silver or white money, called white-rents or blanch-farms, redditus albi; in contradistinction to rents reserved in work, grain, &c. Also white-rent in Cowel, Blount, is a duty or rent payable by the tinners in Devonshire to the Duke of Cornwall. 2 Black. Com. 42.

WHITE-SPURS, a kind of esquires called by this name.

WHITSONTIDE, the feast of Pentecost, being the fiftieth day after Easter: and is so called, saith Blount, because those who were newly baptized came to the church between Easter and Pentecost in white garments. Blount's Dict.

WHITSON-FARTHINGS, mentioned in letters patent of King Hen. 8. to the Dean of Worcester. See Pentecostals.

WHITE-STRAITS, a kind of coarse cloth in Devonshire, about a yard and half a quarter broad, raw, mentioned in Stat. 5 Hen. 8. c. 2.

WHOLE-BLOOD. A kinsman of the whole blood is he that is derived, not only from the same ancestor, but from the same couple of ancestors. 2 Black. Com. 227.

WIC, a place on the sea-shore, on the bank of a river. 1 Inst. 4. But it more properly signifies a town, village, or dwelling-place; and it is often in the Saxon language made a termination to the name of the town, which had a spe plete name without it, as Lunden-wic, i. e. London-town; so Ipswich is written in some old charters Villo de Gippo Wico, which is the same thing, for Gipps is the name, and Gipps-Wic. is Gipps Town. Cowell. Blount.

WICA, a country house or farm, and there are many such houses now called the Wick and the Wike. Cartular. Abbat. Glaston. pag. 29. Cowell. Blount.

WICHENERIF, a Saxon word for witchcraft, which occurs in the laws of K. Canut, cap. 27. Cowell. Blount.

WIDOW, (Vidua Relicta) a married woman bereft of her husband, left all alone. Litt. The widow of a freeman of London, may use her husband's trade, so long as she continues a widow. Chart. K. Cha. 1. Cowell. Blount.

WIDOWS-CHAMBER. In London the widow of a freeman, is, by the custom of the city, entitled to her apparel, and the furniture of her bed-chamber, called the Widow's Chamber. Cowell. Blount.

WIDOW OF THE KING, (Vidua Regis) was she that after her husband's death, being the king's tenant in capite, could not marry again without the king's consent. Staundf. Prærog. cap. 4. Stat. 17 Edw. 2. and 32 H. cap. 46.

WIDOWHOOD, (Viduitas) the state and condition of a widow.

WIFE, (Uxor) is a woman married; and after marriage the will of the wife, in judgment of law, is subject to the will of the husband; and it is said a wife hath no will, sed fulget radiis mariti. Plowd. 344. 4 Rep. A wife cannot contract for any thing, or bring actions, &c. without her husband; she is also entitled for life to one third part of the rents and profits of all lands whereof the husband was seized during marriage for her dower, unless there has been a settlement or will making a provision in lieu of dower; and she is entitled likewise to one third of the personal estate of her husband if he dies intestate; also if separated or divorced on account of cruelty, she is entitled to alimony from her husband: and the course of the Ecclesiastical Courts in such cases is usually to decree an allowance of one fifth part of the clear income of the husband's estates. But if the wife commits adultery, even though it be through the cruelty of the husband, she loses her right to dower and her thirds.

WIGREVE (From the Sax. Wig, i. e. Sylva, and Greve, Præpositus) The overseer of a wood. Spelm. Cowell. Blount.

WIGHT ISLAND, was anciently called Guith by the Britons; whence it had many other names, as Icta, Wotha, &c. Law Lat. Dict. See Stat. 4 Hen. 7. c. 16.

WILD-FOWL, are not to be destroyed by nets or otherwise, nor their eggs taken, under divers penalties by Stat. 25 Hen. 8. c. 11. 1 Jac. 1. c. 17. 9 Ann. c. 25.

WILL, Defect of. An involuntary act, as it hath no claim to merit, so neither can it induce any guilt: the concurrence of the will, when it hath its choice either to do, or to avoid the fact in question, being the only thing that renders human actions either praise-worthy or culpable. 4 Black. Com. 20, 21. But note, trespass will lie for an accidental hurt.

WILL, Estates at. An estate at will is where lands or tenements are let by one man to another, to have and to hold at the will of the lessor; and the tenant by virtue of this lease obtains possession. Every estate at will is at the will of both parties, landlord and tenant, so that either of them may determine his will, and quit his connections with the other at his own pleasure, giving previous notice according to the contract between them; but if there is no particular agreement on the subject, then there must be six months previous notice, ending on the day when the party first entered. Note, if tenant at will sows his lands, and the landlord before the corn is reaped, puts him out, yet the tenant shall have the emblements and free ingress, egress, and regress, to cut and carry away the profits. 2 Black. Com. 145, 146.

WILL OF THE LORD. Though in general copyholders are still said to hold their estates at the will of the lord, yet it is such a will as is agreeable to the custom of the manor; which customs are preserved and evidenced by the rolls of the several courts baron in which they are entered or kept on foot by the constant immemorial usage of the several manors in which the lands lie. 2 Black. Com. 95, 147.

WILL, vicious. In all temporal jurisdictions an overt act, or some open evidence of an intended crime, is necessary, in order to demonstrate the depravity of the will, before the man is liable to punishment. And, as a vicious will without a vicious act is no civil crime, so, on the other hand, an unwarrantable act, without a vicious will, is no crime at all. So that to constitute a crime against human laws, there must be first, a vicious will; and, secondly, an unlawful act consequent upon such vicious will. See 4 Black. Com. 20, 21.

WILL, OR LAST WILL AND TESTAMENT, (Testamentum, ultima voluntas) is a solemn act or instrument, whereby a person declares his mind and intention, as to the disposal of his lands, goods or effects, and what he would have done after his death. Co. Litt. 111.

And the common law calls that a will, when lands or tenements are given; and where it concerns goods and chattels alone, it is termed a testament: in a will of goods there must be an executor appointed, but not of lands only, without goods; an executor having nothing to do with the freehold. 1 Inst. 111. If lands are given by will, it is called a devise; and goods and chattels a legacy or bequest: And there is this diversity between lands and goods given by a will, that when lands are devised in fee, or for life, the devisee shall enter without the appointment of others. In case of goods and chattels there must be the assent of the executor, &c. Swinb. 24. If lands are given and devised by will, the will ought to be proved in the Chancery; and of goods it must be in the spiritual court: but a will both of lands and goods, may be proved in the spiritual court. Ibid.

He who makes the testament, is called the testator; and when a man dies without a will, he is said to die intestate. Shep. Abr. part 4, voc. Testament.

An infant, until he be of the age of 21 years, can make no will of his lands by statute 32 H. 8. c. 1. But by special custom in some places, where land is deviseable by custom, he may devise it sooner; and of his goods and chattels, if he be a boy, he may make a will at fourteen years of age, and not before; and if a maid, at twelve years of age, and not before: and then they may do it without and against the consent of their tutor, father, or guardian. 32 H. 8. c. 1. 34 H. 8. c. 5. Swinb. part 11. sect. 2.

A feme covert cannot make a will of her lands and goods, with or without her husband's consent, stat. 32 and 33 H. 8. 4 Rep. 51. Bro. Testament, 13. But of the goods and chattels she has, as executrix to any other, she may make an executor without her husband's consent; 12 H. 7. c. 24. Perk. sect. 502. Fitz. Exec. 40.

A mad or lunatic person, during the time of his insanity of mind, cannot make a will; but such a one as hath his lucida intervalla, clear or calm intermissions, may, during the time of such quietness and freedom of mind, make his will, and it will be good; Swinb. 11. s. 3. So an ideot, or one who cannot number twenty, or tell what age he is, or the like, cannot make a will or dispose of his lands or goods; an old man likewise, who, by reason of his great age, is childish again, or so forgetful that he forgets his own name, cannot make a will. Id. ibid. par. 11. s. 1. 6 Rep. 23. Marquis of Winchester's case. So also it seems a drunken man, who is so excessively drunk that he is deprived of the use of his reason and understanding, during that time may not make a will. Swinb. part 11. s. 1. and sect. 6.

A man who is both deaf and dumb, and is so by nature, cannot make a will; but a man who is so by accident, may by writing or signs make a will. Id. part 11. s. 1. and 10. And so also may a man that is blind. Id. part 1. s. 1. and 11. But an alien enemy, persons convicted and attainted, and recusants convict, cannot make a testament of lands or goods. Wood's Inst. 335.

A traitor attainted of treason or felony, can make no will. Swinb. part 11. s. 12. 135. and 6 Edw. 6. c. 11. s. 9. And if a man kill himself, his will as to his goods and chattels is void, although as to his lands it is good. Plowd. 261. Hales v. Pettit.

A man likewise, who is outlawed in a personal action, cannot make a will of his goods and chattels, so long as the outlawry continues in force, but of lands he may make a will. Swinb. part 11. s. 21.

The Stat. 32 H. 8. cap. 1. usually called the statute of wills, enacts, "That every person having manors, lands, &c. shall have power to give, dispose, will, and devise by will, in writing or otherwise, by act executed in his life-time, all his said manors, &c. any law, statute, &c. to the contrary notwithstanding."

And by the statute of frauds and perjuries, 29 Car. 2. c. 3. s. 5. All devises and bequests of any lands or tenements deviseable by the statute of wills, or by any particular custom, shall be in writing, and signed by the party devising the same, or some other person in his presence, and by his express directions, and shall be attested and subscribed in the presence of the said devisor by three or four credible witnesses, or else they shall be utterly void and of none effect.

And by sect. 6. "No devise in writing of lands, tenements or hereditaments, or any clause thereof, shall be revocable other than by some other will or codicil in writing, or other writing declaring the same, or by burning, cancelling, tearing or obliterating the same by the testator himself, or in his presence, and by his directions and consent: but all such devises and bequests shall remain in force until the same be burnt, &c. in manner aforesaid, or unless the same be altered by some other will or codicil in writing, or other writing of the devisor, signed in presence of three witnesses, declaring the same."

Therefore if a will be of lands or tenements, it must be in writing, and it must be committed to writing at the time of the making thereof; and it is not sufficient that it be put in writing after the death of the testator, being first made by word of mouth only, for then it is but a nuncupative will. See Wood, part 1. 798. Dyer 72. Plowd. 345.

And by 39 & 40 Geo. 3. c. 98. No person by deed or will shall settle, or dispose of any real or personal property in such manner that the rents or produce shall be accumulated for a longer time than the life of the settler or divisor, or 21 years after his decease, or during the minority of any party living at his decease, or the minorities of persons beneficially entitled: any other division shall be void, and the rents go to such persons as would be entitled thereto, if such accumulation had not been directed, s. 1. But nothing herein is to extend to any provision for payment of debts, or for raising portions for children, or touching the produce of timber, s. 2, 3. These provisions take effect on all wills made before 28th July 1800.

And by 38 Geo. 3. c. 87. If at the expiration of twelvemonths after the testator's decease, the executor shall not be within the jurisdiction of the King's courts, a creditor may obtain a special administration, s. 1. A court of equity also, pending a suit, may appoint a person to collect debts, s. 4. and executors returning are to be made parties to the suit, s. 5. Also when an infant is sole executor, administration with will annexed shall be granted to the guardian till the infant is 21, s. 6.

Devisees, legatees, and creditors, are now made competent witnesses to wills, for by the act of the 25 Geo. 2. c. 6. for avoiding and putting an end to certain doubts and questions, relating to the attestation of wills and codicils, it is enacted, That if any person shall attest the execution of any will or codicil, to whom any beneficial devise, legacy, estate, interest, gift or appointment of, or affecting any real or personal estate, except charges on lands, for payment of any debt which shall be thereby made, such devise, &c. or appointment, shall, so far only as concerns such persons attesting the execution of such will or codicil, be utterly null and void; and such person shall be admitted as a witness to the execution of such will or codicil; and in case by any will or codicil, any lands shall be charged with debts, and any creditor whose debt is so charged, hath attested the execution, such creditor shall be admitted as a witness to the execution of the said will or codicil.

Codicils.] The form of a codicil is not material, so that it be expressed to be, or be clearly intended as an addition to the testator's will; and may be used for the purpose of revoking, republishing, adding to, or otherwise varying the dispositions made by such will, or by substituting new executors in the room of any who may have died, &c. since the publication of the will. It is not, however, correct to appoint them originally by this instrument when none have been named in the will.

Of nuncupative Wills.—By the stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. s. 19. For the preventing fraudulent practices, it is enacted, "That no nuncupative will shall be good where the estate thereby bequeathed shall exceed the value of 30 pounds, that is not proved by the oaths of three witnesses, at the least, that were present at the making thereof, and bid by the testator to bear witness that such was his will, or to that effect." (And by stat. 4 Ann. c. 16. s. 14. it is declared, "That all such witnesses as are and ought to be allowed to be good witnesses upon trial at law by the laws and customs of this realm, shall be deemed good witnesses to prove any nuncupative will, or any thing relating thereto.) Nor unless such nuncupative will were made in the time of the last sickness of the deceased, and in the habitation where he or she has been resident for ten days next before making of such will, except where such person was surprised or taken sick, being from his own home, and died before he returned. That after six months passed after the speaking of the testamentary words, no testimony shall be received to prove any will nuncupative, except the said testimony, or the substance thereof, were committed to writing within six days after the making of the said will. That no letters testamentary, or probate of any nuncupative will, shall pass the seal of any court, till fourteen days, at the least, after the decease of the testator be fully expired, nor shall any nuncupative will be at any time received to be proved, unless process have first issued to call in the widow, or the next of kindred to the deceased, to the end they may contest the same, if they please. That no will in writing concerning any goods or chattels, or personal estate, shall be repealed; nor shall any clause, devise, or bequest therein, be altered or changed by any words, or will by word of mouth only, except the same be in the life of the testator committed to writing, and after the writing thereof read to the testator, and allowed by him, and proved to be so done by three witnesses at the least."

"Provided that any soldier in actual military service, or any mariner or seaman being at sea, may dispose of his moveables, wages, and personal estate, as before the making of this act."

(Revocation.)—As to what acts of a testator, after the publication of his will, will operate as a revocation of it, it is to be observed:

1. Any material alteration in the devised estate subsequent to the devise, will operate as a revocation of such devise; therefore a recovery suffered of the devised estate by a tenant in tail, or a feoffment by a tenant in fee, will be a revocation of a previous devise of them, although they be by the same instrument limited to the use of the devisor in fee; and the assurance be made for a particular purpose not inconsistent with the devise, as if it be done for the express purpose of confirming a previous will: for the devisor being divested of the estate by the conveyance, the will has lost the subject of its operation; and the estate although immediately taken back by the same conveyance, is a new estate acquired subsequently to the will.

2. The partition of an estate holden in joint tenantry, coparcenary, or in common, is holden not to be a revocation, unless upon such partition the testator take his part for a different estate from that which he held before: but a very small difference in the two estates will cause a revocation, as if it were before holden in fee simple, and it be taken in the partition to such uses as the owner shall appoint, or the like.

3. The surrender of an old lease for the purpose of a renewal, will be a revocation of a previous will, whether the lease be a freehold or chattel interest, unless in the case of chattel interest, and then the words in the will referring to such interest as the testator may have at the time of his decease must take effect.

4. The alteration of a will, will also be a revocation of a will pro tanto, that is, to the extent of the alteration: and will, in some cases, vary the interests of the other devisees.

5. Although the estate still remains in the devisor, yet if he have bound himself by contract for a valuable consideration to convey it, such contract will operate as a revocation of a previous devise, and that although the contract should not be carried into effect for want of title.

6. If the conveyance be by way of mortgage only, for securing the payment of a debt, it will in law be considered as a revocation; but in equity where a mortgage is reckoned merely as a pledge or deposit of the estate, it will be a revocation pro tanto only, that is, to the extent of the charge.

7. A commission of bankrupt operates as such revocation, and so will the assignment made of his effects by the commissioners.

8. Any material alteration in the family situation of the testator, subsequent to his will, as the marriage and birth of a child, will also operate as a revocation: but both these circumstances must actually occur in order to render a previous will void; as marriage alone, without having a child either in the life-time of the testator, or posthumously, will not effect a revocation; unless in the case of a woman, whose marriage alone will be a suspension and revocation of her will during the life-time of her husband; but in case of her surviving him it has been holden (Plow. Com. 343.) that it will revive: but this does not seem to be clearly settled.

9. The making an advancement for a child by the parent subsequent to his will, will also be considered prima facie as an ademption, that is, a revocation of his legacy.

WIN, (Sax.) In the beginning or ending of the names of places, signifies that some battle was fought, and victory gained there. Cowell. Blount.

WINCHES. Engines to draw barges against the stream of a river. 21 Jac. 1. cap. 32.

WINCHESTER MEASURE. A standard originally kept at Winchester: and we find in the laws of King Edgar, near a century before the conquest, an injunction that one measure, which was kept at Winchester, should be observed throughout the realm. 1 Black. Com. 274, 275.

WINDAS, or WINDLASS, Corruptly wanlass, is a term for hunting of deer in forests to a stand, &c. See Wanlass.

WIND-MILL. A man may not erect a wind-mill within any forest, because it frights deer, and draws company to the disquiet of the game. W. Jones Rep. 293.

WINTER-HEYNING, Is a season between the eleventh day of November and the three and twentieth day of April; which is excepted from the liberty of commoning in the Forest of Dean, &c. Stat. 20 Car. 2. cap. 3.

WIRE-DRAWERS. The silver wire to be drawn for silver thread, is to hold eleven ounces and fifteen penny weights, and all silver to be gilt and used in the wire-drawers trade, shall hold eleven ounces and eight penny weights of fine silver on the pound weight troy; and four penny weights and four grains of gold, to be laid upon each pound of silver, on forfeiture of 5*s.* for every ounce made otherwise. 15 Geo. 2. cap. 20.

WISTA, A measure of land among the Saxons; being the quantity of half a hide; and the hide 120 acres.—Octo virgatæ unam hidam faciant; wista vero quatuor virgatis constat. Mon. Ang. Tom. 1. p. 133. Cowell.

WITAM, Secundum witam jurare, Was for a person to purge himself by the oaths of so many witnesses, as the offence required. Leg. Ine, cap. 63. Cowell.

WITCHCRAFT, Using of, was felony by Stat. 1 Jac. 1. cap. 12. repealed by 9 Geo. 2. c. 5. See Fortune-tellers and Vagrants.

WITE, A Saxon word, used for punishment; a pain, penalty, mulct, &c. And witefree is a term of privilege or immunity from fines and amercements. Sax. Dict. From hence come the words Bloodwite, Lecherwite, &c. Cowell. Blount.

WITENA-GEMOT, or WITTENA-GEMOT, (Sax. Conventus sapientum) Was a convention or assembly of great men to advise and assist the king, answerable to our parliament, in the time of the Saxons; or, rather an assembly of the whole nation. See Diets, and Squire's Anglo-Saxon Government 165, &c. Cowell, Blount.

WITENE, Were the chief of the Saxon Lords or Thanes, their nobles and wise men. Sax. Dict.

WITERDEN. A taxation of the West Saxons, imposed by the public council of the kingdom. Chart. Ethelwolf. Reg. Anno 855.

WITHDRAWING FROM ALLEGIANCE. By 3 Jac. 1. c. 4. if any natural born subject be withdrawn from his allegiance, and reconciled to the Pope or See of Rome, or any other prince or state, both he and all such as procure such reconciliation shall incur the guilt of high treason.

WITHERNAM, (From the Sax. Wither, i. e. altera, or, as some say, contra, and Nam, captio) Is where a distress is driven out of the county, and the sheriff upon a replevin cannot make deliverance to the party distrained: in this case the writ of withernam is directed to the sheriff, for the taking as many of his beasts or goods, who did thus unlawfully distrain, into his keeping, till the party make deliverance of the first distress, &c. It is a taking or reprisal of other cattle or goods, in lieu of those that were formerly unjustly taken and eloined, or otherwise withholden. F. N. B. 68, 69. 2 Inst. 140. Stat. West. 2. 13 Ed. 1. c. 2.

WITHERSAKE, An apostate, or perfidious renegade. Leg. Canut. cap. 27. Cowell. Blount.

WITNESS, (Testis) Is one that gives evidence in a cause; an indifferent person to each party, sworn to speak the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth: and if he will be a gainer or loser by the suit, he shall not be sworn as a witness. 2 Lill. Abr. 760. But it is now declared by Stat. 46 Geo. 3. c. 37. that a witness cannot by law refuse to answer on the ground of subjecting himself to a suit for debt.

WITTENA-GEMOTE. See Witenagemot, and Black. Com. 1 V. 148. 4 V. 406.

WOAD, A profitable herb much used for the dying of blue colours, mentioned in the Stat. 27 H. 8. cap. 2.

WOLD, (Sax.) Signifies a down, or open champaign ground, void of wood; as Bow in the Wolds, Cotswold in Gloucestershire, &c. Cowell. Blount.

WOLFESHEAD, or WOLFERHEPOD, (Sax.) Caput Lupinum, Was the condition of such as were outlawed in the time of the Saxons; who if they could not be taken alive to be brought to justice, might be slain, and their heads brought to the king; for they were no more accounted of than a wolf's head, a beast so hurtful to man. Leg. Edw. Conf. Bract. lib. 3. Cowell. Blount.

WOMEN. A woman is capable of being a sexton, and of voting at an election for one. 2 Strange 1114. She is also liable to serve the offices of church-warden, overseer, or constable in her turn, for she may appoint a deputy. A bastard is within the statute of P. & M. against taking away young women. 2 Strange 1161. And by 30 Geo. 3. c. 47. Women convicted of high or petit treason are to be hanged; and women convicted of petit treason are liable to the same punishment as persons convicted of wilful murder under 25 Geo. 2.

WONG, A Saxon word for field.——Tres acras terræ jacentes in le wongs, i. e. in Campis opinor seminatibus. Spelm. Cowell. Blount.

WOOD. If any person purposely burn any pile of wood, or bark any trees, &c. the owner may recover treble damages for it in trespass. Stat. 37 Hen. 8. c. 6. None may destroy any woods, by turning them into tillage or pasture, &c. if two acres or more in quantity, on pain of 40*s.* an acre: and no person shall suffer his swine to go in a wood unringed, under penalties. Where there is wood or coppice in common, the lord may inclose a fourth part, &c. 35 H. 8. c. 17. 13 Eliz. c. 25. If coppice wood is felled at or under twenty-four years growth, there must be left twelve standils of oaks in every acre, or the like number of ash, elm, &c. on pain of forfeiting 3*s.* 3*d.* for every standil wanting; and they are not to be cut down till ten inches square within three foot of the ground, or until so many years after left, under the penalty of 6*s.* 8*d.* &c. Stat. 35 H. 8. cap. 17. All woods or coppices felled at fourteen years growth, shall be preserved from destruction for eight years; and no cattle be put into the ground from the time of felling, till five years afterwards, by 13 Eliz. cap. 25. The statutes 43 Eliz. cap. 7. and 15 Car. 2. cap. 2. provide against woodstealing, ordaining recompence to be made, and inflicting a forfeiture of 10*s.* &c. Burning woods, or underwood, is made felony: and persons maliciously cutting or spoiling timber-trees, fruit-trees, &c. are to be sent to the house of correction for three months, and whipt once a month, by 1 Geo. 1. c. 48. Also where persons destroy trees, woods, or break open hedges, the owners shall have satisfaction from the inhabitants of the place, as for dikes overthrown in the night, provided by 13 Ed. 1. under approvement: if the offenders be not convicted in six months, &c. 6 Geo. 1. cap. 16. It has been adjudged, that if A. plants a tree upon his own ground, and in growing its roots extend into the land of B. adjoining, they are tenants in common of this tree: but if all the root grows in the ground of A. though the boughs overshadow B.'s land, yet the branches follow the root, and the property of the whole is in A. 1 Ld. Raym. 737.

WOOD-CORN, A certain quantity of grain paid by the tenant of some manors to the lord, for the liberty to pick up dead or broken wood. Cartular. Burgi S. Petri MS. 142. Cowell. Blount.

WOOD-GELD, Is taken to be the cutting of wood within the forest, or rather money paid for the same to the foresters; or it signifies to be free from payment of money, for taking wood in any forest. Cromp. Juris. 157. Co. Litt. 233.

WOODMEN, Seem to be those in forests, that have their charge particularly to look to the king's woods there. Cromp. Juris. 146. Cowell. Blount.

WOODMOTE, Is the old name of that court of the forest which is now called the Court of Attachments; and was wont to be held at the will of the chief officers of the forest, without any certain time, till since the statute of Charta de Foresta. Manwood, cap. 22. pag. 207. 3 Black. Com. 71.

WOOD-PLEA-COURT, A court held twice in the year in the forest of Clun in Shropshire, for determining all matters of wood and agistments there. Cowell. Blount.

WOODWARD, Is an officer of the forest, whose office consists in looking after the woods, and vert and venison, and presenting offences relating to the same, &c. And woodwards may not walk with bow and shafts, but with forest bills. Cromp. Juris. 201. Manwood, par. 1. 189.

WOOL, Being a staple commodity of the greatest value in this kingdom, there have been divers statutes made from time to time, to preserve the same entirely to ourselves, and to prevent its being transported to other nations; a matter of sound policy, as the process through which it passes in various ways, in the manufacturing of the different commodities of which wool is the chief substance, gives employment not only to the poor, but to a very numerous and meritorious class of artizans, namely, those who have been wholly brought up in the manufacturing of woollen goods.

By the stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. cap. 40. entries are to be made of wool shorn, and wool is not to be carried near the sea-coasts, but between sun-rising and sun-setting, &c. Also by 28 Geo. 3. c. 28. other provisions are made in respect of this article.

WOOL-DRIVERS, Are such as buy wool in the country of the sheep owners, and carry it on horseback to the clothiers, or to market-towns, to sell again. 2 & 3 P. & M. c. 13.

WOOLFERHEFOD. See Woolfeshead.

WOOL-KEY, Its ground, wharf and key, in the parish of All-saints, Barking, in London, vested in trustees for his majesty, his heirs and successors, &c. 8 G. 1. c. 31.

WOOLLEN, BURIAL IN. By 54 Geo. 3. c. 108. the acts 30 Car. 2. c. 3. and 32 Car. 2. c. 1. for burying in woollen are repealed. See Burials.

WOOLLEN-MANUFACTURES. For the protection of this branch of trade, there are numerous statutes, the provisions of which are to be found under the title Manufactures, section Woollen.

WOOL-STAPLE, Mentioned in stat. 51 H. 3. stat. 5. is, That city or town where wool was sold. See Staple.

WOOLWINDERS, Those that wind up every fleece of wool, intended to be packed and sold by weight, into a kind of bundle.

WORCESTERS, and worsted cloths, are mentioned in many of our old statutes, as 17 R. 2. 7 E. 4. 14 & 15 Hen. 6. c. 3. &c. See Abr. Stat.

WORDS, Which may be taken or interpreted by law in a general or common sense, ought not to receive a strained or unusual construction: and ambiguous words are to be construed so as to make them stand with law and equity; and not to be wrested to do wrong. And words which are in themselves uncertain, may be made certain by subsequent or following words. A word which is written short or abbreviated, is not good without a dash to distinguish it: and senseless words are void and idle; though they shall not hurt where it is good without them. Nor shall words in deeds that are needless, impeach a clause certain and perfect without such words. 2 Lill. Abr. 711, 712, 713, 714. Hob. 313. Vide Scilicet.

WORDS; TREASONABLE. It seems clearly to be agreed, that by the common law, and the statute of Edward 3, words spoken amount only to a high misdemeanor, and no treason. 1 Black. Com. 80.

WORK-HOUSES, Are places erected in most parishes for the reception and employment of the poor, and the most considerable work-house in the city of London, is that in Bishopsgate-street; wherein some hundreds of idle persons are constantly employed in beating hemp, &c. and a great many poor children maintained and educated. Stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2.

WORTHIEST OF BLOOD. An expression of the lawyers, signifying the preference given in descents, to sons before daughters. Ibid.

WORTHINE OF LAND, Is a certain quantity of ground, so called in the manor of Kingsland in the county of Hereford: and in some places the tenants are called worthies. Consuetud. Maner. de Hedenham in Com. Bucks. 18 Edw. 3. Cowell. Blount.

WRECK, (Lat. Wreccum Maris, Fr. Wreck de Mer, sometimes writ Wreche, Werec, and Seap-werpe, quasi Sea-up-werp, i. e. Ejectus Maris) signifies in our law such goods as, after a ship-wreck, are cast upon the land by the sea, and left there within some county; for they are not wrecks so long as they remain at sea, in the jurisdiction of the Admiralty. 2 Inst. 167. Where a ship perisheth on the sea, and no man escapes alive out of it, this is called wreck: and the goods in the ship being brought to land by the waves, belong to the king by his prerogative, or to the lord of the manor. 5 Rep. 106. And by the Stat. of Westm. 1. 3 Ed. 1. cap. 4. it is enacted, that when a man or any living creature, escapes alive out of a ship cast away, whereby the owner of the goods may be known, the ship or goods shall not be wreck; but the same shall be kept a year and a day by the sheriff, to be restored to any person that can prove a property in the goods within that time; and if no body comes, then the same shall be forfeited as wreck. The year and day shall be accounted from the seizure; and if the owner of the goods dies within the year, his executors or administrators may make proof: and when the goods are bona peritura, the sheriff may sell them within the year; so as he disposes of them to the best advantage, and accounts for them, &c. 2 Inst. 167. 5 Rep. 106. Wood's Inst. 214.

And by 48 Geo. 3. c. 75. when dead bodies shall be cast on shore from wrecks, the churchwardens and overseers of the poor shall cause the same to be removed and interred in a decent manner, in the churchyard of the parish, by the minister, who is to perform the funeral service at the same fees as paupers. There are also other provisions contained in the act for the preservation of wrecked goods, which are too long to be minutely detailed in this work.

WRECKFREE, Is to be exempt from the forfeiture of ship-wrecked goods and vessels; which K. Edw. 1. by charter granted to the Barons of the Cinque Ports. Placit. temp. Ed. 1.

WRIT, (Breve in Sax. Writan, i. e. Scribere) In general is the King's precept, in writing under seal, issuing out of some court to the sheriff, or other person, and commanding something to be done touching a suit or action, or giving commission to have it done. Terms de Ley. 1 Inst. 73.

YEONOMUS, Oeconomus; an advocate, patron, or defender. Vit. Abbat. S. Albani. Cowell. Blount.

YEAR, (Annus) In the full extent of the word, contains a system or cycle of several months, usually twelve; and is the time wherein the sun goes round his compass through the twelve signs, viz. three hundred and sixty-five days, and about six hours. A year is twelve months, as divided by Julius Cæsar: and the church begins the year on the first day of January, called New-year's day; but the civil account formerly, not till March the 25th. It appears by ancient grants and charters, that our ancestors began the year at Christmas, which was observed here till the time of William I. commonly called the Conqueror; but afterwards, for some time the year of our Lord was seldom mentioned in grants, only the year of the reign of the King. Mon. Ang. tom. 1. p. 62.

There is a year of the world, and a year of Christ: and besides the solar year, the lunar year, being the time in which any of the celestial bodies finish their course; and thirty days, by which the Egyptians reckoned. Year is also taken for time in general; and the age of man. Litt.

YEAR AND DAY, (Annus & Dies) Is a time that determines a right, or works a prescription in many cases by law; as in case of an estray, if the owner challenge it not within that time, it belongs to the lord; so of a wreck, &c. A year and a day is given to prosecute appeals; and for actions in a writ of right, &c. after entry or claim, to avoid a fine: and if a person wounded die in a year and day, it makes the offender guilty of murder, &c. 3 Inst. 53. 6 Rep. 107.

YEAR, DAY AND WASTE, (Annus, Dies et Vastum) Is a part of the King's prerogative, whereby he hath the profits of lands and tenements for a year and a day of those that are attained of petit treason or felony, whosoever is lord of the manor whereto the lands or tenements do belong; and the King may cause waste to be made on the tenements, by destroying the houses, ploughing up the meadows and pastures, rooting up the woods, &c. except the lord of the fee agree with him for the redemption of such waste; afterwards restoring it to the lord of the fee. Staundf. Prærog. 44.

YEAR-BOOKS. Reports in a regular series from the reign of King Ed. 2. inclusive, to the time of Hen. 8. which were taken by the prothonotaries, or chief scribes of the court, at the expence of the crown, and published annually, whence they are known under the denomination of the year-books. 1 Black. Com. 71, 72.

YEARS, Estates for. An estate for years is a contract, for the possession of lands or tenements, for some determinate period: and it happens where a man letteth them to another, for the term of a certain number of years, agreed between the lessor and lessee, and the lessee enters thereon. If the lease be but for half a year, or a quarter, or any less time, this lessee is respected as a tenant for years, and is styled so in some legal proceedings. 2 Black. Com. 140.

YEMAN, or YEOMAN, or YOMAN, A derivative of the Saxon, geman, i. e. communis. These Camd. in his Brit. pag. 105. placeth next in order to gentlemen, calling them ingenuos, whose opinion the statute affirms, Anno 6 Rich. 2. cap. 4. and 20 Rich. 2. cap. 2. Sir Thomas Smith in his Repubi. Anglorum, lib. 1. c. 23. calls him a yeoman, whom our law calls legalem hominem, which (says he) is in the English a free-born man, that may dispend of his own free-land in yearly revenues to the sum of forty shillings sterling. Verstegan in his Restitution of Decayed Intelligence, cap. 10. writes, that gemen among the ancient Teutonicks, and gemein among the modern, signifies as much as common, and the letter g being turned into y, is written yemen, which therefore signifies a commoner. Yeoman also signifies an officer in the king's house, in the middle place between the sergeant and the groom, as yeoman of the chandry, yeoman of the scullery, 33 H. 8. cap. 12. yeoman of the crown, 3 E. 4. 5. The word youngmen is used for yeomen, in the statute 33 H. 8. cap. 10. Cowell. 1 Black. Com. 406.

YEVEN, or YEOVEN, (as we use at the end of indentures and other instruments, yeoven, the day and year first above written) Is derived from the Saxon, ceorian, i. e. dare, and is the same with given. So Dictum de Kenelworth concludes with—Yeoven, and proclaimed in the castle of Kenelworth the day before the calends of Nov. anno 1256. Cowell.

YEW, Is derived from the Greek Ἰὸς, to hurt, and probably because before the invention of guns our ancestors made bows with this wood, with which they annoyed their enemies, and therefore they took care to plant the trees in the churchyards, where they might be often seen and preserved by the people. Minshew. Cowell. Blount.

YIELDING AND PAYING, (Reddendo et Solvendo) Comes from the Sax. Guldan et Gildan; and in Domesday, Gildare is frequently used for Solvere, Reddere, the Sax. G. being often turned into Y. and the words yielding and paying in leases for years, are words of covenant.

YINGMAN, Mentioned in the laws of King Hen. 1. c. 15. Spelman thinks may be a mistake for Inglishman, or as we now say Englishman: but perhaps the yingmen were rather youngmen, printed for yeomen and yemen, in Stat. 33 H. 8. cap. 10. Cowell.

YOKELET, (Sax. Joecelet) Is a little farm, &c. in some parts of Kent, so called from its requiring but a yoke of oxen to till it. Sax. Dict. Cowell.

YORK AND YORKSHIRE. Persons inhabiting, or those who have any goods within the province of York, may by will dispose of all their personal estate, &c. 4 & 5 W. & M. cap. 2. And a registry of deeds, conveyances, and wills, &c. of lands, is ordained in the West-Riding of Yorkshire, by 2 Ann. c. 4. And so in the East and North-Ridings, by subsequent acts.

YORK, Custom of. In the city of London, and province of York, the effects of an intestate after payment of his debts, are in general divided, according to the ancient universal doctrine of the pars rationabilis. If the deceased leaves a widow and children, his substance, deducting the widow's apparel and furniture of her bedchamber, which in London is called the widow's chamber, is divided into three parts; one of which belongs to the widow, another to the children, and the third to the administrator: if only a widow, or only children, they shall respectively, in either case, take one moiety, and the administrator the other; if neither widow nor child, the administrator shall have the whole. And this portion or dead-man's part the administrator was wont to apply to his own use, until the Stat. 1 Jac. 2. c. 17. declared that the same should be subject to the statutes of distribution. So that if a man dies worth 1800*l.* leaving a widow and two children, the estate shall be divided into eighteen parts; whereof the widow shall have eight, six by the custom, and two by the statute; and each of the children five, three by the custom, and two by the statute: if he leaves a widow and one child, they shall each have a moiety of the whole, or nine such eigh-tuen parts, six by the custom; and three by the statute: if he leaves a widow and no child, the widow shall have three-fourths of the whole, two by the custom, and one by the statute; and the remaining fourth shall go by the statute to the next of kin. If the wife be provided for by a jointure before marriage, in bar of her customary part, it puts her in a state of non-entity, with regard to the custom only; but she shall be entitled to her share of the dead-man's part, under the statute of distributions, unless barred by special agreement. And if any of the children are advanced by the father in his life-time, with any sum of money, (not amounting to their full proportionable part) they shall bring that portion into hotchpot with the rest of the brothers and sisters, (but not with the widow,) before they are entitled to any benefit under the custom; but if they are fully advanced, the custom entitles them to no farther dividend. In the province of York, the heir at common law, who inherits any lands in fee or in tail, is excluded from any filial portion, or reasonable part. 2 Black. Com. 518, 519.

YPSIVREMETA, In Latin Altitonans, signifies God; the thunderer. Cowell. Blount.

YVERNAGIUM, (From the French Hyvernee, that is, the winter season) was anciently used for the winter seedness, or season for sowing of corn. Cowell. See Hybernagium.

YULE. In the North of England, the country people call the feast of the nativity of our Lord by the name of Yule; which is the proper Scotch word for Christmas; and the sports used at Christmas here, called Christmas Gambols, in Scotland they term Yule Games. Cowell. Blount.
