An action of escape will not lie against the executor or administrator of a sheriff, &c. for an escape, because it was personal, and actio personalis moritur cum persona: but it is otherwise if there be a judgment recovered against the sheriff before he died. Dyer 322.

If a sheriff suffer a prisoner voluntarily to go at large, the sheriff cannot retake him even upon fresh suit; and if he does, the prisoner may have an action of trespass against him. Car. 212. 3 Rep. 32, but his creditors may. 1 Vent. 4. 269. 3 Salk. 160. 8 and 9 Will. 3, c. 27.

However if the plaintiff himself permit the prisoner to escape he cannot afterwards retake him; and if the body and goods, &c. of a conusor are taken in execution upon a statute-merchant, if the conusee agree that he shall go at large, it is a discharge of the whole execution, and the conusor shall have the lands again: it is otherwise if the sheriff had permitted him to escape; the execution on the lands would not be discharged. 2 Nels. Abr. 737.

If the marshal of the King's Bench, or warden of the Fleet, or any other who has the keeping of prisons in fee, suffer a voluntary escape, it is a forfeiture of the office. 3 Mod. 146. Carter 212. And there is likewise a further penalty of 500*l.* added by 8 and 9 W. 3, c. 27.

There is this difference between an escape on mesne process and execution; if the sheriff arrest a person on mesne process, and he is rescued by J. S. he may return the rescue, and such return is good, and no action of escape lies against him after such return; but the court will issue process against such rescuer, or fine him; for in this case, though the sheriff may, yet he is not obliged to raise the posse comitatus. 1 Rol. Abr. 807. 1 Jon. 207. 1 Rol. Rep. 388. 3 Lev. 46.

But after judgment on a capias ad satisfaciendum the sheriff cannot return a rescue, for in such case the sheriff is obliged to raise the posse comitatus, if needful, and therefore, if he return a rescue, an action of escape lies, or a new capias, for the return of an ineffectual execution is as none. 1 Rol. Abr. 807. Cro. Car. 240. 255. 8 Co. 42. See Ni. Pri. 59, 60, and 6 Rep. 51. Cro. Eliz. 868.

If the prison takes fire, by means whereof the prisoners escape, this shall excuse the sheriff, and he may well plead it. 1 Rol. Abr. 808.

So if the prison is broke by the king's enemies, this shall excuse the sheriff, for he can have no remedy over against them. 4 Co. 84. 1 Rol. Abr. 808.

But if the prison was broke by rebels and traitors, the king's subjects, this shall not excuse him, for he may have his remedy over against these. Ibid. †

And by the 8 and 9 W. 3, cap. 27, no retaking on fresh pursuit shall be given in evidence unless the same be specially pleaded, and oath made that the prisoner did, without his consent, privity, or knowledge, make such escape, which, if false, the defendant shall forfeit 500*l.* sec. 6.

Escape in criminal cases.] An escape of a person arrested upon criminal process, by eluding the vigilance of his keepers, before he is put in hold, is an offence against public justice, and the party himself is punishable by fine and imprisonment. 2 Hawk. P. C. 122. But the officer permitting such escape, either by negligence or connivance, is much more culpable than the prisoner; the natural desire of liberty pleading strongly in his behalf, though he ought in strictness of law to submit himself quietly to custody till cleared by the due course of law. 4 Black. 129. Officers, therefore, who after arrest negligently permit a felon to escape are also punishable by fine. 1 Hale P. C. 600. But voluntary escapes by consent and connivance of the officer, are a much more serious offence; for it is generally agreed that such escapes amount to the same kind of offence, and are punishable in the same degree, as the offence of which the prisoner is guilty, and for which he is in custody, whether treason, felony, or trespass; and this whether he were actually committed to gaol, or only under a bare arrest. 1 Hale P. C. 590. 2 Hawk. P. C. 134. But the officer cannot be thus punished till the original offender hath actually received judgment, or been attainted upon verdict, confession, or outlawry, of the crime for which he was so committed or arrested, otherwise it might happen that the officer might be punished for treason or felony, and the person arrested and escaping might turn out to be an innocent man. 2 Black. 129. But before the conviction of the principal party the officer thus neglecting his duty may be fined and imprisoned for a misdemeanor. 1 Hale's P. C. 588, 589. 2 Hawk. P. C. 134, 135.

† And upon this principle, after the Riots in the year 1780, it was found necessary to pass an act to indemnify the different gaolers from the escapes which were occasioned by the demolition of their prisons by the rioters.

And by 16 Geo. 2, c. 31, it is enacted, that "persons who any ways assist a prisoner, "committed for treason, or felony, to at- "tempt his escape from any gaol, shall be "adjudged guilty of felony, and be trans- "ported; and if the prisoner be committed "for any other crime, or upon process for "a debt of 100*l.* &c. the offenders are lia- "ble to fine and imprisonment.

"And where any person conveys any "arms, instrument or disguise, to a pri- "soner in gaol for felony, &c. or for his use, "in order to an escape, it is likewise felony "and transportation. Also if one assist any "prisoner to escape from any constable, or "other officer or person in whose custody he "is by virtue of a warrant of commitment "for felony, it is declared to be the like "offence." Ibid.

ESCAPE - WARRANT. If any person committed or charged in custody in the King's Bench or Fleet prisons in execution, or on mesne process, &c. go at large, on oath thereof before a judge of the court where the action was brought, an escape-warrant shall be granted, directed to all sheriffs, &c. throughout England, to retake the prisoner, and commit him to gaol where taken, there to remain till the debt is satisfied: and a person may be taken on a Sunday upon an escape-warrant, stat. 1 Ann. c. 6. And the judges of the respective courts may grant warrants, upon oath to be made before persons commissioned by them to take affidavits in the country, (such oath being first filed) as they might do upon oath made before themselves. 5 Ann. c. 9.

ESCAPIO QUIETUS, he that by charter is quietus de escapio, is delivered from that punishment which by the laws of the forest lieth upon those whose beasts escape and are found within the land where forbidden. Cromp. Jurisd. 196. Cowel. Blount.

ESCAPIUM, what comes by chance or accident. Cowel. Blount.

ESCEPPA, a scepp, or measure of corn. Ibid.

ESCHEAT, (eschaeta, from the Fr. escheoir, i. e. accidere, chance or accident) signifies any lands or tenements that casually fall to a lord within his manor, by some unforeseen contingency, as by forfeiture, or by the death of his tenant, leaving no heir general or special; in which case the land naturally results back, by a kind of reversion, to the original grantor, or lord of the fee. Co. Lit. 23. F. N. B. 144.

But before the lord enters the homage jury of the lord's court ought to present it. 2 Inst. 36.

In our law escheats were of two sorts:

I. Regal—Those forfeitures which belong to our kings by the ancient rights and prerogative of the crown, upon the defect of heirs to succeed to the inheritance.

II. Feodal, which accrue to every lord of the fee, as well as the king, by reason of his seigniory, under the king's grant. 3 Inst. 111. 1 Black. 302.

The law of escheats is founded upon this single principle, that the blood of the person last seised in fee-simple is, by some means or other utterly extinct and gone: and since none can inherit his estate but such as are of his blood and consanguinity, it follows as a regular consequence that when such blood is extinct, the inheritance itself must fail; the land must become what the feodal writers denominate feodum apertum; and must result back again to the lord of the fee, by whom, or by those whose estate he hath, it was given. 2 Black. 244.

ESCHEATS are frequently divided into, 1st, those propter defectum sanguinis, and 2ndly, those propter delictum tenentis; the one sort, if the tenant dies without heirs; the other, if his blood be attainted. Co. Lit. 13. 90. But both these species may well be comprehended under the first denomination only; for he that is attainted suffers an extinction of his blood (see title ATTAINDER) as well as he that dies without relations; the inheritable quality is expunged in one instance, and expires in another. 2 Black. 245.

But a saving against the corruption of blood in a statute concerning FELONY doth by consequence save the land to the heir, so as not to escheat; because the escheat to the lord for felony is only pro defectu tenentis, occasioned by the corruption of blood; but a saving against the corruption of blood, in a statute concerning treason, does not save the land to the heir; for in treason the land goes to the king by way of immediate forfeiture. 3 Inst. 47. 1 Salk. 85.

The first three cases, wherein inheritable blood is wanting, are, 1st, where the tenant dies without any relations on the part of any of his ancestors: 2ndly, where he dies without any relations on the part of those ancestors from whom his estate descended. 3dly, where he dies without any relations of the whole blood. In two of these cases the blood of the first purchaser, is, certainly; in the other, it is, probably, at an end: and therefore in all of them the law directs that the land shall escheat to the lord of the fee; for the lord would be manifestly prejudiced, if contrary to the inherent condition, tacitly annexed to all feuds, any person should be suffered to succeed to the lands who is not of the blood of the first feudatory, to whom, for his personal merit, the estate is supposed to have been granted. Co. Lit. 7, 8. 2 Black. 248.

But if an estate be limited, or devised to a trustee, and the cestui que trust becomes attainted, or dies without heirs, in neither of such cases do the lands escheat; for there is no want of a legal tenant, and therefore the trustee shall hold them for his own benefit. Hard. 495, 496. 1 Rol. Abr. 816. (b.) pl. 2. Cro. Jac. 513. 1 Inst. 268. (b.) Burgess v. Wheate, 1 Black. Rep. 123. Williams v. Ld. Lonsdale. 3 Ves. jun. 752.

ESCHEAT, writ of. A writ of escheat is in the nature of a writ of right, and lies where the tenant having an estate in fee-simple in any lands or tenements holden of a superior lord, dies without heir; in which case the lord brings this writ against him that is in possession of the lands after the death of his tenant, and shall thereby recover the same in lieu of his services. F. N. B. 144. 3 Black. 194.

ESCHEATOR, (eschaetor) was an officer appointed by the lord treasurer, &c. in every county, to make inquests of titles by escheat; which inquests were to be taken by good and lawful men of the county, impanelled by the sheriff. 14 Ed. 3. c. 8. 34 Ed. 3. c. 13. 8 Hen. 6, c. 16.

ESCHECCUM, a jury or inquisition. Cowel. Blount.

ESCHIPARE, to build or equip. Ibid.

ESCROW, is a deed delivered to a third person, to hold until some future condition is performed by the grantee, and then to be delivered to him. 2 Rol. Abr. 25, 26 Co. Lit. 31. This delivery signifies, in fact, a delivery as a scroll or writing, which is not to take effect as a deed till the condition be performed, when it becomes a deed to all intents and purposes. Co. Lit. 36. 2 Black. 307.

ESCUAGE, (scutagium, from the Fr. escu, a shield) a kind of knight-service, called service of the shield, whereby the tenant was bound to follow his lord into the wars at his own charge. Also it has been sometimes taken as a compensation, taken for actual service. Co. Lit. 68. 2 Black. 74.

ESCURARE, to scour or cleanse. Cowel. Blount.

ESGLISE, (Fr.) a church, and a considerable title in the old law books. See Com. Dig. tit. Esglise.

ESINGÆ, the kings of Kent, so called from the first king Ockta, who was surnamed Esc: he was grandfather of king Ethelbert. Cowel. Blount.

ESKECTORES, (from the Fr. escher) robbers or destroyers of other men's lands and fortunes. Ibid.

ESKIPPER, (Fr.) to ship, and eskipped is used for shipped. Cromp. Jur. Cur.

ESKIPPESON, shipping or passage by sea. Ibid.

ESNECY, (æsnecia, dignitas primogeniti) is a private prerogative allowed to the eldest coparcener, where an estate is descended to daughters for want of heir male, to choose first after the inheritance is divided. Flata, lib. 5. c. 10. Ibid.

ESPERONS, spurs, esperons de or, gilt spurs. Cowel. Blount. 7 Co Rep. 13.

ESPERVARIUS, (Fr. espervier) a sparrow-hawk. Cowel. Blount.

ESPLEES, (expletiæ, from expleo) are the products or profits which ground or land yield, as the hay of the meadows, the herbage of the pasture, corn of the arable; rent and services, &c. And in all writs of right the demandant ought to allege in his count, that he or his ancestors took the esplees of the thing in demand; otherwise the pleading will not be good. Terms de Ley.

ESPOUSALS, (sponsalia) the contract or mutual promise between a man and a woman to marry each other. Wood's Inst. 57.

ESQUIRE, called escuier in French, and scutifer or armiger, (i. e. armour-bearer) in Latin, was originally he who, attending a knight in the time of war, did carry his shield. Cowel. Blount.

Esquires and gentlemen are confounded together by sir Ed. Coke, who observes that every esquire is a gentleman, and a gentleman is defined to be one qui arma gerit, who bears coat-armour, the grant of which adds gentility to a man's family; in like manner as civil nobility among the Romans was founded in the jus imaginum, or having the image of one ancestor at least who had borne some curule office: it is indeed a matter unsettled what constitutes the distinction, or who is a real esquire; for it is not an estate, however large, that confers this rank upon its owner. Camden, who was himself an herald, distinguishes them most accurately, and he reckons up four sorts of them; 1st, the eldest sons of knights, and their eldest sons in perpetual succession. 2ndly, the eldest sons of younger sons of peers, and their eldest sons in like perpetual succession; both which species of esquires sir Henry Spelman intitles armigeri natalitii. 3dly, esquires created by the king's letters patent, or other investiture (long since disused) and their eldest sons. 4thly, esquires by virtue of their offices, as sheriffs, justices of the peace, and others, who bear any office of trust under the crown, and who are styled esquires in the king's commission: to these may be added the esquires of the knights of the bath, each of whom constitutes three at his installation: and all foreign, nay Scotch and Irish peers, not sitting in parliament; for not only these, but the eldest sons of peers of Great Britain, though frequently titular lords by courtesy, are only esquires in the law, and must be so named in all legal proceedings. 2 Inst. 668. 667. 668. Spelm. 47. 1 Black. 405.

Barristers are also esquires; and the court of common pleas refused to hear an affidavit read because a barrister named in it was not called an esquire. 1 Wils. 244.

ESSENDI QUIETUM DE TOLONIO.

A writ to be quit of toll lies for citizens and burgesses of any city or town that by charter or prescription ought to be exempted from toll. Reg. Orig. 258.

ESLISORS, or ELISORS, are persons appointed by a court of law, to whom a writ of venire facias is directed to empanel a jury, on challenge to the sheriff and coroners, who return the writ in their own names, with a panel of the jurors names. 15 Ed. 4. 24. pl. 4. 3 Black. 355.

ESSOIN, (essonium, Fr. essoine) signifies an excuse for him that is summoned to appear and answer to an action, or to perform suit to a court baron, &c. by reason of sickness and infirmity, or other just cause of absence. It is a kind of imparlance, or craving of a longer time, that lies in real, personal, and mixed actions; and the plaintiff as well as the defendant shall be essoined to save his default. Co. Lit. 131.

ESSOIN DAY OF THE TERM. The first return in every term, is, properly speaking, the first day in that term; and thereon the courts are opened according to ancient form to take essoigns, or excuses for such as do not appear according to the summons of the writ: wherefore this is usually called the essoign day of the term. But as the person summoned hath three days grace beyond the return of the writ in which to make his appearance, and if he appears on the fourth day inclusive, the quarto die post, it is sufficient; the courts do not sit on the essoign day for dispatch of business. 3 Black. Com. 278.

ESSOIN DE MALO VILLÆ, when the defendant was in court the first day, but gone without pleading, and being afterwards surprised by sickness, &c. and could not attend, he might send two essoigners openly to protest in court that he was detained by sickness in such a vill. Cowel. Blount.

ESSOINS AND PROFFERS, words used in stat. 38 Hen. 8. c. 21. See Profer.

ESTABLISHMENT OF DOWER, is the assurance or settlement of dower made to the wife by the husband, on marriage. Britt. cap. 102, 103. Cowel. Blount.

ESTACHE, (from the Fr. eastacher, to fasten) a bridge, or stank of stone and timber. Cowel. Blount.

ESTANDARD, or STANDARD, an ensign for horsemen in war. Ibid.

ESTATE (Fr. estat. Lat. Jus). An estate in lands, tenements and hereditaments, signifies such interest as the tenant hath therein; so that if a man grants all his estate in D, to A, and his heirs, every thing that he can possibly grant shall pass thereby: it is called in Latin status, it signifying the condition or circumstance in which the owner stands with regard to his property. Co. Lit. 345. 2 Black. 103.

These estates are acquired divers ways, viz. by discent from a father to the son, &c. Conveyance, or grant from one man to another; by gift or purchase, deed or will: and a fee-simple is the largest estate that can be in law. 1 Lil. 541.

Estates personal include all sorts of things moveable, which may attend a man's person wherever he goes, and therefore, being only the objects of the law while they remain under the limits of its jurisdiction, and being also of a perishable quality are not esteemed of so high a nature, nor paid so much regard to by the law as things which are in their nature more permanent and immovable, as land and houses, and the profits issuing therefrom: and the property in chattels personal may be either in possession, which is where a man hath not only the right to enjoy, but hath the actual enjoyment of the thing: or else it is in action; as where a man hath only a bare right, and not any occupation or enjoyment; and as this bare right may be recovered by a suit or action at law, the thing so recoverable is called a thing, or chose in action: thus money due on a bond, bill, note, or simple contract, is a chose in action, because it remains to be recovered at law, and reduced into actual possession.

ESTOPPEL, (from the Fr. estouper, i. e. oppilare, obstipare) is an impediment or bar of an action arising from a man's own act, or where he is forbidden by law to speak against his own deed; for by his act or acceptance he may be estopped to allege or speak the truth. F. N. B. 142. Co. Lit. 352.

And therefore on a deed, all the parties thereto are at law estopped to say any thing against what is contained in it, and are not permitted to aver or prove any thing in contradiction to what they have once so solemnly and deliberately avowed. And parties and privies are bound by estoppel. Lit. 58. Co. Lit. 352. 4 Rep. 53.

ESTOVERS, (from estoffe, or estowver, Fr.) is generally used in the law for allowances of wood made to tenants, comprehending house-bote, hedge-bote, and plough-bote, for repairs, &c. Cowel. Blount.

These botes or estovers must be reasonable ones, and such any tenant or lessee may take off the land let or demised to him, without waiting for any leave, assignment, or appointment of the lessor, unless he be restrained by special covenant to the contrary. Co. Lit. 41.

This word hath also been taken for sustenance as Bracton uses it, i. e. for that sustenance, or allowance, which a man committed for felony is to have out of his lands or goods for himself and his family during his imprisonment. Bract. lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 18.

ESTOVERIIS HABENDIS, writ de. The alimony or allowance granted by the ecclesiastical court to the wife on a divorce a mensa et thoro, is also called her estovers, and if the husband refuses to pay, there is, besides the ordinary process of excommunication, a writ at common law de excommunicato capiendo, to recover it. 1 Lev. 6.

ESTRAY, (extrahura, from the old Fr. estrayeur) is any beast that is not wild, found within a manor or lordship, and owned by no man. In which case if it be cried and proclaimed according to law in the two next market-towns on two market-days, and is not claimed by the owner within a year and a day, it belongs to the lord of the liberty. Brit. cap. 17. If the beast stray to another lordship within the year, after it hath been an estray, the first lord cannot retake it, for, until the year and day be past, and proclamation made as aforesaid, he hath no property; and therefore the possession of the second lord is good against him. Wood's Inst. 213. Cro. Eliz. 716. If the cattle were never proclaimed, the owner may take them at any time. And where a beast is proclaimed as the law directs, if the owner claims it in a year and a day, he shall have it again; but must pay the lord for keeping. 1 Rol. Abr. 879. Finch. 177.

But if any other person finds and takes care of another's property, not being entitled to it as an estray, the owner may recover it or its value without being obliged to pay the expenses of its keeping. 2 Black. Rep. 1117. 2 Hen. Black. 254.

ESTREAT (extractum). If the condition of any recognizance be broken, such recognizance becomes forfeited, or absolute, and being estreated or extracted (taken out from among the other records) and sent up to the exchequer, the party and his sureties having now become the king's absolute debtors, are sued for the several sums in which they are respectively bound; estreat therefore signifies the true copy or note of such original record, and of the fines imposed on the rolls of court, which remain to be levied by exchequer process.

ESTRECIATUS, streightened. Cowel. Blount.

ESTREPE, (Fr. estropier) to make spoil in lands to the damage of another, as of the reversioner, &c. Ibid.

ESTREPEMENT, (estrepamentum) from the Fr. estrepier, mutilare, or from the Lat. extirpare) is an old French word, signifying the same as waste or extirpation, as where any spoil is made by tenant for life upon any lands or woods to the prejudice of him in reversion; and also signifies to make land barren by continual ploughing. Cowel. Blount. 3 Black. 225.

And the writ of estrepement lay after judgment obtained in a real action, and before possession was delivered by the sheriff, to stop any waste which the defendant might be tempted to commit in lands which were determined to be no longer his. But as in some cases the demandant may be justly apprehensive that the tenant may make waste or estrepement pending the suit, well knowing the weakness of his title; therefore the statute of Gloucester (6 Ed. 1. c. 13) gave another writ of estrepement pendente placito, commanding the sheriff firmly to inhibit the tenant, faciat vastum vel estrepementum pendente placito dicto indiscusso; and by virtue of either of these writs the sheriff may resist them that do, or offer to do, waste; and if otherwise he cannot prevent them, he may lawfully imprison the wasters, or make a warrant to others to imprison them, or, if necessity require, he may take the posse comitatus to his assistance. 2 Inst. 328. Reg. 47. 5 Rep. 115. 3 Black. 225, 6.

Besides this preventative redress at common law the courts of equity, upon a bill filed therein, complaining of intended, or actual waste and destruction, will immediately on the filing of such bill, and before the service of the defendant with a subpœna thereon, upon an ex parte motion, and affidavit verifying all the facts alleged in the bill, grant an injunction, or order, to restrain the defendant from committing waste until he shall have put in his answer, and the court shall thereupon make further order; and this is now become the most convenient mode of staying waste.

ETHELING or ÆTHELING, (Sax.) signifies noble, and among the English Saxons it was the title of the prince, or the king's eldest son. Cowel. Blount.

EVASION, (evasio) is a subtle endeavouring to set aside truth, or to escape the punishment of the law, which will not be endured. Thus if a person says to another that he will not strike him, but will give him a pot of ale to strike first and accordingly he strikes, the returning of it is punishable; and if the person first striking be killed, it is murder; for no man shall evade the justice of the law by such a pretence to cover his malice. 1 H. P. C. 81.

EVENINGS. Anciently signified the delivery at even or night of a certain portion of grass or corn, &c. to a customary tenant, who performed the service of cutting, mowing, or reaping for his lord, and which were given to him as a gratuity or encouragement. Kennet's Gloss.

EVESDROPPERS, are such persons as stand under the eves or walls, or windows of a house, by night or day, to hearken after news, and carry it to others, and thereby cause strife and contention in the neighbourhood. Terms de Ley. And by the stat. Westm. 1. c. 33, they may be punished, either in the court-leet by way of presentment, and fine, or at the quarter-sessions by indictment, and binding to good behaviour. Kitch. 11.

EVICTION, (from evince to overcome) is a recovery of land, &c. by law. 10 Rep. 128. And where lands taken on extent are evicted, or recovered by better title, the plaintiff shall have a new execution. 4 Rep. 66. If a widow is evicted of her dower or thirds she shall be endowed in the other lands of the heir. 2 Danv. Abr. 670. And if on an exchange of lands either party is evicted of the lands given in exchange, he may enter on his own lands. 4 Rep. 121.

EVIDENCE, (evidentia) is used in the law for some proof, by testimony of men on oath, or by writings or records, and it is called evidence because thereby the point in issue in a cause to be tried, is to be made evident to the jury. Co. Lit. 283. And it demonstrates, makes clear, or ascertains the truth of the very fact or point in issue, either on the one side or the other; and no evidence ought to be admitted to any other point. 3 Black. 367.

Therefore upon an action of debt, when the defendant denies his bond by the plea of non est factum, and the issue is, whether it be the defendant's deed or no; he cannot give a release of this bond in evidence, for that does not destroy the bond, and therefore does not prove the issue which he has chosen to rely upon, viz. that the bond has no existence. 3 Black. 367.

General maxims relating to evidence]. Evidence in the trial by jury is of two kinds, either that which is given in proof, or that which the jury may receive by their own private knowledge. The former, or proofs, (to which in common speech the name of evidence is usually confined) are either written, or parol, that is, by word of mouth. Written proofs, or evidence, are, 1. Records, and, 2. Antient deeds of thirty years standing, which prove themselves; but, 3. Modern deeds, and 4. Other writings, must be attested and verified by parol evidence of witnesses. And the one general rule that runs through all the doctrine of trials is this, that the best evidence the nature of the case will admit of shall always be required if possible to be had; but, if not possible, then the next best evidence that can be had shall be allowed. For if it be found that there is any better evidence existing than is produced, the very not producing it is a presumption that it would have detected some falsehood that at present is concealed. Thus, in order to prove a lease for years, nothing else shall be admitted but the very deed of lease itself, if in being; but if that be positively proved to be burnt or destroyed (not relying on any loose negative as that it cannot be found, or the like) then an attested copy may be produced; or parol evidence be given of its contents. So no evidence of a discourse with another will be admitted, but the man himself must be produced; yet in some cases (as in proof of any general customs, or matters of common tradition or repute) the court admit of hearsay evidence, or an account of what persons deceased have declared in their life-time: but such evidence will not be received of any particular facts. So too, books of account, or shop-books, are not allowed of themselves to be given in evidence, for the owner; but a servant who made the entry may have recourse to them to refresh his memory; and, if such servant (who was accustomed to make those entries) be dead, and his hand be proved, the book may be read in evidence: for, as tradesmen are often under a necessity of giving credit without any note or writing, this is therefore, when accompanied with such other collateral proofs of fairness and regularity, the best evidence that can then be produced. However, this dangerous species of evidence is not carried so far in England as abroad; where a man's own books of accounts, by a distortion of the civil law (which seems to have meant the same thing as is practised with us), with the suppletory oath of the merchant, amount at all times to full proof. But as this kind of evidence, even thus regulated, would be much too hard upon the buyer at any long distance of time, the statute 7 Jac. I. c. 12, (the penners of which seem to have imagined that the books of themselves were evidence at common law) confines this species of proof to such transactions as have happened within one year before the action brought; unless between merchant and merchant in the usual intercourse of trade. For accounts of so recent a date, if erroneous, may more easily be unravelled and adjusted. 3 Black. 368, 369.

With regard to parol evidence, or witnesses, it must first be remembered, that there is a process to bring them in by writ of subpœna ad testificandum; which commands them, laying aside all pretences and excuses, to appear at the trial on pain of 100*l.* to be forfeited to the king; to which the stat. 5 Eliz. c. 9, has added a penalty of 10*l.* to the party aggrieved, and damages equivalent to the loss sustained by want of his evidence. But no witness, unless his reasonable expences be tendered him, is bound to appear at all; nor, if he appears, is he bound to give evidence till such charges are actually paid him, except he resides within the bills of mortality, and is summoned to give evidence within the same. This compulsory process, to bring in unwilling witnesses, and the additional terrors of an attachment in case of disobedience, are of excellent use in the thorough investigation of truth: and upon the same principle, in the Athenian courts, the witnesses who were summoned to attend the trial had their choice of three things; either to swear to the truth of the fact in question, to deny or abjure it, or else to pay a fine of a thousand drachmas. 3 Black. 370.

All witnesses that have the use of their reason, are to be received and examined, except such as are infamous *, or such as are interested in the event of the cause †. All others are competent witnesses; though the jury, from other circumstances, will judge of their credibility. Infamous persons are such as may be challenged as jurors, propter delictum; and therefore never shall be admitted to give evidence to inform that jury, with whom they were too scandalous to associate. Interested witnesses may be examined upon a voir dire, if suspected to be secretly concerned in the event; or their interest may be proved in court. Which last is the only method of supporting an objection to the former class; for no man is to be examined to prove his own infamy. And no counsel, attorney, or other person, intrusted with the secrets of the cause by the party himself, shall be compelled, or perhaps allowed, to give evidence of such conversation or matters of privacy, as came to his knowledge by virtue of such trust and confidence: but he may be examined as to mere matters of fact, as the execution of a deed, or the like, which might have come to his knowledge without being intrusted in the cause. Ibid.

One witness (if credible) is sufficient evidence to a jury of any single fact; though undoubtedly the concurrence of two ‡ or more corroborates the proof. Yet our law considers that there are many transactions to which only one person is privy; and therefore does not always demand the testimony of two, as the civil law universally requires. "Unius responsio testis omnino non audiatur." To extricate itself out of which absurdity, the modern practice of the civil law courts has plunged itself into another. For as they do not allow a less number than two witnesses to be plena probatio, they call the testimony of one, though ever so clear and positive, semi plena probatio only, on which no sentence can be founded. To make up therefore the necessary complement of witnesses, when they have one only to any single fact, they admit the party himself (plaintiff or defendant) to be examined in his own behalf: and administer to him what is called the suppletory oath; and, if his evidence happens to be in his own favour, this immediately converts the half proof into a whole one. By this ingenious device, satisfying at once the forms of the Roman law, and acknowledging the superior reasonableness of the law of England: which permits one witness to be sufficient where no more are to be had; and, to avoid all temptations of perjury, lays it down as an invariable rule, that nemo testis esse debet in propria causa. 3 Black. 371.

Positive proof is always required, where from the nature of the case it appears it might possibly have been had. But, next to positive proof, circumstantial evidence, or the doctrine of presumption, must take place; for when the fact itself cannot be demonstratively evinced, that which comes nearest to the proof of the fact is the proof of such circumstances which either necessarily or usually, attend such facts; and these are called presumptions, which are only to be relied upon till the contrary be actually proved. Stabitur præsumptione donec probetur in contrarium. Violent presumption is many times equal to full proof: for there those circumstances appear, which necessarily attend the fact. As if a landlord sues for rent due at Michaelmas 1754, and the tenant cannot prove the payment, but produces an acquittance for rent due at a subsequent time, in full of all demands, this is a violent presumption of his having paid the former rent, and is equivalent to full proof; for though the actual payment is not proved, yet the acquittance in full of all demands is proved, which could not be without such payment; and it therefore induces so forcible a presumption, that no proof shall be admitted to the contrary. Probable presumption, arising from such circumstances as usually attend the fact, hath also its due weight: as if, in a suit for rent due 1754, the tenant proves the payment of the rent due in 1755; this will prevail to exonerate the tenant, unless it be clearly shewn that the rent of 1754 was retained for some special reason, or that there was some fraud or mistake: for otherwise it will be presumed to have been paid before that in 1755, as it is most usual to receive first the rents of longest standing. Light or rash presumptions have no weight or validity at all. 3 Black. 371, 2.

The oath administered to the witness is not only that what he deposes shall be true, but that he shall also depose the whole truth: so that he is not to conceal any part of what he knows, whether interrogated particularly to that point or not. 3 Black. 372.

And by 46 Geo. 3. c. 37, it is declared that a witness cannot by law refuse to answer, on the ground, that it may subject him to a suit for debt.

And all this evidence is to be given in open

* By 31 Geo. 3. c. 35, persons convicted of petty larceny are rendered competent witnesses.

† Parishioners may be witnesses on summary convictions, although the penalty or part be given to the poor, where such penalty does not exceed 20*l.*

‡ And in our courts of equity, if a defendant by his answer denies the truth of any of the allegations contained in the bill, two witnesses must be produced to contradict the answer.

court, in the presence of the parties, their attornies, the counsel, and all by-standers; and before the judge and jury: each party having liberty to except to its competency, which exceptions are publicly stated, and by the judge are openly and publicly allowed or disallowed, in the face of the country; which must curb any secret bias or partiality that might arise in his own breast. And if, either in his directions or decisions, he misstates the law by ignorance, inadvertence, or design, the counsel on either side may require him publicly to seal a bill of exceptions; stating the point wherein he is supposed to err: and this he is obliged to seal by statute Westm. 2. 13 Edw. I. c. 31, or, if he refuses so to do, the party may have a compulsory writ against him, commanding him to seal it, if the fact alleged be truly stated: and if he returns, that the fact is untruly stated, when the case is otherwise, an action will lie against him for making a false return. This bill of exceptions is in the nature of an appeal; examinable, not in the court out of which the record issues for the trial at nisi prius, but in the next immediate superior court, upon a writ of error, after judgment given in the court below. But a demurrer to evidence shall be determined by the court out of which the record is sent. This happens, where a record or other matter is produced in evidence concerning the legal consequences of which there arises a doubt in law; in which case the adverse party may, if he pleases, demur to the whole evidence; which admits the truth of every fact that has been alleged, but denies the sufficiency of them all in point of law to maintain or overthrow the issue: which draws the question of law from the cognizance of the jury, to be decided (as it ought) by the court. But neither these demurrers to evidence, nor the bills of exceptions, are at present so much in use as formerly; since the more frequent extension of the discretionary powers of the court in granting a new trial, which is now very commonly had for the misdirection of the judge at nisi prius, or the mistake of the jury. 3 Black. 373.

This open examination of witnesses viva voce, in the presence of all mankind, is much more conducive to the clearing up of truth, than the private and secret examination taken down in writing before an officer, or his clerk, in the ecclesiastical courts, and all others that have borrowed their practice from the civil law: where a witness may frequently depose that in private, which he will be ashamed to testify in a public and solemn tribunal. There an artful or careless scribe may make a witness speak what he never meant, by dressing up his depositions in his own forms and language; but he is here at liberty to correct and explain his meaning, if misunderstood, which he can never do after a written deposition is once taken. Besides, the occasional questions of the judge, the jury, and the counsel, propounded to the witnesses on a sudden, will sift out the truth much better than a formal set of interrogatories previously penned and settled: and the confronting of adverse witnesses is another opportunity of obtaining a clear discovery, which can never be had upon any other method of trial. Nor is the presence of the judge, during the examination, a matter of small importance; for, besides the respect and awe with which his presence will naturally inspire the witness, he is able by use and experience to keep the evidence from wandering from the point in issue. In short, by this method of examination, and this only, the persons who are to decide upon the evidence have an opportunity of observing the quality, age, education, understanding, behaviour, and inclinations of the witness; in which points all persons must appear alike, when their depositions are reduced to writing, and read to the judge, in the absence of those who made them: and yet as much may be frequently collected from the manner in which the evidence is delivered, as from the matter of it. These are a few of the advantages attending this, the English, way of giving testimony, ore tenus. Which was also indeed familiar among the antient Romans, as may be collected from Quinctilian; who lays down (Inst. Ora. l. 5. c. 7.) very good instructions for examining and cross-examining witnesses viva voce. And this, or somewhat like it, was continued as low as the time of Hadrian; but the civil law, as it is now modelled, rejects all public examination of witnesses. 3 Black. 373, 4.

As to such evidence as the jury may have in their own consciences, by their private knowledge of facts, it was an antient doctrine, that this had as much right to sway their judgment as the written or parol evidence which is delivered in court. And therefore it hath been often held, that though no proofs be produced on either side, yet the jury might bring in a verdict. For the oath of the jurors, to find according to their evidence, was construed to be, to do it according to the best of their own knowledge. Which construction was probably made out of tenderness to juries; that they might escape the heavy penalties of an attaint, in case they could show, by any additional proof, that their verdict was agreeable to the truth, though not according to the evidence produced: with which additional proof the law presumed they were privately acquainted, though it did not appear in court. But this doctrine was gradually exploded, when attaints began to be disused, and new trials introduced in their stead. For it is quite incompatible with the grounds upon which such new trials are every day awarded, viz.

that the verdict was given without, or contrary to evidence. And therefore, together with new trials, the practice seems to have been first introduced, which now universally obtains, that if a juror knows any thing of the matter in issue, he may be sworn as a witness, and give his evidence publicly in court. 3 Black. 375.

Evidence in criminal matters.] The doctrine of evidence upon pleas of the crown is, in most respects, the same as that upon civil actions. There are however a few leading points, wherein, by several statutes and resolutions, a difference is made between civil and criminal evidence. 4 Black. 356.

First, in all cases of high treason, petit treason, and misprision of treason, by statutes 1 Edw. VI. c. 12, and 5 & 6 Edw. VI. c. 11. two lawful witnesses are required to convict a prisoner; unless he shall willingly and without violence confess the same.

By statute 1 & 2 Ph. & Mar. c. 10, a farther exception is made as to treasons in counterfeiting the king's seals or signatures, and treasons concerning coin current within this realm; and more particularly by c. 11, the offences of importing counterfeit foreign money current in this kingdom, and impairing, counterfeiting, or forging any current coin.

The statutes 8 & 9 W. III. c. 25, and 15 & 16 Geo. II. c. 28, in their subsequent extensions of this species of treason do also provide, that the offenders may be indicted, arraigned, tried, convicted, and attainted, by the like evidence, and in such manner and form, as may be had and used against offenders for counterfeiting the king's money.

But by statute 7 W. III. c. 3, in prosecutions for those treasons to which that act extends, the same rule (of requiring two witnesses) is again enforced; with this addition, that the confession of the prisoner, which shall countervail the necessity of such proof, must be in open court. In the construction of which act it hath been holden, that a confession of the prisoner, taken out of court, before a magistrate or person having competent authority to take it, and proved by two witnesses, is sufficient to convict him of treason. But hasty unguarded confessions, made to persons having no such authority, ought not to be admitted as evidence, under this statute. And indeed, even in cases of felony at the common law, they are the weakest and most suspicious of all testimony; ever liable to be obtained by artifice, false hopes, promises of favour, or menaces; seldom remembered accurately or reported with due precision; and incapable in their nature of being disproved by other negative evidence. By the same statute 7 W. III. it is declared that both witnesses must be to the same overt act of treason, or one to one overt act, and the other to another overt act, of the same species of treason, and not of distinct heads or kinds, and no evidence shall be admitted to prove any overt act not expressly laid in the indictment. And therefore in sir John Fenwick's case, in king William's time, where there was but one witness, an act of parliament was made on purpose to attaint him of treason, and he was executed. But in almost every other accusation one positive witness is sufficient. Baron Montesquieu lays it down for a rule, that those laws which condemn a man to death in any case on the deposition of a single witness, are fatal to liberty: and he adds this reason, that the witness who affirms, and the accused who denies, make an equal balance; there is a necessity therefore to call in a third man to incline the scale. But this seems to be carrying matters too far: for there are some crimes, in which the very privacy of their nature excludes the possibility of having more than one witness; must these therefore escape unpunished? Neither indeed is the bare denial of the person accused equivalent to the positive oath of a disinterested witness. In cases of indictments for perjury, this doctrine is better founded; and there our law adopts it: for one witness is not allowed to convict a man indicted for perjury, because then there is only one oath against another. In cases of treason also there is the accused's oath of allegiance, to counterpoise the information of a single witness; and that may perhaps be one reason why the law requires a double testimony to convict him: though the principal reason, undoubtedly, is to secure the subject from being sacrificed to fictitious conspiracies, which have been the engines of profligate and crafty politicians in all ages. 4 Black. 356, 7.

Secondly, though from the reversal of colonel Sidney's attainder by act of parliament in 1689 it may be collected, that the mere similitude of hand-writing in two papers shown to a jury, without other concurrent testimony, is no evidence that both were written by the same person; yet undoubtedly the testimony of witnesses well acquainted with the party's hand, that they believe the paper in question to have been written by him, is evidence to be left to a jury. 4 Black. 358.

Thirdly, all presumptive evidence of felony should be admitted cautiously; for the law holds, that it is better that ten guilty persons escape, than that one innocent suffer. And sir Matthew Hale in particular lays down two rules most prudent and necessary to be observed: 1. Never to convict a man for stealing the goods of a person unknown, merely because he will give no account how he came by them, unless an actual felony be proved of such goods: and, 2. Never to convict any person of murder or manslaughter, till at least the body be found dead, on account of two instances he mentions, where persons were executed for the murder of others, who were then alive, but missing. 4 Black. 358.

Lastly, it was an ancient and commonly received practice, (derived from the civil law, and which also to this day obtains in the kingdom of France) that as counsel was not allowed to any prisoner accused of a capital crime, so neither should he be suffered to exculpate himself by the testimony of any witnesses. And therefore it deserves to be remembered to the honour of Mary I. (whose early sentiments, till her marriage with Philip of Spain, seem to have been humane and generous,) that when she appointed sir Richard Morgan chief justice of the common pleas, she enjoined him, "that "notwithstanding the old error, which did "not admit any witness to speak, or any "other matter to be heard, in favour of the "adversary, her majesty being party; her "highness's pleasure was, that whatsoever "could be brought in favour of the subject "should be admitted to be heard: and "moreover, that the justices should not "persuade themselves to sit in judgment "otherwise for her highness than for her "subject." Afterwards, in one particular instance (when embezzling the queen's military stores was made felony by statute 31 Eliz. c. 4.) it was provided that any person impeached for such felony, "should be "received and admitted to make any law-"ful proof that he could, by lawful wit-"ness or otherwise, for his discharge and "defence:" and in general the courts grew so heartily ashamed of a doctrine so unreasonable and oppressive, that a practice was gradually introduced of examining witnesses for the prisoner, but not upon oath: the consequence of which still was, that the jury gave less credit to the prisoner's evidence, than to that produced by the crown. Sir Edward Coke protests very strongly against this tyrannical practice; declaring that he never read in any act of parliament, book-case, or record, that in criminal cases the party accused should not have witnesses sworn for him, and therefore there was not so much as scintilla juris against it. And the house of commons were so sensible of this absurdity, that in the bill for abolishing hostilities between England and Scotland, when felonies committed by Englishmen in Scotland were ordered to be tried in one of the three northern counties, they insisted on a clause, and carried it against the efforts of both the crown and the house of lords, against the practice of the courts in England, and the express law of Scotland, "that in all such trials for the better disco-"very of the truth, and the better infor-"mation of the consciences of the jury and "justices, there shall be allowed to the "party arraigned the benefit of such credi-"ble witnesses, to be examined upon oath "as can be produced for his clearing and "justification." At length by the statute 7 Wil. 3, c. 3, the same measure of justice was established throughout all the realm, in cases of treason within the act; and it was afterwards finally declared by statute 1 Ann. st. 2, c. 9, that in all cases of treason and felony all witnesses for the prisoner should be examined upon oath, in like manner as the witnesses against him. 4 Black. 360.

EWBRICE, (Sax. ew, i. e. conjugium, and bryce, fractio) adultery or marriage breaking. Ibid.

EWE, (ewa) a German word signifying law; it is mentioned in Leg. W. 1.

EXACTION, a wrong done by an officer, by taking a reward or fee for that which the law allows not. And the difference between exaction and extortion is this: extortion is where an officer extorts more than his due, when something is due to him; and exaction is, when he wrests a fee or reward, where none is due; for which the offender is to be fined and imprisoned, and render to the party twice as much as the money he so takes. Co. Lit. 368. 10 Rep. 100. 32 Geo. 2. c. 28.

EXACTOR REGIS, the king's exactor or collector. Cowel. Blount.

EXAMINATION IN CHANCERY. The examination of witnesses in chancery, is done by taking their depositions in writing according to the manner of the civil law upon interrogatories, or questions in writing formed for that purpose.

For the purpose of examining witnesses in or within 20 miles of London, there is an examiner's office appointed; but for evidence who live in the country; a commission to examine witnesses, is usually granted to four commissioners, two named of each side, or any three or two of them to take the depositions there, and if the witnesses reside beyond sea, a commission may be had to examine them there upon their own oaths, and if foreigners, upon the oaths of skilful interpreters.

By stat. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 13. and 2 & 3 P. & M. c. 10. justices of peace are to examine felons apprehended, and witnesses, before the felon is committed; and the accusers must be bound over to appear and give evidence at the next assizes, &c. to which the examinations are to be certified.

EXANNUAL ROLL. In the old way of exhibiting sheriffs accounts, the illeviable fines and desperate debts were transcribed into a roll under this name; which was yearly read, to see what might be gotten. Hale's Sher. Accv. 67.

EXCAMBIATORS, a word used antiently for exchangers of land, supposed to be such as we now call brokers, that deal upon the Exchange between merchants. Cowel. Blount.

EXCEPTION, (exceptio). In law proceedings, is a matter pleaded and alleged in bar to the action: and in equity, it is what is alleged against the sufficiency of an answer, the master's reports, &c.

EXCEPTION TO EVIDENCE, &c. See Bill of Exceptions.

EXCEPTION IN DEEDS, is a saving out of the deed of a particular thing out of a general one, as a room out of an house, a ground out of a manor, timber out of land, or the like. Co. Lit. 47. 1 Lev. 287. Cro. El. 244.

EXCHANGE, (excambium or cambium) the king's exchange, is the place appointed by the king for exchange of plate or bullion for the king's coin, &c. of which there is now only one, viz. the Mint in the Tower.

EXCHANGE among merchants] is a commerce of money, or a bartering or exchanging of the money of one city or country for that of another. Lex Mercatoria, or Merch. Comp. 98.

At London, all exchanges are made upon the pound sterling of 20*s.* Spain and Italy, &c. upon the ducat; and at Florence, Venice, and other places in the Streights by the dollar and florin. See Bill of Exchange, and Lex Mercatoria.

EXCHANGES OF GOODS AND MERCHANDISE, were the original and natural way of commerce, precedent to buying; for there was no buying till money was invented; though in exchanging, both parties are as buyers and sellers, and both equally warrant. 3 Salk. 157.

EXCHANGE OF LANDS. A deed of exchange is a mutual grant of equal interests, the one in consideration of the other. The word "exchange" is so individually requisite and appropriated by law to this case, that it cannot be supplied by any other word or expressed by any circumlocution, Co. Litt. 50, 51. The estates exchanged must be equal in quantity, Litt. s. 64, 65.; not of value, for that is immaterial, but of interest; as fee-simple for fee-simple, a lease for twenty years for a lease for twenty years, and the like. And the exchange may be of things that lie either in grant or in livery, Co. Litt. 51. But no livery of seisin, even in exchanges of freehold, is necessary to perfect the conveyance, Litt. s. 62.; for each party stands in the place of the other and occupies his right, and each of them hath already had corporal possession of his own land. But entry must be made on both sides; for, if either party die before entry, the exchange is void, for want of sufficient notoriety, Co. Litt. 50. And so also, if two parsons, by consent of patron and ordinary, exchange their preferments; and the one is presented, instituted, and inducted, and the other is presented, and instituted, but dies before induction, the former shall not keep his new benefice, because the exchange was not completed, and therefore he shall return back to his own. Park. s. 288. For if, after an exchange of lands or other hereditaments, either party be evicted of those which were taken by him in exchange, through defect of the other's title; he shall return back to the possession of his own, by virtue of the implied warranty contained in all exchanges. Co. Lit. 176.

EXCHANGE OF CHURCH LIVINGS. Parsons some times exchange their churches, and resign them into the bishop's hands. Wood's Inst. 284.

By the 31 El. c. 6. if any incumbent shall corruptly resign or exchange, or corruptly take for resigning or exchanging, directly or indirectly, any pension, money, or other benefit; as well the giver as the taker, shall lose double the value; half to the queen, and half to him that shall sue. s. 8.

If two parsons by one instrument agree to exchange their benefices, and in order thereto resign them into the hands of the ordinary, such exchange being executed on both parts, is good; and each may enjoy the other's living: but the patrons must present them again to each living; and if they refuse to do it, or the ordinary will not admit them respectively, then the exchange is not executed; and in such case either clerk may return to his former living, even though one of them should be admitted, instituted and inducted to the benefice of the other; which is expressed in the exchange itself. 2 Co. Rep. 74. Rol. Abr. 814.

EXCHANGEORS, were those that returned money by bills of exchange. See Exambiators. 5 R. 2. c. 2.

EXCHEQUER, (scaccarium, from the Fr. eschequier, i. e. abacus, tabula lusoria, or from the Germ. schatz, viz. thesaurus) The court of exchequer is a court of law and a court of equity also. It is a very antient court of record, set up by William the conqueror (Lamb. Archeion. 24.) as a part of the aula regis (Madox. Hist. Exch. 109.) though regulated and reduced to its present order by king Edward I. (Spelm. Guil. I. in cod. leg. vet. apud Wilkins.); and intended principally to order the revenues of the crown, and to recover the king's debts and duties (4 Inst. 103—116.) It is called the exchequer, scaccarium, from the chequed cloth, resembling a chess-board, which covers the table there; and on which, when certain of the king's accounts are made up, the sums are marked and scored with counters. It consists of two divisions: the receipt of the exchequer, which manages the royal revenue, and with which these commentaries have no concern; and the court or judicial part of it, which is again subdivided into a court of equity and a court of common law. 3 Black. 44.

The court of equity is held in the exchequer chamber before the lord treasurer, the chancellor of the exchequer, the chief baron, and three puisne ones. These Mr. Selden conjectures (Tit. Hon. 2, 5, 16.) to have antiently been made out of such as were barons of the kingdom or parliamentary barons; and thence to have derived their name; which conjecture receives great strength from Bracton's explanation of magna carta, c. 14. which directs that the earls and barons be amerced by their peers; that is, says he, by the barons of the exchequer (l. 3. tr. 2. c. 1. s. 3.) The primary and original business of this court is to call the king's debtors to account by bill filed by the attorney-general; and to recover any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, any goods, chattels, or other profits or benefits, belonging to the crown. So that by their original constitution the jurisdiction of the courts of common pleas, king's bench, and exchequer, was entirely separate and distinct; the common pleas being intended to decide all controversies between subject and subject; the king's bench to correct all crimes and misdemesnors that amount to a breach of the peace, the king being there plaintiff, as such offences are in open derogation of the jura regalia of his crown; and the exchequer to adjust and recover his revenue, wherein the king also is plaintiff, as the withholding and non-paymeat thereof is an injury to his jura fiscalia. But, as by a fiction almost all sorts of civil actions are now allowed to be brought in the king's bench; in like manner by another fiction all kinds of personal suits may be prosecuted in the court of exchequer. For as all the officers and ministers of this court have, like those of other superior courts, the privilege of suing and being sued only in their own court; so also the king's debtors, and farmers, and all accomptants of the exchequer are privileged to sue and implead all manner of persons in the same court of equity, that they themselves are called into. They have likewise privilege to sue and implead one another, or any stranger, in the same kind of common law actions (where the personalty only is concerned) as are prosecuted in the court of common pleas. 3 Black. 45.

This gives original to the common law part of their jurisdiction, which was established merely for the benefit of the king's accomptants, and is exercised by the barons only of the exchequer, and not the treasurer or chancellor. The writ upon which all proceedings here are grounded is called a quo minus: in which the plaintiff suggests that he is the king's farmer or debtor, and that the defendant hath done him the injury or damage complained of; quo minus sufficiens existit, by which he is the less able to pay the king his debt or rent. And these suits are expressly directed, by what is called the statute of Rutland (10 Edw. 1. c. 11.), to be confined to such matters only as specially concern the king or his ministers of the exchequer. And by the articuli super cartas (28 Edw. 1. c. 4.) it is enacted, that no common pleas be thenceforth holden in the exchequer, contrary to the form of the great charter. But now by the suggestion of privilege, any person may be admitted to sue in the exchequer as well as the king's accomptant. The surmise, of being debtor to the king, is therefore become matter of form and mere words of course, and the court is open to all the nation equally. The same holds with regard to the equity side of the court; for there any person may file a bill against another upon a bare suggestion that he is the king's accomptant; but whether he is so or not, is never controverted. In this court, on the equity side, the clergy have long used to exhibit their bills for the non-payment of tithes; in which case the surmise of being the king's debtor is no fiction, they being bound to pay him their first fruits, and annual tenths. But the chancery has of late years obtained a large share in this business. Ibid. 46.

An appeal from the equity side of this court lies immediately to the house of peers; but from the common law side, in pursuance of the statute 31 Ed. 3. c. 12. a writ of error must be first brought into the court of exchequer chamber. And from their determination there lies, in the dernier resort, a writ of error to the house of lords. Ibid.

The court of exchequer chamber, is one that hath no original jurisdiction, but is only a court of appeal, to correct the errors of other jurisdictions. This was first erected by statute 31 Ed. 3. c. 12. to determine causes upon writs of error from the common law side of the court of exchequer. And to that end it consists of the lord treasurer, the lord chancellor, and the justices of the king's bench and common pleas. In imitation of which, a second court of exchequer chamber was erected by statute 27 Eliz. c. 8. consisting of the justices of the common pleas, and the barons of the exchequer; before whom writs of error may be brought to reverse judgments in certain suits originally begun in the court of king's bench. Into the court also of exchequer chamber, (which then consists of all the judges of the three superior courts, and now and then the lord chancellor also) are sometimes adjourned from the other courts such causes as the judges upon argument find to be of great weight and difficulty, before any judgment is given upon them in the court below. 4 Inst. 119. 4 Bulst. 146. 3 Black. 56.

From all the branches of this court of exchequer chamber, a writ of error lies to the house of peers. 3 Black. 56.

The court of exchequer is governed by the chancellor of the exchequer, the lord chief baron, and three other barons, who are the sovereign auditors of England, and the judges of the court. There also sits in this court a puisne baron, who administers the oath of all high-sheriffs, under-sheriffs, bailiffs, auditors, receivers, collectors, controllers, surveyors, and searchers of all the customs in England.

The chancellor or under treasurer hath the custody of the seal of this court. The king's attorney general is made privy to all manner of pleas that are not ordinary and of course, which rise upon the process of the court; and he puts into court in his own name, informations of concealments of customs, seizures, &c. And also for intrusions, wastes and incroachments upon any of the king's lands; or upon penal statutes, forfeitures, &c.

The remembrancers keep the records of the court betwixt the king and his subjects, and enter the rules and orders there made: one is called the king's remembrancer, and the other the lord treasurer's remembrancer: the remembrancer for the king hath all manner of informations upon penal statutes used in his office only; and he calls to account, in open court, all the great accountants of the crown, collectors of customs, &c. he makes out writs of privilege, enters judgments of pleas; and all matters upon English bill are remaining in his office.

The remembrancer for the lord treasurer makes out all the estreats; he sets down in his book the debts of all sheriffs, and takes their foreign accounts; and issues out writs and process in many cases, &c. And these remembrancers have several attornies to do business under them; who by statute are not to issue out of the remembrancer's office, any writs upon supposition, but upon just grounds, &c. 1 Jac. 1. c. 26.

There are two chamberlains that keep the keys of the treasury, where the records lie, with the book of Domesday, &c. They may sit in court if they please, but not intermeddle with any thing; unless it be relating to the sheriffs, in the pricking whereof they have a vote. And besides the chamberlains, there is a clerk of the pipe, in whose custody are conveyed out of the king's and treasurer's remembrancer, &c. as water through a pipe, all accounts and debts due to the king.

The controller of the pipe; who is said to be the chancellor of the exchequer. The clerk of the estreats, who receives the estreats from the remembrancer's office, and writes them out to be served for the king, &c. The foreign opposer, who opposes or makes a charge on all sheriffs, &c. of their green wax, i. e. fines, issues, amerciaments, recognisance, &c. certified in estreats annexed to the writ, under the seal in green wax, and delivereth the same to the clerk of the estreats to be put in process. The auditors, that take the accounts of the king's receivers, collectors, &c. and perfect them. The four tellers, whose business to receive and pay all money is well known. The clerk of the pells, from his parchment rolls, called pellis receptorum. The clerk of the nihils, who makes a roll of such sums as the sheriff upon process returns nihil, &c. The clerk of the pleas, in whose office all officers and privileged persons are to sue and be sued; and here are divers under clerks employed in suits commenced or depending in this court. There is a clerk of the summons; under chamberlains of the exchequer; secondaries in the offices of the remembrancers; secondaries of the pipe: the usher of the exchequer, marshal, &c.

EXCHEQUER BILLS. By 48 Geo. 3. c. 1. (an act for regulating the issuing and paying of exchequer bills), the powers given by this act to the commissioners of the treasury may be executed by three of them, s. 1, and exchequer bills shall issue in such form as they think convenient; but the auditor, or some person authorized by him, shall sign the bills. s. 2.

The bills are to be numbered arithmetically, s. 3, but the course of payment is to be as the commissioners find convenient. s. 4.

The interest due on bills, which shall be payable in part of the revenue, shall be paid to the parties; but after they get into the hands of receivers or collectors, the interest shall from that time cease. s. 5.

When such bills are paid in at the exchequer, the parties are to write their names and the date thereon. s. 6.

The treasury are to direct cheques, indents, and counterfoils, s. 7; but bills defaced are to be exchanged. s. 8.

Persons forging any exchequer bill, or any indorsement, shall be guilty of felony without clergy. s. 9.

Paymasters, comptrollers, and other officers, are to be appointed for payment of bills, s. 10, which paymasters are to be liable to the controul of the treasury, s. 11; the commissioners whereof are to settle salaries and rewards, s. 12, and contract with persons to circulate bills, s. 13, and the governor and directors of the bank are not disabled from being members of parliament by reason of such contracts, s. 14; the rates payable to the contractors to be paid out of the money applicable to that purpose. s. 15.

No fees to be taken at the exchequer, s. 16, nor interest on any less sum than 1*d.* to be paid. s. 17.

Bills lost or destroyed to be paid, on proof of the casualty, before the barons of the exchequer. s. 18.

But bills discharged are not to be cancelled. s. 19.

EXCISE, (from the Belg. accisse, tributum) The excise duty is an inland imposition, paid sometimes upon the consumption of the commodity, or frequently upon the retail sale, which is the last stage before the consumption. This is the most œconomical way of taxing the subject: the charges of levying, collecting, and managing the excise duties being considerably less in proportion than in other branches of the revenue. It also renders the commodity cheaper to the consumer, than charging it with customs to the same amount would do; because generally paid in a much later stage of it. The frauds that might be committed in this branch of the revenue, unless a strict watch is kept, make it necessary, wherever it is established, to give the officers a power of entering and searching the entered houses of such as deal in exciseable commodities, at any hour of the day, and, in many cases, of the night likewise. And the proceedings in case of transgressions are so summary and sudden, that a man may be convicted in two days time in the penalty of many thousand pounds by two commissioners or justices of the peace, without trial by jury, according to the ordinary course of the common law.* 1 Black. 318.

The original establishment of the excise, was in 1643, and its progress was gradual; being at first laid upon those persons and commodities, where it was supposed the hardship would be least perceivable, viz. the makers and vendors of beer, ale, cyder, and perry, and the pretended champions of liberty boldly and openly declared, "the "impost of excise to be the most easy and in"different levy that could be laid upon the "people." Com. Jour. 17 May 1643. Dug. 124. Scobel. 455. Upon king Charles's return, it having then been long established and its produce well known, some part of it was given to the crown, in 12 Car. II. by way of purchase for the feodal tenures and other oppressive parts of the hereditary revenue. But, from its first original to the present time, its very name has been odious. It has nevertheless been imposed on abundance of other commodities in the reigns of king William III. and every succeeding prince, to support the expences of the country. Thus brandies and other spirits are now excised at the distillery, wine in the hands of the importer, tobacco and snuff in the hands of the manufacturer, printed silks and linens, at the printer's; starch and hair powder, at the maker's; gold and silver wire, at the wiredrawer's; plate in the hands of the vendor, who pays yearly for a licence to sell it; lands and goods sold by auction, for which a pound-rate is payable by the auctioneer, who also is charged with an annual duty for his licence. To these we may add coffee, tea, and cocoa, for which the duty is paid by the retailer; all artificial wines, commonly called sweets; paper and pasteboard, first when made, and again if stained or printed; malt as before-mentioned; vinegars; and the manufacture of glass; bricks for all which the duty is paid by the manufacturer; hops, for which the person that gathers them is answerable; candles and soap, which are paid for at the maker's; malt liquors brewed for sale, which are excised at the brewery; cyder and perry, at the vendor's; and leather and skins, at the tanner's; salt at the works. 1 Black. 320.

The acts relating to each particular article of excise are too voluminous to be in this work: but the following is a summary of the most general statutes relative to the Excise.] By 12 Car. 2. c. 23. no person shall intermeddle in the excise until he has taken oath to execute the same faithfully, which is to be certified at the next quarter-sessions. Also 15 Car. 2. c. 11. 10 Ann. c. 19. and c. 36.

All parts within the weekly bills of mortality shall be under the head office. The king shall appoint commissioners and all officers. The excise offices shall be kept open from eight in the morning till twelve at noon, and from two till five in the afternoon; and the monies collected shall be paid into the exchequer. 12 Car. 2.

By 15 Car. 2. c. 11. no commissioner or other officer of excise shall farm the revenue thereof; nor shall they act as justices of peace in matters touching the excise.

Officers shall attend in market towns touching receipts and duties of excise, on pain of 10*l.* Ibid.

Gaugers shall take no bribes to make false returns, on forfeiture of 10*l.* and the person bribing forfeit the same. Ibid.

Foreign liquors imported shall be duly entered; on pain of forfeiture. Ibid.

Upon appeals in excise cases the duty shall be deposited. Complaints shall be determined in the proper counties; the commissioners shall take no fees; on pain of 10*s.* for each offence. Two justices may determine matters on this act: and the penalties shall go one third to the king, one third to the poor, and the other third to the informer. Ibid.

Appeals in town must be within two months, in the country within four. Ibid.

* It is certainly an evil that a fair dealer cannot have the benefit of any secret improvement in the management of his trade or manufactory; yet, perhaps it is more than an equivalent to the public at large, that, by the survey of the excise, the commodity is preserved from many shameful adulterations, as experience has fully proved since wine was made subject to the excise laws. 1 Black. 318. n. by Chris.

By 16 & 17 Car. 2. c. 4. farmers of excise shall have like authority as the commissioners of excise.

By 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 5. justices of peace, and commissioners may mitigate the fines, so as the same be not made less than double the duty, besides costs.

By 1 Will. & Mar. stat. 1. c. 24. offices shall be kept at Holyhead, Newborough, and Lanerchtinth in Anglesey, as well as at Beaumaris.

Commissioners of excise, or clerks taking money of any person other than the king, shall forfeit their office, and be incapable of any office in the revenue. Ibid.

By 7 Will. 3. c. 30. the commissioners and justices may summon witnesses, and if they refuse to appear, or give evidence, they forfeit 10*l.*

Inferior officers of excise, and salt, shall continue in their offices, notwithstanding the death or removal of any of the commissioners. Ibid.

By 6 Geo. 1. c. 21. any person obstructing an officer of excise in relation to the duties forfeits 10*l.*

By 11 Geo. 1. c. 30. officers of excise may go on board ships to search for brandy, or other exciseable liquors, in like manner as officers of the customs.

Excise officer, by special warrant, may search any place for brandy or the like fraudulently hid, and any person obstructing, forfeits 100*l.* Ibid.

Any person taking out a permit, and not sending away the commodities in the time limited, or not returning the permit, forfeits treble the value of the goods; and if there does not appear a sufficient decrease to answer the removal, the officer may seize a like quantity: any person taking a permit for removal, without direction of a person, from whose stock the commodities are to be removed, forfeits 50*l.* Ibid.

On question, whether the person be an excise officer, proof shall be admitted that he was reputed such, without producing the commission. Ibid.

Any person attempting to corrupt an officer of excise in his duty, shall forfeit 500*l.* half to the king and half to the poor. Ibid.

By 12 Geo. 1. c. 28. no officer of excise shall be subject to penalty, for not leaving a copy of the charge, unless demanded in writing.

By 1 Geo. 2. stat. 2. c. 16. complaints may be determined by, and adjudications executed by warrant of, three commissioners.

By 18 Geo. 2. c. 26. any entry made by dealers in exciseable goods shall not be deemed a legal entry, unless made in the name of the real owner, and the person acting as visible owner shall be deemed the real owner, and liable as such to the duties and penalties, and all goods found in places of trade shall be liable.

Offences against the excise laws may be prosecuted out of the jurisdiction wherein they were committed. Ibid.

By 32 Geo. 2. c. 17. in all cases relating to the excise, summons directed to the party by his right, or assumed name, or left at his usual place of residence, shall be deemed legal notice, except where particular directions shall be enacted for summoning or condemning.

By 33 Geo. 2. c. 9. officers of excise may seize all vessels liable to be forfeited by former laws, and proceed to condemnation in like manner as officers of the customs.

By 5 Geo. 3. c. 43. all powers by 18 Geo. 2. c. 26. shall be executed against persons offending against the excise laws.

Commissioners of excise may appoint persons (in the absence of the collector) to administer oaths to exporters, and to grant certificates of duty paid.

By 6 Geo. 3. c. 47. the six months allowed by 15 Geo. 2. c. 26. for payment of excise duties on warehoused rum, are enlarged to twelve months.

By 9 Geo. 3. c. 6. excise officers may seize horses and carriages removing foreign spirits and goods, duties unpaid, like as custom-house officers may, and proceed by the excise laws, or by action, plaint, or information, &c.

By 10 Geo. 3. c. 44. traders using false scales or weights, in weighing stock, to defraud the revenue, shall forfeit 100*l.* but not to be punished under this and other acts for the same offence; a moiety to the king, and the other to the informer.

By 19 Geo. 3. c. 69. all druggists, grocers, chandlers, coffee or chocolate house-keepers, and dealers in coffee, tea, cocoa nuts, and makers of chocolate, shall put over their doors these words, Dealer in Coffee, Tea, or Chocolate, on pain of 200*l.* and all importers, and dealers in foreign brandy, arrack, rum, spirits or strong waters, shall put on some conspicuous part of their house these words, Importer of or Dealer in Foreign Spirituous Liquors, on penalty of 50*l.*

Any dealer buying where the words are not up, penalty of 100*l.* but not for buying goods warehoused, according to 10 Geo. 1. c. 10. or at the East India company's sales, or sold for insurers for salvage, or prize teas, or spirituous liquors on board ships, or on quays, by the first purchaser, or of rum warehoused according to 15 & 16 Geo. 2. c. 25. or arrack in the East India company's warehouses, nor foreign spirituous liquors, or if sold by insurers. Ibid.

Putting up the words not having entered the place at the excise office, penalty 50*l.* and persons, not dealers, buying where the words are not (except as before) penalty 10*l.* and any smuggler selling goods, and informing against the buyer in twenty days (and before information laid against himself) indemnified. Ibid.

By 21 Geo. 3. c. 55. officers in their permits for removing exciseable goods, are to express the time they shall be in force, and not removing such goods agreeable to the permits, incurs the penalties of 2 Geo. 1. and forfeiture of the goods; but in case of unavoidable delay in delivering such goods, the same shall not be forfeited.

By 22 Geo. 3. c. 68. persons counterfeiting any permit for removal of exciseable goods, or who shall knowingly publish or use any such permit, shall forfeit 200*l.*

By 23 Geo. 3. c. 70. the commissioners of excise are to provide moulds for making of paper to be used for permits, with the words excise office visible in the substance of such paper; and no permits shall be granted on any other paper.

All persons who shall make any mould for making such paper as aforesaid, or assist in making such paper, unless appointed by the commissioners of excise, shall suffer death as felons. Ibid.

Persons counterfeiting permits, or giving or receiving any false permit, or altering any granted by the proper officer, shall forfeit 500*l.* Ibid.

Excise officers delivering out paper for permits improperly, or granting false permits, are guilty of felony, and may be transported for seven years. Ibid.

Upon every action entered in any court of record for the penalty of 500*l.* a copias shall issue, and the defendant shall give bail for his appearance, and also to pay the penalty. Ibid.

Officers of excise shall not be sued for executing their office, until after a month's notice of the offence. Officers may tender amends, and if sufficient, a verdict shall be given for the defendant, who shall be intitled to costs. Ibid.

No evidence of the cause of action shall be produced, except what is contained in the notice; and the defendant may pay money into court. Ibid.

Claimers of goods seized shall prove payment of the duties, and persons obstructing officers in executing this act shall forfeit 100*l.* Ibid.

By 25 Geo. 3. c. 74. silks, callicoes, linens or stuffs printed, painted or dyed in England, and candles, leather, soap, hops, paper, paste-board, mill-board, scale-board, paper printed, painted, or stained, starch, gold or silver wire, and bricks or tiles for which the duties are paid, may be exported, giving the excise officer notice before packing up the same, and persons opening them after packed, except the excise officer, shall forfeit 20*l.*

If such goods shall not be packed agreeable to notice, a fresh one shall be given. Ibid.

Exporters shall give security for the shipping thereof, and not to reland the same, whereupon they shall receive a certificate from the officer, and have the drawback. Ib.

Officers attending the shipping such commodities may examine them; and goods landed, after giving security for obtaining the drawback, shall be forfeited. Ibid.

By 26 Geo. 3. c. 77. persons using any art to deceive officers in taking the weight or account of stock shall forfeit 100*l.*

Persons having in possession British spirits, soap, or candles, for which the duties have not been paid, forfeit the same and treble the value, which shall be estimated at the price of the best articles of the sort. Ibid.

Proof may be admitted of officers being authorised to act, without producing their particular appointments. Ibid.

Actions for penalties shall be filed in the name of the attorney-general, or of an officer of the customs or excise, or else be void, and the attorney-general may enter a noli prosequi in any action for fines. Ibid.

Persons assaulting excise or custom officers, or attempting to rescue prohibited goods, shall be bound with two sureties, to appear to informations, and refusing to become bound, shall be imprisoned. Ibid.

By 27 Geo. 3. c. 31. within thirty days after report of any vessel bringing French callicoes, muslins, linen, stuff, fustian, velvet, velveret, dimity or figured stuffs (except dyed of one colour) or French beer, ale, or mum; entry of the goods shall be made with the collector of excise, and the duties paid, on penalty of their being forfeited.

If the goods are landed before the duties are paid, they are forfeited, and the persons aiding therein, or receiving them, forfeit treble their value. Ibid.

Commissioners of the excise shall provide frames to denote the measure of French callicoes, and the like stuffs, which are to be marked with such frames, and with a stamp, to denote the payment of the duty. Ibid.

Persons fraudulently counterfeiting such frames, or having calicoes or the like marked therewith, in their custody, knowingly, shall forfeit 100*l.* Ibid.

Persons fraudulently counterfeiting stamps shall suffer death, and persons selling calicoes, or the like, with counterfeit stamps, shall be liable to the same punishment. Ibid.

On oath of a credible person, the houses of persons suspected to have in their possession calicoes, or the like, unstamped, may be searched, and if found in any place, except shipped for exportation, they are forfeited, and also 100*l.* Ibid.

Officers of excise may administer the necessary oaths on the exportation of goods entitled to drawbacks or bounties. Ibid.

By 28 Geo. 3. c. 37. if any trader shall, in weighing his stock, use false scales and weights, the same shall be forfeited, and may be seized by an officer.

All excisable goods and utensils in the custody of makers shall be subject to the amount of duty due from the proprietors, and also to all penalties incurred by makers.

By 32 Geo. 3. c. 10. if any person against whom a body warrant is granted shall remove out of the jurisdiction where convicted, it may be indorsed by the commissioners of excise, or any justices of the peace where the offender shall be.

By 35 Geo. 3, c. 31. commissioners of excise in Scotland may reward their officers as the commissioners of excise in England are authorised. s. 2.

By 35 Geo. 3. c. 96. where persons committed under 25 Geo. 3. c. 77. are detained for want of bail, the prosecutor may cause a copy of the indictment to be delivered, with notice that unless an appearance is entered in a limited time, an appearance and the plea of not guilty will be entered, which may accordingly be done; and if, on trial, the defendant shall be acquitted, the judge may order his discharge.

By 38 Geo. 3. c. 54. officers of excise accepting counterfeited certificates, or giving improper credit in excise books, that undue drawbacks may be obtained, shall be guilty of felony, and transported according to 24 Geo. 3. stat. 2. c. 56.—s. 8.

Persons counterfeiting excise debentures, or making use of them, shall be guilty of felony without clergy. s. 9.

By 41 Geo. 3. (u. k.) c. 91. persons forging certificates required to be granted under 38 Geo. 3. c. 54. by officers of excise, or knowingly giving or receiving false certificates, shall be guilty of felony, and transported for seven years. s. 5.

Seizures made by commanders of ships of war, under 26 Geo. 3. c. 40. s. 27. (see Customs), of goods liable to excise duty, may be lodged in any of his majesty's warehouses of excise in Great Britain, under the care of the proper officer. s. 6.

Commissioners of excise in cases of goods lost in the exportation to Ireland, Guernsey, or Jersey, which are entitled to bounty or drawback on landing, may order debentures to be made out for payment, on being satisfied that the goods were lost. s. 7.

By 46 Geo. 3. c. 112. the stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 77. s. 13. directing that prosecutions in courts of record for penalties relating to the customs or excise shall be prosecuted in the name of the attorney-general, or some officer of such revenues, shall extend to all proceedings for excise penalties before commissioners of excise, or justices of peace. s. 1.

Persons taking false oaths in any case where an oath is required by the excise laws, shall be liable to the pains of perjury. s. 3.

By 47 Geo. 3. sess. 2. c. 30. the commissioners, on evidence that the forfeiture arose without any design of fraud may restore any seizures upon such terms and conditions as they may deem proper.

By 49 Geo. 3, c. 81, where any vessels would, if found, be liable to forfeiture for want of entry, or notice, or for being private or concealed, all the utensils used in any private or unentered place where any such vessel shall be found, shall be forfeited. s. 8.

EXCLUSA, EXCLUSAGIUM, a sluice for the carrying off of water; and the payment to the lord for the benefit of such a sluice. Cowel. Blount.

EXCLUSION, BILL OF. A bill by which parliament, about the latter end of the reign of Charles II. attempted to exercise the right of altering and limiting the succession to the crown, by setting aside the king's brother and presumptive heir, the duke of York, from the succession, on the ground of his being a papist: this bill which raised a considerable ferment in the public mind at that time, after passing the house of commons, was rejected in the house of lords, the king having previously in the most open manner declared, that it never should receive the royal assent.

EXCOMMENGEMENT, law French, signifying excommunication.

EXCOMMUNICATION, (excommunicatio) an ecclesiastical censure, by which a person is excluded from the communion of the church, and from the company of the faithful. Bac. Abr. tit. Ex.

This excommunication is generally for contempt in not appearing, or not obeying a decree, &c. And in other respects the causes of it are many; as for matters of heresy, refusing to receive the sacrament, or to come to church; incontinency, adultery, simony, &c. Ibid.

By the common law an excommunicated person is disabled to do any act that is required to be done by one that is probus et legalis homo. He cannot serve upon juries, cannot be a witness in any court; and, which is the worst of all, cannot bring an action, either real or personal, to recover lands or money due to him. Litt. sect. 201. Nor is this the whole; for if, within forty days after the sentence has been published in the church, the offender does not submit and abide by the sentence of the spiritual court, the bishop may certify such contempt to the king in chancery: upon which there issues out a writ to the sheriff of the county, called, from the bishop's certificate, a significavit, or, from its effect, a writ de excommunicato capiendo: and the sheriff shall thereupon take the offender, and imprison him in the county gaol, till he is reconciled to the church, and such reconciliation certified by the bishop; upon which another writ, de excommunicato deliberando, issues out of chancery to deliver and release him. F. N. B. 62.

EXCOMMUNICATO CAPIENDO, is a writ directed to the sheriff for apprehending him who stands obstinately excommunicated forty days; for the contempt of such a person not seeking absolution, being certified or signified into the chancery, this writ issues for the imprisoning him without bail or mainprize until he conforms. F. N. B 62.

EXCOMMUNICATO DELIBERANDO, is a writ to the sheriff for delivery of an excommunicated person out of prison, upon certificate from the ordinary of his conformity to the ecclesiastical jurisdiction. Fitz. N B. 39. Reg. Orig. 67.

EXCOMMUNICATO RECIPIENDO, is a writ whereby persons excommunicated being for their obstinacy committed to prison, and unlawfully delivered before they have given caution to obey the authority of the church, are commanded to be sought after and imprisoned again. Reg. Orig. 67.

EXCUSABLE HOMICIDE. See Homicide.

EXECUTED CONTRACT. A contract is said to be executed if A agrees to change horses with B, and they do it immediately, in which case the possession and the right are transferred together; or it may be executory, as if they agree to change next week; here the right only vests, and their reciprocal property in each other's horse is not in possession but in action; for a contract executed, which differs nothing from a grant, conveys a chose in possession, a contract executory being only a chose in action. 2 Black. 442.

EXECUTED ESTATE. Estates in possession are called estates executed, because a present interest passes to and resides in the tenant, not depending on any subsequent circumstance or contingency, as in the case of estates executory. 2 Black. 163.

EXECUTED FINE. The fine sur cognizance de droit comme ceo, &c. conveys a clear and absolute freehold, and gives the cognizee a seisin in law, without any actual livery; and it is therefore called a fine executed, whereas the other fines are but executory. 2 Black. 352.

EXECUTED REMAINDER. Remainders executed, or vested remainders, are such as pass a positive and indefeasible interest to the party, to be enjoyed in futuro. See Remainder.

EXECUTION AT LAW. The execution of the judgment of the court after the decision of a suit, is enforced by writ in divers ways, according to the nature of the action upon which it is founded, and of the judgment which is had or recovered. 3 Black. 412.

Thus if the plaintiff recovers in an action real, or mixed, whereby the seisin or possession of land is awarded to him, the writ of execution shall be an habere facias seisinam, or writ of possession of a chattel interest: these are writs directed to the sheriff of the county, commanding him to give actual possession to the plaintiff of the land so recovered; in the execution of which the sheriff may take the posse comitatus, or power of the county, and may justify breaking open doors, if the possession be not quietly delivered: but if it be peaceably yielded up, the delivery of a twig, a turf, or the ring of the door, in the name of seisin, is sufficient execution of the writ. Ibid.

Upon a presentation to a benefice recovered in a quare impedit, or assise of darrein presentment, the execution is by a writ of de clerico admittendo, directed, not to the sheriff, but to the bishop or archbishop, and requiring him to admit and institute the clerk of the plaintiff. Ibid.

In other actions, where the judgment, is that something in special be done or rendered by the defendant, then in order to presentment the execution is by a writ de clerico admittendo, directed, not to the sheriff, but to the bishop or his metropolitan, requiring them to admit and institute the clerk of the plaintiff. 3 Black. 413.

In other actions where the judgment is, that something in special be done or rendered by the defendant, then, in order to compel him so to do, and to see the judgment executed, a special writ of execution issues to the sheriff according to the nature of the case. As upon an assise or quod permittat prosternere for a nuisance, where one part of the judgment is quod amoveatur, a writ goes to the sheriff to abate it at the charge of the party, which likewise issues even in case of an indictment. Ibid.

Upon a replevin, the writ of execution is the writ de retorno habendo; and, if the distress be eloigned, the defendant shall have a capias in withernam, but, on the plaintiff's tendering the damages and submitting to a fine, the process in withernam shall be stayed. In detinue, after judgment, the plaintiff shall have a distringas, to compel the defendant to deliver the goods, by repeated distresses of his chattels; or else a scire facias against any third person in whose hands they may happen to be, to show cause why they should not be delivered: and, if the defendant still continues obstinate, the sheriff shall summon an inquest to ascertain the plaintiff's damages, which shall be levied (like other damages) by seisure of the person or goods of the defendant. So that, after all, in replevin and detinue, (the only actions for recovering specific possession of personal chattels) if the wrongdoer be very perverse, he cannot be compelled to a restitution of the identical thing taken or detained; but he still has his election, to deliver the goods, or their value: an imperfection in the law, that results from the nature of personal property, which is easily concealed or conveyed out of the reach of justice, and not, like land and other real property, always amenable to the magistrate. Ibid.

Executions in actions where money only is recovered, as a debt or damages, (and not any specific chattel) are of five sorts: either against the body of the defendant; or against his goods and chattels; or against his goods and the profits of his lands; or against his goods and the possession of his lands; or against all three, his body, lands, and goods. 3 Black. 414.

1. The first of these species of execution is by writ of capias ad satisfaciendum, which distinguishes it from the former capias ad respondendum, which lies to compel an appearance at the beginning of a suit. And, properly speaking, this cannot be sued out against any but such as were liable to be taken upon the former capias. The intent of it is to imprison the body of the debtor till satisfaction be made for the debt, costs, and damages: it therefore doth not lie against any privileged persons, peers, or members of parliament, nor against executors or administrators, nor against such other persons as could not be originally held to bail. And sir Edw. Coke also gives us a singular instance where a defendant in 14 Ed. 3, was discharged from a capias because he was of so advanced an age, quod pœnam imprisonamenti subire non potest. If an action be brought against a husband and wife, for the debt of the wife, when sole, and the plaintiff recovers judgment, the capias shall issue to take both the husband and wife in execution; but if the action was originally brought against herself, when sole, and pending the suit she marries, the capias shall be awarded against her only, and not against her husband. Yet if judgment be recovered against a husband and wife for the contract, nay even for the personal misbehaviour of the wife during her coverture, the capias shall issue against the husband only, which is one of the greatest privileges of English wives. Ibid.

The writ of capias ad satisfaciendum is an execution of the highest nature, in as much as it deprives a man of his liberty till he makes the satisfaction awarded; and therefore, when a man is once taken in execution upon this writ, no other process can be sued out against his lands or goods. Only, by statute 21 Jac. 1. c. 24, if the defendant dies, while charged in execution upon this writ, the plaintiff may, after his death, sue out new executions against his lands, goods, or chattels. The writ is directed to the sheriff, commanding him to take the body of the defendant, and have him at Westminster, on a day therein named, to make the plaintiff satisfaction for his demand; and if he does not then make satisfaction he must remain in custody till he does. This writ may be sued out, as may all other executory process, for costs, against a plaintiff as well as a defendant, when judgment is had against him. 3 Black. 415.

When a defendant is once in custody upon this process he is to be kept in arcta et salva custodia: and if he be afterwards seen at large it is an escape; and the plaintiff may have an action thereupon against the sheriff for his whole debt. For though, upon arrests, and what is called mesne process, being such as intervenes between the commencement and end of a suit, the sheriff, till the statute 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 27, might have indulged the defendant as he pleased, so as he produced him in court to answer the plaintiff at the return of the writ: yet, upon a taking in execution, he could never give any indulgence; for, in that case, confinement is the whole of the debtor's punishment, and of the satisfaction made to the creditor.—Escapes are either voluntary, or negligent. Voluntary are such as are by the express consent of the keeper, after which he can never retake his prisoner again, (though the plaintiff may retake him at any time) but the sheriff must answer for the debt. Negligent escapes are where the prisoner escapes without his keeper's knowledge or consent; and then upon fresh pursuit the defendant may be retaken, and the sheriff shall be excused, if he has him again before any action brought against himself for the escape. A rescue of a prisoner in execution, either going to gaol or in gaol, or a breach of prison, will not excuse the sheriff from being guilty of and answering for the escape; for he ought to have sufficient force to keep him, seeing he may command the power of the county. But by statute, commonly called the lords acts, if a defendant, charged in execution for any debt less than 100*l.* will surrender all his effects to his creditors, (except his apparel, bedding, and tools of his trade, not amounting in the whole to the value of 10*l.*) and will make oath of his punctual compliance with the statute, the prisoner may be discharged, unless the creditor insists on detaining him; in which case he shall allow him 3*s.* 6*d.* per week, to be paid on the first day of every week, and on failure of regular payment the prisoner shall be discharged. Yet the creditor may, at any future time, have execution against the lands and goods of the defendant, though never more against his person. And, on the other hand, the creditors may, as in case of bankruptcy, compel (under pain of transportation for seven years) such debtor charged in execution for any debt under 100*l.* to make a discovery and surrender of all his effects for their benefit; whereupon he is also entitled to the like discharge of his person. 3 Black. 415, 416.

If a capias ad satisfaciendum is sued out, and a non est inventus is returned thereon, the plaintiff may sue out a process against the bail, if any were given: who, originally stipulated in this triple alternative that the defendant should, if condemned in the suit, satisfy the plaintiff his debt and costs; or, that he should surrender himself a prisoner; or, that they would pay it for him: as therefore the two former branches of the alternative are neither of them complied with, the latter must immediately take place. In order to which a writ of scire facias may be sued out against the bail, commanding them to show cause why the plaintiff should not have execution against them for his debt and damages; and on such writ, if they show no sufficient cause, or the defendant does not surrender himself on the day of return, or of showing cause (for afterwards is not sufficient) the plaintiff may have judgment against the bail, and take out a writ of capias ad satisfaciendum, or other process of execution against them. 3 Black. 417.

2. The next species of execution is against the goods and chattels of the defendant, and is called a writ of fieri facias, from the words in it, where the sheriff is commanded, quod fieri faciat de bonis, that he cause to be made of the goods and chattels of the defendant the sum or debt recovered. This lies as well against privileged persons, peers, &c. as other common persons, and against executors or administrators with regard to the goods of the deceased. The sheriff may not break open any outer doors to execute either this or the former writ, but must enter peaceably, and may then break open any inner door belonging to the defendant, in order to take the goods. And he may sell the goods and chattels (even an estate for years, which is a chattel real) of the defendant, till he has raised enough to satisfy the judgment and costs, first paying the landlord of the premises upon which the goods are found, the arrears of rent then due, not exceeding one year's rent in the whole. If part only of the debt be levied on a fieri facias, the plaintiff may have a capias ad satisfaciendum for the residue. Ibid.

A third species of execution is by writ of levari facias, which affects a man's goods and the profits of his lands, by commanding the sheriff to levy the plaintiff's debt on the lands and goods of the defendant, whereby the sheriff may seize all his goods, and receive the rents and profits of his lands, till satisfaction be made to the plaintiff. Little use is now made of this writ, the remedy by elegit, which takes possession of the lands themselves, being much more effectual. And of this species is a writ of execution proper only to ecclesiastics, which is given when the sheriff, upon a common writ of execution sued, returns that the defendant is a beneficed clerk, not having any lay-fees. In this case a writ goes to the bishop of the diocese, in the nature of a levari, or fieri facias, to levy the debt and damages de bonis ecclesiasticis, which are not to be touched by lay hands; and thereupon the bishop sends out a sequestration of the profits of the clerk's benefice, directed to the churchwardens, to collect the same, and pay them to the plaintiff, till the full sum be raised. 3 Black. 418.

4. The fourth species of execution is by the writ of elegit, which is a judicial writ given by the stat. Westm. 2. 13 Ed. 1. c. 18, either upon a judgment for a debt, or damages, or upon the forfeiture of a recognizance taken in the king's court. By the common law a man could only have satisfaction of goods, chattels, and the present profits of lands by the two last-mentioned writs of fieri facias or levari facias, but not the possession of the lands themselves, which was a natural consequence of the feodal principles, which prohibited the alienation, and of course the encumbering of the fief with the debts of the owner. And, when the restriction of alienation began to wear away, the consequence still continued; and no creditor could take the possession of lands, but only levy the growing profits; so that if the defendant aliened his lands the plaintiff was ousted of his remedy. The statute therefore granted this writ, (called an elegit, because it is in the choice or election of the plaintiff whether he will sue out this writ, or one of the former) by which the defendant's goods and chattels are not sold, but only appraised, and all of them (except oxen and beasts of the plough) are delivered to the plaintiff, at such reasonable appraisement and price, in part of satisfaction of his debt. If the goods are not sufficient, then the moiety, or one half of his freehold lands, whether held in his own name, or by any other in trust, for him, are also to be delivered to the plaintiff, to hold till out of the rents and profits thereof the debt be levied, or till the defendant's interest be expired; as, till the death of the defendant, if he be tenant for life or in tail. During this period the plaintiff is called tenant by elegit. Till this statute, by the ancient common law, lands were not liable to be charged with, or seised for, debts; because by this means the connection between lord and tenant might be destroyed, fraudulent alienations might be made, and the services be transferred to be performed by a stranger, provided the tenant incurred a large debt sufficient to cover the land. And therefore, even by this statute, only one half was, and now is, subject to execution; that out of the remainder sufficient might be left for the lord to distrain upon for his services. And upon the same feodal principle copyhold lands are at this day not liable to be taken in execution upon a judgment. But in case of a debt to the king it appears by Magna

Charta, c. 8, that it was allowed by the common law for him to take possession of the lands till the debt was paid: for he being the grand superior, and ultimate proprietor of all landed estates, might seize the lands into his own hands if any thing was owing from the vassal; and could not be said to be defrauded of his services, when the ouster of the vassal proceeded from his own command. This execution, or seizing of lands by elegit, is of so high a nature that after it the body of the defendant cannot be taken; but if execution can only be had of the goods, because there are no lands, and such goods are not sufficient to pay the debt, a capias ad satisfaciendum may then be had after the elegit, for such elegit is in this case no more in effect than a fieri facias. So that body and goods may be taken in execution, or land and goods; but not body and land too, upon any judgment between subject and subject in the course of the common law. But,

5. Upon some prosecutions given by statute, as in the case of recognizances or debts acknowledged on statutes-merchant, or statutes-staple, (pursuant to the statutes 13 Edw. 1. de mercatoribus, and 27 Edw. 3, c. 9) upon forfeiture of these, the body, lands, &c. to be appraised to their full extended value, before the sheriff delivers them to the plaintiff, that it may be certainly known how soon the debt will be satisfied. And by statute 33 Hen. 8. c. 39, all obligations made to the king shall have the same force, and of consequence the same remedy to recover them, as a statute-staple; though indeed, before this statute, the king was entitled to sue out execution against the body, lands, and goods of his accountant or debtor. And his debt shall, in suing out execution, be preferred to that of every other creditor who has not obtained judgment before the king commenced his suit. The king's judgment also affects all lands which the king's debtor has at or after the time of contracting his debt, or which any of his officers mentioned in the stat. 13 Eliz. c. 4, has, at or after the time of his entering on the office; so that if such officer of the crown aliens for a valuable consideration, the land shall be liable to the king's debt, even in the hands of a bonâ fide purchaser, though the debt due to the king was contracted by the vendor many years after the alienation. Whereas judgments between subject and subject relates, even at common law, no further back than the first day of the term in which they were recovered, in respect of the lands of the debtor, and did not bind his goods and chattels, but from the date of the writ of execution. And now, by the statute of frauds, 29 Car. 2, c. 3, the judgment shall not bind the land in the hands of a bonâ fide purchaser, but only from the time of actually signing the same, nor the goods in the hands of a stranger, or a purchaser, Skin. 257, but only from the actual delivery of the writ to the sheriff. 3 Black. 418--421.

These are the methods which the law of England has pointed out for the execution of judgments; and when the plaintiff's demand is satisfied, either by the voluntary payment of the defendant, or by this compulsory process, or otherwise, satisfaction ought to be entered on the record, that the defendant may not be liable to be afterwards harassed a second time on the same account. But all these writs of execution must be sued out within a year and a day after the judgment is entered, otherwise the court concludes primâ facie that the judgment is satified and extinct; yet however it will grant a writ of scire facias in pursuance of Stat. Westm. 2. 13 Edw. 1, c. 45, for the defendant to show cause why the judgment should not be revived, and execution had against him; to which the defendant may plead such matter as he has to allege, in order to show why process of execution should not be issued; or the plaintiff may still bring an action of debt, founded on this dormant judgment, which was the only method of revival allowed by the common law. Co. Lit. 290. 3 Black. 421.

Execution from inferior courts.] By 19 Geo. 3, c. 70, when final judgment is obtained in an inferior court, on affidavit thereof in a court of record at Westminster, and that execution has been sued out, and that the defendant is not to be found within the jurisdiction of such inferior court, the judgment may be removed, and execution sued in the court above. s. 1.

No execution for less than 10*l.* in an inferior court shall be stayed, or a writ of error, or supersedeas allowed, unless the defendant, with two sureties, give a recognizance in double the above sum, to prosecute such writ of error with effect, and pay the debt and costs, if the judgment be affirmed. s. 5.

For the poundage on executions see POUNDAGE.

EXECUTION IN EQUITY. Writs of execution of orders and decrees in the courts of equity are made out by the clerks in court, and after service thereof upon the party personally, by delivery to and leaving with him a true copy of the writ of execution, showing the original writ under seal at the time of service; the performance of such orders and decrees may be enforced by a commitment of the person under an attachment for his contempt in non-performance, or by a sequestration of his estates.

EXECUTION for the king's debt, or prerogative execution, is always preferred before any other executions. 7 Rep. 20.

EXECUTION OF CRIMINALS. This,

in all cases, as well capital as otherwise, must be performed by the legal officer, the sheriff or his deputy; whose warrant for so doing was anciently by precept under the hand and seal of the judge, as it is still practised in the court of the lord high steward, upon the execution of a peer. 2 Hal. P. C. 409. though, in the court of the peers in parliament it is done by writ from the king. Finch L. 478. However, in general, in case of life, the judge may command execution to be done without any writ. And now the usage is, for the judge to sign the calendar, or list of all the prisoners names, with their separate judgments in the margin, which is left with the sheriff. Thus for a capital felony, it is written opposite to the prisoner's name "let him be "hanged by the neck;" formerly, in the days of Latin and abbreviation, Staundf. P. C. 182, "sus. per. col." for "suspen- "datur per collum." And this is the only warrant that the sheriff has for so material an act as taking away the life of another. 5 Mod. 22.

In this, however, though it be true that a marginal note of a calendar, signed by the judge, is the only warrant that the sheriff has for the execution of a convict, yet it is made with great caution and solemnity. At the end of the assizes the clerk of assize makes out in writing four lists of all the prisoners, with separate columns, containing their crimes, verdicts, and sentences, leaving a blank column, in which, if the judge has reason to vary the course of the law, he writes opposite the names of the capital convicts, to be reprieved, respited, transported, &c.— These four calendars, being first carefully compared together by the judge and the clerk of assize, are signed by them, and one is given to the sheriff, one to the gaoler, and the judge and the clerk of assize each keep another. If the sheriff receives afterwards no special order from the judge, he executes the judgment of the law in the usual manner, agreeably to the directions of his calendar. In every county this important subject is settled with great deliberation by the judge and the clerk of assize, before the judge leaves the assize-town; but probably in different counties, with some slight variation, as in Lancashire no calendar is left with the gaoler, but one is sent to the secretary of state. 4 Black. Com. 404. n. 1, by Christian.

If the judge thinks it proper to reprieve a capital convict, he sends a memorial or certificate to the king's most excellent majesty, directed to the secretary of state's office, stating that, from favourable circumstances appearing at the trial, he recommends him to his majesty's mercy, and to a pardon upon condition of transportation, or some slight punishment. This recommendation is always attended to. Ibid.

The sheriff upon receipt of his warrant is to do execution within a convenient time; which in the country is also left at large. In London a more solemn exactness is used, both as to the warrant of execution, and the time of executing thereof: for the recorder, after reporting to the king in person the case of the several prisoners, and receiving his royal pleasure, that the law must take its course, issues his warrant to the sheriffs; directing them to do execution on the day and at the place assigned. And, in the court of king's bench, if the prisoner be tried at the bar, or brought there by habeas corpus a rule is made for his execution; either specifying the time and place, or leaving it to the discretion of the sheriff. And, throughout the kingdom, by statute 25 Geo. 2. c. 37, it is enacted that, in case of murder, the judge shall in his sentence direct execution to be performed on the next day but one after sentence passed. But, otherwise, the time and place of execution are by law no part of the judgment.

The sheriff cannot alter the manner of the execution by substituting one death for another, without being guilty of felony himself, 2 Hawk. P. C. 463. It is held also by sir Edward Coke, 3 Inst. 52, and sir Matthew Hale, 2 Hale's Pl. C. 412, that even the king cannot change the punishment of the law, by altering the hanging or burning into beheading; though, when beheading is part of the sentence, the king may remit the rest. And, notwithstanding some examples to the contrary, sir Edward Coke stoutly maintains, that "judicandum "est legibus, non exemplis." But others have thought, Fost. 270. F. N. B. 244. h. 19 Rym. Fœd. 284, and more justly, that this prerogative, being founded in mercy, and immemorially exercised by the crown, is part of the common law. For hitherto, in every instance, all these exchanges have been for more merciful kinds of death; and how far this may also fall within the king's power of granting conditional pardons, (viz. by remitting a severe kind of death, on condition that the criminal submits to a milder,) is a matter that may bear consideration. It is observable, that when lord Strafford was executed for the popish plot in the reign of king Charles the Second, the then sheriffs of London, having received the king's writ for beheading him, petitioned the house of lords for a command or order from their lordships, how the said judgment should be executed: for he being prosecuted by impeachment, they entertained a notion (which is said to have been countenanced by lord Russel) that the king could not pardon any part of the sentence. 2 Hume's Hist. of G. B. 328. The lords resolved, Lords Journ. 21 Dec. 1680, that the scruples of the sheriffs were unnecessary, and declared, that the king's writ ought to be obeyed. Disappointed of raising a flame in that assembly, they immediately signified, Com. Journ. 21 Dec. 1680, to the house of commons by one of the members, that they were not satisfied as to the power of the said writ. That house took two days to consider of it; and then, 23 Dec. 1680, sullenly resolved, that the house was content that the sheriff do execute lord Strafford by severing his head from his body. It is further related, that when afterwards the same lord Russel was condemned for high treason upon indictment, the king, while he remitted the ignominious part of the sentence, observed, "that his lordship would "now find he was possessed of that prero-"gative, which in the case of lord Strafford "he had denied him, 2 Hume 360." One can hardly determine (at this distance from those turbulent times) which most to disapprove of, the indecent and sanguinary zeal of the subject, or the cool and cruel sarcasm of the sovereign. 4 Black. 405.

To conclude: it is clear, that if, upon judgment to be hanged by the neck till he is dead, the criminal be not thoroughly killed, but revives, the sheriff must hang him again. 2 Hal. P. C. 412. 2 Hawk. P. C. 462. For the former hanging was no execution of the sentence; and, if a false tenderness were to be indulged in such cases, a multitude of collusions might ensue. Nay even while abjurations were in force, such a criminal so reviving was not allowed to take sanctuary and abjure the realm; but his flying to sanctuary was held an escape in the officer. Fitzh. Abr. tit. corone, 335. Finch L. 467. 4 Black. 326. 406.

EXECUTION OF STATUTES. The court of Star Chamber, erected in the reign of Hen. 7, was said to be for the execution of Statutes, &c. Stat. 3 H. 7, c. 1.

EXECUTIONE FACIENDA IN WITHERNAMIUM, a writ that lies for taking his cattle who has conveyed the cattle of another out of the county, so that the sheriff cannot replevy them. Reg. Orig. 82.

EXECUTIONE JUDICII, is a writ directed to the judge of an inferior court to do execution upon a judgment therein, or to return some reasonable cause wherefore he delays the execution. F. N. B. 20. If execution be not done on the first writ, an alias shall issue, and a pluries with this clause vel causam nobis significes quare, &c. And if upon this writ execution is not done, or some reasonable cause returned why it is delayed, the party shall have an attachment against him who ought to have done the execution, returnable in B. R. or C. B. New Nat. Br. 43.

EXECUTIVE POWER. The supreme executive power of these kingdoms is vested by our laws in a single person, the king, or queen, for the time being. 1 Black. 190.

The executive power, in this state, hath a right to a negative, in parliament, i. e. to refuse assent to any acts offered, or otherwise the other two branches of the legislative power would or might become despotic. Montes. Lib. 12. chap. 6.

EXECUTOR, (Lat.) is one that is appointed by a man's last will and testament, to have the execution thereof after his decease, and the disposing of all the testator's substance according to the tenor of the will: like the hæres designatus or testamentarius in the civil law. Terms de Ley. And all persons are capable of being executors that are capable of making wills, and many others besides, as femes covert, and infants, nay even infants unborn, or in ventre sa mere, may be made executors. West Symb. p. 1. § 635. But no infant can act as such till the age of seventeen years, till which time administration must be granted to some other, durante minore ætate. Went. Off. Ex. c. 18, in like manner as it may be granted durante absentia, or pendente lite, when the executor is out of the realm, 1 Lutw. 342, or when a suit is commenced in the ecclesiastical court touching the validity of the will. 2 P. Wil. 589, 590. This appointment of an executor is essential to the making of a will, Went. c. 1. Plowd. 281. And it may be performed either by express words, or such as strongly imply the same. But if the testator makes an incomplete will, without naming any executors, or if he names incapable persons, or if the executors named refuse to act, in any of these cases the ordinary must grant administration cum testamento annexo, 1 Rol. Abr. 907. Comb. 20, to some other person, and then the duty of the administrator, as also when he is constituted only durante minore ætate, &c. of another, is very little different from that of an executor. And this was law so early as the reign of Hen. 2. Glanv. l. 7. c. 6.

It is laid down as a general rule, that if a creditor makes his debtor executor, it is an extinguishment of the debt, for he cannot sue himself. 1 Rol. Abr. 920, 1. 5 Co. 30. Offic. of Ex. 30. Godolph. 30. But still in equity the executor's debt is assets, with respect to creditors, if the residue of the testator's estate is not sufficient; because it is extinguished not by release, but in the way of legacy. 8 Rep. 136. 2 Rol. Abr. 920.

And if a person dies intestate, and the ordinary commits administration to a debtor, the debt is not thereby extinguished, for he comes into the administration by the act of law, whereas the other is the act of the party. 5 Co. 136. 1 Salk. 306. Offic. of Ex. 51.

And if a person indebted to another makes his creditor or debtor his executor; or if such creditor obtains letters of administration to his debtor, he may retain sufficient to pay himself before any other creditor whose debts are of equal degree. 1 Rol. Abr. 922. Plowd. 543. 3 Black. Com. 18.

An executor may be appointed either by express words, or words that amount to a direct appointment. Wood's Inst. 320.

If there is no executor there is properly no will; and where there is no will there can be no executor; but this is understood of goods, for where lands in fee are devised this is good, though no executor be named, executors having nothing to do with land, which is not testamentary but by act of parliament. Offic. Exec. 3, 4. Finch. 167. And where a testator has omitted to appoint an executor the ordinary will grant an administration, with the will annexed. Perk. 485. 1 Rep. 113.

The interest vested in the executor by the will of the deceased, may be continued and kept alive by the will of the same executor, so that the executor of A's executor is to all intents and purposes the executor and representative of A himself, Stat. 25 Edw. 3. st. 5. c. 5. 1 Leon. 275, But the executor of A's administrator, or the administrator of A's executor, is not the representative of A. (Bro. Abr. tit. Administrator, 7.) For the power of an executor is founded upon the special confidence and actual appointment of the deceased; and such executor is therefore allowed to transmit that power to another, in whom he has equal confidence: but the administrator of A is merely the officer of the ordinary, prescribed to him by act of parliament, in whom the deceased has reposed no trust at all: and therefore on the death of that officer it results back to the ordinary to appoint another. And, with regard to the administrator of A's executor, he has clearly no privity or relation to A; being only commissioned to administer the effects of the intestate executor, and not of the original testator. Wherefore in both these cases, and whenever the course of representation from executor to executor is interrupted by any one administration, it is necessary for the ordinary to commit administration afresh, of the goods of the deceased not administered by the former executor or administrator. And this administrator, de bonis non, is the only legal representative of the deceased in matters of personal property. Styl. 225. But he may, as well as an original administrator, have only a limited or special administration committed to his care, viz. of certain specific effects, such as a term of years and the like; the rest being committed to others. 1 Rol. Abr. 908. Godolph. p. 2. c. 30. Salk. 36.

The office and duty in general are very much the same in both executors and administrators; excepting, first, that the executor is bound to perform a will, which an administrator is not, unless where a testament is annexed to his administration, and then he differs still less from an executor: and, secondly, that an executor may do many acts before he proves the will. Wentw. ch. 3. Thus he may commence an action, but he cannot declare in the action before probate; for when he declares he must produce in court the letters testamentary. And he may release or pay a debt; may assent to a legacy, and be sued before probate; and do other acts, which seem to be fully enumerated in 1 Salk. 299, and Com. Dig. Admin. B. 9. But an administrator may do nothing till letters of administration are issued; for the former derives his power from the will, and not from the probate, Comyns, 151. The latter owes his entirely to the appointment of the ordinary.

The power and duty of a rightful executor or administrator.] 1. He must bury the deceased in a manner suitable to the estate which he leaves behind him. Necessary funeral expenses are allowed previous to all other debts and charges; but if the executor or administrator be extravagant it is a species of devastation or waste of the substance of the deceased, and shall only be prejudicial to himself, and not to the creditors or legatees of the deceased. Salk. 196. Godolph. p. 2. c. 26, sec. 2.

2. The executor or the administrator durante minore ætate, or durante absentia, or cum testamento annexo, must prove the will of the deceased, which is done either in common form, which is only upon his own oath before the ordinary, or his surrogate, or per testes, in more solemn form of law, in case the validity of the will be disputed. Godolph. p. 1. c. 20. sec. 4. When the will is so proved the original must be deposited in the registry of the ordinary, and a copy thereof on parchment is made out under the seal of the ordinary, and delivered to the executor or administrator, together with a certificate of its having been proved before him: all which together is usually styled the probate. In defect of any will, the person entitled to be administrator must also at this period take out letters of administration under the seal of the ordinary; whereby an executorial power to collect and administer, that is, dispose of the goods of the deceased, is vested in him: and he must, by statute 22 & 23 Car. 2 c. 10, enter into a bond with sureties faithfully to execute his trust. If all the goods of the deceased lie within the same jurisdiction, a probate before the ordinary, or an administration granted by him, are the only proper ones: but if the deceased had bona notabilia, or chattels to the value of a hundred shillings, in two distinct dioceses or jurisdictions, then the will must be proved, or administration taken out, before the metropolitan of the province, by way of special prerogative, 4 Inst. 335, whence the courts where the validity of such wills is tried, and the offices where they are registered, are called the prerogative courts, and the prerogative offices, of the provinces of Canterbury and York. Lyndewode, who flourished in the beginning of the fifteenth century, and was official to archbishop Chichele, interprets these hundred shillings to signify solidos legales; of which he tells us seventy-two amounted to a pound of gold, which in his time was valued at fifty nobles or 16*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* He therefore computes, Provinc. l. 3. t. 13. c. item. v. centum. &c. statutum v. laicis, that the hundred shillings, which constitute bona notabilia, were then equal in current money to 23*l.* 3*s.* 0⅓*d.* This will account for what is said in our ancient books, that bona notabilia in the diocese of London (4 Inst. 335. Godolph. p. 2. c. 22.), and indeed every where else (Plowd. 281.), were of the value of ten pounds by composition: for, if we pursue the calculations of Lyndewode to their full extent, and consider that a pound of gold is now almost equal in value to an hundred and fifty nobles, we shall extend the present amount of bona notabilia to nearly 70*l.* But the makers of the canons of 1603 understood this antient rule to be meant of the shillings current in the reign of James I, and have therefore directed (Can. 92.) that five pounds shall for the future be the standard of bona notabilia, so as to make the probate fall within the archiepiscopal prerogative. Which prerogative (properly understood) is grounded upon this reasonable foundation: that, as the bishops were themselves originally the administrators to all intestates in their own diocese, and as the present administrators are in effect no other than their officers or substitutes, it was impossible for the bishops, or those who acted under them, to collect any goods of the deceased, other than such as lay within their own dioceses, beyond which their episcopal authority extends not. But it would be extremely troublesome, if as many administrations were to be granted, as there are dioceses within which the deceased had bona notabilia; besides the uncertainty which creditors and legatees would be at, in case different administrators were appointed, to ascertain the fund out of which their demands are to be paid. A prerogative is therefore very prudently vested in the metropolitan of each province, to make in such cases one administration serve for all. This accounts very satisfactorily for the reason of taking out administration to intestates, that have large and diffusive property, in the prerogative court: and the probate of wills naturally follows, as was before observed, the power of granting administrations; in order to satisfy the ordinary that the deceased has, in a legal manner, by appointing his own executor, excluded him and his officers from the privilege of administering the effects. 2 Black. 509.

3. The executor or administrator is to make an inventory of all the goods and chattels, whether in possession or action, of the deceased; which he is to deliver in to the ordinary upon oath, if thereunto lawfully required. 21 Hen. 8. c. 5.

4. He is to collect all the goods and chattels so inventoried; and to that end he has very large powers and interests conferred on him by law; being the representative of the deceased, (Co. Litt. 209.) and having the same property in his goods as the principal had when living, and the same remedies to recover them. And if there be two or more executors, a sale or release by one of them shall be good against all the rest (Dyer 23.); but in case of administrators it is otherwise (1 Atk. 460.). Whatever is so recovered, that is of a saleable nature and may be converted into ready money, is called assets in the hands of the executor or administrator, (Finch. 119.) that is sufficient or enough, (from the French assez) to make him chargeable to a creditor or legatee, so far as such goods and chattels extend. Whatever assets so come to his hands he may convert into ready money, to answer the demands that may be made upon him. And the goods of a testator, in the possession of the executor, cannot be taken in execution of a judgment in an action brought against the executor in his own right. 4 T. R. 621.

5. The executor or administrator must pay the debts of the deceased. In payment of debts he must observe the rules of priority; otherwise, on deficiency of assets, if he pay those of a lower degree first, he must answer those of a higher out of his own estate. And, first, he may pay all funeral charges, and the expence of proving the will, and the like. Secondly, debts due to the king on record or specialty (1 And. 189.) Thirdly, such debts as are by particular statutes to be preferred to all others; as the forfeitures for not burying in woollen, (stat. 30 Car. 2. c. 3.) money due upon poors rates (stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 38.), for letters to the post office (stat. 9 Ann. c. 10.), and some others. Fourthly, debts of records; as judgments, (docquetted according to the statute 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 20.) statutes and recognizances (4 Rep. 60. Cro. Car. 363.) debts under a decree of a court of equity. 3 P. Wms. 401. Fifthly, debts due on special contracts; as for rent, (for which the lessor has often a better remedy in his own hands, by distraining,) or upon bonds, covenants, and the like, under seal, (Wentw. ch. 12.) And a court of equity will order voluntary bonds or other special contracts, without consideration, to be postponed to simple contract debts. 3 P. Wms. 222. Lastly, debts on simple contract, viz. upon notes unsealed, and verbal promises. Among these simple contracts, servants wages are by some (1 Roll. Abr. 927.) with reason preferred to any other: and so stood the antient law, according to Bracton (l. 2. c. 26.) and Fleta (l. 2. c. 56. s. 10.), who reckon among the first debts to be paid, servitia servientium et stipendia famulorum. Among debts of equal degree, the executor or administrator is allowed to pay himself first, by retaining in his hands so much as his debt amounts to (10 Mod. 496.) But an executor of his own wrong is not allowed to retain: for that would tend to encourage creditors to strive who should first take possession of the goods of the deceased; and would besides be taking advantage of his own wrong, which is contrary to the rule of law (5 Rep. 30.) Also, if no suit is commenced against him, the executor may pay any one creditor in equal degree his whole debt, though he has nothing left for the rest: for, without a suit commenced, the executor has no legal notice of the debt (Dyer 32. 2 Leon. 60.)

After a suit is commenced, the executor or administrator may still give a preference to other creditors of the same degree, by confessing a judgment to them for the real amount of their debts. 1 P. Wms. 295. But after a bill is filed by a creditor for a discovery of assets and payment of his debt, the executor or administrator may not pay another creditor of equal degree without confessing a judgment. 3 P. Wms. 401.

The course of administration, or payment of the debts according to their priority, applies only to legal estates; but as natural equity requires that all the creditors of the testator should be paid equally, when therefore the testator leaves his real estate to trustees or to executors, who thus become trustees, for the payment of his debts, these are called equitable assets, because a court of equity will order all the creditors to be paid pari passu, or an equal share out of this fund. 1 Bro. 138. 2 Atk. 50.

And even where specialty creditors have received part of their debts out of the personal estate, a court of equity will restrain them from receiving any part of the equitable fund, till all the other creditors are paid an equal proportion of their debts. 3 P. Wms. 322.

The personal estate is said to be the natural fund, for the payment of debts, yet it will be exonerated if the testator leaves by his will sufficient real property for the payment of his debts, provided it is the manifest intention that the personal estate shall be exonerated, and that the real estate shall be alone applied to that purpose. 1 Bro. 462. 2 Bro. 60.

If lands descend to the heir charged by the testator with his debts, there it shall be liable to all his debts, although it shall be considered as legal assets, and they shall be paid according to their priority. 2 Atk. 290. 1 P. Wms. 430. The equity of redemption of lands, mortgaged in fee, is equitable assets; for the creditors can have no relief from it, but in a court of equity. 2 Atk. 290.

Actions by and against executors.] The law subjects the executors to every person's claim and action, which he had against the testator, except as to a trespass, vi et armis, &c. committed by the testator; for which reason the executor is said to be the testator's assignee, and to represent the person of the testator: but for personal wrongs done by the testator to the person, or goods, &c. of another, the executor doth not represent him; because personal actions die with the person. Co. Lit. 209. 9 Rep. 89.

One executor cannot regularly sue another at law; but he may have relief in equity: in the eye of the law all are but as one executor; and most acts done by, or to any of them, are esteemed acts done by, or to all of them. 1 Rol. Abr. 918.

Special bail is not required of executors, &c. in any action brought for the testator's debt: and executors, or administrators are not liable to costs, where they sue in right of the testator. Hut. 69. Cro. Eliz. 503. Yelv. 168. Dal. 96. Bend. pl. 28. 2 Rol. 87. Com. Dig. 2 V. 439.

And if an executor brings a writ of error, though the judgment is affirmed, he shall not pay any costs; because as he is executor, it is in auter droit: also an executor shall not put in bail on a writ of error, causa supra. Mich. 5 W. & M. And the reason that executors are excused from paying costs, is their being presumed to have no knowledge of the affairs of the testator; yet they shall pay costs for not going on to trial, or where the cause of action arises to the executor himself, &c. 1 Salk. 207. 3 Salk. 106.

If on a scire facias against an executor, the sheriff return a devastavit; the plaintiff shall have judgment and execution de bonis propriis of the defendant: and if nulla bona be returned, he may have either a capias ad satisfaciend. or an elegit. 2 Nels. 791. Dyer 185. But one executor shall not be charged with a devastavit made by his companion; for the act of one shall charge the other no further than the goods of the testator in his hands amount to. Cro. Eliz. 318.

EXECUTOR DE SON TORT, or executor of his own wrong, is he that takes upon him the office of an executor by intrusion, not being so constituted by the testator; or, for want thereof, appointed by the ordinary to administer. Dyer 166. And if an executor of his own wrong takes upon himself the office of an executor without a lawful authority, he is chargeable to the rightful executor, and to all the creditors of the testator, and likewise to the legatees, so far as the goods amount unto which he wrongfully possessed: and such an executor is made by any act of acquisition, transferring or possessing himself of any of the estate or goods of the deceased; but not by acts of necessity, piety, or charity, as by locking up the goods, or burying the corpse of the deceased. 2 Nels. Abr. 793.

And by statute, persons obtaining any goods or debts of an intestate by fraud, or procuring administration to be granted to a stranger, &c. are chargeable as executors in their own wrong, to the value of the goods or debts, &c. and executors and administrators of executors in their own wrong, shall be liable to pay the debts of the testator; in like manner as their testator or intestate. 43 Eliz. cap. 8. 30 Car. 2. cap. 7.

An executor of his own wrong may be sued as executor; and he shall be sued for legacies, as well as a rightful executor. Noy 13. But he cannot maintain any suit or action himself, because he cannot produce any will to justify it: and the execution shall be awarded for the whole debt, though he meddled with a thing of very small value. Noy 69.

He cannot plead that he never was executor, nor administered as such; for it is not material whether he have assets or no, but to prove that he has administered any thing is enough: for this false plea will make him chargeable with the debt: whereas if he had not pleaded falsely, he would have been liable for no more than the value of the goods of the deceased. Style 120.

Such a one cannot retain for his own debt, against another creditor. 5 Rep. 31. But if afterwards administration is granted him, he may by virtue thereof retain goods for his own debt. 5 Rep. 30.

And an executor de son tort shall be allowed in equity, all such payments which a rightful executor ought to have paid. 2 Chanc. Rep. 33.

EXECUTORY, is where an estate in fee created by deed or fine is to be afterwards executed by entry, livery, writ, &c. And leases for years, rents, annuities, conditions, &c. are called inheritances executory. Wood's Inst. 292. Estates executed are when they pass presently to the person to whom conveyed, without any after-act. 2 Inst. 513.

EXECUTORY DEVISE, is where a future interest is devised, that vests not at the death of the testator, but depends on some contingency which must happen before it can vest. 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 186.

It differs from a remainder in three very material points: 1. That it needs not any particular estate to support it. 2. That by it a fee-simple, or other less estate, may be limited after a fee-simple. 3. That by this means a remainder may be limited of a chattel interest, after a particular estate for life created in the same. 2 Black. 172.

1 The first case happens when a man devises a future estate to arise upon a contingency; and, till that contingency happens, does not dispose of the fee-simple, but leaves it to descend to his heir at law. As if one devises land to a feme-sole and her heirs, upon her day of marriage: here is in effect a contingent remainder without any particular estate to support it; a freehold commencing in futuro. This limitation, though it would be void in a deed, yet it is good in a will, by way of executory devise, (1 Sid. 153.) For, since by a devise, a freehold may pass without corporal tradition or livery of seisin, (as it must do, if it passes at all,) therefore it may commence in futuro; because the principal reason why it cannot commence in futuro in other cases, is the necessity of actual seisin, which always operates in præsenti. And, since it may thus commence in futuro, there is no need of a particular estate to support it; the only use of which is to make the remainder, by its unity with the particular estate, a present interest. And hence also it follows, that such an executory devise, not being a present interest, cannot be barred by a recovery, suffered before it commences. (Cro. Jac. 593.)

2. By executory devise a fee, or other less estate, may be limited after a fee. And this happens where a devisor devises his whole estate in fee, but limits a remainder thereon to commence on a future contingency. As if a man devises land to A. and his heirs; but, if he dies before the age of twenty-one, then to B. and his heirs: this remainder, though void in a deed, is good by way of executory devise (2 Mod. 289.) But, in both these species of executory devises, the contingencies ought to be such as may happen within a reasonable time; as within one or more life or lives in being, or within a moderate term of years; for courts of justice will not indulge even wills, so as to create a perpetuity, which the law abhors (12 Mod. 287. 1 Vern. 164.): because by perpetuities, (or the settlement of an interest, which shall go in the succession prescribed, without any power of alienation, Salk. 229.), estates are made incapable of answering those ends of social commerce, and providing for the sudden contingencies of private life, for which property was at first established. The utmost length that has been hitherto allowed for the contingency of an executory devise of either kind to happen in, is that of a life or lives in being, and one and twenty years afterwards. As where lands are devised to such unborn son of a feme-covert, as shall first attain the age of twenty-one and his heirs; the utmost length of time that can happen before the estate can vest, is the life of the mother and the subsequent infancy of her son: and this hath been decreed to be a good executory devise. Fort. 232.

And lord Kenyon has explained the whole doctrine of executory devises in the following words: "The rules respecting executory devises have conformed to the rules laid down in the construction of legal limitations, and the courts have said, that the estate shall not be unalienable by executory devises for a longer term than is allowed by the limitations of a common law conveyance. In marriage settlements the estate may be limited to the first and other sons of the marriage, in tail; and until the person to whom the first remainder is limited is of age, the estate is unalienable. In conformity to that rule the courts have said, so far we will allow executory devises to be good. To support this position, I could refer to many decisions; but it is sufficient to refer to the duke of Norfolk's case, in which all the learning on this head was gone into; and from that time to the present, every judge has acquiesced in that decision. It is an established rule that an executory devise is good, if it must necessarily happen within a life or lives in being, and twenty-one years, and the fraction of another year, allowing for the time of gestation."—See Long v. Blackall, 7 T. R. 100. In which case it was also determined that a child en ventre sa mere was to be considered as a child born, and therefore that an estate might be devised to it for life, and after its death to its issue in tail.

So in Doe v. Clarke, 2 Hen. Black. 399. a testator had devised his estate to such children as should be living at the time of his death; and the court of common pleas determined that a posthumous child came under that description.

A devise therefore to the youngest son of A, whether A is born, or en ventre sa mere, at the death of the testator, when that youngest son attains the age of twenty-one will be good, but if it were limited a day after that period, it would be null and void:

The subject of executory devises has undergone much learned investigation, in determining the validity of the will of Peter Thelluson, Esq. an eminent merchant in the city of London.

That gentleman had three sons, to whom he bequeathed some inconsiderable pecuniary legacies; but which, he observed, with their own great success, would be sufficient to procure them comfort; but the rest of his immense property, consisting of lands of the annual value of 4,500*l.* and 600,000*l.* in personal property, he devised to trustees, nearly to the following effect; viz. in trust that they should receive the rents, interest, and profits, and dispose of them for the purpose of accumulating, during the lives of his three sons, and the lives of all their sons who should be living at the time of his death, or who should be born within due time afterwards, and during the lives and life of the survivors or survivor of them; and then he directs, that after the decease of the survivor of such persons, the accumulated fund should be divided into three shares, and that one share should be conveyed to the eldest male lineal descendant of each of his three sons; and upon the failure of such a descendant, that share to go to the descendants of the other sons; and upon failure of all such male descendants, he devises all the accumulated property to be applied to the use of the sinking fund. At the time of his death his three sons were living, they had four sons living, and two other twin sons were born soon afterwards, who of course were then en ventre sa mere. It was calculated that at the death of the survivor of these nine persons, the accumulated fund would probably amount to above nineteen million sterling:

This extraordinary will did not originate from any dissatisfaction which the testator's family had ever occasioned, though he was resolved that none of his descendants, who were born, or were in embryo at the time of his death, should ever enjoy any part of this property:

The chancellor, lord Loughborough, lord Alvanley, then master of the rolls, and the judges, Buller and Lawrence, after hearing counsel for several days, were unanimously and clearly of opinion that the period of accumulation in this case was not more extensive than what had been established in former cases, and that it was within the prescribed limit and boundary of executory devises, as these nine lives were wearing out together, like so many candles burning at once; that this property was rendered unalienable only during one life, that of the survivor of the nine; and therefore they held themselves compelled by the force of authorities to decide in favour of the validity of this will. 4 Vesey, jun. 227.

But to prevent similar instances of vanity, illiberality, and folly in future, the 39 & 40 Geo. 3. c. 98. was passed, by which the power of settling and devising property for the purpose of accumulation is restrained in general to twenty-one years after the death of the grantor or the testator. It enacts that no person shall, by any deed, will, or by any other mode, settle or dispose of any real or personal property, so that the rents or profits may be wholly or partially accumulated for a longer term than the life of the grantor, or the term of twenty-one years after the death of the grantor or the testator, or the minority of any person who shall be living, or en ventre sa mere, at the death of the grantor or the testator, or during the minority only of such person as would for the time being, if of full age, be entitled to the rents and produce so directed to be accumulated; and where any accumulation is directed otherwise, such direction shall be void, and the rents and profits, during the time that the property is directed to be accumulated contrary to this act, shall go to such person as would have been entitled thereto, if no such accumulation had been directed; provided that this act shall not extend to any provision for the payment of debts, or for raising portions for children, or to any direction touching the produce of woods or timber.

3. By executory devise a term of years may be given to one man for his life, and afterwards limited over in remainder to another, which could not be done by deed: for by law the first grant of it, to a man for life, was a total disposition of the whole term; a life estate being esteemed of a higher and larger nature than any term of years, (8 Rep. 95.) And, at first, the courts were tender, even in the case of a will, of restraining the devisee for life from aliening the term; but only held, that in case he died without exerting that act of ownership, the remainder over should then take place (Bro. tit. chatteles, 23. Dyer 74.) for the restraint of the power of alienation, especially in very long terms, was introducing a species of perpetuity. But, soon afterwards, it was held, (Dyer 358. 8 Rep. 96.) that the devisee for life hath no power of aliening the term, so as to bar the remainder-man: yet, in order to prevent the danger of perpetuities, it was settled, (1 Sid. 451.) that though such remainders may be limited to as many persons successively as the devisor thinks proper, yet they must all be in esse during the life of the first devisee; for then all the candles are lighted and are consuming together, and the ultimate remainder is in reality only to that remainder-man who happens to survive the rest: and it was also settled, that such remainder may not be limited to take effect, unless upon such contingency as must happen (if at all) during the life of the first devisee, (Skinn. 341. 3 P. Wms. 258.)

It has long been fully settled that a term for years, or any chattel interest, may be given by an executory devise to an unborn child of a person in existence, when it attains the age of twenty-one; and that the limits of executory devises of real and personal property are precisely the same. Fearne, 390. It is very common to bequeath chattel interests to A and his issue, and if he dies without issue, to B. It seems now to be determined, that where the words are such as would have given A an estate-tail in real property, in personal property the subsequent limitations are void, and A has the absolute interest: but if it appears from any clause or circumstance in the will, that the testator intended to give it over only in case A had no issue living at the time of his death, upon that event the subsequent limitation will be good as an executory devise. See Fearne, 371. and cases referred to in 3 Cowe's P. Wms. 262.

EXEMPLIFICATION OF LETTERS PATENT, is a copy or transcript of letters patent, made from the inrolment thereof, and sealed with the great seal of England, which exemplifications may be shewn or pleaded, as the letters patent themselves. 6 R. 2. c. 4. 3 & 4 Ed. 6. c. 4. and 13 Eliz. c. 6. 5 Rep. 53.

EXEMPLIFICATIONE, is a writ granted for the exemplification of an original record. Reg. Orig. 290.

EXEMPTION, (exemptio) signifies a privilege to be free from service or appearance; as knights, clergymen, &c. are exempted to appear at the county-court by statute; and peers from being put upon inquests. 6 Rep. 23. Persons seventy years of age, apothecaries, &c. are also exempted by law from serving on juries: and justices of peace, attorneys, &c. from parish offices. 2 Inst. 247. There is also an exemption from tolls, &c. by the king's letters patent: and a writ of exemption, or of ease, to be quit of serving on juries, and all public service. Shep. Epitom. 1049.

EXERCITUALE, was anciently used for a heriot; being paid only in arms and military accoutrements. Cowel. Blount.

EXFREDIARE, (from the Sax. frede, frith, peace, and frithian) to break the peace, or commit open violence. Ibid.

EX GRAVI QUERELA, is a writ that anciently lay for him to whom any lands or tenements in fee were devised by will, (within any city, town or borough, wherein lands were deviseable by custom) and the heir of the devisor entered and detained them from him. Reg. Orig. 244. Old Nat. Br. 87.

EXHENIUM, or EXENNIUM, a gift or present, and more properly a new year's gift. Cowel. Blount.

EXHIBIT, (exhibitum) where a deed, or other writing in a suit in chancery, or bankruptcy is exhibited to be proved by witnesses, and the examiner or commissioners certify on the back of it, that the deed or writing was shewed to the witness, to prove it at the time of his examination, and by him sworn to; this is called an exhibit.

EXHIBITIO, an allowance for meat and drink, customary among the religious appropriators of churches, who usually made it to the depending vicar: the benefactions settled for the maintaining of scholars in the universities, not depending on the foundation, are also at this day called exhibitions. Cowel. Blount.

EXIGENDARIES OF THE COMMON PLEAS, (exigendarii de banco communi) are otherwise called exigenters, by stat. 10 H. 6. c. 4.

EXIGENT, (exigendo) is a writ that lies where the defendant in an action personal cannot be found, nor any thing of his within the county, whereby to be attached or dis-trained, and is directed to the sheriff, to proclaim and continue five county court days, one after another charging him to appear upon pain of outlawry: it is called exigent, because it exacteth the party, i. e. requires his appearance or forthcoming to answer the law; and if he come not at the last day's proclamation, he is said to be quinquies exactus, and is outlawed. Cromp. Juris. 188.

The writ of exigent also lies on an indictment of felony, where the party indicted cannot be found: and upon suing out an exigent for a criminal matter before conviction, there shall be a writ of proclamation, &c. 3 Inst. 31. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 22. See Outlawry.

EXIGENTER, (exigendarius) an officer of the court of common pleas; of which there are four in number: they make all exigents and proclamations, in actions where process of outlawry doth lie. Cowel. Blount.

EXIGI FACIAS, the exigent is so called. 3 Black. Com. 283.

EXILE, a banishment or driving out of a person. Lit. Dict. And this exile is either by restraint, when the government forbids a man, and makes it penal to return; or it is voluntary, where he leaves his country upon disgust, but may come back at pleasure. 2 Lev. 191.

EXILIUM, signifies a spoiling: or the injury done to tenants, by altering their tenure, ejecting them, &c. and Fleta distinguishes between vastum, destructio, and exilium; for he tells us that vastum and destructio are almost the same, and are properly applied to houses, gardens or woods; but exilium is when tenants are enfranchised, and afterwards unlawfully turned out of their tenements. Cowel. Blount.

EXITUS, issue, or off-spring: and applied to the issues or yearly rents and profits of lands. Ibid.

EXLEGALITUS, is he who is prosecuted as an outlaw. Ibid.

EX MERO MOTU, words used in the king's charters and letters patent, to signify that he grants them of his own will and motion, without petition or suggestion of any other: which words shall be taken most strongly against the king, 1 Co. Rep. 451.

EX OFFICIO, an act done in execution of the power which a person has by virtue of an office, to do in certain cases, and without being applied to: thus a justice of peace may not only grant surety of the peace, at the complaint or request of any person, but he may demand and take it ex officio at discretion, &c. Dalt. 270.

EX OFFICIO INFORMATIONS, are informations at the suit of the king, filed by the attorney-general, as by virtue of his office, without applying to the court wherein filed, for leave, or giving the defendant any opportunity of shewing cause why it should not be filed.

EXONERATIONE SECTÆ, was a writ that lay for the king's ward, to be free from all suit to the county-court, hundred court, leet, &c. during wardship. F. N. B. 158. Cowel. Blount.

EXONERATIONE SECTÆ AD CURIAM BARON. A writ of the same nature, sued by the guardian of the king's ward, and directed to the sheriff or stewards of the court, that they do not distrain him, &c. for not doing suit of court. New Nat. Br. 352. Cowel. Blount.

EX PARTE, partly, or of the one part; as a commission ex parte in chancery, which is a commission taken out and executed by one side or party only, on the other party's neglecting or refusing to join. Cowel. Blount.

EX PARTE TALIS, is a writ that lies for a bailiff or receiver, who having auditors assigned to take his account, cannot obtain of them reasonable allowance, but is cast into prison: and the course in this case is to sue this writ out of the chancery, directed to the sheriff to take four mainpernors to bring his body before the barons of the exchequer at a certain day, and to warn the lord to appear at the same time. F. N. B. 129.

EXPECTANT, having relation to or depending upon; and this word is used in the law with fee, as fee-expectant.

EXPECTANCY, estates in, are of two sorts; one created by the act of the parties, called a remainder; the other by act of law, called a reversion. 2 Black. Com. 163. See title Remainder, Reversion.

EXPEDITATE, (expeditare) in the laws of the forest, signifies to cut out the ball of the dog's fore-feet, for the preservation of the king's game: but the ball of the foot of a mastiff is not to be taken out, but the three claws of the fore-foot on the right side are to be cut off by the skin. Cromp. Juriſd. 152. Manwood, cap. 16.

EXPEDITATÆ ARBORES, trees rooted up or cut down to the roots. Fleta, lib. 2. c. 41. Cowel. Blount.

EXPENCES OF PROSECUTION. On a conviction (or even upon an acquittal where there was a reasonable ground to prosecute, and in fact a bona fide prosecution,) for any grand or petit larceny or other felony, the reasonable expences of prosecution, and also, if the prosecutor be poor, a compensation for his trouble and loss of time, are by stats. 25 Geo. 2. c. 36. and 18 Geo. 3. c. 19. to be allowed him out of the county stock, if he petitions the judge for that purpose, and by stat. 27 Geo. 2. c. 3. explained by the same stat. 18 Geo. 3. c. 19. all persons appearing upon recognizance, or subpœna to give evidence, whether any indictment be preferred or not, and as well without conviction as with it, are entitled to be paid their charges, with a further allowance (if poor) for their trouble and loss of time.

But the costs cannot be allowed the prosector out of the county rates in any case for a misdemeanor.

EXPENCES OF WITNESSES. See Evidence.

EXPENDITORS, are the persons appointed by commissioners of sewers to pay, disburse or expend the money collected by the tax for the repairs of sewers, &c. when paid into their hands by the collectors, on the reparations, amendments, and reformations ordered by the commissioners, for which they are to render accounts when thereunto required. Laws of Sewers, 87, 88.

EXPENSÆ LITIS, costs of suit allowed a plaintiff or defendant recovering in his action. See Costs.

EXPENSIS MILITUM NON LEVANDIS, &c. is an ancient writ to prohibit the sheriff from levying any allowance for knights of the shire, upon those that hold lands in ancient demesne. Reg. Orig. 261. For there is a writ de expensis militum levandis, for levying expences for knights of the parliament, &c. Reg. Orig. 191. Cowel. Blount.

EXPLEES, the rents or profits of an estate, &c. See Explees.

EXPLORATOR, a scout: also a huntsman or chaser. Cowel. Blount.

EXPORTATION, is the shipping or carrying out goods, wares, and the merchandize of England for other countries; mentioned in the statutes relating to the customs.

EXPOSITION OF DEEDS. Deeds are to be expounded according to the apparent intent, and be reasonable and equal, &c. Co. Lit. 313.

EX POST FACTO, is a term used in the law, signifying something done after the time when it should have been done: thus an act done, or estate granted, may be made good by matter ex post facto, that was not so at first, by election, &c. As sometimes a thing well done at first, may afterwards become ill. 5 Rep. 22. 8 Rep. 146.

EXTEND, (extendere) is to value the lands or tenements of one bound by a statute, who hath forfeited his bond, at such an indifferent rate, as by the yearly rent the creditor may in time be paid his debt. F. N. B. Cowel. Blount.

EXTENDI FACIAS, a writ of extent, whereby the value of lands is commanded to be made and levied, &c. Reg. Orig.

EXTENT, (extenta) signifies a writ or commission to the sheriff for the valuing of lands or tenements; and sometimes the act of the sheriff or other commissioners upon this writ. Bro. 313. Stat. 16 & 17 Car. 2. cap. 5. Cowel. Blount. See also title Execution.

EXTINGUISHMENT, (from extinguo) signifies a consolidation: for example, if a man hath a yearly rent out of lands, and afterwards purchases the lands whereout it ariseth, so that he hath as good an estate in the land as the rent, now both the property and rent are consolidated or united in one possessor; and therefore the rent is said to be extinguished. Also where a person has a lease for years, and afterwards buys the property; this is a consolidation of the property and fruits, and is an extinguishment of the lease: but if a man have an estate in land but for life or years, and hath a higher estate as a fee-simple in the rent; the rent is not extinguished, but in suspence for a time; for after the term, the rent shall revive. Terms de Ley.

EXTINGUISHMENT OF COMMON. By purchasing lands wherein a person hath common appendant, the common is extinguished. Cro. Eliz. 594. A commoner releases his common in one acre, it is an extinguishment of the whole common. Show. Rep. 350. And where a person hath common of vicinage, if he incloses any part of the land, all the common is extinct. 1 Brownl. 174.

But if one hath common appendant in a great waste, belonging to his tenant, and the lord improve part of the waste leaving sufficient; if he after make a feoffment to the commoner of the land improved, this will be no extinguishment. Dyer 339. Hob. 172. A commoner aliens part of his land, to which the common doth belong; the common is not extinct, but shall be divided. 2 Shep. Abr. 152. Vide Common.

EXTINGUISHMENT OF COPYHOLD. Any act of the copyholder's, which denotes his intention to hold no longer of his lord, and amounts to a determination of his will, is an extinguishment of his copyhold. Hutt. 81. Cro. Eliz. 21. 1 Jon. 41. As if a copyholder in fee accepts a lease for years of the same land from the lord, or the lord leases to another, and the copyholder accepts an assignment from the lessee. Moor 184. 2 Co. 16. b. Godb. 11, 101.

So if a copyholder bargains and sells his copyhold to the lessee for years of the manor, or if he joins with his lord in a feoffment of the manor, his copyhold is extinct. Hutt. 65. 1 Jon. 41. S. C. Godb. 11.

And so it is if a copyholder accepts to hold of his lord, by any less estate than he has in the grounds, this is an extinguishment. 1 And. 199. Latch. 213.

EXTINGUISHMENT OF DEBT. If feme sole debtee take the debtor to husband, or if there be two joint obligors in a bond, and the obligee marries one of them; or in case a person is bound to a feme sole and another, and she takes the obligor to husband; in these cases, the debt will be extinguished. 8 Rep. 136. And if a debtor makes the debtee his executor, or him and another executor, and they take the executorship upon them; or if the debtee makes his debtor executor, &c. it is an extinguishment of the debt, and it shall never revive. Plowd. 184. 1 Salk. 304. But in the latter case the debt is in equity in favor of creditors, if the residue of the testator's estate is not sufficient. 8 Rep. 136. 2 Rol. Abr. 920.

It is agreed as a general rule, that a creditor's accepting a higher security than he had before, is an extinguishment of the first debt; as if a creditor by simple contract accepts an obligation, this extinguishes the simple contract debt. 1 Rol. Abr. 470, 471, 604. 6 Co. 44.

So if a man accepts a bond for a legacy, he cannot after sue for his legacy in the spiritual court; for by the deed the legacy is extinct, and it is become a mere debt at common law. Yelv. 38.

So if a bond creditor obtains judgment on the bond, or has judgment acknowledged to him, he cannot afterwards bring an action on the bond; for the debt is drowned in the judgment, which is a security of a higher nature than the bond. 6 Co. 44. b.

But the accepting a security of an inferior nature is by no means an extinguishment of the first debt; as if a bond be given in satisfaction of a judgment. Cro. Jac. 579. 2 Brownl. 29. Cro. Jac. 649, 650.

Also the accepting a security of equal degree is no extinguishment of the first debt; as where an obligee has a second bond given to him; for one deed cannot determine the duty upon another. Cro. Eliz. 304, 716, 727. 1 Brownl. 74. Lit. Rep. 58. Cro. Car. 86.

By release of part of a debt due on bond, the whole is gone, and the obligation extinguished. Bro. Contract. 80. 1 And. 235.

EXTINGUISHMENT OF LIBERTIES. As to liberties and franchises granted by the king, sometimes they may be extinguished, and sometimes they shall not. Moor 474. When the king grants any privileges, liberties or franchises, which were in his own hands, as parcel of the flowers of the crown; such as bona felonum, fugitivorum & utlagatorum, waifs, strays, deodand, wreck on the sea, &c. if they come to the crown again, they are drowned and extinct in the crown, and the king is seised of them jure coronæ: but if liberties of fairs, markets, or other franchises, and jurisdictions, be erected and created by the king, they will not be extinguished, nor their appendances severed from the possessions. 9 Rep. 25. A man has liberties by prescription, if he takes letters patent of them, the prescription will be gone and extinct; for things of a higher determine those of a lower nature. 2 H. 7. 5.

EXTINGUISHMENT OF SERVICES. The lord purchases or accepts parcel of the tenancy, out of which an entire service is to be paid or done: by this the whole service will be extinct: but if the service be pro bono publico, then no part of it shall be extinguished; and homage and fealty are not subject to extinguishment, by the lord's purchasing part of the land. 6 Rep. 1, 105. Co. Lit. 149. If the lord and another person do purchase the lands, whereout he is to have services, they are extinct: also by severance of the services, a manor may be extinguished. Co. Lit. 147. 1 And. 257.

EXTINGUISHMENT OF WAYS. If a man hath a way as appendant, and after purchases the land wherein this way is, the way is extinct. Terms de Ley. Though a way of necessity to market, or church, or to arable land, &c. is not extinguished by purchase of ground, or unity of possession. 11 H. 7. 25. Co. Lit. 155.

EXTIRPATIONE, is a judicial writ, either before or after judgment, that lies against a person who when a verdict is found against him for land, &c. doth maliciously overthrow any house, or extirpate any trees upon it. Reg. Jud. 13. 56. Cowel. Blount.

EXTOCARE, to grub up lands, and reduce them to arable or meadow. Mon. Ang. tom. 2. p. 71. Cowel. Blount.

EXTORTION, (extorsio, from extorqueo, to wrest away) is an abuse of public justice, and consists in any officer's taking by colour of his office, from any one any money, or thing of value, where none at all is due, or not so much is due, or before it is due. Co. Lit. 368. 10 Rep. 102. 1 Hawk. P. C. 170.

And extortion in a large sense, is taken for any oppression by power or pretence of right. 1 Hawk. P. C. 170.

This offence by the common law is severely punished on indictment by fine and imprisonment, and removal of officers from the offices wherein committed. 4 Black. 141.

EXTRACTA CURIÆ, the issues or profits of holding a court arising from the customary fees, &c. Paroch. Antiq. 572. Cowel. Blount.

EXTRACTS of writings or records, are the short contents thereof.

EXTRA-JUDICIAL, any act done or judgment given, out of the ordinary course of the law, in a case, not then before the court, or in a cause wherein the judge has not jurisdiction, is perused extrajudicial.

EXTRA-PAROCHIAL, signifies to be out of the bounds or limits of a parish; which extra-parochial places are privileged and exempt from the duties of a parish. Thus extra-parochial lands signify lands newly left by the sea, not taken into any parish.

EXTRAVAGANTS, are certain constitutions of popes, so called, because they are extra corpus canonicum gratiani, sive extra decretorum libros vagantur. Du Cange. 1 Black. 82.

EXTUMÆ, reliques in churches and tombs. Cartular. Abbat. Glaston. MS. f. 15. Cowel. Blount.

EXUPERARE, to overcome; and it sometimes signifies to apprehend or take, as, exuperare vivum vel mortuum. Leg. Edm. c. 2. Cowel. Blount.

EY, insula, an island: and where the names of places end in ey, it denotes them an island. As Ramsey, Sheppy, Hersey, &c. Ibid.

EYE, putting out. See Mayhem.

EYERY of hawks. See Aery.

EYRE. See Eire, and Justices in Eyre.

F

F was a letter wherewith felons, &c. were branded and marked with a hot iron, on their being admitted to the benefit of clergy. Stat. 4 H. 7. c. 13. But this is abolished by stats. 4 Geo. 1. c. 11. 6 Geo. 1. c. 23. and 19 Geo. 3. c. 74. See Clergy.

FABRICK LANDS, lands given towards the rebuilding or repairing of cathedral and other churches. Cowel. Blount.

FACTO, in fact; as where any thing is actually done, &c. thus in stat. 1 Ed. 4. c. 1. the three Henrys are stiled nuper de facto, et non de jure, reges Angliæ.

FACTOR, the agent of a trader or manufacturer, constituted by letter or power of attorney, and if the principal give the factor a general commission to act for the best, he may do for him as he thinks fit; but otherwise he may not. Lex Mercat. 151.

A bare commission to a factor to sell and dispose of merchandize, is not a sufficient power for the factor to entrust any person, or to give a further day of payment than the day of the sale of the goods. 1 Bulst. 102.

If a factor buys goods on account of his principal, where he is used so to do, the contract of the factor shall oblige the principal to a performance of the bargain. But where goods are bought or exchanged without orders, it is at the merchant's curtesy whether he will accept of them or turn them on the factor's hands. Lex Mer. 154, 5. Goldsb. 137.

Goods remitted to a factor ought to be carefully preserved; and he is accountable for all lawful goods which shall come to his hands. 4 Rep. 83. (See also title Bailment.)

If the factor has orders from his principal not to sell any goods but in such a manner, and he breaks those orders, he is liable to the loss or damage that shall be received thereby. Lex Mercat. 154, 155.

When a factor has bought or sold goods pursuant to orders, he is immediately to give advice of it to his principal; and where a factor has made a considerable profit for his principal, he must take due care in the disposition of the same; for without commission, or particular orders, he is answerable. Ibid. A factor shall suffer for not observing orders; and no factor acting for another man's account in merchandize, can justify receding from the orders of his principal, though there may be a probability of advantage by it: and if he make any composition with creditors without orders, he shall answer it to his principal. Ibid.

Factors ought to observe the contents of all letters from their principals, or written to them by their order. A merchant is answerable in action upon the case for the deceits of his factor, in selling goods abroad: and as somebody must be a loser by such deceit, it is more reasonable that he who employs, and puts confidence in the deceiver, should lose, than a stranger. 1 Salk. 289.

Though a factor has power to sell, and thereby bind his principal, yet he cannot bind or affect the property of the goods by pledging them as a security for his own debt, though there is the formality of a bill of parcels and a receipt. Stran. 1178.

Factors are also liable to the statutes concerning bankrupts. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. s. 39.

And where a factor sells the goods of his principal, on credit, without mentioning the name of his principal, and the factor becomes bankrupt, before payment, the assignees shall not receive the money, but the principal.

Also if one employs a factor, and entrusts him with the disposal of merchandize, and the factor receives the money, and dies indebted, to debts of a higher nature, and it appears by evidence, that this money was vested in other goods, and remains unpaid, those goods shall be taken as part of the merchant's estate, and not the factor's; but if the factor have the money it shall be looked upon as the factor's estate. 1 Salk. 160.

Also, if a person employs a factor to sell goods, who sells them on credit, and before the money is paid dies indebted more than his assets will pay, this money shall be paid to the principal merchant, and not to the factor's administrator, but thereout must be deducted what was due for commission: for a factor is in nature only of a trustee for his principal. 2 Vern. 638.

FACTUM, a man's own fact, act, or deed.

FACULTY, (facultas) a privilege granted to a man by favour and indulgence, to do that which by law he ought not to do. For granting of these there is a court under the archbishop of Canterbury, called the court of the faculties, and the chief officer thereof the master of the faculties, who has power by stat. 25 Hen. 8, cap. 21, to grant dispensations, as to marry persons without the banns first asked, (and every diocesan may make the like grants) to ordain a deacon under age, for a son to succeed the father in his benefice, one to have two or more benefices incompatible, &c. And in this court are registered the certificates of bishops and noblemen granted to their chaplains to qualify them for pluralities and non-residence. 4 Inst. 337.

FASTING-MEN, vassals, or according to Cowel pledges or bondsmen, who, by the custom of the Saxons were fast bound to answer for one another's peaceable behaviour. Cowel. Blount.

FAG, a knot or excrescence in cloth, stat. 4 Ed. 4, c. 1. Thus the fag-end signifies that end of a piece of cloth or linen where the weaver ends his piece, and works up the worst part of his materials. Ibid.

FAGOT, a badge worn in the times of popery by persons who had recanted and abjured what the then powers adjudged heresy. Ibid.

FAIDA, malice or deadly feud. Leg. H. 1, c. 88.

FAILURE OF RECORD, is where an action is brought against a man who alleges in his plea matter of record in bar of the action, and avers to prove it by the record, but the plaintiff saith Nul tiel record, i. e. denies there is any such record: upon which the defendant has a day given him by the court to bring it in, and if he fails to do it, then he is said to fail of his record, and the plaintiff shall have judgment to recover. Terms de Ley.

FAINT-ACTION (Fr. feinte). A feigned action; such, that although the words of the writ are true, yet for certain causes the plaintiff hath no title to recover thereby; but a false action is properly where the words of the writ are false. Co. Lit. 361.

FAINT-PLEADER, is a fraudulent, false or collusory manner of pleading to the deceit of a third person. Stat. 3 Ed. 1, cs 19.

FAIR-PLEADER. See Beaupleader.

FAIR, a greater sort of market, instituted for the convenience of trade and commerce, and that merchants and traders may be furnished with such commodities as they want, at a particular place, without that trouble and loss of time which must necessarily attend travelling about from place to place; and as this is a matter of universal concern to the commonwealth, no person can claim a fair or market unless it be by grant from the king, or by long and immemorial usage and prescription, which pre-supposes such a grant. 2 Inst. 220. 3 Mod. 123. 1 Black. 273.

The limitation of these public resorts to such time and such place as may be most convenient for the neighbourhood, forms a part of the king's prerogative. 1 Black. 273.

And therefore, if any person sets up any such fair or market, without the king's authority, a quo warranto lies against him; and the persons who frequent such fair, &c. may be punished by fine to the king. 3 Mod. 127.

Also it seems, that, if the king grants a patent for holding a fair or market, without a writ of ad quod damnum executed and returned, the same may be repealed by scire facias; for though such fairs and markets are a benefit to the commonwealth, yet too great a number of them may become nuisances to the public, as well as a detriment to those who have more ancient grants. 3 Lev. 222.

Fairs are generally kept once or twice in the year; and it has been observed that fairs were first occasioned by the resort of people to the feast of dedication, and therefore in most places the fairs by old custom are on the same day with the wake or festival of that saint to whom the church was dedicated; and for the same reason kept in the church-yard, till it was enacted by 13 Ed. 1, stat. 2, c. 6, that no fairs or markets shall be kept in church-yards. 2 Inst. 221. Blount.

The court of pie-poudre is a court incident to every fair, &c. of which the steward of him who owns or has the toll of the market, is the judge. And it is instituted to administer justice for all contracts made, and injuries done, in that identical fair or market, and not in any preceding one. 3 Black. 32. But by the stat. 2 Ed. 3, cap. 15. Fairs are not to be kept longer than they ought by the lords thereof, on pain of their being seized into the king's hands until such lords have paid a fine for the offence; and proclamation is to be made how long fairs are to continue: also no merchant shall sell any goods or merchandise at a fair after the time of the fair is ended, under the penalty of forfeiting double the value of the goods sold, one fourth part thereof to the prosecutor, and the rest to the king. 5 Ed. 3. c. 5. Any citizen of London may carry his goods or merchandise to any fair or market in England at his pleasure. See 3 Hen. 7. c. 9.

It is also clearly agreed that if a person has a right to a fair or market, and another erects a fair or market so near his that it becomes a nuisance to his fair, &c. that for this detriment and injury done to him an action on the case lies; for it is implied in the king's grant that it should be no prejudice to another. 2 Rol. Abr. 140. 3 Black. 218.

But in order to make this out to be a nuisance it is necessary, 1st, that my market or fair be the elder, otherwise the nuisance lies at my own door. 2. That the market be erected within the third part of 20 miles from mine; for Sir Matthew Hale construes the dieta, or reasonable day's journey, mentioned by Bracton, lib. 3, c. 16, indeed as it is usually understood, not only in our own law, 2 Inst. 367, but also in the civil, Ff. 2, 11. 1, from which we probably borrowed it. So that if the new market be not within seven miles of the old one it is no nuisance, for it is held reasonable that every man should have a market within one third of a day's journey from his own house; that the day being divided into three parts he may spend one part in going, another in returning, and the third in transacting his necessary business there. 3 Black. 219.

If such market or fair be on the same day with mine it is primâ facie a nuisance to mine, and there needs no proof of it, for the law will intend it to be so: but if it be on any other day it may be a nuisance, though whether it is so or not cannot be intended or presumed, but must be in fact proved to the jury. Ibid.

Also if a man have a fair or market, and a stranger disturbs those who are coming to buy or sell there, by which he loses his toll, or receives some prejudice in the profits arising from his fair, &c. an action on the case lies. 1 Rol. Abr. 106. 2 Vent. 26, 28. So if upon a sale in a fair a stranger disturbs the lord in taking the toll, an action upon the case lies for this. 1 Rol. Abr. 106.

The king is the sole judge where fairs and markets ought to be kept. 3 Mod. 123. And if no place be limited for keeping a fair by the king's grant, the grantees may keep it where they please, or rather where they can most conveniently; and if it be so limited they may keep it in what part of such place they will. 3 Mod. 108.

The owners of fairs are to take care that every thing be sold according to just weight and measure, who for that and other purposes may appoint a clerk of the fair or market, who may take his reasonable and just fees. See 4 Inst. 274. Moor 523. 1 Salk. 327.

Fairs and markets are such franchises as may be forfeited if held contrary to the charter, by disuser, and by extorting fees not justly due. 2 Inst. 220. Finch 164. 3 Mod. 108.

The interest of the owners arises chiefly from tolls, which toll is a reasonable sum due upon sale of things tollable, or for stallage, pickage, or the like. 2 Inst. 222. 2 Jon. 207.

But this is not incident to a fair or market without special grant; for where it is not granted such a fair or market is accounted a free fair or market. 2 Inst. 220. Cro. Eliz. 559.

No toll shall be paid for any thing brought to the fair or market before the same is sold, unless it be by custom time out of mind, and upon such sale the toll is to be paid by the buyer, and therefore Coke says, that a fair or market by prescription is better than one by grant. 2 Inst. 221.

And by West. 1, cap. 31, "Touching them that take outrageous toll, contrary to the common custom of the realm in market towns, it is provided, that if any do so in the king's town which is let in fee-farm, the king shall seize into his own hand the franchise of the market; and if it be another's town, and the same be done by the lord of the town, the king shall do in like manner; and if it be done by a bailiff, or any mean officer, without the commandment of his lord, he shall restore to the plaintiff as much more, for the outrageous taking as he had of him, if he carried away his toll, and shall have 40 days imprisonment."

But where by custom a toll is due upon the sale of any goods in a fair or market, and he who ought to pay it refuses, an action on the case lies against him. 1 Rol. Abr. 103, 104, 106.

Some persons however are exempt from payment of toll, and if the king or any of his progenitors have granted to any to be discharged of toll, either generally or specially, this grant is good to discharge him of all tolls to the king's own fairs or markets, and of the tolls, which, together with any fair or market have been granted after such grant of discharge; but cannot discharge tolls formerly due to subjects either by grant or prescription. 2 Inst. 221.

Also the king himself shall not pay toll for any of his goods; and if any be taken it is punishable within the statute Westm. 1, cap. 31. 2 Inst. 221. So tenants in ancient demesne are free and quit from all manner of tolls in fairs and markets, whether such tenants hold in fee, or for life, years, or at will. 2 Inst. 221. 4 Inst. 269. 1 Rol. Abr. 321.

But this privilege does not extend to him who is a merchant, and gets his living by buying and selling, but is annexed to the person in respect of the land, and to those things which grow and are the produce of the land. F. N. B. 228. 2 Leon. 191. Cro. Eliz. 227. 2 Inst. 221. 1 Rol. Abr. 321, 322.

FAIT, (factum) a deed or writing, lawfully executed. Cowel. Blount.

FAIT ENROLLE, (Fr.) a deed of bargain and sale, enrolled, &c.

FAITOURS, (Fr.) evil doers, or idle livers, from faitardise, a kind of sleepy disease, proceeding from too much sluggishness; and in 7 Ric. 2, c. 5, it seems to be synonymous with vagabonds. Terms de Ley.

FALANG, a jacket or close coat. Cowel. Blount.

FALCATURA, one day's mowing of grass; a customary service to the lord by his inferior tenants. Kennet's Gloss. Cowel. Blount.

FALCO, a falcon. Cowel. Blount.

FALDAGE, (faldagium) a privilege which several lords anciently reserved to themselves, of setting up folds for sheep in any fields within their manors, for the better manurance of the same, not only with their own but their tenants sheep. Cowel. Blount.

FALDÆCURSUS, a sheep-walk, or feed for sheep. 2 Vent. 139.

FALDFEY, FALD-FEE, a fee or rent formerly paid by some customary tenants for liberty to fold their sheep upon their own land. Cowel. Blount.

FALDISTOR, (Sax.) the highest seat of a bishop, enclosed round with a lettice. Ibid.

FALDWORTH, a person of age, that he may be reckoned of some decennary. Ibid.

FALERÆ, (Lat. phaleræ) the tackle and furniture of a cart or wain. Ibid.

FALESIA, a great rock, bank, or hill by the sea side. Ibid.

FALLOW-LAND, land ploughed up, and left for a time unsown, with a view to the improvement of the soil, and the better fitting it for the sowing of grain therein.

FALLUM, a sort of land, as appears by the Monasticon Anglicanum. —— De duobus acris & viginti fullis in, &c. Mon. tom. 2. 425. Cowel. Blount.

FALMOTUM, or falkmote, the same with folkmote. Ibid.

FALSE ACTION. If one man hold another to bail without a reasonable cause, an action upon the case will lie for the vexation and injury. But if he dies pending the suit, the law giveth no remedy in this case, because the truth or falsehood of the matter cannot appear before it is tried. Jenk. Cent. 161. See Faint-Action.

FALSE CLAIM, by the forest laws is where a man claims more than is his due, and is amerced and punished for the same. Manwood, cap. 25. num. 3.

FALSE FORM, in proceedings at law, is aided by a verdict, &c. 1 Keb. 734, 876.

FALSE IMPRISONMENT, (falsum imprisonamentum) is a trespass committed against a person, by arresting and imprisoning him without just cause, contrary to law: or where a man is unlawfully detained without legal process. And if a person be any way unlawfully detained, it is false imprisonment; and considerable damages are recoverable in these actions. Co. Lit. 124.

FALSE JUDGMENT, (Falsum Judicium) is a writ that lieth where false judgment is given in the county-court, court baron, or other courts not of record. F. N. B. 17, 18.

FALSE LATIN. Before the stat. which directs that all law proceedings shall be in English, if a Latin word was significant though not good Latin, yet an indictment, declaration, or fine, should not be made void by it: but if the word was not Latin, nor allowed by the law, and it were in a material point, it made the whole vicious. 5 Rep. 121. 2 Nels. 830. Vide Latin.

FALSE NEWS. Spreading false news, to make discord between the king and nobility, or concerning any great man of the realm, is punished by common law, with fine and imprisonment, which is confirmed by statutes. Westm. 1. 3 Ed. 1. c. 34. 2 Ric. 2. stat. 1. c. 5. And 12 Ric. 2. c. 11. 2 Inst. 226. 3 Inst. 198.

FALSE OATH. See Perjury.

FALSE PLEA. Where a plea is found false by a verdict at law, the judgment is final, and a plaintiff in a suit in equity shall have the same advantage; and shall have all the same consequences there as follow on a false plea at law to all intents. 2 Chanc. Cases 201.

FALSE RETURN, on a false return by a mayor, or other officer to a mandamus, or by a sheriff, to a writ, a special action on the case will lie. 3 Black. 111, 163.

FALSE TOKENS. See Cheats and Swindlers.

FALSE VERDICT, a writ of attaint lieth, to inquire whether a jury of twelve men have given a false verdict; that so the judgment following thereupon may be reversed. It is allowed in almost every action except in a writ of right. 1 Ed. 3, c. 6. 5 Ed. 3. c. 7. 28 Ed. 3. c. 8. 34 Ed. 3. c. 7. 2 Ric. 2. c. 3. 3 Black. 403. But this has long since fallen into disuse. See Attaint.

FALSI CRIMEN, See Forgery.

FALSIFY, to prove a thing to be false. Perk. 383.

FALSIFYING AN ATTAINDER. Judgments, with their several connected consequences, of attainder, forfeiture, and corruption of blood, may be set aside, 1st. By falsifying or reversing the judgment, or 2ndly, by reprieve or pardon, the first of which it is only necessary to treat of in this place.

A judgment may be falsified, reversed, or avoided, in the first place, without a writ of error, for matters foreign to or dehors the record, that is, not apparent upon the face of it: so that they cannot be assigned for error in the superior court, which can only judge from what appears in the record itself; and therefore, if the whole record be not certified, or not truly certified, by the inferior court, the party injured thereby (in both civil and criminal cases) may allege a diminution of the record, and cause it to be rectified. Thus, if any judgment whatever be given by persons, who had no good commission to proceed against the person condemned, it is void, and may be falsified by shewing the special matter, without writ of error. As, where a commission issues to A and B, and twelve others, or any two of them, of which A or B shall be one, to take and try indictments; and any of the other twelve proceed without the interposition or presence of either A, or B: in this case all proceedings, trials, convictions, and judgments are void for want of a proper authority in the commissioners, and may be falsified upon bare inspection without the trouble of a writ of error. 2 Hawk. P. C. 459. It being a high misdemeanor in the judges so proceeding, and little (if any thing) short of murder in them all, in case the person so attainted be executed and suffer death. So likewise if a man purchases land of another; and afterwards the vendor is, either by outlawry or his own confession, convicted and attainted of treason or felony previous to the sale or alienation; whereby such land becomes liable to forfeiture or escheat: now, upon any trial the purchaser is at liberty, without bringing any writ of error, to falsify not only the time of the felony or treason supposed, but the very point of the felony or treason itself; and is not concluded by the confession or the outlawry of the vendor; though the vendor himself is concluded, and not suffered now to deny the fact, which he has by confession or flight acknowledged.—But if such attainder of the vendor was by verdict, on the oath of his peers, the alience cannot be received to falsify or contradict the fact of the crime committed; though he is at liberty to prove a mistake in time, or that the offence was committed after the alienation, and not before. 3 Inst. 251. 1 Hale's P. C. 361. 4 Black. 390.

Secondly, a judgment may be reversed by writ of error, which lies from all inferior criminal jurisdictions to the court of king's bench, and from the king's bench to the house of peers; and may be brought for notorious mistakes in the judgment or other parts of the record: as where a man is found guilty of perjury and receives the judgment of felony, or for other less palpable errors; such as any irregularity, omission, or want of form in the process of outlawry, or proclamations; the want of a proper addition to the defendant's name, according to the statute of additions: for not properly naming the sheriff or other officer of the court, or not duly describing where his county court was held; for laying an offence, committed in the time of the late king, to be done against the peace of the present; and for many other similar causes, which (though allowed out of tenderness to life and liberty) are not much to the credit or advancement of the national justice. These writs of error, to reverse judgments in case of misdemeanors, are not to be allowed of course, but on sufficient probable cause shewn to the attorney-general; and then they are understood to be grantable of common right, and ex debito justitiæ. But writs of error to reverse attainders in capital cases are only allowed ex gratia; and not without express warrant under the king's sign manual, or at least by the consent of the attorney-general. 1 Vern. 170. 175. These therefore can rarely be brought by the party himself, especially where he is attainted for an offence against the state: but they may be brought by his heir, or executor, after his death, in more favourable times, which may be some consolation to his family. 4 Black. 391.

Lastly, the easier and more effectual way is to reverse the attainder by act of parliament. This may and has been frequently done, upon motives of compassion, or perhaps from the zeal of the times, after a sudden revolution in the government, without examining too closely into the truth or validity of the errors assigned. And sometimes, though the crime be universally acknowledged and confessed, yet the merits of the criminal's family shall after his death obtain restitution in blood, honours, and estate, or some or one of them, by act of parliament, which, so far as it extends, has all the effect of reversing the attainder, without casting any reflections upon the justice of the preceding sentence. 4 Black. 392. And this has lately been done with respect to the forfeited estates in Scotland, by statute 24 Geo. 3, c. 57.

The effect of falsifying, or reversing, an outlawry is, that the party shall be in the same plight as if he had appeared upon the capias; and if it be before the plea pleaded he shall be put to plead to the indictment; if after conviction he shall receive the sentence of the law: for all the other proceedings, except only the process of outlawry for his non-appearance, remain good and effectual as before: but when judgment pronounced upon conviction is falsified or reversed, all former proceedings are absolutely set aside, and the party stands as if he had never been at all accused, restored in his credit, his capacity, his blood, and his estates; with regard to which last, though they be granted away by the crown, yet the owner may enter upon the grantee with as little ceremony as he might enter upon a disseisor. 2 Hawk. P. C. 462,

But he still remains subject to another prosecution for the same offence: for the first being erroneous he never was in jeopardy thereby. 4 Black. 392.

FALSIFYING A RECOVERY. Issue in tail may falsify a recovery suffered by tenants for life, &c. And it has been held that a person may falsify a recovery had by the issue in tail, where an estate tail is before bound by a fine. 2 Nels. Abr. 831. But where there is tenant for life, remainder in tail, and reversion in fee, tenant for life suffers a common recovery, in which he in remainder is vouched, and the uses declared to him, who had the remainder in tail; adjudged, that by the recovery all remainders and reversions are barred, and that they could not falsify this recovery. 10 Rep. 43.

He in reversion suffered a common recovery, and declared the uses; his heir shall not falsify it by pleading that his father had nothing at the time of the recovery, because he is estopped to say he is not tenant to the præcipe. Godb. 189. An infant brought an assise in B. R. pending which action the tenant brought an assise against the infant in C. B. for the same land, and had judgment by default, which he pleaded in bar to the assise brought by the infant; who set forth all this matter in his replication, and that the demandant at the time of the second writ brought was tenant of the land, and prayed that he might falsify this recovery; and it was held that he might, because he could not have writ of error, or attaint. Godb. 271. Cro. Eliz. 284. It has been determined, that a recovery is not so firm, but it may be falsified in point of recovery of the thing itself, between the same parties. Ibid.

FALSIFYING A VERDICT, Where in any real action there is a verdict against tenant in tail the issue can never falsify such verdict in the point directly tried; but only in a special manner, as by saying that some evidence was omitted, &c. 2 Ld. Raym. 1050.

FALSO RETURNO BREVIUM, is a writ that lies against the sheriff who has execution of process for false returning of writs. Reg. Jud. 43.

FAMILIA, signifies all the servants belonging to a particular master; but in another sense it is taken for a portion of land sufficient to maintain one family. It is sometimes mentioned by our writers to be a hide of land, which is also called a manse, and sometimes carucata, or a plough-land. Cowel Blount.

FANATICS, are persons pretending to be inspired; a reproachful name applied to all sectaries and factious dissenters from the church of England.

FANATIO, (mensis fanationis) the fawning season, or fence-months in forests. Cowel. Blount.

FARANDMAN, (Sax.) a traveller or merchant stranger. Ibid.

FARDEL OF LAND, (fardelle terræ) is generally accounted the fourth part of a yard-land, but according to Noy, (in his Complete Lawyer, p. 57) it is an eighth part only, for there he says that two fardels of land make a nook, and four nooks a yard-land. Ibid.

FARE, (Sax.) the money paid for a voyage, or passage by water, or personal carriage by land.

FARINAGIUM, toll of meal or flour. Cowel. Blount.

FARLEU, money paid by tenants in the west of England in lieu of a heriot. Cowel. Blount.

FARLINGARII, whoremongers and adulterers.

FARM, or FERM, according to Blackstone, who cites Spelm. 229. Farm or Feorme is an old Saxon word, signifying provisions, and it came to be used instead of rent or render, because anciently the greater part of rents were reserved in provisions, in corn, in poultry, and the like, till the use of money became more frequent; so that firmarius was one who held his lands upon payment of a rent or feorme. 2 Black. 317.

But at present, by a gradual departure from the original sense, the word farm is brought to signify the very estate or lands so held upon farm or rent. Ibid.

Thus at this day it signifies a messuage and land taken by lease or from year to year, under a certain yearly rent, payable by the tenant. Ter. de Ley. It is a collective word, consisting of divers things gathered into one, as a messuage, land, meadow, pasture, wood, common, &c. And the reason of it may also be in respect of the firm or sure hold the tenants thereof have above tenants at will. Plowd. 195. See LEASE.

FARMER, is he that tenants a farm, or is lessee thereof. Terms de Ley.

FARTHING, was the fourth part of a Saxon penny, as it is now of the English penny. Cowel. Blount.

FARTHING OF GOLD, (quasi fourth thing) a coin used in ancient times, containing in value the fourth part of a Noble. Ibid.

FARTHING OF LAND, seems to differ from Farding-deal; for it is a large quantity of land. Ibid.

FARUNDEL of land, the same with farding-deal. Ibid.

FASTUS, (Fr. Faisseau) a fagot of wood. Ibid.

FAST-DAYS, are days of fasting and humiliation, appointed to be observed by public authority. And by 12 Car. 2. c. 14, the 30th of January is ordained to be a day of fasting and repentance, for the murder of king Charles 1. Other days of fasting are not fixed, but occasionally appointed by the king's proclamation. 1 Hawk. P. C. 8. See Embring Days.

FASTERMANS, among the Saxons were pledges. Cowel. Blount.

FAT, or WATE, a vessel used by maltsters and brewers, and by others for the making of salt at Droitwich. Ibid.

FATUA MULIER, a whore. Ibid.

FAUSETUM, a faucet, musical pipe or flute. Ibid.

FAUTORS, are favourers or supporters of others; abettors of crimes, &c. Ibid.

FEAL. The tenants by knight service did swear to their lords to be feal and leal, i. e. to be faithful and loyal. Ibid.

FEALTY, (fidelitas) Fr. (feaulté, i. e. fides) signifies an oath taken at the admittance of every tenant, to be true to the lord of whom he holds his land. Smith de Repub. Ang. lib. 3, c. 8. Co. Lit. 93.

FEASTS, anniversary times of feasting and thanksgiving, as Christmas, Easter, Whitsuntide, &c. The four feasts which our laws especially take notice of, are the feasts of the annunciation of the blessed Virgin Mary, of the nativity of St. John the Baptist, of St. Michael the Archangel, and of St. Thomas the Apostle; (or in lieu of the last, the birth of our Lord Christ,) on which quarterly days rent on leases is usually reserved to be paid.

FEE, (Feodum, or Feudum) is applied to all those lands and tenements which are held by perpetual right.

And this estate in fee is commonly divided into fee absolute, otherwise called fee-simple: and fee conditional, termed otherwise fee-tail.

Fee-simple, (feodum simplex) is where a man hath lands or tenements, to hold to him and his heirs for ever: fee-tail is an estate whereof one is seised, with limitation to him and the heirs of his body. Lit. 14, 16.

And to have fee-simple implies that it is without limitation to what heirs, but to heirs generally. 4 Inst. 206.

FEE EXPECTANT. (Feudum Expectativum.) See Expectant.

FEE-FARM, (feudi firma) is where the lord, upon creation of the tenancy, reserves to himself and his heirs, either the rent for which it was before let to farm, or was reasonably worth, or at least a fourth part of the value; without homage, fealty, or other services, beyond what are especially comprised in the feoffment. 2 Inst. 44.—And Lord Coke says, fee-farm rents may be one half, a third, or fourth part of the value. Co. Lit. 143. It is the nature of fee-farm, that if the rent be behind and unpaid for the space of two years, then the feoffor or his heirs may bring an action to recover the lands, &c. Brit. cap. 66. num. 4. 10 Ann. c. 18. sec. 4. 30 Geo. 2. c. 3. sec. 5.

FEE-FARM RENTS OF THE CROWN. Are rents remaining in the kings of England from their ancient demesnes, many of which were alienated in the reigns of Car. 2, under stat. 22 Car. 2. c. 6, and stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 24.

FEES, are certain perquisites allowed to officers who have to do with the administration of justice, as a recompence for their labour and trouble; and these are either ascertained by acts of parliament, or established by ancient usage, which gives them an equal sanction with an act of parliament. Bac. Abr. tit. Fees.

All fees allowed by acts of parliament become established fees; and the several officers entitled to them may maintain action of debt for them. 2 Inst. 210. All such fees as have been allowed by the courts of justice to their officers, as a recompence for their labour and attendance, are established fees; and the parties cannot be deprived of them without an act of parliament. Co. Lit. 368. Prec. Chan. 581.

But where a fee is due by custom, such custom, like all others, must be reasonable. Hob. 175. 1 Rol. Abr. 557, 559.

And it is extortion for any officer to take more for executing his office, than is allowed by act of parliament, or is the known and settled fee in such case. 10 Co. 102. a. Co. Lit. 368.

Also it is extortion for any officer to take his fee before it is due: and the party may bring an action against him for not doing his duty, or may pay him his fees, and then indict him for extortion. Co. Lit. 368. 10 Co. 102. a. 1 Salk. 330. Stran. 814. 1262.

FEES of Attornies. Action on the case

nes for an attorney for his fees, against him that retained him in his cause. And attornies are not to be dismissed by their clients, till their fees are paid. 1 Lil. 142. But attornies are not to demand more than their just fees, nor to be allowed fees to counsel without tickets, &c. Stat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 7.

FEES TO COUNSEL. A counsellor can maintain no action for his fees, which are given not as a salary, or hire, but as a mere gratuity (quiddam honorium non mercenarium) which a barrister cannot demand without doing wrong to his reputation. Davis 22, 23.

And by 3 Jac. 1. c. 7, attornies or solicitors shall not be allowed fees to counsel without they produce the signatures of the counsel for the same.

FEIGNED ACTION. See Faint Action.

FEIGNED ISSUE. If, in a suit of equity, any matter of fact is strongly contested, the court usually directs the matter to be tried by a jury, especially such important facts as the validity of a will, or whether A. is the heir at law to B or the existence of a modus decimandi, or real and immemorial composition for tithes.—But as a jury cannot be summoned to attend a court of equity, the fact is usually directed to be in the court of King's Bench, or at the assises, upon a feigned issue. For this purpose, a feigned action is brought, wherein the pretended plaintiff declares that he laid a wager of 5*l* with the defendant, that A. was heir at law to B. then he avers that he is so; and brings his action for the 5*l*. The defendant allows the wager, but avers that A. is not the heir to B. and thereupon that issue is joined, which is directed out of Chancery to be tried: and thus, the verdict of the jurors at law determines the fact in the court of equity. 3 Black 452. And a feigned issue cannot be tried without such directions; for if any one bring a feigned action at law in order to obtain the opinion of the court, it is a contempt, and the court will after trial stay the proceedings. 4 Ter. Rep. 402.

FELAGUS, (quasi fide cum eo ligatus) a companion; but particularly a friend, who was bound in the decennary for the good behaviour of another. Cowel. Blount.

FELD, a Saxon word, signifying field; and in its compound it signifies wild, as feld honey, is wild honey, &c. Ibid.

FELE HOMAGERS, from the Sax. fæi, i. e. fides, were faithful subjects. Ibid.

FELO DE SE. When a person with deliberation and direct purpose kills himself, by hanging, drowning, shooting, stabbing, &c. this is felo de se; if he be of the age of discretion, i. e. 14, and compos mentis. 3 Inst. 44. Dalt. ch. 145.

A felo de se shall forfeit all his goods and chattels real and personal; but not until it is lawfully found of record by the return upon oath of twelve men, before the coroner super visum corporis, that he is felo de se. 3 Inst. 55. 1 Law. 8. But the lands of inheritance of a felo de se are not forfeited, by reason he was not attainted in his life-time: nor is such a person's wife barred of dower, or his blood corrupted. 1 Hawk. 68.

FELONS GOODS. The stat. de prerogativa regis, 17 Ed. 2. c. 1, grants to the king, among other things, the goods of felons and fugitives.

FELONY (Lat. felonia), seems to be derived from the Greek φηλημα or φηλωσις a capital crime; hence the party committing such crime is termed a FELON.

Felony was anciently every capital crime perpetrated with an evil intention. And all capital offences by the common law, came generally under the title of felony; and could not be expressed by any word but felonice; which must even at this day of necessity be laid in an indictment of felony. Co. Lit. 391. And the bare intention to commit a felony is so very criminal, that at the common law it was punishable as felony, where it missed of its effect through some accident; and as our law now is, the party may be severely fined for such an intention. 1 Hawk P. C. 65.

Felony is either by the common law, or by statute: felony by the common law is against the life of a man, as murder, manslaughter, felo de se, se defendendo, &c. Against a man's goods, such as larceny and robbery: Against his habitation, as burglary, arson, or house-burning, and against public justice, as breach of prison. 3 Inst. 31. Piracy, robbery, or murder, upon the sea, are felonies punishable by the civil law; and likewise by statute.

Of felonies in general there are two sorts, one of which, for the first offence, is allowed clergy, and another that is not; but clergy is granted where it is not expressly taken away by statute. Staundf. lib. 1.

The punishment of a person for felony is 1st, To lose his life. 2ndly, To lose his blood, as to his ancestry, and so as to have neither heir nor posterity. 3dly, To lose his goods. 4thly, To lose his lands; and the king shall have annum, diem & vastum, to the intent that his wife and children be cast out of the house, his house pulled down, and all that he had for his comfort or delight destroyed. 4 Rep. 124.

Private persons may arrest felons by their own authority, or by warrant from a justice of peace: and every private person is bound to assist an officer to take felons, &c. 2 Hawk. 75.

FELONIES by statute, are very numerous, and of these the following will be found to be an accurate summary.

——Accessaries.] By 23 Hen. 8. c. 1, made perpetual by 32 Hen. 8. c. 3, accessaries before the fact in petit treason, murder, burglary; robbery in dwelling houses, churches, or in or near highways, burning houses or barns wherein any corn or grain shall be, felony without benefit of clergy.

By 37 Eliz. c. 12, an accessary to an horse-stealer, before or after such felony, felony without benefit of clergy.

By 39 Eliz. c. 9, accessaries before the offence, in stealing women who are heirs apparent, or have lands, felony without benefit of clergy.

By 21 Jac. 1. c. 26, accessaries before the fact in procuring any fine, recovery, deed indented, statute, recognizance, bail or judgment, in the name of another not privy thereto, felony without benefit of clergy.

By 22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 1, accessaries before the fact in malicious maiming, felons without benefit of clergy.

By 3 & 4 Will. & Mar. c. 9, accessaries before the fact in burglary or in robbing any dwelling-house, shop, or warehouse, felony without benefit of clergy.

By 3 & 4 Will. & Mar. c. 9, buyers of stolen goods knowing the same, shall be deemed accessaries to such felony, after the fact.

And by 5 Ann. c. 31, buyers or receivers of stolen goods shall be deemed accessaries, without benefit of clergy.

By 10 & 11 Will. 3. c. 23, accessaries before the fact in robberies in shops, warehouses, coach-houses, or stables, felons, without benefit of clergy.

By 11 & 12 Will. 3. c. 7, persons setting forth, or assisting any pirate, or after the piracy committed, concealing such pirate, shall be deemed accessaries, and shall be tried and suffer as the principals, made perpetual by 6 Geo. 1. c. 19.

estate of freehold in hereditaments corporeal, whether of inheritance or for life only. But in hereditaments incorporeal it is impossible to be made, for they are not the object of the senses, and therefore things incorporeal pass by deed only: neither is it necessary in leases for years or other chattel interest. 1 Inst. 9. a. 49. a., 5 Rep. 84. 2 Black. 311, 313.

Livery of seisin is either in deed, or in law. First, Livery in deed is thus performed. The feoffor, lessor, or his attorney, together with the feoffee, lessee, or his attorney, (for this may as effectually be done, by deputy or attorney, as by the principals themselves in person,) come to the land, or to the house; and there, in the presence of witnesses, declare the contents of the feoffment or lease, on which livery is to be made. And then the feoffor, if it be of land, doth deliver to the feoffee, all other persons being out of the ground, a clod or turf, or a twig or bough there growing, with words to this effect; "I deliver these to you in the name of seisin of all the lands and tenements contained in this deed." But if it be of a house, the feoffor must take the ring, or latch of the door, the house being quite empty, and deliver it to the feoffee in the same form; and then the feoffee must enter alone, and shut to the door, and then open it, and let in the others (Co. Litt. 48. West. Symb. 251.) If the conveyance or feoffment be of divers lands, lying scattered in one and the same county, then in the feoffor's possession, livery of seisin, of any parcel, in the name of the rest, sufficeth for all (Litt. s. 414.); but if they be in several counties, there must be as many liveries as there are counties. For, if the title to these lands comes to be disputed, there must be as many trials as there are counties, and the jury of one county are no judges of the notoriety of a fact in another. 2 Black. 315.

Also, if the lands be out on lease, though all lie in the same county, there must be as many liveries as there are tenants: because no livery can be made in this case, but by the consent of the particular tenant; and the consent of one will not bind the rest (Dyer 18.) And in all these cases it is prudent, and usual, to endorse the livery of seisin on the back of the deed, specifying the manner, place, and time of making it; together with the names of the witnesses. 2 Black. 316.

Secondly. Livery in law is where the same is not made on the land, but in sight of it only; the feoffor saying to the feoffee, "I give you yonder land, enter, and take possession." Here, if the feoffee enters during the life of the feoffor, it is a good livery, but not otherwise; unless he dares not enter, through fear of his life or bodily harm: and then his continual claim, made yearly, in due form of law, as near as possible to the lands (Litt. s. 421, &c.), will suffice without an entry (Co. Litt. 48.) This livery in law cannot, however, be given or received by attorney, but only by the parties themselves. (Co. Litt. 52.)

FERÆ NATURÆ, beasts and birds that are of a wild nature, in opposition to the tame; such as hares, foxes, wild geese, and the like, and wherein no man can claim a property, are deemed to be feræ naturæ. Cowel. Blount.

And of these no man can commit felony, unless they are so confined that the owner can take them whenever he pleases; or if they are not confined, unless they are reduced to tameness and known by the thief to be so. 1 Hawk. b. 1. c. 33. s. 26.

FERDFARE, (from the Sax. fyrd and fare iter) significat quictantium eundi in exercitum. Fleta, lib. 1. c. 47. Cowel. Blount.

FERDWIT, (Sax. ferd exercitus, & wite pœna) was used for being quit of manslaughter, committed in the army Fleta, lib. 1. It is rather a fine imposed on persons for not going forth in a military expedition; to which duty all persons, who held land, were of necessity obliged: and a neglect or omission of this common service to the public, was punished with a pecuniary mulct called the ferdwite. Cowel. Blount.

FERIAL DAYS, (dies feriales, feriæ) according to the Latin holy days; but in the stat. 27 H. 6. c. 5. taken for working days. Cowel. Blount.

FERLINGATA TERRÆ, a quarter or fourth part of a yard-land. Ibid.

FERM, (firma) a house and land let by lease. See Farm.

FERMARY, (from the Sax. feorme, victus) is an hospital; and we read of friers of the firmary. Cowel. Blount.

FERMISONA, the winter season of killing deer; as tempus pinguedinis is the summer season. Ibid.

FERNIGO, a piece of waste ground where fern grows. Ibid.

FERRANDUS, an iron collar, particularly applied to horses, which we at this time call an iron gray. Ibid.

FERRY. A liberty by prescription of the king's grant, to have a boat for passage upon a river, for carriage of horses and men for reasonable toll: it is usually to cross a large river, and is no more than a common highway. Terms de Ley. 3 Mod. Rep. 294.

A ferry is in respect of the landing-place, and not of the water, for the water may be free to any one, but the landing place is the property of the owner of the soil, and in every ferry, the land on both sides of the water ought to belong to the owner of the ferry, or otherwise he cannot land on the other part. Savill 11.

FERSPEKEN, to speak suddenly. Cowel. Blount.

FESTA IN CAPPIS, were some grand holy-days, on which the whole choirs and cathedrals wore caps. Ibid.

FESTINGMEN, the Sax. festinman signifies a surety or pledge; and to be free of festingmen, was probably to be free of frank-pledge, and not bound for any man's forthcoming, who should transgress the law. Ibid.

FESTING-PENNY, earnest given to servants when hired or retained in service. Ibid.

FESTUM, a feat, i. e. festum S. Michaelis, the feast of St. Michael, &c. Ibid.

FESTUM STULTORUM, the feast of fools. See Caput Anni.

FEUD, (feida) in the German guerram, Lat. bellum; and according to Lambard, capitales inimicitias, and feud deadly in Scotland is a combination of kindred for revenging the death of any of their blood against the killer and all his race; or any other great enemy.

FEUDAL and FEUDARY. See Feodal and Feodary.

FEUDBOTE, the recompense for engaging in a feud, and the damages consequent; in ancient times, when the kindred engaged in their kinsman's quarrel. Cowel. Blount.

FEUDS, (feuda) Estates in lands were originally at will, and then they were called munera; afterwards they were for life, and then they were termed beneficia, and for that reason the livings of clergymen are so called at this day; and afterwards they were made hereditary, when they were called feoda, and in our law fee-simple. Rel. Spel. 9. And feuds are called by various names according to their respective natures, as Feudum antiquum, a feud descending to a son, from his ancestors. 2 Black. 212. 221.

Feudum apertum, a feud resulting back again to the lord of the fee, where the blood of the person last seised in fee-simple, is utterly extinct and gone. 2 Black. 245.

Feudum honorarium, (and Feudum individuum) an honorary feud, or title of nobility, not of a divisible nature, and descendible to the eldest son, in exclusion of all the rest. 2 Black. 56, 7. 215.

Feudum improprium, an improper or derivative feud; and feoda impropria are all such feuds as do not fall within the description of feoda propria. 2 Black. 58.

Feudum maternum, a feud descending to the son from the mother. 2 Black. 212, 243.

Feudum novum, a feud newly acquired by the son, to which in ancient times only the descendants from his body could succeed, by the known maxim of the early feodal constitutions. 2 Black. 212, 221.

Feudum novum, held ut antiquum: descendible in the same manner as a feudum novum. Ibid.

Feudum paternum, a feud descendible from father to son, &c. 2 Black. 243.

Feudum proprium, a proper feud, distinguished from an improper, which are the two grand and general divisions. 2 Black. 58.

FIAT, signifies the order or warrant of some judge for making out and allowing certain processes, &c.

FIAT JUSTITIA. On a petition to the king, for his warrant to bring a writ of error in parliament, he writes on the top of the petition fiat justitia, and then the writ of error is made out, &c. And when the king is petitioned to redress a wrong, he indorses upon the petition, Let right be done the party. Dyer 385. Stamf. Prerog. Reg. 22.

FICTION OF LAW, (Fictio juris) is allowed for the furtherance of justice in several cases: but it must be framed according to the rules of law; not what is imaginable in the concepti ns of man; and there ought to be equity and possibility in every legal fiction. Thus the seisin of the conusee in a FINE is but a fiction in our law, it being an invented form of conveyance only. Also a COMMON RECOVERY is fictio juris, a formal act or device by consent, to bar estates tail, remainders, &c. And so is THE LESSOR of the plaintiff in ejectment.

By fiction of law, also a bond made beyond sea, or personal injury done there, may be pleaded to be made in the place where made, or done, as at Calcutta in the East Indies with a viz. to wit, at Islington in the county of Middlesex, &c. to try the same here; without which it cannot be done.

FICTITIOUS PLAINTIFF. Suing another in the name of a fictitious plaintiff, either one not in being at all, or one who is ignorant of the suit, is considered as an offence of great malignity and audaciousness. This offence, if committed in any of the king's superior courts, is left, as a high contempt, to be punished at their discretion; but in courts of a lower degree, where the crime is equally pernicious, but the authority of the judges not equally extensive, it is directed by stat. 8 Eliz. c. 2, to be punished by six months imprisonment, and treble damages to the party injured. 4 Black. 134.

FIDEI COMMISSUM. This in the civil law was very similar in its nature to that of our uses and trusts: it was usually created by will, and was the disposal of an inheritance to one in confidence that he should convey it, or dispose of the profits at the will of an other, and Inst. 2, tit. 23. 2 Black. 327.

FIDEM MENTIRI, is when a tenant does not keep that fealty which he has sworn to the lord. Leg. H. 1. c. 53.

FIEF, which we call fee, is in other countries the contrary to chattels, and in Germany certain districts or territories are called fiefs, where there are fiefs of the empire. 2 Black. 45.

FIERI FACIAS, is a judicial writ, given by the statute of Westm. 2, 13 Ed. 1, that lies where judgment is had for debt, or damages recovered in the King's courts, by which writ the sheriff is commanded to levy the debt and damages of the goods and chattels of the defendant, &c. Old. Nat. Br. 132.

It is so called because the words of the writ directed to the sheriff are "Quod fieri facias de bonis & catallis, &c." Co. Lit. 290. b. See EXECUTION.

FIFTEENTHS were temporary aids anciently issuing out of personal property, and granted to the king by parliament. Originally the amount of these taxes was uncertain, being levied by assessments, new made at every fresh grant of the Commons; but it was at length reduced to a certainty in the 8th year of Ed. 3, when by virtue of the king's commission new taxations were made of every township, borough and city in the kingdom, and recorded in the Exchequer: after which, when of late years the Commons granted the king a fifteenth, every parish in England immediately knew their proportion of it, viz. the same identical sum that was assessed by the same aid in 8 Ed. 3, and then raised it by a rate among themselves, and returned it into the exchequer. 1 Black. 308.

FIGHTING AND QUARRELING. See Assault.

FIGHTWITE, (Sax.) a mulct for fighting, or making a quarrel to the disturbance of the peace. Cowel. Blount.

FIGURES. The year of the reign of the king is enough; and the stat. 6 Geo. 2. c. 14, allows the expressing numbers by figures in all writs, &c. pleadings, rules, orders and indictments, in courts of justice, as have been commonly used in the said courts.

FILACER, or FILIZER, (filizarius, from the Lat. filum) is an officer of the court of common pleas, called by this name, because he files those writs whereon he makes out process. He enters all appearances and special bails, and by an order of court 14 Jac. 1, his proceedings are limited to all matters before appearance, and the prothonotaries to all after.

FILE, (filicium) a thread, string, or wire, upon which writs and other exhibits in courts and offices are fastened or filed for the more safe keeping and ready turning to the same. A file is a record of the court; and the filing of process of a court, makes it a record of it. 1 Lil. 112.

FIELD-ALE or FILKDALE, a kind of drinking in the field, by bailiffs of hundreds at the expence of the inhabitants, long since prohibited. Bract. 4 Inst. 307.

FILIAL PORTION, the pars rationabilis, or reasonable part of an intestate's effects.

FILICETUM, signifies a ferny ground. Co. Lit. 4. Cowel. Blount.

FILIOLUS, a little son, also a godson. Cowel. Blount.

FILUM AQUÆ, is the thread or middle of the stream which divides counties, townships, parishes, manors, liberties, or the like; and in general the owners of the soil on each side are entitled to the soil, cospecta aqua, and the right of fishing, usque ad medium filum aquæ.

FINDERS, the same with those now called searchers, for the discovery of goods imported or exported, without custom.

FINE, (fin) is a final agreement, or, conveyance upon record, for the settling and assuring of lands and tenements acknowledged in the king's courts by the cognizor to be the right of the cognizee.

And it is sometimes said to be a feoffment of record, Co. Lit. 50, though it might, as Blackstone very justly observes, with more accuracy be called an acknowlegment of a feoffment on record: by which is to be understood, that it has the same force and effect with a feoffment, in the conveying and assuring of lands: though it is one of those methods of transferring estates of freehold by the common law, in which livery of seisin is not necessary to be actually given; the supposition and acknowledgment thereof in a court of record, however fictitious, inducing an equal notoriety. But, more particularly, a fine may be described to be an amicable composition or agreement of a suit, either actual or fictitious, by leave of the king or his justices; whereby the lands in question become, or are acknowleged to be, the right of one of the parties Co. Lit. 129. In its original it was founded on an actual suit, commenced at law for recovery of the possession of land or other hereditaments; and the possession thus gained by such composition was found to be so sure and effectual that fictitious actions were, and continue to be, every day commenced for the sake of obtaining the same security. 2 Black. 348.

A fine is so called because it puts an end, not only to the suit thus commenced, but also to all other suits and controversies concerning the same matter. 2 Rol. Abr. 13. And is of equal antiquity with the first rudiments of the law itself. Glanv. l. 8. c. 1. Bract. l. 5. t. 5, c. 28. Plowd. 369. 2 Black. 348.

The manner in which they are to be levied, or carried on according to Stat. 18 Ed. 1, de modo levandi fines, is as follows:

1. The party, to whom the land is to be conveyed or assured, commences an action or suit at law against the other, generally an action of covenant, by suing out a writ of præcipe, called a writ of covenant: the foundation of which is a supposed agreement or covenant, that the one shall convey the lands to the other; on the breach of which agreement the action is brought.—On this writ there is due to the king, by antient prerogative, a primer or pre-fine, or a noble for every five marks of land sued for; that is, one tenth of the annual value. 2 Inst. 511. The suit being thus commenced, then follows,

2. The licentia concordandi, or leave to agree the suit. For, as soon as the action is brought, the defendant, knowing himself to be in the wrong, is supposed to make overtures of peace and accommodation to the plaintiff. Who, accepting them, but having, upon suing out the writ, given pledges to prosecute his suit, which he endangers if he now deserts it without licence, he therefore applies to the court for leave to make the matter up. This leave is readily granted, but for it, there is also another fine due to the king by his prerogative, which is an antient revenue of the crown, and is called the king's silver, or sometimes the post fine, with respect to the primer or pre-fine before mentioned. And it is as much as the pre-fine, and half as much more, or ten shillings for every five marks of land; that is, three twentieths of the supposed annual value. 5 Rep. 39. 2 Inst. 511. Stat. 32 Geo. 2. c. 14. 2 Black. 349.

3. Next comes the concord, or agreement itself, after leave obtained from the court; which is usually an acknowledgment from the deforciants (or those who keep the other out of possession) that the lands in question are the right of the complainant. And from this acknowledgment, or recognition of right, the party levying the fine is called the cognizor, and he to whom it is levied the cognizee. This acknowledgment must be made either openly in the court of common pleas, or before the lord chief justice of that court; or else before one of the judges of that court, or two or more commissioners in the country, empowered by a special authority called a writ of dedimus potestatem; which judges and commissioners are bound by statute 18 Edw. 1, st. 4. to take care that the cognizors be of full age, sound memory, and out of prison. If there be any feme covert among the cognizors, she is privately examined whether she does it willingly and freely, or by compulsion of her husband. 2 Black. 350.

By these acts all the essential parts of a fine are completed: and, if the cognizor dies the next moment after the fine is acknowledged, provided it be subsequent to the day on which the writ is made returnable, Comb. 71, still the fine shall be carried on in all its remaining parts, of which the next is,

4. The note of the fine; which is only an abstract of the writ of covenant, and the concord; naming the parties, the parcels of land, and the agreement. This must be enrolled of record in the proper office, by direction of the statute 5 Hen. 4. c. 14. Ibid.

5. The fifth part is the foot of the fine, or conclusion of it: which includes the whole matter, reciting the parties, day, year, and place, and before whom it was acknowledged or levied. Of this there are indentures made, or engrossed, at the chirographer's office, and delivered to the cognizor and the cognizee; usually beginning thus, "hæc est finalis concordia, this is "the final agreement," and then reciting the whole proceeding at length. And thus the fine is completely levied at common law.

By several statutes still more solemnities are superadded, in order to render the fine more universally public, and less liable to be levied by fraud or covin. And, first, by 27 Ed. 1. c. 1, the note of the fine shall be openly read in the court of common pleas, at two several days in one week, and during such reading all pleas shall cease. By 5 Hen. 4. c. 14, and 23 Eliz. c. 3, all the proceedings on fines, either at the time of acknowledgment, or previous, or subsequent thereto, shall be enrolled of record in the court of common pleas. By 1 Ric. 3. c. 7, confirmed and enforced by 4 Hen. 7. c. 24, the fine, after engrossment, shall be openly read and proclaimed in court (during which all pleas shall cease) sixteen times; viz. four times in the term in which it is made, and four times in each of the three succeeding terms; which is reduced to once in each term by 31 Eliz. c. 2, and these proclamations are indorsed on the back of the record. It is also enacted by 23 Eliz. c. 3, that the chirographer of fines shall every term write out a table of the fines levied in each county in that term, and shall affix them in some open part of the court of common pleas all the next term: and shall also deliver the contents of such table to the sheriff of every county, who shall at the next assizes fix the same in some open place in the court, for the more public notoriety of the fine. 2 Black. 352.

2. Fines, thus levied, are of four kinds. 1. What in our law French is called a fine "SUR COGNIZANCE DE DROIT, COME CEO QUE "IL AD DE SON DONE," or, a fine upon acknowledgement of the right of the cognizee, as that which he hath of the gift of the cognizor. This is the best and surest kind of fine; for thereby the deforciant, in order to keep his covenant with the plaintiff, of conveying to him the lands in question; and at the same time to avoid the formality of an actual feoffment and livery, acknowledges in court a former feoffment, or gift in possession, to have been made by him to the plaintiff. This fine is therefore said to be a feoffment of record; the livery, thus acknowledged in court, being equivalent to an actual livery: so that this assurance is rather a confession of a former conveyance, than a conveyance now originally made; for the deforciant, or cognizor, acknowledges, cognoscit, the right to be in the plaintiff, or cognizee, as that which he hath de son done, of the proper gift of himself, the cognizor. 2. A fine "SUR COGNIZANCE DE DROIT "TANTUM," or, upon acknowledgement of the right merely; not with the circumstance of a preceding gift from the cognizor. This is commonly used to pass a reversionary interest, which is in the cognizor. For of such reversions there can be no feoffment, or donation with livery, supposed; as the possession during the particular estate belongs to a third person. Mour. 629. It is worded in this manner: "that the cognizor "acknowledges the right to be in the cogni- "zee; and grants for himself and his heirs, "that the reversion, after the particular "estate determines, shall go to the cogni- "zee." 3. A fine "SUR CONCESSIT" is where the cognizor, in order to make an end of disputes, though he acknowledges no precedent right, yet grants to the cognizee an estate de novo, usually for life or years, by way of supposed composition. And this may be done reserving a rent, or the like; for it operates as a new grant. West. Symb. p. 2. 95. 4. A fine, "SUR DONE, GRANT, ET RENDER," is a double fine, comprehending the fine sur cognizance de droit come ceo, &c. and the fine sur concessit: and may be used to create particular limitations of estate: whereas the fine sur cognizance de droit come ceo, &c. conveys nothing but an absolute estate, either of inheritance or at least of freehold. Salk. 340. In this last species of fine, the cognizee, after the right is acknowledged to be in him, grants back again, or renders to the cognizor, or perhaps to a stranger, some other estate in the premises. But, in general, the first species of fine, sur cognizance de droit come ceo, &c. is the most used, as it conveys a clean and absolute freehold, and gives the cognizee a seisin in law, without any actual livery; and is therefore called a fine, executed, whereas the others are but executory. 2 Black. 352.

The force and effect of a fine.]—These principally depend, at this day, on the common law, and the two statutes, 4 Hen. 7. c. 24, and 32 Hen. 8. c. 36. The antient common law, with respect to this point, is very forcibly declared by the statute 18 Edw. 3, in these words: "And the reason "why such solemnity is required in the "passing of a fine, is this; because the "fine is so high a bar, and of so great "force, and of a nature so powerful in it- "self, that it precludes not only those "which are parties and privies to the fine, "and their heirs, but all other persons in "the world, who are of full age, out of "prison, of sound memory, and within "the four seas, the day of the fine levied; "unless they put in their claim on the foot, Lit. s. 441, of the fine within a year "and a day." But this doctrine, of barring the right by non-claim, was abolished for a time by a statute made in 34 Edw. 3. c. 16, which admitted persons to claim, and falsify a fine, at any indefinite distance: whereby, as sir Edward Coke observes, 2 Inst. 518, great contention arose, and few men were sure of their possessions, till the parliament held 4 Hen. 7. c. 24, reformed that mischief, and excellently moderated between the latitude given by the statute and the rigour of the common law. For the statute, then made, restored the doctrine of non-claim; but extended the time of claim. So that now, by that statute, the right of all strangers whatsoever is bound, unless they make claim, by way of act on or lawful entry, not within one year and a day, as by the common law, but within five years after proclamations made: except feme-coverts, infants, prisoners, persons beyond the seas, and such as are not of sane mind; who have five years allowed to them and their heirs, after the death of their husbands, their attaining full age, recovering their liberty, returning into England, or being restored to their right mind. 2 Black. 354.

And this is the chief use and excellence of a fine, that it confirms and secures a suspicious title, and puts an end to all litigation after five years. Other conveyances and assurances admit an entry to be made upon the estate within twenty years, and in some instances, the right to be disputed in a real action for sixty years afterwards. Harg. Co. Lit. 121. a. n. 1.

It seems to have been the intention of that politic prince, king Henry 7, to have covertly by this statute extended fines to have been a bar of estates-tail, in order to unfetter the more easily the estates of his powerful nobility, and lay them more open to alienations; being well aware that power will always accompany property. But doubts having arisen whether they could, by mere implication, be adjudged a sufficient bar, (which they were expressly declared not to be by the statute de donis,) the statute 32 Hen. 8. c. 36, was thereupon made; which removes all difficulties, by declaring that a fine levied by any person of full age, to whom or to whose ancestors lands have been entailed, shall be a perpetual bar to them and their heirs claiming by force of such entail; unless the fine be levied by a woman after the death of her husband, of lands which were, by the gift of him or his ancestors, assigned to her in tail for her jointure, see stat. 11 Hen. 7, c. 20; or unless it be of lands entailed by act of parliament or letters patent, and whereof the reversion belongs to the crown. 2 Black. 355.

From this view of the common law, regulated by these statutes, it appears that a fine is a solemn conveyance on record from the cognizor to the cognizee, and that the persons bound by a fine are parties, privies, and strangers. Ibid.

The parties are either the cognizors or cognizees, and these are immediately concluded by the fine, and barred of any latent right they might have, even though under the legal impediment of coverture. And indeed, as this is almost the only act that a feme covert, or married woman, is permitted by law to do, (and that because she is privately examined as to her voluntary consent, which removes the general suspicion of compulsion by her husband,) it is therefore the usual and almost the only safe method, whereby she can join in the sale, settlement, or encumbrance, of any estate. Ibid.

Thus a wife may join her husband in either a fine or recovery to convey her own estate and inheritance, or an estate settled upon her by her husband as her jointure, or to convey the husband's estates discharged of dower. 1 Cru. 99. 2 Cru. 143. Pig. 123. But if a jointress after her husband's death levies a fine, or suffers a recovery without the consent of the heir, or the next person entitled to an estate of inheritance, the fine or recovery is void, and is also a forfeiture of her estate. 11 Hen. 7. c. 20. Pig. 75.

Privies to a fine are such as are any way related to the parties who levy the fine, and claim under them by any right of blood, or other right of representation; such as are the heirs general of the cognizor, the issue in tail since the statute of Henry the eighth, the vendee, the devisee, and all others who must make title by the persons who levied the fine. For the act of the ancestor shall bind the heir, and the act of the principal his substitute, or such as claim under any conveyance made by him subsequent to the fine so levied. 3 Rep. 83. 2 Black. 355.

Strangers to a fine are all other persons in the world, except only parties and privies. And these are also bound by a fine, unless within five years after proclamations made, they interpose their claim; provided they are under no legal impediments, and have then a present interest in the estate. The impediments, as hath before been said, are coverture, infancy, imprisonment, insanity, and absence beyond sea; and persons, who are thus incapacitated to prosecute their rights, have five years allowed them to put in their claims after such impediments are removed. Persons also that have not a present but a future interest only, as those in remainder or reversion, have five years allowed them to claim in, from the time that such right accrues. Co. Lit. 372. And if within that time they neglect to claim, or (by stat. 4 Ann. c. 16.) if they do not bring an action to try the right, within one year after making such claim, and prosecute the same with effect, all persons whatsoever are barred of whatever right they may have, by force of the statute of non-claim. 2 Black. 356.

But in order to make a fine of any avail at all, it is necessary that the parties should have some interest or estate in the lands to be affected by it; else it were possible that two strangers, by a mere confederacy, might without any risk, defraud the owners by levying fines of their lands; for if the attempt be discovered they can be no sufferers but must only remain in statu quo; whereas if a tenant for life levies a fine, it is an absolute forfeiture of his estate to the remainder-man or reversioner, Co. Lit. 251. if claimed in proper time. It is not therefore to be supposed that such tenants will frequently run so great a hazard; but if they do, and the claim is not duly made within five years after their respective terms expire, 2 Lev. 52, the estate is for ever barred by it. Yet where a stranger, whose presumption cannot be thus punished, officiously interferes in an estate which in no wise belongs to him, his fine is of no effect, and may at any time be set aside (unless by such as are parties or privies thereunto,) Hob. 334, by pleading that "partes finis nihil habuerunt." And, even if a tenant for years, who hath only a chattel interest, and no freehold in the land, levies a fine, it operates nothing, but is liable to be defeated by the same plea, 5 Rep. 123. Hardr. 401. Wherefore, when a lessee for years is disposed to levy a fine, it is usual for him to make a feoffment first, to displace the estate of the reversioner, and create a new freehold by disseisin. Hard. 402. 2 Lev. 52. This conveyance, or assurance by fine, not only like other conveyances, binds the grantor himself, and his heirs, but also all mankind, whether concerned in the transfer or no, if they fail to put in their claims within the time allotted by law. 2 Black. 357.

And it is not necessary to be in possession of the freehold in order to levy a fine; but if any one entitled to the inheritance, or to a remainder in tail, levies a fine, it will bar his issue and all heirs who derive their title through him, Hob. 333. But a fine by tenant in tail does not affect subsequent remainders, but it creates a base or qualified fee, determinable upon the failure of the issue of the person to whom the estate was granted in tail; upon which event the remainder-man may enter. If tenant in tail, with an immediate reversion in fee, levies a fine, the base fee merges in the reversion, which will become liable to all the incumbrances of the ancestors, from whom the estate-tail descended; as judgments, recognizances, and such leases as are void with respect to the issue in tail. 5 T. R. 108. 1 Cru. 274. And a recovery suffered by any tenant in tail lets in all the incumbrances created by himself, which were defeasible by the issue in tail, and after the recovery they will follow the lands in the hands of a bona fide purchasor. Pig. 120. 2 Cru. 287.

—— FINE also signifies a sum of money paid for the grant of lands, &c. by lease, or on the admission to a copyhold interest. Fine also signifies that pecuniary imposition or punishment which may be levied or inflicted, for an offence committed against the king and his laws.

FIRE-WORKS. No person whatsoever shall make, sell, &c. squibbs, rockets, serpents, &c. or cases, moulds, &c. for making such squibbs, and every such offence shall be adjudged a common nuisance. 9 & 10 Will. 3. c. 7.

Persons throwing or firing squibbs, &c. or suffering them, &c. to be thrown or fired from their houses incur a penalty of 20*s.* Likewise persons throwing, casting or firing, or aiding or assisting in the throwing, casting or firing of any squibbs, rockets, serpents, or other fire-works, in or into any public street, house, shop, river, highway, road or passage, incur the like penalty of 20*s.* and on non-payment may be committed to the house of correction for one month. But officers of the ordnance may order the making of fire works, and the Artillery Company of London, or other like society may use them in the exercise of arms. Stat. 9 & 10 Will. 3. c. 7.

FIRST-FRUITS, (primitiæ) are the profits payable to the king after avoidance of every spiritual living for the first year, according to the valuation thereof in the king's books.

These were originally a part of the papal usurpations over the clergy of this kingdom. But in the reign of Henry VIII. when the papal power was abolished, and the king was declared the head of the church of England, this revenue was annexed to the crown; by stat. 26 Hen. 8. c. 3. (confirmed by stat. 1 Eliz. c. 4.) and a new valor bene- ficiorum was then made, by which the clergy are at present rated.

This stat. of 26 Hen. 8. c. 3. enacted, that commissioners should be appointed in every diocese, who should certify the value of every ecclesiastical benefice and preferment in the respective dioceses; and according to this valuation, the first-fruits and tenths were to be collected and paid in future. This valor beneficiorum is what is commonly called the king's books; a transcript of which is given in Ecton's Thesaurus, and Bacon's Liber Regis.

By these last-mentioned statutes all vicarages under ten pounds a year, and all rectories under ten marks, are discharged from the payment of first-fruits: and if, in such livings as continue chargeable with this payment, the incumbent lives but half a year, he shall pay only one quarter of his first-fruits; if but one whole year, then half of them; if a year and a half, three quarters; and if two years, then the whole; and not otherwise.* Likewise by the statute 27 Hen. 8. c. 8. no tenths are to be paid for the first year, for then the first-fruits are due: and by other statutes of queen Anne, in the fifth and sixth years of her reign, if a benefice be under fifty pounds per annum clear yearly value, it shall be discharged of the payment of first-fruits and tenths.

These tenths and first-fruits were entirely remitted by queen Anne; but, in a spirit of the truest equity, applied as the superfluities of the larger benefices to make up the deficiencies of the smaller. For to this end she granted her royal charter, which was confirmed by the stat. 2 Ann. c. 11. whereby all the revenue of first-fruits and tenths is vested in trustees for ever, to form a perpetual fund for the augmentation of poor livings. This is usually called QUEEN ANNE'S BOUNTY. In augmentation of which, in the session of parliament anno 49 Geo. 3. a sum of 100,000*l.* was voted. See stat. 49 Geo. 3. c. 128.

These trustees were erected into a corporation, and have authority to make rules and orders for the distribution of this fund. The principal rules they have established are, that the sum to be allowed for each augmentation, shall be 200*l.* to be laid out in land, which shall be annexed for ever to the living; and they shall make this donation, first, to all livings not exceeding 10*l.* a year; then to all livings not above 20*l.*; and so in order, whilst any remain under 50*l.* a year. But when any private benefactor will advance 200*l.* the trustees will give another 200*l.* for the advancement of any living not above 45*l.* a year, though it should not belong to that class of livings which they are then augmenting. 2 Burn Ec. L. 260.

FISH and FISHING. By 13 Ed. 1. c. 47. the waters of Humber, Ouse, Trent, Dun, Air, Derwent, Wherfe, Nid, Yore, Swale, Teese, Tine, and all others where salmon are taken, shall be in defence from Lady-day to Martinmas, young salmon shall not be taken by unlawful nets, nor at mill pools, from the midst of April to St. John the Baptist, the first trespass shall be punished by burning the nets, &c. the second a quarter of a year's imprisonment, and the third a year's imprisonment.

By 13 Ric. 2. c. 19. young salmons shall not be taken from the middle of April till the 24th of June, nor shall any nets be used to destroy or take the fry or breed of any fish. And the Lone, Wyre, Mersey, Ribble, and waters in Lancashire, shall be in defence as to salmons from Michaelmas to the Purification: on the pains in 13 Ed. 1. c. 47.

By 17 Ric. 2. c. 9. the justices of the peace in the country shall be conservators of these acts.

By 1 Eliz. c. 17. persons using any net or engine to destroy the fry of fish, or taking salmons or trouts out of season, or salmon shorter than sixteen inches, trout eight, pike ten, barbel twelve; shall forfeit 20*s.* the fish and nets.

None shall fish with any net in any river, but only where the mesh shall be two inches and an half broad, angling excepted; on the like pain; but smelts, loaches, minnows, bull-heads, gudgeons, or eels may be taken in the usual nets, lepes, or other engines, so that no other fish be taken. Ibid.

The admiral, mayor of London, and other conservators may determine offences, stewards of leets are to charge the jury to enquire of offences under this act; on pain of 40*s.* and if they conceal any, the penalty is 20*s.* each. Ibid.

By 1 Jac. 1. c. 23. fishermen in the counties of Somerset, Devon, and Cornwall, may enter on the grounds of others, to direct the fishers, and draw fish on shore, and on action brought for the same, may plead the general issue, and recover.

By 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 28. from the first of June to the last of November, no person shall fish on the coast of Devon and Cornwall, with drift nets, unless at one leagne and an half from the shore, on forfeiture thereof, and one month's imprisonment.

Any partner purloining, or taking away any pilchard fish without leave, shall pay treble value, and be sent to the house of correction for three months. And idle or suspicious persons flocking about any pilchard craft, not departing on warning, shall pay five shillings, or be set in the stocks for five hours. Ibid.

* The archbishops and bishops have four years allowed for the payment, and shall pay one quarter every year, if they live so long upon the bishoprick; but other dignitaries in the church pay theirs in the same manner as rectors and vicars.

By 10 & 11 Will. 3. c. 24. mackerel may be sold on Sundays.

By 4 & 5 Ann. c. 21. the 4 & 5 Will. & Mar. c. 23. for preserving the salmon, and also 13 Ed. 1. c. 47. shall be put into execution in Southampton and Wilts, and no young salmon shall be destroyed by nets.

Overseers of this act shall be assigned by the justices, who shall enquire after offenders, who are to forfeit not more than 5*l.* nor less than 20*s.* for the first offence, and double for every other.

No person, qualified or not, shall take salmon, until after the 11th of November, (except the owners of such fisheries, by 1 Geo. 1. stat. 2. c. 18.) Ibid.

Owners of meadow grounds shall let salmon, got into the dykes, pass into the main rivers again. Owners of mills shall keep open one scuttle in the waste hatch, for the salmon to pass and re-pass and not use nets. Eel pots shall have racks before them. No sea trouts shall be taken in the rivers. None shall keep nets, or the like, other than allowed by 4 Will. & Mar. c. 23. and this act shall only extend to Southampton and Wilts. Ibid.

By 1 Geo. 1. c. 18. no unsizable fish shall be offered to sale, namely, bret and turbot, less than sixteen inches long, brill fourteen, codling twelve, plaice eight, and flounders seven, on forfeiture of the same, and 40*s.* Ibid.

Owners of fisheries in the counties of Southampton and Wilts, may take salmon from 11th November, to 1 August; but not after 1 August till 12 November following. Ibid.

None shall destroy any fry of salmon, nor take any salmon in the Severn, Dee, Teame, Were, Tees, Ribble, Mersey, Dun, Air, Ouse, Swale, Calder, Wharfe, Eure, Derwent, and Trent, between the last day of July and the 12th November, nor after, with unlawful nets, on pain of 5*l.* Ibid.

No salmon shall be sent from the said rivers to London, less than six pounds weight each, on forfeiture of the same, and 5*l.*

By 9 Geo. 2. c. 33. no person shall kill lobsters on the coast of Scotland, between 1 June and 1 September yearly, on pain of 5*l.* Ibid.

By 23 Geo. 2. c. 26. liberty is given to take salmon in the river Ribble, between 1 January and 15 September yearly.

By 15 Geo. 3. c. 46. no salmon shall be taken in Tweed river between 10th October and 10th January yearly, on penalty of not more than 10*l.* nor less than 40*s.*

And the 37 Geo. 3. c. 48. gives additional powers to justices of the peace to enforce this act.

By 37 Geo. 3. c. 95. so much of 1 Geo. 1. s. 18. as restrains the taking of salmon in the rivers in Southampton and Wilts are repealed, and salmon may be taken between January 1, and September 12; but persons taking such fish between September 12, and January 1, shall be subject to the penalties of 4 Ann. c. 21. and persons taking the spawn or fry between 10 March and 30 May, are to forfeit 10*s.* for every quantity taken. Overseers are to be appointed to preserve the fish, and occupiers of mills are to keep their scuttles and hatches open from 11th November to 11th July.

By 43 Geo. 3. c. lxi. notwithstanding 13 Ed. 1. c. 47. and 13 Ric. 2. c. 19. the legal owners of the fisheries in the rivers Teign, Dart, and Plym, in Devon, may take salmon with legal nets in the Teign from 4th March to 4th December, and in the Dart and Plym from 15th February to 15th November, but no bouges or sea trout shall be taken between 29th September and 2d February, nor shall there be any fishing on a Sunday.

By 45 Geo. 3. c. xxxiii. notwithstanding stat. West'm. 1. 13 Ed. 1. stat. 1. c. 47. and stat. 13 Ric. 2. stat. 1. c. 19. it shall be lawful for the legal owners of rivers and waters in Carmarthenshire to take salmon and its species with legal nets between 1st April and 1st November in every year. s. 1.

And taking them illegally, or at improper times of the year, is a penalty of not exceeding 10*l.* nor less than 20*s.* recoverable before a justice of peace. s. 3.

By 46 Geo. 3. c. xix. notwithstanding 13 Ed. 1. st. 1. c. 47. and 13 Ric. 2. st. 1. c. 19. the owners and proprietors, and persons lawfully entitled, may take salmon in Milford harbour, and the waters communicating therewith, with legal nets, from 30th April to 1st November, yearly. s. 1.

Penalty on persons taking salmon at other times of the year, or purloining or injuring the same with spears or the like, 10*l.* for the first offence, and 20*l.* for the second, s. 2. Penalty on taking soles under eight inches long, 40*s.* s. 4. Penalty on taking oysters between 30th August and 1st October 10*l.* first offence, and 20*l.* second offence, s. 5. Persons found taking, or using engines, refusing to discover themselves, may be seized. s. 6.

If any offender shall escape out of the jurisdiction, any justice may indorse the warrant of apprehension or distress, which shall be executed accordingly where the offender or his goods shall be. s. 13.

FISHING IN PRIVATE WATERS.] By 31 Hen. 8. c. 2. fishing in any pond, moat, or stew, in the day time, without the owner's consent, shall suffer three months imprisonment.

By 9 Geo. 1. c. 22. to appear with faces blacked or otherwise disguised to steal fish, or to procure by gift or promise of reward, any person to join them in such unlawful act, is felony without benefit of clergy.

Also by 5 Geo. 3. c. 14. the penalty of transportation for 7 years is inflicted on persons stealing or taking fish in any water within a park, paddock, garden, orchard, or yard, and a forfeiture of 5*l.* to the owner of the fishery is made payable by persons taking or destroying (or attempting to destroy) any fish in any river, or other water, within any inclosed ground being private property.

FISH-ROYAL, are whale and sturgeon, which the king is entitled to when either thrown on shore or caught near the coasts. Plowd. 315. 1 Black. 290.

FISHERY, COMMON OF, or COMMON OF PISCARY, is a liberty of fishing in another man's water. 2 Black. 34.

FISHERY FREE, is an exclusive right of fishing in a public stream or river: this is a royal franchise, and must be at least as old as the reign of Henry II. no such franchise being grantable by the express provision of magna charta, c. 16.

It differs from a common of piscary, in that the free fishery is an exclusive right, the common of piscary is not so, and therefore in a free fishery, a man has a property in the fish before they are caught, in a common of piscary not till afterwards. 2 Black. 39.

FISHERY, SEVERAL. He who claims a several fishery, must be, or at least derive his right from, the owner of the soil, which in a free fishery is not requisite. 2 Black. 39.

And a subject may have by prescription a right to a several fishery in an arm of the sea. 4 Ter. Rep. 437.

And where the lord of the manor hath the soil on both sides the river, it is good evidence that he hath a right of fishing, and it puts the proof upon him who claims liberam piscariam; and where the soil belongs to the owners of the land on each side of a private river, each hath a several right of fishery ad medium filum aquæ.

FISHERIES, several statutes have been made to regulate the different sea fisheries, and the following is an accurate summary thereof:

——— THE BRITISH FISHERY.] By 31 Ed. 3. stat. 1. c. 1. no herring shall be bought or sold in the sea till the fishers come into haven, and the ship's cable be drawn to land.

By 3 Ed. 3. st. 2. c. 2. the fishers shall be free to sell their herrings and fish, at the fair of Great Yarmouth: there shall be no forestalling: the barons of the cinque ports shall govern the fair there: the hundred of herrings shall be six score, the last 10,000.

By 31 Ed. 3. st. 1. c. 3. the chancellor and treasurer may make orders for the buying and selling stock fish of St. Botolph and salmon of Berwick.

By 31 Ed. 3. st. 3. c. 1. doggers and load ships of Blackney haven shall discharge their fish there.

By 31 Ed. 3. st. 3. c. 1. and 35 Ed. 3. the price of dogger fish, and the like, shall be assessed at the beginning of Blackney fair; fish shall not be kept secret to be sold by retail: none shall buy fishing hooks or the like in Norfolk but owners, masters, and mariners of fishing ships, and herrings shall be sold free, and to the first comer.

By 22 Ed. 4. c. 2. salmons shall be well packed, and the vessel contain, if a butt, eighty-four gallons, and so in proportion, on pain of 6*s.* 8*d.*

The barrel of herrings shall be thirty-two gallons, on pain of 3*s.* 4*d.* the barrel of eels forty-two gallons, on pain of 20*s.* and if mixed, 10*s.* Ibid.

Chief officers of cities and boroughs shall appoint searchers to search and guage fish vessels, Ibid. who are by 11 Hen. 7. c. 23. to be paid certain fees for so doing.

By 5 Eliz. c. 5. no price shall be set or toll taken of sea fish imported if catched by English subjects; but the town of Kingston upon Hull may take 2*s.* 4*d.* for every last of herrings from non-freemen.

By 3 Jac. 1. c. 12. making any new wear along the sea shore, or within five miles of any haven, or destroying the fry of any fish, is a penalty of 10*l.* and fishing with a drag net under three inches mesh shall forfeit the same, and 10*s.* a time; but this is not to extend to nets of a less mesh for taking herrings, pilchards, and sprats only.

By 15 Car. 2. c. 7. herrings shall be well packed, and able packers shall be appointed, and sworn by the chief magistrates of towns on pain of 100*l.*

By 1 Geo. 1. c. 18. the meshes of nets shall be three inches and an half from knot to knot, nor shall any knot be put behind another, on forfeiture thereof, and 20*l.* except for catching herrings or the like.

By 29 Geo. 2. c. 23. all inhabitants of Great Britain may freely buy from fishermen and cure white fish in any of the seas or rivers in Scotland or Ireland thereto belonging, and persons obstructing the fishery, or taking any gratuity for liberty of fishing, forfeit 100*l.*

Staves of herring barrels in Scotland, (except those used in the white herring fishery, 30 Geo. 2. c. 30.) to be half an inch thick throughout, on pain of seizure.

By 30 Geo. 2. c. 30. such nets may be used in the white herring fishery as are best adapted thereto, so as the like quantity may be carried on board each buss.

Persons employed in the white herring fisheries to have free use of all ports, shores, and the like, below high water mark, and a hundred yards above, on any waste grounds for landing and drying nets, and persons obstructing such use, forfeit 100*l.* Ibid.

But this is not to exempt vessels employed in the fisheries from payment of lawful duties in piers or harbours lawfully made. Ibid.

By 26 Geo. 3. c. 81. lastly continued by 39 Geo. 3. c. 100. (and revived and further continued till March 25, 1809, by 48 Geo. 3.

c. 86.) an annual bounty of 20*s.* per ton is granted for seven years, to owners of ships of fifteen tons and upwards, employed in the white herring fishery.

Vessels entitled to the bounty must be decked vessels, built in Great Britain after January 1, 1780, must have on board barrelled, twelve bushels of salt for every last of fish such vessel can hold, and also 250 square yards of netting for every ton, buss measurement, with the customary equipment; not less than five men for the first fifteen tons, and one more for every five after; and so equipt shall clear out of some British port between 1st June and 1st October, and proceed to the fishery, and there continue three months, unless they return sooner with a full cargo of fish. Ibid.

No vessel shall be intitled to the bounty, unless it proceeds on the fishery directly from the port to which it belongs. Officers of the customs shall examine vessels and certify particulars to the commissioners. Oath shall be made of the vessel's being to proceed immediately on the fishery, and security given for the faithful conduct of the crew, which is to entitle them to licences for the voyage. Ibid.

Officers of the customs, on the return of a ship, shall certify her condition, and oath shall be made, that she has answered to the terms required, which certificate, with the licence, shall be transmitted to the commissioners, who are to order the bounty to be paid by the receiver general. Ibid.

Vessels returning with less than the proper number of men, or without a full cargo, shall not be intitled to the bounty. Ibid.

There shall be paid for every barrel of herrings, twice packed, and completely cured, landed from a buss, intitled to the bounty of 20*s.* per ton, a bounty of 4*s.* but if the quantity imported exceeds the proportion of two and one half barrels to a ton, only 1*s.* per barrel above that proportion. And the quantity shall be computed while in the state of sea steeks, four barrels of which are to be deemed equal to three of herrings twice packed. Ibid.

To boats not intitled to the bounty of 20*s.* per ton, a bounty of 1*s.* per barrel shall be paid. (See EXCISE, head Salt.) Casks containing herrings intitled to bounty, shall be branded. Ibid.

The bounties of 4*s.* and 1*s.* per barrel shall be paid as the bounty of 20*s.* per ton. Ibid.

To vessels employed in the Deep Sea fishery, additional premiums shall be paid, viz. for the greatest quantity of herrings imported in one vessel, between June 1st, and November 31st, eighty guineas; for the next greatest quantity sixty; for the next forty; and for the next twenty. Ibid.

The duties on fish caught and cured for home consumption shall cease.

If after October 1st, 1786, fish be packed in casks, not branded with the curers names, it shall be forfeited. After June 1st, 1787, the staves of barrels, in which white herrings are packed for exportation, must be half an inch thick, and full bound, or forfeited. Ibid.

Persons who have served as seamen or fishermen seven years in the fisheries, shall be intitled to the privileges granted by 22 Geo. 2 c. 44. which enables mariners and soldiers to exercise trades. Ibid.

Fish cured with British salt may be exported from one port to another in the united kingdom, for home consumption. Ibid.

Fish may be carried from one port to another in Britain, for exportation, on oath being made, that they were caught in Britain, and cured with home salt. Ibid.

Fish so brought coastways for exportation, shall be intitled to the bounties, and shall be subject to the regulations thereof. Ibid.

Bounties on exportation of fish carried from England to Scotland, shall be paid by the customs in England, and from Scotland to England in Scotland; on debenture from the officer at the port of exportation. Ibid.

Entry shall be made at the port of shipping, of the quantity, and where cured. Officers of the customs shall grant certificate of such entry, which is to be delivered by the master, previous to his landing the fish, on penalty of forfeiture thereof. Ibid.

Salt for the curing of fish, taken in the herring season, for home consumption, as well as for curing fish for exportation, may be taken duty free, on entering at the next salt office the quantity, and weighing the same in the presence of an officer, and swearing to the quantity, and that it is intended for curing fish. Entry shall be made at the port of shipping such salt, and bond given; and like entry shall be made at the intended port of relanding it. Officers of the customs shall deliver certificate of entry, which is to cancel the bond. And salt carried coastways, contrary to this act, shall be forfeited, with double its value, besides the duties. Ibid.

Salt may henceforward be delivered into the custody of the proprietor on his own bond. Credit shall be given on the back of the bond, for the quantity of salt accounted for; and bonds are exempted from the stamp duties. Ibid.

Officers accepting fees shall forfeit treble the value, and be discharged. Ibid.

The bounty per barrel shall be paid to the inhabitants of the isle of Man, for herrings caught and cured by them according to the terms of this act; and on exportation thereof they shall be allowed the bounties, to be paid if exported from the isle of Man, as the bounty per barrel is, payable there; and if from Great Britain, as the bounty on exportation from thence, and under the like regulations. Ibid.

The penalties on officers taking fees shall extend to the fisheries of the isle of Man. Ibid.

Commissioners of customs may add to the salaries of officers, in consideration of the abolition of fees. Persons counterfeiting certificates shall be punished as forgers; and taking false oaths are guilty of perjury. Ibid.

If officers suspect fresh fish to have been imported into London, contrary to 1 Geo. 1. c. 18. 9 Geo. 2. c. 33. and this act, two justices may summon the parties and determine the complaint. Ibid.

By 27 Geo. 3. c. 10. that part of the clause of the last act which restricts the bounty of 20*s.* per ton, to decked vessels, is repealed, and the said bounty extended to all vessels whatever, built in Great Britain, and employed in the said fishery, agreeable to the said act.

No vessel shall be deemed to have a full cargo, if under the proportion of four barrels of herrings once packed, or three twice packed, for every ton burthen. Ibid.

Decked vessels of not less than fifteen tons, shall be intitled to the bounties, if they take in one year the proportion of six barrels of herrings, when cured, for every ton burthen, though they may not have been fitted out with the quantity of salt required by the act. Ibid.

An account of the quantity of herrings delivered from vessels not fitted out agreeable to the said act, shall be taken at the port of delivery, and no more than fifty such vessels fitted out in one year from the same port, shall be intitled to the bounty of 20*s.* per ton, which shall be paid to the fifty vessels that shall have taken the greatest quantity, if more than that number should be fitted out. Ibid.

By 35 Geo. 3. c. 56. herrings, or cod, ling, hake, and salmon, sprinkled with salt on landing, may be carried coastways in bulk free of duty; but the cocquet must express that no bounty has been paid on such fish. s. 4.

The act in Scotland of 3d session of 1st parliament of queen Anne, relating to ungutted herrings found in casks, is repealed. s. 5.

And arrestments in Scotland, in order to attach the bounty in the hands of the commissioners of customs, must specify the names of the vessels. s. 6.

By 48 Geo. 3. c. 110. from and after 1st June, 1809, a bounty of 3*l.* per ton, is to be paid annually to the owners of busses employed in the Deep Sea British white herring fishery, and if a hired buss be employed, the person hiring the same shall be intitled to the bounty as if he were owner. s. 1.

No vessel shall be deemed to be so employed unless the nets be attached to the vessel while set, and shall be shot from and hauled back without the use of a small boat, the vessel not being at anchor while they are shot, set, or hauled in, nor unless the herrings taken receive their first cure on board. s. 2.

A bounty of two shillings per barrel is to be paid on white herrings taken and cured in the British fishery. s. 3.

The admiralty are to appoint a commissioned officer of the navy to be superintendant for the season of the Deep Sea British white herring fishery, at Brassy Sound in Shetland, the place of rendezvous, who is to arrive there before 15th of June. s. 8.

The treasury are to appoint officers of the fishery at the places where herrings are caught, the vessels discharge their cargoes, and also at the port of exportation, to overlook the curing, and take proper accounts; which persons must be coopers, skilful in curing and packing herrings. Which officers are to obey the orders of the commissioners for the British fisheries in Scotland. s. 10.

No net is to be used that has a mesh of less than one inch from knot to knot. s. 12.

Busses to be entitled to the bounty on the tonnage, must have in new barrels sixteen bushels of salt, at least, for every cask of herrings, and as many more new barrels as the vessel can contain, together with 300 square yards of netting for every ton, and the usual materials, and to be manned with ten men, if the vessel shall not exceed 60 tons; if she shall exceed sixty and be under seventy tons, with eleven men; and if of 70 tons or upwards, then with one man more for every ten tons, two of which men may be foreigners, but ships exceeding 100 tons need not have on board more salt, netting, or men than a vessel of 100 tons, nor more than five hundred barrels, nor is the full complement of men required to be on board until arrival at the place of rendezvous. s. 13.

The busses must proceed to Brassy Sound before 22d June in each year, and not cast their nets till the 24th, from which day they shall continue to fish on the coast of Great Britain or Ireland till 15th September following, unless they have before that day taken the requisite quantity. s. 14.

To obtain the tonnage bounty, the owners must enter the vessel according to her registry, with the particulars of her outfit at the port from whence she is fitted out, to be verified on oath; the owners, or their agent, shall also give bond, with one or more sureties, for fair dealing on the voyage; which done, the proper officer of the fishery is to give the master a licence to proceed on the voyage, and the busses are to be examined at the place of rendezvous. s. 15, 16.

The herrings taken every day are to be distinguished by a mark on the barrels in which they are cured. s. 17.

Herrings may be transhipped out of one buss into another vessel, previous to 16th of July. s. 18.

A buss not arriving at the rendezvous, or not beginning to fish at the time prescribed, is not to lose the benefit of the tonnage bounty, if it be proved that she was prevented by stress of weather. s. 19.

The tonnage bounty is not to be paid unless the full number of men were on board during the whole voyage, unless diminished by death, sickness, or actual desertion, s. 20, and the master shall keep a regular journal. s. 21.

The superintendant on vessel's return, to examine the same, and if there has been any thing culpable on his report, the commissioners of the fishery are to enquire into the same. s. 22, 23.

The officer of the fishery at each port is to attend the landing of the herrings and salt, and take an account thereof, and certify the same, who is also to transmit the licence, master's oath, and such certificate to the commissioners of the fishery, who are to give excise debentures for payment of the tonnage bounty; but in case of any omission being made in the journal, the commissioners may make an abatement of the bounty; but no bounty is to be paid at any port other than where there is an officer of the fishery. s. 24, 25, 26.

Mariners employed in this fishery are exempt from being impressed. s. 27.

Owners of busses entitled to the tonnage bounty are to pay the crew 2*s.* per barrel on the herrings taken and cured by them. s. 23.

And there shall be allowed an additional bounty of 1*l.* per ton for the first thirty busses fitted out for, and employed in this fishery, and which shall be entitled to the bounty of 3*l.* per ton. s. 31.

Vessels not fitted out for the tonnage bounty, but carrying out salt and stores for the fishery, are to be duly entered, and masters are to keep an account of the quantity cured on board vessels or boats cleared out with salt, which vessels arriving from the fisheries laden with herrings cured with salt carried out in a different vessel are subject to particular regulations, and if landed contrary thereto are to be forfeited. s. 31, 32, 33, 34.

Curers having salt stored at the fishery may cure herrings therewith, under certain regulations. s. 35.

The bounty of 2*s* per barrel on white herrings shall not be paid for herrings not taken after 1st June, nor if of a bad quality, or broken, or if not originally gutted, or which were cured in bulk, or otherwise than in barrels, or which having been cured in barrels shall afterwards be laid in bulk, or which shall not be repacked, or being packed, and in all respects well cured, nor unless of certain weights. s. 36, 37.

And herrings of such description which are not entitled to the bounty of 2*s.* per barrel produced to the officer in order to obtain the bounty, are to be forfeited. s. 38.

White herrings repacked, going coastwise for exportation, to be accompanied with a certificate that they were not repacked before the lapse of fifteen days from the day when first cured. s. 39.

White herrings shall not be exported unless packed in barrels of half an inch in thickness at the bulge, or for any foreign port in Europe, unless bound with sixteen hoops of wood or iron, or for any port out of Europe, unless in a new barrel, and with one iron hoop at each end, and subject to other regulations, on pain of forfeiture. s. 40, 41.

No coast sufferance, or cocket, or landing sufferance from the customs, shall be required for salt, nets, or materials for the herring fishery, or herrings, salt, or materials from thence. s. 42.

Herrings may be cured and packed in half barrels, of sixteen gallons each, two of which shall be equal to one barrel, and be entitled to bounty. s. 45.

Boats employed in the herring fishery are to have the name of the place to which they belong, and name of the owners painted thereon, on pain of forfeiture. s. 46.

Officers of the fishery may enter warehouses and storehouses of fish-curers by day or by night (but if at night with a constable,) to search. s. 47.

Persons wilfully making false oaths, guilty of perjury, s. 49; persons fraudulently branding barrels of herrings with marks appointed to be branded by the officers, or falsifying documents, are to forfeit not exceeding 50*l.* or be imprisoned not exceeding six months, and forfeit the barrels and implements, s. 50; if the marks are altered or effaced, the barrel, with the herrings, shall be forfeited. s. 51.

This act does not repeal the salt act of 38 Geo. 3. c. 89.—s. 51.

Officers taking any fees other than their salaries, are to forfeit 100*l.* and be incapacitated. s. 54.

The commissioners may allow premiums or bounties, in such proportion as they think fit, for fishing herrings in boats exceeding fifteen tons in Scotland, to be paid by the commissioners of excise there, provided the said premiums do not exceed in the whole, in one year, 3000*l.* s. 55.

The act to continue until 1st June, 1813. s. 61.

Greenland.] By 25 Car. 2. c. 7. all persons may freely trade into and from Greenland, and those seas, and may take and import whales, oil, and blubber, and may have harponeers, as well as English mariners.

But no English ship shall have the benefit of this act, unless such vessel did proceed from England, or Wales, or Berwick, and was victualled there.

By 4 & 5 Will. & Mar. c. 17. certain persons were incorporated by the name of The Greenland Company, enabled to buy lands and to trade to Greenland.

By 10 Will. 3. c. 25. the Greenland company may import oil, blubber, and whale fish, custom free.

By 1 Ann. c. 16. any person who will adventure to Greenland for whale fishing, shall have all privileges granted to the Greenland company, and no harpooner shall be impressed.

By 26 Geo. 3. c. 41. (till March 25, 1810, 48 Geo. 3. c. 20.) British ships going on the whale fishery, must be visited by an officer of the customs, who shall certify the admeasurement to the commissioners. If such certificate proves the ship is fit for the voyage, and if oath is made of the intention to proceed forthwith there, and to import the whale fins, &c. into Great Britain, the commissioners, on security given, may licence the ship.

Ships of 200 tons burthen must have forty fishing lines, forty harpoon irons, four boats, with seven men, including an harpooner, a steersman, and a line manager to each boat, making twenty-eight men, besides a master and surgeon, with six months provision; and larger ships are to have an increase of six men, one boat, ten lines, and ten harpoons for every fifty tons more, with proportionable provisions; and such ships must have one apprentice, and one green man for every thirty-five tons, to be reckoned with the above number of men. Ibid.

The officers of the customs, on return of the ship to Great Britain, shall make a report of her condition, and oath shall be made of her not having deviated from the conditions on which the certificate was granted, which documents shall be transmitted to the commissioners, who shall order a bounty of 30*s.* per ton. Ibid.

No person shall be entitled to the bounty, unless the ship sails from the port of survey before April 10th, yearly, and continues fishing till August 10th following, unless laden with thirty tons of oil, or blubber in proportion of three to two tons thereof, and one ton and an half of whale fins, if in ships of 300 tons; and so in proportion if of greater or less burthen; or unless forced by unavoidable accident to depart sooner, which shall be verified on oath, and transmitted with the other documents to the commissioners of the customs. Ibid.

If a ship ready for sailing by April 10th, is by unavoidable necessity prevented from sailing till April 25th, the bounty may be paid; and the bounties may be paid out of any monies in the hands of the receiver general. Ibid.

Ships of 150 tons burthen are entitled to the bounty; but no ship shall be entitled to a larger bounty than for 400 tons, and only for five years from December 25th 1786, and if not employed in the fishery before that day, not longer than for 300 tons. Ibid.

Ships of more than 400 tons, or 300 tons, need not be fitted out but as of those burthens to entitle them to the bounty; and no bounty shall be allowed to any ship where a log-book has not been properly kept, which shall be delivered to the collector of the customs, before whom the contents shall be verified on oath. Ibid.

If a ship of war is met at sea, the log-book must be produced to the captain, who must make therein a memorandum of the production, and it must likewise be produced to the British consul at any foreign port. Ibid.

Ships fitted out from Ireland, agreeable to the regulations of this act, shall be entitled to the bounty. Ibid.

The owners may insure the bounty, in case of the loss of the ship. Whale fins may be imported in British ships, duty free; but not unless oath is made that the cargo was caught by the crews of such ships. Persons granting or using false certificates, forfeit 500*l.* Ibid.

No harpooner, line manager, or steerer, shall be impressed, but may, when unemployed therein, sail in the colliery trade, on giving security to return the next season; and common seamen shall in like manner be protected, till the end of the season after entry. Ibid.

The Greenland seas and Davis's Streights shall be deemed to extend to the latitude of 59° 30′ north, and no farther. Ibid.

The commissioners of the customs shall lay before parliament, annually, the amount of the number of ships employed. Ibid.

By 29 Geo. 3. c. 53. any master permitting an apprentice indentured pursuant to 26 Geo. 3. c. 41. 26 Geo. 3. c. 50. and 28 Geo. 3. c. 20. to quit his service before the expiration of his term, shall forfeit 50*l.* unless such apprentice be discharged before a magistrate, or turned over to another master in the said fisheries.

No premium shall be paid under the acts, unless the names of the ships on board which apprentices are bound to serve be insorted in the indentures.

By 39 & 40 Geo. 3. c. 51. on return of any vessel from the Greenland and Davis's Streights, the blubber may be boiled into oil, and be admitted to entry.

By 46 Geo. 3. c. 9. (until the signature of preliminary articles of peace, s. 2), vessels not provided with the full complement of men at the port of clearance, may proceed to any of the ports in the Forth of Clyde, or in Lough Ryan, or to Lerwick, or Kirkwall, and complete them, who may be landed on their return: but certificates are required of the men taken on board, and oath that the men proceeded on the fishery, to entitle the vessel to bounty. s. 1.

By 48 Geo. 3. c. 20. the act 26 Geo. 3. c. 41. and so much of 29 Geo. 3. c. 53. as relates to the Greenland seas, and Davis's

Newfoundland Fishery.] By 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 6. the admiralty shall not exact any fees from fishermen from the voyage to Iceland, Newfoundland, or elsewhere, on pain of treble damages.

By 15 Car. 2. c. 7. no vessel shall go on a fishing voyage for Iceland and Westmona until the 10th of March, on forfeiture of the ship.

By 15 Car. 2. c. 16, no toll shall be levied in Newfoundland for any fish of English catching, nor any net cast near any harbour in Newfoundland to take the spawn of poor John, or the like, except for taking of bait only, on forfeiture.

None shall destroy any house, or stage, or utensils of fishing in Newfoundland or Greenland, on pain of double the value. Ibid.

By 10 & 11 Will. 3. c. 25. all the king's subjects shall have free trade to Newfoundland, and no alien shall bait or fish there; none shall throw any annoyance into harbours, or destroy any stage there.

The first fishing ship, entering the harbour in the fishing season, shall be admiral for that time, the second vice-admiral, and so on, and shall see the rules in this act executed. Ibid.

Persons possessed of several places shall make their election which to abide in, and give their resolution to any after-comer, in forty-eight hours after demand, and, in case of difference, admirals shall proportion the place. Ibid.

No fisherman, or inhabitant of Newfoundland, shall possess any stage until all fishing ships be provided, except they have built them themselves. Ibid.

Bye-boat keepers shall not meddle with house or stage belonging to any fishing ships: they shall carry two fresh men in six, and the inhabitants shall employ them; the master of a fishing ship shall carry one fresh man in five, and make oath thereof, and have every fifth man a green man. Ibid.

Marks of boats or train vats shall not be obliterated without the owner's consent: standing trees shall not be rinded, nor woods fired, necessary fuel excepted; sayns shall not be annoyed, nor nets, baits, or the like stolen. Ibid.

Robberies and capital crimes in Newfoundland may be tried in England. Admirals shall keep a journal, and deliver a copy thereof to the privy council: they shall determine differences between the fishers and inhabitants, with power to appeal to the king's officers. Ibid.

By 26 Geo. 3. c. 26. certain bounties were granted to ships employed in the Newfoundland fishery, and the same were lastly continued by 41 Geo. 3. (u. k.) c. 97. and are now expired.

By 41 Geo. 3. c. 77. salted salmon or cod-fish may be imported from Newfoundland or the coast of Labrador by British subjects, and shall on certain conditions be allowed a bounty of 3*s.* per quintal or cwt. and such fish may be exported without repayment of the bounty.

By 48 Geo. 3. c. 20. so much of 43 Geo. 3. c. 68. as relates to the admission to entry of oil or blubber from Newfoundland is further continued till March 25th 1810. s. 2.

And the act 47 Geo. 3. c. 24. is also continued till March 25th 1810. s. 3.

Oyster Fisheries.] The 2 Geo. 2. c. 19. was made for regulating, well-ordering, and improving the oyster fishery in the river Medway, under the authority of the mayor and citizens of Rochester.

By 31 Geo. 3. c. 51. persons unlawfully catching oysters or brood within the limits of any fishery, may be prosecuted at the sessions, and punished by fine and imprisonment: but the act is not to extend to the taking of floating fish. s. 1, 2.

Justices may issue warrants for apprehending offenders, and, for want of sureties, may commit them till the quarter-sessions. s. 3.

Persons found taking, or using engines for taking oysters or brood, refusing to discover themselves, may be seized. s. 4.

But no justice is to commit, or require a security from, any person, without a recognizance is entered into to prosecute. s. 5.

And persons may be discharged from confinement upon entering into a recognizance of 20*l.* s. 6.

This act is not to affect any act in force respecting any particular oyster fishery, or to preclude a prosecution at the common law. s. 7, 8.

By 48 Geo. 3. c. 144. persons stealing oysters or oyster brood from oyster beds shall be guilty of felony, and may be transported for seven years, or imprisoned, and kept to hard labour for three years; but this is not to affect persons claiming a right to take the same away from such oyster beds. s. 1, 2.

The parish need not be named in the indictment, and where the county cannot be ascertained, the offence may be stated to be in the county in which the indictment shall be prepared, being within the actual county, or the adjoining county, and justices for towns may act as justices for counties in execution of this act. s. 3, 4.

Southern Whale Fishery.] By 48 Geo. 3. c. 124. premiums are granted to ships fitted out for the Southern whale fishery.

For eight of such ships fitted out between 1st January and 31st December 1809, and between 1st January and 31st December in each of the two succeeding years, which shall sail to the southward of the equator, and there fish, and which shall return before the 1st December in the subsequent year, there shall be paid to each of the eight ships which shall first arrive with the greatest quantity, and not less than twenty tons of oil, or head matter, 500*l.*

And for the four other ships which shall be fitted out, and sail by the aforesaid time, to the southward of 36° of south latitude, and shall there fish and not return until after fourteen calendar months from the day on which they cleared out, but before 31st Dec. in the second year, there shall be paid 400*l.* to each of such ships arriving with the greatest quantity, not less than twenty tons.

And for ten other ships, which shall be fitted out, and sail by the aforesaid time, and shall double Cape Horn, or pass the Streights of Magellan, or double the Cape of Good Hope, and carry on the fishing for four months to the eastward of 105° of east longitude from London, and not return till after the expiration of sixteen months, but before the 31st of Dec. in the second year, there shall be paid to one which shall first arrive with the greatest quantity, not being less than thirty tons, 600*l.* and to each of the other nine ships, with the greatest quantity, not less than thirty tons, 500*l.*

Apprentices who shall not have completed two voyages, and whose age shall not exceed twenty-one years, shall not be impressed, and they shall have special protections granted by the admiralty. s. 5.

Ships returning to ports in Ireland are entitled to the same benefits. s. 6.

By 35 Geo. 3. c. 92. the master and three-fourths of the crew of ships fitted out for the Southern whale fishery shall be British subjects; or, if cleared out from Great Britain, foreign protestants, intending to settle in Britain, and taking the oaths. s. 7.

No premium to be paid unless there is an apprentice indentured for three years, on board, for every fifty tons burthen. s. 8.

Penalty of 50*l.* on masters suffering apprentices to quit their services before the expiration of the term; and no premium is to be allowed, unless the names of vessels in which apprentices are to serve are inserted in indentures. s. 9.

Apprentices are to be considered as such for the voyage, though their indentures expire during it. s. 10.

No premium to be allowed unless a log-book be regularly kept, and delivered to the collector of the customs at the port of arrival, and verified on oath. s. 11.

The log-book to be produced to the captain of any ship of war that may be met with at sea, who shall make therein a memorandum of the protection, and to the British consul at any foreign port for the like purpose. s. 12.

Oath to be made that the cargo is the produce of creatures killed by the ship's crew. s. 13.

Persons taking part of the cargo of other vessels for the purpose of obtaining the premium, forfeit 500*l.* one moiety to the informer, if information be given within a month after report at the custom-house; and when information has been given, the owners are to pay money due to the masters to the collectors of the customs, and if paid otherwise, to be accountable for the same. s. 14.

Produce of whales caught to the northward of the equator, or to the northward of 56° of south latitude, of the quantity to be entitled to the premium. s. 15.

Commissioners of the customs may order payment of premiums; but no premium to be paid unless claimed within two months after the crew being mustered inwards. s. 16, 17.

Ships are permitted to sail to the east of the Cape of Good Hope, and west of Cape Horn, not sailing to the northward of the equator, nor making more than 51° of east longitude, or 180° west from London, and ships so sailing are to take a licence from the East India company. s. 18, 19, 20, 21.

Ships sailing out of their limits, or having improper merchandise on board, liable to the penalties of trading to the East Indies without licence; and if any thing be done contrary to this act, the owners of the ships are not to be entitled to a future licence from the company. s. 22, 23.

Ships touching at St. Helena may be examined, and unlicensed goods seized. And certificates are to be delivered to the secretary of the East India company, that no produce of the East Indies has been imported, to entitle to a premium. s. 24, 25.

Ships sailing within the limits of the South Sea company must have a licence from the company. s. 26.

Ships may be furnished with arms and ammunition, on licence from the admiralty. s. 27, 28.

No ship entitled to more than one premium the same season. s. 29.

No premium to be allowed for vessels unless certified to have been visited on clearing out, and on their return, not unless registered. s. 30, 31.

If water be mixed with oil or matter imported, it shall be forfeited, as well as the claim to the bounty, and in case of dispute, the owner is to prove the purity of the oil. s. 32.

The quantity of oil and head matter imported to be ascertained by the officer of the customs, and certified to the commissioners. s. 33.

No harpooners, line managers, or boat steerers to be impressed. s. 34.

Whale boats are not liable to seizure, of whatever built, if used only in the fishery. s. 35.

Persons granting false certificates, to forfeit 500*l.* and be incapacitated, and persons counterfeiting, or using counterfeit certificates knowingly, forfeit 500*l.* s. 39.

The penalties are recoverable according to the law of customs. s. 40.

By 42 Geo. 3. c. 77. British-built ships may pass through the Streights of Magellan, or round Cape Horn, and carry on the fisheries in the Pacific Ocean, without licence from the East India or South Sea companies.

And by 43 Geo. 3. c. 90. having passed 180 degrees of west latitude, may sail to the northward as far as 10 degrees of south latitude, but not further, until they have sailed with 51 degrees of east latitude.

By 43 Geo. 3. c. 90. ships fitted out, and licensed conformably to 38 Geo. 3. c. 57. and sailing to the eastward of the Cape of Good Hope, for carrying on the fishing, may sail to the northward as far as 10 degrees of south latitude, but no further northward until they have passed 115 degrees of east latitude, and then to 1 degree north latitude, and no further until they have passed to the eastward of 180 degrees of east latitude.

FISHGARTH, a dam or wear in a river, made for the taking of fish. Cowel. Blount.

FLEDWITE or FLIGHTWITE, (from the Sax. flyth fuga, et wite, mulcta) in ancient law signifies a discharge from amerciaments, where a person having been a fugitive, comes to the peace of our lord the king of his own accord, or with licence. Rastal. Cowel. Blount.

FLEET, (Sax. fleot, i. e. flota, a place of running-water, where the tide or float comes up) a prison in London, so called from a river or ditch that was formerly there, on the side whereof it stood. To this prison men amenable to the courts of chancery, common pleas, and exchequer, are liable to be committed for defaults or contempts.

FLEM, flema, (from the Sax. flean, to kill or slay) was anciently considered an outlaw. Cowel. Blount.

FLEMENEFRIT, FLEMENESTRINTHE, FLYMENAFRYNTHE, the receiving or relieving of a fugitive or outlaw. Ibid.

FLEMESWITE, (Sax.) habere catalla fugitivorum. Fleta, lib. 1. c. 47.

FLIGHERS, masts for ships. Cowel. Blount.

FLIGHT, implies guilt: and in felony, if found by the jury, incurs a forfeiture of goods: but the return of flight by the present administration of our code of criminal jurisprudence is not required.

FLOOD-MARK, high-water mark. The mark which the sea makes on the shore, at flowing water and the highest tide.

FLORIN, a foreign coin, in Spain 4*s.* 4*d.* Germany, 3*s.* 4*d.* and Holland 2*s.* Ibid.

FLOTA NAVIUM, a fleet of ships. Ibid.

FLOTAGES, are such things as by accident swim on the top of great rivers; the word is sometimes used in the commissions of water bailiffs. Ibid.

FLOTSAM, is where a ship is sunk or cast away, and the goods are found floating upon the sea. 5 Rep. 106. The king, or the lord of the manor as his grantee, shall have flotsam, if the owners of the goods are not known; but not otherwise. F. N. B. 122. And where the proprietor of the goods may be known, they have a year and a day to claim flotsam. 1 Keb. 657. See title Wreck.

FOCAGE, (focagium) the same with house-bote or fire-bote. Cowel. Blount.

FODER, (Sax. foda, i. e. alimentum) any kind of sustenance for horses, or other cattle: and in feudal times it was the prerogative of the prince, to be provided with corn and other meat for his horses, by his subjects, in his wars or other expeditions. Cowel. Blount.

FODERTORIUM, provision or fodder, to be paid by custom to the king's purveyor. Ibid.

FOENUS NAUTICUM. Where money was lent to a merchant to be employed in a beneficial trade, with condition to be repaid, with extraordinary interest, in case such a voyage was safely performed, the agreement was sometimes called foenus nauticum, sometimes usura maritima. But as this gave an opening for usurious and gaming contracts, 19 Geo. 2. c. 37. enacts, that all money lent on bottomry or at respondentia, on vessels bound to or from the East Indies, shall be expressly lent, only upon the ship or merchandize; the lender to have the benefit of salvage, &c. 2 Black. 459.

FOESA, (Fr. foisson) grass, herbage. Cowel. Blount.

FOGAGE, (fogagium) fog or after-grass, springing after the summer month.

FOITERERS, vagabonds. See Faitours.

FOLC-LANDS, (Sax.) copyhold lands so called in the time of the Saxons, as charter lands were called boc-lands. Kitch. 174. Folkland was terra vulgi or popularis the land of the vulgar people, who had no certain estate therein, but held the same under the rents and services accustomed or agreed, at the will only of their lord, and it was therefore not put in writing, but accounted prædium rusticum & ignobile. Spelm. of Feuds, cap. 5.

FOLC-MOTE or FOLKMOTE, (Sax. folgemot, i. e. conventus populi) is compounded of folk, populus, and mote, or gemote, convenire; and signified originally, a general assembly of the people to consider of, and order matters of the commonwealth. Leg. Edw.

Confess. cap. 35. And according to Spelman, the folcmote was a sort of annual parliament, or convention of the bishops, thanes, aldermen, and freemen, upon every May-day yearly: where the laymen were sworn to defend one another, and to the king, and to preserve the laws of the kingdom, and then consulted of the common safety. But Dr. Brady infers from the laws of our Saxon kings, that it was an inferior court, held before the king's reeve or steward, every month to do folk right, or compose smaller differences, from whence there lay appeal to the superior courts. Brady's Gloss. p. 48. Squire seems to think the folcmote, not distinct from the shiremote, or common general meeting of the county. See his Angl. Sax. Gov. 155. n. Cowel. Blount.

FOOT of a fine. See FINE.

FOOTGELD, (from the Sax. fot, pes, et geldan, solvere,) is as much as pedis redemptio, and signifies an amercement for not cutting out and expeditating the balls of great dogs feet in the forest: and to be quit of footgeld is a privilege to keep dogs within the forest unlawed, without punishment. Manwood, par. 1. p. 86. Cowel. Blount.

FORAGE, (Fr. fourage) hay and straw for horses, particularly for the use of horse in an army. Cowel. Blount.

FORAGIUM, straw when the corn is thrashed out. Ibid.

FORBALK, (forbalka) lying forward or next the highway. Ibid.

FORBARRE, is to bar or deprive one of a thing for ever. Ibid.

FORBATUDUS, when the aggressor in combat was slain, he was termed forbatudus. Cowel. Blount.

FORCE, (vis) an offence, by which violence is used to things or persons. West. Symbol. pa. 2. sec. 65. There is also a force implied in law; as every trespass, rescous, or disseisin, implieth it. Co. Lit. 257. All force is against the law; and it is lawful to repel force by force: and there is a law maxim, quod alias bonum et justum est, si per vim vel fraudem petatur, malum et injustum est. 3 Rep. 78.

FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER. The first is a violent actual entry into houses or lands: and forcible detainer is a withholding by violence, and with strong hand, of the possession of land, &c. whereby he who hath right of entry is barred or hindered. Lamb. 135. Cromp. 70. Keilw. 92.

And by 5 R. 2. stat. 1. c. 8. 15 R. 2. c. 2. 8 H. 6. c. 9. s. 2. none shall enter into any lands or tenements, but where entry is given by law, and in a peaceable manner, though they have title of entry, on pain of imprisonment, &c. And when a forcible entry is committed, justices of peace are impowered to view the place, and inquire of the force by a jury summoned by the sheriff of the county; and cause the tenements to be seized and restored, and imprison the offenders till they pay a fine.

If a justice of peace come to view a force in a house, and they refuse to let him in; this of itself will make forcible detainer in all cases; but it must be upon complaint made. The justices of peace are not to inquire into the title of either party: and there shall be no restitution upon an indictment of forcible entry or detainer, where the defendant hath been in quiet possession for three years together without interruption, next before the day of the indictment found, and his estate in the land not ended; which may be alleged in stay of restitution, and restitution is to be stayed till that be tried, if the other will traverse the same, &c. Dalt. 312. Stat. 31 Eliz. c. 11.

The remedy may be, 1. by action. For an action lies upon stat. 15 R. 2. c. 2. against him who makes a forcible entry. So, upon stat. 8 H. 6. c. 9. against him who makes a forcible entry, or detainer.

2dly. By justices of peace upon view. For by the several statutes of 15 Ric. 2. c. 2. 8 Hen. 6. c. 9. 31 Eliz. c. 11. and 21 Jac. 1. c. 15. upon any forcible entry, or forcible detainer after peaceable entry, into any lands, or benefices of the church, one or more justices of the peace, taking sufficient power of the county, may go to the place, and there record the force upon his own view, as in case of riots; and upon such conviction may commit the offender to gaol, till he makes fine and ransom to the king. And moreover the justice or justices have power to summon a jury, to try the forcible entry or detainer complained of: and, if the same be found by that jury, then, besides the fine on the offender, the justices shall make restitution by the sheriff of the possession, without inquiring into the merits of the title; for the force is the only thing to be tried, punished, and remedied by them: and the same may be done by indictment at the general sessions. But this provision does not extend to such as endeavour to maintain possession by force, where they themselves, or their ancestors, have been in the peaceable enjoyment of the lands and tenements, for three years immediately preceding. And holding over by force, where the tenant's title was under a lease now expired, is said to be a forcible detainer. (Cro. Jac. 199.)

lie for seducing a young man or woman from their parents, against their consent, in order to marry them. Cro. Car. 557. Raym. 473. 4 Black. 208.

And by 3 H. 7. c. 2. "if any persons shall "take away any woman having lands or "goods, or that is heir apparent to her an- "cestor, by force, and against her will, and "marry or defile her, the takers, procurers, "abettors, and receivers of the woman taken "away against her will, and knowing the "same, shall be deemed principal felons."

In the construction of this statute, it hath been determined, 1. That the indictment must allege that the taking was for lucre, for such are the words of the statute. 2. In order to shew this, it must appear that the woman has substance either real or personal, or is an heir apparent. 3. It must appear that she was taken away against her will. 4. It must also appear, that she was afterwards married, or defiled. And though possibly the marriage or defilement might be by her subsequent consent, being won thereunto by flatteries after the taking, yet this is felony, if the first taking were against her will: and so vice versa, if the woman be originally taken away by her own consent, yet if she afterwards refuse to continue with the offender, and be forced against her will, she may, from that time, as properly be said to be taken against her will, as if she never had given any consent at all; for till the force was put upon her, she was in her own power. It is held that a woman, thus taken away and married, may be sworn and give evidence against the offender, though he is her husband de facto, contrary to the general rule of law; because he is no husband de jure, in case the actual marriage was also against her will. In cases indeed where the actual marriage is good, by the consent of the inveigled woman obtained after her forcible abduction, sir Matthew Hale seems to question how far her evidence should be allowed: but other authorities seem to agree, that it should even then be admitted; esteeming it absurd, that the offender should thus take advantage of his own wrong, and that the very act of marriage, which is a principal ingredient of his crime, should (by a forced construction of law) be made to stop the mouth of the most material witness against him. 1 Hawk. P. C. 110. 1 Hal. P. C. 660. 1 Hawk. P. C. 109. 1 Hal. P. C. 660. 1 Hawk. P. C. 110. 1 Hal. P. C. 661. Cro. Car. 488. 3 Keb. 193. State Tria's, 1. 455. 4 Black. 208.

An inferior degree of the same kind of offence, but not attended with force, is punished by the statute 4 & 5 Ph. & Mar. c. 8. which enacts, that if any person, above the age of fourteen, unlawfully shall convey or take away any woman child unmarried, (which is held to extend to bastards as well as to legitimate children,) within the age of sixteen years, from the possession and against the will of the father, mother, guardians, or governors, he shall be imprisoned two years, or fined at the discretion of the justices; and if he deflowers such maid or woman child, or without the consent of parents contracts matrimony with her, he shall be imprisoned five years, or fined at the discretion of the justices, and she shall forfeit all her lands to her next of kin, during the life of her said husband.* So that as these stolen marriages, under the age of sixteen, were usually upon mercenary views, this act, besides punishing the seducer, wisely removed the temptation. But this latter part of the act is now rendered almost useless, by provisions of a very different kind, which make the marriage totally void, in the statute 26 Geo. 2. c. 33. 4 Black. 209.

FORDOL, (from the Sax. fore, before, and dæle, a part or portion) signifies a butt or head-land, shooting upon other bounds. Ib.

FORECHEAPUM, præemption, from the Sax. fore, ante, and ceapean, i. e. mundinari, emere. Ibid.

FORECLOSED, shut out or excluded, as the barring the equity of redemption on mortgages, &c. 2 Inst. 298. 2 Black. 159. See Mortgage, FOREGOERS. The king's purveyors were so called from their going before to provide for his household. Cowel. Blount.

FOREIGN, (Fr. foraign, Lat. forinsecus, extraneus) strange or outlandish, of another country: and in our law, not agreeable to the purpose or matter in hand. Kitch. 126.

FOREIGN ANSWER. An answer not triable in the county where it is made. L. 3.

FOREIGN ATTACHMENT, is an attachment of foreigners goods, found within a liberty or city, for the satisfaction of some citizen to whom the foreigner is indebted; or of money in the hands of another person, due to him against whom an action of debt is brought, &c. Cowel. Blount. See Attachment.

FOREIGN COURT. At Leominster there is the borough and the foreign court; which last is within the jurisdiction of the manor, but not within the liberty of the bailiff of the borough: so there is a foreign court of the honour of Gloucester, and some other places. Cowel. Blount.

FOREIGN KINGDOM, is a kingdom

* It has been decided in the court of exchequer, that she forfeits her lands only during the life of her husband. Amb. 73. Though the more natural construction of the statute seems to be, that the next heir shall retain them during the life of the wife, even after the death of the husband. 1 Brown. 23.

under the dominion of a foreign prince. 3 Inst. 48. One Hutchinson killed Mr. Colson abroad in Portugal, for which he was tried there and acquitted, the exemplifications of which acquittal he produced under the great seal of that kingdom; and the king being willing he should be tried here, referred it to the judges, who all agreed, that the party being already acquitted by the laws of Portugal, could not be tried again for the same fact here. 3 Keb. 785.

Where a bond is given, or contract made in a foreign kingdom, it may be tried in the king's bench, and laid to be done in any place in England. Hob. 11. 2 Bulst. 322.

FOREIGN OPPOSER, or APPOSER. See Exchequer.

FOREIGN PLANTATIONS. See Plantations.

FOREIGN PLEA, is a plea in objection to a judge, where he is refused as incompetent to try the matter in question, because it arises out of his jurisdiction. Kitch. 75. See title Abatement.

FOREIGN SERVICE, is that whereby a mesne lord holds of another, without the compass of his own fee: or that which the tenant performs either to his own lord, or to the lord paramount out of the fee. Kitch. 299.

FOREIGNERS. Though made denizens or naturalized here are disabled to bear offices in the government, to be of the privy council, members of parliament, &c. by the acts of settlement of the crown. 12 W. 3. c. 2. 1 Geo. 1. c. 4. See Aliens.

FOREJUDGER, (forejudicatio) a judgment whereby a person is deprived or put by the thing in question. Bract. lib. 4. To be forejudged the court, is when an officer or attorney of any court is expelled the same for some offence; or for not appearing to an action, on a bill filed against him, &c. and if the attorney appears not in four days, then the bill is entered upon a roll of that term, and carried to the clerk of the warrants and inrolments; and he thereupon strikes such attorney out of the roll of attornies, when he stands unprivileged, and may be arrested as any other person, &c. Practis. Solic. 322. Attorn. Compan. 182, 183.

But an attorney forejudged, may be restored, on clearing himself from his contumacy in not appearing when he was called, and on making satisfaction to the plaintiff; and then a judge will make an order to the clerk of the warrants, to replace him in the proper roll of attornies: and there are instances of restoring attornies forejudged, upon payment of a small fine. Ibid. Rastal 96. See Attornies and Stamps.

FORESCHOKE, (derelictum) forsaken; when a man doth not pursue the course appointed by law to recover lands seized by the lord for want of services, he doth in presumption of law disavow or forsake all the right he hath to the same; and then such lands shall be called foreschoke. Cowel. Blount.

FOREST, (foresta, saltus) signifies a great or vast wood; locus sylvestris & saltuosus. And according to Blackstone, forests are waste grounds belonging to the king; replenished with all manner of beasts of chase or venary; which are under the king's protection, for the sake of his royal recreation, and delight: and to that end, and for the preservation of the king's game, there are particular laws, privileges, courts and offices belonging to the king's forests. 1 Black. 288. But a forest in the hands of a subject is properly nothing more than a chase, being subject to the common law only, and not to the forest laws. 2 Black. 38.

FORESTAGIUM, some duty payable to the king's forestors, as chiminage, or such like. Cowel. Blount.

FORESTAL, (forestallamentum, from the Sax. fore, i. e. via & stal) signifies to intercept on the highways. Spelm. And, in our law, forestalling is the buying or bargaining for any corn, cattle, or other merchandize, by the way as they come to fairs or markets to be sold, before they are brought thither; to the intent to sell the same again, at a higher and dearer price. And all endeavours to inhance the common price of any victuals or merchandize, and practices which have an apparent tendency thereto, whether by spreading false rumours, or buying things in a market before the accustomed hour, or by buying and selling again the same thing in the same market, &c. are highly criminal by the common law; and all such offences anciently came under this general appellation of forestalling. 3 Inst. 195, 196. And so jealous is the common law of practices of this nature, which are a general inconvenience and prejudice to the people, and very oppressive to the poorer sort, that it will not suffer corn to be sold in the sheaf before thrashed; for by such sale the market is in effect forestalled. 3 Inst. 197. H. P. C. 152. By the common law, persons guilty of forestalling, upon an indictment found, are liable to fine and imprisonment, answerable to the heinousness of their offence. 1 Hawk. 235.

FORESTALLER, is a person guilty of any of the acts before described, as acts of forestalling.

FORETOOTH, striking out the foretooth is a mayhem. 4 Black. 206.

FORFANG or FORFENG, (from the Sax. fore, ante & fangen, prendere) the taking of provision from any one in fairs or markets, before the king's purveyors were served with necessaries for his majesty. Cowel. Blount.

FORFEITURE, as generally defined by Blackstone, is a punishment annexed by law to some illegal act or negligence in the owner of lands, tenements, or hereditaments: whereby he loses all his interest therein, and they go to the party injured as a recompence for the wrong, which either he alone, or the public together with himself hath sustained. 2 Black. 267.

But forfeiture for crimes and misdemeanors, (of which it is alone intended to speak in this place) may be incurred, not only in respect to lands and hereditaments, but also in respect to goods and chattels in the following instances: 1. the offences which induce a forfeiture of lands and tenements to the crown, or its grantee are principally the following six: 1. Treason; 2. Felony; 3. Misprision of Treason; 4. Præmunire; 5. Drawing a weapon on a judge or striking any one in the presence of the king's principal courts of justice; 6. Popish recusancy. 2 Black. 268.

I. Forfeiture by attainder in high treason; a man forfeits to the king all his lands and tenements of inheritance, whether fee-simple or fee-tail, and all his rights of entry on lands and tenements, which he had at the time of the offence committed, or at any time afterwards, to be for ever vested in the crown: and also the profits of all lands and tenements, which he had in his own right for life or years, so long as such interest shall subsist. This forfeiture relates backwards to the time of the treason committed: so as to avoid all intermediate sales and incumbrances, but not those before the fact: and therefore a wife's jointure is not forfeitable for the treason of her husband; because settled upon her previous to the treason committed. But her dower is forfeited by the express provision of statute 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 11. And yet the husband shall be tenant by the curtesy of the wife's lands, if the wife be attainted of treason; for that is not prohibited by the statute. But, though after attainder the forfeiture relates back to the time of the treason committed, yet it does not take effect unless an attainder be had, of which it is one of the fruits: and therefore if a traitor dies before judgment pronounced, or is killed in open rebellion, or is hanged by martial law, it works no forfeiture of his lands: for he never was attainted of treason. But if the chief justice of the king's bench (the supreme coroner of all England) in person, upon the view of the body of one killed in open rebellion, records it and returns the record into his own court, both lands and goods shall be forfeited. Co. Litt. 392. 3 Inst. 19. 1 Hal. P. C. 240. 2 Hawk. P. C. 448. 3 Inst. 211. 1 Hal. P. C. 359. Co. Litt. 13. 4 Rep. 57. 4 Black. 301.

The natural justice of forfeiture or confiscation of property, for treason, is founded on this consideration: that he who hath thus violated the fundamental principles of government, and broken his part of the original contract between king and people, hath abandoned his connections with society; and hath no longer any right to those advantages, which before belonged to him purely as a member of the community: among which social advantages the right of transferring or transmitting property to others is one of the chief. Such forfeitures, moreover, whereby his posterity must suffer as well as himself, with help to restrain a man, not only by the sense of his duty, and dread of personal punishment, but also by his passions and natural affections; and will interest every dependent and relation he has, to keep him from offending. 4 Black. 382.

With us in England, forfeiture of lands and tenements to the crown for treason is by no means derived from the feodal policy, but was antecedent to the establishment of that system in this island; being transmitted from our Saxon ancestors, and forming a part of the antient Scandinavian constitution. But in certain treasons relating to the coin, rather a species of the crimen falsi, than the crimen læsæ majestatis, it is provided by some of the modern statutes (stat. 5 Eliz. c. 11. 18 Eliz. c. 1.) which constitute the offence, that it shall work no forfeiture of lands, save only for the life of the offender; and by all, that it shall not deprive the wife of her dower (Ibid. 8 & 9 Will. 3. c. 26. 15 & 16 Geo. 2. c. 28.) And, in order to abolish such hereditary punishment entirely, it was enacted by statute 7 Ann. c. 21. that after the decease of the late pretender, no attainder for treason should extend to the disinheriting of any heir, nor to the prejudice of any person, other than the traitor himself. By which, the law of forfeitures for high treason would by this time have been at an end, had not a subsequent statute intervened. 4 Black. 383.

For by the 39 Geo. 3. c. 93. the clause in the 7 Ann. c. 21. and that in the 17 Geo. 2. c. 39. limiting the periods when forfeiture for treason should be abolished, are repealed. So the law of forfeiture in cases of high treason is now the same as it was by the common law, or as it stood prior to the seventh year of the reign of queen Anne.

In petit treason and felony, the offender also forfeits all his chattel interests absolutely, and the profits of all estates of freehold during life; and after his death, all his lands and tenements in fee-simple (but not those in tail) to the crown, for a very short period of time: for the king shall have them for a year and a day, and may commit therein what waste he pleases; which is called the king's year, day, and waste (2 Inst. 37.) Formerly the king had only a liberty of committing waste on the lands of felons, by pulling down their houses, extirpating their gardens, ploughing their meadows, and cutting down their woods. But this tending greatly to the prejudice of the public, it was agreed in the reign of Henry the first, in this kingdom, that the king should have the profits of the land for one year and a day, in lieu of the destruction he was otherwise at liberty to commit (Mirr. c. 4. s. 16. Fleta, l. 1. c. 8.): and therefore magna charta (9 Hen. 3. c. 22.) provides, that the king shall only hold such lands for a year and a day, and then restore them to the lord of the fee; without any mention made of waste. But the statute 17 Edw. 2. de prærogativa regis seems to suppose, that the king shall have his year, day, and waste: and not the year and day instead of waste. Which sir Edward Coke (and the author of the Mirror before him) very justly look upon as an encroachment, though a very antient one, of the royal prerogative (Mirr. c. 5. s. 2. 2 Inst. 37.) This year, day, and waste are now usually compounded for; but otherwise they regularly belong to the crown; and, after their expiration, the land would naturally have descended to the heir, (as in gavelkind tenure it still does,) did not its feodal quality intercept such descent, and give it by way of escheat to the lord. These forfeitures for felony do also arise only upon attainder: and therefore a felo de se forfeits no lands of inheritance or freehold, for he never is attainted as a felon (3 Inst. 55.) They likewise relate back to the time of the offence committed, as well as forfeitures for treason; so as to avoid all intermediate charges and conveyances. This may be hard upon such as have unwarily engaged with the offender: but the cruelty and reproach must lie on the part, not of the law, but of the criminal; who has thus knowingly and dishonestly involved others in his own calamities. 4 Black. 386.

These are all the forfeitures of real estates, created by the common law, as consequential upon attainders by judgment of death or outlawry. The particular forfeitures created by the statutes of præmunire and others are rather a part of the judgment and penalty, inflicted by the respective statutes, than consequences of such judgment; as in treason and felony they are. But a part of the forfeiture of real estates, viz. the forfeiture of the profits of lands during life: extends to two instances, besides those already spoken of; 1. misprision of treason (Ibid. 218.), and 2. striking in Westminster-hall, or drawing a weapon upon a judge there, sitting in the king's courts of justice. Ibid.

II. The forfeiture of goods and chattels accrues in every one of the higher kinds of offence: in high treason or misprision thereof, petit treason, felonies of all sorts whether clergyable or not, self-murder, or felony de se, petit larciny, standing mute, and the above-mentioned offences of striking, &c in Westminster-hall. For flight also, on an accusation of treason, felony, or even petit larciny, whether the party be found guilty or acquitted, if the jury find the flight, the party shall forfeit his goods and chattels: for the very flight is an offence, carrying with it a strong presumption of guilt, and is at least an endeavour to elude and stifle the course of justice prescribed by the law. But the jury very seldom find the flight (Staundf. P. C. 183. b.): forfeiture being looked upon, since the vast increase of personal property of late years, as too large a penalty for an offence, to which a man is prompted by the natural love of liberty. 4 Black. 386, 7.

There is a remarkable difference or two between the forfeiture of lands, and of goods and chattels. 1st. Lands are forfeited upon attainder, and not before: goods and chattels are forfeited by conviction. Because in many of the cases where goods are forfeited, there never is any attainder; which happens only where judgment of death or outlawry is given: therefore in those cases the forfeiture must be upon conviction, or not at all; and being necessarily upon conviction in those, it is so ordered in all other cases, for the law loves uniformity. 2. In outlawries for treason or felony, lands are forfeited only by the judgment: but the goods and chattels are forfeited by a man's being first put in the exigent, without staying till he is quinto exactus, or finally outlawed; for the secreting himself so long from justice, is construed a flight in law (3 Inst. 232.) 3. The forfeiture of lands has relation to the time of the fact committed, so as to avoid all subsequent sales and incumbrances: but the forfeiture of goods and chattels has no relation backwards; so that those only which a man has at the time of conviction shall be forfeited. Therefore a traitor or felon may bona fide sell any of his chattels, real or personal, for the sustenance of himself and family between the fact and conviction (2 Hawk. P. C. 454.): for personal property is of so fluctuating a nature, that it passes through many hands in a short time; and no buyer could be safe, if he were liable to return the goods which he had fairly bought, provided any of the prior vendors had committed a treason or felony. Yet if they be collusively and not bona fide parted with, merely to defraud the crown, the law (and particularly the statute 13 Eliz. c. 5.) will reach them; for they are all the while truly and substantially the goods of the offender: and as he, if acquitted, might recover them himself, as not parted with for a good consideration; so in case he happens to be convicted, the law will recover them for the king. 4 Black. 387, 8.

FORFEITURE OF MARRIAGE, (forisfactura maritagii,) was a writ which lay against him, who, holding by knight's-service, and being under age, and unmarried, refused her whom the lord offered him without his disparagement, and married another. F. N. B. fol. 141. Rep. Orig. fol. 163.

tudere, fabricare, to beat on an anvil, forge or form) and in law it signifies where a person fraudulently makes and publishes false writings, to the prejudice of another man's right: and forgery is either at COMMON LAW, or by STATUTE. But there can be no forgery where none can be prejudiced by it but the person doing it. 1 Salk. 375.

Forgery by the common law extends to false and fraudulent making or altering of a deed or writing, whether it be matter of record, or any other writing, deed, or will. 3 Inst. 169. 1 Rol. Abr. 65.

And according to Blackstone, 4 Com. 247, 8. it is defined to be the fraudulent making or alteration of a writing to the prejudice of another man's right, for which the offender may suffer fine, imprisonment, and pillory, and also by a variety of statutes, a more exemplary punishment. For which see article Forgery, under head FELONY.

A person convicted of forgery, and adjudged to the pillory, &c. whereby he becomes infamous, is not allowed to be a witness; but it is a good exception to his evidence. Hawk. P. C. 432. And one convicted of this crime, may be challenged on a jury, so as to be incapable to serve as a juror; and it hath been holden, that exceptions to persons found guilty of perjury or forgery, as well as felony, &c. are not salved by a pardon. 2 Hawk. 417. The court of B. R. will not ordinarily, at the prayer of the dependant, grant a certiorari for a removal of an indictment of forgery, &c. 1 Sid. 54.

By a late act, forging or counterfeiting any deed, will, bond, bill of exchange, note or acquittance for money, or any indorsement or assignment of a bill, &c. with intent to defraud any person, or publishing such false deed, &c. to be true, knowingly, the offenders shall be guilty of felony, and suffer death as felons; but not to work corruption of blood, &c. Stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 25. Vide 7 Geo. 2. c. 22.

As to forging of exchequer and bank bills, lottery tickets, letters of attorney to transfer stock, &c But for the several species of this offence, see title Forgery under title Felonies in the table to the quarto edition of the Statutes, or the octavo Index: and 4 Black. Com. 245.

FORINSECUS, outward, or on the outside. Cowel. Blount.

FORINSECUM MANERIUM, the manor as to that part of it which lies without the town, and not included within the liberties of it. Ibid.

FORINSECUM SERVITIUM, the payment of extraordinary aid, opposed to intrinsecum servitium, which was the common and ordinary duties, within the lord's court. Kennet's Gloss. Cowel. Blount. See Foreign Service.

FORISFAMILIARI. When a son accepts of his father's part of lands, in the life-time of the father, and is contented with it; he is said to be forisfamiliari, and cannot claim any more. Cowel. Blount.

FORLAND, (forlandum) lands extending further or lying before the rest; also a promontory. Ibid.

FORLER-LAND, was land in the bishoprick of Hereford granted or leased dum episcopus in episcopatu steterit, so as the successor might have the same for his present revenue: this custom has been long since disused, and the land thus formerly granted is now let by lease as other lands, though it still retains the name by which it was anciently known. Butterfield's Surv. 56.

FORM, is required in all law proceedings, otherwise the law would be no art; but it ought not to be used to ensnare or intrap. Hob. 232. And the formal part of the law or method of proceeding cannot be altered but by parliament: for, if once these outlets were demolished, there would be an inlet to all manner of innovation in the body of the law itself. 1 Black. 142.

FORMA PAUPERIS, a suit in forma pauperis is allowed to any person who has just cause of suit, and is so poor, that he cannot bear the usual charges of suing at law, or in equity: in this case, upon his making oath that he is not worth 5*l.* except the matter in question, his debts being paid, and bringing a certificate from some barrister, that he hath cause of suit, the judge admits him to sue in forma pauperis, i. e. without paying any fees to counsellor, attorney or clerk: for by stat. 11 H. 7. c. 12. "poor persons having cause of action or suit, shall have original writs, counsel and attornies, assigned them gratis."

To proceed in forma panperis in chancery after the bill is filed, an affidavit must be made that the plaintiff is not worth 5*l.* in lands, tenements, goods or chattels, his wearing apparel and the matters of the suit excepted; and then a petition is drawn up and presented to the lord chancellor or master of the rolls, praying to be admitted in forma pauperis, and to have counsel, &c. assigned him, who are neither to take fees, nor make any contract or agreement for recompence, on pain of punishment; and no counsellor or attorney assigned shall refuse to proceed, without shewing good cause to the lord chancellor, &c. Pract. Sol. 24. If a cause goes against a pauper, or a plaintiff in forma pauperis be nonsuit, he shall not pay costs to the defendant, but shall suffer such punishment in his person as the court shall award. 23 H. 8. c. 15. 1 Lil. Abr. 634. 2 Sid. 261. Paupers using delays to vex their adversaries; or being proved to be vexatious persons, and having many frivolous suits depending, will be dispaupered by the court; for the law doth not assist them to do injury to others. 1 Lill. 633. 3 Black. 400.

FORMEDON, (breve de forma donationis) is a writ that lieth for him who hath right to lands or tenements by virtue of any intail, growing from the stat. Westm. 2. c. 2. It is a writ of right for recovery of land; and is of three kinds, viz. in descender, remainder, and reverter.

Formedon in descender lies where tenant in tail enfeoffs a stranger, or is disseised and dieth, the heir shall have this writ to recover the land.

Formedon in remainder lies where one gives land in tail, and for default of issue the remainder to another in tail, &c. If the tenant in tail die without issue, and a stranger abates and enters into the land, he in remainder shall have this writ.

Formedon in the reverter lieth where land is intailed to certain persons and their issue, with remainder over for want of issue, and on the remainders failing to revert to the donor and his heirs; now if tenant in tail dies without leaving any issue, and likewise he in remainder, then the donor or his heirs, to whom the reversion comes, shall have this writ for recovery of the estate, in case it be aliened, &c. Reg. Orig. 238, 242. F.N.B. 111.

But by stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 16. formedons must be brought within twenty years after the cause of action accrued.

The writ of formedon has fallen into disuse, the trying titles by ejectione firmæ having supplied its place, and being an easier manner. 3 Black. 191.

FORNAGIUM, furnagium, (Fr. fournage) the fee taken by a lord of his tenant, bound to bake in the lord's common oven, or for a permission to use their own; in ancient times usual in the northern parts of England. Ibid.

FORNICATION, (fornicatio, from the Fornices in Rome, where lewd women prostituted themselves for money) is the act of incontinency in single persons; for if either party is married, it is adultery. The spiritual court hath cognizance of this offence. 2 Inst. 488. 4 Black. 64.

FORPRISE, (forprisum) an exception or reservation, thus in leases and conveyances, excepted and forprised is an usual expression. Thorn. anno.

FORSES, (catatudæ) water-falls. Cowel. Blount.

FORSPEAKER, an attorney or advocate in a cause. Ibid.

FORTIA, power, dominion or jurisdiction. Ibid.

FORTIORI, à fortiori, is used thus in argument, "if it be so in a feoffment passing a new right, much more is it for the restitution of an ancient right, &c." Co. Lit. 253, 260.

FORTILICE and FORTILITY, (fortellescum) a fortified place, bulwark, or castle. Cowel. Blount.

FORTLET, (Fr.) a place or fort of some strength; or rather a little fort, Old Nat. Br. 45.

FORTS and CASTLES, the stat. 13 Car. 2. c. 6. extends to forts and other places of strength within the realm; the sole prerogative as well of erecting, as manning and governing of which belongs to the king, in his capacity of general of the kingdom. 2 Inst. 30. 1 Black. 263.

FORTUNA, treasure-trove. Cowel. Blount.

FORTUNE-TELLERS. See Vagrants.

FORTUNIUM, a tournament or fighting with spears; or an appeal to fortune therein. Cowel. Blount.

FORTY-DAYS-COURT. The court of attachment or woodmote, held before the verderors of the forest once in every forty days, to inquire concerning all offenders against vert and venison. 3 Black. 71.

FOSSA, a ditch full of water; wherein women committing felony were drowned: it has been likewise used for a grave, in ancient writings. Cowel. Blount. See Furca.

FOSSATUM, (Lat.) is a ditch, or place fenced round with a ditch or trench; also it is taken for the obligations of citizens to repair the city ditches. Kennet's Gloss. Cowel. Blount.

FOSSEWAY, (from fossus, digged) was anciently one of the four principal highways in England, leading through the kingdom, which had its name from its being supposed to be dug and made passable by the Romans, and having a ditch upon one side. Cowel. Blount.

FOSTERLEAN, (Sax.) nuptial gift, which we call a jointure or stipend for the maintenance of the wife. Ibid.

FOTHER or FODDER, (from the Teuton. fuder) is a weight of lead containing eight pigs, and every pig one and twenty stone and a half; that is about a ton or common cart load: among the plumbers in London it is nineteen hundred and a half; and at the mines it is two and twenty hundred weight and a half. Skene. Cowel. Blount.

FOVEA, a place for burial of the dead. Cowel. Blount.

FOUNDATION, the founding and building of a college, hospital, or other public institution, is called foundatio, quasi foundatio or fundamenti locatio. Co. Lit. 10.

Persons seised of estates in fee-simple, may erect and found hospitals for the poor, by deed inrolled in chancery, &c. which shall be incorporated, and subject to such visitors as the founder shall appoint, &c. Stat. 39 Eliz. c. 5. By 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 37. The crown may grant licence to alien in mortmain. By 9 Geo. 2. c. 36. Gifts in mortmain by will, &c. are restrained, but there are exceptions with respect to universities and royal colleges. See College. 1 Black. Com. 480.

FOUNDER OF METAL, (from the Fr. foundre, to melt or pour) the person that melts metal, and makes any thing of it by pouring or casting it into a mould. Cowel. Blount.

FOURCHER, (Fr. fourchir) signifies a putting off, or delaying of an action. Terms de Ley. Stat. Westm. 1. c. 42. 6 Ed. 1. c. 10. 23 Hen. 6. c. 2. 2 Inst. 250.

FRACTION. The law makes no fraction of a day; thus if any offence be committed, in case of murder, or the like, the year and day shall be computed from the beginning of the day on which the wound was given, and not from the precise minute or hour. 2 Hawk. 163. Co. Litt. 255.

And in presumption of law, when a thing is to be done upon one day, all that day is allowed to do it in, and when done, it shall be taken to be done the first instant of the day, for the avoiding of fractions in time, which the law admits not of, but in case of necessity. Sti. 119. Mo. 137.

Thus if A. be born on the 3d day of September, and on the 2d day of September, twenty-one years afterwards, he makes his will, this is a good will, for the law will make no fraction of a day, and by consequence he is of age. 2 Salk. 625.

FRACTITIUM, is made use of for arable land. Cowel. Blount. Ibid.

FRACTURA NAVIUM, wreck of shipping at sea. Ibid.

FRAMPOLE FENCES, are such fences as the tenants in the manor of Writtle in Essex, set up against the lord's demesnes; and they are intitled to the wood growing on those fences, and as many poles as they can reach from the top of the ditch with the helve of an axe, towards the reparation of their fences. Ibid.

FRANCHISE and LIBERTY, are used as synonymous terms: and their definition is, a royal privilege, or branch of the king's prerogative, subsisting in the hands of a subject. Being therefore derived from the crown, they must arise from the king's grant; or, in some cases, may be held by prescription, which, as has frequently been said, pre-supposes a grant. The kinds of them are various, and almost infinite: I will here briefly touch upon some of the principal; premising only, that they may be vested in either natural persons or bodies politic; in one man, or in many; but the same identical franchise, that has before been granted to one, cannot be bestowed on another, for that would prejudice the former grant (2 Roll. Abr. 191. Keilw. 196.)

To be a county palatine is a franchise, vested in a number of persons. It is likewise a franchise for a number of persons to be incorporated, and subsist as a body politic; with a power to maintain perpetual succession and do other corporate acts: and each individual member of such corporation is also said to have a franchise or freedom. Other franchises are, to hold a court leet; to have a manor or lordship; or, at least, to have a lordship paramount: to have waifs, wrecks, estrays, treasure-trove, royal fish, forfeitures, and deodands: to have a court of one's own, or liberty of holding pleas; and trying causes: to have the cognizance of pleas: which is a still greater liberty, being an exclusive right, so that no other court shall try causes arising within that jurisdiction: to have a bailiwick, or liberty exempt from the sheriff of the county; wherein the grantee only, and his officers are to execute all process: to have a fair or market: with the right of taking toll, either there or at any other public places, as at bridges, wharfs, or the like; which tolls must have a reasonable cause of commencement, (as in consideration of repairs, or the like,) else the franchise is illegal and void (2 Inst. 220.): or, lastly, to have a forest, chase, park, warren, or fishery, endowed with privileges of royalty. 2 Black. 37, 8.

FRANCIGENÆ, was the general apellation of all foreigners. Cowel. Blount. See Englecery.

FRANCLAINE, according to ancient authors, a freeman or gentleman. Ibid.

FRANK, a French gold coin, worth about a French shilling; but in computation was twenty sols, which is a livre, and ten pence in our money. Ibid.

FRANKALMOIGN. Tenure in frankalmoign, in libera eleemosyna, or free alms, is that whereby a religious corporation, aggregate or sole, holds lands of the donor to them and their successors for ever (Litt. s. 133.) The service which they were bound to render for these lands was not certainly defined: but only in general to pray for the souls of the donor and his heirs, dead or alive; and therefore they did no fealty, (which is incident to all other services but this, Ibid. 131.) because this divine service was of a higher and more exalted nature (Ibid. 135.) This is the tenure by which almost all the antient monasteries and religious houses held their lands; and by which the parochial clergy, and very many ecclesiastical and eleemosynary foundations, hold them at this day (Bracton, l. 4. tr. 1. c. 28. s. 1.); the nature of the service being upon the reformation altered, and made conformable to the purer doctrines of the church of England. It was an old Saxon tenure; and continued under the Norman revolution, through the great respect that was shewn to religion and religious men in antient times. Which is also the reason that tenants in frankalmoign were discharged of all other services, except the trinoda necessitas, of repairing the highways, building castles, and repelling invasions, (Seld. Jan. 14. 2.) just as the Druids among the ancient Britons had omnium rerum immunitatem (Cæs. de bel. Gal. l. 6, c. 13.). And even at present this is a tenure of a nature very distinct from all others, being not in the least feodal, but merely spiritual. For if the service be neglected, the law gives no remedy by distress or otherwise to the lord of whom the lands are holden, but merely a complaint to the ordinary or visitor, to correct it (Litt. s. 136.). Wherein it materially differs from what was called tenure by divine service, in which the tenants were obliged to do some special divine services in certain, as to sing so many masses, to distribute such a sum in alms, and the like, which being expressly defined and prescribed could with no kind of propriety be called free alms, especially as for this, if unperformed, the lord might distrain without any complaint to the visitor, (Litt. s. 137). All such donations are indeed now out of use; for since the statute of quia emptores, 18 Ed. 1, none but the king can give lands to be holden by this tenure, (Litt. 140). So that it is only mentioned because frankalmoign is excepted by name in the stat. of Cha. 2, and therefore subsists in many instances at this day. 2 Black. 100, 101.

FRANK-CHASE, is a liberty of free chase, by which all persons that have lands within the compass thereof are prohibited to cut down any wood, &c. without the view of the forester, though it be in their own demesnes. Cromp. Juris. 187.

FRANK-FEE, was where freehold lands were held exempted from all services, but not from homage, they were termed frank-free. Reg. Orig. 12. F. N. B. 161. And the author of the Terms of the Law defines a free-fee to be a tenure pleadable at the common law, and not an ancient demesne. Fachineus, lib. 7. c. 39. Cowel. Blount.

FRANK-FERM, when lands or tenements were changed in the nature of the fee by feoffment, &c. out of knights service, for certain yearly services, they were called frank-ferm. Britton, c. 66. See Fee-farm.

FRANK LAW, (libera lex) is applied to the benefit of the free and common law of the land. Cromp. Juris. 156. Lib. Assis. 59. See Conspiracy.

FRANK-MARRIAGE, (liberum maritagium) was where a man seised of land in fee-simple gave it to another with his daughter, sister, &c. in marriage, to hold to them and their heirs. It was a tenure in special tail. Litt. 17. West. Symb. par. 1. lib. 2. s. 303. Cowel. Blount.

These gifts were common in former times, but are now disused. 2 Nels. Abr. 888.

FRANK-PLEDGE, (Franci plegium, from the Fr. Franc, i. e. liber, and pledge, fine-jussor; a pledge or surety for the behaviour of freemen) it was the ancient custom of this kingdom that for the preservation of the public peace, every freeborn man at the age of fourteen, (religious persons, clerks, &c. excepted) should give security for his truth towards the king and his subjects, or be committed to prison; whereupon a certain number of neighbours usually became bound for one another, to see each man of their pledge forthcoming at all times, or to answer the transgression done by any gone away: and whenever any one offended it was forthwith inquired in what pledge he was, and then those of that pledge either produced the offender within 31 days, or satisfied for his offence. This was called frank-pledge; and this custom was so kept, that the sheriffs at every county-court, did from time to time take the oaths of young persons as they grew to fourteen years of age, and see that they were settled in one decennary or other; whereby this branch of the sheriff's authority was called visus franci plegii, or view of frank-pledge. 4 Inst. 78.

FRATERIA, a fraternity, brotherhood, or society. Ibid.

FRATERNITIES, of places in respect to a trade or mystery. Ibid. See Corporation.

FRATER NUTRICIUS, a bastard brother. Ibid.

FRATRES CONJURATI, sworn brothers or companions, and those were so called who were sworn to defend the king against his enemies. Ibid.

FRATRIAGIUM, a younger brother's inheritance. Bract. lib. 2. c. 35. Cowel. Blount.

FRAUD, (Fraus) is defined to be a deceit in grants and conveyances of lands, and bargains and sales of goods, &c. to the damage of another person. Bacon's Abr. 3. tit. fraud.

And fraud, covin, collusion, and deceit, are often used as synonimous words, and in whatever shape or form they appear, are always deemed odious in the eye of the law. Ibid.

And it is a general rule, that without the express provision of any act of parliament, all deceitful practices in defrauding or endeavouring to defraud another of his known right, by means of some artful device, contrary to the plain rules of common honesty, are condemned by the common law, and punishable according to the heinousness of the offence. Co. Lit. 3. b. Dyer. 295.

As to frauds in contracts and dealings, the common law subjects the wrong-doer to an action on the case for the recovery of a compensation in damages, or an indictment, or information. 1 Rol. Abr. 90. Cro. Jac. 474.

And all frauds and deceits for which there is no remedy by the ordinary course of law are properly cognizable in equity, which matters of fraud are one of the chief branches to which the jurisdiction of the courts of equity was originally confined. 4 Inst. 84.

The following is a summary of the statutes against frauds and fraudulent conveyances.

By 1 Ric. 2. c. 9, a feoffment of lands or gift of goods by fraud, or for maintenance, shall be void; and actions may be maintained against such feoffors as take the profits. Also 4 Hen. 4. c. 7, and 11 Hen. 6. c. 3.

By 3 Hen. 7. c. 4, all deeds of gift of goods and chattels to the use of the person who made the same, to the intent to defraud creditors, shall be void.

By 13 Eliz. c. 5, all fraudulent conveyances, bonds, and deeds, made to defraud or hinder creditors, shall be void; and parties and privies shall forfeit one year's value of lands, and the whole value of goods; and so much money as shall be mentioned in such bonds. But common recoveries shall be good, and the act shall not extend to voucher in formedon, or to purchasers for a valuable consideration.

By 27 Eliz. c. 4, conveyances made to defraud a purchaser, against such purchaser only, shall be void; and parties justifying the conveyance as made bona fide, shall forfeit one year's value of the lands, and be imprisoned half a year. Where lands are conveyed with clause of revocation, and afterwards sold for valuable consideration, the first conveyance shall be void against the vendee. But mortgages made bona fide, are not impeached. And statutes merchant shall be entered in six months, and for searching the same, the fee is 2*d.* a term.

By 29 Car. 2. c. 3, called the statute of frauds, parol leases of freehold shall have the force of estates at will only, except leases not exceeding three years, whereon the rent reserved amounts to two thirds of the improved value.

No action shall be brought upon any special promise to charge an executor or administrator to answer damages out of his own estate, or to charge any defendant for the debt of another, or upon any agreement on consideration of marriage, or upon any contract for lands or any interest therein, or upon any agreement that is not to be performed within one year, unless the agreement, or memorandum thereof, be in writing signed by the party. Ibid.

No contract for sale of goods for ten pounds or more, shall be good, except the buyer accept part of the same, or give earnest, or some memorandum be made. Ibid.

By 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 14, wills of lands shall be deemed, only as against bond creditors, to be fraudulent. And they may sue the devisee and the heir of the obligor, jointly, and such devisee shall be chargeable for a false plea, as an heir.

Devises for raising younger childrens portions, pursuant to marriage contract, shall be good. Ibid.

If the heir or devisee aliens before action brought, he shall still be liable to the value of the land. Ibid. See also CHEATS.

FRAUS LEGIS. If a person having no manner of title to a house, procure an affidavit of the service of a declaration in ejectment, and thereupon gets judgment; and by virtue of a writ of hab. fac. possessionem turns the owner out of possession of the house, and seises and converts the goods therein to his own use, he may be punished as constructively guilty of felony in respect to the goods, because he used the process of the law with a felonious purpose, in fraudem legis, to get possession of the chattels, Raym. 276. Sid. 254.

This however must be left under all the circumstances of the case, as in the case of Semple, and many others quo animo the possession obtained.

FREDUM, was a composition made by a criminal, to be freed from prosecution, of which the third part was paid into the exchequer. 1 Robertson's Hist. Emp. C. V. 300.

FREDWIT, a liberty to hold courts, and take up amerciaments, &c. Cowel. Blount.

FREE-BENCH, (francus bancus, i. e. fedes libera) is that estate in copyhold lands which the wife hath on the death of her husband for her dower, to hold so long as she lives sole and continent. Kitch. 102. 2 Black. 122.

FREE-BOOTER, a person who fights without pay, in hopes of getting some booty. Cowel. Blount.

FREEBORD, (franchordus) is ground claimed in some places more or less, beyond, or without the fence; and it is said to contain two feet and a half. Ibid.

FREE-BOROUGH-MEN, were such great men as did not engage like the frankpledge men for their decennier. Ibid.

FREEHOLD, (liberum tenementum) is that land or tenement which a man holds in fee-simple, fee-tail, or for term of life. Bract. lib. 2. c. 9. Freehold is also extended to offices, which a man holds either in fee, or during life; but those who hold land upon an execution of a statute-merchant, or by elegit, are not freeholders, only as freeholders for their time, till they have received the profits of the land to the value of their debt. Reg. Judic. 68, 73. A lease for ninety-nine years, &c. determinable upon a life or lives is not a lease for life to make a freehold, but a lease for years, or chattel determinable upon a life or lives; and an estate for one thousand years is not a freehold, or of so high a nature as an estate for life. Co. Lit. 6. He that hath an estate for the term of his own life, or the life of another, hath a freehold, and no other of a less estate, though they of a greater estate have a freehold, as tenant in fee, &c. Lit. 57.

The following is a summary of the doctrine respecting an estate of freehold, as set forth in the excellent commentaries of the learned Blackstone.

An estate of freehold, liberum tenementum, or franktenement, seems to be any estate of inheritance, or for life, in either a corporeal or incorporeal hereditament, existing in, or arising from, real property of free tenure, that is, now, of all which is not copyhold. Such estate, therefore, and no other, as requires actual possession of the land is, legally speaking, freehold, which actual possession can by the course of the common law be only given by the ceremony called livery of seisin, which is the same as the feodal investiture. And from these principles we may extract this description of a freehold; that it is such an estate in lands as is conveyed by livery of seisin, or in tenements of an incorporeal nature, by what is equivalent thereto. And accordingly it is laid down by Littleton, s. 59, that where a freehold shall pass, it behoveth to have livery of seisin. As therefore estates of inheritance and estates for life could not by common law be conveyed without livery of seisin, these are properly estates of freehold; and, as no other estates were conveyed with the same solemnity, therefore no others are properly freehold estates. 2 Black. 104.

Estates of freehold (thus understood) are either estates of inheritance, or estates not of inheritance. The former are again divided into inheritances absolute or fee-simple, and inheritances limited, one species of which we usually call fee-tail. Ibid.

1. Tenant in fee-simple (or, as he is frequently styled, tenant in fee) is he that hath lands, tenements, or hereditaments, to hold to him and his heirs for ever generally, absolutely, and simply; without mentioning what heirs, but referring that to his own pleasure, or to the disposition of the law. The true meaning of the word fee (feodum) is the same with that of feud or fief, and in its original sense it is taken in contradistinction to allodium, which latter the writers on this subject define to be every man's own land, which he possesses merely in his own right, without owing any rent or service to any superior. This is property in its highest degree, and the owner thereof hath absolutum et directum dominium, and therefore is said to be seised thereof absolutely in dominico suo, in his own demesne. But feodum, or fee, is that which is held of some superior, on condition of rendering him service, in which superior the ultimate property of the land resides. And therefore sir Henry Spelman defines a feud or fee to be the right which the vassal or tenant hath in lands, to use the same, and take the profits thereof to him and his heirs, rendering to the lord his due services; the mere allodial property of the soil always remaining in the lord. This allodial property no subject in England has; it being a received, and now undeniable, principle in the law, that all the lands in England are holden mediately or immediately of the king. The king therefore only hath absolutum et directum dominium: but all subjects lands are in the nature of feodum or fee; whether derived to them by descent from their ancestors, or purchased for a valuable consideration; for they cannot come to any man by either of those ways, unless accompanied with those feodal clogs, which were laid upon the first feudatory when it was originally granted. A subject therefore hath only the usufruct, and not the absolute property of the soil; or, as sir Edward Coke expresses it, he hath dominium utile, but not dominium directum. And hence it is that in the most solemn acts of law we express the strongest and highest estate that any subject can have, by these words, "he "is seised thereof in his demesne, as of "fee." It is a man's demesne, dominicum, or property, since it belongs to him and his heirs for ever: yet this dominicum, property, or demesne, is strictly not absolute or allodial, but qualified or feodal: it is his demesne, as of fee; that is, it is not purely and simply his own, since it is held of a superior lord, in whom the ultimate property resides. 2 Black. 104, 5.

This is the primary sense and acceptation of the word fee. But (as sir Martin Wright very justly observes) the doctrine, "that all lands are holden," having been for so many ages a fixed and undeniable axiom, our English lawyers do very rarely (of late years especially) use the word fee in this its primary original sense, in contradistinction to allodium or absolute property, with which they have no concern, but generally use it to express the continuance or quantity of estate. A fee therefore, in general, signifies an estate of inheritance being the highest and most extensive interest that a man can have in a feud: and when the term is used simply, without any other adjunct, or has the adjunct of simple annexed to it, (as a fee, or a fee-simple,) it is used in contradistinction to a fee conditional at the common law, or a fee-tail by the statute; importing an absolute inheritance, clear of any condition, limitation, or restrictions to particular heirs, but descendible to the heirs general, whether male or female, lineal or collateral. And in no other sense than this is the king said to be seised in fee, he being the feudatory of no man. Co. Litt. 1.

Taking therefore fee in this its secondary sense, as a state of inheritance, it is applicable to, and may be had in, any kind of hereditaments either corporeal or incorporeal, feodum est quod quis tenet sibi et hæredibus suis, sive sit tenementum, sive reditus, &c. Flet. l. 5, c. 5, s. 7. But there is this distinction between the two species of hereditaments; that, of a corporeal inheritance, a man shall be said to be seised in his demesne, as of fee; of an incorporeal one, he shall only be said to be seised as of fee, and not in his demesne. Lit. s. 10. For, as incorporeal hereditaments are in their nature collateral to and issue out of lands and houses, their owner hath no property, dominicum, or demesne, in the thing itself, but hath only something derived out of it, resembling the servitudes, or services, of the civil law. Servitus est jus, quo res mea alterius rei vel persona servit. Ff. 8. 1. 1. The dominicum or property is frequently in one man, while the appendage or service is in another. Thus Gaius may be seised as of fee of a way leading over the land, of which Titius is seised in his demesne as of fee. 2 Black. 105, 106.

The fee-simple or inheritance of lands and tenements is generally vested and resides in some person or other; though divers inferior estates may be carved out of it. As if one grants a lease for twenty-one years, or for one or two lives, the fee-simple remains vested in him and his heirs; and after the determination of those years or lives, the land reverts to the grantor or his heirs, who shall hold it again in fee simple. Yet sometimes the fee may be in abeyance, that is (as the word signifies) in expectation, remembrance, and contemplation in law; there being no person in esse, in whom it can vest and abide: though the law considers it as always potentially existing, and ready to vest whenever a proper owner appears. Thus, in a grant to John for life, and afterwards to the heirs of Richard, the inheritance is plainly neither granted to John nor Richard, nor can it vest in the heirs of Richard till his death, for nemo est hæres viventis: it remains therefore in waiting or abeyance, during the life of Richard. Co. Litt. 342. This is likewise always the case of a parson of a church, who hath only an estate therein for the term of his life; and the inheritance remains in abeyance. Litt. s. 646. And not only the fee, but the freehold also, may be in abeyance; as, when a parson dies, the freehold of his glebe is in abeyance until a successor be named, and then it vests in the successor. Litt. s. 647. 2 Black. 107. But see head ABEYANCE.

The word "heirs" is necessary in the grant or donation, in order to make a fee, or inheritance. For if land be given to a man for ever, or to him and his assigns for ever, this vests in him but an estate for life. Ibid. s. 1. This very great nicety about the insertion of the word "heirs" in all feoffments and grants, in order to vest a fee, is plainly a relic of the feodal strictness: by which it was required that the form of the donation should be punctually pursued; or that, as Craig, (l. 1, t. 9, s. 17,) expresses it in the words of Baldus, "donationes sint stricti juris "ne quis plus donasse præsumatur quam "in donatione expresserit." And therefore, as the personal abilities of the donee were originally supposed to be the only inducements to the gift, the donee's estate in the land extended only to his own person, and subsisted no longer than his life; unless the donor, by an express provision in the grant, gave it a longer continuance, and extended it also to his heirs: but this rule is now softened by many exceptions. Co. Lit. 9, 10. 2 Black. 108.

For, 1. It does not extend to devises by will; in which, as they were introduced at the time when the feodal rigour was apace wearing out, a more liberal construction is allowed; and therefore by a devise to a man for ever, or to one and his assigns for ever, or to one in fee-simple, the devisee hath an estate of inheritance; for the intention of the devisor is sufficiently plain from the words of perpetuity annexed, though he hath omitted the legal words of inheritance. But if the devise be to a man and his assigns, without annexing words of perpetuity, there the devisee shall take only an estate for life; for it does not appear that the devisor intended any more. 2 Black. 118. But it is not necessary to use any words of perpetuity in a devise, in order to give a fee-simple, where it appears to be the intention of the testator to dispose of all his interest in an estate, and that is implied from the word estate alone; as if a testator gives to Richard his estate or estates in or at Dale, though neither heirs, assigns, or any other word is annexed to Richard's name, yet he takes an estate in fee-simple. 1 T. R. 411. 2 T. R. 656. So also where lands are given to Richard charged with the payment of a specific sum, and which is not to be raised out of the rents and profits, such a devise without words of perpetuity will carry a fee-simple; for otherwise the devisee might be a loser by dying before he was repaid the sum charged upon the estate. Hargr. Co. Litt. 9. b. 3 T. R. 356. 8 T. R. 1.

And where an estate is given generally without words being added, which would create a fee or an estate tail, and it is charged with the payment of annuities, the devisee takes a fee, but that is not the case where an estate tail is given to the devisee. 5 T. R. 335.

But where a testator leaves all his hereditaments to A, A takes only an estate for life, 5 T. R. 558. A fee also will not pass by general introductory words in a will, by which the testator declares his intention to dispose of all his estate both real and personal, if there is not afterwards in the will some specific devise for that purpose. But where such subsequent devise is in some degree ambiguous, then the introductory words may have some effect, as indicative of the intention of the testator. 5 T. R. 13. 6 T. R. 610.

2. Neither does this rule extend to fines or recoveries considered as a species of conveyance; for thereby an estate in fee passes by act and operation of law without the word "heirs," as it does also for particular reasons by certain other methods of conveyance, which have relation to a former grant or estate wherein the word "heirs" was expressed. Co. Lit. 9. 3. In creations of nobility by writ, the peer so created hath an inheritance in his title, without expressing the word "heirs;" for heirship is implied in the creation, unless it be otherwise specially provided: but in creations by patent, which are stricti juris, the word "heirs" must be inserted, otherwise there is no inheritance. 4. In grants of lands to sole corporations and their successors, the word "successors" supplies the place of "heirs;" for as heirs take from the ancestor, so doth the successor from the predecessor. Nay, in a grant to a bishop, or other sole spiritual corporation, in frankalmoign the word "frankalmoign" supplies the place of "successors" (as the word "successors" supplies the place of "heirs") ex vi termini; and in all these cases a fee-simple vests in such sole corporation. But in a grant of lands to a corporation aggregate, the word "successors" is not necessary, though usually inserted: for, albeit such simple grant be strictly only an estate for life, yet as that corporation never dies, such estate for life is perpetual, or equivalent to a fee-simple, and therefore the law allows it to be one. 5. Lastly, in the case of the king, a fee-simple will vest in him, without the word "heirs" or "successors" in the grant; partly from prerogative royal, and partly from a reason similar to the last, because the king in judgment of law never dies. But the general rule is that the word "heirs" is necessary to create an estate of inheritance. 2 Black. 108, 9.

II. Limited fees, or such estates of inheritance as are clogged and confined with conditions, or qualifications, of any sort, are of two sorts. 1st. Qualified, or base fees: and 2. Fees conditional, so called at the common law; and afterwards fees-tail, in consequence of the statute de donis, for which see Base Fee, Qualified, and Tenant in Tail.

FREEHOLDERS, are such as hold any freehold estate.

FREEMAN (liber homo). The distinction of a freeman from a vassal; under the feudal policy liber homo, was commonly opposed to vassus, or vassallus, the former denoting an allodial proprietor, the latter one who held of a superior. Cowel. Blount.

The title of freeman is also given to any one admitted to the freedom of a corporate town, or of any other corporate body, consisting, among other members, of those called freemen.

FREIGHT, (Fr. fret) signifies the money paid for carriage of goods by sea, or in a larger sense it is taken for the cargo or burthen of the ship. Lex Mercat.

FRENCH. King William I, called the conqueror, being a native of Normandy in France, caused the laws of this realm, in his time, to be written and pleaded in the French language. 3 Rep. 17. But by the Stat. 37 Ed. 3, c. 15, all pleas that are pleaded in any of the king's courts, shall be pleaded in the English tongue; though appeals were still to be arraigned, and the plea of the defendant read in French in the same manner as anciently. 2 Hawk. P. C. 308. Sed vide stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 26, by which all pleadings were directed to be in English.

FRENCHMAN, heretofore a term for every stranger or outlandishman. Bract. lib. 3. tract. 2. c. 15. See Francigenæ.

FRENDWITE, comes from the Saxon freond, i. e. amicus, and wite, mulcta, and is a mulct exacted of him who harboured his outlawed friend. Cowel. Blount. Fleta lib. 1. c. 7.

FRESCA, fresh water, or rain, and land floods.

FRESH DISSEISIN, (fresca disseisina, from the Fr. frais, i. e. recens et disseisir, viz. possessione ejicere) signified that disseisin which a man might formerly seek to defeat of himself, and by his own power, without resorting to the king, or the law; as where it was not above fifteen days old, or of some other short continuance. Britt. c. 5. Cowel. Blount.

FRESH FINE, is that which was levied within a year past: it is mentioned in the statute of Westm. 2. 13 Ed. 1. c. 45.

FRESH FORCE, (fresca fortia) is a force newly done in any city, borough, &c. And before ejectments were introduced, if a person were disseised of any lands or tenements within such a city, or borough, he who had a right to the land, by the usage and custom of the said city, &c. might bring his assise, or bill of fresh force, within forty days after the force committed; and recover the lands. F. N. B. 7. Old Nat. Br. 4.

FRESH SUIT, or Pursuit, (recens insecutio) is such a present and earnest following of an offender, where a robbery is committed, as never ceases from the time of the offence done or discovered, until he be apprehended. Vide "Hundred" and "Hue and Cry." And the benefit of a pursuit of a felon is, that the party pursuing shall have his goods restored to him; which otherwise are forfeited to the king. Staundf. Pl. Cor. lib. 3. cap. 10 and 12. It has been anciently holden, that to make a fresh suit, the party ought to make hue and cry with all convenient speed, and to have taken the offender himself, &c. But at this day, if the party hath been guilty of no gross negligence, but hath used all reasonable care in inquiring after, pursuing, and apprehending the felon, he shall be allowed to have made sufficient fresh suit. 2 Hawk. P. C. 169. Also it is said, that the judging of fresh suit is in the discretion of the court, though it ought to be found by the jury; and the justices may, if they think fit, award restitution without making any inquisition concerning the same. Ibid. 169, 171.

Where a gaoler immediately pursues a felon, or other prisoner, escaping from prison, it is fresh suit, to excuse the gaoler: and if a lord follow his distress into another's ground, on its being driven off the premises, this is called fresh suit: so where a tenant pursues his cattle that escape or stray into another man's lands, &c. Fresh suit may be either within the view, or without; as to which the law makes some difference: and it has been said, that fresh suit may continue for seven years. 3 Rep. S. P. C.

FRIBURGH, alias FRITHBURGH, (fridburgum, from the Sax. frid, i. e. pax, & borge, fidejussor) is the same with frankpledge; the one being in the time of the Saxons, and the other since the conquest. Bracton, lib. 3. tract. 2. c. 10. Lambard, fol. 143. Fleta, lib. 1. cap. 47.

FRIDSTOLL and FRITHSTOW, (Sax. frid, pax, & stol, sedes) a seat, chair, or place of peace, an immunity granted to the church. And there were many such in England; but the most famous was at Beverly, which had this inscription: hæc sedes lapidea freedstoll dicitur, i. e. pacis cathedra, ad quam reus fugiendo perveniens, omnimodam habet securitatem. Camd. Cowel. Blount.

FRIENDLESS MAN, the old Saxon word for him whom we call an outlaw; because he was denied all help of friends after certain days. Bract. lib. 3. tract. 2. c. 12. See Frendwite.

FRIER, (Lat. frater. Fr. frere) the name of an order of religious persons, of which there were four principal branches, viz. 1. Minors, Grey Friers, or Franciscans. 2. Augustines. 3. Dominicans, or Black Friers, 4. White Friers, or Carmelites; of which the rest descended. 4 H. 7. cap. 17. Lyndewood de Relig. Domibus, c. 1. Cowel. Blount.

FRIPERER, (Fr. fripier, i. e. interpolator) one that scours and furbishes up old clothes to sell again; a kind of broker. Ibid.

FRISCUS, uncultivated ground. Ibid.

FRIFT, a term among merchants for selling goods upon credit. Ibid.

FRITH, (Sax.) a wood, from frid, i. e. pax; for the English Saxons held woods to be sacred, and therefore made them sanctuaries. Sir Edward Coke expounds it a plain between woods, or a lawn. Co. Lit. 5. Camden in his Britan. useth it for an arm of the sea, or a streight, between two lands, from the word fretum. Cowel. Blount.

FRITHGEAR, (from the Sax. frith or frid, pax & gear, annus) the year of jubilee, or of meeting for peace and friendship. Ibid.

FRITHGILD, is the same which we now call a Guildhall; or a company or fraternity. Ibid.

FRITHMAN, one belonging to such fraternity or company. Ibid.

FRITHMOTE, is mentioned in the records of the county palatine of Chester: per Frithmote J. Stanley, ar, clamat capere annualum de villa de Olton, &c. Cowel. Blount.

FRITHSOKE, FRITHSOKEN, surety of defence, or liberty of having frank pledge. Cowel. Blount.

FRODMORTEL, rectius FREOMORTEL, (from the Sax. freo, free, and morthdel, homicidium) an immunity for committing manslaughter.

FRUIT, stealing of. See Felony and Trespass.

FRUMGYLD, (Sax.) is the first payment made to the kindred of a person slain, towards the recompence of his murder. Cowel. Blount.

FRUMSTOL, the chief seat or mansion-house; by some the homestal. Ibid.

FRUSCA TERRÆ, waste and desart lands. Ibid.

FRUSTURA, (from the Fr. froissure) a breaking down; also a ploughing or breaking up. Ibid.

FRUSTRUM TERRÆ, a small piece or parcel of land. Ibid.

FUAGE, an imposition of fuage was laid in the reign of Edward III. by Edward the Black Prince upon the subjects of a dukedom, of Acquitain, of 12*d.* for every fire. Rot. Parl. 25 Ed. 3. And it is probable, that the hearth-money imposed by Car. 2. originated from hence.

FUEL. By an antient statute, if any person shall sell billet-wood or faggots for fuel under the assise, &c. on presentment thereof upon oath by six persons sworn by a justice of peace, the party may be set on the pillory in the next market town, with a faggot, &c. bound to some part of his body. For the assise of fuel, stat. 7 Ed. 6. c. 7. and 43 Eliz. c. 14. None are to buy fuel but such as will burn it, or retail it to those who do; on pain to forfeit the treble value; also no person may alter any mark or assise of fuel, on the like forfeiture. Stat. Ibid. See Billets.

FUER, (Fr. fuir, Lat. fugere) is twofold, fuer in fait, or in facto, when a man doth apparently and corporally fly; and fuer in ley, in lege, when being called in the county court he appeareth not, which is flight in the interpretation of the law. Staundf. Pl. Cor. lib. 3. c. 22.

FUGA CATALLORUM, a drove of cattle: fugatores carrucarum, waggoners who drive oxen, without beating or goading. Fleta, lib. 2. c. 78. Cowel. Blount.

FUGACIA, a chase, being all one with chasea; and fugatio, hunting, or the privilege to hunt. Cowel. Blount.

FUGAM FECIT, is where it is found by inquisition, that a person fled for felony, &c. And if flight and felony be found on an indictment for felony, or before the coroner, where a murder is committed, the offender shall forfeit all his goods, and the issues of his lands, till he is acquitted or pardoned. 3 Inst. 218. Hawk. P. C. 27. 2 Hawk. P. C. 450. See Forfeiture.

FUGITIVES GOODS, (bona fugitivorum) are the proper goods of him that flies upon felony, which after the flight lawfully found on record, do belong to the king or lord of the manor, as grantee thereof. 5 Rep. 109.

FUGITIVES OVER SEA. To depart this realm over the sea, without the king's licence, except it be great men and merchants, and the king's soldiers, incurs forfeiture of goods: and masters of ships, &c. carrying such persons beyond sea, shall forfeit their vessels; also if any searcher of any port negligently suffer any persons to pass, he shall be imprisoned, &c. 9 Ed. 3. c. 10. 5 R. 2. c. 2. See Manufactures.

FUGITIO, pro fuga. Cowel. Blount.

FULL-AGE. The ages of male and female are different, for different purposes. A male at twelve may take the oath of allegiance; at fourteen may consent, or disagree, to marriage, may choose his guardian, and, if his discretion be actually proved, may make a testament of his personal estate; at seventeen may be an executor; and at twenty-one is at his own disposal, and alien his lands, goods and chattels: a female at seven may be betrothed or given in marriage; at nine is entitled to dower; at twelve is at years of maturity, and therefore may consent or disagree to marriage, and, if proved to have sufficient discretion, may bequeath her personal estate; at fourteen is at years of legal discretion, and may choose a guardian; at seventeen may be executrix; and at twenty-one may dispose of herself and her lands. 1 Black. Com. 463.

FULLUM AQUÆ, a fleam or stream of water, such as comes from a mill. Cowel. Blount.

FUMAGE, (fumagium) dung for soil, or a manuring of land with dung, also sometimes used for smoke-money, a customary payment for every house that had a chimney. Domesday. 1 Black. 323.

FUMADOES, are pilchards garbaged and salted, then hung in the smoke, and pressed. Cowel. Blount.

FUNDS. After the revolution (not perhaps correctly termed happy and glorious from its present consequences) had introduced a new system of foreign politics with respect to our new connections with Europe; the expences of the nation, therefore, not only in settling a new establishment, founded in positive disseisin, but in maintaining long wars, as principals, on the continent, for the security of the Dutch barrier, reducing the French monarchy, settling the Spanish succession, supporting the house of Austria, maintaining the liberties of the Germanic body, and other purposes, increased to an unusual degree: insomuch that it was not thought advisable to raise all the expences of any one year by taxes to be levied within that year, lest the unaccustomed weight of them should create murmurs among the people.* It was therefore the policy of the times to anticipate the revenues of their posterity, by borrowing immense sums for the current service of the state, and to lay no more taxes upon the subject than would suffice to pay the annual interest of the sums so borrowed: by this means converting the principal debt into a new species of property, transferrable from one man to another at any time and in any quantity. This policy of the English parliament laid the foundation of what is called the national debt: for a few long annuities created in the reign of Charles II. will hardly deserve that name. And the example then set by the partizans of Will. 3. has been so closely followed during the long wars in the reign of queen Anne, and since, that the capital of the funded national debt amounted at the close of the sessions 49 Geo. 3. to a most enormous sum in the aggregate, redeemable by the same authority that imposed the same; which, if at any time it can pay off the capital, will abolish those taxes which are raised to discharge the interest.

The produce of the several taxes were originally separate and distinct funds; being securities for the sums advanced on each several tax, and for them only. But at last it became necessary to avoid confusion, as they multiplied yearly, to consolidate the whole, and accordingly

By 27 Geo. 3. c. 13. the whole of the duties of customs, excise, and stamps, and the several duties on hackney coaches, and chairs, hawkers, and pedlars, with the assessed taxes were first carried to one fund, directed to be called THE CONSOLIDATED FUND.

Since this act various new duties have been imposed, and all the acts imposing the same, contain clauses, directing that the monies arising therefrom and paid into the exchequer, (not otherways appropriated) shall be carried to the said consolidated fund.

And by the said act of 27 Geo. 3. c. 13. and all subsequent acts whereby monies have been raised by annuities, it is directed that all such annuities so due from the public, shall be payable out of the said consolidated fund at the times and in manner as the said annuities become due.

Whenever the consolidated fund shall be insufficient to pay the annuities, the treasury may make good the deficiency out of the supplies for that year, which shall be replaced out of any future surplus of the fund. 27 Geo. 3. c. 13.

Also by 26 Geo. 3. c. 31. commissioners were appointed for the reduction of the national debt, and it was enacted that 250,000*l.* shall be set apart quarterly out of the surplusses of the sinking fund; and in case of a deficiency in the said surplusses, the same shall be carried on as a charge, on the subsequent quarters.

Surplusses remaining (after former incumbrances are provided for) shall be applied in payment of former deficiencies, and of so much of the quarterly sum of 250,000*l.* as they will extend to pay. Ibid.

Deficiencies at the end of any year shall be made good out of the supplies granted the same year. Ibid.

The monies set apart quarterly, shall be paid into the bank: and shall be applied in reducing the national debt. Officers of the exchequer are not to issue the produce of the sinking fund, before payment of the 250,000*l.* quarterly, and the redeemed stock shall be transferred to the commissioners, and the dividends shall be received by the bank, and placed to the commissioners' account. Ibid.

When any stock shall be placed to the account of the commissioners, no money shall be issued for the management thereof. And monies placed to the account of the commissioners shall be applied in redemption of annuities at or above par. Ibid.

The commissioners are impowered, if they shall think expedient, to subscribe towards any public loan; and the speaker of the house of commons, the chancellor of the exchequer, the master of the rolls, the accountant general in chancery, and the governor and deputy governor of the bank, for the time being respectively, shall be commissioners, who are to appoint clerks, and officers. Ibid.

The bank shall pay such money vested in the commissioners, as shall be ordered by them, and shall make up their accounts with them annually, which shall be laid before the parliament annually. Ibid.

Commissioners are to lay an account of their proceedings before parliament; and before the commissioners for auditing the public accounts. Ibid.

Forging any certificate made by virtue of this act is felony without clergy. s. 21.

The cashiers of the bank shall give security: and the treasury may discharge incidental charges of executing this act. s. 22.

By 27 Geo. 3. c. 13. from July 5th 1787, the sum of 250,000*l.* directed by 26 Geo. 3. c. 31. to be set apart at the exchequer quarterly, shall be set apart out of the consolidated fund, and the provisions of that act shall continue in force. Ibid.

From May 10th, 1787, all monies reserved for payment of annuities on lives, which shall not have been claimed for three years prior to January 5th 1787, or which shall thereafter not be claimed for three years, shall be placed to the account of the commissioners for reducing the national debt. Ibid.

The exchequer shall transmit, by April 5th annually, an account of annuities fallen in by death, or unclaimed for three years, to the treasury, who are to cause the same to be placed to the account of the said commissioners. Ibid.

But if any claimants of annuities so appropriated shall thereafter appear, they are to be paid out of any money applicable for the payment of annuities. Ibid.

By 32 Geo. 3. c. 55. the exchequer shall keep a separate account of the interest of new loans, and if provision be not made for paying them off within forty-five years, an additional sum equal to one hundredth part of the stock, to be issued from the exchequer quarterly, and placed to the account of the commissioners. s. 3.

And if such loans be raised by annuities for any term longer than forty-five years, one-hundredth part of such as may be expected to be then out-standing shall be issued: the computation of such value is to be made under the direction of the commissioners, and copies delivered to the speaker; and the speaker is to certify to the treasury and exchequer the amount of the additional sum to be issued. s. 4.

Sums to be issued under this act to be issued in the order the loans have taken place. s. 5.

Whenever there remains not money of the consolidated fund to pay the further sum to be issued in consequence of any new loan, the deficiency shall be made good, as directed by 26 Geo. 3. c. 91. s. 6.

Any deficiency in the quarterly payments, which may arise at the end of the year, shall be made good out of any supplies granted for the current or any preceding year. s. 7.

Monies placed to the account of the commissioners to be applied in the purchase of such redeemable annuities as shall be at or above par according to 26 Geo. 3. and the stock redeemed to be transferred to their account, and the dividends to be placed thereto: but sums placed to their account in consequence of any new loan to be kept separate. s. 8.

Persons counterfeiting certificates, guilty of felony without clergy. s. 9.

Subsequent to the passing the act for the redemption of the public debt, an additional annual sum of 200,000*l.* has, under the authority of several acts, annually passed for that purpose, been issued from the exchequer over and above the quarterly sum of 250,000*l.*

And by 42 Geo. 3. c. 71. it is enacted, that the said sum of 200,000*l.* heretofore annually issued shall be a permanent charge, and paid quarterly out of the British consolidated fund to the bank for the commissioners. s. 4.

The money placed to the account of the commissioners under this and the former acts shall accumulate, and be applied in redemption of the public annuities, until the whole shall be paid off, within forty-five years from their respective creation. s. 5.

By 48 Geo. 3. c. 142. the commissioners for the reduction of the national debt, are empowered to accept transfers of stock in the 3*l.* per cent consols, or reduced bank annuities, for the purchase of life annuities, for a single life, or the life of a nominee; or the lives of two nominees; in doing which, the party may name himself; but the nominees must not be under thirty-five, and previously to the transfer, the parties are to produce certificates or good proof of the age of the nominees. s. 1—5.

The purchasers of life annuities on single lives, upon the transfer of stock in manner directed by the act, are to be entitled to the annuities as specified in the schedule D, and the purchasers of life annuities, on the continuance of two lives, are to be entitled to the annuities specified in schedule E. s. 7, 8, 9.

Annuitants may make further purchases on the lives of original nominees without fresh certificates; but the annuities on the life of one nominee are not to exceed 1000*l.* nor for two nominees 1500*l.* s. 12—14.

Persons appointed by the commissioners, for reducing the national debt, may accept stock from the purchasers, the dividends whereof shall be afterwards received, and constitute a part of the sinking fund. s. 14.

The annuities are to be payable half yearly, at the same days as the stock transferred, and on the death of a single life, or the survivor of two lives, after the last half-yearly payment, one quarter's annuity is to be paid to the personal representative, at the next half-yearly dividend. s. 15.

To prevent frauds in the receipt of annuities, certificates must be produced from the minister of the parish, or, in his absence, the churchwardens and overseers, or from some justice, of the existence of the life of the nominee, with an affidavit or affirmation annexed of the identity of the party, upon production whereof at the bank, the annuity shall be payable. s. 18.

And certificates of the death of a single or surviving nominee must be also produced, to enable the personal representative to receive the quarterly share. s. 19.

These life annuities are transferrable, and are to be free from taxes, except such as dividends of consols and reduced annuities are liable to, and shall be deemed personal estate. s. 20, 21.

Penalty on producing false certificates and affidavits, or receiving annuities after the deaths of nominees, 500*l.* s. 22, 23.

Annuities ceasing to revert to the sinking fund. s. 24.

The certificates, transfers of stock, and life annuities are to be exempt from stamp duties. s. 25.

Persons making false affidavits, guilty of perjury. s. 26.

Persons forging registers, certificates, names of witnesses thereto, or the certificate of any judge, baron, justice, or magistrate, or any certificates of the commissioners or cashier, or clerk to the bank, or the names of persons in any transfer, or any receipt, or letter of attorney, or who shall personate the nominee, or shall utter any such forged certificate, or instrument as aforesaid, shall be guilty of felony without clergy. s. 28.

Penalties may be recovered in the name of the attorney-general at Westminster, or in Dublin, in the court of exchequer, and in Scotland in the name of the advocate-general, to be applied to the sinking fund; but the commissioners may give the informer one half. s. 29.

By 49 Geo. 3. c. 64. the commissioners for the reduction of the national debt, may grant under the last act (48 Geo. 3. c. 142.) annuities of an annual amount for the life of any one nominee, or of the lives of two nominees, and of the life of the longer liver of them, so as the same do not exceed 3000*l.* per ann.

FUNERAL CHARGES. In strictness no funeral expences are allowable against a creditor, except for the coffin, ringing the bell, parson, clerk, and bearers fees; but not for pall or ornaments; per Holt. 1 Salk. 296. Trin. 5 W. & M. B. R. Shelton's case. Ten pounds is enough to be allowed for the funeral of one in debt; per Holt. Baron Powell in his circuit would allow but 11*s.* 6*d.* as all the necessary charge. Comb. 342. Trin. 7 *W. GALOCHES, (Fr.) a kind of shoe, worn by the Gauls in dirty weather. Ibid.

GAMBEYSON, (gambezonum) a horseman's coat used in war, which covered the legs: or rather a quilted coat, to put under the armour, to make it set easy. Fleta, lib. 1. c. 24.

GAME, (aucupia, from anceps, aucupis, i. e. avium captio) birds or prey got by fowling and hunting.

There are five wild beasts of venary that are called beasts of forest; and they are the hart, the hind, the hare, the boar and the wolf. Antiq. Brit. 43. Manwood 91.

So there are five wild beasts that are called beasts of chase, and they are the buck, the doe, the fox, the *martron, and the roe. Antiq. Brit. 43. Manwood 91.

And the beasts and fowls of warren are only these, the hare, the coney, the pheasant, and the partridge†. Manwood 94.

In these, and the like wild animals, generally known by the denomination of GAME, no person can have a property, unless they be tamed, or reclaimed; and as property is the power that a man hath over any other things for his own use, and the ability that he has to apply it to the sustentation of his being; when the power ceases, his property is lost; and by consequence an animal of this kind, which after my seizure escapes into the wild common of nature, and asserts its own liberty by its swiftness, is no more mine than any creature in the Indies, because I have it no longer in my power or disposal. Bacon's Abr. tit. Game.

But by immediate manucaption, or taking them or killing them a property may be acquired in them; for in these cases they belong to such person in the same manner as any other chattels, and cannot be taken from him, since the first seizure and caption was sufficient to vest the property of them in him. 7 Co. 16. b. Bacon's Abr. tit. Game.

So by taking and taming them they belong to the owner, as do all other tame animals‡, so long as they continue in this condition, that is, as long as they can be considered to have the mind of returning to their masters; for while they appear to be in this state, they are plainly the owner's, and ought not to be violated (and an action will lie against any man that detains them from the owner, or unlawfully destroys them, 2 Black. Com. 325.) but when they forsake the houses and habitations of men, and betake themselves to the woods, they are then the property of any man. Ibid.

And another way of gaining property in them is by inclosure, and then the beasts must be understood to be mine, as the profits of the soil itself are, and they can no more be taken and carried off than any other profits of the land; and therefore if inclosed deer in a park or paddock comes in a field or warren, they become so my own that no man ought to kill or take them away: now since in this case it is the inclosure only that retains them, (for take away the inclosure and they are in their natural liberty,) therefore the party is said to have as much right thereto as he hath to any other profits there inclosed, and a distinct and independent right in every animal. Ibid.

† In Co. Lit. 233, it is said that there be both beasts and fowls of the warren: beasts, as hares, conies, roes; fowls of two sorts, terestres or land fowls, and aquatiles or water fowls; and that the land fowl are of two sorts; silvestres, or such as inhabit the woods, and campestres, or such as are to be found in the field; campestres, as partridge, quail, rail, &c. silvestres, as pheasant, wood-cock, &c. but it rather seems, from Manwood and the authorities which he has cited, that there are only two beasts and two fowls of warren, as above stated.

‡ Such as horses, cows, sheep, hens, chickens, peacocks, and other domestic fowls, and dogs; for these do not fly the dominion of mankind; and therefore the owner hath the same kind of property in them as he hath in all other inanimate chattels, and for the violation thereof may bring an action of trespass. Bacon's Abr. tit. Game.

Thus all such creatures as are feræ naturæ, being the property of no one, it follows, that by the law of nature, every man from the prince to the peasant, has an equal right of pursuing and taking them, to his own use, 2 Black. 411.

But from the very end and constitution of society, this natural right, as well as many others belonging to man as an individual, may be restrained by positive laws enacted for reasons of state, as for the supposed benefit of the community; this restriction may be either with respect to the place in which this right may, or may not be exercised; with respect to the animals that are the subject of this right; or with respect to the persons allowed or forbidden to exercise it. 2 Black. Com. 411.

And in consequence of this authority, we find that the municipal laws of many nations have exerted such power of restraint, have in general forbidden the entering on another man's grounds, for any cause, without the owner's leave; have extended their protection to such particular animals as are usually the objects of pursuit; and have invested the prerogative of hunting and taking such animals, in the sovereign of the state only, and such as he shall authorise. 2 Black. Com. 411.

Many reasons have concurred for making these constitutions; 1st, For the encouragement of agriculture and improvement of lands, by giving every man an exclusive dominion over his own soil. 2dly, For the preservation of the several species of these animals, which would soon be extirpated by a general liberty. And 3dly, For prevention of idleness and dissipation in husbandmen, artificers, and other persons of lower rank, which would be the unavoidable consequence of universal licence. 2 Black. Com. 411.

But before we proceed to consider the particulars of these civil prohibitions in this country, it will be proper to shew their rise and origin.

In England, hunting has ever been esteemed a most princely diversion and exercise, the whole island was replenished with all sorts of game in the times of the Britons, who lived in a wild and pastoral manner, without inclosing or improving their grounds, and derived much of their subsistence from the chase, which they all enjoyed in common. But when husbandry took place under the Saxon government, and lands began to be cultivated, improved, and inclosed, the beasts naturally fled into the woody and desert tracts; which were called the forests; and having never been disposed of in the first distribution of lands, were therefore held to belong to the crown: these were filled with great plenty of game, which our royal sportsmen reserved for their own diversion, on pain of a pecuniary forfeiture, for such as interfered with their sovereign. But every freeholder had the full liberty of sporting upon his own territories, provided he abstained from the king's forests. 3 Black. Com. 411.

However, upon the Norman conquest, a new doctrine took place; and the right of pursuing and taking all beasts of chase or venary, and such other animals as were accounted game, was then held to belong to the king, or to such only as were authorised under him; and this as well upon the principles of the feodal law, that the king is the ultimate proprietor of all the lands in the kingdom, they being all held of him as the chief lord, or lord paramount of the fee; and that therefore he has the right of the universal soil to enter thereon, and to chace and take such creatures at his pleasure: as also upon another maxim of the common law, that these animals are bona vacantia, and having no other owner, belong to the king by his prerogative. As therefore, the former reason was held to vest in the king a right to pursue and take them any where, the latter was supposed to give the king, and such as he should authorise, a sole and exclusive right. 2 Black. 415.

This right, thus newly vested in the crown, was exerted with the utmost rigour; and after the time of the Norman establishment, not only in the antient forests, but in the new ones which the conqueror made, by laying together vast tracts of country, depopulated for that purpose, and reserved solely for the king's royal diversion, in which were exercised the most horrid tyrannies and oppressions under colour of forest law, for the sake of preserving the beasts of chase; to kill any of which within the limits of the forest, was as penal as the death of a man; and in pursuance of the same principle, king John laid a total interdict upon the winged as well as the four-footed creation. 2 Black. Com. 416.

The cruel and insupportable hardships which these forest laws created to the subject, occasioned our ancestors to be as zealous for their reformation, as for the relaxation of the feodal rigours, and the other exactions introduced by the Norman family; and accordingly the immunities of charta de foresta were as warmly contended for, and extorted from the king, with as much difficulty as those of magna charta itself. Ibid.

By this charter confirmed in parliament, 9 Hen. 3. many forests were disafforested, or stripped of their oppressive privileges: and regulations were made in the regimen of such as remained; particularly killing the king's deer was made no longer a capital offence, but only punished by a fine, imprisonment, or abjuration of the realm. And by a variety of subsequent statutes together with the long acquiescence of the crown, without exerting the forest laws, this prerogative is now become no longer a grievance to the subject. Ibid.

But as the king reserved to himself the forests for his own exclusive diversion, so he granted out from time to time other tracts of lands to his subjects under the name of chases or parks, or gave them licence to make such in their own grounds; which indeed are smaller forests, in the hands of a subject, but not governed by the forest laws: and by the common law, no person is at liberty to take or kill any beasts of chase but such as hath an ancient chase, or park; unless they be also beasts of prey. Ibid.

For the common law warrants the hunting of ravenous beasts of prey on another's ground, such as foxes, wolves, badgers, and the like, because the destroying of them is looked upon as a public benefit; so that the party in pursuing those through the grounds of another is subject to no action whatsoever; but it hath been resolved, that the hunting and killing such noxious animals must be done in the ordinary and usual manner, and that therefore the digging and breaking the ground to unearth them or searching for, or unbagging a fox, for the purpose of the pleasure of hunting, and not actually for the purpose of killing and destroying such noxious animals is unlawful, and the owner of the ground may maintain an action of trespass. Poph. 162. Latch. 119. Cro. Jac, 321. 2 Bulst. 60.

As to all inferior species of game, called beasts and fowls of warren, the liberty of taking or killing them is another franchise or royalty, derived likewise from the crown, and called free warren, a word which signifies preservation or custody. 2 Black. Com. 417.

The principal intention of granting to any one these franchises or liberties, was in order to protect the game, by giving the grantee a sole and exclusive power of killing it himself, provided he prevented other persons. Ibid.

And no man, but he who has a chase or free warren, by grant from the crown, or prescription, which supposes one, can justify hunting or sporting upon another man's soil; nor indeed, in thorough strictness of common law, either in hunting or sporting at all. Ibid.

But it is not lawful for any man to make any chase, park, or free warren, in his own freehold or elsewhere, to keep in it any wild beasts, or birds of forest, chase, park, or warren, without the king's grant or warrant so to do, and if any man do, he is to be punished in a quo warranto, and the franchise to be seized into the king's hands. Manwood 56 Co. Ent. 561.

But the prosecution must be in the name of the attorney-general, because it is of a private nature; and therefore proper to be prosecuted only in the name of the attorney-general, by information, if his majesty thinks fit. 2 Ld. Raym. 1409. 1 Str. 637. Cas. B. R. Temp. Hard. 261.

From what has been before set forth, it is clear (however novel the doctrine may be, to such as call themselves qualified sportsmen) that the sole right of taking and destroying game belongs exclusively to the king. 2 Black. Com. 417.

This appears as well from the preceding historical deduction, as because he may grant to his subjects an exclusive right of taking them, which he could not do unless such a right was first inherent in himself. Ibid.

And hence it will follow, that no person whatsoever, but he who hath such derivative right from the crown, is by common law entitled to take or kill any beasts of chase, or other game whatsoever. Ibid.

It is true, that by the acquiescence of the crown, the frequent grants of free-warren in ancient times, and the introduction of new penalties of late years, by certain statutes for preserving the game, this exclusive prerogative of the king is little known or considered; every man that is exempted from these modern penalties looking upon himself as at liberty to do what he pleases with the game: whereas the contrary is strictly true, that no man however qualified he may vulgarly be esteemed, has a right to encroach on the royal prerogative by the killing of game, unless he can show a particular grant of free warren; or a prescription, which presumes a grant; or some authority under an act of parliament.* 2 Black. Com. 417, 418.

The truth of the matter is, that these game laws do indeed qualify no one, except a gamekeeper, to kill game: but only to save the trouble and formal process of an action, by the person injured, who perhaps too might remit the offence, these statutes inflict additional penalties, to be recovered either in a regular or summary way by any of the king's subjects, from certain persons of inferior rank, who may be found offending in this particular. 2 Black. Com. 418.

But it does not follow, that persons excused from these additional penalties are therefore authorized to kill game; the circumstance of having 100*l. per ann.* and the rest, are not properly qualifications, but exemptions. And these persons, so exempted from the penalties of the game statutes, are not only liable to actions of trespass by the owners of the lands; but also if they kill game within the limits of any royal franchise, they are liable to the actions of such may have the right of chase or free-warren therein. Ibid.

Upon the whole it appears, that the king by his prerogative, and such persons as have, under his authority, the royal franchise of chase, park, or free-warren, are the only persons who may acquire any property, however fugitive and transitory, in these animals feræ naturæ, while living; which is said to be vested in them, propter privilegium. 2 Black. Com. 419.

And it must also be remembered, that such persons as may thus lawfully hunt ratione privilegii, have only a qualified property in these animals; it not being absolute or permanent, but lasting only so long as the creatures remain within the limits of each respective franchise or liberty, and ceasing the instant they voluntarily pass out of it. Ib.

But if a man starts any game within his own grounds, and follows it into another's and kills it there, the property remains in himself, and this is grounded on reason and natural justice; for the property consists in the possession, which possession commences by the finding it in his own liberty, and is continued by the immediate pursuit. Manw. 389. 11 Mod. 75. Puff. L. N. 64. c. 6. 2 Black. Com. 419.

But it is said in Manwood, that if a man flies his hawk at a pheasant in his own ground, and the hawk pursues the pheasant into another's warren, which is a privileged place for fowls of warren, and kills it there, the owner of the hawk cannot justify entering the warren, and taking the pheasant, but it shall belong to the owner of the warren, and that the law is the same in the cases of all wild beasts of the forest and chase. Manw. 389.

And so if a stranger starts game in one man's chase or free-warren, and hunts it into another liberty, the property continues in the owner of the chase or warren; and the warrener or keeper may pursue them and retake them, for the chase or warren is a public establishment, to look after and preserve the game; wherein there are officers established by authority to have an eye over the game, and to keep it within the boundaries, so that the property is not altered by driving it out of the inclosures, unless it be also out of the pursuit of the officers; for as long as he that is intrusted doth pursue it, it is not in its natural liberty, but is still belonging to the chase or warren. 2 Black. Com. 419. 2 Bacon's Abr. 613.

So if a man starts game on another's private grounds and kills it there, the property belongs to and may be seized by him on whose ground it was killed, because it was also started there, this property arising ratione soli. 2 Black. Com. 419. 1 Ld. Raym. 251. 2 Bac. Abr. 613.

But if after being started there, it is killed in the grounds of a third person, the property belongs not to the owner of the first ground, because the property is local; nor yet to the owner of the second, because it was not started in his soil; but it vests in the person who started and killed it, though guilty of a trespass against both owners. 7 Mod. Com. 218. 1 Ld. Raym. 251. 2 Bac. Abr. 613. 2 Black. Com. 419.

Acts for the preservation of Game.

—— Destroying game out of season.] By 9 Ann. c. 25. if any person (between the first of June and the first of October yearly, 10 Geo. 2. c. 32.) shall by hays, tunnels or other nets, drive and take any wild-duck, teal, widgeon, or other water-fowl, in any fens, lakes, broad-waters, or other places of resort for wild-fowl in the moulting season, such person being thereof convicted, before one justice of peace, by the oath of one witness, shall, for every water-fowl so taken, forfeit 5*s.* one moiety to the informer, and the other moiety to the poor of the parish; the same to be levied by distress and sale of goods, by warrant of the justice before whom the offender shall be convicted; and for want of distress the offender shall be committed to the house of correction for any time not exceeding one month, nor less than fourteen days, there to be whipt and kept to hard labour; and the justice shall order such hays, nets, or tunnels, that were used in driving and taking the said wild-fowl, to be seized, and destroyed in the presence of such justice. s. 4.

By 39 Geo. 3. c. 34. no person shall, upon any pretence whatsoever, take, kill, destroy, carry, sell, buy, or have in his possession or use any partridge, between 1st Feb. and 1st Sept. in any year. s. 3.

And by 2 Geo. 3. c. 19. no person shall, upon any pretence whatsoever, kill, destroy, carry, sell, buy, or have in his possession any pheasant between 1st Feb. and 1st Oct. in any year.* s. 1.

Nothing in this act shall extend to any pheasant taken in season, and kept in any mew or breeding place. s. 2.

* It was by 7 Jac. 1. c. 11. enacted, that every person which shall hawk at, destroy or kill, any pheasants or partridges, with hawks or dogs, by colour of hawking, between the first of July and the last of August, being accused within six months, and the offence being proved by confession, or by oath of two witnesses, before two justices, shall be by the justices committed to the common gaol for one month, unless he pay to the churchwardens or overseers for the use of the poor 40*s.* for every such hawking, and 20*s.* for every pheasant or partridge, which he, his hawk or dog shall take, kill, or destroy, contrary to this statute. s. 2, 5.

But this act seems to be virtually repealed and superseded by the above general restriction in the act 2 Geo. 3. c. 19.

If any person shall transgress this act, and shall be lawfully convicted thereof by the oath of one or more credible witnesses, every such person shall, for every partridge or pheasant so taken, killed, destroyed, carried, sold, bought or found in his possession, contrary to this act, forfeit five pounds to the person who shall inform: and any person may sue for the five pounds, with full costs, in any court of record at Westminster. 2 Geo. 3. c. 19. s. 2. 39 Geo. 3. c. 34. s. 3.

By 13 Geo. 3. c. 55, no person shall kill, destroy, carry, sell, buy, or have in his possession, any heath-fowl, commonly called black-game; between 10th Dec. and 20th Aug. nor any grouse, commonly called red-game, between 10th Dec. and 12th Aug. nor any bustard, between 1st Mar. and 1st Sep. in any year, upon pain to forfeit for the first offence, not exceeding twenty, nor less than ten pounds; and for the second and every subsequent offence, not exceeding thirty, nor less than twenty pounds. s. 2.

And by 43 Geo. 3. c. 102 persons taking or killing in the New Forest in the county of Southampton any black-game, between Dec. 10th and Sept. 1st, shall be liable to the forfeitures imposed by the above act of 13 Geo. 3. c. 55.

—— Destroying game in the night time.] By 23 Eliz. c. 10. no person of what estate, degree, or condition soever, shall take or destroy any pheasants or partridges with nets, snares, gins, engines, rowsting, lowing or other devices, in the night, upon pain of forfeiture for every pheasant 20*s.* and for every partridge 10*s.* which forfeitures, if he do not pay within ten days after conviction, then to have one month's imprisonment; and besides such forfeiture or imprisonment, to put in bond with sureties for two years, that he shall not take or destroy any partridges or pheasants contrary to this act, the bond to be taken by some justice of peace; the one half of which forfeitures to be to the chief lords of the liberties or manors, and the other moiety to such as will sue for the same, in any court of record, or at the assizes, sessions, or leet. s. 2, 5.

Unless such lord shall dispense with or procure any such taking or destroying, in which case his half shall be to the poor of the parish, and be levied or recovered by any of the churchwardens. s. 3.

By 9 Ann. c. 25. if any person whatsoever shall take or kill any hare, pheasant, partridge, moor, heath game, or grouse, in the night-time, he shall, on conviction, before one justice, on oath of one witness, forfeit 5*l.*; half to the informer, and half to the poor, by distress; and for want of distress to be sent to the house of correction for three months for the first offence, and for every other offence four months. s. 3.

And by 13 Geo. 3. c. 80. it is further enacted, that if any person shall kill, take, or destroy any hare, pheasant, partridge, moor game, or heath game, or use any gun, dog, snare, net, or other engine, with intent to kill, take, or destroy, any hare, &c. in the night, viz. between seven o'clock at night and six in the morning, from 12th October to 12th February, and between nine o'clock at night and four in the morning, from 12th February to 12th October; such person being convicted thereof, upon the oath of one witness, before one justice, shall forfeit for the first offence, not exceeding twenty nor less than ten pounds; and for the second, not exceeding thirty, nor less than twenty pounds. s. 1.

And if it shall appear, that such offender hath already been convicted of a first and second offence against this act; then such justice shall commit such offender to the common gaol, there to remain till the next general quarter sessions, unless such offender shall have entered into a recognizance, with two securities, to appear at such session, to be tried by indictment for the offence; and also shall bind over the informer to prosecute the offender by indictment, and the general or quarter sessions shall direct the said indictment to be tried; and if upon such indictment such offender shall be convicted, he shall forfeit and pay in court 50*l.*: and in case he shall neglect or refuse to pay the 50*l.* he shall be committed to the common gaol, for not less than six nor more than twelve calendar months, unless such penalty be sooner paid: and such offender shall, if the justices think proper, be once publicly whipped at the expiration of such commitment, in the town or place where such gaol shall be, between twelve and one in the day. s. 1.

And by 4 & 5 Will. & Mar. c. 23. all lords of manors, or any persons authorized by them as game-keepers, may within their royalties resist offenders in the night-time, in the same manner, and be equally indemnified, as if such fact had been committed within any ancient chase, park, or warren. s. 4.

That is to say, according to stat. de malefact. in parc. 21 Edw. 1. stat. 2.—whereby it is ordained, that if any forester, parker, or warrener, find any trespasser wandering within his liberty, intending to do damage therein, and that after hue and cry made to him to stand unto the peace will not yield himself, but doth continue and execute his malice, and disobeying the king's peace, doth flee or defend himself with force and arms, although such foresters, &c. or their company, do kill any offender so found, they shall not be arraigned, nor lose life or limb, or suffer punishment. s. 1.

—— Destroying game on a Sunday, or Christmas day.] By 13 Geo. 3. c. 80. if any person shall, upon a Sunday, or on Christmas day, in the day-time, take, kill, or destroy any hare, pheasant, partridge, heath-game, or moor-game, or shall upon a Sunday or Christmas day, use any gun, dog, net, or engine for taking, killing, or destroying thereof, such person convicted in the manner prescribed by this act*, shall be subject to the like forfeitures, as are by this act inflicted for destroying game in the night. s. 6.

—— Tracing hares in the snow.] By 14 & 15 Hen. 8. c. 10. no person of what estate, degree, or condition they be, shall trace and kill any hare in the snow: and the justices of peace at every sessions, and stewards of leets, shall have power to inquire of such offenders; and after such inquisitions found, the justices of peace and stewards for every hare so killed shall cess upon every such offender 6*s.* 8*d.* to be forfeited to the king, if found by the justices of peace, and to the lord of the leet if found in the leet.

And by 1 Jac. 1. c. 27. every person which shall trace, or course any hares in the snow, shall, on conviction before two justices, by confession or oath of two witnesses, be committed to gaol for three months, unless he pay to the churchwardens for the use of the poor 20*s.* for every hare which he shall take or destroy, or after one month after his commitment, become bound by recognizance with two sureties in 20*l.* a piece before two justices, not to offend in like manner; the recognizance to be returned to the next sessions. s. 2.

—— Taking hares in gins.] By 1 Jac. 1. c. 27. every person who shall at any time take or destroy any hares with hare-pipes, cords, or with any such instruments, or other engines, shall on conviction before two justices, by confession or oath of two witnesses, be committed to gaol for three months, unless he pay to the churchwardens for the use of the poor 20*s.* for every hare which he shall take or destroy, or after one month after his commitment, become bound by recognizance with two sureties in 20*l.* a piece, before two justices, not to offend in like manner; the recognizance to be returned to the next sessions. s. 2.

And by 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 25. s. 6. if any person shall be found setting or using any snares, hare-pipes, or other like engines, and shall thereof be convicted by confession, or oath of one witness, before one justice, in one month after the offence, he shall give to the party injured such satisfaction, and in such time, as the justice shall appoint, and shall pay down presently to the overseers for the use of the poor such sum, not exceeding 10*s.* as the justice shall appoint, and if such offender do not make such satisfaction, and pay such sum to the poor, the justice shall commit him to the house of correction, for not exceeding one month.

—— Destroying the eggs of the winged game.] By 25 Hen. 8. c. 11. from the first of March to the last of June yearly, no person shall withdraw, take, destroy, or convey, any eggs of wild-fowl from or in any nest where they shall be laid, upon pain of imprisonment for one year; and to forfeit for every egg of any crane or bustard 20*d.* and for every egg of bittour, heron, or shoveclard, 8*d.* and for every egg of mallard, teal, or other wild-fowl, 1*d.* the one moiety to the king, and the other half to him that will sue for the same; and all justices of peace shall have power to enquire, hear, and determine the same. s. 5.

But this act shall not extend to any persons that will destroy crows, choughs, ravens, and boscards, or their eggs, or any fowl or their eggs, not used to be eaten. s. 6.

By 1 Jac. 1. c. 27. every person who shall take the eggs of any pheasant or partridge out of the nest, or willingly break, spoil, or destroy the same in the nest, shall on conviction before two justices, by confession, or oath of two witnesses, be committed to gaol for three months, unless he pay upon conviction to the churchwardens for the use of the poor 20*s.* for every egg; or after one month after his commitment, become bound by recognizance with two sureties, before two justices, in 20*l.* each, not to offend again in like manner; the recognizance to be returned to the next sessions. s. 2.

—— Buying or selling game.] By 1 Jac. 1. c. 27. every person which shall sell, or buy to sell again, any deer, hare, partridge, or pheasant (except partridges and pheasants reared in house, or brought from beyond sea), shall on conviction at the assizes or quarter seesions, or before two justices out of sessions, forfeit for every deer 40*s.* for every hare 10*s.* and for every partridge 10*s.* and for every pheasant 20*s.* of which forfeitures the one moiety shall be to him that will sue, and the other moiety to the poor of the parish where the offence shall be committed. s. 4, 5.

And by 5 Ann. c. 14. if any higler, chapman, carrier, inn-keeper, victualler or ale-house keeper, shall have in his custody any hare, pheasant, partridge, moor, heath-game or grouse, or shall buy, sell, or offer to sell any hare, &c. unless such game in the hands of such carrier be sent up by persons qualified to kill the game, (or if any person whatsoever, whether qualified or not, shall sell, expose, or offer to sell, any hare, pheasant, partridge, moor, heath-game or grouse, 28 Geo. 2. c. 12. s. 1.), he shall be carried before some justice of peace, and upon view, or upon the oath of one witness, shall be convicted, and shall forfeit for every hare, &c. 5*l.*; one half to the informer, and the other half to the poor of the parish; to be levied by distress and sale of goods, by warrant of the justice before whom such offender shall be convicted; and for want of sufficient distress to be committed to the house of correction, for the first offence, for three months, and for every other offence four months; provided such conviction be within three months after such offence. s. 2.

And by 9 Anæ. c. 25. if any hare, pheasant, partridge, moor, heath-game or grouse, shall be found in the shop, house, or possession of (any poulterer, salesman, fishmonger, cook or pastry cook, 28 Geo. 2. c. 12. s. 2.), or of any person not qualified in his own right to kill game, or entitled thereto under some person so qualified, the same shall be adjudged an exposing thereof to sale. s. 3.

And any justice of the peace, and lord within his manor, may take away to his own use any such hare, pheasant, partridge, moor, heath-game or grouse, or any other game, from any such higler, chapmen, inn-keeper, victualler, or carrier, or any other person not qualified, which shall be found in his custody or possession. 5 Ann. c. 14. s. 4.

And any person that shall destroy, sell or buy any hare, &c. and shall within three months make discovery of any higler, &c. that hath bought or sold, or offered to buy or sell, or had in their possession, any hare, &c. so as any one shall be convicted, such discoverer shall be discharged of the penalties, and shall receive the same benefit as any other informer. s. 3.

—— Hawking or hunting with spaniels in standing corn.] By 23 Eliz. c. 10. no person shall hawk, or with his spaniels hunt, in any ground where corn shall grow (except it be in his own ground) at such time as any eared or codded corn shall be standing upon the same, nor before such corn shall be shocked, cocked, hilled or copped; upon pain of forfeiture for every time that he shall so hawk or hunt (without the consent of the owner of the corn) to the owner of the said corn 40*s.* to be levied or recovered in any court of record, or at the assizes, sessions, or leet. s. 4, 5.

—— Hawking.) By 34 Ed. 3. c. 22. every person who findeth a faulcon, tercelet, laner, or laneret, or other hawk that is lost, shall presently bring the same to the sheriff; and the sheriff shall make proclamation in all the good towns in the country, that he hath such a hawk in his custody, and if he is challenged, the owner shall pay the costs, and have the hawk: but if none within four months challenge it, the sheriff shall have the hawk, making gree to him that did take him, if he be a simple man: and if he be a gentleman and of estate to have the hawk, then the sheriff shall re-deliver to him the hawk, taking of him reasonable costs for the time that he had him in his custody.

And by 37 Ed. 3. c. 19. if any steal any hawk, and the same carry away, not doing the ordinance aforesaid, it shall be done of him as of him that stealeth a horse or other thing—that is, it shall be felony; but the offender shall have the benefit of his clergy: for at the time of the making of this act, he that had stolen a horse should have had his clergy. 3 Inst. 98.

No man shall bear any hawk of the breed of England, called a nyesse, goshawk, tassel, laner, laneret or faulcon, upon pain of forfeiture of his hawk to the king; and if he bring any from beyond sea, he shall bring a certificate under the customer's seal of the port where he landed, upon the same pain; and the person that bringeth such hawk to the king, shall have reward of the king or the hawk for his labour. 11 Hen. 7. c. 17.

And no man shall take any ayre, faulcon, goshawk, tassel, or laner or lanerets, in their warren, or woods, or in other place, nor purposely drive them out of their coverts accustomed to breed in, to cause them to go to other coverts to breed, nor slay them for any hurt by them done, but suffer them to pass at their liberties; upon pain of 10*l.* the one half to the party that will sue by action, by examination before the justices of peace, information, or otherwise, and the other half to the king. 11 Hen. 7. c. 17.

Also no person of what condition or degree he be, shall take or cause to be taken, on his own ground or any other man's, the eggs of any falcon, gos-hawks, or laners, out of the nests, upon pain of imprisonment of a year and a day, and fine at the king's will, the one half to the king, and the other half to the owner of the ground where the eggs were taken: and the justices may hear and determine such matter, as well by inquisition as information and proofs. 11 Hen. 7. c. 17.

And it is further enacted, by 5 Eliz. c. 21. s. 3. that if any persons shall take away any hawks or their eggs, by any means unlawfully out of the woods or grounds of any person, and be thereof convicted at the assizes or sessions, on indictment, bill or information, at the suit of the king or of the party, he shall be imprisoned three months and shall pay treble damages; and after the three months expired, shall find sureties for his good abearing for seven years, or remain in prison till he doth it.

—— Burning grig, ling, heath, furze, goss or fern.] For preserving the red and black game of grouse, called heath-cocks, or heath-polts, it is by 4 & 5 Will. & Mar. c. 23. enacted that no person on any mountains, hills, heaths, moors, forests, chases, or other wastes, shall burn, between the second of February and 24th of June, any grig, ling, heath, furze, goss, or fern, upon pain that the offender shall be committed to the house of correction, for any time not exceeding one month, and not less than ten days, there to be whipt and kept to hard labour. s. 11.

As this act gives no direction how such offendert shall be convicted; it seems that the party guilty of disobedience thereto can only be proceeded against by indictment.

—— Persons qualified to kill game.] The laws made for the preservation of the different sorts of game, and to which all persons, of whatsoever rank, estate, or degree they may be, are subject, have been distinctly stated. It is therefore intended in this place, to shew what penalties inferior persons, not qualified by the laws of this realm, to keep or use dogs or instruments for the destruction of game, are liable to, for keeping or using the same: in doing this, it will be necessary to set down, in progressive order, the statutes which appear to be in force at the present day respecting such offenders; and in the next place, give a summary view of the points determined on the construction of those statutes.

By 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 25. every person not having lands and tenements, or some other estate of inheritance, in his own or his wife's right, of the clear yearly value of 100*l.* or for term of life, or a lease or leases, of ninety-nine years, or for any longer term, of the clear yearly value of 150*l.* other than the son and heir apparent of an esquire, or other person of higher degree, and the owners and keepers of forests, parks, chases or warrens, being stocked with deer or conies for their necessary use, (in respect of the said forests, parks, chases or warrens), are hereby declared to be persons by the laws of this realm not allowed to have or keep for themselves or any other persons, guns, bows, greyhounds, setting dogs, ferrets, coney dogs, lurchers, hays, nets, lowbells, hare-pipes, gins, snares, or other engines for the taking and killing of conies, hares, pheasants, partridges, or other game, but shall be prohibited to have, keep, or use the same. s. 3.

And by 5 Ann. c. 14. if any person not so qualified shall keep or use any greyhounds, setting dogs, hays, lurchers, tunnels, or any other engines to kill and destroy the game, and shall be thereof convicted upon the oath of one witness, by the justice of peace where such offence is committed, the person so convicted shall forfeit 5*l.*; one half to the informer, and the other half to the poor of the parish, to be levied by distress and sale of goods, by warrant of such justice; and for want of distress, the offender shall be sent to the house of correction, for three months for the first offence, and for every other offence, four months. s. 4.

And it shall be lawful for any justices of the peace, within their respective counties, ridings, cities, towns corporate or liberty, and the lords and ladies of manors within the said manors, to take away any hare, or other game, and likewise such dogs, nets, or other engines, which shall be in the custody of any persons not qualified to keep the same, to their own use. s. 4.

And game-keepers or any other persons thereunto authorized by warrant under the hand and seal of any justices of peace, may in the day-time search the houses or other places of any such persons prohibited by this act to keep or use the same, as upon good ground shall be suspected to have in their custody any guns, bows, greyhounds, setting-dogs, ferrets, coney-dogs, or other dogs, to destroy hares or conies, hays, tramels, or other nets, lowbells, hare-pipes, snares or other engines aforesaid, and the same to seize and keep, for the use of the lord of the manor, or otherwise to cut in pieces or destroy, as things prohibited. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 25. s. 2.

And by 1 Jac. 1. c. 27. every person which shall shoot at, kill or destroy, with any gun, cross-bow, stone-bow, or long-bow, any pheasant, partridge, pigeon, heron, mallard, duck, teal, widgeon, grouse, heath-cock, moor-game, or any such fowl; and the same offence is proved by the confession of the party, or by the testimony of two witnesses upon oath, before two justices where the offence shall be committed or the party apprehended, shall be by the said justices committed to the common gaol for three months, unless the offender forthwith upon conviction pay to the churchwardens where the offence shall be committed or the party apprehended, to the use of the poor, 20*s.* for every pheasant, partridge, pigeon, heron, mallard, duck, teal, widgeon, grouse, heath-cock, moor-game, or any such fowl; and for every hare which such person so offending and convicted, shall take or willingly destroy; or after one month after commitment, together with two sureties, become bound by recognizance in 20*l.* a piece to the king, with condition that he shall not shoot at, kill, take or destroy, any of the said game by the means aforesaid; which recognizance shall be taken by any two justices, and returned to the next quarter sessions. s. 2.

And by 7 Jac. 1. c. 11. every person which shall take, kill, or destroy, any pheasant or partridge, with setting-dogs and nets, or with any nets, snares or engines, and the same offence proved by confession of the party, or by the testimony of one witness upon oath, before two justices where the offence shall be committed or the party apprehended, shall be by the said justices committed to the common gaol, there to remain three months, unless he pay to the churchwardens or overseers of the parish where the offence shall be committed, 20*s.* for every pheasant or partridge which such person shall take, kill, or destroy, contrary to this statute, and become bound by recognizance in 20*l.* to his majesty, with condition that he shall not any at time thereafter, take, kill, or destroy, any pheasant or partridge; which recognizance shall be taken by any one justice, and shall be returned to the next quarter sessions, to remain of record. s. 8.

And by 4 & 5 Will. & Mar. c. 23. every constable, headborough and tythingman, being authorized by one justice of peace, shall enter into and search the houses of suspected persons not qualified; and in case any hare, partridge, pheasant, pigeon, fish, fowl or other game*, shall be found, the offender shall be carried before some justice of peace; and if such person do not give a good account how he came by such game, or shall not in convenient time, to be set by the justice, produce the party of whom he bought the same, or some credible person to depose upon oath such sale thereof, shall be convicted by the justice of such offence, and shall forfeit for every hare, partridge, fish, or other game, any sum not under 5*s.* and not exceeding 20*s.* to be ascertained by the justice; one moiety thereof to the informer, and the other moiety to the poor of the parish where the offence was committed, to be levied by distress and sale of goods, by warrant of the justices; and for want of distress, the offender shall be committed to the house of correction, for any time not exceeding one month, and not less than ten days, there to be whipt and kept to hard labour. s. 3.

And if any person produced, shall not before the justice give evidence of his innocence as aforesaid, he shall be convicted in the same manner as the person first charged, and so from person to person, until the first offender be discovered. s. 3.

And by the 49th section of the annual mutiny act, if any officer or soldier shall, without leave of the lord of the manor, under his hand and seal, take, kill or destroy, any hare, coney, pheasant, partridge, pigeon, or any other sort of fowls, poultry, or fish, or his majesty's game; and, upon complaint thereof, shall be upon oath of one witness convicted before any justice, every officer so offending, shall forfeit 5*l.* to the poor of the place, and every officer commanding in chief upon the place, for every such offence committed by any soldier under his command, shall forfeit 20*s.* in like manner; and if upon conviction by the justices and demand by the constable or overseers, such officer shall not within two days pay the penalties, he shall forfeit his commission.

Upon these statutes, the qualification is properly reducible to the six following distinctions, viz.

1st, Every person having lands or tenements, or some other estate of inheritance of the clear yearly value of 100*l.*

2dly, Or for term of life, or lease or leases for ninety-nine years, or any longer terms of the clear yearly value of 150*l.*

And hereon it has been decided, that an estate of the value of 150*l.* per ann. holden by the defendant in his own right; under a lease for ninety-nine years to trustees, if the defendant and others should so long live, is a sufficient qualification to kill game under the statute. Earl Ferrers v. Hilton, Ea. 40 Geo. 3. 8 Ter. Rep. 506.

A life estate of less than 150*l.* per ann. is not a qualification to kill game, the words, or for term of life, being necessarily connected with and carried over to the last member of the sentence; and consequently according to grammatical construction, a tenant for life must have an estate to the amount of 150*l.* per ann. to qualify him to kill game. Caldecot's cas. 188.

And it seems that a vicar, in respect of his church, has not an estate of inheritance in him, but an estate for life only. Ibid.

3dly, The son and heir apparent of an esquire, or other person of higher degree.

In the table of precedence, the heralds next below knights and their sons, and above esquire, rank colonels, serjeants at law, and doctors in the three learned professions. 1 Black. Com. 405.

An esquire or other person of higher degree, as such, is not qualified under this act, though the son of an esquire or the son of any other person of higher degree is. 1 Ter. Rep. 41.

4thly, The owner or keeper of any forest, park, chase, or warren.

5thly, The lord of any manor or royalty.

6thly, The game-keeper of any lord or lady of a manor, provided he be a person qualified, or truly a servant to such lord or lady, or immediately employed and appointed to take and kill the game for the sole use and immediate benefit of such lord or lady.

Every person having lands or tenements, or some other estate of inheritance of the clear yearly value of 100*l.*] It seems that an equitable as well as a legal estate gives a qualification under the game laws, but the clear value of the necessary estate means the value, clear at least of all mortgages or incumbrances created by the owner, or those under whom he claims.

The words of the statute 5 Ann. c. 14. are in the disjunctive, viz. keep or use any greyhounds, setting-dogs, hays, lurchers, tunnels, or any other engines to kill and destroy the game; the offences are therefore distinct and several, and a conviction either for the keeping, or for using of any of the dogs of the kinds enumerated, will be good. 1 Strange settled 496. Caldecot 175.

It has been a question, whether a gun is such an engine as is within the statute; and it seems now to be fully settled, that it is not an instrument, the bare keeping of which is penal, because it differs from nets and dogs which can only be kept for an ill purpose: the bare keeping whereof is not enough to be shown, because it may be kept for the defence of a house or some other lawful purpose; but it must be also shown that it was used for the destruction of the game. 1 Sess. Cas. 93. Cas. 88. 2 Str. 1093.

* Or other game.] This act extends only to game, and not to rabbits kept in a private warren. 1 Ld. Raym. 151.

The penalty of 5*l.* is given for the keeping or using dogs or engines, and not for the game destroyed; therefore, although a person kill ever so many hares in one day, he can be convicted in but one penalty for that day. 10 Mod. 96. Com. Rep. 274.

And where several persons commit the offence in company, and they are joined in the same conviction, the justice can only convict them in one penalty. 1 Ter. Rep. 809.

It seems also, that the justice ought not to convict an unqualified person, if he acts in company with, and under the permission of one that is qualified. Loft. 173.

Trespassing on grounds, qualified or not.] It is a trespass at common law, for any man to hunt on another's ground; and the owner of the soil may maintain his action of trespass for the same.

But if the party is qualified to kill game, and the damage found be under 40*s.* he shall in such case pay no more costs than damages by 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 9.

But for preventing wilful and malicious trespasses, it is enacted by 8 & 9 Will. 3. c. 11. s. 4. that in all actions of trespass in any of the courts of record at Westminster, wherein at the trial of the cause, it shall appear, and be certified by the judge, under his hand, on the back of the record, that the trespass upon which any defendant shall be found guilty was wilful and malicious, the plaintiff shall recover not only his damages, but his full costs of suit.

Under this statute therefore, if the owner of the land expressly forewarns another not to come thereon, he will in an action for trespass subsequent thereto, be entitled to full costs, notwithstanding the damages recovered may be under 40*s.*

For every trespass is wilful, when the defendant has notice and is especially forewarned not to come on the land; as every trespass is malicious, though the damage may not amount to 40*s.* where the intent of the defendant plainly appears to be to harass and distress the plaintiff. 3 Black. Com. 214.

And if a general notice be given to all persons not to trespass on certain lands, and another hunts over a close belonging to the party giving such notice, the judge on the trial of an action for trespass is bound under the stat. 8 & 9 Will. 3. c. 11. s. 4. to certify that it was wilful and malicious, in order to entitle the plaintiff to his full costs, notwithstanding it appear on the trial that the defendant was anxious to avoid trespassing on the ground, and that he made frequent inquiries respecting the plaintiff's boundaries. Reynolds v. Edwards, Mic. Ter. 35 Geo. 3. 6 Ter. Rep. 11.

And as great mischiefs do ensue by inferior tradesmen, apprentices, and other dissolute persons, neglecting their trades and employments, who follow hunting, fishing, and other game, to the ruin of themselves and damage of their neighbours, it is enacted by 4 & 5 Will. & Mar. c. 23. s. 10. that if any inferior tradesman, apprentice, or other dissolute person, shall hunt, hawk, fish, or fowl (unless in company with the master of such apprentice duly qualified) such persons shall be subject to the penalties, and may be sued for their wilful trespass in coming on any person's land, and if found guilty, the plaintiff shall recover full costs. s. 10.

Upon this statute it has been adjudged, that if a person be an inferior tradesman, as a clothier for instance, it matters not what qualification he may have in point of estate; but if he be guilty of such trespass, he shall be liable to pay full costs. 3 Black. 215.

——— General penalties under the game laws, and how recoverable.] By 8 Geo. 1. c. 19. where any person shall for any offence against any law now in being, for preservation of the game, be liable to pay any pecuniary penalty upon conviction before any justice of peace, it shall be lawful for any other person, either to proceed to recover the said penalty by information before a justice, or to sue for the same in any court of record. s. 1.

And by 2 Geo. 3. c. 19. it shall be lawful for such person, to sue for and recover the whole penalty for his own use, by action of debt, or on the case, bill, plaint, or information, in any court of record at Westminster, and if he recovers, he shall have double costs; and no part of the penalty, recovered in any such suit, shall be paid to the use of the poor. s. 5.

But no such action shall be brought but within six [lunar] months after the matter is done. s. 6.

And no offender shall be prosecuted for the same offence, both by the way prescribed by this law and by the way prescribed by any of the former laws: and in case of any second prosecution, the person so doubly prosecuted may plead in defence the former prosecution pending, or the conviction or judgment thereupon. 8 Geo. 1. c. 19.

——— For the duty on certificates for killing of game. See head TAXES.

GAME-KEEPERS, are those who have the care of keeping and preserving of the game, being appointed thereto by lords of manors, &c.

And by 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 25. all lords of manors or other royalties, not under the degree of an esquire, may by writing under their hands and seals, authorize game-keepers within their manors or royalties, who may take and seize all such guns, bows, greyhounds, setting-dogs, lurchers, or other dogs to kill hares or conies, ferrets, trammels, lowbells, hays, or other nets, hare-pipes, snares or other engines for the taking and killing of conies, hares, pheasants, partridges, or other game as within the precincts of such manors, shall be used by any persons by this act prohibited to keep or use the same. s. 2.

And by 5 Ann. c. 14. it shall be lawful for any lord or lady of a manor, by writing under hand and seal, to empower game-keepers, upon the manor, to kill hare, pheasant, partridge or other game. s. 4.

But if the game-keeper shall, under colour of the said power, kill or take the same, and afterwards dispose thereof* without the consent or knowledge of the lord or lady, and shall be thereof convicted upon the complaint of such lord or lady, and upon oath of one witness before any one justice of peace, such game-keeper shall be committed to the house of correction for three months, and kept to hard labour. s. 4.

And by 9 Ann. c. 25. no lord or lady of a manor shall make above one game-keeper within one manor, with power to kill game; and the name of such person shall be entered with the clerk of the peace; such entry to be made and viewed without fee, and a certificate thereof to be granted by the clerk of the peace, upon payment of 1*s.*

And in case any other game-keeper, whose name shall not be entered as aforesaid, (who shall not be otherwise qualified to kill game,) shall kill any hare, pheasant, partridge, moor, heath-game, or grouse, he shall on conviction before one justice, on oath of one witness, forfeit for every offence, 5*l.* half to the informer, and half to the poor by distress: for want of distress to be sent to the house of correction for three months for the first offence, and for every other offence four months.

And by 3 Geo. 1. c. 11. no lord or lady of a manor shall appoint any person to be a game-keeper with power to kill game, unless such person be qualified by the laws of this realm so to do, or unless such person be truly a servant to the said lord or lady, or immediately employed to kill the game for the sole use of such lord or lady:

And no such lord or lady shall authorize or qualify any person, not qualified by the laws of this realm so to do, to take or kill any hare, pheasant, partridge, or other game whatsoever, or to keep or use any greyhound, setting dogs, hayes, lurchers, guns, tunnels, or any other engine, to kill and destroy the game. Ibid.

And any person whatsoever, not qualified by the laws so to do, or not being truly and properly a servant of any lord or lady of a manor, or not immediately employed and appointed to take and kill the game for the sole use or immediate benefit of the said lord or lady, who under colour or pretence of any power or authority, deputation, or qualification to him granted by any lord or lady of a manor, shall take or kill any hare, pheasant, partridge, or other game whatsoever, or shall keep or use any greyhounds, setting dogs, hayes, lurchers, guns, tunnels, or any other engine to kill and destroy the game, being thereof legally convicted shall, for every such offence, incur the penalty of 5*l.* as aforesaid. Ibid.

But by 48 Geo. 3. c. 93. so much of the above act of 3 Geo. 1. c. 11. as relates to the appointment of game-keepers is repealed. And lords of manors may appoint any person, whether acting as a game-keeper or not, or whether retained and paid for as a servant, or whether qualified or not to kill game for his use, or the use of any other person, who shall have the same rights as if appointed to kill game for the use of the lord of the manor; and shall not be liable to the duty on stewards.

A lord of a hundred or wapentake is not a lord of a royalty, within the meaning of the act: and he cannot as such grant a deputation to a game-keeper. 1 Doug. 28.

Although a game-keeper is restricted from killing game out of the limits of the manor for which he is appointed, yet he may keep dogs or engines for the destruction of the game in any place. 2 Wils. 287.

GAMING, or speculating on the hazard of winning or losing money by any play, sport, or divertisement, is a vice to restrain which divers statutes have been passed; and gaming, in general acceptation, is always taken in mitiori sensu, to be an offence.

To restrain this pernicious vice it was by the statute 33 Hen. 8, c. 9, enacted that justices of the peace, and head officers in corporations, shall have power to enter houses suspected of unlawful games, and to arrest and imprison the gamesters, till they give security not to play for the future. Also the persons keeping unlawful gaming-houses may be committed by a justice until they find sureties not to keep such houses, who shall forfeit 40*s.* and the gamesters 6*s.* 8*d.* each time; and if the king license the keeping of gaming-houses it is against law, and void.

No artificer, apprentice, labourer, or servant, shall play at tables, tennis, dice, cards, bowls, cogetting in the fields, slide, shift, shove-groat, cloyish, cayles, half-bowl, and coyting, out of Christmas time, on pain of 20*s.* for every offence; and at Christmas they are to play in their master's house, or presence; but any nobleman or gentlemen having 100*l. per ann.* estate may license his servants or family to play within the precincts of his house, or garden, at cards, dice, tables, or other games, as well

By 16 Car. 2, c. 7, if any person, of what degree soever, shall by fraud, deceit, or unlawful device in playing at cards, dice, tables, bowls, cock-fighting, horse-races, foot-races, or other games or pastimes, or bearing a share in the stakes, betting, &c. win any money or valuable thing, he shall forfeit treble the value, one moiety to the crown, and the other to the party grieved, prosecution being in six months; in default whereof the last-mentioned moiety is to go to such other person as will prosecute within one year, &c.

By stat. 9 Ann. cap. 14, all notes, bills, bonds, judgments, mortgages, or other securities given for money won by playing at cards, dice, tables, tennis, bowls, or other games, or by betting on the sides of such as play at any of those games, or for repayment of any money knowingly lent for such gaming or betting, shall be void: and where lands are granted by such mortgages or securities they shall go to the next person who ought to have the same as if the grantor were actually dead, and the grants had been made to the person so entitled after the death of the person so encumbering the same. If any person playing at cards, dice, or other game, or betting, shall lose the value of 10*l.* at one time, to one or more persons, and shall pay the money, he may recover the money lost by action of debt within three months * afterwards; and if the loser do not sue, any other person may do it, and recover the same, and treble the value, with costs, one moiety to the prosecutor, and the other to the poor; and the person prosecuted shall answer upon oath, and not demur on preferring a bill to discover what sums he has won.

A bill in equity may be filed to discover the consideration of a promissory note or other security alleged to be given for money lost at play, to have it delivered up. 3 Anst. 684. But if money be lent to game with, it may be recovered back as money lent, though the bond, note, or other security given for it is void. 1 Burr. 1077.

Persons by fraud or ill practice in playing at cards or dice, or by bearing a share in the stakes, &c. or by betting, winning any sum above 10*l.* shall forfeit five times the value of the thing won, and suffer such infamous and corporal punishment, as in cases of wilful perjury, being convicted thereof on indictment or information; and the penalty shall be recovered by action, by such person as will sue for the same.—And if any one shall assault and beat, or challenge to fight any other person, on account of money won by gaming, upon conviction thereof, he shall forfeit all his goods, and suffer imprisonment for two years. Ibid.

Also by this statute, any two or more justices of peace, may cause such persons to be brought before them as they suspect to have no visible estates, &c. to maintain them; and if they do not make it appear that the principal part of their expences is got by other means than gaming, the justices shall require securities for their good behaviour for a twelvemonth; and in default of such security, commit them to prison until they find it: And playing or betting during the time, to the value of 20*s.* shall be deemed a breach of good behaviour, and a forfeiture of their recognisances. Ibid.

By 2 Geo. 2, c. 28, s. 9, where it shall be proved before any justice of peace, that any person hath used unlawful games contrary to the statute 33 Hen. 8. c. 9, the justice may commit such offender to prison, till he enter into a recognisance that he shall not from thenceforth, at any time to come, play at any unlawful game. And by 12 Geo. 2. c. 28, for better preventing excessive and deceitful gaming, the ace of hearts, faro, basset, and hazard, are declared to be lotteries by cards or dice; and persons setting up these games are liable to the penalty of 200*l.* And every person who shall be an adventurer, or play or stake therein, forfeits 50*l.* Likewise the sale of any house, plate, &c. in the way of lottery by cards, &c. is adjudged void, and the things to be forfeited to any person that will sue for the same. And by 13 Geo. 2. c. 19. The game of passage, and all other games with one or more dice, or any thing in that nature, having figures or numbers thereon, (back-gammon and games now played with those tables only excepted) shall be deemed games or lotteries by dice, within the 12 Geo. 2. c. 28. And such as keep any office or table for the said game, &c. or play thereat, are subject to the penalties in that act.

By 18 Geo. 2, cap. 34, playing at, or keeping any house or place for playing at the game of roulet, otherwise roly-poly, or any other game with cards or dice already prohibited, incurs the penalties in stat. 12 Geo. 2. c. 28. Persons losing 10*l.* and paying the same, may sue the winner, and recover the same.

* This restriction as to a demurrer applies only to where the bill is filed for a discovery on the part of the loser, or party aggrieved, and not to cases where there is an action by a common informer after the expiration of the three months, and such informer files a bill against the winner for a discovery of the money lost, it being contrary to the rules of the courts of equity to aid qui tam actions; and in such a case the defendant may consequently demur for want of equity. Holloway, qui tam, v. Ogden, Ed. MSS.

with costs. And on a bill in equity the court may decree the same to be paid. The persons who have jurisdiction to determine informations on the statutes against gaming may summon witnesses, who on refusing to appear and give evidence shall forfeit 50*l*. No privilege of parliament shall be allowed on prosecution for keeping a gaming-house.

Persons losing 10*l*. at one time, or 20*l*. in twenty-four hours, may be indicted and fined five times the value; and such offenders discovering others shall be discharged.

By 5 Geo. 2, c. 30, no bankrupt shall have any benefit under the acts relating to bankrupts who shall have lost at gaming 5*l*. in one day, or 100*l*. in one year before he became bankrupt. s. 12.

And by 30 Geo. 2, c. 24, persons licensed to sell liquors permitting (see 33 Hen. 8, c. 9, supra) journeymen, labourers, servants and apprentices to game in their houses, shall forfeit 40*s*. for the first offence, and for every subsequent offence 10*l*.

On complaint of such persons gaming in public houses, justices of peace are to issue warrants for apprehending them, who upon conviction forfeit not exceeding 20*s*. nor less than 5*s*. otherwise they shall be committed; and inhabitants of parishes may be witnesses.

These are the chief statutes against gaming in general. For other subjects of legislative restriction, see articles Horse-Races, Little Gons, and Lotteries.

But notwithstanding these restraining statutes, it seems that by the common law the playing at cards, with dice, or at any game not expressly prohibited, when practised innocently, and as a mere recreation, without any mad desire of winning or losing, is not at all unlawful, nor punishable as any offence whatsoever. 2 Vent. 175. 5 Mod. 13. Salk. 100. pl. 10.

However, common gaming-houses are common nuisances in the eye of the law, not only because they are great temptations to idleness, but as they draw together great numbers of disorderly persons to the disturbance of the neighbourhood. 1 Hawk. P. C. 198.

GANG-DAYS. See Rogation-Week.

GAOL DELIVERY, Commission of, is one of the commissions under which the judges sit at the assises, and empowers them to try and deliver every prisoner who shall be in the gaol when the judges arrive at the circuit town, wherever or before whomsoever indicted, or for whatever crime committed.

GAOL, is a prison, a strong place, or house for keeping of debtors, or criminal offenders against the laws. Bac. Abr.

And all prisons and gaols belong to the king, although the subject may have the custody or keeping of them. 2 Inst. 100.

And to this purpose by 5 Hen. 4, cap. 10, (which is only declaratory of the common law, 2 Inst. 73,) it is enacted that "none "shall be imprisoned by any justice of the "peace, but only in the common gaol, saving to lords and others, who have gaols, "their franchises in this case."

So by 11 & 12 Wil. 3, c. 10, all murderers and felons shall be imprisoned in the common gaol, and the sheriffs shall have the keeping of the gaol.

But the court of King's Bench may commit to any prison in the kingdom which they shall think most proper, and the offender so committed or condemned to imprisonment cannot be removed or bailed by any other court. Moor 666. pl. 913. 1 Sid. 145.

And by 14 Ed. 3, st. 1, c. 10, the sheriffs shall have the custody of the gaols, as before that time they were wont to have, (meaning the county gaols) and shall put in under keepers for whom they will answer. But by 22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 20, felons and prisoners for debt shall not be lodged together, but kept separate and in distinct rooms; and any one offending against any part of this act shall forfeit his office and treble damages to the party grieved.

GAOLER. A gaoler is the master or governor of a prison, and as such is considered as an officer relating to the administration of justice, and is so far under the protection of the law, that if a person threatens him for keeping a prisoner in safe custody, he may be indicted, and fined and imprisoned for it. 2 Roll. Abr. 76. And if in repelling force he commit homicide, it will be justifiable; and on the contrary if he is himself killed it will be murder in the party or parties slaying him.

By the 3 Geo. 1. cap. 15, none shall purchase the office of gaoler, or any other office pertaining to the high sheriff, under pain of 500*l*.

GARB, (garba, from the Fr. garbe, alias gerbe, i. e. fascis) a bundle or sheaf of corn. Chart. Forest. c. 7. Cowel. Blount.

GARBLE, to sever the dross and dust from spice, drugs, &c. thereby purifying and cleansing the good from the bad. Ibid.

GARBLER OF SPICES, an officer of antiquity in the city of London, who may enter into any shop, warehouse, &c. to view and search drugs and spices, and garble and make clean the same, or see that it be done. 21 Jac. 1, c. 19.

GARCIO, (Fr. garcon) a groom or servant. Cowel. Blount.

GARCIONES, servants who followed the camp. Ibid.

GARDEROBE, (Garderoba) a closet or small apartment, for hanging up clothes, being the same with wardrobe. 2 Inst. 255.

GARDIA, used by the feudists for custodia. Lib. Feud. 1. Cowel. Blount.

GARE, a coarse wool, full of staring hairs, such as grow about the shanks of sheep. 31 Ed. 3. cap. 8.

GARLANDA, a chaplet, coronet, or garland. Mat. Paris. Cowel. Blount.

GARNESTURA, victuals, arms, and other implements of war, necessary for the defence of a town or castle. Mat. Paris. Ann. 1250. Cowel. Blount.

GARNISH, to garnish the heir, signifies in law to warn the heir. Stat. 27 Eliz. cap. 3.

GARNISHMENT, (Fr. Garnement, from Garnir, i. e. instruere) in a legal sense intends a warning given to one for his appearance, for the better furnishing of the cause and court. Cromp. Juris. 211. F. N. B. 106.

GARNISHEE, is a third person or party in whose hands money is attached within the liberties of the city of London, by process out of the sheriff's court; so called, because he hath had garnishment or warning not to pay the money to the defendant, but to appear and answer to the plaintiff creditor's suit. Cowel. Blount. Vide Attachment.

GARNISTURE, a furnishing or providing. Ibid.

GARSUMMUNE, Gersuma, or Gersoma, a fine or amerciament. Ibid.

GARTER, KNIGHT OF, the first personal dignity after the peerage of the realm is a knight of the order of St. George, or of the Garter, first instituted by Ed. 3, A. D. 1344. Seld. tit. Hen. 2, 5, 41.

GARTH, from the ancient British word, a little back-side or close in the North of England, gardd signifying garden.

GARTHMAN. As there are fishgarths or wears for catching of fish, so there are garthmen. See 17 R. 2. cap. 9. The word is derived from the Scottish gart, which signifies enforced, or compelled; and fish are forced by the wear to pass in at a loop where they are taken.

GASTALDUS, a governor of the country, whose office was only temporary, and who had jurisdiction over the common people. Cowel. Blount.

GATE, at the end of the names of places, signifies a way or path. Ibid.

GAVELET, (gaveletum) was an ancient and special kind of cessavit used in Kent, where the custom of gavelkind yet prevails, whereby a tenant, if he withheld his rents and services due to the lord, was to forfeit his land when no distress could be found, or the tenant within a year and a day did not come and pay his rent. Fitz. Cess. 60. Terms de Ley.

Hence gaveletum was as much as to say to cease, or to let to pay the rent. Cowel. Blount.

GAVELET IN LONDON, (*breve de gavelet*o in London, pro redditu ibidem, quia tenementa fuerunt indistringibilia) a writ anciently used in the hustings of London, 10 Ed. 2, under which the parties, tenant and demandant, appear by scire facias, to show cause why the one should not have his tenement again on payment of his rent, or the other recover the lands, on default thereof. Practic. Solic. 419.

GAVELGELD, the payment of tribute or toll. Mon. Ang. tom. 3. Cowel. Blount.

GAVELKIND, supposed by Lambard, to be compounded of three Saxon words, gyfe, eal, kyn, omnibus cognatione proximis data, quasi give all kind, that is to each child his part; it signifies a tenure or custom, annexed and belonging to lands in Kent, not disgaveled by stat. whereby the lands of the father are equally divided at his death among all his sons; or the land of the brother among all the brethren if he have no issue of his own. Lit. 210.

All the lands in England, it is said, were of the nature of gavelkind before the Conquest, and descended to all the issue equally, but after the Conquest (as it is called) when knight-service was introduced, the descent was restrained to the eldest son for the preservation of the tenure. (Lamb. 167. 3 Salk. 129. 3 Bac. by Gwil. 360.) How this property was held unimpaired in tenure by the people of Kent is uncertain, but the distinguishing properties of this tenure, which also prevails in some other counties, are various, some of the principal are these: 1. The tenant is of age sufficient to alienе his estate by feoffment at the age of fifteen (Lamb. Peramb. 614). 2. The estate does not escheat in case of an attainder and execution for felony, their maxim being "the "father to the bough, the son to the plough." (Lamb. 634.) 3. In most places he had a power of devising lands by will, before the statute for that purpose was made (F. N. B. 198. Cro. Car. 561.). 4. The lands descend not to the eldest, youngest, or any one son only, but to all the sons together (Litt. s. 210.), which was indeed anciently the most usual course of descent all over England (Glanvil. l. 7. c. 3.); though in particular places particular customs prevailed. These among other properties distinguished this tenure in a most remarkable manner: and yet it is said to be only a species of a socage tenure, modified by the custom of the country; the lands being holden by suit of court and fealty, which is a service in its nature certain. (Wright, 211.) Wherefore, by a charter of king John, (Spelm. conl. vet. leg. 355.) Hubert archbishop of Canterbury was authorized to exchange the gavelkind tenures holden of the see of Canterbury into tenures by knight's-service; and by statute 31 Hen. 8. c. 3, for disgavelling the lands of divers lords and gentlemen in the county of Kent, they are directed to be descendible for the future like other lands, which were never holden by service of socage.

GAVELMED, an ancient duty or work of mowing grass, or cutting of meadow land, required by the lord. Ibid.

GAVELCESTER, (Sax.) Sextarius Vectigalis, an ancient measure of rent-ale. Ibid.

GAVEL-WERK, (Sax.) was either manus et persona opera, by the hands and person of the tenant, or carropera, by his carts or carriages. Ibid.

GAUGETUM, a gauge or gauging, done by the gauger; and the true English gauge is mentioned. Rot. Parl. 35. Ed. 1. Ibid.

GAUGER, (gaugeator, Fr. ganchir, i. e. in gyrum torquere) an officer anciently appointed by the king, to examine all tuns, pipes, hogsheads, barrels, &c. containing customable articles.

GEASPECIA. In a charter of the privileges of Newcastle upon Tyne, renewed anno 30 Eliz. we find durgiones, porpecias, i. e. (porpoises) delphinos, geaspecias, (viz. grampois,) &c. Cowel. Blount.

GEBURSCIP, (geburscipa) neighbourhood or adjoining district. Leg. Edw. Confes. cap. 1. Ibid.

GEBURUS, a country inhabitant of the same gebureship, or village; from the Sax. geboure, a carl, ploughman, or farmer. Cowel. Ibid.

GELD, (geldum) mulcta compensatio delicti & pretium rei, a mulct or fine, according to our ancient laws; thus wergeld was used for the value or price of a man slain; and arfgeld of a beast.

GELDABLE, (geldabilis) signified liable to pay tax or tribute.

GEMOTE, (Sax. i. e. conventus,) an assembly.

GENERAL ISSUE, is what is termed the general plea in an action at law, and it traverses, thwarts, and denies at once the whole declaration without offering any special matter whereby to evade it. As in trespass, either vi et armis, on the case, non culpabilis, not guilty—in debt upon contract, nil debet, he owes nothing—in debt on bond, non est factum, it is not his deed—on an assumpsit, non assumpsit, he made no such promise: or, in real actions, nul tort, no wrong done—nul disseisin, no disseisin; and in a writ of right the mise, or issue, is that the tenant has more right to hold than the demandant has to demand. These pleas are called the general issue, because by importing an absolute and general denial of what is alleged in the declaration they amount at once to an issue, by which a fact is affirmed on one side and denied on the other.

GENERALE, anciently the single commons or ordinary mess of students in the universities or inns of courts.

GENERATIO. On the splitting and dividing of ancient religious houses into different bodies, the sectarians were anciently classed under the denomination generatio.

GENTLEMAN (generosus). Under the denomination of gentlemen are comprised all above yeomen, who, according to the best heraldists, are those without any title bear a coat of arms, or whose ancestors have been freemen; and by the coat that a gentleman giveth he is known to be or not descended from those of his name that lived several hundred years since. Jacob as edited by Morgan.

GENTLEWOMAN, (generosa) is a good addition; and if a gentlewoman be named spinster it is said to be cause of abatement. 2 Inst. 668.

GENU, a generation. Cowel. Blount.

GENUS, (Latin) the general stock, extraction. Cowel. Blount.

GEORGE NOBLE, a piece of gold, current at six shillings and eight-pence, in the reign of king Hen. 8. Lownds's Ess. upon Coins, p. 41.

GESTU ET FAMA, an ancient writ where a person's good behaviour was impeached, now out of use. Lamb. Eiren. lib. 4. cap. 14. Cowel. Blount. See Good Abearance.

GEWINEDA, (Sax.) was used for the public convention of the people, to decide a cause: et pax quam aldermanus regis in quinque burgorum gewineda dabit emendatur. 12 libris. LL. Æthelred. cap. 1. Cowel. Blount.

GEWITNESSA, the giving of evidence. Leg. Ethel. cap. 1. apud Brompton.

GIFT. Gifts, or grants of chattels personal, are the act of transferring the right and the possession of them, whereby one man renounces, and another man immediately acquires, all title and interest therein, which may be done either in writing, or by word of mouth, attested by sufficient evidence, of which the delivery of possession is the strongest and most essential. But this conveyance, when merely voluntary, is somewhat suspicious, and is usually construed to be fraudulent, if creditors or others become sufferers thereby. And, particularly by stat. 3 Hen. 7. c. 4, all deeds of gift of goods made in trust for the use of the donor shall be void; because otherwise persons might be tempted to commit treason or felony, without danger of forfeiture, and the creditors of the donor might also be defrauded of their rights. And by statute 13 Eliz. c. 5, every grant or gift of chattels as well as lands, with an intent to defraud creditors or others, shall be void as against such persons to whom such fraud would be prejudicial; but as against the grantor himself shall stand good and effectual; and all persons partakers in or privy to such fraudulent grants shall forfeit the whole value of the goods, one moiety to the king, and another moiety to the party aggrieved; and also on conviction shall suffer imprisonment for half a year. Perk. s. 57. 3 Rep. 82. 2 Black. 441.

A true and proper gift or grant is always accompanied with delivery of seisin, and takes effect immediately: as if A gives to B 100*l.* or a flock of sheep, and puts him in possession of them directly, it is then a gift executed in the donee; and it is not in the donor's power to retract it, though he did it without any consideration or recompense: unless it be prejudicial to creditors; or the donor were under any legal incapacity, as infancy, coverture, duress, or the like; or if he were drawn in, circumvented, or imposed upon by false pretences, ebriety or surprise. But if the gift does not take effect by delivery of immediate possession, it is then not properly a gift, but a contract: and this a man cannot be compelled to perform but upon good and sufficient consideration. Jenk. 109. 2 Black, 441.

If a man sells goods and still continues in possession as visible owner, the sale is fraudulent, and void against creditors. 2 T. R. 596. But the sale or mortgage of a ship at sea is valid if the grand bill of sale be delivered to the vendee or mortgagee, and he takes possession the first opportunity after the ship arrives in port. 1 T. R. 462.

The conveyance by GIFT (donatio) is properly applied to the creation of an estate tail, as feoffment is to that of an estate in fee, and lease to that of an estate for life or years. It differs in nothing from a feoffment but in the nature of the estate passing by it, for the operative words of conveyance in this case are do or dedi. West, Symb. 256. And gifts in tail are equally imperfect without livery of seisin, as feoffments in fee-simple. Lit. s. 59. And this is the only distinction that Littleton seems to take when he says, (s. 57,) "it is to be understood that there is feoffor and feoffee, donor and donee, lessor and lessee, viz. feoffor, as applied to a feoffment in fee-simple, donor, to a gift in tail, and lessor to a lease for life, or for years, or at will." 2 Black. 316. But gifts and grants which relate to the transferring of incorporeal hereditaments are said to be alike in nature, and therefore very frequently confounded. Wood's Inst. 260.

GIGMILLS, a kind of fulling-mills for fulling and burling of woollen cloth.

GILD, a fraternity or company.

GILDA MERCATORIA, a mercantile meeting or assembly. 10 Rep. 30. 1 Rol. Abr. 513. 1 Black. 473.

GISARMS, or GUISARMES, an halbert or hand-ax. Cowel. Blount.

GIST OF ACTION, (from the Fr. gist,) is the particular point on which the action lies; the very ground and foundation thereof, without which it is not maintainable. 5 Mod. Rep. 305.

GLADIOLUM, a little sword, or dagger; also a kind of sedge. Mat. Paris. 1005. Cowel. Blount.

GLADIUS. Jus gladii, is mentioned in our Latin authors, and the Norman laws, and it signifies a supreme jurisdiction. Camd. And it is said that from hence at the creation of an earl he is gladio succinctus, to signify that he had a jurisdiction over the county of which he was made earl. Ibid.

GLAIRE, (Fr.) a sword, lance, or horseman's staff. Gleyre was one of the weapons allowed the contending parties in a trial by combat. Orig. Jurisd. 79.

GLASS-MEN, are reckoned amongst wandering rogues and vagrants, by the old statutes. 39 Eliz. c. 17, and 1 Jac. 1. c. 7. Cowel. Blount.

GLAVEA, an hand-dart. Blount.

GLEANING. It was formerly considered that by the common law and custom of England, the poor are allowed to enter and glean upon another's ground, after the harvest, without being guilty of trespass; (Gilb. Ev. 253. Trials per Pais c. 15. p. 458.) 3 Black. Com. 212, 213.

But in a recent case in the court of common pleas it has been decided (Gould, J. dis.) that a right to glean in the harvest field cannot be claimed by any person at common law; and to set it up as a common law right would be opening a tempting door to fraud and idleness, the point having never been recognized by any judicial determinations. 1 Hen. Black. Rep. 51. 63.

GLEBE, (gleba) is church-land; and most commonly taken for the land belonging to a parish church, besides the tithes. Wood's Inst. 163.

GLEBARIÆ, turfs dug out of the ground. Cowel. Blount.

GLOMERELIS, commissaries appointed to determine differences between scholars of a school or university, and the townsmen of the place.

GLOVE-SILVER, money customarily given to servants to buy them gloves, as an encouragement for their labours. Glove money has been also applied to extraordinary rewards given to officers of courts, &c. It is now given on the circuits, by the barristers, to the judge's crier. Cowel. Blount.

GLYN, a valley, according to the book of Domesday. Ibid.

GO. This word is sometimes used in a special signification, as to go without day, is to be dismissed the court; so in old phrase, to go to God. Broke. Kitch. 190.

GOATS, no man may common goats within the forest without especial warrant. Cowel. Blount.

GOD-BOTE, (Sax.) an ecclesiastical or church fine, paid for crimes and offences committed against God. Ibid.

GOD-GILD, that which is offered to God, or his service. Sax. Ibid.

GOD AND RELIGION, offences against. See APOSTACY and HERESY.

GOLDA, a mine, according to Blount.

GOLD and SILVER LACE. See MANUFACTURES.

GOLDSMITHS. See Manufacturers.

GOLDWIT, or GOLDWICH, supposed to be a golden mulct; in the records of the Tower there is mention of consuetudo vocata Goldwith vel Goldwich. Cowel. Blount.

GOLIARDUS, is a jester or buffoon, mentioned in Matt. Paris. 1229. Cowel. Blount.

GOOD ABEARANCE, (Bonus Gestus) This security consists in being bound with one or more sureties in a recognizance or obligation to the king, entered on record, and taken in some court, or by some judicial officer, whereby the parties acknowledge themselves to be indebted to the crown in the sum required (for instance 1000*l.*) on condition to be void and of none effect if the party shall appear in court on such a day, and in the mean time shall keep the peace, either generally towards the king, and all his liege people, or particularly also with regard to the person who craves the security: or, if it be for the good behaviour, then on condition that he shall demean and behave himself well, (or be of good behaviour,) either generally or specially, for the time therein limited, as for one or more years, or for life. This recognizance, if taken by a justice of the peace, must be certified to the next sessions, in pursuance of the statute 3 Hen. 7. c. 1, and if the condition of such recognizance be broken, by any breach of the peace in the one case, or any misbehaviour in the other, the recognizance becomes forfeited or absolute; and being estreated or extracted (taken out from among the other records) and sent up to the exchequer, the party and his sureties having now become the king's absolute debtors, are sued for the several sums in which they are respectively bound. 4 Black. 253.

Any justices of the peace, by virtue of their commission, or those who are ex officio conservators of the peace, may demand such security according to their own discretion; or it may be granted at the request of any subject, upon due cause shewn, provided such demandant be under the king's protection; for which reason it has been formerly doubted, whether jews, pagans, or persons convicted of a præmunire, were entitled thereto. (1 Hawk. P. C. 126.) Or, if the justice is averse to act, it may be granted by a mandatory writ, called a supplicavit, issuing out of the court of king's bench or chancery; which will compel the justice to act, as a ministerial and not as a judicial officer: and he must make a return to such writ, specifying his compliance, under his hand and seal. (F. N. B, 80. 2 P. Wms. 202.) But this writ is seldom used: for, when application is made to the superior courts, they usually take the recognizances there, under the directions of the statute 21 Jac. 1 c. 8. And indeed a peer or peeress cannot be bound over in any other place, than the courts of king's bench or chancery: though a justice of the peace has a power to require sureties of any other person being compos mentis and under the degree of nobility, whether he be a fellow justice or other magistrate, or whether he be merely a private man. (1 Hawk. P. C. 127.) Wives may demand it against their husbands, or husbands, if necessary, against their wives. (2 Stra. 1207.) But feme coverts, and infants under age, ought to find security by their friends only, and not to be bound themselves; for they are incapable of engaging themselves to answer any debt, which is the nature of these recognizances or acknowledgments. 4 Black. 254.

A recognizance may be discharged either by the demise of the king, to whom the recognizance is made, or by the death of the principal party bound thereby, if not before forfeited; or by order of the court to which such recognizance is certified by the justices, (as the quarter-sessions, assises, or king's bench,) if they see sufficient cause: or in case he at whose request it was granted, if granted upon a private account, will release it, or does not make his appearance to pray that it may be continued. 1 Hawk. P. C. 129.

Thus far what has been said is applicable to both species of recognizances for the peace and for the good behaviour, de pace, et legalitate, tuenda, as expressed in the laws of k. Edw. But as these two species of securities are in some respects different, especially as to the cause of granting, or the means of forfeiting them, they must now be considered separately; FIRST, for what cause such a recognizance, with sureties for the peace, is grantable, and then how it may be forfeited. 4 Black. 254.

1. Any justice of the peace may ex officio, bind all those to keep the peace who in his presence make any affray, or threaten to kill or beat another, or contend together with hot and angry words; or go about with unusual weapons or attendance, to the terror of the people; and all such as he knows to be common barrators, and such as are brought before him by the constable for a breach of the peace in his presence; and all such persons as having been before bound to the peace have broken it and forfeited their recognizances. Also, wherever any private man hath just cause to fear that another will burn his house, or do him a corporal injury, by killing, imprisoning, or beating him: or that he will procure others so to do; he may demand surety of the peace against such person; and every justice of the peace is bound to grant it, if he who demands it will make oath, that he is actually under fear of death or bodily harm; and will show that he has just cause to be so, by reason of the other's menaces, attempts, or having lain in wait for him; and will also further swear, that he does not require such surety out of malice or for mere vexation. This is called swearing the peace against another: and, if the party does not find such sureties, as the justice in his discretion shall require, he may immediately be committed till he does. 1 Hawk. P. C. 126, 127, 128.

2. Such recognizance for keeping the peace, when given, may be forfeited by any actual violence, or even an assault, or menace, to the person of him who demanded it, if it be a special recognizance, or if the recognizance be general, by any unlawful action whatsoever, that either is or tends to a breach of the peace, or more particularly by any one of the many species of offences which are crimes against the public peace, such as tumultuous assemblies, and the like, or by any private violence committed against any of his majesty's subjects. But a bare trespass upon the lands or goods of another, which is a ground for a civil action, unless accompanied with a wilful breach of the peace, is no forfeiture of the recognizance. 2 Hawk. 131. Neither are mere reproachful words, as calling a man knave or liar, any breach of the peace so as to forfeit one's recognizance, (being looked upon to be merely the effect of unmeaning heat and passion,) unless they amount to a challenge to fight. 2 Hawk. 130. 4 Black. 255.

The species of recognizance with sureties for the good abearance, or good behaviour, includes security for the peace, and somewhat more. Lamb. Eiren. lib. 4, c. 2.

First, the justices are empowered by the statute 34 Edw. 3. c. 1, to bind over to the good behaviour towards the king and his people, all them that be not of good fame, wherever they be found; to the intent that the people be not troubled nor endamaged, nor the peace diminished, nor merchants and others, passing by the highways of the realm, be disturbed nor put in the peril which may happen by such offenders. Under the general words of this expression, "that be not of good fame," it is holden that a man may be bound to his good behaviour for causes of scandal, contra bonos mores, as well as contra pacem; as, for haunting bawdy-houses with women of bad fame, or for keeping such women in his own house; or for words tending to scandalise the government, or in abuse of the officers of justice, especially in the execution of their office. Thus, also a justice may bind over all night-walkers, eavesdroppers, such as keep suspicious company, or are reported to be pilferers, or robbers; such as sleep in the day, and wake in the night; common drunkards, whoremasters; the putative fathers of bastards; cheats; idle vagabonds, and other persons, whose misbehaviour may reasonably bring them within the general words of the statute, as persons not of good fame: an expression, it must be owned, of so great a latitude, as leaves much to be determined by the discretion of the magistrate himself. But, if he commits a man for want of sureties, he must express the cause thereof with convenient certainty; and take care that such cause be a good one. 1 Hawk. P. C. 132. 4 Black. 256.

2. A recognizance for the good behaviour may be forfeited by all the same means, as one for the security of the peace may be; and also by some others. As, by going armed with unusual attendance, to the terror of the people; by speaking words tending to sedition, or by committing any of those acts of misbehaviour which the recognizance was intended to prevent, but not by barely giving fresh cause of suspicion of that which perhaps never may happen. 1 Hawk. P. C. 133. For though it is just to compel suspected persons to give security to the public against misbehaviour that is apprehended, yet it would be hard upon such suspicion, without the proof of any actual crime, to punish them by a forfeiture of their recognizance. 4 Black. 257.

GOOD BEHAVIOUR, surety for the good behaviour is surety for the peace, and differs very little from good abearing.

GOOD CONSIDERATION. A deed must be founded upon good and sufficient consideration. Not upon an usurious contract, (Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 8,) nor upon fraud or collusion, either to deceive purchasers bona fide, (Stat. 27 Eliz. c. 4,) or just and lawful creditors; (Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 5,) any of which bad considerations will vacate the deed, and subject such persons, as put the same in ure to forfeitures, and often to imprisonment. A deed also, or other grant, made without any consideration, is, as it were, of no effect; for it is construed to enure, or to be effectual, only to the use of the grantor himself *.

* This seems to be only true of a bargain and sale: for "herein it is said to differ "from a gift, that this may be without any "consideration or cause at all; and that "hath always some meritorious cause mov-"ing it, and cannot be without it."—Shep. Touch. 221. But otherwise a voluntary conveyance is good both in law and equity. Tr. of Eq. b. 1. c. 5. s. 2. And if after a voluntary grant of lands, the party make another conveyance of them for a valuable consideration, the first grant is not void with regard to this purchaser under the 27 Eliz. c. 4. For there must be some (Perk. s. 533.) The consideration may be either a good or a valuable one. A good consideration is such as that of blood, or of natural love and affection, when a man grants an estate to a near relation; being founded on motives of generosity, prudence, and natural duty; a valuable consideration is such as money, marriage, or the like which the law esteems an equivalent given for the grant; (3 Rep. 83,) and is therefore founded in motives of justice. And deeds upon good consideration only, are considered as merely voluntary, and are frequently set aside in favour of creditors, and bona fide purchasers. 2 Black. 296.

GOVERNMENT. The political writers of antiquity will not allow more than three regular forms of government:

I. When the sovereign power is lodged in an aggregate assembly consisting of all the free members of a community, which is called a DEMOCRACY:

II. When it is lodged in a council, composed of select members, and then it is styled an ARISTOCRACY:

III. When it is intrusted in the hands of a single person, and then it takes the name of a MONARCHY.

All other species of government, they say, are either corruptions of, or reducible to, these three. 1 Black. 48.

By the sovereign power, is meant the power of making of laws; for wherever that power resides, all others must conform to, and be directed by it, whatever appearance the outward form and administration of the government may put on. For it is at any time in the option of the legislature to alter that form and administration by a new edict or rule, and to put the execution of the laws into whatever hands it pleases; by constituting one, or a few, or many executive magistrates: and all the other powers of the state must obey the legislative power in the discharge of their several functions, or else the constitution is at an end.

In a democracy, where the right of making laws resides in the people at large, public virtue, or goodness of intention, is according to Blackstone, more likely to be found, than in either of the other qualities of government, for although popular assemblies are frequently foolish in their contrivance, and weak in their execution; yet they generally mean to do the thing that is right and just, and have always a degree of patriotism or public spirit. 1 Black. 49.

This, with all deference to the opinion of the late learned commentator, is an hypothesis not supported by historical facts: the annals of the world, from the most early period of time, down to the present, show that in all republics there have been constantly great diversities and distraction of opinion in their councils, and too frequently private and personal animosities introduced into their deliberations; added to which it is seen that too often in these popular assemblies the majority of the legislators are led away from acts of sound state policy by the specious rhetoric and eloquence of a few factious and interested demagogues; it does not therefore seem perfectly clear that this eulogy on, and marked preference to a democratic form of government by the learned commentator can be well supported; for the happiness and welfare of a nation must solely depend on the virtue, integrity, and sound policy of those to whom the powers of legislation are committed; and it appears to be going too far to insinuate that an aristocracy or a monarchy cannot be wholly virtuous and incorrupt.

In aristocracies, Blackstone observes, there is more wisdom to be found* than in the other frames of government, being composed, or intended to be composed, of the most experienced citizens; but there is less ho-circumstance of fraud to vacate the first conveyance, the want of consideration alone not being sufficient. Comp. 705.

But if a person is indebted at the time of making a voluntary grant, or becomes so soon afterwards, it will be considered fraudulent and void with respect to creditors under the 13 Eliz. c. 5.

And if a person makes a voluntary grant, and afterwards becomes bankrupt, whether he was indebted or not at the time, it will be void by 1 Jac. 1, c. 15, and the estate granted may be conveyed by the commissioners to the assignees for the benefit of the creditors. 1 Atk. 93. See FRAUDS.

* How can this intellectual superiority be admitted to prevail in aristocratic more than in popular or democratic assemblies?

nesty than in a republic *, and less strength than in a monarchy. 1 Black. 49.

A monarchy is indeed the most powerful of any, for by the entire conjunction of the legislative and executive powers all the sinews of government are knit together and united in the hands of the prince; but then there is imminent danger of his employing that strength to improvident or oppressive purposes †. 1 Black. 49.

These three species of governments, as Blackstone observes, have all of them their several perfections and imperfections. Democracies are usually the best calculated to direct the end of a law; aristocracies to invent the means by which that end shall be obtained; and monarchies to carry those means into execution. 1 Black. 50.

Happily for us of this island, (according to the opinion of Cicero, "esse optime constitutam "rempublicam, quæ ex tribus generibus illis, "regali, optimo, et populari, sit modice con-" fusa," (a mixed government, founded out of them all, and partaking of the advantages of each) which Tacitus treated as a visionary whim, and one that if effected could never be lasting or secure, "Cunctus na-" tiones et urbes populus aut primores aut singuli " regunt: delecta ex his et constituta reipub-" licæ forma laudari facilius quam evenire, vel " si evenit, haud diuturna esse potest." Ann. lib. 4, the British constitution must long continue a standing exception to the truth of this observation. 1 Black. 59.

With us the legislature of the kingdom is intrusted to three distinct powers, entirely independent of each other; FIRST, the king; SECONDLY, the lords spiritual and temporal, which is an aristocratical assembly of persons selected for their piety, their birth, their wisdom, their valour, or their property; and, THIRDLY, the house of commons, freely chosen by the people from among themselves, which makes it a kind of democracy; as this aggregate body, actuated by different springs, and attentive to different interests, composes the British parliament, and has the supreme disposal of every thing, there can no inconvenience be attempted by either of the three branches but will be withstood by one of the other two; each branch being armed with a negative power sufficient to repel any innovation which it shall think inexpedient or dangerous. 2 Black. 57.

Here then is lodged the sovereignty of the British constitution, and lodged as beneficially as is possible for society. For in no other shape could we be so certain of finding the three great qualities of government so well and so happily united. If the supreme power were lodged in any one of the three branches separately, we must be exposed to the inconveniencies of either absolute monarchy, aristocracy, or democracy; and so want two of the three principal ingredients of good policy, either virtue, wisdom, or power. If it were lodged in any two of the branches; for instance, in the king and house of lords; our laws might be prudently made, and well executed, but they might not always have the good of the people in view: if lodged in the king and commons, we should want that circumspection and mediatory caution, which the wisdom of the peers is to afford: if the supreme rights of legislature were lodged in the two houses only, and the king had no negative upon their proceedings, they might be tempted to encroach upon the royal prerogative, or perhaps to abolish the kingly office, and thereby weaken (if not totally destroy) the strength of the executive power. But the constitutional government of this island is so admirably tempered and compounded, that nothing can endanger or hurt it but destroying the equilibrium of power between one branch of the legislature and the rest. For if ever it should happen that the independence of any one of the three should be lost, or that it should become subservient to the views of either of the other two, there would soon be an end of our constitution. The legislature would be changed from that, which (upon the supposition of an original contract, either actual or implied) is presumed to have been originally set up by the general consent and fundamental act of the society; and such a change, however effected, is at once an entire dissolution of the bands of government; and the people are thereby reduced to a state of anarchy, with liberty to constitute to themselves a new legislative power. 1 Black. 51, 52.

GOVERNMENT, CONTEMPT AGAINST. Contempts and misprisions against the king's person and government may be by speaking or writing against them, cursing or wishing him ill; giving out scandalous stories concerning him, or doing any thing that may tend to lessen him in the esteem of his subjects, may weaken his government, or may raise jealousies between him and his people. It has been also held an offence of this species to drink to the pious memory of a traitor; or for a clergyman to absolve persons at the gallows who then persist in the treasons for which they die, these being acts which impliedly encourage rebellion. 4 Black. 123.

For this species of contempt a man may not only be fined and imprisoned, but suf-

* This is nothing more than a broad and unsupported assertion; for surely it behoves every government in order to preserve its existence, to be at least as honest as a republic.

for the pillory, or other infamous corporal punishment. 1 Hawk. P. C. 62.

GRACE. Acts of parliament for a general and free pardon are called acts of grace.

GRADUATES, (graduati) scholars who have taken degrees in an university. 1 H. 6. c. 3. Cowel. Blount.

GRAFFER, (Fr. greffier, i. e. Scriba, a notary or scrivener, used in the stat. 5 H. 8. c. 1. Ibid.

GRAFFIO, GRAVIO, a landgrave, or earl. Ibid.

GRAFFIUM, a writing-book, register, or cartulary of deeds and evidences. Ibid.

GRAIL, (gradale, or graduale) a gradual, or book, containing some of the offices of the Roman church. Ibid.

GRAIN, the twenty-fourth part of a penny weight, also any kind of corn sown on the ground. Ibid.

GRAND ASSISE, a peculiar species of trial by jury, giving the tenant or defendant in a writ of right his election or choice of the form of a trial by battle or by a jury. 3 Black. 341.

GRAND CAPE, is a writ on plea of land, where the tenant makes default in appearance at the day given, for the king to take the land into his hands, &c. See Cape Magnum. Cowel. Blount.

GRAND DAYS, are those days in the Terms which are solemnly kept in the Inns of Court and Chancery, i. e. Candlemas day in Hilary term, Ascension day in Easter term, St. John the Baptist day in Trinity term, and all Saints day in Michaelmas term; which days are Dies non Juridici, or no days in court.

GRAND DISTRESS, in real actions lies in two cases, either when the tenant or defendant is attached, and does not appear, but makes default; or where the tenant has once appeared, and after makes default. Cowel. Blount.

GRAND JURY. For the purpose of receiving indictments, or written accusations of one or more persons, for crimes or misdemeanors, which may be preferred to a grand jury, the sheriff of every county is bound to return to every session of the peace, and every commission of oyer and terminer, and of general gaol delivery, twenty-four good and lawful men of the county, some out of every hundred, to inquire, present, do, and execute all those things which on the part of our lord the king shall then and there be commanded them (4 Black. 301.). They ought to be freeholders, but to what amount is uncertain; which seems to be casus omissus, and as proper to be supplied by the legislature as the qualifications of the petit jury; which were formerly equally vague and uncertain, but are now settled by several acts of parliament. However, they are usually gentlemen of the best figure in the county. As many as appear upon this panel are sworn upon the grand jury, to the amount of twelve at least, and not more than twenty-three, that twelve may be a majority.

This grand jury are previously instructed in the articles of their inquiry by a charge from the judge who presides upon the bench. They then withdraw to sit and receive indictments, which are preferred to them in the name of the king, but at the suit of any private prosecutor; and they are only to hear evidence on behalf of the prosecution; for the finding of an indictment is only in the nature of an inquiry or accusation, which is afterwards to be tried and determined; and the grand jury are only to inquire upon their oaths, whether there be sufficient cause to call upon the party to answer it. A grand jury however ought to be thoroughly persuaded of the truth of an indictment, so far as their evidence goes, and not to rest satisfied merely with remote probabilities, a doctrine that might be applied to very oppressive purposes. 4 Black. 302.

And the grand jury ought never to be assisted by the depositions taken before the magistrate, except where these depositions can be read in evidence to the petit jury. Denby's Case, Leach, 580.

The grand jury are sworn to inquire only for the body of the county, pro corpore comitatus, and therefore they cannot regularly inquire of a fact done out of that county for which they are sworn, unless particularly enabled by act of parliament. 4 Black. 302.

When the grand jury have heard the evidence, if they think it a groundless accusation, they used formerly to endorse on the back of the bill, "ignoramus;" or, we know nothing of it; insinuating, that though the facts might possibly be true, that truth did not appear to them: but now, they assert in English, more absolutely "not a true bill;" or (which is the better way) "not found," and then the party is discharged without further answer. But a fresh bill may afterwards be preferred to a subsequent grand jury. If they are satisfied of the truth of the accusation, they then endorse upon it, "a true bill;" anciently, "billa vera." The indictment is then said to be found, and the party stands indicted. But to find a bill there must at least twelve of the jury agree; for so tender is the law of England of the lives of the subjects that no man can be convicted at the suit of the king of any capital offence unless by the unanimous voice of twenty-four of his equals and neighbours, that is, by twelve at least of the grand jury, in the first place assenting to the accusation; and afterwards by the whole petit jury of twelve more, finding him guilty upon his trial. But if twelve of the grand jury assent, it is a good presentment, though some of the rest disagree. (2 Hal. P. C. 161.) And the indictment, when so found, is publicly delivered into court. 4 Black. 305.

A grand juror disclosing to any one indicted, the evidence that appeared against him, is guilty of a high misprision, and liable to be fined and imprisoned. 1 Hawk. P. C. 59. 4 Black. 126, 299.

GRAND SERJEANTRY, (i.e. per magnum servitium) a tenure whereby the tenant was bound instead of serving the king generally in his wars, to do some special honorary service to the king in person; as to carry his banner, his sword, or the like; or to be his butler, champion, or other office at his coronation. Lit. s. 153.

It was in most other respects like knight service, only he was not bound to pay aid or escuage. 2 Inst. Ibid. s. 158. 2 Inst. 233. and when tenant by knight service, paid five pounds for a relief on every knight's fee; tenant by grand serjeantry paid one year's value of his land, were it much or less. Lit. s. 158, 154.

Tenants by cornage, which was to wind a horn when the Scots or other enemies entered the land, in order to warn the king's subjects, was (like other services of the same nature) a species of grand serjeantry. 4 Inst. 192. But this tenure, with all others of a military nature, have been long since abolished by stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24.

GRANGE, (granges, Latin, from granium) a great farm which hath barns, stables, stalls, and other places, laid up for agricultural purposes.

GRANGEARIUS, was the person who had the care of such a farm or place. Fleta, lib. 2. cap. 8. Cowel. Blount.

GRANT, (concessio) signifies, in the common law, a conveyance in writing of incorporeal hereditaments not lying in livery, and which cannot pass by word only; as of reversions, advowsons in gross, tithes, rents, services, common in gross, &c. Co. Lit. 172. 3 Rep. 63. These, therefore, pass merely by the delivery of the deed; and he that granteth is termed the grantor; he to whom the grant is made, is the grantee. West. Symb. 254. And in seignories or reversions of lands, such grant, together with the attornment of the tenant (while attornments were necessary) were held to be of equal notoriety with, and therefore equivalent to a feoffment, and livery of lands in immediate possession: it therefore differs but little from a feoffment, except in its subject matter, for the operative words used therein, commonly used are dedi et concessi, "have given and granted." 2 Black. 317.

GRANTS OF THE KING. The king's grants are matters of public record. These grants whether of lands, honours, liberties, functions, or aught besides are contained in charters, or letters patent, that is of our letters literæ patentes: literally so called, because they are not sealed up, but exposed to public view with the great seal pendant at the bottom; and are usually directed or addressed by the king to all his subjects at large, and therein they differ from certain other grants of the king, sealed also with his great seal, but directed to particular persons, and for particular purposes which therefore not being proper for inspection, are closed up and sealed on the outside, and are thereupon called writs close (literæ clausæ) and are recorded in the close rolls in the same manner as the others are in the patent rolls. 2 Black. 346.

Grants or letters patent must first pass by bill: which is prepared by the attorney and solicitor general, in consequence of a warrant from the crown; and is then signed at the top, with the king's own sign manual, and sealed with his privy signet, which is always in the custody of the principal secretary of state; and then sometimes it immediately passes under the great seal, in which case the patent is subscribed in these words, "per ipsum regem," by the king himself. 9 Rep. 18. Otherwise the course is to carry an extract of the bill to the keeper of the privy seal, who makes out a writ or warrant thereupon to the chancery, so that the sign manual is the warrant to the privy seal, and the privy seal is the warrant to the great seal; and in this last case the patent is subscribed, "per breve de privato sigillo," by writ of privy seal. 9 Rep. 18.

But there are some grants which only pass through certain offices, as the admiralty or treasury, in consequence of a sign manual, without the confirmation of either the signet, the great, or the privy seal. 2 Black. 346.

The manner of granting by the king does not more differ from that by a subject, than the construction of his grants when made. 1. A grant made by the king, at the suit of the grantee, shall be taken most beneficially for the king, and against the party, whereas the grant of a subject is construed most strongly against the grantor. Wherefore it is usual to insert in the king's grants, that they are made, not at the suit of the grantee, but "ex speciali gratiæ, certa scientia, et mero motu regis;" and then they have a more liberal construction. 1 Finch. L. 100. 10 Rep. 112. 2. A subject's grant shall be construed to include many things, besides what are expressed, if necessary for the operation of the grant. Therefore, in a private grant of the profits of land for one year, free ingress, egress, and regress, to cut and carry away those profits, are also inclusively granted. Co. Litt. 56. And if a feoffment of land was made by a lord to his villein, this operated as a manumission. Litt. § 206. For he was otherwise unable to hold it. But the king's grant shall not enure to any other intent, than that which is precisely expressed in the grant. As, if he grants land to an alien, it operates nothing; for such grant shall not also enure to make him a denizen, that so he may be capable of taking by grant. (Bro. Abr. tit. Patent. 62. Finch. L. 110). 3. When it appears, from the face of the grant, that the king is mistaken or deceived, either in matter of fact or matter of law, as in case of false suggestion, misinformation, or misrecital of former grants; or if his own title to the thing granted be different from what he supposes, or if the grant be informal, or if he grants an estate contrary to the rules of law; in any of these cases the grant is absolutely void. Freem. 172. For instance, if the king grants lands to one and his heirs male, this is merely void; for it shall not be an estate tail, because there want words of procreation, to ascertain the body out of which the heirs shall issue, neither is it a fee-simple as in common grants it would be; because it may reasonably be supposed, that the king meant to give no more than an estate tail: Finch 101, 102. The grantee is therefore (if any thing) nothing more than tenant at will. (Bro. Abr. tit. Estates, 34, tit. Patents 104. Dyer. 270. Dav. 45).

GUARD, (Fr. Garde, Lat. Custodia) A custody or care of defence.

GUARDIAN AND WARD, the guardian is a temporary parent of the ward, for so long time as the ward is an infant, or under age.

Of the several species of guardians, the first are guardians by nature, viz the father and (in some cases) the mother of the child. For if an estate be left to an infant, the father is by common law the guardian, and must account to his child for the profits. (Co. Litt. 88). But an executor is not justified in paying to the father a legacy left to the child; and if he pays it to the father, and the father becomes insolvent, he may be compelled to pay it over again. (1 P. Wms. 285. Co. Litt. 88). And, with regard to daughters, it seems by construction of the statute, 4 & 5 Ph. & Mar. c. 8. that the father might by deed or will assign a guardian to any woman child under the age of sixteen; and, if none be so assigned, the mother shall in this case be guardian. (3 Rep. 39). There are also guardians for nurture, (Co. Litt. 88); which are, of course the father or mother, till the infant attains the age of fourteen years, (Moor. 738. 3 Rep. 38); and in default of father or mother, the ordinary usually assigns some discreet person to take care of the infant's personal estate, and to provide for his maintenance and education. (2 Jones 90. 2 Lev. 163). Next are guardians in socage, who are also called guardians by the common law. These take place only when the minor is entitled to some estate in lands, and then by the common law the guardianship devolves upon his next of kin, to whom the inheritance cannot possibly descend; as where the estate descended from his father, in this case his uncle by the mother's side, cannot possibly inherit this estate, and therefore shall be the guardian. (Litt. § 123). For the law judges it improper to trust the person of an infant in his hands, who may by possibility become heir to him; that there may be no temptation nor even suspicion of temptation for him to abuse his trust. Nunquam custodia alicujus de jure alicui remanet, de quo haberetur suspicio, quod possit vel velit aliquod jus in ipsa haereditate clamare. (Glanv. l. 7, c. 11.

These guardians in socage, like those for nurture, continued only till the minor is fourteen years of age; for, then in both cases, he is presumed to have discretion, so far as to choose his own guardian. This he may do, unless one be appointed by the father, by virtue of the statute 12 Car. 2. c. 24, which considering the imbecility of judgment in children of the age of fourteen, and the abolition of guardianship in chivalry (which lasted till the age of twenty-one), enacts, that any father, under age or of full age, may by deed or will dispose of the custody of his child, either born or unborn, to any person except a popish recusant, either in possession or reversion, till such child attains the age of one and twenty years.* These are called guardians by statute, or testamentary guardians. There are also special guardians by custom of London, and other places, (Co. Litt. 88), but they are particular exceptions, and do not fall under the general law. 1 Black. 462.

The power and reciprocal duty of a guardian and ward are the same pro tempore, as that of a father and child; added to which that the guardian, when the ward comes of age, is bound to give him an account of all that he has transacted on his behalf, and must answer for all losses by his wilful default or negligence. In order therefore to prevent disagreeable contests with young gentlemen, it has become a practice for many guardians of large estates especially, to indemnify themselves by applying to the court of chancery, acting under its direction, and accounting annually before the officers of that court. For the lord chancellor is, by right derived from the crown, the general and supreme guardian of all infants, as well as idiots and lunatics; that is, of all such persons as have not discretion enough to manage their own concerns. In case therefore any guardian abuses his trust, the court will check and punish him; nay sometimes will proceed to the removal of him, and appoint another in his stead. (1 Sid. 424. 1 P. Will. 703. 1 Black. 462).

As to the ward or person within age, for whose assistance and support these guardians are constituted by law; or who it is that is said to be within age. The ages of male and female are different for different purposes. A male at twelve years old may take the oath of allegiance; at fourteen is at years of discretion, and therefore may consent or disagree to marriage, may choose his guardian, and if his discretion be actually proved, may make his testament of his personal estate; at seventeen may be an executor; and at twenty-one is at his own disposal, and may alien his lands, goods, and chattels. A female also

* By this statute, the father may dispose of the guardianship of any child unmarried under the age of twenty-one, by deed or will executed in the presence of two or more witnesses, till such child attains the age of twenty-one, or for any less time. And the guardian so appointed has the tuition of the ward, and the management of his estate and property.

A father cannot appoint guardians under this statute to a natural child; but where he has named guardians by his will to an illegitimate child, the court of chancery will appoint the same persons guardians without any reference to a master for his approbation. 2 Bro. 583.

at seven years of age may be betrothed, or given in marriage; at nine is entitled to dower; at twelve is at years of maturity and therefore may consent or disagree to marriage; and, if proved to have sufficient discretion may bequeath her personal estate; at fourteen is at years of legal discretion, and may choose a guardian; at seventeen may be executrix, and at twenty-one may dispose of herself and her lands. So that full age in male or female is twenty-one years, which age is completed on the day preceding the anniversary of a person's birth, who till that time is an infant, and so stiled in law. 1 Black. 462,3.

And if an infant be born on the 1st of January, he is of age to do any legal act on the morning of the last day of December, though he may not have lived twenty-one years by nearly forty-eight hours; for in law there is no fraction of a day, and if the birth was on the first second of one day, and the act on the last second of the other, then twenty-one years would be complete; and in the law it is the same whether a thing be done upon one moment of the day or on another. Christian's N. on 1 Black. 463,4.

It is here also proper to notice that upon the abolition of the court of wards, the care which the crown was bound to take as guardian of its unprovided for infant tenants, was totally extinguished in every feodal view, but resulted to the king in his court of chancery, together with the general protection of all other infants in the kingdom. 3 Black. 426.

When therefore a fatherless child has no other guardian, the court of chancery hath a right to appoint one, and from all proceedings relative thereto, an appeal lies to the house of lords. Ibid.

The court of exchequer can only appoint a guardian ad litem to manage the defence of the infant, if a suit be commenced against him, a power which is incident to every court of justice: but when the interest of a minor comes before the court judicially in the progress of a cause, or upon a bill for that purpose filed, either tribunal will indiscriminately take care of the property. 3 Black. 427.

GUNPOWDER. By 16 Car. 1. c. 21. all subjects may make and sell gunpowder, and to obtain an exclusive patent for the sole making or importation of gunpowder or arms, or to hinder others from importing them, is also a præmunire by 16 Car. c. 21. and 1 Jac. 2. c. 28.

But in general, it seems that erecting powder-mills or keeping magazines near a town, is a nuisance at common law, punishable by indictment or information. 2 Stra. 1169.

And to regulate the manufacture, conveyance, and keeping of this inflammable and dangerous commodity, an act has been passed, 12 Geo. 3. c. 61. in which it is enacted, that no new mill for gunpowder shall be erected without licence from the quarter sessions, and no pestle mill to be used, nor more than 40lb. of gunpowder to be made at a time under a single pair of stones, except at Battle, Crowhurst, Siddlecomb and Brede in Sussex, on pain of 2*s.* per 1lb. s. 1—5; nor more than 40lbs. to be dried at a time, s. 6.; no more than necessary kept in drying houses, and sufficient magazines of brick or stone to be appointed by the quarter sessions at a distance of fifty yards from the mills, on penalty of 25*s* a month. s. 7.

No dealer to keep more than 200lbs. at a time; nor any person not a dealer, more than 50lbs. in London or Westminster, or within three miles thereof, or within any other city, borough or market town, or one mile thereof, or within two miles of the king's palaces or magazines, or half a mile of any parish church, on pain of 2*s.* per lb. except in licensed mills, or to the amount of 500lbs. for the use of collieries and mines within 200 yards of them, s. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16; not more than twenty-five barrels to be conveyed by land, nor above 200 by water, unless going beyond sea or coastwise, each to contain not more than 100lbs. s. 17.; justices of peace may search mills, houses, carriages, &c. s. 23.

No ship (except in the king's service) is to have more than 25lbs. of gunpowder above Blackwall, on penalty of 2*s.* per lb. for all above, and the Trinity House officers may seize unlawful quantities, s. 24, 25.; and penalties may be recovered on prosecution within fourteen days. s. 26, 7.

The act does not extend to mills on the king's lands, or his storehouses, or the magazines at Barking, Creekmouth, and Erith Level, or those at Liverpool and Bristol, nor to powder carrying by the order of the Board of Ordnance, expressing the quantity and time, or with forces on their march, or militia, and any quantity may be carried in close decked-vessels below Blackwall. s. 29, 30.

H

HABEAS CORPORA JURATORUM, is a writ in C. B. for the bringing up a jury on the venire facias, for the trial of any cause brought to issue. Old Nat. Br. 157. And the habeas corpora juratorum in the court of C. B. serves for the same purpose as the distringas juratos in B. R. It commands the sheriff to have the jurors before the judges at such a day, to pass on the trial of certain parties, in such a cause, &c. Practis. Solic. 308, 309.

HABEAS CORPUS. Wherever a person is restrained of his liberty by being confined in a common gaol or by a private person, whether it be for a criminal or civil cause, he may regularly, by habeas corpus have his body and cause removed to some superior jurisdiction, which hath authority to examine the legality of such commitment, and on the return thereof, either bail, discharge or remand the prisoner. Vaughan 156. Bushel's case.

And it is at this day the most usual remedy to be relieved against a wrongful imprisonment. 3 Bac. Abr. tit. Hab. Corp. (A.)

The writs of habeas corpus are as follows:

I. The writ of habeas corpus AD SUBJICIENDUM, is that which issues in criminal cases, and is deemed a prerogative writ, which the king may issue to any place, as he has a right to be informed of the condition of the prisoner, and for what reasons he is confined: it is also in regard to the subject, the great and efficacious writ, in all manner of illegal confinement, and is directed to the person detaining another, commanding him to produce the body of the prisoner, with the day and cause of his caption and detention, ad faciendum, subjiciendum, et recipiendum, to do, submit to, and receive, whatsoever the judge or court awarding such writ shall consider in that behalf. This is a high prerogative writ, and therefore by the common law issues out of the court of king's bench, not only in term-time, but also during the vacation, by a fiat from the chief justice or any other of the judges, and runs into all parts of the king's dominions: for the king is at all times intitled to have an account, why the liberty of any of his subjects is restrained wherever that restraint may be inflicted.

If it issues in vacation, it is usually returnable before the judge himself who awarded it, and he proceeds by himself thereon; unless the term should intervene, and then it may be returned in court. Indeed, if the party were privileged in the courts of common pleas and exchequer, as being an officer or suitor of the court, an habeas corpus ad subjiciendum might also have been awarded from thence: and, if the cause of imprisonment were palpably illegal, they might have discharged him; but, if he were committed for any criminal matter, they could only have remanded him, or taken bail for his appearance in the court of king's bench (Carter 221. 2 Jon. 13.); which occasioned the common pleas to discountenance such applications. It hath also been said, and by very respectable authorities (4 Inst. 182. 2 Hal. P. C. 147.), that the like habeas corpus may issue out of the court of chancery in vacation; but, upon the famous application to lord Nottingham by Jenks, notwithstanding the most diligent searches, no precedent could be found where the chancellor (L. Nott. MSS. Rep. July 1676) had issued such a writ in vacation, and therefore his lordship refused it. 3 Black. 131, 2.

In the court of king's bench it was, and is still, necessary to apply for it by motion to the court (2 Mod. 306. 1 Lev. 1.), as in the case of all other prerogative writs (certiorari, prohibition, mandamus, &c.) which do not issue as of mere course, without shewing some probable cause why the extraordinary power of the crown is called in to the party's assistance. For, as was argued by lord chief justice Vaughan (Bushel's case. 2 Jon. 13.) "it is granted on motion, because it cannot be had of course; and there is therefore, no necessity to grant it; for the court ought to be satisfied that the party hath a probable cause to be delivered." And this seems the more reasonable, because (when once granted) the person to whom it is directed can return no satisfactory excuse for not bringing up the body of the prisoner. (Cro. Jac. 543.) So that, if it issued of mere course, without shewing to the court or judge some reasonable ground for awarding it, a traitor or felon under sentence of death, a soldier or mariner in the king's service, a wife, a child, a relation, or a domestic, confined for insanity, or other prudential reasons, might obtain a temporary enlargement by suing out an habeas corpus, though sure to be remanded as soon as brought up to the court. And therefore sir Edward Coke, when chief justice, did not scruple in 13 Jac. 1. to deny a habeas corpus to one confined by the court of admiralty for piracy; there appearing, upon his own shewing, sufficient grounds to confine him (3 Bulstr. 27. See also 2 Roll. Rep. 138.) On the other hand, if a probable ground be shewn, that the party is imprisoned without just cause (2 Inst. 615.), and therefore hath a right to be delivered, the writ of habeas corpus is then a writ of right, which "may not be denied, but ought to be granted to every man that is committed, or detained in prison, or otherwise restrained, though it be by the command of the king, the privy council, or any other (Com. Journ. Apr. 1628.)" 3 Black. 133.

The personal liberty of the subject is a natural inherent right, which cannot be surrendered or forfeited, unless by the commission of some great and atrocious crime, nor ought to be abridged in any case without the special permission of law. This doctrine is co-eval with the first rudiments of the English constitution; and handed down to us from our Saxon ancestors. notwithstanding all their struggles with the Danes, and the violence of the Norman conquest: asserted afterwards and confirmed by the conqueror himself and his descendants: and though sometimes a little impaired by the ferocity of the times, and the occasional despotism of jealous or usurping princes, yet established on the firmest basis by the provisions of magna charta, and a long succession of statutes enacted under Edward III. To assert an absolute exemption from imprisonment in all cases, is inconsistent with every idea of law and political society; and, in the end, would destroy all civil liberty, by rendering its protection impossible: but the glory of the English law consists in clearly defining the times, the causes, and the extent, when, wherefore, and to what degree, the imprisonment of the subject may be lawful. This induces an absolute necessity of expressing upon every commitment the reason for which it is made: that the court upon an habeas corpus may examine into its validity; and, according to the circumstances of the case, may discharge, admit to bail, or remand the prisoner. 3 Black. 133.

And yet, early in the reign of Cha. I. the court of king's bench, relying on some arbitrary precedents, (and those perhaps misunderstood) determined (State Tr. vii. 136.) that they could not upon an habeas corpus either bail or deliver a prisoner, though committed without any cause assigned, in case he was committed by the special command of the king, or by the lords of the privy council. This drew on a parliamentary inquiry, and produced the petition of right, 3 Car. 1. which recites this illegal judgment, and enacts, that no freeman hereafter shall be so imprisoned or detained. But when, in the following year, Mr. Selden and others were committed by the lords of the council, in pursuance of his majesty's special command, under a general charge of "notable contempts, and stirring up sedition against the king and government," the judges delayed for two terms (including also the long vacation) to deliver an opinion how far such a charge was bailable. And, when at length they agreed that it was, they however annexed a condition of finding sureties for the good behaviour, which still protracted their imprisonment; the chief justice, sir Nicholas Hyde, at the same time declaring (State Tr. vii. 240.), that "if they were again remanded for that cause, perhaps the court would not afterwards grant a habeas corpus, being already made acquainted with the cause of the imprisonment." But this was heard with indignation and astonishment by every lawyer present; according to Mr. Selden's own account of the matter, whose resentment was not cooled at the distance of four-and-twenty years. Mare Clausum ed. 1653. 3 Black. 134.

These pitiful evasions gave rise to the statute 16 Car. 1. c. 10. sect. 8. whereby it was enacted, that if any person be committed by the king himself in person, or by his privy council, or by any of the members thereof, he shall have granted unto him, without any delay upon any pretence whatsoever, a writ of habeas corpus, upon demand or motion made to the court of king's bench or common pleas; who shall thereupon, within three court days after the return is made, examine and determine the legality of such commitment, and do what to justice shall appertain, in delivering, bailing, or remanding such prisoner. Yet still in the case of Jenks, before alluded to, who in 1676 was committed by the king in council for a turbulent speech at Guildhall (State Tr. vii. 471.), new shifts and devices were made use of to prevent his enlargement by law; the chief justice (as well as the chancellor) declining to award a writ of habeas corpus ad subjiciendum in vacation, though at last he thought proper to award the usual writs ad deliberandum, &c. whereby the prisoner was discharged at the Old Bailey. Other abuses had also crept into daily practice, which had in some measure defeated the benefit of this great constitutional remedy. The party imprisoning was at liberty to delay his obedience to the first writ, and might wait till a second and a third, called an alias and a pluries, were issued, before he produced the party; and many other vexatious shifts were practised to detain state-prisoners in custody. But whoever will attentively consider the English history, may observe, that the flagrant abuse of any power, by the crown or its ministers, has always been productive of a struggle; which either discovers the exercise of that power to be contrary to law, or (if legal) restrains it for the future. This was the case in the present instance. The oppression of an obscure individual gave birth to the famous habeas corpus act, 31 Car. 2. c. 2. which is frequently considered as another magna carta of the kingdom; and, by consequence, has also in subsequent times reduced the method of proceeding on these writs (though not within the reach of that statute, but issuing merely at the common law) to the true standard of law and liberty.

The statute itself enacts, 1. That the writ shall be returned and the prisoner brought up, within a limited time, according to the distance, not exceeding in any case twenty days. 2. That such writs shall be indorsed, as granted in pursuance of this act, and signed by the person awarding them. 3. That on complaint and request in writing by or on behalf of any person committed and charged with any crime (unless committed for treason or felony expressed in the warrant, or for suspicion of the same, or as accessary thereto before the fact, or convicted or charged in execution by legal process) the lord chancellor, or any of the twelve judges, in vacation, upon viewing a copy of the warrant, or affidavit that a copy is denied, shall (unless the party has neglected for two terms to apply to any court for his enlargement) award a habeas corpus for such prisoner, returnable immediately before himself or any other of the judges: and upon the return made shall discharge the party, if bailable, upon giving security to appear and answer to the accusation in the proper court of judicature. 4. That officers and keepers neglecting to make due returns, or not delivering to the prisoner or his agent within six hours after demand a copy of the warrant of commitment, or shifting the custody of a prisoner from one to another, without sufficient reason or authority (specified in the act) shall for the first offence forfeit 100*l.* and for the second offence 200*l.* to the party grieved, and be disabled to hold his office. 5. That no person, once delivered by habeas corpus, shall be re-committed for the same offence, on penalty of 500*l*. 6. That every person committed for treason or felony shall, if he requires it the first week of the next term, or the first day of the next session of oyer and terminer, be indicted in that term or session, or else admitted to bail; unless the king's witnesses cannot be produced at that time: and if acquitted, or if not indicted and tried in the second term or session, he shall be discharged from his imprisonment for such imputed offence: but that no person, after the assizes shall be opened for the county in which he is detained, shall be removed by habeas corpus, till after the assizes are ended; but shall be left to the justice of the judges of assize. 7. That any such prisoner may move for and obtain his habeas corpus, as well out of the chancery or exchequer, as out of the king's bench or common pleas; and the lord chancellor, or judges denying the same, on sight of the warrant or oath that the same is refused, forfeit severally to the party grieved, the sum of 500*l*. 8. That this writ of habeas corpus shall run into the counties palatine, cinque ports, and other privileged places, and the islands of Jersey and Guernsey. 9. That no inhabitant of England (except persons contracting, or convicts praying to be transported; or having committed some capital offence in the place to which they are sent) shall be sent prisoner to Scotland, Ireland, Jersey, Guernsey, or any places beyond the seas, within or without the king's dominions: on pain that the party committing, his advisers, aiders, and assistants, shall forfeit to the party grieved a sum not less than 500*l*. to be recovered with treble costs; shall be disabled to bear any office of trust or profit; shall incur the penalties of præmunire; and shall be incapable of the king's pardon.

This is the substance of that great and important statute: which extends only to the case of commitments for such criminal charge, as can produce no inconvenience to public justice by a temporary enlargement of the prisoner; all other cases of unjust imprisonment being left to the habeas corpus at common law. But even upon writs at the common law it is now expected by the court, agreeable to antient precedents (4 Burr. 856), and the spirit of the act of parliament, that the writ should be immediately obeyed, without waiting for any alias or pluries; otherwise an attachment will issue. By which admirable regulations, judicial as well as parliamentary, the remedy is now complete for removing the injury of unjust and illegal confinement. A remedy the more necessary, because the oppression does not always arise from the ill-nature, but sometimes from the mere inattention of government. For it frequently happens in foreign countries, (and has happened in England during temporary suspensions of the statute) that persons apprehended upon suspicion have suffered long imprisonment, merely because they were forgotten. 3 Black. 138.

II. The common writ of habeas corpus ad faciendum et recipiendum, issues out of any of the courts at Westminster-hall, when a person is sued in some inferior jurisdiction, and is desirous to remove the action into the superior court, commanding the inferior judges to produce the body of the defendant, together with the day and cause of his caption and detainer, (whence the writ is frequently denominated an habeas corpus cum causa) to do and receive whatsoever the king's court shall consider in that behalf. This is a writ grantable of common right, without any motion in court (2 Mod. 306), and it instantly supersedes all proceedings in the court below. But, in order to prevent the surreptitious discharge of prisoners, it is ordered by statute 1 & 2 Phil. & Mar. c. 13. that no habeas corpus shall issue to remove any prisoner out of any goal, unless signed by some judge of the court out of which it is awarded. And, to avoid vexatious delays by removal of frivolous causes, it is enacted by statute 21 Jac. 1. c. 23. that, where the judge of an inferior court of record is a barrister of three years standing, no cause shall be removed from thence by habeas corpus, or other writ, after issue or demurrer deliberately joined: that no cause, if once remanded to the inferior court by writ of procedendo, or otherwise, shall ever afterwards be again removed: and that no cause shall be removed at all, if the debt or damages laid in the declaration do not amount to the sum of 5*l*. But an expedient (Bohun instit. legal. 85. edit. 1708.) having been found out to elude the latter branch of the statute, by procuring a nominal plaintiff to bring another action for five pounds or upwards (and then by the course of the court the habeas corpus removed both actions together), it is therefore enacted by stat. 12 Geo. 1. c. 29. s. 3. that the inferior court may proceed in such actions as are under the value of 5*l*. notwithstanding other actions may be brought against the same defendant to a greater account.

And by 19 Geo. 3. c. 70. s. 6. no cause where the cause of action shall not amount to 10*l*. or upwards, shall be removed or removable into any superior court by any writ of habeas corpus or otherwise: unless the defendant shall enter into a recognizance to the plaintiff in the inferior court, with two sufficient sureties, in double the sum demanded for the payment of the debt and costs, in case judgment shall pass against him. The habeas corpus ad faciendum & recipiendum issues only in civil cases, and in this case the body is to be removed by habeas corpus, but the proceedings are by certiorari. 3 Bac. Abr. 2.

III. There is likewise a writ of habeas cor- pus ad respondendum, where a person is confined in gaol, for a cause of action accruing within some inferior court; and a third person hath also a cause of action against him; in which case he may have this writ in order to charge him in such superior court; for inferior courts being tied down to causes arising within their own jurisdiction, the party would be without remedy, unless allowed to sue him in another court; but it seems, that regularly a person confined in B. R. cannot be removed to the C. B. by this writ, nor vice versa; for in these cases there can be no defect of justice as these courts have conusance as well of local, as transitory actions. Dyer 197. a. 249. pl. 84, 296, 307. 1 Mod. 235. Style Pract. Regis. 330.

IV. There are also, beside these, other writs of habeas corpus, as a habeas corpus ad deliberandum & recipiendum, which lies to remove a person to the proper place or county, where he committed some criminal offence. 3 New. Abr. 2, 3.

V. There is also a writ of habeas corpus ad satisfaciendum after a judgment: and on this writ the attorney for the plaintiff must endorse the number roll of the judgment on the back of the writ. Style Regist. 331.

VI. Habeas corpus upon a cepi, where the party is taken in execution in the court below. So upon an attachment out of chancery, and a cepi corpus returned by the sheriff, the next step is a habeas corpus; for the sheriff having executed the command of the writ of attachment by taking the body, he cannot carry him out of the county without the king's writ.

VII. There is also a writ of habeas corpus ad testificandum, which is to remove a person in confinement, in order to give his testimony in some court of justice; for which vide Style 119, 126, 230. 3 Keb. 51. Comb. 17, 48.

And by 43 Geo. 3. c. 140. any judge at the courts of Westminster may award a writ of habeas corpus for bringing up prisoners for trial or examination upon courts martial, commissioners of bankrupts, commissioners for auditing the public accounts, or other commissioners acting under any commission or warrant from the king.

Of these several writs the most usual in practice are, 1. the habeas corpus ad subjiciendum: and 2. the habeas corpus ad faciendum & recipiendum.

HABENDUM ET TENENDUM, (to have and to hold) is an essential part of every deed or conveyance, and the office of the habendum is properly to determine what estate or interest is granted by the deed: though this may be performed, and sometimes is performed in the premises. In which case the habendum may lessen, enlarge, explain, or qualify, but not totally contradict or be repugnant to, the estate granted in the premises. As if a grant be "to A. and the "heirs of his body," in the premises, habendum "to him and his heirs for ever," or vice versa; here A has an estate-tail, and a fee simple expectant thereon (Co. Litt. 21. 2 Roll Rep. 19, 23. Cro. Jac. 476.) But, had it been in the premises "to him and his "heirs," habendum "to him for life," the habendum would be utterly void (2 Rep. 23. 8 Rep. 56.); for an estate of inheritance is vested in him before the habendum comes, and shall not afterwards be taken away, or devested by it. The tenendum "and to "hold," is now of very little use, and is only kept in by custom. It was formerly used to signify the tenure, by which the estate granted was to be holden; viz. "tenendum "per servitium militare, in burgagio, in libero "socagio, &c." But, all these being now reduced to free and common socage, the tenure is never specified. Before the statute of quia emptores, 18 Edw. 1. it was also sometimes used to denote the lord of whom the land should be holden: but that statute directing all future purchasors to hold, not of the immediate grantor, but of the chief lord of the fee, this use of the tenendum hath been also antiquated; though for a long time after we find it mentioned in ancient charters, that the tenements shall be holden de capitalibus dominis feodi; but as this expressed nothing more than the statute had already provided for, it gradually grew out of use.

HABENTIA, riches. Cowel. Blount.

HABERDASHERS, persons who sell small wares, as hats, ribbands, and the like. Bailey, 8 Eliz. c. 7.

HABERE FACIAS POSSESSIONEM, a judicial writ that lies where one hath recovered a term for years in action of ejectione firmæ, to put him into possession. F. N. B. 167. See Execute.

HAND-GUN, an engine to destroy game. See Game.

HANDY-WARP, a kind of cloth. Cowel. Blount.

HANGING, is the punishment inflicted for a capital offence by hanging the culprit by the neck till dead; and if upon judgment to be hanged by the neck till he is dead, the criminal be not thoroughly killed, but revives, the sheriff must hang him again, for the former hanging was no execution of the sentence, and if a false tenderness were to be indulged in such cases, a multitude of collusions might ensue. 4 Black. 376, 405, 6.

HANIG, a term for customary labour to be done and performed. Cowel. Blount.

HANKWIT alias HANGWITE, (from the Sax. hangan, i. e. suspendere, & wite mulcta) a liberty granted to a person, whereby he is quit of a felon, or thief hanged without judgment; or escaped out of custody. Cowel. Blount.

HANPER or HANAPER, (haniperium) the hanaper of the chancery. See Hanaper.

HANSE, an old Gothick word; signifies a society of merchants, for the good usage and safe passage of merchandize from one kingdom to another; hence the Hans Towns.

HANS TOWNS. Towards the middle of the thirteenth century, the nations around the Baltic were extremely barbarous, and infested that sea with their piracies: this obliged the cities of Lubeck and Hamburgh, soon after they began to open some trade with those people, to enter into a league of mutual defence. They derived such advantages from this union, that other towns acceded to their confederacy, and in a short time eighty of the most considerable cities scattered through those vast countries which stretch from the bottom of the Baltic to Cologne on the Rhine, joined in the famous Hanseatic league, which became so formidable, that its alliance was courted, and its enmity dreaded by the greatest monarchs. The members of this powerful association formed the first systematic plan of commerce, known in the middle ages, and conducted it by common laws enacted in their general assemblies.

HANTELODE, an arrest. Cowel. Blount.

HAP, (Fr. happer, i. e. rapere, to catch) is of the same signification with us as in the French; as to hap the rent, is where partition being made between two parceners, and more land allowed to one than the other, she that has most of the land charges it to the other, and she haps the rent, whereon assise is brought, &c. This word is used by Littleton, where a person happeth the possession of a deed poll. Lit. s. 8.

HAQUE, a little hand-gun. 33 H. 8. c. 6. and 2 & 3 Ed. 6. cap. 14.

HAQUEBUT, a bigger sort of hand-gun than the haque; from the Teuton. hoeck buyse. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 14. and 4 & 5 Ph. & Mar. c. 2.

HARATIUM, (from the Fr. haras) a race of horses and mares, kept for breed; in some parts of England termed a stud of mares; &c. Spelm. Gloss. Cowel. Blount.

HARBINGER, an officer of the king's house, &c. Ibid.

HARBOURS and HAVENS. By 1 Eliz. c. 11, and 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 11. s. 14. the crown is enabled by commission to ascertain the limits of all ports, and to assign proper wharfs and quays in each port, for the exclusive landing and loading of merchandize.

And by 46 Geo. 3. c. 153. no pier, quay, wharf, jetty breast, or embankment, shall be erected in or near to any public harbour, without giving one month's notice to the admiralty, on pain of 200*l.* to be recovered by action or information.

HARLOTS. See Disorderly Houses.

HARNESS, (Fr. harnisch) warlike instruments. Cowel. Blount.

HARO, HARRON, an outcry after felons and malefactors. Cowel. Blount.

HARPING-IRONS, are iron instruments for the striking and taking of whales.

HARRIERS, (hareti canes) small hounds, between the fox and beagle tribe, for hunting the hare.

HART, a stag, or male deer of the forest five years old compleat. Manwood, par. 2. cap. 4.

HASTA PORCI, a shield of brawn. Cowel. Blount.

HATCHES, dams made to prevent water issuing. And from a hatch, gate, or door, some houses situate on the highway, near a common gate, are called hatches.

HAUTHONER, (homo loricatus) a man armed with a coat of mail. Cowel. Blount.

HAWGH or HOWGH, a green plot in a valley, as used in the north of England. Ibid.

HAWKERS and PEDLARS. By 29 Geo. 3. c. 26. the following yearly duties shall be paid, viz. for every hawker 4*l.* and a further duty of 4*l.* for every horse or other beast of burthen. Ibid.

Every hawker selling goods by auction, shall forfeit 50*l.* Ibid.

Duty to be paid on taking out a licence, and the persons applying for licences, shall produce a certificate of good character from the minister and two householders of the place where they reside. Ibid.

Hawkers shall mark their packs, "Licensed Hawker" with the number of his licence; and unlicensed persons so marking their packs, shall forfeit 10*l*. Ibid.

Hawkers selling smuggled goods, &c. shall forfeit their licences, and be incapable of having a new licence ever after. Ibid.

Hawkers trading without such licence, or contrary thereto, or refusing to produce, or not having their licences to produce, shall forfeit 10*l*. Persons forging licences, or travelling with them, shall forfeit 100*l*. Persons lending licences, or trading with lent licences, shall forfeit 40*l*. each, and the lender his licence, and be incapable of a new one. Persons trading without licence or refusing to produce it, may be seized and carried before a magistrate, who may convict, &c. Peace officers neglecting their duty, shall forfeit 10*l*. Ibid.

No hawker shall expose any goods to sale in a city or market town, or within two miles thereof, on penalty of 10*l*. except on market or fair days. Hawkers vending goods in any city or town contrary to this act, shall be liable to the like penalties as unlicensed hawkers. Ibid.

Hawkers who were licensed on May 1, 1789, may set up any business where they are resident inhabitants, though not brought up thereto. Ibid.

No wholesale trader in English lace, in woollen, linen, silk, cotton, or mixed goods, or any other kind of British goods, shall be deemed a hawker. Ibid.

This act does not extend to the selling of newspapers, fish, fruits, or victuals, nor to the real workers or makers of British goods selling the same, nor to any travelling tinker, cooper, glazier, plumber, or harness-mender. Ibid.

Penalties above 20*l*. are to be recovered in the courts at Westminster; under before one justice, in which case an appeal is allowed to the quarter sessions. The penalties go, half to the crown and half to the informer. Ibid.

Witnesses neglecting or refusing to appear before a justice, on summons, are to forfeit 10*l*. Ibid.

By 35 Geo. 3. c. 91. the penalty inflicted by 29 Geo. 3. c. 26. on hawkers trading without a licence, or not producing it, may be levied by distress, and sale of the goods, and in the mean time, and until payment, the offender may be committed. s. 1.

HAY, haya, Fr. haye, a hedge or inclosure; also a net to take game. See Haia.

HAY-BOTE, a liberty to take thorns and other wood, to make and repair hedges, gates, fences, &c. either by tenant for life or years: it is also said to be wood, for the making of rakes and forks, with which men in summer make hay. 2 Black. 35.

HAYWARD, (from the Fr. haye, i. e. sepes, & garde, custodia) is an officer appointed in the lord's court: who is to look to the fields, and impound cattle that do trespass therein; to inspect that no pound breaches be made, and if any be, to present them at the leet, &c. Kitch. 46.

HAZARD, an unlawful game at dice. See Gaming.

HEADBOROW, or HEADBOROUGH, (from the Sax. head, caput, & borge, fidejussor) the head of the frank-pledge in boroughs; and as he was called headborow, so he was also stiled borowhead, borsholder, thirdborough, tithingman, &c. according to the usage and diversity of speech in several places. Lamb. These headborows were the chief of the ten pledges; the other nine being denominated handborows, or inferior pledges: headborows are now a kind of constables. 1 Black. 114, 115.

HEADLAND, is the upper part of ground left for the turning of the plough; whence the headway. Parock. Antiq. 587. Cowel. Blount.

HEAD-PENCE, an exaction of a certain sum heretofore collected by the sheriff of Northumberland; abolished by stat. 23 H. 6. c. 7. Cowel. Blount.

HEAD-SILVER, paid to lords of leets, &c. See Common Fine.

HEALFANG or HALSFANG, is compounded of two Saxon words, hals, i. e. collum, and fang, capere, and signifies that punishment, qua alicui collum stringatur, (collestrigium). Sometimes it is taken for a pecuniary mulct, to commute for standing in the pillory; payable to the king or chief lord. Leg. H. 1. cap. 11. Cowel. Blount.

HEALTH, (injuries to) injuries affecting a man's health, are where by any unwholesome practices of another, a man sustains any apparent damage in his vigour or constitution. As by selling him bad provisions or wine; (1 Rol. Abr. 90.) by the exercise of a noisome trade, which infects the air in his neighbourhood; (9 Rep. 57. Hutt. 135.) or by the neglect, or unskilful management of his physician, surgeon or apothecary. For it hath been solemnly resolved, that mala praxis is a great misdemeanor and offence at common law, whether it be for curiosity and experiment, or by neglect; because it breaks the trust which the party had placed in his physician, and tends to his destruction. Ld. Raym. 214. These are wrongs or injuries unaccompanied by force, for which there is a remedy in damages, by special action of trespass on the case. 3 Black. 122.

HEBBER-MEN, fishermen, or poachers below London Bridge, who fish for whitings, smelts, &c. commonly at ebbing water, mentioned in one of the articles of the Thames jury, at the court of the conservator of the river Thames, printed anno 1632. Cowel. Blount.

HEBBING-WEARS, wears or engines made or laid at ebbing water. Ibid.

HEBDOMAS, (Lat.) a week. Ibid.

HEBDOMADIUS, the week's man, canon or prebendary in the cathedral church, who hath the care of the choir, and the officers belonging to it, for his own week. Reg. Episc. Hereford. MS. Cowel. Blount.

HECK, the name of an engine to take fish in the river Ouse. 23 H. 8. c. 18. Cowel. Blount.

HECCAGIUM, rent paid to the lord of the fee for liberty to use the engines called hecks. Ibid.

HEDA, a small haven, wharf, or landing place. Domesd. Cowel. Blount.

HEDAGIUM, toll or customary duties paid at the hith or wharf, for the landing goods, &c. from which exemption was granted by the king to some particular persons and societies. Cartular. Abbat. de Radinges, MS. f. 7. Cowel. Blount.

HEDGE-BOTE, is necessary stuff to make hedges, which the lessee may of common right take. 2 Black. 35. See Estovers.

HEDGE-BREAKERS. See Trespass.

HEGIRA, a term in chronology, signifying the epocha, or account of time used by the Arabians and Turks; who begin their accounts from the day that Mahomet was forced to make his escape from the city of Mecca, which was on Friday, July 16, A. D. 622.

HEIR, (hæres, ab hæreditate) an heir saith my Lord Coke, in the legal understanding of the common law, is he ex justis nuptiis procreatus, who succeeds by descent to the lands, tenements and hereditaments, being an estate of inheritance. Co. Lit. 7. b. 3 Co. 12. b. And in general, without the word heir, no fee-simple can be created. Co. Lit. 9.

The several kinds of heirs are,

1. Heir apparent; 2. heir general; 3. heir special; 4. heir by custom; 5. heir by devise, called hæres factus.

1. Although no person can be heir until the death of his ancestor, according to the rule nemo est hæres viventis, yet in common parlance, he who stands nearest in degree of kindred to the ancestor, is called in his life time heir apparent. Co. Litt. 8. a.

2 Heir general. The heir general, or heir at common law is he who after his father or ancestor's death hath a right to, and is introduced into, all his lands, tenements and hereditaments. But he must be of the whole blood, not a bastard, alien, or the like. 3 Bac. Abr. Gw. Ed. 450.

The heir at law is bound by his ancestor's alienations and dispositions; and also by his covenants and obligations, so far as he has assets. Ibid. 451.

Also if the ancestor agrees to convey or sell lands, and receives part of the purchase money, but dies before a conveyance is executed, and a bill is brought against the heir, he will be decreed to convey, and the money shall go to the executor, especially if there are more debts due than the testator's personal estate is sufficient to pay. 2 Vern. 215. Abr. Eq. 265.

But in such case, the agreement must be by deed under seal, for the inheritance cannot be aliened or in any wise charged or incumbered by the ancestor, except it be by deed under seal.

And as the heir must otherwise be entitled by descent, the most ancient title by which lands can be acquired, it is a rule in law, that if a man devise lands to one who is his heir at law, the devise is void, and that the devisee and heir shall take by descent. Dyer. 54, 126. Style 148. 1 Nels. Abr. 645. 3 Lev. 127. 2 Danv. 557. 1 Lit. 593. 1 Salk 241.

3. Special heir, or issue in tail. The issue in tail claims per formam doni, and as the statute de donis preserves the estate to him, his ancestor cannot grant or alien, nor make any rightful estate of freehold to another, but for term of his own life. Lit. sect. 613. 3 Bac. Abr. Gw. Ed. 452.

4. Heir by custom. A custom in particular places varying the rules of descent at common law is good; such as the custom of gavel-kind, by which all the sons shall inherit, and make but one heir to their ancestor. Co. Litt. 140. Or borough-english, where the youngest son succeeds to the inheritance. 1 Mod. 102.

5. Heir by devise, or hæres factus, is only a devisee of lands, being made so by the will of the testator, and has no other right or interest than the will gives him. 3 Co. 42. a. 3 Bac. Abr. Gw. Ed. 452.

Where the ancestor binds himself and his heirs in an obligation, the obligee may sue his heir or executor, or administrator at his election, and may have execution of the land descended to the heir; for the common law having allowed the action of debt against the heir, he could have no benefit by the action unless he were permitted to have execution of the lands which descended to the heir. Plowd. 441. 3 Co. 12. a. Cro. Jac. 458.

But the body of the heir is protected, for it would be most unreasonable to subject the heir to the payment of his ancestor's debts, any further than the value of the assets descended. Dyer. 81, pl. 62.

By the common law if the heir before an action brought against him had aliened the assets, the obligor was without any remedy: but if he only aliened pending the writ, the lands which he had by descent at the time of the original purchased, were liable Co. Litt. 102. 3 Bac. Abr. Gw. Ed. 459.

But to prevent the wrong and injury to creditors by alienation of the lands descended, by stat. 3 and 4 Will. & Mar. c. 14, made perpetual by 6 & 7 Will. 3. c. 14, "if the "heir aliens before action brought, he "shall be liable to the value of the land." s. 5, 7.

Also if, before this statute, the ancestor had devised away the lands, a creditor by specialty had no remedy either against the heir or devisee. Abr. Eq. 149, but now by the said statute 3 & 4 Will. & Mar. c. 14, "creditors by specialty may have an action "of debt against the heir, and the devisee "of the debtor jointly, who shall be charge-"able for a false plea." s. 3, 6.

Also by 47 Geo. 3. sess. 2. c. 84, when "any trader within the meaning of the "bankrupt laws, shall die entitled to any "estate or interest in real estates, the same "shall be assets to be administered in equity "by the heir or devisee for the payment "of all his debts; but creditors by specialty "in which heirs are bound shall be first "paid." s. 1.

—— What shall be assets.] Whenever the ancestor binds himself and his heirs all his lands of freehold which descend in fee-simple, are assets by descent, and shall be liable as far as they extend to answer the ancestor's obligations. 3 Bac. Abr. Gw. Ed. 467.

But if a copyhold descends to the heir, this shall not be assets, because it is an inheritance created by custom. 4 Co. 22. a.

A reversion after a lease for years made by the ancestor is present assets, and so is a reversion expectant on the determination of an estate for life. 3 Bac. Abr. Gw. Ed. 468.

But a reversion in fee expectant upon an estate tail is not assets, because it is in the power of the tenant in tail to dock and bar it at his pleasure. Ibid.

By the statute of frauds and perjuries, (29 Car. 2. c. 3), "if lands pur autre vie come "to the heir by special occupancy they "shall be chargeable in his hands as assets "by descent; and if there be no special "occupant, shall go to the executors or "administrators of the party that had the "estate, and be assets in their hands." s. 12.

Also by the said statute, "when lands "are settled in trust, and descend in fee "to the heir of cestui que trust, the same "shall be assets in the same manner as "lands in possession, but no heir shall by "reason thereof become chargeable of his "own estate." s. 10, 11.

An equity of redemption of an inheritance is also assets in the hands of the heir. 3 Bac. Abr. Gw. Ed. 469.

But the personal estate of the ancestor shall in all cases be primarily applied in the discharge of his personal debts, and this although such personal debts be also secured by mortgage, and whether there be a bond or covenant for payment or not. 3 Bac. Abr. Gw. Ed. 85.

For the personal estate of the ancestor has had the benefit of the debt contracted, and the heir at law may therefore call upon the personal representatives in equity to pay the specialty and mortgage of the deceased in the first instance in preference to his other personal debts. 1 Ch. Cas. 74. 2 Ch. Cas. 5. 2 Salk. 449. 1 Vern. 37.

Goods and chattels annexed to the freehold go to the heir, and not to the executor or administrator, as the glass in a window, doors, locks, keys, bolts, coppers, furnaces, pictures, and glass used instead of wainscoat, mill-stones, and the like. Off. Ex. 86. 4 Co. 64. Com. Dig. tit. Ex. c. 4. 2 Vern. 508. 2 Ch. Cas. 156, 160. a.

HEIRESS, a female heir, and where there are several female children, they all take jointly, and are called co-heirs or co-heiresses, and it is the same where there is an only sister, or several sisters taking by inheritance from a deceased brother or sister. See Parceners.

—— Stealing of.] See Forcible Marriage.

HEIR-LOOMS are such goods and personal chattels, as contrary to the nature of chattels, shall go by special custom to the heir along with the inheritance, and not to the executor of the last proprietor. The termination loom, is of Saxon original; in which language it signifies a limb or member, (Spelm. Gloss. 277;) so that an heir-loom is nothing else, but a limb or member of the inheritance. They are generally such things as cannot be taken away without damaging or dismembering the freehold: otherwise the general rule is, that no chattel interest whatsoever shall go to the heir, notwithstanding it be expressly limited to a man and his heirs, but shall vest in the executor. Co. Litt. 388. Or if any chattel be given to a man and the heirs of his body, he takes the entire and absolute interest in it: it is true indeed, that there have been many fruitless attempts to make pictures, plate, books, and household furniture, descend to the heir with a family mansion; yet where they are left to be enjoyed as heir-looms by the persons who shall respectively be in possession of a certain house, or to descend as heir-looms as far as courts of law and equity will admit, the absolute interest of them, subject to the life interests of those who have life estates in the real property, will vest in that person who is entitled to the first estate tail or estate of inheritance, and upon his death that interest will pass to his personal representative. 1 Bro. 274. 3 Bro. 101.

But deer in a real authorized park, fishes in a pond, doves in a dove-house, &c. though in themselves personal chattels, yet they are so annexed to and so necessary to the well being of the inheritance, that they shall accompany the land wherever it vests, by either descent or purchase. (Co. Litt. 8.) For this reason also it is, that the antient jewels of the crown are held to be heir-looms, (Co. Litt. 18); for they are necessary to maintain the state, and support the dignity of the sovereign for the time being. Charters likewise, and deeds, court-rolls, and other evidences of the land, together with the chests in which they are contained, shall pass together with the land to the heir, in the nature of heir-looms, and shall not go to the executor. (Bro. Abr. tit. chatteles. 18). By special custom, also in some places, carriages, utensils, and other household implements, may be heir-looms, Co. Litt. 18, 185). But such custom must be strictly proved; on the other hand, by almost general custom whatever is strongly affixed to the freehold or inheritance, and cannot be severed from thence without violence or damage, "quod ab aedibus non facile revellitur," (Spelm. Gloss. 277); is become a member of the inheritance, and shall thereupon pass to the heir; as chimney pieces, pumps, old fixed or dormant tables, benches, and the like, (12 Mod. 520).

HELPING TO STOLEN GOODS. By 4 Geo. 1. c. 11, whoever shall take a reward under the pretence of helping any one to stolen goods, shall suffer as the felon who stole them: unless he causes such felon to be apprehended and brought to trial, and also gives evidence against him.

HELSING, a brass coin among the Saxons equivalent to our halfpenny. Cowel. Blount.

HELM, (Sax.) The bar by which the rudder of a ship or vessel is governed. Also the head of a still or alembic, because it is something like an helmet, an head piece or covering of armour for the head, hence in ancient times according to Crowe, helm sometimes called halm also signified thatch or straw, the common covering of tenements.

HOLOWE WALL, the holl-wall or end wall. Cowel. Blount.

HEMP. By 33 Hen. 8. c. 17, hemp or flax shall not be watered in any running stream or common pond under pain of 40s.

By 15 Car. 2. c. 15, any person, native or foreigner, may freely exercise the trade of dressing and using hemp, flax, or make tapestry hangings, twine, nets or cordage, and after three years shall have the privilege of natural born subjects.

HENCHMAN, according to Cowel and Blount seems to have been a running footman attendant upon persons of honour or worship.

HENED PENNY, a customary payment of money instead of hens at Christmas. Cowel. Blount.

HENGHEN, (Sax. hengen) a prison, gaol, or house of correction. Cowel. Blount.

HENGWITE. See Hangwite.

HEERDFESTE. The master of a family. Cowel. Blount.

HEORDPENNY. See Peterpence.

HEPTARCHY, (Sax.) The kingdom of England was formerly, under the Saxons, divided into an heptarchy, consisting of seven independent kingdoms peopled and governed by different clans and colonies; these were all reduced into one kingdom, by Egbert king of the West Saxons in the year 827 or 828, Egbert is therefore stiled the first king of England.

HERALD, (heraud, heralt, Fr. heraldo, Span. herold, Teut). An officer at arms, Verstegan derives it from here, Sax. an army, and held a champion, Teut. but Minsevus takes it from hierholden to put an end to, because they are sent to bring wars to an end, and to proclaim future peace. It is the duty of this officer to denounce war, to proclaim peace, or to be employed by the king in martial messages; they are judges and examiners of gentlemen's coats of arms, and conservators of genealogies, and they marshal the solemnities at the coronation of kings, and funerals of princes and other great men. Cowel. Blount.

The chief of these are called kings at arms, of which garter is the principal, first instituted by Henry V. to attend the knights of the garter, and marshal the funerals of the nobility, Clarencieux or Clarentius first ordained by Ed. VI. to marshal the funerals of the lesser nobility, knights and esquires throughout the realm, south of the Trent is the second; and Norroy quasi North Roy, to do the like on the north side of the Trent is the third. Ibid.

Besides the kings at arms there are eight inferior heralds, viz. York, Lancaster, Chester, Windsor, Richmond, Somerset, Hanover, Gloucester; and to the superior and inferior heralds, are added four others called. Marshals or Pursuivants at arms who succeed the heralds who die, and they are blue mantle, rouge cross, red dragon, and portcullis. Ibid.

The ancient heralds have been made a corporation or college under the earl marshal of England. 3 Black. 105.

HERBAGE, the green pasture and natural produce or the earth, from which cattle are sustained.

HERBAGIUM ANTERIUS, the first crop of grass of hay in opposition to latter math or after grass. Cowel. Blount.

HERBERRY or HERBURY, an inn. Ibid.

HERBINGER or HARBINGER, (herberger, Teut.) an officer of the court, who provides lodgings in a prince's progress; also an innkeeper. Cowel. Blount. Bailey. — Hence herbergagium, lodgings to receive guests in the way of hospitality; herbergatus, spent in an inn; and herbergare to harbour, to entertain. Cowel.

HERCE, (hercia) an harrow, Fleta. lib. 2. c. 77, also a candlestick in the shape of a harrow, containing many candles anciently placed at the head of a cenotaph. Cowel. Blount. Hence also herciare from the French hercer to harrow. 4 Inst, 270.

HERDWICH or HERDWIT, a grange or place for cattle and husbandry. Cowel. Blount.

HERDWERCH, HEORDWERCH, herdsman's work, or customary labours done by shepherds, herdsmen, and other inferior tenants at the will of their lord. Ibid.

HEREBANNUM, (Sax. here exercitus & ban. ædictum mulcta) a mulct for not going armed into the field when called forth. Spelm. Cowel. Blount.

HEREBOTE, (Sax. here exercitus and bode a messenger) the king's edict commanding his subjects into the field. Ibid.

HEREDITAMENTS. An hereditament is of the largest and most comprehensive expression, for it includes not only lands and tenements, but whatsoever may be inherited, be it corporeal or incorporeal, real, personal, or mixed. Thus an heir-loom, or implement of furniture which by custom descends to the heir, together with an house, is neither land nor tenement, but a mere moveable; yet, being inheritable, is comprized under the general word hereditament: and so a condition, the benefit of which may descend to a man from his ancestor, is also an hereditament. 1 Inst. 4. 3 Rep. 4. 2 Black. 17.

Hereditaments are of two kinds, corporeal and incorporeal. Corporeal consist of such as affect the senses: such as may be seen and handled by the body; incorporeal are not the object of sensation, can neither be seen nor handled, are creatures of the mind, and exist only in contemplation. 2 Black. 17.

Corporeal hereditaments consist wholly of substantial and permanent objects; all which may be comprehended under the general denomination of land only. For land, says sir Edward Coke, 1 Inst. 4; comprehendeth in its legal signification any ground, soil, or earth whatsoever; as arable, meadows, pastures, woods, moors, waters, marshes, furzes, and heath. It legally includeth also all castles, houses, and other buildings: for they consist, saith he, of two things; land which is the foundation and structure thereupon: so that, if I convey the land or ground, the structure or building passeth therewith. It is observable that water is here mentioned as a species of land, which may seem a kind of solecism; but such is the language of the law, and therefore I cannot bring an action to recover possession of a pool or other piece of water by the name of water only, either by calculating its capacity, as for so many cubical yards; or by superficial measure, for twenty acres of water: or by general description, as for a pond, a watercourse, or a rivulet; but I must bring my action for the land that lies at the bottom, and must call it twenty acres of land covered with water, Brownl. 142. For water is a moveable wandering thing, and must of necessity continue common by the law of nature; so that I can only have a temporary, transient, usufructuary, property therein: wherefore, if a body of water runs out of my pond into another man's, I have no right to reclaim it. But the land, which that water covers, is permanent, fixed, and immoveable; and therefore in this I may have a certain substantial property, of which the law will take notice, and not of the other. 2 Black. 18.

Land hath also, in its legal signification, an indefinite extent, upwards as well as downwards. Cujus est solum, ejus est usque ad coelum, is the maxim of the law, upwards; therefore no man may erect any building, or the like, to overhang another's land: and downwards, whatever is in a direct line, between the surface of any land, and the center of the earth, belongs to the owner of the surface; as is every day's experience in the mining countries: so that the word "land" includes not only the face of the earth, but every thing under it or over it. And therefore, if a man grants all his lands, he grants thereby all his mines of metal and other fossils, his woods, his waters, and his houses, as well as his fields and meadows. Not but the particular names of the things are equally sufficient to pass them, except in the instance of water, by a grant of which, nothing passes but a right of fishing; but the capital distinction is this, that by the name of a castle, messuage, toft, croft, or the like, nothing else will pass, except what falls with the utmost propriety under the term made use of, but by the name of land, which is nomen generalissimum, every thing terrestrial will pass. Co. Litt. 4. Ibid. 4, 5, 6. 2 Black. 19. So also by the name of a castle, one or more manors may be conveyed; and é converso by the name of a manor, a castle may pass. 1 Inst. 5. 2 Inst. 31.

——— Incorporeal hereditament is a right issuing out of a thing corporate (whether real or personal) or concerning or annexed to, or exercisable within, the same. (Co. Litt. 19, 20). It is not the thing corporeal itself, which may consist in lands, houses, jewels, or the like; but something collateral thereto, as a rent issuing out of those lands or houses, or an office relating to those jewels. In short, as the logicians speak, corporeal hereditaments are the substance, which may be always seen, always handled, incorporeal hereditaments are but a sort of accidents, which inhere in and are supported by that substance; and may belong, or not belong to it, without any visible alteration therein. Their existence is merely in idea and abstracted contemplation, though their effects and profits may be frequently objects of our bodily senses. And indeed, if we would fix a clear notion of an incorporeal hereditament, we must be careful not to confound together the profits produced, and the thing or hereditament which produces them. An annuity, for instance, is an incorporeal hereditament, for though the money, which is the fruit or product of this annuity, is doubtless of a corporeal nature, yet the annuity itself, which produces that money, is a thing invisible, has only a mental existence, and cannot be delivered over from hand to hand. So tithes, if we consider the produce of them as the tenth sheaf or tenth lamb, seem to be completely corporeal; yet they are indeed incorporeal hereditaments; for they, being merely a contingent springing right collateral to and issuing out of lands, can never be the object of sense; that casual share of the annual increase is not till severed, capable of being shewn to the eye, nor of being delivered into bodily possession. 2 Black. 20.

These incorporeal hereditaments are principally of ten sorts; 1. Advowsons; 2. Tithes; 3. Commons; 4. Ways; 5. Offices; 6. Dignities; 7. Franchises; 8. Corodies, or Pensions; 9. Annuities; and 10. Rents, which see under their proper titles.

HEREDITARY REVENUE. See King.

HEREFARE, (Sax.) a military expedition or going to warfare. Cowel. Blount.

HEREGILD, (Sax.) a tribute or tax levied for the maintenance of an army. Ibid.

HERELLUS, a sort of little fish, either the minow or gudgeon. Ibid.

HEREMITORIUM, a solitary place of retirement for hermits. Ibid.

HERENACH, an archdeacon. Ibid.

HEREMENES or HEREFEAMS, one who followed an army of rebels. Ibid.

HERESLITA, or HERESSA, or HERESIZ, (Sax. from here exercitus and sliten, to depart, 4 Co. Inst. 128.) a hired soldier that departed without licence. Cowel. Blount.

HERESY, (hæresis) is an offence, which consists not in a total denial of Christianity, but of some of its essential doctrines, publicly and obstinately avowed; being defined by sir Matthew Hale, "sententia rerum divinarum humano sensu excogitata, palam docta et pertinaciter defensa (1 Hal. P. C. 384.)" And here it must also be acknowledged that particular modes of belief or unbelief, not tending to overturn christianity itself, or to sap the foundations of morality, are by no means the object of coercion by the civil magistrate. What doctrines shall therefore be adjudged heresy, was left by our old constitution to the determination of the ecclesiastical judge, who had herein a most arbitrary latitude allowed him. For the general definition of an heretic given by Lyndewood (cap. de haereticis), extends to the smallest deviations from the doctrines of holy church, "haereticus est qui dubitat de fide catholica, et qui negligit servare ea, quæ Romana ecclesia statuit, seu servare decreverat." Or, as the statute 2 Hen. 4. c. 15. expresses it in English, "teachers of erroneous opinions, contrary to the faith and blessed determinations of the holy church." Very contrary this to the usage of the first general councils, which defined all heretical doctrines with the utmost precision and exactness. And what ought to have alleviated the punishment, the uncertainty of the crime, seems to have enhanced it in those days of blind zeal and pious cruelty. It is true that the sanctimonious hypocrisy of the canonists went at first no farther than enjoining penance, excommunication, and ecclesiastical deprivation, for heresy; though afterwards they proceeded boldly to imprisonment by the ordinary, and confiscation of goods in pios usus. But in the mean time they had prevailed upon the weakness of bigoted princes, to make the civil power subservient to their purposes, by making heresy not only a temporal, but even a capital offence: the Romish ecclesiastics determining, without appeal, whatever they pleased to be heresy, and shifting off to the secular arm the odium and drudgery of executions; with which they themselves were too tender and delicate to intermeddle. Nay, they pretended to intercede and pray, on behalf of the convicted heretic, ut citra mortis periculum sententia circa eum moderetur (Decretal. l. 5. t. 40. c. 27.): well knowing at the same time that they were delivering the unhappy victim to certain death. Hence the capital punishments inflicted on the antient Donatists and Manichæans by the emperors, Theodosius and Justinian (Cod. l. 1. tit. 5.): hence also the constitution of the emperor Frederic mentioned by Lyndewode (c. de hæreticis), adjudging all persons without distinction to be burnt with fire, who were convicted of heresy by the ecclesiastical judge. The same emperor, in another constitution (Cod. 1. 5. 4.), ordained that if any temporal lord, when admonished by the church, should neglect to clear his territories of heretics within a year, it should be lawful for good catholics to seize and occupy the lands, and utterly to exterminate the heretical possessors. And upon this foundation was built that arbitrary power, so long claimed and so fatally exerted by the pope, of disposing even of the kingdoms of refractory princes to more dutiful sons of the church. The immediate event of this constitution was something singular, and may serve to illustrate at once the gratitude of the holy see, and the just punishment of the royal bigot; for upon the authority of this very constitution, the pope afterwards expelled this very emperor Frederic from his kingdom of Sicily, and gave it to Charles of Anjou (Baldus in Cod. 1. 5 4.) 4 Black. 45, 6.

Christianity being thus deformed by the demon of persecution upon the continent, we cannot expect that our own island should be entirely free from the same scourge. And therefore we find among our antient precedents (F. N. B. 269.) a writ de hæretico comburendo, which is thought by some to be as antient as the common law itself. However, it appears from thence, that the conviction of heresy by the common law was not in any petty ecclesiastical court, but before the archbishop himself in a provincial synod; and that the delinquent was delivered over to the king to do as he should please with him: so that the crown had a control over the spiritual power, and might pardon the convict by issuing no process against him; the writ de hæretico comburendo being not a writ of course, but issuing only by the special direction of the king in council (1 Hal. P. C. 395.) 4 Black. 46.

But in the reign of Henry the fourth, when the eyes of the christian world began to open, and the seeds of the protestant religion (though under the opprobrious name of lollardy*) took root in the kingdom; the clergy taking advantage from the king's dubious title to demand an increase of their own power, obtained an act of parliament (2 Hen. 4. c. 15.), which sharpened the edge of persecution to its utmost keenness. For, by that statute, the diocesan alone, without the intervention of a synod, might convict of heretical tenets; and unless the convict abjured his opinions, or if after abjuration he relapsed, the sheriff was bound ex officio, if required by the bishop, to commit the unhappy victim to the flames, without waiting for the consent of the crown. By the statute 2 Hen. 5. c. 7. lollardy was also made a temporal offence, and indictable in the king's courts; which did not thereby gain an exclusive, but only a concurrent jurisdiction with the bishop's consistory. 4 Black. 47.

Afterwards, when the final reformation of religion began to advance, the power of the ecclesiastics was somewhat moderated: for though what heresy is, was not then precisely defined, yet we are told in some points what it is not: the statute 25 Hen. 8. c. 14. declaring, that offences against the see of Rome are not heresy; and the ordinary being thereby restrained from proceeding in any case upon mere suspicion; that is, unless the party be accused by two credible witnesses, or an indictment of heresy be first previously found in the king's courts of common law. And yet the spirit of persecution was not then abated, but only diverted into a lay channel. For in six years afterwards, by statute 31 Hen. 8. c. 14. the bloody law of the six articles was made, which established the six most contested points of popery, transubstantiation, communion in one kind, the celibacy of the clergy, monastic vows, the sacrifice of the mass, and auricular confession; which points were "determined and resolved by the most godly study, pain, and travail of his majesty: for which his most humble and obedient subjects, the lords spiritual and temporal, and the commons, in parliament assembled, did render and give unto his highness their most high and hearty thanks," but did also enact and declare all oppugners of the first to be heretics, and to be burnt with fire; and of the five last to be felons, and to suffer death. The same statute established a new and mixed jurisdiction of clergy and laity for the trial and conviction of heretics; the reigning prince being then equally intent on destroying the supremacy of the bishops of Rome, and establishing all other their corruptions of the christian religion. 4 Black. 48.

After various repeals and revivals of these sanguinary laws in the two succeeding reigns, we come to the reign of queen Elizabeth; when the reformation was finally established with temper and decency, unsullied with party rancour, or personal caprice and resentment. And we find by statute 1 Eliz. c. 1. all former statutes relating to heresy are repealed, which leaves the jurisdiction of heresy as it stood at common law; viz. as to the infliction of common censures, in the ecclesiastical courts; and in case of burning the heretic, in the provincial synod only (5 Rep. 23. 12 Rep. 56. 92.) Sir Matthew Hale is indeed of a different opinion, and holds that such power resided in the diocesan also, though he agrees, that in either case the writ de hæretico comburendo was not demandable of common right, but grantable or otherwise merely at the king's discretion. (1 Hal. P. C. 405.) But the principal point now gained was, that by this statute a boundary is for the first time set to what shall be accounted heresy; nothing for the future being to be so determined, but only such tenets, which have been heretofore so declared, 1. By the words of the canonical scriptures: 2. By the first four general councils, or such others as have only used the words of the holy scriptures; or, 3. Which shall hereafter be so declared by the parliament, with the assent of the clergy in convocation. Thus was heresy reduced to a greater certainty than before; though it might not have been the worse to have defined it in terms still more precise and particular: as a man continued still liable to be burnt, for what perhaps he did not understand to be heresy, till the ecclesiastical judge so interpreted the words of the canonical scriptures. 4 Black. 48.

For the writ de haretico comburendo remained still in force; and we have instances of its being put in execution upon two Anabaptists in the seventeenth of Elizabeth, and two Arians in the ninth of James the first. But it was totally abolished, and heresy again subjected only to ecclesiastical correction pro salute animæ, by virtue of the statute 29 Car. 2. c. 9. Thus in one and the same reign, our lands were delivered from the slavery of military tenures; our bodies from arbitrary imprisonment by the habeas corpus act; and our minds from the tyranny of superstitious bigotry, by demolishing this last badge of persecution in the English law. Ibid.

Every thing is therefore as it should be, with respect to the spiritual cognizance, and spiritual punishment, of heresy; unless perhaps that the crime ought to be more strictly defined, and no persecution permitted, even in the ecclesiastical courts, till the tenets in question are by proper authority previously declared to be heretical. Under these restrictions, it seems necessary for the support of the national religion, that the officers of the church should have power to censure heretics; yet not to harass them with temporal penalties, much less to exterminate or destroy them. The legislature, however, hath thought it proper, that the civil magistrate should again interpose, with regard to one species of heresy, very prevalent in modern times; for by statute 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 32. if any person educated in the christian religion, or professing the same, shall by writing, printing, teaching, or advised speaking, deny any one of the persons of the holy trinity to be God, or maintain that there are more Gods than one, he shall undergo the same penalties and incapacities, as are inflicted on apostacy, by the same statute. 4 Black. 48, 9. See Apostacy.

HERIOT. (heriotum) Heriots, according to Blackstone, originated from a Danish custom, and are a render of the best beast, goods, piece of plate, or the like, (as the custom may be) to the lord on the death of the tenant. 2 Black. 97.

These heriots are usually divided into two sorts, heriot-service, and heriot-custom. I. Heriot-service, are such as are due upon a special reservation in a grant or lease of lands, and therefore amount to little more than a mere rent (2 Saund. 166.) II. Heriot-custom arise upon no special reservation whatsoever, but depend merely upon immemorial usage and custom (Co. Cop. s. 24.) Of these therefore, we are here principally to speak: and they are defined to be a customary tribute of goods and chattels, payable to the lord of the fee on the decease of the owner of the land. 2 Black. 422.

The first establishment, if not introduction, of compulsory heriots into England, was by the Danes: and we find in the laws of king Canute (c. 69.) the several heregeates or heriots specified, which were then exacted by the king on the death of divers of his subjects, according to their respective dignities; from the highest eorle down to the most inferior thegne or landholder. These, for the most part, consisted in arms, horses, and habiliments of war; which the word itself, according to sir Henry Spelman (of feuds, c. 18.) signifies. These were delivered up to the sovereign on the death of the vassal, who could no longer use them, to be put into other hands for the service and defence of the country. And upon the plan of this Danish establishment did William the conqueror fashion his law of reliefs; when he ascertained the precise relief to be taken of every tenant in chivalry, and, contrary to the feodal custom and the usage of his own duchy of Normandy, required arms and implements of war to be paid instead of money. (LL. Guil. Conq. c. 22, 23, 24.) 2 Black. 423.

The Danish compulsive heriots being thus transmuted into reliefs, underwent the same several vicissitudes as the feodal tenures, and in socage estates do frequently remain to this day in the shape of a double rent payable at the death of the tenant: the heriots which now continue among us, and preserve that name, seeming rather to be of Saxon parentage, and at first to have been merely discretionary (Lambard Peramb. of Kent, 492.) These are now for the most part confined to copyhold tenures, and are due by custom only, which is the life of all estates by copy; and perhaps are the only instance where custom has favoured the lord. For this payment was originally a voluntary donation, or gratuitous legacy of the tenant; perhaps in acknowledgment of his having been raised a degree above villenage, when all his goods and chattels were quite at the mercy of the lord; and custom, which has on the one hand confirmed the tenant's interest in exclusion of the lord's will, and has on the other hand established this discretional piece of gratitude into a permanent duty. An heriot may also appertain to free land, that is held by service and suit of court; in which case it is most commonly a copyhold enfranchised, whereupon the heriot is still due by custom. Bracton (l. 2. c. 36. s. 9.) speaks of heriots as frequently due on the death of both species of tenants: "est quidem alia præstatio quæ nominatur heriettum; ubi tenens, liber vel servus, in morte sua dominum suum, de quo tenuerit, respicit de meliori averio suo, vel de secundo meliori, secundum diversam locorum consuetudinem." And this he adds, "magis sit de gratia quam de jure;" in which Fleta (l. 3. c. 18.) and Britton (c. 69.) agree: thereby plainly intimating the original of this custom to have been merely voluntary, as a legacy from the tenant; though now the immemorial usage has established it as of right in the lord.

This heriot is sometimes the best live beast, or averium, which the tenant dies possessed of, (which is particularly denominated the villein's relief in the twenty-ninth law of king William the conqueror,) sometimes the best inanimate thing, under which a jewel or piece of plate may be included: but it is always a personal chattel, which, immediately on the death of the tenant who was the owner of it, being ascertained by the option of the lord (Hob. 60.), becomes vested in him as his property; and is no charge upon the lands, but merely on the goods and chattels. The tenant must be the owner of it, else it cannot be due; and therefore on the death of a feme-covert no heriot can be taken; for she can have no ownership in things personal. (Keilw. 84. 4 Leon 239.) In some places, there is a customary composition in money, as ten or twenty shillings in lieu of a heriot, by which the lord and tenant are both bound, if it be an indisputably antient custom; but a new composition of this sort will not bind the representatives of either party; for that amounts to the creation of a new custom, which is now impossible. HIDE OF LAND, (Sax. hyde-lands, from hyden, tegere.) A plough-land, it is said to be of 900 acres, as much as will maintain a family. Crompton, in his Jurisdict. fo. 222. says, a hide of land contains one hundred acres, and eight hides make a knight's fee. But sir Edward Coke holds, that a knight's fee, a hide or plough-land, a yard-land, or an oxgang of land, do not contain any certain number of acres. Lit. fol. 69. HIGH COMMISSION COURT. The court of the king's high commission in causes ecclesiastical, was erected and united to the regal power (4 Inst. 324.) by virtue of the statute 1 Eliz. c. 1. instead of a larger jurisdiction which had before been exercised under the pope's authority. It was intended to vindicate the dignity and peace of the church, by reforming, ordering, and correcting the ecclesiastical state and persons, and all manner of errors, heresies, schisms, abuses, offences, contempts, and enormities. Under the shelter of which very general words, means were found in that and the two succeeding reigns, to vest in the high commissioners extraordinary and almost despotic powers of fining and imprisoning; which they exerted much beyond the degree of the offence itself, and frequently over offences by no means of spiritual cognizance. For these reasons this court was justly abolished by stat. 16 Car. 1. c. 11. And the weak and illegal attempt that was made to revive it, during the reign of king James the second, served only to hasten that infatuated prince's ruin. 3 Black. 67.

HIGH CONSTABLE OF ENGLAND. The lord high constable of England was to regulate all manner of chivalry, tilts, tournaments, and feats of arms, which were performed on horseback: this great office of lord high constable hath been disused in England, except only upon great and solemn occasions, as the king's coronation, or the like, ever since the attainder of Stafford, duke of Buckingham, under king Henry VIII.; and from hence it is said that the lower order of constables originated. 1 Black. 355. See Constable.

HIGH TREASON. See Treason.

HIGHWAYS. (via regia) It is said that there are three kinds of ways: first, a footway, which is called in Latin iter. Secondly, a pack and prime way, which is both a horse and foot way, and called in Latin actus. Thirdly, a cartway, called in Latin via or aditus, which contains the other two, as well as a cartway. Co. Lit. 56.

And it seems that any of the said ways, which is common to all the king's subjects, whether it leads directly to a market town, or only from town to town, may properly be called a highway, and that any such cartway may be called the king's highway; and that a river common to all men, may also be called a highway; and that nuisances in any of the said ways are punishable by indictment, for otherwise they would not be punished at all, inasmuch as it seems to be certain, that it is not punishable by action, because if one man might bring his action in respect of the possibility of the damage which he might receive from it, all other men might do the like, which would introduce a multiplicity of actions. 1 Hawk. c. 76. s. 1.

And it hath been holden, that if there be a highway in an open field, and the people have used, time out of mind, when the ways are bad, to go by outlets on the land adjoining, such outlets are parcel of the way, for the king's subjects ought to have a good passage*, and the good passage is the way, and not the beaten track only; from whence it follows, that if such outlets be sown with corn, and the beaten track be founderous, the king's subjects may justify going upon the corn. 1 Rol. Abr. 390. Comyn's Dig. tit. Chimin (A 1.) Cro. Car. 366. 4 Vin. Abr. 502. 1 Hawk. c. 76. s. 2.

But in regard to private ways there is a difference; for although they may be rendered impassable, either by want of repair, or by the overflowing of a river; yet it seems that those who have the right of way cannot justify going over the adjoining land, unless they are entitled to a way generally over the river; for if the grant be not of a way generally over the land, or the owner be bound, either by prescription or his own agreement, to repair, or provide against the overflowing of the land, but of a precise specific way, it authorizes the use of a particular line only, and does not give a right to go either on the right or the left. 2 Doug. 8vo. ed. 748.

A way to a parish-church, or to the common fields of a town, or perhaps to a village which terminates there, and is for the benefit of the particular inhabitants, of such parish, house or village only, may be called a private way, but not a highway, because it belongeth not to all the king's subjects, but only to some particular persons, each of which, as it seems, may have an action on the case for a nuisance thereon. 1 Hawk. c. 76. s. 1.

So a private way may be from a meadow, or close to a street, or to an highway; or from one part of a close, across the ground of another, to another part of the same land. Comyn's Dig. tit. Chimin (D 1).

And a private way may be claimed by prescription, reservation, or grant, or for necessity. 6 Mod. Rep. 3.

By prescription, as where a man can shew no other right than that he, and those under whom he claims, have immemorially used to enjoy it.

By reservation or grant, as if A grants, that B shall have a way through such a close. Comyn's Dig. tit. Chimin (D 3).

By necessity; as where a man has land surrounded by the lands of another, in such case he shall have a way through the land of the other, for the necessity. Mod. Cas. 3.

So if a man has title to a wreck, he has a right to have a way over the land of another where the wreck lies, to take it of necessity. 6 Mod. Rep. 149.

The grantee of a way has power to amend it as incident to the grant. Godb. 53. 1 Sand. 323.

But if a man grants a way through his close to another, the grantor is not bound to keep it in repair, if it be foundrous. 1 Sand. 322.

For by common law, those who have the use and benefit of the way ought to repair it. 2 Doug. 8*vo. ed.* 748.

And if the commissioners under an inclosure act set out a private road for the use of the inhabitants of nine different parishes, directing the inhabitants of six of those parishes to keep it in repair, no indictment can be supported against the latter for not repairing it, for the known rule is that those matters only that concern the public are the subject of an indictment, and it having been in this case described to be a private road, the court held that it neither concerned the public, nor could be taken to be of a public nature, but merely concerned the individual who had a right to use it, and the circumstance of its having been set out under a public act of parliament did not make it an indictable offence. 8 Ter. Rep. 634.

Also if an act for dividing and enclosing certain lands enacts, that the public roads to be set out by the commissioners, shall be repaired in such manner as other public roads are by law to be repaired, and that the private roads shall be repaired by such person or persons as they shall award; the commissioners have no authority to impose on the parish at large, the burden of repairing any of the private roads set out in pursuance of the act, but only on those individuals for whose benefit they are made. 8 Ter. Rep. 20.

But if a man be bound, either by prescription or his own agreement, to repair, he ought; and if the way become impassable, in such case a passenger may break the fence, and go out of the way, but as near to the same as he possibly can, in order to avoid the bad way. 6 Mod. Rep. 163. 1 Salk. 358. Jones, 296. 2 Doug. 8*vo. ed.* 745.

But if the owner of the adjoining land be not so bound, no one can justify going over his ground, although the way be rendered impassable. 2 Doug. 8*vo. ed.* 748.

If a common way to church, vill, or the like, be out of repair, he who ought to repair it may be indicted for it. 6 Mod. Rep. 163.

And if he be convicted upon the indictment, the court will not set the fine till the justices of peace certify that it is well repaired. 6 Mod. Rep. 163.

And if he be fined before the way be repaired, yet a distringas in infinitum, shall afterwards go against the party, till the sheriff certify, that the way is in good repair. 1 Salk. 359. 6 Mod. Rep. 163.

But those who are bound to repair, are not obliged to put it in better condition than has been time out of mind, but as it has been usually at the best. 1 Salk. 359.

And if one grants me a way, and afterwards digs trenches in it to my hindrance, I may fill them up again: but if a way which a man has, becomes not passable, or becomes very bad, by the owner of the land tearing it up with his carts, so that the same be filled with water; yet he who has the way cannot dig the ground to let out the water; for he has no interest in the soil. Godb. 52, 53.

But in such case he may have his action upon the case against the wrong doer. Lut. 111. 3 Lev. 266. 1 Vent. 275. 2 Vent. 186.

So if a man hath a private way without a gate, and a gate is hung up, an action lies upon the case; for he has not his way as he had before. Litt. 267.

Or he who has such right of way, may justify the breaking of the gate so erected, through which he could not pass. 3 Lev. 92. 2 Mod. 66. 1 Burrows 266.

Though every highway is said to be the king's, yet this must be understood so as that in every highway, the king and his subjects may pass and repass at their pleasure. 1 Rol. Abr. 392. 4 Viner 515.

But the freehold, and all the profits belong to the lord of the soil; or to the owner of the lands on both sides the way. 1 Rol. Abr. 392. 4 Vin. 515.

And so do all the trees upon it, and mines under it, and which may be extremely valuable. 1 Burrows 143.

And the lord or owner of the soil may maintain an action of trespass for digging the ground. 1 Rol. Abr. 392. 4 Vin. Abr. 515. 2 Strange 1004.

But the lord of a rape within which there are ten hundreds, may prescribe to have all the trees growing within any highway within his rape, though the manor or soil adjoining belongs to another; for usage to take the trees is a good badge of ownership. 1 Rol. Abr. 392. 4 Vin. 515.

And in a modern case it is reported, that lord Mansfield said, where no person claims the property of the lands on either side of the highway, the presumption is in favour of the lord of the manor; but if the highway goes through the property of others the presumption is in favour of the owner of the land on each side, but in either case the presumption only stands till the contrary be proved. Anonymous Cas. M. 13 Geo. 3. Lofft's Rep. 358.

And if a man make a street upon his own ground, it is a dedication to the public, so far as the public has occasion for it, viz. for a right of passage only; but it is not to be understood as a transfer of the absolute property in the soil: the owner may therefore have his action of trespass for any encroachment on the soil. 2 Strange 1004.

And the owner of the soil may bring an ejectment for the land, subject, however, to the servitude or easement of a passage over it, as the king's highway. 1 Burrows 143.

By the common law, an ancient highway cannot be changed without the king's licence first obtained upon a writ of ad quod damnum, and an inquisition thereon found by a jury that such a change will not be prejudicial to the public. 1 Hawk. c. 76. s 3.

And it seems, that it is not necessary for the sheriff to give formal notice of the execution of the writ; it is sufficient if the jury be summoned impartially, and the inquisition be taken in a fair and open manner. Ex parte Vennor, Hil. 1754. 3 Atkyns 766.

But this inquisition being a proceeding ex-parte, it is traversable: that is, the party grieved may traverse or deny the matter of fact found by the inquisition, and put it in a course of trial, by the common law process of the court of chancery.

And if the party traverse the inquisition, and issue be taken thereon and a verdict found, he cannot apply to the court of chancery upon a suggestion of surprize, and a fraudulent and clandestine execution of the writ, for the traverse is a waiver of any objection in that respect. 3 Atkins 770.

But this course of proceeding by way of travers: being both expensive and dilatory, a more speedy remedy is given by 13 Geo. 3. c, 78. by allowing an appeal to the justices of the peace in such cases.

For it is enacted by that statute, sec. 19, that it shall be lawful for any person injured or aggrieved by the inclosure of any road or highway, by virtue of any inquisition taken, upon any writ of ad quod damnum, to appeal to the next general quarter sessions, giving ten days notice to the party interested, if there be time for that purpose; if not, to the next sessions after: and the determination of such sessions shall be final.

Though the appeal is directed to the next quarter sessions, yet the justices may adjourn the quarter sessions itself to another day, or they may adjourn the particular matter to a subsequent sessions. And this appeal was thought, by lord Hardwicke, to be a waiver to any objection of surprize, or mal-execution of the writ: because the statute has put the justices in the room of the traverse, upon which, as has been before observed, no such objection could be taken. 3 Atkyns 770.

It is also certain, that the highway may be changed by the act of God; and therefore it hath been holden, that if a water which has been an ancient highway, by degrees changes its course, and goes over different ground from that wherein it used to run; yet the highway continues in the new channel, in the same manner as in the old. 1 Hawk. c. 76. s. 4.

Of common right, the general charge of repairing all highways lies on the occupiers of the lands in the parish wherein they are, unless by prescription they can throw the burden on particular persons by reason of their tenure. 1 Hawk. c. 76. s. 5. 4 Burrows Rep. 2511. 5 Burrows Rep. 2702. 2 Term Rep. 111

And as the repair of the highway lies of common right upon the whole parish; the indictment, notwithstanding the parish lies part in one county and the rest in another, must be preferred against the whole parish, and must be laid in that county where the ruinous road lies.

Also as the inhabitants of a parish are bound to repair all highways within their boundaries, they cannot be discharged from such liability by any agreement with others. 3 East's Rep. 86.

It is also said that the tenants of the land adjoining the highway are bound to scour their ditches. 1 Hawk. c. 76. s. 5.

And it is certain, that particular persons may be burthened with the general charge of repairing the highway in two cases; first, in respect of an inclosure of the land wherein it lies, and secondly, in respect of a prescription. 1 Hawk. c. 76. s. 5.

First. A particular person may be bound to repair an highway in respect of an inclosure, as where the owner of lands not inclosed, next adjoining to the highway, incloses his lands on both sides thereof *, in which case he is bound to make a perfect good way, and shall not be excused for making it as good as it was at the time of the inclosure, if it were then any way defective; because, before the inclosure, the people used, when the way was bad, to go for their better passage over the fields adjoining out of the common track; which liberty is taken away by the inclosure. 1 Hawk. c. 76. s. 6.

* This he may lawfully do, of his own authority, but he is bound to leave sufficient space and room for the road, and he is obliged to repair it so long as he continues his inclosure. 1 Burrows 465.

And if the way is not sufficient, any passenger may break down the inclosure, and go over the land and justify it, till a sufficient way is made. 3 Salk. 182.

And it hath been holden, that if one inclose land on one side which hath been anciently inclosed on the other side, he ought to repair all the way, but if there be not such an ancient inclosure of the other side, he ought to repair but half that way. 1 Sidenfin 464. 1 Hawk. c. 76. s. 7.

And so if one person makes an hedge on one side of the way, and another person makes an hedge on the other side of the way, they shall be chargeable to the repair thereof by moieties 1 Sider. 464.

But it seems that a man is bound to repair a highway in respect of an inclosure, no longer than whilst it continues; for if he lays it open again as it was before, he shall be freed from the charge of repairing it. 1 Siderfin. 464. 1 Hawk. c. 76. s. 7. 4 Burrows Rep. 465.

And if he alter or change the road by the legal course of a writ of ad quod damnum, he is not obliged to repair the new road, unless the jury impose such a condition upon him; for if they do not, the repair of the road stands just as it did before: even though it was at first open, and should be directed by the jury to be inclosed. 1 Burrows 465.

For when a new road is made in pursuance of such writ, and inquisition thereupon found, it is incumbent on the parishioners to keep it in repair; because being discharged from the repairing the old road, no new burthen is laid upon them: their labour is only transferred from one place to another. 3 Atk. 766.

But if the new road lies in another parish, then the person who sued out the writ, and his heirs, ought not only to make it, but to keep it in repair; because the parishioners of such other parish gaining no benefit from the old road being taken away, it would be imposing a new charge upon them, for which they enjoyed no compensation. Ibid.

And a private act of parliament for inclosing common fields or other lands, which vests a power in commissioners to set out new roads by their award, is equally strong, as to these consequences as a writ of ad quod damnum; therefore, unless it is otherwise directed in the act, the repair of such new roads clearly stands as it did before, and must by operation of law, fall on the parish or township; and this is but reasonable; for if the person to whom an allotment was made near the highway, was to be obliged to repair, it might make a vast difference in the value of the lands respectively allotted to each person: for one person's allotment might perhaps run along very far by the side of the highway, and another person's allotment not lie at all near it. 1 Burrows 465.

But if the inhabitants of a township, bound by prescription to repair the roads within the township, be expressly exempted by the provisions of a road act, from the charge of repairing new roads to be made within the township; then the charge must necessarily fall on the rest of the parish. The K. v. Sheffield, Mic. 28 Geo. 3. 2 Term Rep. 106.

However, if an indictment for non-repair of a highway within certain limits, charge a corporation with a prescriptive liability to repair all common highways, within such limits, except such as ought to be repaired according to the form of the several statutes in such case made, it must also contain an averment that the highway in question is not within any of the exceptions; for the circumstance of a statute being public, does not take away the necessity of such averment. 3 East's Rep. 86.

And if the trustees under a road act, turn a road through an inclosure, and make the fences at their own expence, and repair them for several years, they cannot be compelled to continue such repairs, unless there be a special provision in the act to that effect. 3 Term Rep. 232.

Secondly, A particular person may be bound to repair a highway in respect of a prescription. 1 Hawk. c. 76. s. 8.

And it is said, that a corporation aggregate, may be compelled to do it by force of a general prescription, that it ought, and hath used to do it, without shewing that it used to do so in respect of the tenure of certain lands, or for any other consideration, because such a corporation in judgment of law never dies; and therefore, if it were ever bound to such a duty, it must needs continue to be always so; neither is it any plea, that such corporation have always done it out of charity; for what it hath always done, it shall be presumed to have been always bound to do. 1 Hawk. c. 76. s. 8.

But it is said, that a person cannot be charged with such a duty by a general prescription from what his ancestors have done, because no one is bound to do what his ancestors have done, unless it be for some special reason, as the having lands descended from such ancestors, which are holden by such like service: yet it seems, that an indictment charging a tenant in fee-simple, with having used of right to repair such a way by reason of the tenure of his land, is certain enough, without adding that his ancestors or those whose estate he hath, have always so done; for that is implied, in saying, that he has always used to do it, by reason of his tenure. 1 Hawk. c. 76. s. 8.

But the indictment must set forth where those lands lie. 2 Hale's Hist. 181.

And it seems certain, that, whether a particular person be bound to repair a highway by inclosure or prescription; yet the parish cannot take advantage of it, upon the plea of not guilty to an indictment against them for not repairing it, but ought to set forth their discharge in a special plea. 1 Hawk. c. 76. s. 9.

And it is not enough to allege generally, that a particular division or district, from the time whereof the memory of man is not to the contrary, ought to repair and amend, when and so often as it shall be necessary: for the inhabitants of the parish at large being bound by common law and of common right to repair highways, it must be expressly shewn why the inhabitants of a particular division or district are obliged to repair. 5 Burrows 2702. 2 Term Rep. 513.

It therefore must be shewn that they have immemorially repaired, and have used and been accustomed, and of right ought, to repair and amend. 5 Burrows 2702.

This being the general law of the land in relation to highways, the stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 78. was passed for the more readily enforcing the reparation thereof.

This act has been amended by subsequent acts, and the whole are too voluminous to be noticed in this work, except in the following particulars.

Statute duty.] By 34 Geo. S. c. 74. the surveyor, together with the inhabitants and occupiers of lands, tenements, woods, tithes, and hereditaments, shall, at proper seasons, in every year, use their endeavours for the repair of the highways, and shall be chargeable thereto as followeth: that is to say,

Every person keeping a waggon, cart, wain, plough, or tumbrel, and three or more horses or beasts of draught used to draw the same, shall be deemed to keep a team, draught, or plough, and be liable to perform statute duty with the same, in the parish, township, or place where he resides, and shall six days in every year, (if so many days be found necessary,) to be computed from Michaelmas to Michaelmas, send on every day, and at every place, to be appointed by the surveyor, for amending the highways in such parish, township, or place, one wain, cart, or carriage, furnished after the custom of the country with oxen, horses, or other cattle, and all other necessaries fit to carry things for that purpose, and also two able men with the same: which duty so performed, shall excuse every such person from his duty in such parish, township, or place, in respect of all lands, tenements, goods, tithes, or hereditaments, not exceeding the annual value of 50*l.* which he shall occupy therein. s. 4.

Every person keeping such team, draught, or plough, and occupying in the same parish, township, or place, lands, tenements, woods, tithes, or hereditaments of the yearly value of 50*l.* over and beyond the said yearly value of 50*l.* in respect whereof such team duty shall be performed;—and every such person occupying lands, tenements, woods, tithes, or hereditaments, of the yearly value of 50*l.* in any other parish, township, or place, besides that wherein he resides;—and every other person, not keeping a team, draught, or plough, but occupying lands, tenements, woods, tithes, or hereditaments of the yearly value of 50*l.* in any parish, township, or place:—shall find and send one wain, cart, or carriage, furnished with not less than three horses, or four oxen and one horse, or two oxen and two horses, and two able men to each wain, cart, or carriage: and in like manner for every 50*l.* a year respectively, which every such person shall further occupy in any parish, township, or place respectively: such wains, carts, or carriages to be employed by the surveyor in repairing the highways within the parish, township, or place where such estate lies. Ibid.

Every person who shall not keep a team, draught, or plough, but shall occupy such estate under the yearly value of 50*l.* in the parish, township, or place where he resides, or in any other parish, township, or place;—and every person keeping a team, draught, or plough, and occupying such estate under the yearly value of 50*l.* in any other parish, township, or place than that wherein he resides;—shall respectively contribute to the repair of the highways, and pay to the surveyor, in lieu of such duty, the sums following; viz. for every 20*s.* of the annual value of such lands, tenements, woods, tithes, or hereditaments, one penny for every day's statute duty; and in like manner shall pay one penny for every 20*s.* of the annual value of such estate which he shall occupy in any such parish, township, or place respectively, above the annual value of 50*l.* and less than 100*l.*; and so for every 20*s.* that each progressive and intermediate annual value of 20*s.* which he shall so occupy, shall fall short of the further increase of 50*l.* in every parish, township, or place where such lands, tenements, woods, tithes, and hereditaments shall respectively lie, for every day's statute duty so to be required as aforesaid. Ibid.

Provided, that no person keeping such team, draught, or plough, and performing duty with the same as aforesaid, in the parish, township, or place where he resides, and not occupying lands, tenements, woods, tithes, or hereditaments within the same, of the yearly value of 30*l.* shall be obliged to

All which said several sums shall be considered as compositions, and shall be paid to the surveyor, at the time the compositions are to be paid under the authority of the act, or within ten days after; or in default of such payments, the surveyor shall apply to a justice acting for such district, who shall summon such defaulter to appear at some special or petty sessions to be holden for such district, at which two justices, at the least, shall be present, to shew cause why he refused or neglected to pay; and in default of appearance, or if on appearance he shall not make it appear to the satisfaction of such justices, that he is poor and indigent, and as such an object deserving relief; such money shall be levied by distress, in like manner as the forfeitures for neglect of statute duty. Provided, that when the justices shall discharge any poor person from payment of such rate or composition money, such person shall, at the same time, be discharged from any expences in consequence thereof. Ibid.

Every person who shall not keep a team, draught, or plough, but shall keep one or more cart or carts, and one or two horses or beasts of draught only, used to draw in each of such carts upon the highways, shall be obliged to perform his statute duty for the like number of days, with such cart or carts, and horse or horses, or beasts of draught, and one labourer to attend each cart; or to pay for the lands, tenements, woods, tithes, and hereditaments, which he shall occupy, according to the rate herein-after mentioned, at the option of the surveyor. s. 2.

Every person who shall keep a coach, post-chaise, chair, or other wheel carriage, and not keep a team, draught, or plough, nor occupy 50*l.* a-year in the parish, township, or place where he resides, shall pay to the surveyor 1*s.* in respect of every such day's statute duty, for every horse which he shall draw in any such carriage; or shall pay according to the value of the lands, tenements, or hereditaments which he shall occupy, at the option of the surveyor. Ibid.

And if the teams, draughts, or ploughs, or any of them, shall not be thought needful by the surveyor, on any of the said days; then every such person who should have sent any such team, draught, or plough according to the directions aforesaid, shall, according to the notice given to him by the surveyor, send unto the said work, for every one so spared, three able men; or pay 4*s.* 6*d.* in lieu thereof, at the option of the surveyor. Ibid.

And where the employment for teams is of such sort, that two horses will be sufficient for one cart, or where a stand cart with one horse shall be necessary, the surveyor may call upon any person liable to send a team, draught, or plough, according to this act, who keeps one or more cart or carts, and three or more horses, to send such cart or carts, horse or horses, to perform his statute duty, as the surveyor shall find most convenient; and he shall allow every such stand cart and one horse as half a team, and every cart and two horses as two thirds of a team. And if a waggon shall be found necessary for any particular business, the surveyor may require the duty, or any part thereof, to be performed with such waggon by any person who keeps one. Which directions of the surveyor shall be observed, or the person liable to perform such duty shall forfeit such sum as the duty so required of him shall bear, in proportion to the forfeiture hereby inflicted for every neglect in performing duty with a team, draught, or plough. 13 Geo. 3. c. 78. s. 36.

But by 42 Geo. 3. c. 90. no serjeant, corporal, or drummer of the militia, nor any private man, from the time of his inrolment until his discharge, shall be obliged to perform any highway duty, commonly called statute work. s. 174.

The surveyor shall give to, or cause to be left at the abode of every person liable to perform such duty, four days notice at least, of the day, hour, and place, upon which each of the day's duty shall be to be performed. 13 Geo. 3. c. 78. s. 37.

And all persons shall have and bring with them such shovels, spades, picks, mattocks, and other tools, as are useful. s. 37. 34 Geo. 3. c. 74. s. 2.

And all the said persons and carringes shall diligently perform the work to which they shall be appointed by such surveyor for eight hours in every day, within such parish, or in getting materials in and from any other parish, to be employed in the repair of the highways of the parish, for which they shall perform duty. Ibid.

And if any person sending a team, shall not send a sufficient labourer besides the driver (except as before mentioned) or if any such labourer or driver, or any other labourer, or the driver of any cart, shall refuse to work, during the time above mentioned, according to the direction of the surveyor; or if any driver shall refuse to carry proper loads, it shall be lawful for such surveyor to discharge such team, cart, or labourer, and to recover from the owner the forfeiture which such person would have incurred, in case no such team, &c. had been sent. Ibid.

And every person making default in finding and sending such wain, cart, or carriage, furnished as aforesaid, and such able men with the same, as herein required, or in performing the said duty in manner by this act directed, shall, for every default, forfeit 10*s.*—For every default in sending a cart with one horse and one man, 3*s.*—and for not sending a cart with two horses and one man, 5*s*. And every person making default in sending such labourer, and every person making default in performing such labour at the time and place, and in manner directed by this act, or in paying composition-money for the same, shall, for every such neglect, forfeit 1*s*. 6*d*. all which forfeitures shall be applied for the use of the highways within the parish. 13 Geo. 3. c. 78. s. 37.

And the surveyor shall equally demand such duty from every person liable, without favour. s. 37.

And if in any parish, it shall not be necessary to call forth the whole duty in any year, it shall be abated in proportion amongst all persons liable. s. 37.

By 44 Geo. 3. c. 59. any persons liable to perform statute duty, by sending one or more teams, draughts, or ploughs, with men, horses, or oxen, in manner mentioned in the 34 Geo. 3. c. 74. may compound for the same, if they shall think fit, by paying to the surveyor of the highways, at the time, and in the manner mentioned in the 13 Geo. 3. such sums of money as the justices for the limits wherein the parish, township, or place for which the said duty is liable to be performed, is situate, or the major part of them, at their special session to be held in the first week after Michaelmas quarter session in every year, shall adjudge and declare to be reasonable, not exceeding 12*s*. nor less than 3*s*. for each team, draught, or plough, for each day; and in default of their adjudging and declaring the same, 6*s*. for and in lieu of every day's duty for each team, draught, or plough; and for each cart with two horses or beasts of draught, not exceeding 8*s*. nor less than 3*s*. and in default of their adjudging and declaring the same, the sum of 4*s*. and for each cart with one horse or beast of draught, not exceeding 6*s*. nor less than 2*s*. and in default of their adjudging and declaring the same, the sum of 3*s*. s. 2.

"And, whereas it may frequently happen, "that persons wholly gaining their liveli- "hood by the wages of daily labour, and "occupying rateable tenements within a pa- "rish, by reason of age, sickness, a numer- "ous family, or misfortune, may be in poor "and indigent circumstances, and it may "be expedient in certain cases to discharge "such persons from all rates, assessments, "or compositions whatsoever;" It is there- fore enacted, that on the application of any poor and indigent person to be discharged from the rate or composition, made to any two justices at any special or petty sessions, held for the limits wherein such poor and indi- gent person shall reside, the said justices (hav- ing first given notice to the surveyor to ap- pear on the part of the parish) shall inquire and examine into the situation and circum- stances of the person making such applica- tion; and if it shall appear to the satisfac- tion of such justices that such person is really poor and indigent, and a deserving object of such relief, the said justices may exempt such poor and indigent person from the payment of all rates, assessments, or compositions whatsoever. 34 Geo. 3. c. 74. s. 5.

But if it appear to the justices, at their special sessions, to be held in the week next after Michaelmas quarter sessions, or at any other special or petty sessions, held within the limits of any parish, at which two or more justices shall be present, that, from the di- rections before given for performing and compounding the statute duty, there will be difficulty in procuring the necessary car- riage, or a sufficient number of labourers for the repair of the highways, in any particular parish, within their limits, without paying high prices for the same; it shall be lawful for such justices to order the team duty hereby required, or so much thereof as they think fit, to be performed in kind, within every parish, &c. except in respect of such teams as belong to persons who do not oc- cupy lands, &c. of the annual value of 30*l*. within the same; and also to order all such persons as shall gain their living by the wages of daily labour, or such part of them as they shall think fit, to perform six days labour upon such highways in kind, either by themselves or others, in case so many days duty shall be required, upon being paid for such labour the usual wages given to la- bourers in such parish. 34 Geo. 3. c. 74. s. 6.

But if part of such teams or labourers only are required, it shall be directed by the said order of the justices in some given propor- tion, as one half, third, or fourth part there- of; and the surveyor shall, in that case, at a public vestry for such parish, put the names of all persons liable to send such teams, into one hat or box, and the names of all persons liable to perform such labour into another hat or box, and some inhabit- ant then present shall draw out such num- ber from each as shall be equal to the pro- portion ordered by the justices, and the per- sons drawn, shall perform such duty in kind for that year, and if such order shall be made or continued in the subsequent year, the same method shall be observed, but the names drawn in the preceding year shall not be put into such hat or box; and in every succeeding year, such method shall be ob- served by such surveyor, so as to render the duty to be performed in kind equal amongst the persons liable thereto; which order of the justices, so far as the same shall be ex- tended, shall supersede the power or liberty of compounding, and shall be binding, and shall continue in force until discharged or varied by the justices at some subsequent special sessions for the highways within such limit, to be held in the week after Mi- chaelmas quarter sessions. s. 6.

And if any person shall keep a team, and shall not occupy lands, &c. of 30*l.* per ann. in the parish where he shall reside, but shall in part maintain his horses and beasts of draught used in such team upon lands in adjacent parishes, it shall be lawful for the justices, at some special sessions, to mitigate the duty or composition, as they think just. 13 Geo. 3. c. 78. s. 40.

—— Nuisance to the highway.] There is no doubt that all injuries whatsoever to any highway, as by digging a ditch, or making a hedge over thwart it, or laying logs of timber in it, or by doing any other act, which will render it less commodious to the king's people, are public nuisances at common law. Kitch. 34, 35.

Also it seems to be clear, that it is no excuse for one who lays such logs in the highway, that he only laid them here and there, so that the people might have a passage by windings and turnings through the logs: yet it is said to be no nuisance for the inhabitants of a town to unlade billits, &c. in the street before their houses, by reason of the necessity of the case, unless they suffer them to continue there an unreasonable time, after they are unloaded. 2 Rol. Abr. 137, 265. 1 Hawk. c. 76. s. 49.

A gate erected in a highway is also a common nuisance, because it interrupts the people in that free and open passage which they before enjoyed and were entitled to; but where such gate has continued time out of mind, it shall be intended, that it was set out at first by consent, on a composition with the owner of the land on the laying out the road, in which case the people had never any right to a freer passage than what they still enjoy. 1 Hawk. c. 75. s. 9.

Also it seems clear, that it is a like nuisance to suffer the ditches adjoining to a highway to be foul, by reason whereof it is impaired, or to suffer the boughs of trees growing near the highway to hang over the road, in such a manner as thereby to incommode the passage. 1 Hawk. c. 76. s. 50.

And not only all the above-mentioned nuisances, which are such at common law, are esteemed also nuisances by statute; but there is one particular nuisance which is made such by the statute, and doth not seem to be taken notice of at common law, and that is the drawing of a travelling carriage with a greater number of horses than the statute permits. 1 Hawk. c. 76. s. 51.

It is said that one convicted of a nuisance done to the king's highway, may be commanded by the judgment to remove the nuisance at his own costs. 1 Hawk. c. 75. s. 14.

Also it seems to be certain, that at common law, any one may pull down or otherwise destroy a common nuisance, as a new gate, or even a new house erected in a highway, (that is, he may take down and remove the materials, but not convert them to his own use, 1 Hawk. c. 76. s. 61.); for if one whose estate is, or may be prejudiced by a private nuisance actually erected, as a house hanging over his ground, or stopping his lights, may justify the entering into another's ground, and pulling down and destroying such a nuisance, whether it were erected before or since he came to the estate, it cannot but follow much more that any one may lawfully destroy a common nuisance. 1 Hawk. c. 75. s. 12. c. 76. s. 61.

HIGHWAY ROBBERY. Open and violent larceny from the person, or robbery, the rapina of the civilians, is the felonious and forcible taking from the person of another of goods or money to any value, by violence, or putting him in fear. (1 Hawk. P. C. 95.) But 1st, There must be a taking, otherwise it is no robbery. And a mere attempt to rob, though held to be felony so late as Henry the Fourth's time, (1 Hale's P. C. 532) was afterwards taken to be only a misdemeanor, and punishable with fine and imprisonment, till the statute 7 Geo. 2. c. 21, which makes it a felony (transportable for seven years) unlawfully and maliciously to assault another, with any offensive weapon or instrument; or by menaces, or by other forcible or violent manner, to demand any money or goods; with a felonious intent to rob. If the thief, having once taken a purse, returns it, still it is a robbery; and so it is whether the taking be strictly from the person of another, or in his presence only: as, where a robber by menaces and violence puts a man in fear, and drives away his sheep or his cattle before his face. (1 Hal. P. C. 533.) But if the taking be not either directly from his person, or in his presence, it is no robbery. (Comyns, 478. Stra. 1015.) 2ndly, It is immaterial of what value the thing taken is; a penny as well as a pound thus forcibly extorted makes a robbery. (1 Hawk. P. C. 97.) 3. Lastly, the taking must be by force, or a previous putting in fear, which makes the violation of the person more atrocious than privately stealing. For, according to the maxim of the civil law, (Ff. 4. 2. 14. s. 12,) "qui vi rapuit, fur improbior esse videtur," this previous violence, or putting in fear, is the criterion that distinguishes robbery from other larcenies. For if one privately steals sixpence from the person of another, and afterwards keeps it by putting him in fear, this is no robbery, for the fear is subsequent, (1 Hal. P. C. 534.) neither is it capital, as privately stealing, being under the value of twelvepence. Not that it is indeed necessary, though usual, to lay in the indictment that the robbery was committed by putting in fear, it is sufficient if laid to be done by violence. (Trin. 3 Ann. by all the judges.) And when it is laid to be done by putting in fear, this does not imply any great degree of terror or affright in the party robbed; it is enough that so much force, or threatening by word or gesture, be used, as might create an apprehension of danger, or induce a man to part with his property without or against his consent. (Fost. 128.) And Mr. J. Ashhurst is reported to have thus expressed himself in delivering the opinion of the judges in Willan's case, Leach. 282: "The true definition of robbery is "the stealing, or taking from the person, "or in the presence of another, property of "any amount, with such a degree of force "or terror as to induce the party unwillingly "to part with his property, and whether the "terror arises from real or expected vio-"lence to the person, or from a sense of in-"jury to the character, the law makes no "kind of difference, for to most men the "idea of losing their fame and reputation "is equally if not more terrific than the "dread of personal injury. The principal "ingredient in robbery is a man's being "forced to part with his property; and the "judges are unanimously of opinion that "upon the principles of law, and the au-"thority of former decisions, a threat to "accuse a man of having committed the "greatest of all crimes is a sufficient force "to constitute the crime of robbery by "putting in fear"

This distinction has been frequently admitted by the judges in prosecutions for robbery, viz. that if any thing is snatched suddenly from the head, hand, or person of any one without any struggle on the part of the owner, or without any evidence of force or violence being exerted by the thief, it does not amount to robbery. But if any thing is broken or torn in consequence of the sudden seizure, it would be evidence of such force as would constitute a robbery; as where part of a lady's hair was torn away by snatching a diamond pin from her head, and an ear was torn by pulling off an earring, each of these cases was determined to be a robbery. Leach. 238.

So if a man be knocked down without previous warning, and stripped of his property while senseless, though strictly he cannot be said to be put in fear, yet this is undoubtedly a robbery. Or if a person with a sword drawn begs an alms, and I give it him through mistrust and apprehension of violence, this is a felonious robbery. (1 Hawk. P. C. 96.) Also if under a pretence of sale a man forcibly extorts money from another neither shall this subterfuge avail him. But it is doubted whether the forcing a higler, or other chapman to sell his wares, and giving him the full value of them, amounts to so heinous a crime as robbery. 4 Black. 243, 4.

This species of larceny is debarred of the benefit of clergy by stat. 23 Hen. 8, c. 1. and other subsequent statutes; not indeed in general, but only when committed in a dwelling-house, or in or near the king's highway. A robbery therefore in a distant field, or foot-path, was not punished with death, (1 Hal. P. C. 535.) but was open to the benefit of clergy, till the stat. 3 & 4 Wil. & M. c. 9, which takes away clergy from both principals and accessories before the fact, in robbery, wheresoever committed.

And by the 5 Geo. 3. c. 25, and 7 Geo. 3. c. 50, If any person shall rob any mail, in which letters are sent by the post, of any letter, packet, bag or mail of letters, such offender shall be guilty of felony, without benefit of clergy; but the indictments for mail robberies are generally drawn as for common highway robberies by taking a portmanteau, or a bag of a certain value from the person intrusted with the carriage of the letters.

A reward of 40*l.* is given for the apprehending and taking of a highwayman, to be paid within a month after conviction, by the sheriff of the county, &c. Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 8.

HIGLER, a person who carries from door to door, and sells by retail, small articles of provisions, &c.

HIIS TESTIBUS, words anciently added in deeds, after the In cujus rei testimonium; but this clause of hiis testibus has been disused since Hen. 8. Co. Lit. 6. Cowel. Blount.

HINDENI HOMINES, (from the Sax. Hindene, i. e. Societas) a society of men: In the time of the Saxons, all men were ranked into three classes, and valued, as to satisfaction for injuries, &c. according to the class they were in; the highest were valued at twelve hundred shillings, and were called Twelf-hindmen: the middle class at six hundred shillings, and called Sex-hindmen; and the lowest, at ten pounds or two hundred shillings, called Twy-hindmen: their wives were termed *Hindas. HIRING. A contract by which a qualified property may be transferred to the hirer. Hiring is always for a price, stipend, or recompence. By this contract the possession and a transient property is transferred for a particular time or use, on condition and agreement to restore the goods, &c. so hired, as soon as the time is expired or use performed; together with the price or stipend, either expressly agreed on by the parties, or left to be implied by law according to the value of the service. 2 Black. 453.

HIRST or HURST, a little wood. Domesday.

HITHE. See Hythe.

HLAFORDSOCNA, the Lord's protection; from the Sax. Halford, dominus, and socn, libertas. Cowel.

HLASOCNER, the benefit of the law. Ibid.

HLOTH, an unlawful company, from seven to thirty-five, cleared by a mulct, called hlothbota. Cowel.

HOAST-MEN, an antient gild, or fraternity at Newcastle upon Tyne, who dealt in sea-coal. Ibid.

HOBLERS or HOBILERS, (Hobellarii) were light horse-men; or certain tenants bound by their tenure to maintain a little light horse, for giving notice of any invasion made by enemies, or such like peril towards the sea side. Cowel.

HOCCUS SALTIS, seems to have been a hoke, hole or lesser pit of salt. Ibid.

HOCKETTOR, or HOCQUETEUR, an old French word for a knight of the post, a decayed man, a basket carrier. Ibid.

HOCK-TUESDAY-MONEY, a duty formerly given to the landlord that his tenants and bondmen might solemnise that day on which the English mastered the Danes, being the second Tuesday after Easter week. Cowel.

HOGA, HOGIUM, HOCH (from the Germ. hoogh, altus), a mountain or hill. Ibid.

HOGASTER (hogastrum), a little hog; also a young sheep. Ibid.

HOGENHINE, (Sax.) was one that came guest-wise to an inn or house, and lying there the third night was accounted as, and became, one of the family. Ibid.

HOGGACIUS, HOGGASTER, a sheep of the second year. And in many, especially the northern parts of England, sheep after they lose the name of lambs are called hogs, as in Kent, tags. Cowel.

HOGSHEAD, a vessel containing in liquid measure 63 gallons, being half a pipe, and the fourth part of a tun. 1 Ric. 3. c. 3.

HOGGUS, HOGIETUS, a hog or swine, beyond the growth of a pig. Cowel.

HOGS. The keeping of hogs in any city or market-town is indictable as a public nuisance. Salk. 460. 4 Black. 167.

HOKE-DAY, otherwise Hock-Tuesday, (dies martis, quam quindenam Paschæ vocant) in ancient times rents were reserved payable thereon; and so called because on that day the women in merriment stopped the ways with ropes, and pulled the passengers to them, desiring something to be laid out in pious uses. Cowel.

HOLDES, (from the Sax. hold, i. e. summus præpositus) bailiffs of a town or city.

HOLDING OVER. By stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 28, in case any tenant for life or years, or other person claiming under or by collusion with such tenant, shall wilfully hold over after the determination of the term, and demand made and notice in writing given, by him to whom the remainder or reversion of the premises shall belong, for delivering the possession thereof: such person, so holding over or keeping the other out of possession, shall pay for the time he detains the lands, at the rate of double their yearly value. And, by stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19, in case any tenant, having power to determine his lease shall give notice of his intention to quit the premises, and shall not deliver up the possession at the time contained in such notice, he shall thenceforth pay double the former rent for such time as he continues in possession.

Where a tenant has a lease for a term certain, and holds over after the expiration of it, it is not necessary for the landlord to give him any notice to quit in order to recover possession by ejectment. (1 Term Rep. 53. 162.) But if the landlord afterwards receives rent, or does any act by which he proves his assent to the continuance of the tenant, this turns the estate at sufferance into a tenancy from year to year, The notice by 4 Geo. 2, c. 28, may be given at any time previous to the end of the term, (Black. Rep. 1075.) or afterwards, though the double value can only be recovered from the delivery of the notice, and demand of possession. The double value may be recovered though it is not mentioned in the notice to quit. (1 T. R. 53.) The notice by the landlord must be in writing, but that by the tenant, under 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, may be by parol. (3 Burr. 1603.) The double value can only be recovered by action of debt, but the double rent may be recovered by distress, or otherwise, like single rent. (1 Black. 535.) No length of time is necessary to the validity of these notices under the statutes, to entitle the landlord to double value.

And if the tenant hold over after the expiration of his term, or after the end of the year, when he has had a proper notice to quit, the landlord may turn his cattle upon the premises, but without force, and the cattle cannot be distrained as damage feasant by the tenant. 7 Term Rep. 431.

HOLIDAYS. No holidays whatever shall be permitted or allowed to be kept at the London or other Wet-docks, or at any of the Custom-houses, or at the chief or any other office of Excise, except Christmas day, and Good Friday, general Fasts, and Thanksgiving days, and the anniversaries of the Restoration of Charles 2, and of the Coronation of his Majesty, and the Birth-days of their Majesties and the Prince of Wales. 46 Geo. 3, c. 82. 47 Geo. 3, stat. 1, c. 51. 48 Geo. 3, c. 126. 49 Geo. 3, c. 66.

And by 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 42, for the better observance of Good Friday, when bills or notes become due on that day they shall be payable on the day before.

The fifth of November is to be kept as a day of thanksgiving, 3 Jac. 1, c. 1. The 29th of May is to be an anniversary thanksgiving, 12 Car. 2. c. 14. The 30th of January to be kept as an anniversary day of humiliation, 12 Car. 2, c. 30, sec. 1. The 2d of September to be annually kept as a fast in London, 19 Car. 2, c. 3, sec. 28.

HOLM, (Sax. hulmas, insulas amnica) an isle or fenny ground, or a river-island. A place surrounded with water; as the Flatholmes and Stepholmes in the Severn near Bristol; but if it is not near the water it may then signify a hilly place, holm in Saxon being a hill or cliff. Cowel.

HOLT, (Sax.) a wood, wherefore the names of towns beginning or ending with holt, as Buckholt, &c. denote that formerly there was great plenty of wood at those places. Ibid.

HOLYHEAD, Rock-salt may be used in its salt-works, 6 Ann. c. 12, sec. 2.

HOMAGE, (homagium) is a French word, derived from homo. Co. Lit. 64. On the original grants of lands and tenements by way of fee under the feudal system, the lord not only obliged his tenants to certain services, but the vassal or tenant also usually did homage to his lord, openly and humbly kneeling, being ungirt, uncovered, and holding up his hands both together between those of the lord, who sat before him; and there professing, that "he did "become his man, from that day forth, "of life and limb and earthly honour:" and then he received a kiss from his lord. (Lit. s. 85.) Which ceremony was denominated homagium, or manhood, by the feudists, from the stated form of words, devenio vester homo. Britton, c. 68. 2 Black. 53.

——— HOMAGE AUNCESTREL.] If a man and his ancestors had immemorially holden lands of another, and his ancestors by the service of homage, this was called homage auncestral, and the lord was bound to warranty. Lit. sec. 143.

——— HOMAGE LIEGE.] Under the feudal system every owner of lands held them in subjection to some superior or lord, from whom or whose ancestors the tenant or vassal had received them; and there was a mutual trust or confidence subsisting between the lord and vassal, that the lord should protect the vassal in the enjoyment of the territory he had granted him, and on the other hand, that the vassal should be faithful to the lord, and defend him against all his enemies. This obligation on the part of the vassal was called his fidelitas, or fealty; and an oath of fealty was required by the feudal law to be taken by all tenants to their landlord, which is couched in almost the same terms as our ancient oath of allegiance, (2 Feud. 5, 6, 7) except that in the usual oath of fealty there was frequently a saving or exception of the faith due to a superior lord by name, under whom the landlord himself was perhaps only a tenant or vassal. (1 Black. 367.) But when the acknowledgment was made to the absolute superior himself, who was vassal to no man, it was no longer called the oath of fealty, but the oath of allegiance, and therein the tenant swore to bear faith to his sovereign lord, in opposition to all men, without any saving or exception: "contra omnes homines fidelitatem fecit." (2 Feud. 99.) Land held by this exalted species of fealty was called feudium ligium, a liege fee; the vassals homines ligii, or liege men; and the sovereign their dominus ligius, or liege lord. And when sovereign princes did homage to each other for lands held under their respective sovereignties, a distinction was always made between simple homage, which was only an acknowledgment of tenure, (7 Rep. Calvin's Case, 7.) and liege homage, which included the fealty before mentioned, and the services consequent upon it. Thus when our Edward 3, in 1329, did homage to Philip 6th of France for his ducal dominions on that continent, it was warmly disputed of what species the homage was to be, whether liege or simple homage. (2 Cart. 401. Mod. Un. Hist. 23. 420.) But with us in England, it becoming a settled principle of tenure, that all lands in the kingdom are holden of the king as their sovereign and lord paramount, no oath but that of fealty could ever be taken to inferior lords, and the oath of allegiance was necessarily confined to the person of the king alone. Ibid.

HOMAGE JURY, is a jury in a court-baron, consisting of tenants that do homage to the lord of the fee; and these by the feodists are called pares curiæ: they inquire and make presentments of defaults and deaths of tenants, assess fines, admittances, and surrenders, in the Lord's court, &c. Kitch.

And if the number of suitors should so fail as not to leave sufficient to make a jury or homage, that is, two tenants at the least, the manor itself is lost. 2 Black. 91.

HOMAGER, one that does or is bound to do homage to another. Cowel.

HOMAGIO RESPECTUANDO, a writ to the escheator, commanding him to deliver seisin of lands to the heir of the king's tenant, notwithstanding his homage not done. F. N. B. 269. And the heir at full age was to do homage to the king, or agree with him for respiting the same. New Nat. Br. 563. Cowel.

HOMAGIUM REDDERE, to renounce homage, when the vassal made a solemn declaration of disowning and defying his lord. For which there was a set form prescribed by the feudatory laws. Cowel.

HOMESOKEN, HOMSOKEN, or HAMSOKEN, and HAMSOCA, (from the Sax. ham, domus, and socnæ, immunitas). In ancient times some men had an immunity from amercement for entering houses violently, and without license. Cowel.

Homesoken is also the privilege or freedom which every man has in his house, and he who invades that freedom is properly said facere homesoken, perhaps what we now call burglary. Ibid.

HOMESTALL, a mansion-house, or seat in the country. Bailey.

HOMICIDE, (homicidium) is the killing of any human creature, and is of three kinds, 1st, justifiable, 2dly, excusable, and 3dly, felonious.

I. ——— JUSTIFIABLE.] Justifiable homicide has no share of guilt at all, and is of divers kinds.

1. Such as is owing to some unavoidable necessity, without any will, intention, or desire, and without any inadvertence or negligence, in the party killing; and therefore without any shadow of blame. As, for instance, by virtue of such an office as obliges one, in the execution of public justice, to put a malefactor to death, who hath forfeited his life by the laws and verdict of his country. This is an act of necessity, and even of civil duty; and therefore not only justifiable, but commendable, where the law requires it. But the law must require it, otherwise it is not justifiable: therefore wantonly to kill the greatest of malefactors, a felon or a traitor, attainted or outlawed, deliberately, uncompelled, and extrajudicially, is murder.—(1 Hal. P. C. 497.) And further, if judgment of death be given by a judge not authorized by lawful commission, and execution is done accordingly, the judge is guilty of murder (1 Hawk. P. C. 70. 1 Hal. P. C. 497). And upon this account sir Matthew Hale himself, though he accepted the place of a judge of the common pleas under Cromwell's government, (since it is necessary to decide the disputes of civil property in the worst of times,) yet declined to sit on the crown side at the assises, and try prisoners; having very strong objections to the legality of the usurper's commission, (Burnet in his life,) a distinction perhaps rather too refined; since the punishment of crimes is at least as necessary to society, as maintaining the boundaries of property. Also such judgment, when legal, must be executed by the proper officer, or his appointed deputy; for no one else is required by law to do it, which requisition it is that justifies the homicide. If another person doth it of his own head, it is held to be murder: (1 Hal. P. C. 501. 1 Hawk. P. C. 70,) even though it be the judge himself. (Dalt. Just. c. 150.) It must further be executed, servato juris ordine: it must pursue the sentence of the court. If an officer beheads one who is adjudged to be hanged, or vice versa, it is murder. (Finch. L. 31. 3 Inst. 52. 1 Hal. P. C. 501.) For he is merely ministerial, and therefore only justified when he acts under the authority and compulsion of the law: but, if a sheriff changes one kind of death for another, he then acts by his own authority, which extends not to the commission of homicide, and besides, this licence might occasion a very gross abuse of his power. The king indeed may remit part of a sentence; as in the case of treason, all but the beheading: but this is no change, no introduction of a new punishment; and in the case of felony, where the judgment is to be hanged, the king (it hath been said) cannot legally order even a peer to be beheaded. 3 Inst. 52. 212. 4 Black. 179.

2. Homicide, committed for the advancement of public justice, is by permission of the law justifiable in the following cases. 1. Where an officer, in the execution of his office, either in a civil or criminal case, kills a person that assaults and resists him. (1 Hal. P. C. 494. 1 Hawk. P. C. 71.) 2. If an officer, or any private person, attempts to take a man charged with felony, and is resisted, and in the endeavour to take him kills him. (1 Hal. P. C. 494.) 3. In case of a riot, or rebellious assembly the officers endeavouring to disperse the mob are justifiable in killing them, both at common law, (1 Hal. P. C. 495. 1 Hawk. P. C. 161,) and by the riot act, 1 Geo. 1. c. 5. 4. Where the prisoners in a gaol, or going to gaol, assault the gaoler or officer, and he in his defence kills any of them, it is justifiable, for the sake of preventing an escape. (1 Hal. P. C. 496.) 5. If trespassers in forests, parks, chases, or warrens, will not surrender themselves to the keepers, they may be slain by virtue of the statute 21 Edw. 1. st. 2, de malefactoribus in parcis, and 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 10.—But, in all these cases, there must be an apparent necessity on the officer's side; viz. that the party could not be arrested or apprehended, the riot could not be suppressed, the prisoners could not be kept in hold, the deer-stealers could not but escape, unless such homicide were committed: otherwise without such absolute necessity it is not justifiable. 6. If the champions in a trial by battle killed either of them the other, such homicide was justifiable, and was imputed to the just judgment of God, who was thereby presumed to have decided in favour of the truth. (1 Hawk. P. C. 71.) 4 Black. 179, 180.

3. In the next place, such homicide as is committed for the prevention of any forcible and atrocious crime, is justifiable by the law of nature; (Puff. L. of N. l. 2. c. 5,) and also by the law of England, as it stood so early as the time of Bracton, (fol. 155.) and as it is since declared in statute 24 Hen. 8. c. 5, if any person attempts a robbery or murder of another, or attempts to break open a house in the night time, (which extends also to an attempt to burn it.) (1 Hal. P. C. 488,) and shall be killed in such attempt, the slayer shall be acquitted and discharged. This reaches not to any crime unaccompanied with force, as picking of pockets; or to the breaking open of any house in the day time, unless it carries with it an attempt of robbery also. 4 Black. 179, 180.

The English law likewise justifies a woman, killing one who attempts to ravish her: (Bac. Elem. 34. 1 Hawk. P. C. 71,) and so, too, the husband or father may justify killing a man, who attempts a rape upon his wife or daughter; but not if he takes them in adultery by consent, for the one is forcible and felonious, but not the other. (1 Hal. P. C. 485, 486.) And Blackstone does not doubt but the forcibly attempting a crime of a still more detestable nature, may be equally resisted by the death of the unnatural aggressor. For the one uniform principle that runs through our own, and all other laws, seems to be this; that where a crime, in itself capital, is endeavoured to be committed by force, it is lawful to repel that force by the death of the party attempting. 4 Black. 180.

In these instances of justifiable homicide the slayer is in no kind of fault whatsoever, not even in the minutest degree; and is therefore to be totally acquitted and discharged, with commendation rather than blame. 4 Black. 181.

II. ——— Excusable homicide imports some fault, some error, or omission, so trivial however, that the law excuses it from the guilt of felony, though in strictness it judges it deserving of some little degree of punishment; and is of two sorts, either per infortunium, by misadventure, or se defendendo, upon a principle of self-preservation. We will first see wherein these two species of homicide are distinct, and then wherein they agree.

1. Homicide per infortunium, or misadventure, is where a man, doing a lawful act, without any intention of hurt, unfortunately kills another; as where a man is at work with a hatchet, and the head thereof flies off and kills a stander-by; or where a person qualified to keep a gun is shooting at a mark, and undesignedly kills a man, (1 Hawk. P. C. 73, 74.) for the act is lawful, and the effect is merely accidental. So where a parent is moderately correcting his child, a master his apprentice, or scholar, or an officer punishing a criminal, and happens to occasion his death, it is only misadventure, for the act of correction was lawful; but if it exceeds the bounds of moderation, either in the manner, the instrument, or the quantity of punishment, and death ensues, it is manslaughter at least, and in some cases (according to circumstances) murder, (1 Hal. P. C. 473, 474.) for the act of immoderate correction is unlawful. 4 Black. 181, 182.

But a tilt or tournament, the martial diversion of our ancestors, was however an unlawful act, and so are boxing and sword-playing, the succeeding amusement of their posterity; and therefore if a knight in the former case, or a gladiator in the latter, be killed, such killing is felony of manslaughter. But if the king command, or permit such diversion, it is said to be only misadventure, for then the act is lawful. (1 Hal. P. C. 473. 1 Hawk. P. C. 74.) Likewise to whip another's horse, whereby he runs over a child and kills him, is held to be accidental in the rider, for he has done nothing unlawful, but manslaughter in the person who whipped him, for the act was a trespass, and at best a piece of idleness, of inevitably dangerous consequence. (Hawk. P. C. 73.) And in general, if death ensues in consequence of an idle, dangerous, and unlawful sport, as shooting, or casting stones in a town, or the barbarous diversion of cock-throwing, in these and similar cases the slayer is guilty of manslaughter, and not misadventure only, for these are unlawful acts. Ibid. 74. 1 Hal. P. C. 472. Fost. 261. 4 Black. 182, 3.

——— 2. Homicide in self-defence, or se defendendo, upon a sudden affray, is also excusable rather than justifiable, by the English law. This species of self-defence must be distinguished from that now just mentioned, as calculated to hinder the perpetration of a capital crime; which is not only a matter of excuse, but of justification. But the self-defence which we are now speaking of is that whereby a man may protect himself from an assault, or the like, in the course of a sudden broil or quarrel, by killing him who assaults him. And this is what the law expresses by the word chance-medley, or (as some rather choose to write it) chaud-medley, the former of which in its etymology signifies a casual affray, the latter an affray in the heat of blood or passion; both of them of pretty much the same import, but the former is in common speech too often erroneously applied to any manner of homicide by misadventure, whereas it appears by the stat. 24 Hen. 8, c. 5, and our ancient books, (Staundf. P. C. 16,) that it is properly applied to such killing as happens in self-defence upon a sudden rencounter. (3 Inst. 55, 57. Fost. 275, 276.) This right of natural defence does not imply a right of attacking, for instead of attacking one another for injuries past or impending, men need only have recourse to the proper tribunals of justice. They cannot therefore legally exercise this right of preventive defence but in sudden and violent cases, when certain and immediate suffering would be the consequence of waiting for the assistance of the law. Wherefore to excuse homicide by the plea of self-defence it must appear that the slayer had no other possible (or at least probable) means of escaping from his assailant. 4 Black. 183, 4.

It is frequently difficult to distinguish this species of homicide (upon chance-medly in self-defence) from that of manslaughter, in the proper, legal sense of the word.—(3 Inst. 55.) But the true criterion between them seems to be this, when both parties are actually combating at the time when the mortal stroke is given, the slayer is then guilty of manslaughter; but if the slayer hath not begun to fight or (having begun) endeavours to decline any further struggle, and afterwards being closely pressed by his antagonist, kills him to avoid his own destruction, this is homicide excusable by self-defence: (Fost. 277.) For which reason the law requires that the person who kills another in his own defence should have retreated as far as he conveniently or safely can, to avoid the violence of the assault, before he turns upon his assailant, and that not fictitiously, or in order to watch his opportunity, but from a real tenderness of shedding his brother's blood. And though it may be cowardice in time of war between two independent nations to fly from an enemy, yet between two fellow subjects the law countenances no such point of honour; because the king and his courts are the vindices injuriarum, and will give to the party wronged all the satisfaction he deserves. (1 Hal. P. C. 481, 483.) The party assaulted must therefore fly as far as he conveniently can, either by reason of some wall, ditch, or other impediment, or as far as the fierceness of the assault will permit him: (1 Hal. P. C. 483.) for it may be so fierce as not to allow him to yield a step, without manifest danger of his life, or enormous bodily harm; and then in his defence he may kill his assailant instantly. And this is the doctrine of universal justice, (Puff. b. 2. c. 5. s. 13,) as well as of the municipal law. 4 Black. 184.

And, as the manner of the defence, so also is the time to be considered; for if the person assaulted does not fall upon the aggressor till the affray is over, or when he is running away, this is revenge, and not defence. Neither under the colour of self-defence will the law permit a man to screen himself from the guilt of deliberate murder: for if two persons, A and B, agree to fight a duel, and A gives the first onset, and B retreats as far as he safely can, and then kills A, this is murder, because of the previous malice and concerted design. (1 Hal. P. C. 479.) But if A upon a sudden quarrel assaults B first, and upon B's returning the assault A really and bona fide flies, and being driven to the wall turns again upon B and kills him, this may be se defendendo according to some of our writers, (1 Hal. P. C. 482.) though others (1 Hawk. P. C. 75.) have thought this opinion too favourable, in as much as the necessity to which he is at last reduced originally arose from his own fault. Under this excuse of self-defence the principal civil and natural relations are comprehended; therefore master and servant, parent and child, husband and wife, killing an assailant in the necessary defence of each other, respectively, are excused; the act of the relation assisting being construed the same as the act of the party himself. 1 Hal. P. C. 484. 4 Black. 185, 6.

There is one species of homicide se defendendo, where the party slain is equally innocent as he who occasions his death; and yet this homicide is also excusable from the great universal principle of self-preservation, which prompts every man to save his own life preferable to that of another, where one of them must inevitably perish. As, among others, in that case mentioned by lord Bacon, (Elem. c. 5. 1 Hawk. P. C. 73,) where two persons being shipwrecked, and getting on the same plank, but finding it not able to save them both, one of them thrusts the other from it, whereby he is drowned. He who thus preserves his own life at the expense of another man's is excusable through unavoidable necessity, and the principle of self-defence; since their both remaining on the same weak plank is a mutual though innocent attempt upon, and an endangering of, each other's life. Ibid.

These two species of homicide, by misadventure and self-defence, agree in their blame and punishment: for the law sets so high a value upon the life of a man, that it always intends some misbehaviour in the person who takes it away, unless by the command or express permission of the law. In the case of misadventure it presumes negligence, or at least a want of sufficient caution in him who was so unfortunate as to commit it; who therefore is not altogether faultless. (1 Hawk. P. C. 72.) And as to the necessity which excuses a man who kills another se defendendo, lord Bacon (Elem. c. 5.) intitles it necessitas culpabilis, and thereby distinguishes it from the former necessity of killing a thief or a malefactor. For the law intends that the quarrel or assault arose from some unknown wrong, or some provocation, either in word or deed; and since in quarrels both parties may be, and usually are, in some fault; and it scarcely can be tried who was originally in the wrong; the law will not hold the survivor entirely guiltless. But it is clear in the other case that where I kill a thief that breaks into my house, the original default can never be upon my side. The law besides may have a further view, to make the crime of homicide more odious, and to caution men how they venture to kill another upon their own private judgment, by ordaining that he who slays his neighbour, without an express warrant from the law so to do, shall in no case be absolutely free from guilt. 4 Black. 185, 186.

The penalty inflicted by our laws is said by sir Edward Coke to have been anciently no less than death, (2 Inst. 148. 315.) which however is with reason denied by later and more accurate writers. (1 Hal. P. C. 425. 1 Hawk. P. C. 75. Fost. 282, &c.) It seems rather to have consisted in a forfeiture, some say of all the goods and chattels; others of only part of them by way of fine or wenegild; (Fost. 287.) which was probably disposed of, as in France, in pios usus, according to the humane superstition of the times, for the benefit of his soul who was thus suddenly sent to his account, with all his imperfections on his head. But that reason having long ceased, and the penalty (especially if a total forfeiture) growing more severe than was intended, in proportion as personal property has become more considerable, the delinquent has now, and has had, as early as our records will reach, (Fost. 283.) a pardon and writ of restitution of his goods as a matter of course and right, only paying for suing out the same. (2 Hawk. P. C. 381.) And indeed to prevent this expense, in cases where the death has notoriously happened by misadventure, or in self-defence, the judges will usually permit (if not direct) a general verdict of acquittal. Fost. 288.

And where the homicide does not amount to murder or manslaughter it is now the universal practice to direct an acquittal. 4 Black. 188.

III. ——— FELONIOUS HOMICIDE is the killing of a human creature of any age or sex, without justification or excuse; and it may be done either by killing one's self, or another.

1. Self-murder. The law of England has ranked this among the highest crimes, making it a peculiar species of felony, a felony committed on one's self: and this admits of accessories before the fact, as well as other felonies; for if one persuades another to kill himself, and he does so, the adviser is guilty of murder. (Keilw. 136.) A felo de se, therefore, is he that deliberately puts an end to his own existence, or commits any unlawful malicious act, the consequence of which is his own death; as if attempting to kill another he runs upon his antagonist's sword, or shooting at another the gun bursts and kills himself. (1 Hawk. P. C. 68. 1 Hal. P. C. 413.) The party must be of years of discretion, and in his senses, else it is no crime. But this excuse ought not to be strained to that length to which our coroners juries are apt to carry it, viz. that the very act of suicide is an evidence of insanity; as if every man who acts contrary to reason had no reason at all: for the same argument would prove every other criminal non compos, as well as the self-murderer. The law very rationally judges that every melancholy or hypochondriac fit does not deprive a man of the capacity of discerning right from wrong, which is necessary to form a legal excuse. And therefore if a real lunatic kills himself in a lucid interval he is a felo de se as much as another man. 1 Hal. P. C. 412. 4 Black. 189.

The laws for this offence of self-murder can only inflict a punishment upon what the felo de se has left behind him, his reputation and fortune; on the former by an ignominious burial in the highway, with a stake driven through his body; on the latter by a forfeiture of all his goods and chattels to the king. And it is observable that this forfeiture has relation to the time of the act done in the felon's lifetime, which was the cause of his death. As if husband and wife be possessed jointly of a term of years in land, and the husband drowns himself, the land shall be forfeited to the king, and the wife shall not have it by survivorship. For by the act of casting himself into the water he forfeits the term, which gives a title to the king prier to the wife's title by survivorship, which could not accrue till the instant of her husband's death. (Finch. L. 216.) And though the letter of the law herein borders a little upon severity, yet it is some alleviation that the power of mitigation is left in the breast of the sovereign, who upon this, as on all other occasions, is reminded by the oath of his office to execute judgment in mercy. 4 Black. 189, 190.

2. Manslaughter is the unlawful killing of another, without malice, either express or implied, which may be either voluntarily, upon a sudden heat, or involuntarily, but in the commission of some unlawful act.

And hence it follows that in manslaughter there can be no accessaries before the fact, because it must be done without premeditation. 4 Black. 190, 191.

As to the first, or voluntary branch, if upon a sudden quarrel two persons fight, and one of them kills the other, this is manslaughter; and so it is if they upon such an occasion go out and fight in a field; for this is one continued act of passion, (1 Hawk. P. C. 82.) and the law pays that regard to human frailty as not to put a hasty and deliberate act upon the same footing with regard to guilt. So also if a man be greatly provoked, as by pulling his nose, or other great indignity, and immediately kills the aggressor, though this is not excusable se defendendo, since there is no absolute necessity for doing it to preserve himself; yet neither is it murder, for there is no previous malice; but it is manslaughter. (Kelyng. 135.) But in this, and in every other case of homicide, upon provocation, if there be a sufficient cooling-time for passion to subside and reason to interpose, and the person so provoked afterwards kills the other, this is deliberate revenge and not heat of blood, and accordingly amounts to murder. (Fost. 296.) So if a man takes another in the act of adultery with his wife, and kills him directly upon the spot; yet it is not absolutely ranked in the class of justifiable homicide, as in case of a forcible rape, but it is manslaughter. (1 Hal. P. C. 486.) It is however the lowest degree of it; and therefore in such a case the court directed the burning in the hand to be gently inflicted, because there could not be a greater provocation. (Sir T. Raym. 212.) Manslaughter therefore on a sudden provocation differs from excusable homicide se defendendo in this, that in one case there is an apparent necessity, for self-preservation, to kill the aggressor; in the other no necessity at all, being only a sudden act of revenge. 4 Black. 191, 192.

The second branch, or involuntary manslaughter, differs also from homicide excusable by misadventure in this, that misadventure always happens in consequence of a lawful act, but this species of manslaughter in consequence of an unlawful one. As if two persons play at sword and buckler, unless by the king's command, and one of them kills the other, this is manslaughter; because the original act was unlawful, but it is not murder, for the one had no intent to do the other any personal mischief (3 Inst. 56.) So where a person does an act, lawful in itself, but in an unlawful manner, and without due caution and circumspection: as when a workman flings down a stone or piece of timber into the street, and kills a man; this may be either misadventure, manslaughter, or murder, according to the circumstances under which the original act was done: if it were in a country village, where few passengers are, and he calls out to all people to have a care, it is misadventure only; but if it were in London or any populous town, where people are continually passing, it is manslaughter, though he gives loud warning (Kel. 40.); and murder, if he knows of their passing, and gives no warning at all, for then it is malice against all mankind (3 Inst. 57.) And, in general, when an involuntary killing happens, in consequence of an unlawful act, it will be either murder or manslaughter according to the nature of the act which occasioned it. If it be in prosecution of a felonious intent, or in its consequences naturally tended to bloodshed, it will be murder; but, if no more was intended than a mere civil trespass, it will only amount to manslaughter (Foster 258. 1 Hawk. P. C. 84.) 4 Black. 192, 3.

The crime of manslaughter amounts to felony, but is within the benefit of clergy; and the offender was formerly burnt in the hand*, and he forfeits all his goods and chattels. Ibid.

But there was one species of manslaughter, which was punished as murder, the benefit of clergy being taken away from it by statute; namely, the offence of mortally stabbing another, though done upon sudden provocation. For by stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 8. it is enacted, that if any one thrusts or stabs another, not then having a weapon drawn, or who hath not then first stricken the party stabbing, so that he dies thereof within six months after, the offender shall have the benefit of clergy, though he did it not of malice aforethought. But this statute which was made on account of the frequent quarrels and stabbings with short daggers, between the Scotch and the English, at the accession of James the first (Ld. Raym. 140.); and, being therefore of a temporary nature, ought to have expired with the mischief which it meant to remedy, has been recently altered by stat. 43 Geo. 3. c. 58. whereby stabbing in general is made a capital offence.†

Wilful Murder. Murder is defined, or rather described, by sir Edward Coke to be, "when a person of sound memory and discretion, unlawfully killeth any reasonable creature in being, and under the king's peace,

* But by 19 Geo. 3. c. 74. instead of burning in the hand, the court may, if they think fit, impose a moderate pecuniary fine, and this shall have the same legal effect and consequences as burning in the hand.

† By 43 Geo. 3. c. 58. persons in England or Ireland who shall stab or cut with intent to murder, rob, or maim any of his majesty's subjects, or to prevent arrests of culprits, shall be guilty of felony without benefit of clergy.

with malice aforethought, either express or implied." 3 Inst. 47.

First, it must be committed by a person of sound memory and discretion, for lunatics or infants, as was formerly observed, (see Age.) are incapable of committing any crime, unless in such cases where they shew a consciousness of doing wrong, and of course a discretion, or discernment, between good and evil. 4 Black. 195.

Next, it happens when a person of such sound discretion unlawfully killeth. The unlawfulness arises from the killing without warrant or excuse: and there must also be an actual killing to constitute murder: for a bare assault with intent to kill, is only a great misdemeanor. (1 Hal. P.C. 425). The killing may be by poisoning, striking, starving, drowning, and a thousand other forms of death, by which human nature may be overcome. And if a person be indicted for one species of killing, as by poisoning, the bare administration of which alone is now felony without clergy, 43 Geo. 3. c. 58, he cannot be convicted by evidence of a totally different species of death, as by shooting with a pistol or starving. But where they only differ in circumstance, as if a wound be alleged to be given with a sword, and it proves to have arisen from a staff, an axe, or a hatchet, this difference is immaterial. There was also, by the ancient common law, one species of killing held to be murder, which may be dubious at this day, as there hath not been an instance wherein it has been held to be murder for many ages past. 1 Fost. 132; that is by bearing false witness against another, with an express premeditated design to take away his life, so as the innocent person be condemned and executed, (Mirror, c. 1. § 9. Brit. c. 2. Bracton. l. 3. c. 4.) And Lord Coke says expressly, "it is not holden for murder at this day." 3 Inst. 48; for though there is no doubt but this is equally murder in foro conscientiæ as killing with a sword; yet few honest witnesses would venture to give evidence against a prisoner tried for his life, if thereby they made themselves liable to be prosecuted as murderers. 4 Black. 196,7.

If a man however does such an act, of which the probable consequence may be, and eventually is death; such killing may be murder, although no stroke be struck by himself, and no killing may be primarily intended; as was the case of the unnatural son, who exposed his sick father to the air, against his will, by reason whereof he died, (1 Hawk. P. C. 78); of the harlot, who laid her child under leaves in an orchard, where a kite struck it and killed it, (1 Hal. P. C. 432); and of the parish officers, who shifted a child from parish to parish, till it died for want of care and sustenance. (Palm. 545). If a master refuses his apprentice necessary food or sustenance, or treats him with such continued harshness and severity as his death is occasioned thereby, the law will imply malice, and the offence will be murder. Leach. 127. So also, if a man hath a beast that is used to do mischief; and he knowing it suffers it to go abroad, and it kills a man, even this is manslaughter in the owner; but if he had purposely turned it loose, though barely to frighten people, and make what is called sport, it is with us as much murder as if he had incited a bear or dog to worry them, (Ibid. 431). If a physician or surgeon gives his patient a potion or plaister to cure him, which contrary to expectation kills him, this is neither murder nor manslaughter, but misadventure; and he shall not be punished criminally, however liable he might formerly have been to a civil action for neglect or ignorance, (Mirr. c. 4. § 16. 3 Black. 122): but it hath been holden, that if it be not a regular physician or surgeon, who administers the medicine or performs the operation, it is manslaughter at the least, (Britt. c. 5. 4 Inst. 251.) Yet sir Matthew Hale very justly questions the law of this determination, (1 Hal P. C. 430.) In order also to make the killing murder, it is requisite that the party die within a year and a day after the stroke received, or cause of death administered, in the computation of which the whole day upon which the hurt was done, shall be reckoned the first. 1 Hawk. P. C. 79. 4 Black. 196,7.

Farther, the person killed must be "a reasonable creature in being, and under the king's peace," at the time of the killing. Therefore to kill an alien, a jew, or an outlaw, who are all under the king's peace and protection, is as much murder as to kill the most regular born Englishman: except he be an alien enemy in time and course of war, (3 Inst. 50. 1 Hal. P. C. 433). To kill a child in its mother's womb is not strictly speaking murder, and until a recent statute only a great misprision, but it is now enacted by 43 Geo. 3. c. 58. that if any person shall administer poison or other noxious or destructive thing with intent to cause the miscarriage of any woman quick with child, they shall be guilty of felony without clergy.

And persons administering medicines to women, though not quick with child, to procure miscarriage, are guilty of felony, and to be punished by fine, imprisonment, the pillory, or public or private whipping, or to be transported for not exceeding fourteen years. s. 2.

And before the above statute if the child was born alive, and died by reason of the potion or bruises it received in the womb, it was the better opinion that it was murder in such as administered or gave them, (3 Inst. 50.

1 Hawk. P. C. 80, but see 1 Hal. P. C. 433). There was also one case where it was difficult to prove the child's being born alive; namely, in the case of the murder of bastard children by the unnatural mother, and it was therefore enacted by statute 21 Jac. 1. c. 27, that if any woman be delivered of a child, which if born alive should by law be a bastard; and endeavoured privately to conceal its death, by burying the child or the like, the mother so offending was to suffer death as in the case of murder, unless she could prove by one witness at least that the child was actually born dead. This statute has however been recently repealed, and it is enacted by statute 43 Geo. 3. c. 58, that the trials of women for murder of bastards shall proceed as in other cases of murder, s. 3, and that women acquitted of such murder, may, where the jury find that the mother concealed her pregnancy, be imprisoned for not exceeding two years.

Lastly, the killing must be committed with malice aforethought, to make it the crime of murder. This is the grand criterion which now distinguishes murder from other killing: and this malice prepense, malitia præcogitata, is not so properly spite or malevolence to the deceased in particular, as any evil design in general, the dictate of a wicked, depraved, and malignant heart, (Foster, 256); and it may be either express or implied in law. Express malice is when one, with a sedate deliberate mind and formed design, doth kill another: which formed design is evidenced by external circumstances discovering that inward intention; as laying in wait, antecedent menaces, former grudges, and concerted schemes to do him some bodily harm (1 Hal P.C. 451.) This takes in the case of deliberate duelling, where both parties meet avowedly with an intent to murder. Also, if even upon a sudden provocation one beats another in a cruel and unusual manner, so that he dies, though he did not intend his death, yet he is guilty of murder by express malice; that is, by an express evil design, the genuine sense of malitia. As when a park-keeper tied a boy, that was stealing wood, to a horse's tail, and dragged him along the park; when a master corrected his servant with an iron bar; and a schoolmaster stamped on his scholar's belly; so that each of the sufferers died; these were justly held to be murders, because the correction being excessive, and such as could not proceed but from a bad heart, it was equivalent to a deliberate act of slaughter (1 Hal. P. C. 454, 473, 474.) Neither shall he be guilty of a less crime, who kills another in consequence of such a wilful act, as shews him to be an enemy to all mankind in general; as going deliberately, and with an intent to do mischief (Ld. Raym. 143.), upon a horse used to strike, or coolly discharging a gun among a multitude of people (1 Hawk. P. C. 74.) So if a man resolves to kill the next man he meets, and does kill him, it is murder, although he knew him not; for this is universal malice. And, if two or more come together to do an unlawful act against the king's peace, of which the probable consequence might be bloodshed, as to beat a man, to commit a riot, or to rob a park; and one of them kills a man; it is murder in them all, because of the unlawful act, the malitia præcogitata, or evil intended before-hand (Ibid. 84.) 4 Black. Com. 199, 200.

Also in many cases where no malice is expressed, the law will imply it: as, where a man wilfully poisons another, in such a deliberate act the law presumes malice, though no particular enmity can be proved (1 Hal. P. C. 455.) And if a man kills another suddenly, without any, or without a considerable provocation, the law implies malice; for no person, unless of an abandoned heart, would be guilty of such an act, upon a slight or no apparent cause. Ibid.

And no affront, by words or gestures only, is a sufficient provocation, so as to excuse or extenuate such acts of violence as manifestly endanger the life of another (1 Hawk. P. C. 82. 1 Hal. P. C. 455, 456.) But if the person so provoked had unfortunately killed the other, by beating him in such a manner as shewed only an intent to chastise and not to kill him, the law so far considers the provocation of contumelious behaviour, as to adjudge it only manslaughter, and not murder (Fost. 291.) In like manner, if one kills an officer of justice, either civil or criminal, in the execution of his duty, or any of his assistant's endeavouring to conserve the peace, or any private person endeavouring to suppress an affray or apprehend a felon, knowing his authority or the intention with which he interposes, the law will imply malice, and the killer shall be guilty of murder (1 Hal. P. C. 457. Foster, 308, &c.) And if one intends to do another felony, and undesignedly kills a man, this is also murder (1 Hal. P. C. 465.) Thus if one shoots at A and misses him, but kills B, this is murder; because of the previous felonious intent, which the law transfers from one to the other. The same is the case where one lays poison for A; and B, against whom the prisoner had no malicious intent, takes it, and it kills him; this is likewise murder (Ibid. 466.) So also, if one gives a woman with child a medicine to procure abortion, and it operates so violently as to kill the woman, this is murder in the person who gave it (Ibid. 429.) It were endless to go through all the cases of homicide, which have been adjudged either expressly, or impliedly, malicious: these therefore, may suffice as a specimen; and we may take it for a general rule, that all homicide is malicious, and of course amounts to murder, unless where justified by the command or permission of the law; excused on the account of accident or self-preservation; or alleviated into manslaughter, by being either the involuntary consequence of some act, not strictly lawful, or (if voluntary) occasioned by some sudden and sufficiently violent provocation. And all these circumstances of justification, excuse, or alleviation, it is incumbent upon the prisoner to make out, to the satisfaction of the court and jury: the latter of whom are to decide whether the circumstances alledged are proved to have actually existed; the former, how far they extend to take away or mitigate the guilt. For all homicide is presumed to be malicious, until the contrary appeareth upon evidence (Fost. 255.) 4 Black. 200, 1.

——— The punishment of murder, and that of manslaughter, were formerly one and the same; both having the benefit of clergy: so that none but unlearned persons, who least knew the guilt of it, were put to death for this enormous crime (1 Hal. P. C. 450.) But now, by stat. 23 Hen. 8. c. 1. 1 Edw. 6. c. 12. 4 & 5 Ph. & Mar. c. 4. the benefit of clergy is taken away from murderers through malice prepense, their abettors, procurers, and counsellors. And it is now enacted by stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 37. "that the judge, before whom any person is found guilty of wilful murder, shall pronounce sentence immediately after conviction, unless he sees cause to postpone it; and shall, in passing sentence, direct him to be executed on the next day but one, (unless the same shall be Sunday, and then on the Monday following) and that his body be delivered to the surgeons to be dissected and anatomized (Fost. 107.): and that the judge may direct his body to be afterwards hung in chains*, but in no wise to be buried without dissection. And, during the short but awful interval between sentence and execution, the prisoner shall be kept alone, and sustained with only bread and water. But a power is allowed to the judge upon good and sufficient cause to respite the execution, and relax the other restraints of this act.

Parricide, or the murder of one's parents or children, is in our English laws treated no otherwise than as simple murder, unless the child was also the servant of his parent (1 Hal. P. C. 380.) Fos. 107, 324, 336.

——— PETIT TREASON, according to the stat. 25 Edw. 3. c. 2. may happen three ways: by a servant killing his master, a wife her husband, or an ecclesiastical person (either secular or regular) his superior, to whom he owes faith and obedience. A servant who kills his master whom he has left, upon a grudge conceived against him during his service, is guilty of petit treason: for the traiterous intention was hatched while the relation subsisted between them; and this is only an execution of that intention (1 Hawk. P. C. 89. 1 Hal. P. C. 380.) So if a wife be divorced a mensa et thoro, still the vinculum matrimonii subsists; and if she kills such divorced husband, she is a traitress (1 Hal. P. C. 381.) And a clergyman is understood to owe canonical obedience to the bishop who ordained him, to him in whose diocese he is beneficed, and also to the metropolitan of such suffragan or diocesan bishop: and therefore to kill any of these is petit treason. (Ibid.)

As to the rest, whatever has been said, or remains to be observed hereafter, with respect to wilful murder, is also applicable to the crime of petit treason, which is no other than murder in its most odious degree: except that the trial shall be as in cases of high treason, before the improvements therein made by the statutes of William III. (Fost. 337.) But a person indicted for petit treason, may be acquitted thereof, and found guilty of manslaughter or murder (Foster, 106. 1 Hal. P. C. 378. 2 Hal. P. C. 184.); and in such case two witnesses are not necessary, as in case of petit treason they are; for it has been determined, that a person indicted for petit treason, may upon the evidence of one witness be convicted of murder, though acquitted of the petit treason, Radbourne's case, Leach 363. which crime is also distinguished from murder in its punishment. 4 Black. 203.

The punishment of petit treason, in a man, is to be drawn and hanged, and in a woman, it was formerly, to be drawn and burnt (1 Hal. P. C. 382. 3 Inst. 311.) Persons guilty of petit treason, were first debarred the benefit of clergy, by stat. 12 Hen. 7. c. 7. which has been since extended to their aiders, abettors, and counsellors, by statutes 23 Hen. 8. c. 1. and 4 & 5 P. & M. c. 4.

But by 30 Geo. 3. c. 48. women shall no longer be sentenced to be burnt; but in all cases of high and petit treason, they shall be condemned to be drawn and hanged; and in petit treason, they shall be subject besides to the same judgment with regard to dissection, and the time of execution as is directed by 25 Geo. 2. c. 37. in cases of murder,—this is a legislative confirmation of the opinion of the majority of the judges, who soon after the passing of 25 Geo. 2. c. 37. agreed, that in the case of men convicted of petit treason, the judgment introduced by that statute should be added to the common law judgment for petit treason. Fost. 107.

HOMINATIO. The mustering of men; also the doing of homage. Cowel. Blount.

* The judge, if he thinks it advisable, may afterwards direct the hanging in chains, by a special order to the sheriff; but it does not form any part of the judgment. Fost. 107.

HOMINE CAPTO IN WITHERNAMIUM, a writ that anciently lay to take him that had taken any bondman or woman and led them out of the country, so that he or she could not be replevied according to law. Reg. Orig. fol. 79. Cowel. Blount.

HOMINE ELIGENDO AD CUSTODIENDAM PECIAM SIGILLI PRO MERCATORIBUS EDITI, a writ directed to a corporation, for the choice of a new person to keep one part of the seal appointed for statutes merchant, when a former was dead, according to the statute of Acton Burnel. Reg. Orig. 178. Cowel. Blount.

HOMINE REPLEGIANDO, a writ that anciently lay to bail a man out of prison, if bailable, F. N. B. fol. 6. Reg. Orig. fol. 77. now seldom used, as the cause of the party being in custody, may be enquired into, and bail accepted, if bailable, or the person discharged without bail, if unlawfully imprisoned, by the more efficacious writ of habeas corpus.

HOMINES, feudatory tenants, who claimed a privilege of having their causes and persons tried only in the court of their lord. Cowel. Blount.

HOMIPLAGIUM, maiming a man. Ibid.

HOMO. Includes both man and woman, in a large or general understanding. 2 Inst. 45.

HOMSTALE, a home-stall, or mansion-house. Cowel. Blount.

HOND-HABEND, (from the Sax. hond, hand, and habens, having) manifest theft, when one is apprehended with the mainor or mainover, i. e. the thing stolen in his hand. Bract. lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 8. Cowel. Blount.

HONEY. All vessels of honey are to be marked with the initial letters of the name of the owner, on pain of 6*s.* 8*d.* and be of such a content, as follows: the barrel 32 gallons, the kilderkin 16 gallons, and the firkin 8 gallons, on pain of 5*s.* for every gallon wanting; and if any honey sold, be corrupted with any deceitful mixture, the seller shall forfeit the honey, &c. Stat. 23 Eliz. c. 8.

HONORARY FEUDS. Titles of nobility when first introduced, were called honorary feuds, and were not of a divisible nature; but could only be inherited by the eldest son. Feud. 2. t. 55. Wright 32.

HONORIS PROPTER RESPECTUM, is one of the challenges to the polls of the jurors, as if a lord of parliament be impannelled on a jury, he may be challenged by either party, or he may challenge himself. 3 Black. 361.

HONOUR. A man may claim an honour by grant, or by prescription. But the king at this day cannot make an honour by grant, without an act of parliament. R. 1 Bul. 195, 196. Co. Lit. 108. a.

There are within the realm 80 honours, viz. the honour of Aquila, Arundel, Abergavenny, Boloine, Berkhamstead, Beaulieu, Barnard's Castle, Bullingbroke, Barstable, Bononia, Brecknock, Brember, Bedford, Clare, Crowecure, Clun, Christchurch, Cockermouth, Cormayls, Candicut, Carisbrook, Clifford-Castle, Chester, Carmarthen, and Cardigan, Dudley, and Dover-Castle, Eyre, and Egremond.

The honour of East and West Greenwich, Gloucester, Grentmesnil, Gower, Haganet, Huntingdon, Heveningham, Hawenden-Castle, Hertford, and Halton, Lancaster, Lincoln, Leicester, Lovetot, Hinckley, and Kington, and Falkingham.

The honour of Montgomery, Mowbray, Middleham, and Maidstone, Nottingham, Newelm, Oakhampton, and Oxford.

The honour of Plimpton, Peverel, Pickering, Raleigh, Richard's Castle, Skipton, Stafford, Strigal, Tickhil, Tremanton, Totness, Theony, Tamworth.

The honour of Wigmore, Wallingford, Windsor, Wormgay, Whirwelton, Werk, Whitchurch, and Warwick, Webley, and Tutbury.

By the statute of 31 Hen. 8. c. 5. Hampton Court is made an honour.

So, by the stat. 33 H. 8. c. 37, 38. Ampthill, and Grafton. And by the stat. 37 H. 8. c. 18. Westminster, Kingston on Hull, St. Osyth, and Donnington-Castle.

HONOUR, Court of. The court military, or court of chivalry, is held before the earl marshal of England. 2 Hawk. P. C. 11.

The jurisdiction of which is declared by statute 13 Ric. 2. c. 2. to be this; "that it "hath cognizance of contracts touching "deeds of arms and of war, out of the realm, "and also of things which touch war within "the realm, which cannot be determined or "discussed by the common law; together with "other usages and customs to the same "matters appertaining." So that wherever the common law can give redress, this court hath no jurisdiction; which has thrown it entirely out of use as to the matter of contracts, all such being usually cognizable in the courts of Westminster-hall, if not directly, at least by fiction of law: for if a contract be made at Gibraltar, the plaintiff may lay it as made at Gibraltar to wit, at Northampton, &c.; for the locality, or place of making it, is of no consequence with regard to the validity of the contract. 3 Black. 103.

But the words, "other usages and customs," support the claim of this court, 1. To give relief to such of the nobility and gentry as think themselves aggrieved in matters of honour; and 2. To keep up the distinction of degrees and quality. Whence it follows, that the civil jurisdiction of this court of chivalry, is principally in two points; the redressing injuries of honour, and correcting encroachments in matters of coat-armour, precedency, and other distinctions of families. Ibid.

As a court of honour, it is to give satisfaction to all such as are aggrieved in that point; a point of a nature so nice and delicate, that its wrongs and injuries escape the notice of the common law, and yet are fit to be redressed somewhere. Such, for instance, as calling a man coward, or giving him the lie; for which, as they are productive of no immediate damage to his person or property, no actions will lie in the courts at Westminster; and yet they are such injuries as will prompt every man of spirit to demand some honourable amends, which by the antient law of the land, was appointed to be given in the court of chivalry (Year book, 37 Hen. 6. Selden of duels, c. 10. Hal. Hist. C. L. 37.) But modern resolutions have determined, that how much soever such a jurisdiction may be expedient, yet no action for words will lie at present therein (Salk. 553. 7 Mod. 125. 2 Hawk. P. C. 11) And it hath always been most clearly holden (Hal. Hist. C. L. 37.), that as this court cannot meddle with any thing determinable by the common law, it therefore can give no pecuniary satisfaction or damages; inasmuch as the quantity and determination thereof is ever of common law cognizance. And therefore, this court of chivalry can at most order reparation in point of honour; as, to compel the defendant mendacium sibi ipsi imponere, or to take the lie that he has given, upon himself, or to make such other submission as the laws of honour may require (1 Roll. Abr. 128.) Neither can this court, as to the point of reparation in honour, hold plea of any such word, or thing, wherein the party is relieved by the courts of the common law. As if a man gives another a blow, or calls him thief or murderer; for in both these cases, the common law has pointed out his proper remedy by action. 3 Black. 104.

As to the other point of its civil jurisdiction, the redressing of encroachments and usurpations in matters of heraldry and coat-armour; it is the business of this court, according to sir Matthew Hale, to adjust the right of armorial ensigns, bearings, crests, supporters, pennons, &c. and also rights of place or precedence, where the king's patent or act of parliament (which cannot be over-ruled by this court) have not already determined it. 3 Black. 105.

The proceedings in this court are by petition, in a summary way; and the trial not by a jury of twelve men, but by witnesses or by combat (Co. Lit. 261.) But as it cannot imprison, not being a court of record, and as by the resolution of the superior courts it is now confined to so narrow and restrained a jurisdiction, it has fallen into contempt and disuse. The marshalling of coat-armour, which was formerly the pride and study of all the best families in the kingdom, is now greatly disregarded; and has fallen into the hands of certain officers and attendants upon this court, called heralds, who consider it only as a matter of lucre, and not of justice: whereby such falsity and confusion have crept into their records, (which ought to be the standing evidence of families, descents, and coat-armour,) that, though formerly some credit has been paid to their testimony, now even their common seal will not be received as evidence in any court of justice in the kingdom (Roll. Abr. 686. 2 Jon. 224.) But their original visitation-books, compiled when progresses were solemnly and regularly made into every part of the kingdom, to inquire into the state of families, and to register such marriages and descents as were verified to them upon oath, are allowed to be good evidence of pedigrees (Comb. 68.) And it is much to be wished, that this practice of visitation at certain periods were revived; for the failure of inquisitions post mortem, by the abolition of military tenures, combined with the negligence of the heralds in omitting their usual progresses, has rendered the proof of a modern descent, for the recovery of an estate or succession to a title of honour, more difficult than that of an antient. This will be indeed remedied for the future, with respect to claims of peerage, by a late standing order (11 May 1767) of the house of lords: directing the heralds to take exact accounts, and preserve regular entries of all peers and peeresses of England, and their respective descendants; and that an exact pedigree of each peer and his family shall, on the day of his first admission, be delivered to the house by garter, the principal king at arms. But the general inconvenience affecting more private successions, still continues without a remedy. 3 Black. 105, 106.

HONOUR OF A PEER. A peer sitting in judgment, gives not his verdict upon oath like an ordinary juryman, but upon his honour. 2 Inst. 42. He answers also to bills in equity, upon his honour, and not upon his oath. 2 Peere Wms. 146. But when he is examined as a witness, either in civil or criminal cases, he must be sworn. Salk. 512. So also, if he is examined as a witness in the high court of parliament, he must be sworn as was done in the case of the bishop of Oxford in the impeachment of lord Macclesfield and lord Stormont, on that of Warren Hastings: for the respect which the law shews to the honour of a peer, does not extend so far as to overturn a settled maxim, that, in judicio non creditur nisi juratis. Cro. Car. 64.

The honour of a peer is, however, so highly regarded by the law, that it is much more penal to spread false reports of them, and certain other great officers of the realm: scandal against them, being called by the name of scandalum magnatum, and subjected to peculiar punishments by the antient statutes of 3 Ed. 1. c. 34. 2 Ric. 2. st. 2. c. 5. 12 Ric. 2. c. 11. which see under title SCANDALUM MAGNATUM.

HONOUR or DIGNITY. The king is, by the constitution, entrusted with the sole power of conferring dignities and honours, in confidence that he will bestow them upon none, but such as deserve them: and therefore, all degrees of nobility, of knighthood and other titles, are received by immediate grant from the crown: either expressed in writing, by writs of letters patent; as in the creation of peers and baronets; or by corporeal investiture, as in the creation of a simple knight. 1 Black. 271, 2.

HONOUR or SEIGNORY. In the early times of our legal constitution, the king's greater barons, who had a large extent of territory held under the crown, granted out frequently smaller manors to be holden of themselves, which do therefore now continue to be held under a superior lord, who is called in such cases, the lord paramount over all those manors, and his seignory is frequently termed an honour, not a manor, especially if it hath belonged to an antient feudal baron, or hath been at any time in the hands of the crown. 2 Black. 91. 1 Buls. 197. 2 Rol. 72. l. 48. Co. Lit. 108. a. 2 Rol. 72. l. 45.

HOPCON, signifies a valley; so do hope, hawck, and howgh. Cowel.

HOPS. By 6 Geo. 2. c. 37. sect. 6. unlawfully and maliciously cutting hop-binds is made felony without benefit of clergy.

HORA AURORÆ, the morning bell, anciently called the four o'clock bell, contradistinguished from the eight o'clock bell, or the bell in the evening, called ignitegium or coverfeu. Cowel.

HORDERA, (from the Sax. hord, thesaurus) a treasurer: hence hord or hoard. Ibid.

HORDERIUM, a hoard, a treasury, or repository. Ibid.

HORDEUM PALMATE, that sort of barley which is called beer. Ibid.

HORNEBEAME POLLENGERS, trees so called, that have been usually lopped, and are about twenty years growth, and therefore not titheable. Plowden, 407. Cowel.

HORNEGELD, (from the Sax. horn, cornu, and geld, solutio) signifying a tax within a forest, to be paid for horned beasts. Cromp. Jurisd. 197. Cowel.

HORN WITH HORN, or HORN UNDER HORN. The promiscuous feeding of bulls and cows, or all horned beasts, that are allowed to run together upon the same common. Cowel.

HORNAGIUM, supposed to be the same with horngeld. Ibid.

HORNERS, no stranger was to buy any English horns gathered or growing in London, or within twenty-four miles thereof, by the stat. 4 Ed. 4. c. 8. And no one may sell English horns unwrought to any stranger, or send them beyond sea, on pain of forfeiting double value: the wardens of horners in London may search all wares, &c. 7 Jac. 1. cap. 14.

HORS DE SON FEE, (Fr. i. e. out of his fee) is an exception to avoid an action brought for rent or services, &c. issuing out of land, by him that pretends to be the lord; for if the defendant can prove that the land is without the compass of his fee, the action falls. Brake. Cowel.

HORSES, BREED OF. By 27 Hen. 8. c. 6. persons having inheritance or freehold in a park, and a mile about, shall keep two mares apt to bear foal thirteen hands high, on pain of 40*s.* a month: and they are not to suffer them to be leaped by horses under fourteen hands high, on pain of 40*s.* But this does not extend to Westmoreland, Cumberland, Northumberland, or Durham.

By 32 Hen. 8. c. 13. stone-horses put into commons, being above two years old, shall be fifteen hands high; and those of less size may be seized by any person for his own use; refusing to be present at the measuring, is a penalty of 40*s.* Commons shall be driven yearly at Michaelmas, or within fifteen days after, on pain of 40*s.* and putting diseased horses into commons is a forfeiture of 10*s.* But by 8 Eliz. c. 8. stoned horses of thirteen hands high may be put in the commons and fens in Cambridgeshire, Huntingdonshire, Lincolnshire, and Norfolk. And by 21 Jac. 1. c. 28. the act is not to extend to Cornwall.

HORSES, EXPORTATION OF. By 11 Hen. 7. c. 13, no horse shall be exported without the king's licence, nor mare above the value of 6*s.* 8*d.*

By 1 Ed. 6. c. 5. no horse or mare shall be exported without the king's licence, on forfeiture thereof, and of 40*l.*: and no mare shall be exported exceeding 10*s.* in price.

Although the above acts remain on the face of the Statute Book, they have long since fallen into total disuse and non-observance, particularly as subsequent acts, from 22 Car. 2. down to the present time, allow of the exportation of horses, mares, or geldings of British breeding, at an export duty, viz. by 49 Geo. 3. c. 98. of 2*l.* 2*s.* each.

HORSES FOR KING'S SERVICE. None shall take the horse of any person to serve the king without the owner's consent, or sufficient warrant, on pain of imprisonment, &c. Stat. 20 R. 2. c. 5. See Mutiny Act.

HORSES HIRED, action of trespass on the case lies for abusing a horse hired, by immoderate riding, &c. 1 Mod. 210.

HORSE RACES, By stat. 13 Geo. 2.

c. 19. to prevent the multiplicity of horse-races (a too prevalent mode of gaming) no plates or matches under 50*l.* value shall be run, under a penalty of 200*l.* to be paid by the owner of each horse running, and 100*l.* on such as advertise the plate.

By 18 Geo. 2. c. 34. horses may run any match for the real value of 50*l.* at any weights and at any place whatsoever; but the race must be begun and ended in one day. 13 Geo. 2. c. 19.

But although such horse races according to the statutes, are lawful, yet it has been determined that they are games within the stat. of 9 Anne c. 1. (see GAMING,) and that of consequence wagers above 10*l.* upon a horse race, though the race itself be allowed by statute, are illegal. 2 Black. Rep. 706. A wager for less than 10*l.* upon an illegal horse race, is also void and illegal. 4 Ter. Rep. 1. So a race against time, or to travel a certain distance with a chaise and pair, within a certain time have been held to be games within the statute of gaming. 2 Wils. 36. 6 Ter. Rep. 499.

HORSES, SALE OF. The property in horses is not easily altered by sale, without the express consent of the owner, 2 Inst. 719. for a purchaser gains no property in a horse that has been stolen, unless it be bought in a fair or market overt, according to the directions of the stats. 2 Phil. & Mar. c. 7. and 31 Eliz. c. 12.

By 2 & 3 Phil. & Mar. c. 7. all horses shall be sold in the open place appointed in a fair or market from ten o'clock till sunset; shall be tolled in the presence of the parties, and their names and places of abode shall be registered in a book by the toll taker, which is to be given to the owner of such fair or market within a day after, on pain of 40*s.* in every case.

And the owner's property in a horse stolen shall not be altered by sale in a fair, unless the horse continued an hour therein, and was registered, for which the buyer is to pay 1*d.* Ibid.

And stolen horses sold contrary hereto, may be seized by the owner, and justices of peace may determine offences. Ibid.

By 31 Eliz. c. 12. sellers of horses in fairs or markets must be known to the toll taker, or some other person who will testify his knowledge of him, which is to be entered in a book, and sale made otherwise shall be void.

The owner of a horse stolen, notwithstanding such sale, may redeem the same, upon payment or tender of the price within six months after stolen. Ibid.

And by 26 Geo. 3. c. 71. every person keeping a place for slaughtering horses, geldings, mares, mules, asses, bulls, oxen, cows, heifers, sheep, hogs, goats, or other cattle not killed for butcher's meat, shall take out a licence at the quarter sessions; but must produce a certificate from the parish where he resides, testifying his ability, and the representatives of such licensed person, after his death, may act under such licence till the next sessions.

Persons licensed shall affix to their houses, "licensed for slaughtering horses, pursuant to an act passed in the 26th year of his majesty king George the Third." Ibid.

Six hours previous notice shall be sent, when horses or cattle are intended to be slaughtered, to the inspector, who is to take an account of the beasts, and none shall be slaughtered but in the day time. Ibid.

An account shall be kept by the owners of slaughtering-houses, of the owners of the cattle, which may be inspected. Ibid.

Inspectors are to be chosen annually by the parishioners; they are to enter in a book a particular account of all cattle slaughtered, for each of which entries they are to be paid 6*d.* by the slaughterman; and persons searching are to pay 6*d.* a time. They are to affix over their doors their names, and the words, "inspector of houses and places for slaughtering horses." If the inspector suspects any animal to be stolen, he may prohibit the killing it eight days, and in the mean time he is to describe and advertise it twice publicly; the expences whereof are to be paid by the slaughterman. Ibid.

Inspectors may visit slaughtering-houses at all times; if at night, with a constable. Ibid.

Persons bringing cattle refusing to give an account of themselves, may be carried before a justice, who may, on suspecting such persons, commit them. Ibid.

Persons slaughtering horses or cattle without licence, are guilty of felony and may be transported. Ibid.

Persons destroying hides shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and may be corporally punished. Ibid.

Persons making false entries shall be liable to a penalty of 20*l.* and not less than 10*l.* and persons lending houses for the purpose of slaughtering, unlicensed, incur a like penalty. Ibid.

This act is not to extend to curriers, fellmongers, tanners or dealers in hides, or persons killing distempered or aged cattle for the hides or for dogs meat; but such persons or collar-makers, or farriers killing sound horses, shall be liable to a penalty of 20*l.* and not less than 10*l.* Ibid.

Inspectors books are to be produced at the quarter sessions, witnesses refusing to attend the justices, are to forfeit 10*l.* and parishioners shall be deemed competent ones. Ibid.

HOSTILERS, (Fr. hosteliers) inn-keepers. Blount.

HOSPITALLERS, (hospitalarii) were the knights of a religious order, so called, because they built an hospital at Jerusalem, wherein pilgrims were received. Their chief abode is now in Malta, and they are now called knights of Malta. All the lands and goods of these knights here in England were given to the king, by 32 Hen. 8. c. 34. Cowel. Blount.

HOSPITALS, are eleemosynary foundations constituted for the perpetual distribution of the free alms or bounty of the founders for the maintenance of the poor sick and impotent.

And by stat. 39 Eliz. c. 5. any person seised of an estate in fee-simple, may by deed inrolled in chancery erect and found an hospital for the sustenance and relief of the poor, to continue for ever; and place such heads, &c. therein, as he shall think fit: and such hospital shall be incorporated, and subject to such visitors, &c. as the founder shall nominate; also such corporations have power to take and purchase lands not exceeding 200*l.* per ann. so as the same be not holden of the king, &c. and to make leases for twenty-one years, reserving the accustomed yearly rent: but no hospital is to be erected unless upon the foundation it be endowed with lands or hereditaments of the clear yearly value of 10*l.* per annum.

By 39 Eliz. c. 6. and 43 Eliz. c. 4. commissions may be awarded to certain persons to enquire of lands or goods given to hospitals; and the lord chancellor is empowered to issue commissions to commissioners for enquiring by a jury, of all grants, abuses, breaches of trust, &c. of lands given to charitable uses, who may make orders and decrees concerning the same, and the due application thereof; and the commissioners are to decree that recompence be made for fraud and breaches of trust, &c. so as their orders and decrees be certified into the chancery; and the lord chancellor shall take order for the execution of the said judgments and decrees, and after certificate may examine into, annul, or alter them agreeable to equity, on just complaint: but this does not extend to lands given to any college or hall in the universities, &c. nor to any hospital over which special governors are appointed by the founders; and it shall not be prejudicial to the jurisdiction of the bishop or ordinary, as to his power of inquiry into and reforming abuses of hospitals, by virtue of the stat. 2 Hen. 5. c. 1, &c.

These commissioners may order houses to be repaired, by those who receive the rents; see that the lands be let at the utmost rent; and on any tenant's committing waste, by cutting down and sale of timber, they may decree satisfaction, and that the lease shall be void. Hil. 11 Car. Where money is kept back, and not paid, or paid where it should not, they have power to order the payment of it to the right use: and if money is detained in the hands of executors, &c. any great length of time, they may decree the money to be paid with damages for detaining it. Duke, Read. 123. 4 Rep. 104.

HOSTELAGIUM, a right to have lodging and entertainment; reserved by lords in the houses of their tenants. Ibid.

HOSTELER, (hostellarius) from the Fr. hosteler, i. e. hospes, an inn-keeper. Ibid.

HOSTLERS, inn-keepers. Ibid.

HOSTERIUM, a hoe. Ibid.

HOSTIA, host bread, or consecrated wafers in the Holy Eucharist. Ibid.

HOSTILARIUS, an hospitaller. Ibid.

HOSTILIARIA, HOSPITULARIA, a place or room in religious houses, allotted to the use of receiving guests and strangers, for the care of which there was a peculiar officer appointed, called hostillarius, and hospitalarius. Ibid.

HOSTRICUS, (austercus, from the Lat. astur, a goshawk). Ibid.

HOTCHPOT, (a commixture) and in a metaphorical legal sense, is a blending or mixing of lands given in marriage, with other lands in fee falling by descent: as if a man seised of thirty acres of land in fee, hath issue only two daughters, and he gives with one of them ten acres in marriage to the man that marries her; and dies seised of the other twenty acres: now she that is thus married, to gain her share of the rest of the land, must put her part given in marriage in hotchpot, i. e. she must refuse to take the sole profits thereof, and cause her land to be mingled with the other; so that an equal division may be made of the whole between her and her sister, as if none had been given to her; and thus for her ten acres she shall have fifteen, otherwise her sister will have the twenty acres of which her father died seised. Lit. 55. Co. Lit. lib. 3. cap. 12.

And there is a bringing of money into hotchpot, upon the clauses and within the intent of the act of parliament for distribution of intestate's estates, 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 10. stat. 2. Where a certain sum is to be raised, and paid to a daughter for her portion, by a marriage settlement; this has been decreed to be an advancement by the father in his life-time, within the meaning of the statute, though future and contingent; and if the daughter would have any further share of her father's personal estate, she must bring this money into hotchpot; and shall not have both the one and the other. Abr. Cas. Eq. 253. See 2 Vern. 638.

HOVEL, (mandra) a place wherein husbandmen set their ploughs and carts out of the rain or sun. Cowel. Blount.

HOUR, (hora) a certain space of time of sixty minutes, twenty-four of which make the natural day. And it is not material at what hour of the day one is born, as there can be no fraction of a day. Co. Lit. 135. See Fractions.

HOUSAGE, a fee paid for housing goods by a carrier, or at a wharf or key, &c. Shep. Epit. 1725. Cowel.

HOUSE, (domus) a place of dwelling or habitation; and the dwelling house of every man, is as it were, his castle; therefore if thieves come to a man's house to rob or kill him, and the owner or his servant kill the thieves in defending him and his house, that is not felony, nor shall he forfeit any thing. 2 Inst. 316. And the doors of a house may not be broke open, unless it be for treason or felony, &c. H. P. C. 157. Plowd. 5. 5 Rep. 91. But when the door is once open, the sheriff may enter and make execution at the suit of any subject, either of body or goods; though while the door is shut, he cannot break it to execute process at the suit of a subject. And the house, although it is a castle for the owner himself and his family and his own goods, &c. yet it is no protection for a stranger flying thither, or the goods of such a one, to prevent lawful execution; and therefore in such case, after request to enter, and denial, the sheriff may break the house. 5 Rep. 91. a. to 93. a. Lee v. Gansell, Cowp Rep. 1.

Also commissioners of bankruptcy cannot break open a house to search for the bankrupt's goods, unless it be in the house of the bankrupt. 2 Show. 247.

But upon recovery in any real action or ejectment, the sheriff may break the house and deliver seisin, &c. to the plaintiff, the writ being habere facias seisinam or possessionem; and after judgment, it is not the house of the defendant in right and judgment of law.

Also, in all cases where the king is party, the sheriff (if no door be open) may, after notice and request, break the party's house to take him, or to execute other process of the king, if he cannot otherwise enter. See also Execution, Felonies and Taxes.

HOUSEBOLD and HAYBOLD, the same as housebool and heagebool. Cowel.

HOUSEBOTE, a compound of house and bote, i. e. compensatio, signifies estovers, or an allowance of necessary timber out of the lord's wood, for the repairing and support of a house or tenement. And this belongs of common right to any lessee for years or for life: but if he take more than is needful, he may be punished by an action of waste. Cowel.

HOUSE BREAKING, or HOUSE-ROBBING. See Felony.

HOUSE-BURNING. See Arson, Burning.

HOUSE OF CORRECTION. The house of correction is, after conviction, chiefly for the punishing of idle and disorderly persons; parents of bastard children, beggars, servants running away; trespassers, rogues, vagabonds, &c. 2 Bulst. 351. Sed. 281.

In every county there shall be a house of correction built at the charge of the county, with conveniences for the setting of people to work, or every justice of peace shall forfeit 5*l.*, and the justices in sessions are to appoint governors of such house of correction, with salaries, which are to be paid quarterly out of the county stock: these governors are to set the persons sent on work, and moderately correct them, by whipping, &c. and to yield a true account every quarter sessions of persons committed to their custody; and if they suffer any to escape, or neglect their duty, the justices may fine them. 7 Jac. 1. c. 4. and 14 Geo. 2. c. 33.

And by 6 Geo. 1. c. 19. vagrants and other criminal offenders, and persons charged with small offences, may for such offences or for want of sureties, be committed either to the common gaol or house of correction, as the justices in their judgment shall think proper.

By 14 Geo. 2. c. 33. and 17 Geo. 2. c. 5. upon presentment of the grand jury, the justices at sessions may build, or purchase land for building, or enlarge, buy, or hire fit houses of correction. And the justices are to take care that the houses of correction be provided with proper materials for relieving, employing, and correcting persons sent to the same: and two justices shall visit the same twice or oftener in a year, and examine into the estate and management thereof, and report the same at the sessions. The governor misbehaving, may be fined or turned out, at the discretion of the justices. Offenders liable to be sent to the house of correction, where the time and manner of their punishment is not expressly limited by law, may be committed until the next sessions, or until discharged by due course of law. See also Prisons.

HOUSE TAX. See Taxes.

HOUSEHOLDER, (pater-familias) the occupier of a house. Cowel. Blount.

HREDIGE, readily or quickly. Cowel. Blount.

HUDEGELD. Where a villain or servant had committed any trespass, for which he deserved whipping or corporal punishment, when he bought off his penalty with money, the price of exemption from such chastisement, was called hudgeld, or hidegeld; money given to save his hide. Cowel. Blount.

HUE AND CRY. An hue (from huer, to shout; and cry, hutesium et clamor) is the old common law process of pursuing, with horn and with voice, all felons, and such as have dangerously wounded another (Bracton, l. 3. tr. 2. c. 1. s. 1. Mirr. c. 2. s. 6.) It is also mentioned by statute Westm. 1. 3 Ed. 1. c. 9. and 4 Ed. 1. de officio coronatoris. But the principal statute, relative to this matter, is that of Winchester, 13 Ed. 1. c. 1. and 4. which directs, that from thenceforth "every "country shall be so well kept, that imme- "diately upon robberies and felonies com- "mitted, fresh suit shall be made from town "to town, and from county to county; and "that hue and cry shall be raised upon the "felons, and they that keep the town shall "follow with hue and cry, with all the town "and towns near; and so hue and cry shall "be made from town to town, until they be "taken and delivered to the sheriff. And, "that such hue and cry may more effectu- "ally be made, the hundred is bound by the "same statute, c. 3 to answer for all rob- "beries therein committed, unless they take "the felon; which is the foundation of an ac- "tion against the hundred, in case of any loss "by robbery." By statute 27 Eliz. c. 13. "no hue and cry is sufficient unless made "with both horsemen and footmen." And by statute 8 Geo. 2. c. 16. "the constable "or like officer, refusing or neglecting to "make hue and cry, forfeits 5*l.* half to the "king and half to him that sues within six "months, to be recovered with full costs; "and the whole vill or district is still in "strictness liable to be amerced, according "to the law of Alfred, if any felony be com- "mitted therein and the felon escapes." Hue and cry (2 Hal. P. C. 100, 104.) may be raised either by a precept of a justice of the peace, or by a peace officer, or by any private man that knows of a felony. The party raising it must acquaint the constable of the vill with all the circumstances which he knows of the felony, and the person of the felon; and thereupon the constable is to search his own town, and raise all the neighbouring vills, and make pursuit with horse and foot; and in the prosecution of such hue and cry the constable and his attendants have the same powers, protection, and indemnification, as if acting under the warrant of a justice of the peace. But if a man wantonly or maliciously raises an hue and cry, without cause, he shall be severely punished as a disturber of the public peace. 1 Hawk. P. C. 75.

By 29 Car. 2. c. 7. the hundred shall not be answerable when persons who travel on the Lord's day, are robbed. And by 22 Geo. 2. c. 24. no person shall recover in any action on the statutes of hue and cry, more than 200*l.* unless at the time of the robbery there be two present to attest the truth thereof. And by the land tax acts, the receivers general shall not sue the county for a robbery, unless there were three persons in company carrying the money.

Also the party robbed shall give notice thereof to the inhabitants of some town, and be examined within twenty days before a justice, whether he knew any of the offenders. 27 Eliz. c. 13. s. 11. 8 Geo. 2. c. 16.

Also no person shall sue the hundred in case of robbery, without first giving notice to a constable describing the felon, and publishing the same in the London gazette, within twenty days after the robbery. 8 Geo. 2. c. 16. s. 1.

And before any action is commenced, the party shall go before the filazer or other officer of the court, and give bond with two sureties to the high constable, in a penalty of 100*l.* to answer costs. 8 Geo. 2. c. 16. s. 2.

And no action shall be brought against the hundred, except it be commenced within six months. Ibid. s. 14.

No process is to be served against the hundred, &c. for a robbery committed, but on the high constable, who shall give notice of it in one of the principal market towns, &c. and then enter an appearance, and defend the action. Ibid. s. 4.

In actions against the hundred, the inhabitants may be witnesses for such hundred. s. 15.

By 27 Eliz. c. 13. where any one of the malefactors shall be apprehended, the hundred shall not be chargeable. s. 8.

Nor shall the hundred be chargeable, if any of the felons be apprehended in forty days after notice in the gazette. 8 Geo. 2. c. 16. s. 3.

And persons apprehending such felons within such time, so that the hundred be indemnified, are on proof thereof before two justices to have a reward of 10*l.* from the hundred. s. 4.

By the stat. 8 Geo. 2. c. 16. and 22 Geo. 2. c. 46. s. 4. after judgment against the hundred, no process shall be served on the high constable or any inhabitant, but the sheriff on receipt of the writ of execution shall shew it to two justices of the peace in or near the hundred, who shall speedily cause an assessment to be levied pursuant to the stat. 27 Eliz. c. 13. and also for the necessary expences of the high constable above the costs and damages recovered, or which, on notice from the two justices, he shall give an account and proof on oath to their satisfaction, having first caused his attorney's bill to be taxed. And the sheriff shall pay the money levied to the parties without fee.

And the like assessment shall be in case the plaintiff be nonsuit, discontinue, or have a verdict or judgment on demurrer against him, if by insolvency of the plaintiff or his sureties, he cannot be reimbursed on the bond of 100*l.* penalty; and the money levied shall be paid to the justices for the high constable in ten days after it is levied. And the justices may limit a time not exceeding thirty days for levying such assessment; and the officer appointed refusing or neglecting to levy and pay the money, &c. in such time, forfeits double the sum.

HUISSERIUM or UFFERS, ships to transport horses. Cowel. Blount.

HULKA, a hulk or small vessel. Cowel. Blount.

HUNDRED, (hundredum centuria) a well known division of the counties; first ordained by king Alfred, who divided the different counties into hundreds, for better government, an institution brought from Germany: for there centa, or centena, is a jurisdiction over an hundred towns. 1 Black. 115.

And the centeni were the principal inhabitants of a district composed of different villages, originally in number an hundred, but afterwards only called by that name. 3 Black. 33.

The word hundredum is also sometimes taken for an immunity or privilege, whereby a man is quit of money or customs due to the hundreds. Cowel. See Hue and Cry, and other titles.

HUNDRED-COURT, is a large court-baron, being held for all the inhabitants of a particular hundred instead of a manor. The free suitors are here the judges, and the steward the registrar, as in the case of a court-baron. It is not a court of record, and it resembles a court-baron in all points, except that in point of territory it is of a greater jurisdiction. 3 Black. 34.

This it is said by Coke, 2 Inst. 71., was derived out of the county-court for the ease of the people, that they might have justice done to them at their own doors, without any charge or loss of time. But according to Blackstone, its institution was probably co-eval with that of hundreds themselves, introduced, though not invented, by Alfred, being derived from the policy of the ancient Germans. 1 Black. Introd. s. 4., 3 Black. 34. 4 Black. 408.

This hundred-court, as causes are equally liable to be removed from hence, as from the common court-baron, and by the same writs, and may also be received by writ of false judgment, is therefore fallen into total disuse with regard to the trial of actions. 3 Black. 35.

HUNDREDORS, (hundredarii) the centeni or hundredors, are persons serving on juries, or fit to be impannelled thereon for trials, dwelling within the hundred where the land in question lies. Stat. 35 H. 8. c. 6.

Hundredor also signifies him that hath the jurisdiction of the hundred, and is in some places applied to the bailiff of an hundred. 13 Ed. 1. c. 38. 9 Ed. 2. 2 Ed. 3. Horn's Mirror, lib. 1.

HUNDRED-LAGH, (Sax. laga, lex) the hundred court. Manwood, par. 1. pag. 1.

HUNDRED-PENNY, was collected by the sheriff or lord of the hundred, in oneris sui subsidium. Camd. 223.

HUNDRED-SETENA, dwellers or inhabitants of a hundred. Cowel. Blount.

HUNGER. Hunger will not justify stealing food, to relieve a present necessity. 1 Hal. P. C. 54. 4 Black. 31.

HUNTING. See Deer and Game.

HURDLE, a sledge or hurdle used to draw traitors to execution. 4 Black. 92, 377.

HURDERFERST, (Sax. hyred, familia, and fæst, firmus) a domestic, or one of the family. Cowel. Blount.

HURRERS. The cappers and hat-makers of London were formerly one company of the haberdashers, called by this name. Stow's Surv. Lond. 312.

HURST, HYRST, HERST, (Sax. hyrst) a wood or grove of trees. Cowel. Blount.

HURST-CASTLE, so called, because situated near the woods. Ibid.

HURTARDUS, HURTUS, a ram or wether, a male sheep. Ibid.

HUSBRECE, (Sax. hus, a house, and brice, a breaking) the offence which we now call burglary. Blount.

HUSCARLE, a menial servant. Cowel. Blount.

HUSCANS, (Fr. hauseau) a sort of boot, or buskin made of coarse cloth, and worn over the stockings. 4 Ed. 4. c. 7. Cowel.

HUSFASTNE, (Sax. hus, i. e. domus and fæst, fixus) is he that holdeth house and land. Cowel. Blount.

HUSGABLE, (husgablum) house-rent, or some tax or tribute laid upon houses. Ibid.

HUSSELING-PEOPLE, communicants, (from the Sax. hussel) which signifies the holy sacrament. Ibid.

HUSTINGS, (hustingum, from the Sax. hustinge, i. e. concilium, or curia) is a court held before the lord mayor, recorder, and sheriffs of London, and is the principal and supreme court of the city. To this court a writ of error lies from judgment in the sheriff's court, and from thence to justices appointed by the king's commission, who used to sit in the church of St. Martin le grand. Fitz. N. B. 32. And from the judgment of these justices, a writ of error lies immediately to the house of lords. 3 Black. 80.

HYDE OF LAND, and HYDEGELD. See Hide and Hidage.

HYPOTHECA, in the civil law, was where the possession of the thing pledged remained with the debtor. 2 Black. 159.

HYPOTHECATIO, (Lat. hypotheca, a pledge) is the pledging or pawning of a ship for necessaries. Thus if a ship be at sea and spring a leak or be otherwise in danger of being lost, or the voyage defeated for want of provisions or other necessaries, in these cases of extremity, the master may pledge or hypothecate the ship and goods or either of them for such necessaries as are wanting, which power is impliedly given him, in constituting him master, and which he may exercise rather than that the ship should be lost, or the voyage defeated. Roll. Abr. 53. Hob. 11. Moor 918.

But the master can only hypothecate where the calamity or want of necessaries happened after the ship had put to sea. Molloy 214. 6 Mod. 70.

And the master cannot hypothecate the ship or goods for any debt of his own, nor in any case but for the preservation of the ship, and completing her voyage. Molloy 213.

And although the power of hypothecation be necessary for the navigation, without which masters could not get credit abroad, yet a master cannot make the owner personally liable by any contract of his: but only the ship and cargo by way of hypothecation. 6 Mod. 79. 2 Sider. 161. And therefore the admiralty court hath jurisdiction herein, so far as to subject the ship, but cannot proceed against the person otherwise than is necessary to make him a party towards the condemnation of the ship. Molloy 214. 6 Mod. 70.

HYTH, a port or little haven; also a wharf, &c. Cowel. Blount. See Hith.

ICENI, the people of Suffolk, Norfolk, Cambridgeshire, and Huntingdonshire. Ib.

ICH DIEN, (from the German) is the motto belonging to the arms of the prince of Wales, signifying I serve; it was formerly the motto of John, king of Bohemia, slain in the battle of Cressy, by Edward the Black Prince; and taken up by him to shew his subjection to his father king Edward III. Ib.

ICONA, (iconia) a figure or representation of a thing. Ibid.

ICTUS ORBUS, a maim, bruise, or swelling; any hurt without cutting the skin and shedding of blood, which was called plaga. Bracton. lib. 2. tr. cap. 5, and 24. Cowel.

IDENTITATE NOMINIS, a writ that lay for him who was taken and arrested in any personal action, and committed to prison for another man of the same name; in such case he may have this writ directed to the sheriff, which is in nature of a commission to inquire whether he be the same person against whom the action was brought; and if not, then to discharge him. Reg. Orig 194. F. N. B. 267.

IDENTITY OF PERSON. Where a person convicted of, or outlawed for, a criminal offence, being asked what he hath to alledge why execution should not be awarded against him, if he pleads diversity of person, viz. that he is not the same as was attainted; a jury shall be impannelled to try this collateral issue, viz. the identity of the person; and not whether guilty or innocent for that he has been tried before. This trial is instanter, and no time allowed the prisoner for defence, or producing of witnesses, unless he will make oath, that he is not the person attainted: neither shall any peremptory challenge of the jury be allowed the prisoner. 1 Sid. 72. Fost. 42, 46. 1 Lev. 61. 4 Black. Com. 395, 6.

IDEOTS AND LUNATICS. An ideot (Lat. illiteratus, imperitus, and in our law non compos mentis) is a fool or madman from his nativity, and one who never has any lucid intervals; an ideot or not, being a question of fact, must be tried by jury or inspection. Dyer 25. Moor 4. pl. 11. Bro. Ideots. F. N. B. 233.

One made such by sickness, which my lord Hale calls dementia accidentalis vel adventitia, is such a madness as excuseth in criminal cases. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 30.

A lunatic, from the great influence which the moon has in all disorders of the brain, is also dementia accidentalis vel adventitia; and is intitled to the same indulgence as to his acts, and stands in the same degree with one whose disorder is fixed and permanent. 4 Co. 125. Co. Lit. 247. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 31.

If one go mad by drunkenness, which is called dementia effectata; yet this madness, though contracted by the vice and will of the party, if it becomes an habitual and fixed phrenzy, it puts the man in the same condition as if the same was contracted involuntarily at first. Plowd. 19. a. Crom. Inst. 29. a. Co. Lit. 247. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 32.

But he who is guilty of any crime whatsoever through his voluntary drunkenness, shall be punished for it as much as if he had been sober. See Homicide.

Therefore, the prevailing distinction in law is between ideocy and lunacy; the first a fatuity a nativitate, vel dementia naturalis, which excuseth the party as to his acts, and intitles the king to the receipt of the rents and profits of his estate during his life, without being obliged to render any account for the same; the other accidental or adventitious madness, which, whether permanent and fixed, or with lucid intervals, goes under the general name of lunacy, and equally excuseth with ideocy, as to acts done during the phrenzy; but herein they differ, that in the latter case, the king is only a trustee for the lunatic, and accountable to him, if he happens to be restored to his understanding, or to his representatives if it happen otherwise. Bac. Abr. 4 Co. 125. a.

The trial of ideocy, madness, or lunacy in civil cases, and in order to the commitment or custody of the person and his estate, which belongs to the king, as mentioned above, is by writ or commission to the sheriff or escheator, or particular commissioners both by their own inspection and by inquisition to enquire and return their inquisition into the chancery; and thereupon a grant or commitment of the party and his estate ensues; and in case the party or his friends find themselves injured by the finding him a lunatic or ideot, a special writ may issue to bring the party before the chancellor, or before the king, to be inspected; and if, on examination, it appear the party is no ideot, the whole commission and office shall be discharged without any traverse or monstrans de droit. 4 Co. 126. 9 Co. 31. a.

Also the party found an ideot or lunatic may traverse the inquisition, as may any other person having a title to the land. Skin. 178.

The king as parens patriæ hath the protection of all those who, by reason of their imbecility and want of understanding, are incapable of taking care of themselves. Staund. Prærog. cap. 9. fol. 33. 2 Inst. 14. 4 Co. 126. a. Dyer 25.

And by stat. de prærogativa regis, or 17 Ed. 2. cap. 9. it is enacted, that the king shall have the custody of the lands of natural fools, taking the profits of them, without waste or destruction, and shall find them their necessaries, of whose fees soever the lands be holden; and after the death of such ideots, he shall render it to the right heirs, so that such ideots shall not alien, nor their heirs be disinherited.

And by cap. 10. of the said statute, "the king shall provide when any (that before time hath had his wit and memory) happen to fail of his wit, and there are many per lucida intervalla, that their lands and tenements shall be safely kept without waste and destruction, and that they and their household should live and be maintained competently with the profits of the same, and the residue, besides their sustentation, shall be kept to their use, to be delivered unto them when they come to right mind: so that such lands and tenements shall in no wise be aliened, and the king shall take nothing to his own use; and if the party die in such estate, then the residue shall be distributed for his soul, by the advice of the ordinary."

And by 17 Geo. 2. c. 5. it shall be lawful for two justices, where a lunatic or mad person shall be found, by warrant to the constables, churchwardens and overseers of the parish, to cause such person to be apprehended and kept safely locked up in such place, as such justices shall direct; and (if such justices find it necessary) to be there chained, if the settlement of such person shall be in any parish, within such county; and if such settlement shall not be there, then such person shall be sent to the place of his last settlement, and shall be kept safely locked up or chained, as aforesaid; and the charges shall be paid by order of two justices, out of the estate of such person, if such person hath an estate over and above what shall be sufficient to maintain his wife and children; and if he hath not, then the charges shall be paid by such ways as the poor are to be provided for."

But by 14 Geo. 3. c. 49. made perpetual by 26 Geo. 3 c. 91. confining more than one lunatic in any one house, without licence, shall forfeit 500*l.*

Five fellows of the college of physicians, or licentiates, shall be commissioners to grant licences within seven miles of London, on 5*s.* stamps, one for each house annually; but no commissioner to keep such house, on penalty of 50*l.* Ibid. to s. 10.

Commissioners to visit licensed houses, and refusing them admittance, forfeiture of the licence; commissioners to be paid each, on every inspection, 1*l.* 1*s.*; keepers to give to the commissioners' secretary an account of admission of patients (except paupers) in three days, within seven miles of London, and admitting without an order, to forfeit 100*l.* Ibid. to s. 21.

Quarter sessions to licence houses more than seven miles from London annually; if keeping ten lunatics, to pay 10*l.*; if above, 15*l*; and only one house for each licence: and justices, with a physician, to visit licensed houses; and keepers to give notice of admission of patients in fourteen days, on forfeiture of 100*l.* and to give a recognizance of 100*l.* on each licence. Ibid. to s. 28.

The lord chancellor, and two chief justices may order commissioners, or justices, to inspect licensed houses, and report the state thereof, and may inspect registers, and examine parties, but not to extend to public hospitals. Ibid. to s. 30.

Not to give greater power than is allowed by law. Ibid. s. 31.

By 48 Geo. 3. c. 96. the justices, at their general quarter sessions, may give notices respecting the erecting lunatic asylums, for the better care and maintenance of lunatics being paupers and criminals, which asylums are to be erected at the expence of the county or counties uniting, in the manner prescribed by the act; such expence to be paid out of, and charged on, the county rates. s. 9—16.

And so soon as any lunatic asylum so erected, shall be declared by the visiting justices to be fit for the reception of lunatics, and the same shall be published three times in the county paper, the justices may issue their warrants for the committal of dangerous lunatics to such places. s. 17.

Any overseer neglecting to give information of any lunatic pauper to a justice of the peace, is to forfeit not exceeding 10*l.* nor less than 40*s.*

On the committal of lunatics under the vagrant act of 17 Geo. 2. c. 5. if there be a lunatic asylum established, the warrant shall direct such lunatic to be confined in such asylum, and not elsewhere: or if there be no such asylum, the justice may order the lunatic to be confined in a licensed madhouse. s. 19.

Where the legal settlement of lunatics cannot be discovered, the justices shall direct that they shall be sent to the lunatic asylum, or some other place of confinement. s. 20.

But no lunatic asylum shall be liable to the reception of lunatics chargeable to any city, town, or place, which is exempt from the county rates. s. 21.

Persons having lunatics in their care, at such asylums, suffering them to go at large without an order from two justices, are to forfeit not exceeding 10*l.* nor less than 40*s.* s. 23.

The buildings are to be exempted from the window duty. s. 26.

When persons charged with murder are found to be insane and ordered to be confined, according to 39 & 40 Geo. 3. c. 94. two justices are to enquire into their settlement, and make an order on the parish for their maintenance. s. 27.

An ideot, or person non compos, may inherit or purchase. Co. Lit. 2. 2 Vent. 203.

Also if an ideot or lunatic marry, and die, his wife shall be endowed. Co. Lit. 31. a. 4 Co. 124, 5.

So a lunatic shall be tenant by the curtesy, and though a woman, being a lunatic, kill her husband, yet she shall be endowed, because this cannot be felony in her, who was deprived of her understanding by the act of God. Perk. 365.

But ideots and lunatics are incapable of being executors or administrators. Godolph. 86.

And therefore, if an executor become non compos, the spiritual court may commit administration to another. 1 Salk. 36.

Also he who incites a madman to do murder, or other crime, is a principal offender, and as much punishable as if he had done it himself. Keilw. 53. Dalt. cap. 95. 1 Hawk. P. C. 2.

But by 39 & 40 Geo. 3. c. 94. the jury, in case of any person charged with treason, murder, or felony, proving to be insane, shall declare whether he was acquitted by them on account of insanity, and the court shall order him to be kept in custody till his majesty's pleasure be known; and his majesty may give an order for the safe custody of such insane person. s. 1.

Insane persons indicted for any offence, and found to be insane by a jury, to be impannelled on their arraignment, shall be ordered by the court to be kept in custody till his majesty's pleasure be known. s. 2.

Persons committed by any justice, on account of being dangerous and insane, shall not be bailed, except by two justices (one qu.), or by the quarter sessions, or one of the judges. s. 3.

The privy council, or one of the secretaries of state, may cause persons appearing to be insane, and endeavouring to gain admittance to his majesty, to be kept in custody till the insanity of such persons be enquired into; and such persons may be committed, and discharged if on an enquiry by a jury, or a commission in the nature of a writ de lunatico inquirendo, he be returned sane. s. 4.

Acts done by ideots and lunatics in a court of record, as fines and recoveries, and the uses declared on them, and recognizances, they are good, and can neither be avoided by themselves nor their representatives; for it is to be presumed, that had they been under these disabilities, the judges would not have admitted them to make these acknowledgments. 4 Co. 124. 2 And. 145. Co. Lit. 247. 2 Inst. 483. Bro. tit. Fines 75. 2 And. 193.

As to acts done by them not of record, they are distinguished into void and voidable. 4 Co. 124, 5. Beverley's case, Bro. tit. Fait 62. F. N. B. 202. Cro. Eliz. 398.

But if parceners of non-sane memory make partition, unless it be equal, it shall only bind the parties themselves, but not their issue. Co. Lit. 166. a.

The contracts of ideots and lunatics, after office found and the party legally committed, are also void; and the non compos restored to his legal right, at the suit of his committee. 4 Co. 125.

Ideots and lunatics, during their lunacy, and persons grown childish by extreme age, are incapable of making any will or testament. Swinb. 71. Godolph. Orph. Leg. 25.

But if a lunatic, in a lucid interval, make a will, it shall not stand good. Swinb. 72. Godolph. 25. Dyer 20\. 8 C\. 147.

And if a person of sound memory makes his will, and afterwards becomes non compos, this is no revocation of the will. Godolph. 26. 4 Co. 126. 1 Vern. 105.

And by stat. 4 Geo. 2. cap. 10. any person being ideot, lunatic, or non compos mentis, or the committee of such person may, by direction of the lord chancellor, upon the petition of the person for whom such ideot, lunatic or non compos mentis, shall be seised or possessed in trust, or of the mortgagor, to convey and assure lands in such manner as the chancellor shall by such order direct.

And by 11 Geo. 3. c. 20. the guardians or committees of lunatics, are enabled, by order of the lord chancellor, to accept of surrenders of leases, and to grant new ones.

By 43 Geo. 3. c. 75. the lord chancellor of the united kingdom and of Ireland, being entrusted with the persons and estates of lunatics, may order the freehold and leasehold estates of such person to be sold, or charged by mortgage, for raising money for the payment of their debts; and the surplus to be applied as the estate would have been applicable to. s. 1, 2.

The power of leasing of lands belonging to lunatics, having only a limited estate therein, may be executed by the committee of the estate of such person, under the directions of the chancellor. s. 3.

When lunatics are seised of freehold or copyhold estates, in fee or in tail, and an absolute interest in leasehold estates, the chancellor may direct the committee of the estate to make leases thereof. s. 4.

The acts of the committee, under this act, shall be binding. s. 5.

But the act shall not subject estates of lunatics to debts, otherwise than they are now subject by law, but shall be applied only for the benefit of lunatics. s. 6.

When an ideot doth sue or defend he shall not appear by guardian, prochein amy, or attorney, but he must be ever in proper person. Co. Lit. 135. b. F. N. B. 27. 2 Inst. 390.

But it is otherwise of him who becomes non compos mentis; for he shall appear by guardian, if within age, or by attorney if of full age. 4 Co. 124. b. Palm. 520. et vid. 2 Saund. 335.

And if a trespass be committed in the lands of a lunatic who is legally committed, the committee cannot bring an action of trespass; but this must be brought in the name of the lunatic. 2 Sid. 125.

IDES, (idus) with the ancient Romans, were eight days in every month, so called; being the eight days immediately after the Nones. In the months of March, May, July and October, these eight days begin at the eighth day of the month, and continue to the fifteenth day: in other months, they begin at the sixth day, and last to the thirteenth. But it is observable, that only the last day is called ides, the first of these days is the eighth ides, the second day the seventh, the third day the sixth, i. e. the eighth, seventh, or sixth day before the ides; and so it is of the rest of the days; wherefore when we speak of the ides of any month in general, it is to be taken for the fifteenth or thirteenth of the month mentioned. See Calends.

JERSEY, Guernsey, Sark, Alderney, and their appendages were parcel of the duchy of Normandy, and were united to the crown of England by the first princes of the Norman line; they are governed by their own laws, which are for the most part the ducal customs of Normandy, being collected in an ancient book of great authority, entitled le grand Coustumier. The king's writ or process from the courts of Westminster is there of no force, but his commission is; they are not bound by common acts of our parliament, unless particularly named; all causes are originally determined by their own officers, the bailiffs and jurats of the island, but an appeal lies from them to the king and council in the last resort. 4 Inst. 250. 1 Black. 106.

JEWS, (Judæi) in former times the Jews were subject to many hardships, and were considered to be here, by an implied licence only, being under a proclamation of banishment: which case was similar to a determination of letters of safe conduct to an alien enemy, who was here by virtue of such letters before, &c. Arg. 2 Show. 571. in East India Company v. Sands.

But these hardships are now removed, and Jews, whether natural born subjects or not, participate equally with others in the just and benign administration of the British laws: there is, however, one corrective statute to which these persons are liable, viz. 1 Ann. st. 1. c. 30. which ordains, that if Jewish parents refuse to allow their Protestant children a fitting maintenance suitable to the fortune of the parent, the lord chancellor on complaint, may make such order therein, as he shall see proper.

IMPARLANCE, (interlocutio, vel licentia interloquendi) from the Fr. parler, to speak, is in the common law, the time granted by the court to a defendant to consider or advise what answer he shall make to the action of the plaintiff: being a continuance of the cause till another day, or a longer time given by the court.

IMPARSONEE, a parson imparsonee, persona impersonata, is he that is inducted, and in possession of a benefice. Cowel.

IMPEACHMENT, (from the Lat. impetere.) An impeachment before the lords by the commons of Great Britain, in parliament, is a prosecution of the already known and established law, and has been frequently put in practice, being a presentment to the most high and supreme court of criminal jurisdiction by the most solemn grand inquest of the whole kingdom (1 Hal. P. C. 150.) A commoner cannot, however, be impeached before the lords for any capital offence, but only for high misdemesnors: a peer may be impeached for any crime. And they usually (in case of an impeachment of a peer for treason) address the crown to appoint a lord high steward, for the greater dignity and regularity of their proceedings; which high steward was formerly elected by the peers themselves, though he was generally commissioned by the king (1 Hale P. C. 350.); but it hath of late years been strenuously maintained (Lord's Journ. 12 May, 1679. Com. Journ. 15 May, 1679. Post, 142, &c.), that the appointment of an high steward in such cases is not indispensably necessary, but that the house may proceed without one.

The articles of impeachment are a kind of bills of indictment, found by the house of commons, and afterwards tried by the lords; who are in cases of misdemesnors considered not only as their own peers, but as the peers of the whole nation. This is a custom derived to us from the constitution of the antient Germans; who in their great councils sometimes tried capital accusations relating to the public: "licet apud consilium accusare quoque, et discrimen capitis intendere (Tacit. de mor. Germ. 12.)" And it has a peculiar propriety in the English constitution; which has much improved upon the antient model imported hither from the continent. For, though in general the union of the legislative and judicial powers ought to be most carefully avoided, yet it may happen that a subject, intrusted with the administration of public affairs, may infringe the rights of the people, and be guilty of such crimes, as the ordinary magistrate either dares not or cannot punish. Of these, the representatives of the people, or house of commons, cannot properly judge; because their constituents are the parties injured: and can therefore only impeach. But before what court shall this impeachment be tried? Not before the ordinary tribunals, which would naturally be swayed by the authority of so powerful an accuser. Reason therefore will suggest, that this branch of the legislature, which represents the people, must bring its charge before the other branch, which consists of the nobility, who have neither the same interests, nor the same passions as popular assemblies (Montesq. Sp. L. xi. 6.) This is a vast superiority, which the constitution of this island enjoys, over those of the Grecian or Roman republics; where the people were at the same time both judges and accusers. It is proper, that the nobility should judge, to insure justice to the accused; as it is proper that the people should accuse, to insure justice to the commonwealth. And therefore, among other extraordinary circumstances attending the authority of this court, there is one of a very singular nature, which was insisted on by the house of commons in the case of the earl of Danby in the reign of Charles II. (Com. Journ. 5 May, 1679); and it is now enacted by statute 12 & 13 W. 3. c. 2. that no pardon under the great seal shall be pleadable to an impeachment by the commons of Great Britain in parliament.

And in the impeachment of Warren Hastings, Esq. it was confidently advanced, that the lords are not bound to observe the same rules of evidence in an impeachment, as are admitted in criminal trials in the inferior courts. The high reputation of those, who strenuously maintained this doctrine, induced Professor Christian to endeavour to prove, that it was not only contrary to all precedent and authority, but repugnant to the first and great principles both of the English law and constitution, in a pamphlet, intitled "A Dissertation, shewing that the house of lords in cases of judicature are bound by precisely the same rules of evidence, as are observed by all other courts" 4 Black. 261.

IMPEACHMENT OF WASTE, (impetitio vasti, from the Fr. empeschement, i. e. impedimentum) signifies a restraint from committing of waste upon lands; but he that holds without impeachment of waste, may make waste without being impeached for it; that is, without being sued for it, so that it is not wanton, such as demolishing of houses, or cutting down ornamental tress and shrubs. 11 Rep. 82. b. Bills in equity are also often filed to stay waste, on which an injunction will be readily granted ex parte, where a proper case is made out. See Waste.

IMPECHIARE, (French empecher, Latin impetere) to impeach, to accuse and prosecute, for felony or treason. Cowel. Blount.

IMPEDIATUS, expeditatus, impediati canes, dogs lamed and disabled from doing mischief in the forests, and purlieus. Cowel.

IMPEDIENS, a defendant, or deforciant. Cowel.

IMPEDIMENTS IN LAW, are those persons within age, under coverture, non compos mentis, in prison, beyond sea, &c. whose rights after the impediments removed, are reserved in cases of fines levied, &c. See Limitation.

IMPERIALE, a sort of very fine cloth. Cowel.

IMPESCATUS, impeached or accused. Ibid.

IMPETITIO, accusation or impeachment. Ibid.

IMPETRATION, (impetratio) signifies an obtaining any thing by request and prayer. Ibid.

IMPIERMENT, is used for impairing or prejudicing. Ibid.

IMPLEAD, to sue or prosecute by course of law. Ibid.

IMPLEMENTS, (from the Lat. impleo, to fill up) things necessary in any trade or mystery, without which the work cannot be performed; also the furniture of an house, as all household goods, implements, &c. And implements of household are tables, presses, cupboards, bed-steads, wainscot, and the like. Terms de Ley.

IMPLICATION, is where the law doth imply something that is not declared between parties in their deeds and agreements: and when our law giveth any thing to a man, it impliedly giveth whatsoever is necessary for the enjoying the same. Moor 123.

But no implication shall be allowed against an express estate, limited by express words, to drown the same. Salk. 266.

IMPORTATION, (importatio) is where goods and merchandize are brought into this kingdom from other nations. See Customs.

IMPOSSIBILITY. A thing which is impossible in law, is all one with a thing impossible in nature: and if any thing in a bond or deed is impossible at the time of its execution to be done, or afterwards becomes impossible by the act of God, such deed, &c. is void. 2 Co. Rep. 74. 2 Black. 156.

IMPOST, (from the Lat. impono) in strictness signifieth the tax received for merchandise brought into any haven from foreign nations. 31 Eliz. 5. And is in some sort distinguished from custom, the profit made of wares shipped out; yet they are frequently confounded. Cowel.

IMPOSTORS, (religious) those who falsely pretend an extraordinary commission from heaven; or terrify and abuse the people with false denunciations of judgments, are punishable by the temporal courts with fine, imprisonment, and infamous corporal punishment. 1 Hawk. P. C. 7. 4 Black. 62.

IMPOTENCY, is a sufficient ground by the ecclesiastical law, to avoid marriage; but the marriage is not void ab initio, but voidable only by sentence of separation, but to be actually made during the life of the parties. 1 Black. 434, 435.

IMPOTENTIÆ, property ratione. A qualified property may subsist with relation to animals feræ naturæ, ratione impotentiæ, on account of their own inability. As when hawks, herons, or other birds build in my trees, or conies or other creatures make their nests or burrows in my land, and have young ones there; I have a qualified property in those young ones, till such time as they can fly or run away, and then my property expires, but till then, it is in some cases trespass, and in others felony, for a stranger to take them away. 7 Rep. 17. Lamb. Eiren. 274. For here, as the owner of the land has it in his power to do what he pleases with them, the law therefore vests a property in him of the young ones in the same manner as it does of the old ones, if re-claimed or confined: for these cannot through weakness any more than the others through restraint use their natural liberty and forsake him. 2 Black. 394.

IMPRESSING SEAMEN. The power of impressing men for the sea service by the king's commission, has been a matter of some dispute, and submitted to with great reluctance; though it hath very clearly and learnedly been shewn by sir Michael Foster, (Rep. 154. Broadfoot's case) that the practice of impressing, and granting powers to the admiralty for that purpose, is of very antient date, and hath been uniformly continued by a regular series of precedents to the present time: hence he concludes it to be part of the common law. The difficulty arises from this, that no statute has expressly declared this power to be in the crown, though many of them very strongly imply it. The stat. 2 Ric. 2. c. 4. speaks of mariners being arrested and retained for the king's service, as of a thing well known, and practised without dispute; and provides a remedy against their running away. By a later statute, (2 & 3 Ph. & M. c. 16.) if any waterman, who uses the river Thames, shall hide himself during the execution of any commission of pressing for the king's service, he is liable to heavy penalties By another, (5 Eliz. c. 5.) no fisherman shall be taken by the queen's commission to serve as a mariner; but the commission shall be first brought to two justices of the peace, inhabiting near the sea-coast where the mariners are to be taken, to the intent, that the justices may chuse out, and return such a number of able-bodied men, as in the commission are contained, to serve her majesty. And, by others (7 & 8 W. 3. c. 21. 2 Ann. c. 6. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 19. 13 Geo. 2. c. 17, &c.) especial protections are allowed to seamen in particular circumstances, to prevent them from being impressed. All which do most evidently imply a power of impressing to reside somewhere; and, if any where, it must from the spirit of our constitution, as well as from the frequent mention of the king's commission, reside in the crown alone. 1 Black. 418, 419.

This method of impressing is only defensible from public necessity, to which all private considerations must give way. 1 Black. 419.

And the legality of pressing is now so fully established, that it will not now admit of a doubt in any court of justice. In the case of the King v. Jubbs, lord Mansfield says, "the "power of pressing is founded upon imme- "morial usage, allowed for ages. If it be "so founded and allowed for ages, it can have "no ground to stand upon, nor can it be "vindicated or justified by any reason, but "the safety of the state. And the practice "is deduced from that trite maxim of the "constitutional law of England, 'that pri- "vate mischief had better be submitted to, "than public detriment and inconvenience "should ensue.' And though it be a legal "power, it may, like many others, be abus- "ed in the exercise of it." Cowp. 517. In that case, the defendant was brought up by habeas corpus, upon the ground that he was entitled to an exemption; but the court held, that the exemption was not made out, and he was remanded to the ship from which he had been brought.

Lord Kenyon has also declared in a similar case, that the right of pressing is founded on the common law, and extends to all persons exercising employments in the seafaring line. Any exemptions, therefore, which such persons may claim, must depend upon the positive provisions of statutes. 5 T. R. 276.

IMPRIMERY, (Fr.) a print, or impression; and the art of printing, also a printing-house. Ibid.

IMPRISTI, those who side with, or take the part of another, either in his defence or otherwise. Ibid.

IMPRISONMENT, (imprisonamentum) is the restraint of a man's liberty under the custody of another; and extends not only to a gaol, but to a house, stocks, or where a man is held in the street, &c. for in all these cases the party so restrained is said to be a prisoner, so long as he hath not his liberty freely to go about his business, as at other times. Co. Lit. 253.

And the law so much discourages unlawful confinement, that if a man is under duress of imprisonment; a compulsion by an illegal restraint of liberty, until he seals a bond or the like; he may allege this duress, and avoid the extorted bond. But if a man be lawfully imprisoned, and either to procure his discharge, or on any other fair account, seals a bond or a deed, this is not by duress of imprisonment, and he is not at liberty to avoid it (2 Inst. 482.)

To make imprisonment lawful, it must either be by process from the courts of judicature, or by warrant from some legal officer having authority to commit to prison; which warrant must be in writing, under the hand and seal of the magistrate, and express the causes of the commitment, in order to be examined into (if necessary) upon a habeas corpus. If there be no cause expressed, the gaoler is not bound to detain the prisoner. For the law judges in this respect, saith sir Edward Coke, like Festus the Roman governor; that it is unreasonable to send a prisoner, and not to signify withal the crimes alleged against him. (Ibid. 52, 53.)

The satisfactory remedy for this injury of false imprisonment, is by an action of trespass vi et armis, usually called an action of false imprisonment, which is generally and almost unavoidably accompanied with a charge of assault and battery also; and therein the party shall recover damages for the injury he has received; and also the defendant is, as for all other injuries committed with force, or vi et armis, liable to pay a fine to the king for the violation of the public peace. 3 Black. 137.

And the law of England regards, asserts, and preserves the personal liberty of individuals. This personal liberty consists in the power of loco-motion, of changing situation, or removing one's person to whatsoever place one's own inclination may direct; without imprisonment or restraint, unless by due course of law; and is a right strictly natural, which the laws of England have never abridged without sufficient cause; and, in this kingdom it cannot ever be abridged at the mere discretion of the magistrate, without the explicit permission of the laws. For the language of the great charter (c. 29.) is, that no freeman shall be taken or imprisoned, but by the lawful judgment of his equals, or by the law of the land. And many subsequent old statutes, (5 Ed. 3. c. 9. 25 Ed. 3. st. 5. c. 4. 28 Ed. 3. c. 3.) expressly direct, that no man shall be taken or imprisoned by suggestion or petition to the king or his council, unless it be by legal indictment, or the process of the common law. By the petition of right, 3 Car. 1. it is enacted, that no freeman shall be imprisoned or detained without cause shewn, to which he may make answer according to law. By 16 Car. 1. c. 10. if any person be restrained of his liberty by order or decree of any illegal court, or by command of the king's majesty in person, or by warrant of the council board, or any of the privy council; he shall, upon demand of his council, have a writ of habeas corpus, to bring his body before the court of king's bench or common pleas; who shall determine whether the cause of his commitment be just, and thereupon do as to justice shall appertain. And by 31 Car. 2. c. 2 commonly called the habeas corpus act, the methods of obtaining this writ are so plainly pointed out and enforced, that, so long as this statute remains unimpeached, no subject of England can be long detained in prison, except in those cases in which the law requires and justifies such detainer. And, lest this act should be evaded by demanding unreasonable bail, or sureties for the prisoner's appearance, it is declared by 1 W. & M. st. 2. c. 2. that excessive bail ought not to be required.

Of great importance to the public is the preservation of this personal liberty: for if once it were left in the power of any, the highest, magistrate to imprison arbitrarily whomever he or his officers thought proper, (as in France it is daily practised,) there would soon be an end of all other rights and immunities. Some have thought, that unjust attacks, even upon life or property, at the arbitrary will of the magistrate, are less dangerous to the commonwealth, than such as are made upon the personal liberty of the subject. To bereave a man of life, or by violence to confiscate his estate, without accusation or trial, would be so gross and notorious an act of despotism, as must at once convey the alarm of tyranny throughout the whole kingdom: but confinement of the person, by secretly hurrying him to gaol, where his sufferings are unknown or forgotten, is a less public, a less striking, and therefore a more dangerous engine of arbitrary government. And yet sometimes, when the state is in real danger, even this may be a necessary measure. But the happiness of our constitution is, that it is not left to the executive power to determine when the danger of the state is so great, as to render this measure expedient: for it is the parliament only, or legislative power, that, whenever it sees proper, can authorize the crown, by suspending the habeas corpus act for a short and limited time, to imprison suspected persons without giving any reason for so doing. But this is only done in cases of extreme emergency; and in these, the nation parts with its liberty for a while, in order to preserve it for ever. 1 Black. 135, 6.

IMPROPRIATION. When a benefice ecclesiastical is in the hands of a layman, it is called an impropriation; and appropriation when in the hands of a bishop, college, or religious house, though sometimes they are confounded. 1 Black. Com. 386.

This appropriation may be severed, and the church become disappropriate, two ways: as, first, if the patron or appropriator presents a clerk, who is instituted and inducted to the parsonage: for the incumbent so instituted and inducted, is to all intents and purposes complete parson; and the appropriation, being once severed, can never be re-united again, unless by a repetition of the same solemnities (Co. Litt. 46.) And, when the clerk so presented* is distinct from the vicar, the rectory thus vested in him, becomes, what is called a sine-cure; because he hath no cure of souls, having a vicar under him to whom that cure is committed.† Also, if the corporation which has the appropriation is dissolved, the parsonage becomes disappropriate at common law; because the perpetuity of person is gone, which is necessary to support the appropriation. INCEST. In the year 1650, when the ruling powers found it for their interest to put on the semblance of a very extraordinary strictness and purity of morals, incest and wilful adultery were made capital crimes. But at the restoration, when men, from an abhorrence of the hypocrisy of the late times, fell into a contrary extreme, of licentiousness, it was not thought proper to renew a law of such unfashionable rigour. And these offences have been ever since left to the feeble coercion of the spiritual court, according to the rules of the canon law. 4 Black. Com. 64.

INCHANTMENT. By 9 Geo. 2. c. 5. no prosecution shall be carried on against any person for conjuration, witchcraft, sorcery, or inchantment. But persons pretending to use witchcraft, or tell fortunes, are still punishable as rogues and vagabonds under the Vagrant act, 17 Geo. 2. c. 5.

(u. k.) c. 119. no person shall act as a commissioner under any future inclosure act (except by signing notice of the first meeting, and administering the oath,) until he shall have taken an oath to act without favour or affection, and the oaths and appointments of new commissioners shall be enrolled with the award, and a copy shall be evidence. s. 1.

Commissioners declining to act, shall give notice to the others, and no commissioner shall purchase lands within the parish, where inclosures are made, for five years after their award. s. 2.

Commissioners shall inquire into the boundaries of parishes, and if not sufficiently ascertained, they shall fix them, giving previous notice of their intention so to do; and the commissioners shall cause a description of the boundaries to be delivered to the churchwardens and overseers of the respective parishes; and lords of manors, and persons dissatisfied, may appeal to the quarter sessions, whose decision shall be final. s. 3.

A survey, admeasurement, plan, and valuation of the lands to be inclosed, shall be made and kept by the commissioners, which shall be verified by the persons making them, and proprietors may inspect admeasurements and plans, and take copies. s. 4.

Until the division shall be completed, the lands may be entered by the commissioners, or any persons they may appoint, to make surveys; but maps made at the time of passing the acts, may be used, without making new ones, if the commissioners shall think fit. s. 5.

Claimants of common, in lands to be inclosed, shall deliver to the commissioners, schedules of the particulars, or shall be excluded, which claims may be inspected and copies taken; and objections to claims shall be delivered at or before the meeting appointed for that purpose, or shall not be received, except for special cause. s. 6.

Commissioners are not hereby authorised to determine disputes touching titles to lands; but shall assign the allotments to the persons in actual seizin or possession, and disputes as to title shall not delay inclosures. s. 7.

The commissioners, before making any allotment, shall appoint public carriage roads, and prepare a map thereof, to be deposited with their clerk, and give notice thereof, and appoint a meeting, at which if any person shall object, the commissioners, with a justice of the division, shall determine the matter: and where commissioners may be empowered to stop up any old road, it shall not be done, without the order of two justices, subject to appeal to quarter sessions. s. 8.

Carriage roads shall be fenced on both sides, according to the direction of the commissioners; and no person shall erect any gate across any road, or plant any trees on the sides, at less than fifty yards distance. s. 9.

Commissioners shall appoint surveyors, whose salary, and the expence of making the road (above the statute duty), shall be raised as other expences, and paid before the execution of the award. Ibid.

The surveyors shall be subject to the controul of the justices, and shall account to them for monies received.—Justices may levy rates. Surveyors neglecting to complete the roads, within a limited time, shall forfeit 20*l.* and the inhabitants shall not be chargeable (except to statute duty) until the roads are declared to be completed at a special sessions. Ibid.

The commissioners shall appoint private roads, footways, ditches, drains, watering-places, quarries, bridge-gates, fences, and marks. s. 10.

The grass and herbage on roads shall belong to the proprietors of the lands adjoining, and all roads which shall not be set out shall be allotted and inclosed; but no turnpike-road shall be altered without the consent of the trustees. s. 11.

Commissioners in making allotments shall have due regard to the situation of the houses, as well as the quantity and quality of land. s. 12.

Commissioners may direct small allotments to be laid together, and ring fenced and stocked, and depastured in common by the proprietors. s. 13.

Allotments shall be in full compensation for all rights in the lands, which shall cease on notice from the commissioners, affixed on the church door. s. 14.

Commissioners may exchange allotments, messuages, lands, and the like, with the consent of the proprietors, or if belonging to churches, with the consent of the bishop and of the patron. s. 15.

Commissioners may make allotments in severalty to joint tenants, or tenants in common. s. 16.

Persons shall accept their allotments within two calendar months after the award, or forfeit their right. s. 17.

Guardians, trustees, and committees may accept for incapacitated persons, and tenants for life shall accept of allotments. s. 18.

And their non-acceptance shall not prejudice the rights of the cestui que trusts, who shall accept within twelve months after their inability is removed. Ibid.

Before execution of the award, allotments may be ditched and inclosed, with the consent of the commissioners. s. 19.

Timber and other trees and bushes shall be allotted with the lands whereon they stand, the parties paying to the owners such sums as the commissioners shall direct; but in case of neglect, the owners may cut them down, and take them away. s. 20.

Where money is to be paid for lands, and which ought to be laid out in other purchases, to be settled to the same uses, the commissioners may thereout defray a proportion of the expence of passing the act, and putting it in execution; and if the surplus amounts to 200*l.* it shall as soon as may be, be laid out in other purchases, and in the mean time be paid into the bank, and applied under the direction of the court of chancery. s. 21.

If such money be less than 200*l.* and upwards of 20*l.* it shall, at the option of the person entitled to the rents, be paid into the bank, or to two trustees, to be approved of by the commissioners, for the same purposes. s. 22.

If less than 20*l.* it shall be applied to the use of the persons entitled to the rents of the lands. s. 23.

If any person does not accept, inclose, and fence in his allotment as the commissioners shall direct, they may cause it to be inclosed and fenced, and let and receive the rents until the expences are satisfied, or they may charge them upon the proprietor. s. 24.

During seven years after fencing the allotments, the fences may be erected on the outside of the ditches, and the materials carried away by the proprietors. s. 25.

No standing fences or hedges shall be destroyed till the execution of the award, without the consent of the commissioners; and if assigned as a boundary fence, shall be left uncut, the persons entitled to the allotments making compensation thereof. s. 26.

Where the boundary of any common fields shall be fenced by any mound, the proprietors of adjoining allotments shall not be compelled to fence them, but such boundaries shall be maintained by the proprietors as before, or as the commissioners may appoint. s. 27.

Persons destroying fences put up under the authority of any act, shall forfeit 5*l.* and the proprietor or occupier of the lands may give evidence. s. 28.

When the expences of obtaining and carrying any act into execution shall be paid by the proprietors, the commissioners may on neglect, cause the same to be levied by distress, or may take possession of the allotments, and receive the rents till satisfied. s. 29.

Guardians, trustees, committees, and tenants for life, or in tail, may charge allotments with expences, if not exceeding 5*l.* per acre, and if persons in possession shall advance the money, the commissioners may mortgage the lands to them for reimbursement. s. 30.

The commissioners may deduct from allotments for charity or school lands, what shall be deemed equal to the proportionable share of the expences, and allot the same to persons undertaking to pay. s. 31.

When the expences of obtaining and carrying any act into execution shall be to be paid by sale of part of the lands, the commissioners shall set out and sell a part, and the purchasers shall immediately make a deposit, which shall be forfeited if the purchase money be not duly paid. s. 32.

Commissioners may summon witnesses, and if they neglect to attend, or refuse to be examined, they are to forfeit not more than 10*l.* nor less than 5*l.*; but no witness shall be obliged to travel above eight miles. s. 33, 34.

After allotment, the commissioners shall draw up their award, which shall be read and executed at a meeting of the proprietors, and proclaimed the next Sunday in the church, and then considered as complete. s. 35.

The award shall be inrolled in one of the courts at Westminster, or with the clerk of the peace of the county, and may be inspected and copies obtained—the award and copies shall be legal evidence, and the award binding on all parties interested—and the commissioners may annex maps to the award, which shall be deemed part thereof. Ibid.

The commissioners shall keep accounts of all monies, which may be inspected at their clerk's office gratis, on pain of his forfeiting not more than 10*l.* nor less than 5*l.* s. 36.

Monies raised shall be deposited as directed by a majority in value of the proprietors, and not issued without an order from the commissioners. s. 37.

The rector or vicar, with the consent of the bishop of the diocese, and of the patron of the living, may lease allotments for twenty-one years, at a rack rent. s. 38.

Penalties are recoverable before one justice by distress, and are to be applied according to the directions of the commissioners. s. 39.

The rights of lords of manors, the king, and others, except so far as they are affected hereby, are saved. s. 40, 41.

Two justices may take affidavits of the notices required having been given, s. 42.—Persons taking false oaths to be deemed guilty of perjury. s. 43.

The act is binding in all cases, except where other provisions are made. s. 44.

INCOMPATIBLE, when certain acts are contradictory to each other, they cannot both stand, being incompatible; as for instance, it is incompatible by the statutes to hold two benefices with cure, if of a certain value in the king's books without a dispensation.

INCONTINENCY, (incontinentia) this is a crime punishable in the ecclesiastical courts by canonical censures, such as where parties live together in a state of fornication or adultery, and the like. And incontinency by bigamy, or having more wives than one; rapes of women; sodomy, or buggery; getting bastards, &c. is punishable by different statutes. See Felony.

INCOPOLITUS, a proctor or vicar. Cowel. Blount.

INCORPORATION. The king's consent is absolutely necessary to the erection of any corporation, either implied or expressly given. The king's implied consent is to be found in corporations which exist by force of the common law, to which our former kings are supposed to have given their concurrence; common law being nothing else but custom, arising from the universal agreement of the whole community. The king's consent is also presumed as to all corporations by prescription, such as the city of London, and many others, which have existed time out of memory; and therefore are looked upon in law to be well created. The methods by which the king's consent is expressly given, are either by act of parliament or by charter. But the immediate creative act is usually performed by the king alone, in virtue of his royal prerogative, i. e. by charter. 2 Inst. 330. 10 Rep. 29, 30. 1 Rol. Abr. 512, 513. 8 Rep. 114. 1 Black. 472, 3.

INCORPOREAL HEREDITAMENTS. An incorporeal hereditament is a right issuing out of a thing corporeal, (whether real or personal) or concerning, or annexed to, or exercisable within the same. Co. Lit. 19, 20. See Hereditaments.

INCREMENTUM, increase or improvement; to which was opposed decrementum or abatement. Paroch. Antiq. 164. Cowel. Blount.

INCROACHMENT, signifies an unlawful gaining upon the right or possession of another man. 9 Rep. 33. See Encroachment.

INCUMBENT, (Lat. incumbo, to strictly mind) is a clerk who is resident on his benefice with cure; and is so called, because he does or ought to bend all his study to the discharge of the cure of the church to which he belongs. Co. Lit. 119.

INCUMBRANCE. See Mortgage.

INCURRAMENTUM, the incurring or being subject to a penalty, fine, or amercement. Cowel. Blount.

INDEBITATUS ASSUMPSIT, is an action so called from the words used in the declaration, "that he the defendant being so indebted, undertook and promised to pay," and it is brought to recover in damages, the amount of the debt or demand; upon the trial of which action, the jury will, according to the nature of the evidence, allow to the plaintiff either the whole of the damages, or any less sum.

INDECIMABLE, (indecimabilis) not tithable, or by law liable to pay tithe. 2 Inst. 490.

INDEFEISIBLE, or INDEFEASIBLE, that which cannot be defeated or made void.

INDEFEASIBLE RIGHT TO THE THRONE. The doctrine of hereditary right does by no means imply an indefeasible right to the throne. It is unquestionably in the breast of the supreme legislative authority of this kingdom, the king and both houses of parliament, to defeat this hereditary right; and, by particular entails, limitations and provisions, to exclude the immediate heir, and vest the inheritance in any one else. This is strictly consonant to our laws and constitution; as may be gathered from the expression so frequently used in our Statute Book, of "the king's majesty, his heirs and successors." In which we may observe, that as the word "heirs," necessarily implies an inheritance or hereditary right, generally subsisting in the royal person; so the word "successors," distinctly taken, must imply that this inheritance may sometimes be broken through; or, that there may be a successor, without being the heir of the king. 1 Black. 195.

This is a doctrine perfectly reasonable, for in case the heir apparent should be an ideot, a lunatic, or otherwise incapable of reigning, it is necessary that such a power should be lodged somewhere; but the inheritance and regal dignity would be very precarious indeed, if this power were expressly and avowedly lodged in the hands of the people, only to be exerted whenever prejudice, caprice, or discontent, should happen to take the lead: consequently it can no where be so properly lodged as in the two houses of parliament, by and with the consent of the reigning king; and therefore, in the king, lords and commons in parliament assembled, our laws have expressly lodged it. 1 Black. 195.

INDEFENSUS, one that is impleaded, and refuseth to make answer.

INDEMNITY, acts of, occasionally pass to indemnify persons from penalties who have neglected certain acts, as taking the oaths, delivering in qualifications, &c.

INDENTURE, (indentura) is a writing containing some contract, agreement or conveyance between two or more persons; being indented at the top answerable to another part, which hath the same contents. Co. Lit. 229.

INDIA COMPANY. See East India Company.

INDICAVIT, is a writ of prohibition that lies for a patron of a church, whose clerk is sued in the spiritual court by another clerk for tithes, which amount to a fourth part of the profits of the advowson; in which case the suit belongs to the king's courts, by stat. Westm. 2. c. 5. Reg. Orig. 35. Old Nat. Br. 31.

This writ may be also purchased by the parson sued; and is directed as well unto the judge of the court, as unto the party plaintiff, that they do not proceed, &c. New Nat. Brev. 66, 101.

INDICTED, (indictatus) when the grand jury have found a true bill against any one accused by bill preferred to them at the king's suit, for some offence indictable, he is said to be indicted thereof.

INDICTION, (indictio, ab indicendo) formerly the space of fifteen years, by which computation, charters and public writings were dated. And by this account of time, each year increased one till it came to fifteen; and then returned again, making first, second indiction, &c. as dat. apud Chippenham, 18 die Aprilis, indictione nona, anno Dom. 1266. Cowel. Blount.

INDICTMENT, (indictio, indictamentum, from the Fr. enditer, i. e. deferre nomen alicujus indicare) is a bill of complaint or accusation drawn up in form of law, and exhibited for some offence criminal or penal, to a grand jury; upon whose oath it may be found to be true. Lamb. lib. 4. cap. 5.

But although a bill of indictment may be preferred to a grand jury upon oath, they are not bound to find the bill, if they find cause to the contrary; and they must either find the whole bill to be true, or reject it, and not find specially for part, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. 210.

An indictment is the king's suit; for which reason the party who prosecutes, is a good witness to prove it. 2 Hawk. 210.

After a person is indicted for felony, the sheriff is commanded to attach his body by a capias; and on return of a non est inventus, a second capias shall be granted, and the sheriff is to seize the offender's chattels, &c. And if on that writ a non est inventus is returned, an exigent shall be awarded, and the chattels be forfeited, &c. 25 Ed. 3. stat. 5. c. 2.

Upon indictments at the sessions, the magistrates on certificate of the bill being found, will issue what is termed a bench warrant, upon which the party may be apprehended. But if he come in voluntarily, and put in bail, the justices will grant a supersedeas to such warrant: and if he do not put in such bail, but is apprehended, he must remain in custody, and give the prosecutor forty-eight hours notice of bail before he can be discharged.

Also by 48 Geo. 3. c. 58. whenever any person shall be charged with any offence for which he may be prosecuted by indictment or information in B. R. not being treason or felony, on affidavit thereof or certificate of an indictment or information filed, one of the judges may cause the party to be held to bail, and the prosecutor may deliver a copy of the indictment or information to the party, and unless he plead within eight days enter an appearance and plead not guilty for him, and proceed to trial. s. 1.

When a person is convicted upon an indictment for trespass or misdemeanor, he is to appear in court, on judgment pronounced; and the court having set a fine upon him, will commit him in execution, &c. 2 Lil. Abr. 41.

But in trifling misdemeanors, assaults, &c. the court will on motion, (the clerk in court engaging to pay any fine set,) dispense with the personal appearance of a defendant.

INDICTOR, is he that indicteth; and indictee, the party indicted.

INDISTANTER, signifies without delay. Cowel.

INDIVISUM, that which two or more hold in common without partition. Ibid.

INDOLIS, a studious young man. Ibid.

INDOMIT, law French for boisterous and ungovernable. Law Fr. Dict.

INDORSEMENT, (indorsamentum) any thing written on the back of a deed. West. Symb. par. 2. sect. 157. And the indorsement and deed shall stand. Moor 679. There is also an indorsement of bills or notes. See Bills of Exchange.

INDOWMENT. See Endowment.

INDUCEMENT, the motive or incitement to a thing: thus the ground of the action is inducement, as a promise in consideration of forbearing a debt till such a day, is good without shewing how due. Cro. Jac. 548. 2 Mod. 70.

INDUCTION, (inductio, i. e. leading into) is the giving a parson possession of his church, and is the investiture of the temporal part of the benefice, as institution is of the spiritual. This induction is done in the following manner: after the bishop hath granted institution, he issues his mandate to the archdeacon to induct the clerk, who usually issues out a precept to other clergymen to perform it for him; and then one of the clergymen so commissioned, takes the parson to be inducted by the hand, lays it on the key of the church, and pronounces these words; by virtue of this commission, I induct you into the real and actual possession of the rectory of, &c. with all its appurtenances, and puts the parson into actual possession. Countr. Pars. 21, 22. Pars. Counsel. 8.

This induction is a temporal act; and if the archdeacon refuse to induct a parson, or to grant a commission to others to do it, action on the case lies against him, on which damages shall be recovered; he may likewise be compelled, by sentence in the ecclesiastical court, to induct the clerk, and shall answer the contempt. 12 Rep. 128.

INDULGENCIES of the Romish church. See PAPISTS, &c.

INDUSTRIAM, property ratione. A qualified property may subsist in animals feræ naturæ per industriam hominis: by a man's reclaiming and making them tame by art, industry, and management; or by confining them within his own immediate power that they cannot escape, and use their natural liberty: such as deer in a park, hares or rabbits in an inclosed warren, doves in a dove-house; pheasants, partridges, or other birds mewed up, and fish in private ponds: but these are no longer the property of a man, than while they continue in his keeping or actual possession, for if at any time they regain their natural liberty, his property instantly ceases. 2 Black. 392.

IN ESSE, any thing in being; distinguished from in posse; as, a thing that is not, but by possibility may come into being, such as an unborn child.

INEWARDUS, (inwardus) a guard, a watchman, one set to keep watch and ward. Cowel. Blount.

INFALISTATUS. Mr. Selden supposes this to be made out of the French word falize, which is fine sand by the water side, or a bank of the sea. And in this sand or bank, it seems that executions for felony at Dover were made. Mon. Angl. tom. 2. p. 165. b.

INFAMY, which extends to forgery, perjury, conspiracy, gross cheats, &c. disables a witness, or juror; but a pardon of crimes restores a person's credit to make him a good evidence. 2 Hawk. P. C. 432, 433.

INFANGTHEF, INFANGENETHEOF, (from the Sax. fang or fangen, i. e. capere, and theof, fur) a privilege or liberty granted unto lords of certain manors, to judge any thief taken within their fee. Bract. lib. 3. c. 35. But these franchises of infangthef or outfangthef, to be heard and determined in court-barons, are antiquated, and long since gone. 2 Inst. 31.

INFANT, (infans) a person under twenty-one years of age, whose acts are in many cases either void or voidable. Co. Lit. lib. 1. cap. 21.

But if one is born on the 1st of January, he is of age to do any legal act on the morning of the last day of December, though he may not have lived twenty-one years by nearly forty-eight hours; the reason assigned is, that in law there is no fraction of a day: and if the birth were on the first second of one day, and the act on the last second of the other, then twenty-one years would be complete; and in the law it is the same whether a thing is done upon one moment of the day or on another. Christian's Note on 1 Black. 463.

Infants have various privileges, and various disabilities: but their very disabilities are privileges, in order to secure them from hurting themselves by their own improvident acts. An infant cannot be sued but under the protection, and joining the name, of his guardian; for he is to defend him against all attacks as well by law as otherwise (Co. Lit. 135.): but he may sue either by his guardian, or prochein amy, his next friend who is not his guardian. This prochein amy may be any person who will undertake the infant's cause; and it frequently happens, that an infant, by his prochein amy, institutes a suit in equity against a fraudulent guardian. In criminal cases, an infant of the age of fourteen years may be capitally punished for any capital offence (1 Hal. P. C. 25.); but under the age of seven he cannot. The period between seven and fourteen is subject to much uncertainty: for the infant shall, generally speaking, be judged prima facie innocent; yet if he was doli capax, and could discern between good and evil at the time of the offence committed, he may be convicted, and undergo judgment and execution of death, though he had not attained to years of puberty or discretion (Ibid. 26.) And sir Matthew Hale gives us two instances, one of a girl of thirteen, who was burned for killing her mistress; another of a boy still younger, that had killed his companion and hid himself, who was hanged; for it appeared by his hiding that he knew he had done wrong, and could discern between good and evil: and in such cases the maxim of law is, that malitia supplet ætatem. So also, in much more modern times, a boy of ten years old, who was guilty of a heinous murder, was held a proper subject for capital punishment, by the opinion of all the judges. Foster 72.

With regard to estates and civil property, an infant hath many privileges: thus an infant may wave a purchase or conveyance when he comes to full age: or, if he does not then actually agree to it, his heirs may wave it after him. And, in general, an infant shall lose nothing by non-claim, or neglect of demanding his right; nor shall any other laches or negligence be imputed to an infant, except in some very particular cases. Co. Lit. 2. 1 Black. 464.

It is generally true, that an infant can neither alien his lands, nor do any legal act, nor make a deed, nor indeed any manner of contract, that will bind him. But still to all these rules there are some exceptions: part of which are mentioned in reckoning up the different capacities which they assume at different ages, under the title AGE; and there are others, a few of which it may not be improper to recite, as a general specimen of the whole. And, first, it is true, that infants cannot alien their estates: but infant trustees, or mortgagees, are enabled to convey, under the direction of the court of chancery or exchequer, or other courts of equity, the estates they hold in trust or mortgage, to such person as the court shall appoint (Stat. 7 Ann. c. 19. 4 Geo. 3. c. 16.) Also it is generally true, that an infant can do no legal act: yet, an infant, who has an advowson, may present to the benefice when it becomes void (Co. Lit. 172.) For the law in this case dispenses with one rule, in order to maintain others of far greater consequence: it permits an infant to present a clerk (who, if unfit, may be rejected by the bishop) rather than either suffer the church to be unserved till he comes of age, or permit the infant to be debarred of his right by lapse to the bishop. An infant may also purchase lands, but his purchase is incomplete: for, when he comes to age, he may either agree or disagree to it, as he thinks prudent or proper, without alleging any reason; and so may his heirs after him, if he dies without having completed his agreement (Ibid. 2.) as hath been before observed. It is further generally true, that an infant under twenty-one, can make no deed but what is afterwards voidable; yet in some cases (Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4. 43 Eliz. c. 2. Cro. Car. 179.) he may bind himself apprentice by deed indented or indentures, for seven years; and (Stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24.) he may by deed or will, appoint a guardian to his children, if he has any. Lastly, it is generally true, that an infant can make no other contract that will bind him: yet he may bind himself to pay for his necessary meat, drink, apparel, physic, and such other necessaries; and likewise for his good teaching and instruction, whereby he may profit himself afterwards. Co. Lit. 172.

But it has been held that an infant is not liable to repay money lent to him, although he should lay it out in necessaries. 1 Salk. 386. Nor is he bound to pay for goods bought to trade with, Bull. N. P. 154. But debts contracted during infancy are a good consideration to support a promise made to pay them, when a person is of full age. Also infancy may be given in evidence as upon the general issue, or it may be pleaded. Bull. 152.

And where the defendant pleads infancy, and the plaintiff replies that the defendant confirmed the promise or contract when he was of age, the plaintiff need only prove the promise, and the defendant must discharge himself by proof of the infancy. 1 T. R. 648.

INFANCY OF CORPORATIONS. The king cannot be an infant by our law. (1 Inst. 43.) And he shall never avoid his grants, &c. in respect of infancy; for he cannot be a minor, being as king a body politic. (2 Dano. Abr. 767.) So the acts of a mayor and commonalty shall not be avoided by reason of infancy of the mayor. Cro. Car. 557.

INFEODATION OF TITHES, the granting of tithes to mere laymen. 2 Black. Com. 27.

INFERIOR COURTS. The courts of judicature of this kingdom are divided into a general division of superior and inferior. The courts at Westminster are the superior, and in general have (especially the courts of King's Bench and Common Pleas) superintendance over the inferior. All other courts are deemed inferior.

INFIDELS, (infideles) those who may not be witnesses by refusal to take an oath on the Old or New Testament. (1 Inst. 6.

2 Hawk. P. C. 434.) may nevertheless be sworn according to the ceremonies of their own religion. Therefore Turks, Mahometans, and Gentoos, may be sworn on oath after the manner of their own accustomed rites and particular modes of belief.

INFINITY OF ACTIONS are not allowed by the law; therefore, although one subject may have his action against another for a private nuisance, yet he may not have it for a common nuisance; for if he might, then every man would have it, and so the actions would be infinite, &c. 2 Co. Inst. 56. 9 Rep. 113.

INFIRMARY, (infirmarius) he who had the care of the apartments allotted for infirm or sick persons in monasteries was called infirmarius. Cowel. Blount.

IN FORMA PAUPERIS. See Forma Pauperis.

INFORMATIONS. Informations are of two sorts; first those which are partly at the suit of the king, and partly at that of a subject; and secondly, such as are only in the name of the king. The former are usually brought upon penal statutes, which inflict a penalty upon conviction of the offender, one part to the use of the king, and another to the use of the informer; and are a sort of qui tam actions, only carried on by a criminal instead of a civil process; upon which it is to be observed that by the stat. 31 Eliz. c. 5, "No prosecution upon any penal "statute, the suit and benefit whereof are "limited in part to the king, and in part "to the prosecutor, can be brought by any "common informer after one year is expir-"ed since the commission of the offence, "nor on behalf of the crown after the lapse "of two years longer, nor where the for-"feiture is originally given only to the "king can such prosecution be had after "the expiration of two years from the "commission of the offence."

The informations that are exhibited in the name of the king alone are also of two kinds, first, those which are truly and properly his own suits, and filed ex officio by his own immediate officer, the attorney general: Secondly, those in which, though the king is the nominal prosecutor, yet it is at the relation of some private person or common informer; and they are filed by the king's coroner and attorney in the court of King's Bench, usually called the master of the crown-office, who is for this purpose the standing officer of the public.—The objects of the king's own prosecutions, filed ex officio by his own attorney-general, are properly such enormous misdemeanors, as peculiarly tend to disturb or endanger his government, or to molest or affront him in the regular discharge of his royal functions. For offences so high and dangerous, in the punishment or prevention of which a moment's delay would be fatal, the law has given to the crown the power of an immediate prosecution, without waiting for any previous application to any other tribunal; which power, thus necessary, not only to the ease and safety, but even to the very existence of the executive magistrate, was originally reserved in the great plan of the English constitution, wherein provision is wisely made for the due preservation of all its parts. The objects of the other species of informations, filed by the master of the crown-office upon the complaint or relation of a private subject, are any gross and notorious misdemeanors, riots, batteries, libels, and other immoralities of an atrocious kind (2 Hawk. P. C. 260.), not peculiarly tending to disturb the government, (for those are left to the care of the attorney-general) but which, on account of their magnitude or pernicious example, deserve the most public animadversion. And when an information is filed, either thus, or by the attorney-general ex officio, it must be tried by a petit jury of the county where the offence arises; after which, if the defendant be found guilty, the court must be resorted to for his punishment *.

* If an information, or an indictment for a misdemeanor removed into the court of King's Bench by certiorari, be not of such importance as to be tried at the bar of the court, it is sent down by writ of nisi prius into the county where the crime is charged to have been committed, and it is there tried either by a common or a special jury, like a record in a civil action, and if the defendant is found guilty, he must afterwards receive judgment from the court of King's Bench. But where an indictment for treason or felony is removed by certiorari, the law upon the subject seems to be fully stated by lord Hale in the two following sections. 2 P. C. 41.

"As to an indictment of felony or trea-"son removed out of the county by certio-"rari, and the party pleading, the record "is sent down by nisi prius to be tried, the "judges of nisi prius may upon that record "proceed to trial, and judgment, and "execution, as if they were justices of gaol-"delivery by virtue of the stat. of 14 H. 6, "cap. 1.

"But if there were any question upon "that statute, yet the stat. of 6 H. 8, cap. 6, "which extends to all justices and com-"missioners, as well those of gaol-deli-"very, as of the peace, enables the court "of King's Bench to send to them the very "record itself, and by special writ or man-"date to command them to proceed to trial "and judgment upon such issue joined; as "they may command the justices before

There can be no doubt but that this mode of prosecution, by information, (or suggestion,) filed on record by the king's attorney-general, or by his coroner or master of the crown-office in the court of King's Bench, is as ancient as the common law itself. (1 Show. 118.) For as the king was bound to prosecute, or at least to lend the sanction of his name to a prosecutor, whenever a grand jury informed him upon their oaths that there was a sufficient ground for instituting a criminal suit; so, when these his immediate officers were otherwise sufficiently assured that a man had committed a gross misdemeanor, either personally against the king or his government, or against the public peace and good order, they were at liberty, without waiting for any further intelligence, to convey that information to the court of King's Bench by a suggestion on record, and to carry on the prosecution in his majesty's name. But these informations (of every kind) are confined by the constitutional law to mere misdemeanors only; for, wherever any capital offence is charged, the same law requires that the accusation be warranted by the oath of twelve men, before the party shall be put to answer it. And as to those offences in which informations were allowed as well as indictments, so long as they were confined to this high and respectable jurisdiction, and were carried on in a legal and regular course in his majesty's court of King's Bench, the subject had no reason to complain. The same notice was given, the same process was issued, the same pleas were allowed, the same trial by jury was had, the same judgment was given by the same judges, as if the prosecution had originally been by indictment. But when the statute of 3 Hen. 7, c. 1, had extended the jurisdiction of the court of star-chamber, the members of which were the sole judges of the law, the fact, and the penalty; and when the statute 11 Hen. 7, c. 3, had permitted informations to be brought by any informer upon any penal statute, not extending to life or member, at the assises, or before the justices of the peace, who were to hear and determine the same according to their own discretion, then it was that the legal and orderly jurisdiction of the court of King's Bench fell into disuse and oblivion, and Empson and Dudley (the wicked instruments of king Henry 7,) by hunting out obsolete penalties, and this tyrannical mode of prosecution, with other oppressive devices, (1 And. 157) continually harassed the subject, and shamefully enriched the crown. The latter of these acts was soon indeed repealed by stat. 1 Hen. 8, c. 6, but the court of star-chamber continued in high vigour, and daily increasing its authority, for more than a century longer, till finally abolished by statute 16 Car. 1. c. 10.

Upon this dissolution the old common law authority (5 Mod. 464,) of the court of King's Bench, as the custos morum of the nation, being found necessary to reside somewhere for the peace and good government of the kingdom, was again revived in practice. (Styl. Rep. 217, 245. Styl. pract. Reg. tit. information, page 187. Edit. 1657. 2 Sid. 71. 1 Sid. 152.) And it is observable that in the same act of parliament which abolished the court of star-chamber, a conviction by information is expressly reckoned up as one of the legal modes of conviction of such persons as should offend a third time against the provisions of that statute (Stat. 16 Car. 1, c. 10, sec. 6). It is true, sir Mat. Hale, who presided in this court soon after the time of such revival, is said (5 Mod. 460,) to have been no friend to this method of prosecution; and if so, the reason of such his dislike was probably the ill use which the master of the crown-office then made of his authority, by permitting the subject to be harassed with vexatious informations whenever applied to by any malicious or revengeful prosecutor, rather than his doubt of their legality or propriety upon urgent occasions (1 Saund. 301. 1 Sid. 174). For the power of filing informations without any control then resided in the breast of the master, and being filed in the name of the king they subjected the prosecutor to no costs, though on trial they proved to be groundless. This oppressive use of them in the times preceding the Revolution, occasioned a struggle soon after the accession of king William (1 W. & M. 5 Mod. 459. Comb. 141. Far. 361. 1 Show. 106.) to procure a declaration of their illegality by the judgment of the court of King's Bench. But sir John Holt, who then presided there, and all the judges, were clearly of opinion that this proceeding was grounded on the common law, and could not be then impeached. And in a few years afterwards a more temperate remedy was applied in parliament by statute 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 18, which enacted, that the clerk of the crown shall not file any information without express direction from the court of King's Bench; and that every prosecutor permitted to promote such information shall give security by a recognizance of 20*l.* (which now seems to be too small a sum) to prosecute the same with effect, and to pay costs to the defendant, in case he be acquitted thereon, unless the judge who tries the information shall certify there was reasonable cause for filing it; and, at all events, to pay costs, unless the information shall be tried within a year after issue joined. But there is a proviso in this act that it shall not extend to any other informations than those which are exhibited by the master of the crown-office, and consequently informations at the king's own suit, filed by his attorney-general, are no way restrained thereby. 4 Black. 311.

If the treason or felony is to be tried at nisi prius under the 14 Hen. 6, cap. 1, then the court sends a transcript of the record, and not the record itself. 2 Hal. P. C. 3. & Co. 74.

Where an information is given by statute, to be prosecuted at the assises, &c. the informer on filing his information must make oath before a judge, that the offence laid in the information was not committed in any other county than that mentioned in the information; and that he believes the offence was committed within a year next before the filing of the information. 21 Jac. 1. c. 4.

Offences created since the stat. 21 Jac. 1, cap. 4, are not within that statute to be prosecuted in the county where the fact was done; so that informations on subsequent penal statutes are not restrained thereby. 1 Salk. 373.

By the stat. 18 Eliz. cap. 5, informers are to exhibit their suits in proper person, by way of information, or original action; they are not to compound with the defendant without the consent of the court, on pain of 10*l.* penalty, pillory, and to be for ever disabled to sue on any penal statute. And if they discontinue, or are nonsuited, the court shall immediately assign costs to the defendant, but this statute, and the 21 Jac. 1, c. 4, do not extend to informations of officers, nor on the statutes of maintenance, champerty, concerning concealments of customs, &c. and it extends not to parties grieved, and those to whom any forfeiture is given in certain. Ibid.

And by 4 & 5 Wil. & Mar. c. 18, the clerk of the crown in the court of King's Bench shall not without express order given by the court file any information before he shall have taken, or have delivered to him, a recognizance from the person procuring such information, with the place of his abode, title, or profession, to be entered, to the person against whom such information is exhibited, in the penalty of 20*l.* that he will effectually prosecute, &c. and if the prosecutor shall not at his own costs, within one year after issue joined therein, procure the same to be tried, or if upon such trial a verdict pass for the defendant, or in case the informer procure a nolle prosequi to be entered, then the court of King's Bench may award the defendant costs, unless the judge shall at the trial in open court certify upon record there was reasonable cause for exhibiting such information; and in case the informer shall not within three months after the costs taxed, and demand made thereof, pay to the defendant the costs, then the defendant shall have the benefit of the recognizance.

But nothing in this act shall extend to any other information than such as shall be exhibited in the name of their majesties coroner, or attorney, in the court of King's Bench for the time being, commonly called the master of the crown-office.

Notwithstanding this last clause all informations, except these exhibited in the name of his majesty's attorney-general, remain as before by the common law. Carth. 503. 1 Salk. 376. S. C.

And it is to be observed that an informer upon a popular statute shall never have costs, if not given by statute, but the party grieved in an action on the statute shall, where a certain penalty is given. 2 Hawk. 273.

INFORMATION IN THE EXCHEQUER. An information on behalf of the crown, filed in the Exchequer by the king's attorney-general, is a method of suit for recovering money or other chattels, or for obtaining satisfaction in damages for any personal wrong committed in the lands or other possessions of the crown. (Moor. 375,) It differs from an information filed in the court of King's Bench, in that this is instituted to redress a private wrong, by which the property of the crown is affected, that is calculated to punish some public wrong, or heinous misdemeanor in the defendant. It is grounded on no writ under seal, but merely on the intimation of the king's officer the attorney-general, who "gives the court to understand and be "informed of" the matter in question; upon which the party is put to answer, and trial is had, as in suits between subject and subject. The most usual informations are those of intrusion and debt; intrusion, for any trespass committed on the lands of the crown (Cro. Jac. 212. 1 Leon. 48. Savil. 49), as by entering thereon without title, holding over after a lease is determined, taking the profits, cutting down timber, or the like; and debt, upon any contract for monies due to the king, or for any forfeiture due to the crown upon the breach of a penal statute. This is most commonly used to recover forfeitures occasioned by transgressing those laws which are enacted for the establishment and support of the revenue: others which regard mere matters of police, and public convenience, being usually left to be enforced by common informers in qui tam informations, or actions. But after the attorney-general has informed upon the breach of a penal law no other information can be received. (Hard. 201.) There is also an information in rem, when any goods are supposed to become the property of the crown, and no man appears to claim them, or to dispute the title of the king. As anciently in the case of treasure-trove, wrecks, waifs, and estrays, seized by the king's officer for his use. Upon such seizure an information was usually filed in the king's exchequer, and thereupon a proclamation was made for the owner (if any) to come in and claim the effects, and at the same time there issued a commission of appraisement to value the goods in the officer's hands, after the return of which, and a second proclamation had, if no claimant appeared, the goods were supposed derelict, and condemned to the use of the crown (Gilb. Hist. of Exch. ch. 13). And when in later times forfeitures of the goods themselves, as well as personal penalties on the parties, were inflicted by act of parliament for transgressions against the laws of the customs and excise, the same process was adopted in order to secure such forfeited goods to the public use, though the offender himself had escaped the reach of justice. 3 Black. 261.

INFORMATUS NON SUM, or non sum informatus, is the formal answer where an attorney is authorized by his client to let judgment pass in that form against him, on a warrant of attorney given for confessing judgment.

INFORMER, (informator) a person who informs against or prosecutes in the king's courts for an offence against any law, or penal statute.

INFORTIATUM one part of the digests of the civil law, according to Benedict, abbot of Peterborough, in the reign of Hen. 3. Cowel. Blount.

INFORTUNIUM, homicide. See HOMICIDE.

INFUGARE, signifies to put to flight. Cowel. Blount.

INFULA, anciently the garment of a priest, like that which we now call a cassock; also a coif. Ibid.

INGE, a meadow or pasture, from the Sax. ing, pratum. Ibid.

INGENIUM, an instrument anciently used in war, arte et ingenio confectum; from whence, it is said, we derive the word engine. Ibid.

INGENUITAS REGNI, Ingenui, liberi et legales homines, the freeholders and commonalty of the kingdom. Ibid.

INGRESS, EGRESS, AND REGRESS, words in leases of lands, to signify a free entry into, going forth of, and returning from, some part of the lands let; as to get in a crop of corn, &c. after the term expired. Ibid.

INGRESSU, a writ of entry, whereby a man seeks entry into lands or tenements. Ibid. See Entry.

INGRESSUS, the relief which the heir at full age paid to the head lord for entering upon the fee, or lands fallen by the death or forfeiture of the tenant, &c. Cowel. Blount.

INGROSSATOR MAGNI ROTULI. See Clerk of the Pipe.

INGROSSER, (ingrossator) is one who buys and sells any thing by wholesale; and whoever shall get into his hands by buying, contract, or promise, (other than by demise, grant or lease of lands,) any corn growing, or other corn or grain; butter, cheese, fish, or other thing whatsoever, within the realm of England, to the intent to sell the same again. All the statutes concerning this offence having been repealed by 12 Geo. 3, c. 71, the same now remains as before, viz. an offence indictable, for which as in other misdemeanors the party may be fined or imprisoned at the discretion of the court. Cro. Car. 232. 1 Hawk. P. C. 235.

INGROSSING OF DEEDS, is the writing thereof on paper or parchment.

INGROSSING OF A FINE, the making of the indentures by the chirographer, for delivery of them to the party to whom the fine is levied. F. N. B. 147.

INHABITANT, is a dweller or householder in any place, (2 Inst. 702,) and every one is deemed an inhabitant within the parish where he occupies land, although he may not be actually a resident within such parish, but elsewhere.

INHERITANCE, (hæreditas) is a perpetuity in lands or tenements to a man and his heirs. Lit. sec. 9. See HEIR and HEREDITAMENTS.

INHIBITION, (inhibitio) is a writ to forbid a judge from further proceeding in a cause depending before him, being in nature of a prohibition. 9 Ed. 2, c. 1. 24 Hen. 8, c. 12. 15 Car. 2, c. 9. F. N. B. 39.

INHOC, or INHOKE, (from in, within, and hoke, a corner or nook) signifies any corner or part of a common field, ploughed up and sowed with oats, &c. and sometimes fenced in with a dry hedge, in that year wherein the rest of the same field lies fallow and common. Cowel. Blount.

INITIATE, tenant by the curtesy. As soon as a child is born the father begins to have a permanent interest in the land, and the child could not be in ward of the lord of the fee during the life of his father, who by the birth became one of the pares curtis, and was called "tenant by the curtesy ini-" tiate." And this estate being once vested in him by the birth of the child is not liable to be determined by the subsequent death or coming of age of the infant. 2 Black. Com. 127.

INJUNCTION, (injunctio) is a prohibition granted in divers cases; it is generally grounded upon an interlocutory order or decree out of the court of chancery or exchequer, on the equity side, to stay proceedings in courts of law; and sometimes it is issued to the spiritual courts. West. Symb. sec. 25.

When a bill in equity is filed, if an injunction be prayed therein, it may be had at various stages of the cause, according to the circumstances of the case. If the bill be to stay execution upon an oppressive judgment, and the defendant does not appear, or put in his answer within the stated time allowed by the rules of the court, an injunction will issue of course; and when the answer comes in the injunction can only be continued upon a sufficient ground appearing from the answer itself. But if an injunction be wanted to stay waste, or other injuries of an equally urgent nature, such as to stay the sale of a pirated copy of a book, or the like, then upon the filing of the bill, and a proper case supported by affidavits, the court will grant an injunction immediately ex parte, to continue till the defendant has put in his answer, and till the court shall make some further order concerning it: and when the answer comes in, whether it shall then be dissolved, or continue till the hearing of the cause, is determined by the court upon argument, drawn from considering the answer and affidavit together. Bac. Abr. and 14 Vin. Abr. tit. Injunction.

INJURY, (injuria) is a wrong or damage to a man's person or goods. And civil injuries are of two kinds, the one without force or violence, as slander, or breach of contract; the other coupled with force and violence, as batteries, or false imprisonment. Finch L. 184.

INLAGARE, to restore to the benefit of the law. Cowel. Blount.

INLAGATION, (inlagatio, from the Sax. in lagiam, i. e. in lagare) signifies a restitution of one outlawed to the protection of the law, and benefit of a subject. Bract. lib. 3, tract. 2, c. 14. Leg. Canut. par. 1, c. 2.

INLAGH, (inlagatus, vel homo sub lege,) is he who is of some frank-pledge, and not outlawed; the contrary to utlagh. Bract. tract. 2, lib. 3, c. 11.

INLAND, is said to be terra dominicalis, pars manerii dominica, terra interior vel inclusa; for that which was let to tenants was called outland. Cowel. Blount.

INLAND BILLS. See Bills of Exchange.

INLAND TRADE, a trade wholly managed at home, in one country. Merc. Dict.

INLANTAL, INLANTALE, demesne or inland, to which was opposed delantal, land tenanted or outlawed. Cowel. Blount.

INLEASED, from the Fr. enlass, entangled or ensnared. Co. Inst. 2 par. fol. 247.

INLEGIARE. When a delinquent had satisfied the law, and was again rectus in curia, he was said se inlegiare. Cowel. Blount.

INMATES, are those persons who are admitted to dwell with and in the house of another. Kitch. 45.

INNAMUM for NAMIUM, a pledge. Innama non capiantur nisi per communem assensum. Du Cange.

INNATURALITAS, unnatural usage. Cowel. Blount.

INNINGS, lands recovered from the sea. Cowel. Blount.

INNOTESCIMUS. This word and videmus are all one; it signifies letters patent, so called, which are always of a charter of feoffment, or some other instrument, not of record, concluding innotescimus per praesentes, &c. Cowel.

INNOVATIONS, are thought dangerous by our laws; and the ancient judges of the law have ever suppressed them, lest the certainty of the common law should be disturbed. Co. Lit. 379. In the reign of king Ed. 3, the judges said "we will not change the law which always hath been used:" and in the time of k. Hen. 4, they declared "it would be better that it should be turned to a default than that the law should be changed, or any innovation made." Ibid. 303.

Many modern determinations have done honour to the judges of the present age; and though by some they may, for want of due consideration, be thought innovations, they certainly are not, but are only a more liberal construction of our common law, which will give relief, if properly construed, in most cases.

INNOXIARE, to purge one of a fault, and make him innocent. Leg. Ethelred, c. 10.

INNS OF COURT AND CHANCERY. After the court of common pleas, the grand tribunal for disputes of property, was fixed to be held in one certain spot, that the seat of ordinary justice might be permanent and notorious to all the nation, the professors of the municipal law, who before were dispersed about the kingdom, collected together and formed themselves into an aggregate body, whereby a society was established of persons who (as Spelman observes) addicting themselves wholly to the study of the laws of the land, and no longer considering it as a mere subordinate science for the amusement of leisure hours, soon raised those laws to that pitch of perfection which they suddenly attained under the auspices of our English Justinian, king Edward 1. Spelm. 334. Dug. Orig. Jur. 55. 1 Black. 23.

In consequence of this assemblage they naturally fell into a kind of collegiate order, and, being excluded from Oxford and Cambridge, found it necessary to establish a new university of their own. This they did by purchasing at various times certain houses (now called the inns of court and of chancery) between the city of Westminster, the place of holding the king's courts, and the city of London. Here exercises were performed, lectures read, and degrees were at length conferred in the common law, as at other universities in the canon and civil. The degrees were those of barristers (first styled apprentices †, from apprendre, to learn) who answered to our bachelors, as the state and degree of a serjeant, servientis ad legem, did to that of doctor. 1 Black. 23, 24.

The crown seems to have soon taken under its protection this infant seminary of common law; and the more effectually to foster and cherish it K. Hen. 3, in the 19th year of his reign issued out an order, directed to the mayor and sheriffs of London, commanding that no regent of any law-schools within that city should for the future teach law therein. (Ne aliquis scholas regens de legibus in eadem civitate de cætera ibidem leges doceat.) In order, as sir Edward Coke (2 Inst. proem.) understands it, by such restraint to collect all the common lawyers into the one public university then newly instituted in the suburbs. Ibid.

In this juridical university there are two sorts of collegiate houses, one called inns of chancery, in which the younger students of the law were usually placed; "learning "and studying," (says Fortesc. c. 49,) "the "originals, and as it were the elements of "the law; who profiting therein, as they "grew to ripeness, so were they admitted "into the greater inns of the same study, "called the inns of court."

But by degrees this custom has fallen into disuse; first, because the inns of chancery, being now almost totally filled by the inferior branches of the profession, are neither commodious nor proper for the resort of gentlemen of any rank or figure; and if gentlemen were to be entered at present in the inns of chancery with an intention of being called to the bar, their admission there would now be of no avail with regard to the time and attendance required by the inns of court.

These Inns of Court are, the Inner Temple, Middle Temple, Lincoln's Inn, and Gray's Inn, from which societies alone students are called to the bar. And the Inns of Chancery are, Clifford's Inn, Clement's Inn, Lion's Inn, New Inn, Furnival's Inn, Thavies' Inn, Staple's Inn, and Barnard's Inn. These are subordinate to the inns of court; the three first belong to the Inner Temple, the fourth to the Middle Temple, the two next to Lincoln's Inn, and the two last to Gray's Inn. Dugd. Orig. Jur. 320.

The inns of court are governed by masters, principals, benchers, stewards, and other proper officers; and the chief of them have chapels for divine service, and all of them public halls for exercises, readings, and arguments, which the students were formerly obliged to perform and attend for a competent number of years before admitted to speak at the bar, &c. These societies or colleges, nevertheless, are no corporations, nor have any judicial power over their members, but have certain orders among themselves, which by consent have the force of bye-laws. For light offences persons are only excommoned, or put out of commons; for greater they lose their chambers, and are expelled; and when expelled out of one society shall never be received by any of the others. Fortescue.

But the twelve judges sitting in Serjeants Inn-Hall exercise an appellant jurisdiction in all matters of controversy arising upon the rules or bye-laws of these societies, and to no other forum ought appeal to be made. Hart's case, at Serjeants' Inn, anno 1780, Ed. MS.

INNS AND INNKEEPERS. Common inns were instituted for the lodging and relief of travellers, and at common law any man might erect and keep an inn, or alehouse, to receive travellers; but now they are to be licensed, and give recognizances for keeping good order. See Alehouses.

If one who keeps a common inn refuses to receive a traveller as guest into his house, or to find him victuals, or lodging, upon his tendering a reasonable price for the same, having room, the innkeeper is liable to render damages in an action at the suit of the party grieved; and may also be indicted and fined at the suit of the king. And it is said he may be compelled by the constable of the town to receive and entertain such a person as his guest. 1 Hawk. P. C. 225.

An action on the case on an implied assumpsit will lie against the guest for things had, where the innkeeper is obliged by law to furnish him with meat, drink, &c. And when a guest calls for any thing at an inn the innkeeper may justify detaining a horse, or other thing, till he is paid his just reckoning. Dyer 30. Mod. Cas. in L. & E. 172.

And if a horse eat out as much as he is worth, the master of the inn, after a reasonable appraisement, may sell the horse and pay himself. (Yelv. 66.) But if one bring several horses to an inn, and afterwards takes them all away but one, the innkeeper may not sell this horse for payment of the debt for the others, but every horse is to be sold to satisfy what is due for his own meat; for the act of allowing the owner to take the others away implies that the innkeeper, as to those, gave his guest personal credit. 1 Bulst. 207. 217.

If any theft be committed on a guest while lodging in an inn, by any servant of the inn, or by any other person, (not the guest's servant or companion) the inn-keeper is answerable in an action on the case: But if the guest be not a traveller, but one of the same town, the master of the inn is not chargeable for his servant's theft; and if a man is robbed in a private tavern, the master is not chargeable. 8 Rep. 32, 33. And although the guest deliver not his goods to the inn-keeper to keep, &c. if they be stolen while he is a guest, as where finding that he cannot be lodged he requires to rest while he takes some refreshment, he shall be charged. 2 Shep. Abr. 334. 5 Ter. Rep. 273.

INNUENDO, (from innuo, to nod, or beckon with the hand to one) is a word used in declarations and law pleadings to ascertain a person or thing which was named before, as to say he (innuendo, that is meaning the plaintiff) did so and so, when there was mention before of another person. 4 Rep. 17.

INOFFICIOUS TESTAMENT. The Romans were used to set aside testaments as being inefficiosa, deficient in natural duty, if they disinherited or totally passed by, without assigning a true and sufficient reason, any of the children of the testator.

But if the child had any legacy, though ever so small, it was a proof that the testator had not lost his memory or his reason, which otherwise the law presumed, but was then supposed to have acted thus for some substantial cause; and in such case no querela inefficiosi testamenti was allowed. Hence probably has arisen that groundless vulgar error, of the necessity of leaving the heir a shilling, or some other express legacy, in order to disinherit him effectually; whereas the law of England makes no such constrained suppositions of forgetfulness or insanity; and therefore, though the heir or next of kin be totally omitted, it admits no querela inefficiosi to set aside such a testament.

INOPERATIO, is one of the legal excuses to exempt a man from appearing in court on the days in which all pleadings are to cease, or in diebus non juridicis. Cowel. Blount.

INPENNY AND OUTPENNY, Money paid by the custom of some manors on the alienation of tenants, &c. Ibid.

INPRISI, adherents or accomplices.

INQUEST, (inquisitio) is an inquisition of jurors in causes civil and criminal, on proof made of the fact on either side, when it is referred to their trial, being empannelled by the sheriff, coroner, or other proper officer for that purpose. Staundf. P. C. lib. 3. c. 12.

INQUIRENDO. An authority given in general to some person, or persons, to inquire into something for the king's advantage. Reg. 72.

INQUISITION, OR INQUEST OF OFFICE, is an inquiry made by the king's officer, his sheriff, coroner, or escheator, virtute officii, or by writ to them sent for that purpose, or by commissioners specially appointed, concerning any matter that entitles the king to the possession of lands or tenements, goods or chattels. (Finch. L. 323, 4, 5.) This is done by a jury of no determinate number; being either twelve, or less, or more. As, to inquire, whether the king's tenant for life died seised, whereby the reversion accrues to the king: whether A, who held immediately of the crown, died without heirs; in which case the lands belong to the king by escheat: whether B be attainted of treason; whereby his estate is forfeited to the crown: whether C, who has purchased lands, be an alien; which is another cause of forfeiture: whether D be an idiot a nativitate; and therefore, together with his lands, appertains to the custody of the king: and other questions of like import, concerning both the circumstances of the tenant, and the value or identity of the lands. These inquests of office were more frequently in practice than at present, during the continuance of the military tenures amongst us: when, upon the death of every one of the king's tenants, an inquest of office was held, called an INQUISITIO POST MORTEM, to enquire of what lands he died seised, who was his heir, and of what age, in order to entitle the king to his marriage, wardship, relief, primer-seisin, or other advantages, as the circumstances of the case might turn out. To superintend and regulate these inquiries the court of wards and liveries was instituted by statute 32 Hen. 8. c. 46, which was abolished at the restoration of king Charles the second, together with the oppressive tenures upon which it was founded. 3 Blac. 258.

With regard to other matters, the inquests of office still remain in force, and are taken upon proper occasions; being extended not only to lands, but also to goods and chattels personal, as in the case of wreck, treasure-trove, and the like; and especially as to forfeitures for offences. For every jury which tries a man for treason or felony, every coroner's inquest that sits upon a felo de se, or one killed by chancemedley, is, not only with regard to chattels, but also as to real interests, in all respects an inquest of office: and if they find the treason or felony, or even the flight of the party accused (though innocent) the king is thereupon, by virtue of this office found, entitled to have his forfeitures; and also, in the case of chancemedley, he or his grantees are entitled to such things, by way of deodand, as have moved to the death of the party. Ibid. 259.

These inquests of office were devised by law, as an authentic means to give the king his right, by solemn matter of record; without which he in general can neither take, nor part from, any thing. (Finch. L. 82.) For it is a part of the liberties of England, and greatly for the safety of the subject, that the king may not enter upon or seize any man's possessions upon bare surmises, without the intervention of a jury. (Gilb. Hist. Exch. 132. Hob. 347.) It is however particularly enacted by the statute 33 Hen. 8. c. 20, that in case of attainder for high treason, the king shall have the forfeiture instantly, without any inquisition of office, and, as the king hath no title at all to any property of this sort before office found, therefore by the statute 18 Hen. 6. c. 6, it was enacted, that all letters patent or grants of lands and tenements before office found, or returned into the exchequer, shall be void. And, by the bill of rights at the Revolution, 1 W. & M. st. 2. c. 2, it is declared, that all grants and promises of fines and forfeitures of particular persons before conviction (which is here the inquest of office) are illegal and void, which indeed was the law of the land in the reign of Edward the third. 2 Inst. 48.

With regard to real property, if an office be found for the king it puts him in immediate possession without the trouble of a formal entry, provided a subject in the like case would have had a right to enter; and the king shall receive all the mesne or intermediate profits from the time that his title accrued: (Finch. L. 325, 326.) As, on the other hand, by the articuli super cartas (28 Ed. 1, st. 3, c. 19), if the king's escheator or sheriff seize lands into the king's hand without cause, upon taking them out of the king's hand again, the party shall have the mesne profits restored to him. 3 Black. 260.

In order to avoid the possession of the crown acquired by the finding of such office, the subject may not only have his petition of right, which discloses new facts not found by the office, and his monstrans de droit, which relies on the facts as found, but also he may (for the most part) traverse or deny the matter of fact itself, and put it in a course of trial by the common law process of the court of chancery; yet still, in some special cases, he has no remedy left but a mere petition of right. (Finch. L. 324.) These traverses, as well as the monstrans de droit, were greatly enlarged and regulated for the benefit of the subject by the statutes before mentioned, and others. (Stat. 34 Ed. 3, c. 13. 36 Ed. 3, c. 13. 2 and 3 Ed. 6, c. 8.) And in the traverses thus given by statute, which came in the place of the old petition of right, the party traversing is considered as the plaintiff, (Law of nisi prius, 208) and must therefore make out his own title, as well as impeach that of the crown, and then shall have judgment quod manus domini regis amoveantur, &c. Ibid.

INQUISITORS, (inquisitores) are sheriffs, coroners, or the like, who have power to inquire in certain cases; and inquirors, or inquisitors, are included under the name of ministri. 2 Inst. 211.

INROLMENT, (irrotulatio) is the registering, or entering in the rolls of the Chancery, King's Bench, Common Pleas, or Exchequer, or by the clerk of the peace in the records of the quarter sessions, of any lawful act, as a statute or recognizance acknowledged, a deed of bargain and sale of lands, &c. 2 Lil. Abr. 69.

INSCRIPTIONES, were written instruments by which any thing was granted. Cowel.

INSECTATOR, a prosecutor or adversary at law. Ibid.

INSERVIRE, to reduce persons to servitude. Ibid.

INSETENA, (Sax.) an inditch. Ibid.

INSIDIÆ, the same with vigiliæ or excubiæ. Ibid.

INSIDIATORES VIARUM, are waylayers; which words are not to be put in indictments, appeals, &c. by stat. H. 4. c. 2.

INSIGNIA, ensigns or arms. Cowel. Blount.

INSILIUM, evil advice or counsel. Insiliarus an evil counsellor. Ibid.

INSIMUL COMPUTASSET, a writ or action of account, which lies not for things certain but only for things uncertain. Bro. Acc. 81. Also, in assumpsit, a count is often added to the declaration, called an insimul computasset, that is, setting forth that an account was stated, wherein defendant was found indebted to the plaintiff in so much, and being so indebted, he the defendant undertook and promised to pay the sum found in arrear.

INSIMUL TENUIT, one species of the writ of formedon, brought against a stranger by a coparcener on the possession of the ancestor, &c. See Formedon.

INSINUATION, (insinuatio) is a creeping into a man's mind or favour covertly. Cowel. Blount.

INSOLVENT. Where a trustee is insolvent, the court of chancery will compel him to give security before he shall enter upon the trust. Carth. 458.

INSOLVENT DEBTORS. See EXECUTION.

INSPECTION. Trial by inspection or examination, is when for the greater expedition of a cause, in some point or issue, being either the principal question, or arising collaterally out of it, but being evidently the object of sense, the judges of the court, upon the testimony of their own senses, shall decide the point in dispute. 3 Black. Com. 331, 332. See Age, Infancy, Trial.

INSPEXIMUS, a word used in letters patent giving name to them, being the same with exemplification, and called inspeximus, because it begins rex omnibus, &c. Inspeximus irrotulamentum quarund. Cowel. Blount.

INSTALLMENT, a settlement, establishing, or sure placing in; as installment into dignities. Ibid.

In ecclesiastical promotions, where the freehold passes to the person promoted, corporal possession is required, to vest the property completely in the new proprietor, who, according to the distinction of the canonists, acquires the jus ad rem, or inchoate and imperfect right, by nomination and institution; but not the jus in re, or complete and full right, unless by corporal possession. Therefore in dignities possession is given by installment; in rectories and vicarages by induction, without which no temporal rights accrue to the minister, though every ecclesiastical power is vested in him by institution. 2 Black. Com. 312.

Installments also signify times appointed for payment of different portions of a sum of money, at stated times.

INSTANT, (Lat. instans, instantes) in law eo instante, the very instant a fact is done. And in our law, things which are to be done in an instant, have in consideration of law a priority of time in them. Plowd. 258. b. Co. Lit. 185. b. and Vin. Abr. tit. Instant, A. pl. 2.

INSTANTER, (Lat.) instantly or presently. And a trial instanter is where a prisoner between attainder and execution, pleads that he is not the same that was attainted. In such case a jury is to be impannelled to try this collateral issue, viz. the identity of his person, and in such collateral issue, the trial shall be instanter. 4 Black. 389.

INSTIRPARE, to plant or establish. Ibid.

INSTITUTION, (institutio) is when the bishop says to a clerk, who is presented to a church living, instituo te rectorem talis ecclesiæ, cum cura animarum, & accipe curam tuam & meam. If the bishop upon examination finds the clerk presented capable of the benefice, he admits and institutes him; an institution may be granted either by the bishop under his episcopal seal; or it may be done by the bishop's vicar general, chancellor, or commissary; and if granted by the vicar general, or any other substitute; their acts are taken to be the acts of the bishop: also the instrument or letters testimonial of institution may be granted by the bishop, though he is not in his diocese; to which some witnesses should subscribe their names. 1 Inst. 344. Clergym. Law. 109. The bishop, by institution, transfers the cure of souls to the clerk; and if he refuseth to grant institution, the party may have his remedy in the court of audience of the archbishop, by duplex querela, &c. for institution is properly cognizable in the ecclesiastical court: where institution is granted, and suspected to be void for want of title in the patron, &c. a super-institution hath been sometimes granted to another, to try the title of the present incumbent by ejectment. 2 Rol. Abr. 220. 4 Rep. 79.

Taking a reward for institution incurs a forfeiture of double value of one year's profit of the benefice, and makes the living void. Stat. 31 Eliz. c. 6. On institution, the clerk hath a right to enter on the parsonage house and glebe, and take the tithes; but he cannot grant, let, or do any act to charge them, till he is inducted into the living; he is complete parson as to the spiritualty, by institution; but not as to the temporalty, &c. By the institution he is only admitted ad officium, to pray and preach; and is not entitled ad beneficium, until formal induction. Plowd. 528. Vide INDUCTION.

INSUPER, is used by auditors in their accounts in the exchequer; as when so much is charged upon a person as due on his account, they say so much remains insuper to such an accountant. Cowel. Blount.

INSURANCE or ASSURANCE, signifies a security given, in consideration of a sum of money paid in hand of so much per cent. to an assurer or insurer, to indemnify the insured from such losses as shall be specified in the policy, or instrument of assurance, subscribed by the insurer or insurers for that purpose. Dict. Tr. and Com. 135.

A policy of insurance is, therefore, a contract between A and B, that upon A's paying a premium equivalent to the hazard run, B will indemnify or insure him against a particular event. This is founded upon one of the same principles as the doctrine of interest upon loans, that of hazard; but not that of inconvenience. For if I insure a ship to the Levant, and back again, at five per cent., here I calculate the chance that she performs her voyage to be twenty to one against her being lost: and, if she be lost, I lose 100*l.* and get 5*l.* Now this is much the same as if I lend the merchant whose whole fortunes are embarked in this vessel, 100*l.* at the rate of eight per cent. For by a loan I should be immediately out of possession of my money, the inconvenience of which we have supposed equal to three per cent.: if therefore I had actually lent him 100*l.* I must have added 3*l.* on the score of inconvenience, to the 5*l.* allowed for the hazard, which together would have made 8*l.* But, as upon an insurance, I am never out of possession of my money till the loss actually happens, nothing is therein allowed upon the principle of inconvenience, but all upon the principle of hazard. Thus, too, in a loan, if the chance of repayment depend upon the borrower's life, it is frequent (besides the usual rate of interest) for the borrower to have his life insured till the time of repayment; for which he is loaded with an additional premium, suited to his age and constitution. Thus, if Sempronius has only an annuity for his life, and would borrow 100*l.* of Titius for a year; the inconvenience and general hazard of this loan, we have seen, are equivalent to 5*l.* which is therefore the legal interest: but there is also a special hazard in this case; for if Sempronius dies within the year, Titius must lose the whole of his 100*l.* Suppose this chance to be as one to ten: it will follow, that the extraordinary hazard is worth 10*l.* more, and therefore, that the reasonable rate of interest in this case would be fifteen per cent. But this the law, to avoid abuses, will not permit to be taken; Sempronius therefore gives Titius the lender only 5*l.* the legal interest; but applies to Caius an insurer, and gives him the other 10*l.* to indemnify Titius against the extraordinary hazard. And in this manner, may any extraordinary or particular hazard be provided against, which the established rate of interest will not reach; that being calculated by the state to answer only the ordinary and general hazard, together with the lender's inconvenience in parting with his specie for the time. 2 Black. 459.

Insurance is, however, in effect nothing more than a wager, for the underwriter, who insures at five per cent. receives five pounds to return one hundred upon the contingency of a certain event; and it is precisely the same in its consequences, as if he had betted a wager of 95*l.* to five, or nineteen to one, that the ship arrives safe, or that a certain event does not happen. So where a life is insured for a year at ten per cent.; that is, where ten pounds are received to pay one hundred, if a certain person dies within a year; this insurance is in effect precisely the same as a wager of nine to one, that the person, whose life is insured, lives a year. It is not surprising then, that insurance should have become so prevalent and pernicious a mode of gaming, that the legislature was obliged to repress it, and to confine it within those limits, within which it is beneficial or absolutely necessary to the security of commerce. The writers on mercantile law, with that natural partiality which authors feel for their subjects, have amused themselves by endeavouring to discover what country could first claim the honour of the invention of insurance. But it is a contract far too simple, and too obvious to the understandings of mankind, however uncultivated, to be dignified by the name of invention. Yet its progress and refinements would be a necessary consequence of the extension of commerce, and the gradual improvement in the science of law. Ibid. N. by Chris,

However, to prevent these insurances from being turned into a mischievous kind of gaming, it is enacted by stat. 14 Geo. 3. c. 48. that no insurance shall be made on lives, or on any other event, wherein the party insured hath no interest; that in all policies, the name of such interested party shall be inserted; and nothing more shall be recovered thereon than the amount of the interest of the insured.

This does not, however, extend to marine insurances, which were provided for by a peculiar law of their own: which being founded on equitable principles, chiefly resulting from the special circumstances of each case, cannot be easily reduced to any general heads in more elementary institutes. Thus much, however, may be said; that, being contracts, the very essence of which consists in observing the purest good faith and integrity, they are vacated by any the least shadow of fraud or undue concealment: and, on the other hand, being much for the benefit and extension of trade, by distributing the loss or gain among a number of adventurers, they are greatly encouraged and protected both by common law and acts of parliament (Ib. 460.) As the contract of insurance is therefore founded upon the purest principles of morality and abstract justice, it is necessary that the contracting parties should have perfectly equal knowledge or ignorance of every material circumstance respecting the thing insured. If on either side there is any misrepresentation or allegatio falsi, or concealment or suppressio veri, which would in any degree affect the premium, or the terms of the engagement, the contract is fraudulent and absolutely void. Park's Ins. c. x.

Also as a practice had obtained of insuring large sums without having any property on board, which were called insurances, interest or no interest, and also of insuring the same goods several times over; both of which were a species of gaming, without any advantage to commerce, and were denominated wagering policies: it is therefore enacted by stat. 19 Geo. 2. c. 37. that all insurances, interest or no interest, or without farther proof of interest than the policy itself, or by way of gaming or wagering, or without benefit of salvage to the insurer, (all of which had the same pernicious tendency) shall be totally null and void, except upon privateers, or upon ships or merchandize from the Spanish and Portuguese dominions, for reasons sufficiently obvious; and that no re-assurance shall be lawful, except the former insurer shall be insolvent, a bankrupt, or dead: and lastly, that, in the East India trade, the lender of money on bottomry, or at respondentia, shall alone have a right to be insured for the money lent, and the borrower shall (in case of a loss) recover no more upon any insurance than the surplus of his property, above the value of his bottomry, or respondentia bond.

This statute does not extend to foreign ships, upon which, as before the statute, there may still be insurances, interest or no interest. These were not included in the act, on account of the difficulty of bringing witnesses from abroad to prove the interest. Doug. 3: 2. But where there is an interest on board, the owner by a valued policy, in which the value of the goods is agreed upon and fixed between the parties, may insure far beyond the extent of the real value. For the excess of the insurance is held not to be within the statute, unless it should appear, that the interest is so small as to be a mere evasion of the act, and a pretence for gaming. In an open policy, where no value is fixed, the prime cost of the goods must be proved. 2 Burr. 1170.

A re-assurance is the contract, which an insurer, who wishes to be indemnified against the risk he has taken upon himself, makes with another person, by giving him a premium to re-assure to him the same event, which he himself has insured. Re-assurances are prohibited by the statute 19 Geo. 2. c. 37. both upon foreign and English ships, unless the assurer is insolvent, a bankrupt, or dead, in which cases he, his assignee, or personal representative, may make a re-assurance, which must be expressly mentioned as a re-assurance in the policy. 2 T. R. 161.

The object of prohibiting re-assurance, was to prevent idle gaming speculations, by persons endeavouring to obtain a high premium for insurance, and then to secure themselves by getting the same risk insured at a lower rate. The learned judge seems to have mistaken a double insurance for a re-assurance: a double insurance is where the owner insures his goods twice or several times over, with different underwriters, which he may lawfully do; by which means he increases his security, and though he cannot recover more than a single satisfaction for his loss, yet he may bring his action against any one of the underwriters, and compel him to pay the whole extent of the interest insured, and this underwriter may afterwards recover from each of the rest a rateable satisfaction or apportionment of the sum which he has been obliged to pay to the assured. Park. 230.

Formerly a court of policies of assurance was yearly instituted by the lord chancellor for deciding questions on policies of assurance within London, which court when subsisting was erected in pursuance of stat. 43 Eliz. c. 12. which recites the immemorial usage of policies of assurance "by means "whereof it comes to pass upon the loss or "perishing of any ship, there followeth not the "undoing of any man, but the loss lighteth "rather easily upon many than heavy upon "few, and rather upon them that adventure not, "than upon those that do adventure; where- "by all merchants, especially those of the "younger sort, are allured to venture more "willingly and more freely: and that hereto- "fore such assurers had used to stand so just- "ly and precisely upon their credits, as few "or no controversies had arisen thereupon; "and if any had grown, the same had from "time to time been ended and ordered by "certain grave and discreet merchants ap- "pointed by the lord mayor of the city of "London; as men by reason of their expe- "rience fittest to understand and speedily "decide those causes:" but that of late years divers persons had withdrawn themselves from that course of arbitration, and had driven the assured to bring separate actions at law against each assurer: it therefore enables the lord chancellor yearly to grant a standing commission to the judge of the admiralty, the recorder of London, two doctors of the civil law, two common lawyers, and eight merchants; any three of which, one being a civilian or a barrister, are thereby, and by the statute 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 23. empowered to determine in a summary way all causes concerning policies of insurance in London, with an appeal (by way of bill) to the court of chancery. But the jurisdiction being somewhat defective, as extending only to London, and to no other assurances but those on merchandize (Styl. 166.), and to suits brought by the assured only, and not by the insurers (1 Show. 396.), no such commission has of late years issued: but insurance causes are now usually determined by the verdict of a jury of merchants, and the opinion of the judges in case of any legal doubts; whereby the decision is more speedy, satisfactory, and final: though it is to be wished, (as Blackstone justly observes) that some of the parliamentary powers invested in these commissioners, especially for the examination of witnesses, either beyond the seas, or speedily going out of the kingdom (Stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 22. sect. 3 & 4.), could at present be adopted by the courts of Westminster-hall, without requiring the consent of parties. 3 Black. 74.

INTAKERS, were a kind of thieves in the northern parts of England, so called, because they did take in and receive such booties as their confederates the outpartners brought to them from the borders of Scotland. 9 H. 5. cap. 7. Cowel. Blount.

INTENDMENT OF LAW, (intellectus legis) the understanding, intention and true meaning of law. Co. Lit. 78.

Sometimes a thing is necessarily intended by what precedes or follows it; and where an indifferent construction may have two intendments, the rule is to take it most strongly against the plaintiff. Show. 162.

INTENDMENT OF CRIMES. In antient times felonious attempts, intending the death of another, were adjudged felony; for the will was taken for the fact. Bract. 1. E. 3. But at this day the law does not generally punish intendments to do ill, if the intent be not executed, except in case of treason, where intention proved by circumstances shall be punished as if put in execution. 2 Inst. 108.

INTENT or INTENTION. The words of deeds shall be construed according to the intent of the parties, and not otherwise; but the intent shall be destroyed where it does not agree with the law. Pl. C. 160. b. 162. b.

And common usage and reputation frequently govern the matter, and direct the intention of the parties; as upon sale of a barrel of beer the barrel itself is not sold, though upon sale of a hogshead of wine it is otherwise. Savil. 124.

INTENSIONE, a writ that anciently laid against him who entered into lands after the death of a tenant in dower or for life, &c. and held him out in reversion or remainder. F. N. B. 203.

INTER CANEM ET LUPUM, words formerly used in appeals to signify the crime being done in the twilight. Cowel. Blount.

INTERCOMMONING, is where the commons of two manors lie together, and the inhabitants of both have time out of mind depastured their cattle promiscuously in each. Ibid.

INTERDICTION, (interdictio and interdictum) has the same signification in the common, as it hath in the canon law, and was a general excommunication of a whole country or province: such as the excommunication by the pope, anno 1208, of King John, and all his adherents, et totam terram Anglicanam supponit interdicto; this began the first Sunday after Easter, and continued six years and one month; during all which time nothing was done in the churches besides baptism and confessions of dying people. Cowel. Blount.

INTERDICTUM, an injunction in either of our courts of equity to quiet the possession of lands, to stay waste, or to stop proceedings at law, is in the nature of the interdictum of the civil law, which was a prohibition or injunction of the prætor, or an order for the possession of a thing in dispute, made by the magistrate per interdictum repetere possessionem suam. 3 Black. 442.

INTERDICTED OF WATER AND FIRE, persons anciently banished for a crime, were said to be interdicted, by the judgment in which order was given, that no man should receive them into his house, but deny them fire and water, the two necessary elements of life, which amounted as it were to a civil death. Cowel. Blount.

INTEREST, (interesse). In legal understanding an interest extends to estates, rights and titles, that a man hath in, or out of lands, so as by grant of his whole interest in such land, a reversion therein as well as possession in fee-simple shall pass. Co. Lit. 345.

INTEREST OF MONEY. See Usury.

INTEREST ON BANKRUPT'S DEBTS. The usual rule is, that all interest on debts carrying interest shall cease, from the time of issuing the commission. Atk. 244. Yet, in case of a surplus left after payment of every debt, such interest shall again revive, and be chargeable on the bankrupt, or his representatives. 1 Atk. 244.

And in case of a surplus, the chancellor will not order it to be returned to the bankrupt till he has discharged the interest up to the time on all debts bearing interest, and satisfied all other equitable claims upon the fund. 2 Ves. Jun. 303.

Bills and notes in which interest is not named, carry interest only between the protest and the date of the commission. 2 Black. N. by Chris. 488.

INTEREST ON LEGACIES. In case of a vested legacy, due immediately, and charged on land, on money in the funds, which yield an immediate profit, interest shall be payable thereon from the testator's death; but if charged only on the personal estate, which cannot be immediately got in, it shall carry interest only from the end of the year after the death of the testator. 2 P. Wms. 26, 27.

INTERESTED WITNESS. Interested witnesses may be examined upon a voir dire, if suspected to be secretly concerned in the event, or their interest may be proved in court. 3 Black. 370.

INTERLINEATION in a deed. A deed may be avoided by matter ex post facto, as by erasure, interlining, or other alteration in any material part; unless a memorandum be made thereof at the time of the execution and attestation. 11 Rep. 27.

INTERLOCUTORY DECREE in equity, is an intermediate decree or decretal order made upon the hearing of a cause, and when it is necessary to direct an issue at law, or a reference to the master, in which cases the final decree is not made until after the trial of the issue or the coming in of the master's report.

INTERLOCUTORY JUDGMENT at law, is such as is given in the middle of a cause, upon some plea, or on default, which is only intermediate, and does not finally determine or complete the suit. As judgment for the plaintiff in abatement, of respondeat ouster, i. e. that defendant shall answer over, or farther, plead in chief, or put in a more substantial plea. But the interlocutory judgments, most usually spoken of, are those incompleat judgments, whereby the right of the plaintiff is indeed established, but the quantum of damages sustained by him is not ascertained, which is the province of a jury. In such case a writ of inquiry issues to the sheriff, who summons a jury, enquires of the damages, and returns to the court the inquisition so taken, whereupon the plain-tiff's attorney taxes costs, and signs final judgment. 3 Black. 396, 7,

INTERLOCUTORY ORDER, (ordo interlocutorius) is an order made in the progress of a cause upon some incidental matter, which happens between the beginning and end of it; as an order for an injunction, &c.

INTERLOPERS, persons who intercept the trade of a company of merchants. Merc. Dict.

INTERPLEADER. See Bill in Equity, and Enterpleader.

INTER-REGNUM. There cannot be an interregnum in this country, by the policy of the constitution, for the right of sovereignty is fully vested in the successor, by the very descent of the crown. 1 Black. 196, 249.

INTERROGATORIES IN EQUITY, are particular questions reduced into writing, and demanded of witnesses brought in to be examined in a cause in courts of equity.

They are to be pertinent, and only to the points necessary, and either drawn or perused by counsel, and be signed by them: if they are leading, viz. such as these, did you not do or see such a thing, &c. the depositions on them will be suppressed; for they should be drawn, did you see, or did you not see, &c. without leaning to either side; and not only where they point more to one side of the question than the other; but if they are too particular, they will likewise be suppressed: the commissioners, &c. who examine witnesses on interrogatories, must examine to one interrogatory only at a time; they are to hold the witnesses to every point interrogated; and take what comes from them on their examination, without asking any idle questions, or putting down any impertinent answers not relating to the interrogatories, &c.

For the purpose of examining witnesses in or near London, there is an examiner's office; but, for evidence who live in the country, a commission to examine witnesses is usually granted to four commissioners, two named of each side, or any three or two of them, to take the depositions there. And if the witnesses reside beyond sea, a commission may be had to examine them there, upon their own oaths, and (if foreigners) upon the oaths of skilful interpreters.

The commissioners are sworn to take the examinations truly and without partiality, and not to divulge them till published in the court of chancery; and their clerks are also sworn to secresy. The witnesses are compellable by process of subpœna, as in the courts of common law, to appear and submit to examination. And when their depositions are taken, they are transmitted to the court with the commission annexed, sealed up under their respective seals, by some person receiving the same from one of the commissioners, who is willing to take charge thereof to town, which person must make oath at the time of the delivery thereof to the proper officer, that the packet was received from the commissioners, and hath not been opened.

INTERROGATORIES at law: one of the defects of the trial by jury, is the want of powers to examine witnesses abroad, and to receive their depositions in writing, where the witnesses reside, and especially when the cause of action arises in a foreign country. To which may be added the power of examining witnesses that are aged, or going abroad, upon interrogatories de bene esse; to be read in evidence if the trial should be deferred till after their death or departure, but otherwise to be totally suppressed. For though these defects are frequently removed by mutual consent, if the parties are open and candid, and consent to a commission, yet the compelling parties to submit to such a course, has never yet been directly adopted as the rule of practice in a court of law, although in a case of obvious hardship (if the party does not resort to a court of equity for a discovery) the court may indirectly relieve by from time to time ordering the trial to be postponed, on the ground of the absence of material witnesses, till the parties consent to a commission.

INTERROGATORIES upon an attachment for contempt. If a contempt be committed in the face of the court, the offender may be instantly apprehended and imprisoned, at the discretion of the judges (Staundf. P. C. 73. b.), without any farther proof of examination. But in matters that arise at a distance, and of which the court cannot have so perfect a knowledge, unless by the confession of the party or the testimony of others, if the judges upon affidavit see sufficient ground to suspect that a contempt has been committed, they either make a rule on the suspected party to shew cause why an attachment should not issue against him (Styl. 277.); or, in very flagrant instances of contempt, the attachment issues in the first instance (Salk. 84. Stra. 185, 564.); as it also does if no sufficient cause be shewn to discharge, and thereupon the court confirms and makes absolute the original rule. This process of attachment is merely intended to bring the party into court: and, when there, he must either stand committed, or put in bail, in order to answer upon oath to such interrogatories as shall be administered to him, for the better information of the court with respect to the circumstances of the contempt. These interrogatories are in the nature of a charge or accusation, and must by the course of the court be exhibited within the first four days (6 Mod. 73.): and if any of the interrogatories are improper, the defendant may refuse to answer, and move the court to have them struck out (Stra. 444.) If the party can clear himself upon oath, he is discharged; but, if perjured, may be prosecuted for the perjury (6 Mod. 73.) If he confesses the contempt, the court will proceed to correct him by fine, or imprisonment, or both, and sometimes by a corporal or infamous punishment (Cro. Car. 146.) If the contempt be of such a nature, that, when the fact is once acknowledged, the court can receive no farther information by interrogatories, than it is already possessed of, (as in the case of a rescous, the King v. Elkins, M. 8 Geo. 3. B. R.) the defendant may be admitted to make such simple acknowledgment, and receive his judgment, without answering to any interrogatories, but if he wilfully and obstinately refuses to answer, or answers in an evasive manner, he is then clearly guilty of a high and repeated contempt, to be punished at the discretion of the court. And although the defendant acknowledges all the facts charged against him, yet it is the practice of the court to compel him to answer interrogatories, unless they are waived by the prosecutor. 5 T. R. 362.

An attachment sometimes issues against a person supposed guilty of some contempt to the court whence the process goes forth, to bring him in; and when there, he is to stand committed, or put in bail to answer interrogatories upon oath. But, where a contempt is committed in the presence of a witness, it should seem more rational, and is certainly more congenial with the principles of the constitution to indict the party, and give him the benefit of a legal trial, by his peers.

If it is in a court where the practice is to grant a rule to shew cause why an attachment should not issue for a contempt, &c. if there appears to the court a sufficient ground to make the rule absolute, a subsequent examination on interrogatories seems needless.

And it is, perhaps, only giving the party an opportunity of committing perjury to exculpate himself, when he comes to reconsider his situation and the consequences that may ensue, if the report of the officer should be ultimately against him.

If a contempt is committed in the face of the court, and a commitment ensues, an examination upon interrogatories is unnecessary.

INTESTATE, is one who dies without having made a will respecting the disposal of his real or personal property.

INTESTATE'S ESTATES, are the goods and chattels of persons dying intestate. See Administrator, and Distribution of Intestates Estates.

INTOL ET UTTOL, toll or custom paid for things imported and exported. Cowel. Blount.

INTRARE MARISCUM, to drain low ground, and by dikes, walls, &c. take in and reduce it to herbage or pasture; hence the word innings. Ibid.

INTRUSION, (intrusio) is when the ancestor dies seised of any estate of inheritance, expectant upon an estate for life, and then tenant for life dies, between whose death and entry of the heir, a stranger intrudes. Co. Lit. 227.

This entry and interposition of the stranger differ from an abatement, in this; that an abatement is always to the prejudice of the heir, or immediate devisee; an intrusion is always to the prejudice of him in remainder or reversion. For example, if A dies seised of lands in fee-simple, and, before the entry of B his heir, C enters thereon, this is an abatement; but if A be tenant for life, with remainder to B in fee-simple, and, after the death of A, C enters, this is an intrusion. Also if A be tenant for life on lease from B, or his ancestors, or be tenant by the curtesy, or in dower, the reversion being vested in B; and after the death of A, C enters and keeps B out of possession, this is likewise an intrusion. So that an intrusion is always immediately consequent upon the determination of a particular estate; an abatement is always consequent upon the descent or devise of an estate in fee-simple. And in either case the injury is equally great to him whose possession is defeated by this unlawful occupancy. 3 Black. 169.

INTRUSION DE GARD, a writ that lay where the infant within age entered into his lands, and held out his lord. Old Nat. Br. 90. See also Information in Exchequer.

INTRUSIONE, is the writ brought against an intruder; by him that hath fee-simple, &c. New Nat. Br. 453.

INVADIARE, to engage or mortgage lands. Cowel.

INVADIATIONES, mortgages or pledges. Ibid.

INVADIATUS, was when one had been accused of some crime, which being not fully proved, he was put sub debita fidejussione. Ibid.

INVASIONES, in the inquisition of serjeancies and knights fees, anno 12 and 13 of king John, there are some titles called invasiones; et invasiones super regem. Ibid.

INVENTIONES, used in antient charters for treasure-trove, money or goods found by any person, and not challenged by the owner; which, by the common law is due to the king, who grants the privilege or benefit, to some particular subjects. Ibid.

INVENTORY, (inventorium) is a list or schedule containing a true description of all the goods and chattels of a person deceased at the time of his death, with their value appraised by indifferent persons; which every executor or administrator ought to exhibit to the bishop or ordinary at such time as he shall appoint. 21 Hen. 8. c. 5. See ADMINISTRATOR, and MARSHALLING OF ASSETS.

IN VENTRE SA MERE, (Fr.) in the mother's belly. Infant in ventre sa mere, is where a woman is with child at the time of her husband's death; which child, if he had been born, would have been heir to the land of the husband: and this is sometimes privily, and sometimes open and visible, 1 Shep. Abr. 142. And in all cases, where a daughter or female comes into land by discent; there the son born after, shall oust her and have the land. 3 Rep. 61. Plowd. 375. But if the daughter and female heir cometh to land in nature of a purchaser; as on a will of lands given to J. S. and his heirs, and he hath a daughter when the devisor dies, his wife being then with child of a son; in this case the daughter shall enjoy the land, and not the after-born son. 3 Rep. 61. 5 Ed. 4. 6. 9 H. 7. 24.

INVERITARE, to verify or make proof of a thing. Leg. Inæ, c. 16. Cowel. Blount.

INVEST and INVESTITURE, (from the Fr. investir) signifies to give possession: a giving livery of seisin or possession of lands, has succeeded in the place of the antient feodal investiture, whereby, while feuds were precarious, the vassal, on the discent of lands, was formerly admitted in the lords court (as is still the practice in Scotland), and there received his seisin, in the nature of a renewal of his ancestors grant in the presence of the feodal peers: till at length, when the right of succession became indefesible, entry on any part of the lands within the county, (which, if disputed, was afterwards to be tried by those peers) or other notorious possession was admitted as equivalent to the formal grant of seizin, and made the tenant capable of transferring this his estate by discent. 2 Black. 23, 53, 208, 311.

INVITATORIA ET VENITARIUM, those hymns and psalms that were sung in the church to invite the people to prayer. Cowel. Blount.

INVOICE. A particular account of merchandise, with its value, custom and charges, &c. sent by a merchant to his factor or correspondent. 12 Car. 2. c. 34.

INVOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER. See HOMICIDE.

INURE, signifies to take effect, as the pardon enureth, the deed enureth. Staund. Prær. 40. See Enure.

JOBBER, one who lives by buying and selling of cattle. There are also stock-jobbers, who buy and sell stocks for other persons. See Brokers.

JOCALIA, (Fr. joyaux) jewels; derived from the Lat. jocus, joculus, and jocula, which comprehend every thing that delighteth. Jewels are part of the wife's paraphernalia, but she shall not be intitled thereto on the death of the husband, unless they are suitable to her quality, and the husband leaves assets to pay debts, &c. 1 Roll. Abr. 911.

JOCARI, to contend with pikes. Cowel.

JOCELET, (Sax.) a little farm or manor; in some parts of Kent, a yoklet, as requiring but a small yoke of oxen to till it. Sax. Dict. Cowel.

JOCUS PARTITUS. It is so called when two proposals are made, and a man hath liberty to choose which he will. Cowel.

JOINDER IN ACTION, is the coupling or joining of two in a suit or action against another. F. N. B. 118, 201, 221. As where two joint owners of a sum of money are robbed upon the highway, they are to join in one action against the hundred. Latch. 127. Dyer 307. So where the suit will survive to the wife, she must join in the action. Wils. par. 1. p. 224. and see ibid. par. 2. fol. 423.

So also, though one partner acts in trade, where there are many partners, actions are to be brought against all the partners jointly for his acts. 1 Salk. 292. But if one man calls two other men thieves, they shall not join in an action against him; for one joint action will not lie for, or against several persons for speaking the same words. 1 Danv. 5. Palm. 313.

But on a joint trespass, the plaintiff may declare severally, 2 Salk. 454. or jointly. Style 153. 10 Rep. 66.

Also tenants in common cannot join in an action against their lessee; but it is otherwise in the case of coparceners or jointenants, Moor 34.

JOINDER OF COUNTIES. There can be no joinder of counties for the finding of an indictment, where a wound is given in one county, and the party die in another: for by stat. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 24. the whole may be tried either on indictment or appeal, in the county wherein the death is.

JOINDER IN DEMURRER. When there is a demurrer averring the pleading insufficient in law, to answer the end proposed by it, the opposite party avers it to be sufficient, which is called a joinder in demurrer, and then the parties are at issue in point of law.

JOINDER IN BATTLE, the form, on a writ of right, was as follows: AND that such is his right, he is prepared to prove by the body of his freeman, Henry Broughton by name, who is present here in court ready to prove the same by his body or in what manner soever the court of the lord the king shall consider that he ought to prove; and if any mischance should befal the said Henry, (which God defend) he is ready to prove the same by another man, who, &c. And hereupon it is demanded of the said George and Henry, whether they are ready to make battle, as they before have waged it: who say that they are.

JOINDER OF ISSUE. Joinder of an issue in fact, is when a party denies the fact pleaded by his antagonist, who has tendered the issue thus, "and this he prays may be inquired of by the country," or "and of this he puts himself upon the country," the party denying the fact, may immediately subjoin, "and the said A. B. doth the like," which done, the issue is said to be joined. 3 Black. 315. 4 Black. 324.

JOINT ACTIONS. In personal actions, several wrongs may be joined in one writ; but actions founded upon a tort, and on a contract, cannot be joined, for they require different pleas and different process. 1 Keb. 847. 1 Vent. 366.

JOINT AND SEVERAL. An interest cannot be granted jointly and severally; as if a man grants proximam advocationem, or makes a lease for years, to two jointly and severally, those words severally are void, and they are joint-tenants. 5 Rep. 19. Mich. 29 & 30 Eliz. Slingsby's case.

JOINT EXECUTORS, are accounted in law but as one person, and acts done by any of them shall be taken to be the acts of every one of them; for they all represent the testator. 2 Nels. Abr. 1026.

JOINT FINES. If a whole vill is to be fined, a joint fine may be laid, and it will be good for the necessity of it; but in other cases, fines for offences are to be severally imposed on each particular offender, and not jointly upon all of them. 1 Rol. Rep. 33. 11 Rep. 42. Dyer. 211.

JOINT INDICTMENTS. If the offences of several persons arise from a joint criminal act, an indictment or information may charge the defendants jointly. 1 Ventr. 302. 2 Hawk. P. C. 240.

JOINT-TENANCY. The king cannot be joint-tenant with any person, because none can be equal with him. 1 Inst. 1. Finch. 83. and 2 Black. 409. Also a corporation cannot be jointly seised of any estate with another. 2 Lev. 12.

And the essential difference between joint-tenants and tenants in common is, that joint-tenants have the lands by one joint title, and in one right, and tenants in common by several titles, or by one title and by several rights; this is the reason, says L. Coke, that joint-tenants have one joint freehold, and tenants in common have several freeholds, though this property is common to them both, viz. that their occupation is undivided, and neither of them knoweth his part in severalty. Co. Lit. 189. a.

JOINT-TENANTS, (simul tenentes or qui conjunctim tenent) are those who come to, and hold lands or tenements jointly by one title; and these joint-tenants must jointly plead, and be jointly sued. Lit. 277, 280. 1 Inst. 180.

This estate in joint-tenancy is sometimes an estate in jointure, which word as well as the other, signifies an union or conjunction of interest; though in common speech the term jointure is now usually confined to that joint estate, which by virtue of the statute 27 Hen. 8. c. 10, is frequently vested in the husband and wife before marriage, as a full satisfaction and bar of the woman's dower. 2 Black. 137.

In respect to an estate in joint-tenancy, it is to be observed,

1. The creation of an estate in joint-tenancy depends on the wording of the deed or devise, by which the tenants claim title; for this estate can only arise by purchase or grant, that is, by the act of the parties, and never by the mere act of law. Now if an estate be given to a plurality of persons, without adding any restrictive, exclusive, or explanatory words, as if an estate be granted to A and B, and their heirs, this makes them immediately joint-tenants in fee of the lands: for the law interprets the grant so as to make all parts of it take effect, which can only be done by creating an equal estate in them both. As therefore the grantor has thus united their names, the law gives them a thorough union in all other respects. For,

2. The properties of a joint estate are derived from its unity, which is four-fold; the unity of interest, the unity of title, the unity of time, and the unity of possession; or, in other words, joint-tenants have one and the same interest, accruing by one and the same conveyance, commencing at one and the same time, and held by one and the same undivided possession.

First, they must have one and the same interest. One joint-tenant cannot be entitled to one period of duration or quantity of interest in lands, and the other to a different; one cannot be tenant for life, and the other for years; one cannot be tenant in fee, and the other in tail. (Co. Litt. 188.) But if land be limited to A and B for their lives, this makes them joint-tenants of the freehold; if to A and B and their heirs, it makes them joint-tenants of the inheritance. (Litt. s. 277.) If land be granted to A and B for their lives, and to the heirs of A, here A and B are joint-tenants of the freehold during their respective lives, and A has the remainder of the fee in severalty; or if land be given to A and B, and the heirs of the body of A, here both have a joint estate for life, and A has a several remainder in tail (Ibid. sec. 285). Secondly, joint-tenants must also have an unity of title; their estate must be created by one and the same act, whether legal or illegal; as by one and the same grant, or by one and the same disseisin. (Ibid. sec. 278.) Joint-tenancy cannot arise by descent or act of law, but merely by purchase, or acquisition by the act of the party; and, unless that act be one and the same, the two tenants would have different titles; and if they had different titles, one might prove good, and the other bad, which would absolutely destroy the jointure. Thirdly, there must also be an unity of time; their estates must be vested at one and the same period, as well as by one and the same title: As in case of a present estate made to A or B, or a remainder in fee to A and B after a particular estate; in either case A and B are joint-tenants of this present estate, or this vested remainder. But if after a lease for life the remainder be limited to the heirs of A and B, and during the continuance of the particular estate A dies, which vests the remainder of one moiety in his heir, and then B dies, whereby the other moiety becomes vested in the heir of B, now A's heir and B's heir are not joint-tenants of this remainder, but tenants in common; for one moiety vested at one time, and the other moiety vested at another. (Co. Litt. 188.) Yet where a feoffment was made to the use of a man, and such wife as he should afterwards marry, for term of their lives, and he afterwards married, in this case it seems to have been held that the husband and wife had a joint estate, though vested at different times: (Dyer 340. 1 Rep. 101.) because the use of the wife's estate was in abeyance, and dormant till the intermarriage, and being then awakened had relation back, and took effect from the original time of creation. Lastly, in joint-tenancy there must be an unity of possession. Joint-tenants are said to be seised per my et per tout, by the half or moiety, and by all; that is, they each of them have the entire possession, as well of every parcel as of the whole. (Lit. sec. 288. 5 Rep. 10.) They have not, one of them a seisin of one half or moiety, and the other of the other moiety; neither can one be exclusively seised of one acre, and his companion of another, but each has an undivided moiety of the whole, and not the whole of an undivided moiety. (Bract. l. 5, tr. 5, c. 26.) And therefore, if an estate in fee be given to a man and his wife, they are neither properly joint-tenants, nor tenants in common; for husband and wife being considered as one person in law, they cannot take the estate by moieties, but both are seised of the entirety, per tout et non per my; the consequence of which is that neither the husband nor the wife can dispose of any part without the assent of the other, but the whole must remain to the survivor. Litt. sec. 665. Co. Litt. 187. Bro. Abr. t. cui in vita, 8. 2 Vern. 120. 2 Lev. 39.

And if a grant is made of a joint estate to husband and wife, and a third person, the husband and wife shall have one moiety, and the third person the other moiety, in the same manner as if it had been granted only to two persons. So if the grant is to husband and wife and two others, the husband and wife take one third in joint-tenancy. Litt. sec. 291.

Upon these principles of a thorough and intimate union of interest and possession depend many other consequences and incidents to the joint-tenant's estate. If two joint-tenants let a verbal lease of their land, reserving rent to be paid to one of them, it shall enure to both, in respect of the joint reversion. (Co. Litt. 214.) If their lessee surrenders his lease to one of them, it shall also enure to both, because of the privity, or relation of their estate. (Ibid. 192.) On the same reason, livery of seisin, made to one joint-tenant, shall enure to both of them, (Ibid. 49,) and the entry, or re-entry, of one joint-tenant is as effectual in law as if it were the act of both. (Ibid. 319. 364.) In all actions also relating to their joint estate, one joint-tenant cannot sue or be sued without joining the other. (Ibid. 195.) But if two or more joint-tenants be seised of an advowson, and they present different clerks, the bishop may refuse to admit either, because neither joint-tenant has a several right of patronage, but each is seised of the whole; and if they do not both agree within six months the right of presentation shall lapse. But the ordinary may, if he pleases, admit a clerk presented by either, for the good of the church, that divine service may be regularly performed; which is no more than he otherwise would be entitled to do, in case their disagreement continued, so as to incur a lapse: and if the clerk of one joint-tenant be so admitted, this shall keep up the title in both of them, in respect of the privity and union of their estate. (Ibid. 185.) Upon the same ground it is held that one joint-tenant cannot have an action against another for trespass in respect of his land, (3 Levinz 262.) for each has an equal right to enter on any part of it. But one joint-tenant is not capable by himself to do any act which may tend to defeat or injure the estate of the other, as to let leases, or to grant copyholds; (1 Leon. 234.) and if any waste be done which tends to the destruction of the inheritance, one joint-tenant may have an action of waste against the other, by construction of the stat. Westm. 2, c. 22, (2 Inst. 403). So, too, though at common law no action of account lay for one joint-tenant against another, unless he had constituted him his bailiff or receiver; (Co. Lit. 200,) yet now by the stat. 4 Anne. c. 16, joint-tenants may have actions of account against each other for receiving more than their due share of the profits of the tenements held in joint-tenancy.

This action is now, perhaps, never brought; but the practice is to apply to a court of equity to compel an account, which is also the jurisdiction generally resorted to, in order to obtain a partition between joint-tenants, parceners, and tenants in common. 3 Com. Dig. Chanc. 6. and 4. E. Mitf. 109.

From the same principle also arises the remaining grand incident of joint estates, viz. the doctrine of survivorship, by which, when two or more persons are seised of a joint estate of inheritance for their own lives, or pur auter vie, or are jointly possessed of any chattel interest, the entire tenancy upon the decease of any of them remains to the survivors, and at length to the last survivor; and he shall be entitled to the whole estate whatever it be, whether an inheritance, or a common freehold only, or even a less estate, (Litt. sec. 280, 281.) This is the natural and regular consequence of the union and entirety of their interest. The interest of two joint-tenants is not only equal or similar, but also is one and the same. One has not originally a distinct moiety from the other, but if by any subsequent act (as by alienation or forfeiture of either) the interest becomes separate and distinct, the joint-tenancy instantly ceases. But while it continues, each of two joint-tenants has a concurrent interest in the whole, and therefore on the death of his companion, the sole interest in the whole remains to the survivor. For the interest which the survivor originally had is clearly not divested by the death of his companion; and no other person can now claim to have a joint estate with him, for no one can now have an interest in the whole, accruing by the same title, and taking effect at the same time with his own; neither can any one claim a separate interest in any part of the tenements, for that would be to deprive the survivor of the right which he has in all and every part. As, therefore, the survivor's original interest in the whole still remains, and as no one can now be admitted, either jointly or severally, to any share with him therein, it follows that his own interest must now be entire and several, and that he shall alone be entitled to the whole estate, (whatever it be) that was created by the original grant.

This right of survivorship is called by our ancient authors (Bracton, l. 4, tr. 3, c. 9, sec. 3. Fleta, l. 3, c. 4.) the jus accrescendi, because the right, upon the death of one joint-tenant, accumulates and increases to the survivors, or, as they themselves express it, "pars illa communis accrescit superstitibus, de persona in personam, usque ad ultimam superstitem." And this jus accrescendi ought to be mutual, which is one reason why neither the king, (Co. Litt. 190. Finch. L. 83.) nor any corporation, (2 Lev. 12.) can be a joint-tenant with a private person. For here is no mutuality: the private person has not even the remotest chance of being seised of the entirety by benefit of survivorship, for the king and the corporation can never die.

But lord Coke says expressly, "there may be joint-tenants though there be not equal benefit of survivorship; as if a man let lands to A and B during the life of A, if B die A shall have all by survivorship; but if A die B shall have nothing." Co. Litt. 181. The mutuality of survivorship does not therefore appear to be the reason why a corporation cannot be a joint-tenant with a private person, for two corporations cannot be joint-tenants together, but whenever a joint estate is granted to them they take as tenants in common. Co. Litt. 190.

There is also no survivorship of a capital, or a stock in trade, among merchants and traders, for this would be ruinous to the family of the deceased partner; and it is a legal maxim jus accrescendi inter mercatores pro beneficio commercii locum non habet. Co. Litt. 182.

3. We are lastly to inquire how an estate in joint-tenancy may be severed and destroyed. And this may be done by destroying any of its constituent unities: 1. That of time, which respects only the original commencement of the joint-estate, cannot indeed (being now past) be affected by any subsequent transactions. But, 2. The joint-tenant's estate may be destroyed, without any alienation, by merely disuniting their possession. For joint-tenants being seised per my et per tout, every thing that tends to narrow that interest, so that they shall not be seised throughout the whole, and throughout every part, is a severance or destruction of the jointure. And therefore, if two joint-tenants agree to part their lands, and hold them in severalty, they are no longer joint-tenants: for they have now no joint-interest in the whole, but only a several interest respectively in the several parts. And for that reason also, the right of survivorship is by such separation destroyed. (Co. Litt. 188, 193.) By common law all the joint-tenants might agree to make partition of the lands, but one of them could not compel the other so to do; (Litt. sec. 290.) for this being an estate originally created by the act and agreement of the parties, the law would not permit any one or more of them to destroy the united possession without a similar universal consent. But now by the statutes 31 Hen. 8, c. 1, and 32 Hen. 8, c. 32, joint-tenants, either of inheritances, or other less estates, are compellable by writ of partition to divide their lands. (Ff. 12. 6. 26. sec. 4.) 3. The jointure may be destroyed by destroying the unity of title: as if one joint-tenant aliens and conveys his estate to a third person; here the joint-tenancy is severed, and turned into tenancy in common; (Litt. sec. 292.) for the grantee and the remaining joint-tenant hold by different titles, (one derived from the original, the other from the subsequent, grantor,) though till partition made the unity of possession continues. But a devise of one's share by will is no severance of the jointure: for no testament takes effect till after the death of the testator, and by such death the right of the survivor (which accrued at the original creation of the estate, and has therefore a priority to the other, jus accrescendi præcertur ultimæ voluntati. Co. Litt. 185.) is already vested (Litt. sec. 287) *.

4. It may also be destroyed by destroying the unity of interest. And therefore, if there be two joint-tenants for life, and the inheritance is purchased by or descends upon either, it is a severance of the jointure, (Cro. Eliz. 470.); though, if an estate is originally limited to two for life, and after to the heirs of one of them, the freehold shall remain in jointure, without merging in the inheritance, because, being created by one and the same conveyance, they are not separate estates, (which is requisite in order to a merger,) but branches of one entire estate. (2 Rep. 60. Co. Lit. 182.) In like manner, if a joint-tenant in fee makes a lease for life of his share, this defeats the jointure (Litt. sec. 302, 303,); for it destroys the unity both of title and of interest. And, whenever or by whatever means the jointure ceases, or is severed, the right of survivorship, or jus accrescendi, the same instant ceases with it. (Co. Lit. 188.) Yet if one of three joint-tenants aliens his share, the two remaining tenants still hold their parts by joint tenancy and survivorship (Litt. sec. 294.); and if one of three joint-tenants releases his share to one of his companions, though the joint-tenancy is destroyed with regard to that part, yet the two remaining parts are still held in jointure (Ibid. 304.); for they still preserve their original constituent unities. But when by any act or event different interests are created in the several parts of the estate, or they are held by different titles, or if merely the possession is separated, so that the tenants have no longer these four indispensable properties, a sameness of interest, and undivided possession, a title vesting at one and the same time, and by one and the same act or grant, the jointure is instantly dissolved.

In general it is advantageous for the joint-tenants to dissolve the jointure, since thereby the right of survivorship is taken away, and each may transmit his own part to his own heirs. Sometimes, however, it is disadvantageous to dissolve the joint estate; as if there be joint-tenants for life, and they make partition, this dissolves the jointure; and though before they each of them had an estate in the whole for their own lives and the life of their companion, now they have an estate in a moiety, only for their own lives merely, and on the death of either the reversioner shall enter on his moiety (1 Jones 55.) And therefore, if there be two joint-tenants for life, and one grants away his part for the life of his companion, it is a forfeiture (4 Leon. 237.): for in the first place, by the severance of the jointure, he has given himself in his own moiety, only an estate for his own life; and then he grants the same land for the life of another: which grant, by a tenant for his own life merely, is a forfeiture of his estate (Co. Litt. 252); for it is creating an estate, which may, by possibility last longer than that which he is legally entitled to. 2 Black. c. 12.

——— JOINT-TENANTS in things personal.] Things personal may belong to their owners, not only in severalty, but also in joint-tenancy, and in common, as well as real estates. They cannot indeed, be vested in coparcenary; because they do not descend from the ancestor to the heir, which is necessary to constitute coparceners. But if a horse, or other personal chattel, be given to two or more, absolutely, they are joint tenants hereof; and, unless the jointure be severed, the same doctrine of survivorship shall take place as in estates of lands and tenements (Litt. s. 282. 1 Vern. 482.) And, in like manner, if the jointure be severed, as by either of them selling his share, the vendee and the remaining part-owner shall be tenants in common, without any jus accrescendi or survivorship (Lit. s. 321.) So also, if 100*l.* be given by will to two or more, equally to be divided between them, this makes them tenants in common (1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 292.); as the same words would have done in regard to real estates.

So also, residuary legatees and executors are joint tenants, unless the testator uses some expression which converts their interest into a tenancy in common; and if one dies before a division or severance of the surplus, the whole that is undivided will pass to the survivor or survivors. 2 P. Wms. 113. 3 Bro. 455.

But, for the encouragement of husbandry and trade, it is held that a stock on a farm, though occupied jointly, and also a stock used in a joint undertaking, by way of partnership in trade, shall always be considered as common and not as joint property, and there shall be no survivorship therein (1 Vern. 217. Co. Lit. 182.

JOINTURE. A jointure, which, strictly speaking, signifies a joint estate, limited to

* If a will is made by a joint-tenant of real property, devising his interest in the premises, and after the execution of the will there is a partition of the estate, the testator's share cannot pass by the devise, unless there is a republication of the will subsequent to the partition. 3 Burr. 1488.

For a joint-tenant is not enabled to devise his estate by the statute of wills 32 Hen. 8, c. 1, explained by 34 and 35 Hen. 8, c. 5, as tenants in common and coparceners. But if a tenant in common devises his estate a subsequent partition is not a revocation of the will. 3 P. Wms. 169.

both husband and wife, and in common acceptation extends also to a sole estate, limited to the wife only, is thus defined by sir Edward Coke (1 Inst. 36.); "a competent "livelihood of freehold for the wife, of lands "and tenements; to take effect, in profit or "possession, presently after the death of "the husband; for the life of the wife at "least."

This description is framed with the purview of the statute 27 Hen. 8. c. 10. commonly called the statute of uses; before the making of which statute, the greatest part of the land of England was conveyed to uses; the property or possession of the soil being vested in one man, and the use, or profits thereof, in another; whose directions, with regard to the disposition thereof, the former was in conscience obliged to follow, and might be compelled by a court of equity to observe. Now, though a husband had the use of lands in absolute fee-simple, yet the wife was not entitled to any dower therein; he not being seised thereof: wherefore it became usual, on marriage, to settle by express deed some special estate to the use of the husband and his wife, for their lives, in jointtenancy, or jointure; which settlement would be a provision for the wife in case she survived her husband. At length the statute of uses ordained, that such as had the use of lands, should, to all intents and purposes, be reputed and taken to be absolutely seised and possessed of the soil itself. In consequence of which legal seisin, all wives would have become dowable of such lands as were held to the use of their husbands, and also entitled at the same time to any special lands that might be settled in jointure: had not the same statute provided, that upon making such an estate in jointure to the wife before marriage, she shall be for ever precluded from her dower. (4 Rep. 1, 2.) But then these four requisites must be punctually observed; 1. The jointure must take effect immediately on the death of the husband. 2. It must be for her own life at least, and not per auter vie, for any term of years, or other smaller estate. 3. It must be made to herself, and no other in trust for her. 4. It must be made, and so in the deed particularly expressed to be, in satisfaction of her whole dower, and not of any particular part of it,* or it may be averred to be. 4 Rep. 3.

If the jointure be made to her after marriage, she has her election after her husband's death, as in dower ad ostium ecclesiæ, and may either accept it, or refuse it and betake herself to her dower at common law; for she was not capable of consenting to it during coverture. And where a devise is expressed to be given in lieu and satisfaction of dower, or where that is the clear and manifest intention of the testator, the wife shall not have both, but shall have her choice. Harg. Co. Litt. 36. b. And if, by any fraud or accident, a jointure made before marriage proves to be on a bad title, and the jointress is evicted, or turned out of possession, she shall then (by the provisions of the same statute) have her dower pro tanto at the common law.

It has been determined, that if a woman, who is under age at the time of marriage, agrees to a jointure and settlement in bar of her dower, and her distributive share of her husband's personal property, in case he dies intestate, she cannot afterwards waive it; but is as much bound, as if she were of age at the time of marriage. Lord Northington had decreed the contrary; but his decree was upon both points reversed. Drury v. Drury, 4 Brown's P. C. 570.

There are some advantages attending tenants in dower that do not extend to jointresses; and so vice versa, jointresses are in some respects more privileged than tenants in dower. Tenant in dower by the old common law is subject to no tolls or taxes; and hers is almost the only estate on which, when derived from the king's debtor, the king cannot distrein for his debt; if contracted during the coverture (Co. Lit. 31. a. F. N. B. 150.) But, on the other hand, a widow may enter at once, without any formal process, on her jointure land; as she also might have done on dower ad ostium ecclesiæ, which a jointure in many points resembles; and the resemblance was still greater, while that species of dower continued in its primitive state: whereas no small trouble, and a very tedious method of proceeding, is necessary to compel a legal assignment of dower (Co. Litt. 36.) And, what is more, though dower be forfeited by the treason of her husband, yet lands settled in jointure remain unimpeached to the widow (Ibid. 37.) Wherefore sir Edward Coke very justly gives it the preference, as being more sure and safe to the widow, than even dower ad ostium ecclesiæ, the most eligible species of any. Co. Lit. 37.

And a jointure is not forfeited by the adultery of the wife, as dower is; and the court of chancery will decree against the husband a performance of marriage articles, though he alleges and proves that his wife lives separate from him in adultery. Cox's P. Wms. 277. vol. 3.

JOINTRESS, is she who hath an estate settled on her by the husband, to hold during her life, if she survive him. 17 H. 8. c. 10. 1 Inst. 46. See Jointure.

And the opinion of the court was, that it might be averred that it was for a jointure, and that such averment was traversable. Owen, 33. But a trust estate, or an agreement to settle lands as a jointure, is a good equitable jointure in bar of dower.

IRELAND. Ireland, until the late union, was a distinct kingdom; and up to 22 & 23 Geo. 3. a dependent subordinate kingdom under the crown of Great Britain.

Anciently it was only entitled the dominion or lordship of Ireland (Stat. Hiberniæ, 14 Hen. 3.), and the king's stile was no other than dominus Hiberniæ, lord of Ireland, till the title of king was conferred upon him and his successors by a statute passed in Ireland expressly for that purpose, and it was made treason for any inhabitant of Ireland to deny it. 33 Hen. 8. c. 1. Irish Stat.

The inhabitants of Ireland are, for the most part descended from the English, who planted it as a kind of colony, after the conquest of it by king Henry the second; and the laws of England were then received and sworn to by the Irish nation, assembled at the council of Lismore. Pryn. on 4 Inst. 249.

At the time of this conquest, the Irish were governed by what they call the Brehon law, so stiled from the Irish name of the judges, who were denominated Brehons (4 Inst. 358.) But king John, in the twelfth year of his reign, went into Ireland, and carried over with him many able sages of the law; and there by his letters patent, in right of the dominion of conquest, is said to have ordained and established, that Ireland should be governed by the laws of England (Vaugh. 294. 2 Pryn. Rec. 85. 7 Rep. 23.): which letters patent, sir Edward Coke (1 Inst. 141.) apprehends to have been there confirmed in parliament. But to this ordinance, many of the Irish were averse to conform, and still stuck to their Brehon law: so that both Henry the third (A. R. 30. 1 Rym. Fœd. 442.) and Edward the first (An. R. 5. 3 Pryn. Rec. 1218.) were obliged to renew the injunction; and at length, in a parliament holden at Kilkenny, 40 Edw. 3. under Lionel, duke of Clarence, and then lieutenant of Ireland, the Brehon law was formally abolished, it being unanimously declared to be indeed no law, but a lewd custom crept in of later times. And yet, even in the reign of queen Elizabeth, the wild natives still kept and preserved their Brehon law; which is described (Edm. Spenser, p. 1513.) to have been "a rule of right unwritten, but deliver-"ed by tradition from one to another, in "which oftentimes there appeared great "shew of equity in determining the right "between party and party, but in many "things repugnant quite both to God's law "and man's. The latter part of this character is alone ascribed to it, by the laws before-cited of Edward the first and his grandson.

But as Ireland was a distinct dominion, and had parliaments of its own, it is to be observed, that though the immemorial customs, or common law, of England were made the rule of justice in Ireland also, yet no acts of the English parliament extended into that kingdom; unless it were specially named, or included under general words, such as, "within "any of the king's dominions." And this is particularly expressed, and the reason given in the year books (20 Hen. 6. 8. 2 Ric. 3. 12.): "a tax granted by the parliament of Eng-"land shall not bind those of Ireland, be-"cause they are not summoned to our par-"liament;" and again, "Ireland hath a "parliament of its own, and maketh and "altereth laws; and our statutes do not "bind them, because they do not send "knights to our parliament: but their per-"sons are the king's subjects, like as the "inhabitants of Calais, Gascoigne, and Gui-"enne, while they continued under the king's "subjection." The general run of laws, enacted by the superior state, are supposed to be calculated for its own internal government, and do not extend to its distant dependent countries, which, bearing no part in the legislature, are not therefore in its ordinary and daily contemplation. But, when the sovereign legislative power sees it necessary to extend its care to any of its subordinate dominions, and mentions them expressly by name, or includes them under general words, there can be no doubt but then they are bound by its laws. Year Book, 1 Hen. 7. 3. 7 Rep. 22. Calvin's case.

The original method of passing statutes in Ireland, was nearly the same as in England, the chief governor holding parliaments at his pleasure, which enacted such laws as they thought proper (Irish Stat. 11 Eliz. st. 3. c. 8.) But an ill use being made of this liberty, particularly by lord Gormanstown, deputy-lieutenant in the reign of Edward IV. (Irish Stat. 10 Hen. 7. c. 23.) a set of statutes were there enacted in the 10 Hen. 7. (sir Edward Poynings being then lord deputy, whence they are called Poynings' laws) one of which (cap. 4. expounded by 3 & 4 Ph. & Mar. c. 4.), in order to restrain the power as well of the deputy as the Irish parliament, provided, 1. That before any parliament be summoned, or holden, the chief governor and council of Ireland should certify to the king under the great seal of Ireland, the considerations and causes thereof, and the articles of the acts proposed to be passed therein. 2. That after the king, in his council of England, should have considered, approved, or altered the said acts or any of them, and certified them back under the great seal of England, and should have given licence to summon and hold a parliament, then the same should be summoned and held; and therein the said acts so certified, and no other should be proposed, received, or rejected (4 Inst. 353.) But as this precluded any law from being proposed, but such as were pre-conceived before the parliament was in being, which occasioned many inconveniences, and made frequent dissolutions necessary, it was provided by the statute of Philip and Mary, before-cited, that any new propositions might be certified to England in the usual forms, even after the summons and during the session of parliament. By this means, however, there was nothing left to the parliament in Ireland, but a bare negative or power of rejecting, not of proposing or altering, any law. But the usage, till the independence of Ireland in 1782, 3, was, for bills to be framed in either house, under the denomination of "heads for a bill or bills:" and in that shape they were offered to the consideration of the lord lieutenant and privy council: who, upon such parliamentary intimation, or otherwise upon the application of private persons, received and transmitted such heads, or rejected them without any transmission, to England.

But the Irish nation being excluded from the benefit of the English statutes, were deprived of many good and profitable laws, made for the improvement of the common law: and the measure of justice in both kingdoms becoming thence no longer uniform, it was therefore enacted, by another of Poynings' laws (cap. 22), that all acts of parliament, before made in England, should be of force within the realm of Ireland (4 Inst. 351.) But, by the same rule, that no laws made in England, between king John's time and Poynings' law, were then binding in Ireland, it followed that no acts of the English parliament made since the 10 Hen. 7. could bind the people of Ireland, unless specially named or included under general words (12 Rep. 112.)

But this state of dependence being almost forgotten, and ready to be disputed by the Irish nation, it became necessary to declare how that matter really stood: and therefore by stat. (6 Geo. 1. c. 5.) it was declared, that the kingdom of Ireland ought to be subordinate to, and dependent upon, the imperial crown of Great Britain, as being inseparably united thereto: and that the king's majesty, with the consent of the lords and commons of Great Britain in parliament, hath power to make laws to bind the people of Ireland.

The laws of Ireland thus communicated with those of England; and it was by the same stat. 6 Geo. 1. c. 5. expressly declared, that the peers of Ireland have no jurisdiction to affirm or reverse judgments or decrees whatsoever. So that from that time up to 1782-3, the ultimate resort from the courts of justice in Ireland was, as in Wales, to those in England: a writ of error in nature of an appeal lying from the king's bench in Ireland to the king's bench in England, as the appeal from the chancery in Ireland lay immediately to the house of lords here.

But this subjection of the people of Ireland having occasioned much popular discontent in that country, the act 22 Geo. 3. c. 53. repealed the statute of Geo 1. However, as the statute of Geo. 1. was thought to be merely declaratory of the former law, the repeal of it could produce no further operation than to render the law in some degree less clear than that statute had made it. Therefore, to produce the intended effect, it required another statute, which was passed in the 23 Geo. 3. c. 28 which expressly declared, that in all cases whatever, the people of Ireland should be bound only by laws enacted by his majesty and the parliament of that kingdom; and that no appeal or writ of error from any court in Ireland should for the future be brought into any of the courts in England.

Since these last acts, the great and important event of AN UNION between GREAT BRITAIN and IRELAND, hath taken place.

The manner in which this happy consolidation of the national rights and interests of both countries, was brought about, appear from the stat. 39 & 40 Geo. 3. c. 77. which is in substance, as follows:

In pursuance of his majesty's most gracious recommendation to the two houses of parliament in Great Britain and Ireland respectively, to consider of such measures as might best tend to strengthen and consolidate the connection between the two kingdoms, the two houses of parliament in each country resolved, that, in order to promote and secure the essential interests of Great Britain and Ireland, and to consolidate the strength, power, and resources of the British empire, it was adviseable to concur in such measures as should best tend to unite the two kingdoms into one kingdom, on such terms and conditions as should be established by the acts of the respective parliaments in the two countries. And, in furtherance of that resolution, the two houses of each parliament agreed upon eight articles, which, by an address of the respective houses of parliament, were laid before his majesty for his consideration; and his majesty having approved of the same, and having recommended it to his parliaments in Great Britain and Ireland to give full effect to them, they were ratified by an act passed in the parliament of Great Britain on the 2d of July 1800.

Art. I. That the kingdoms of Great Britain and Ireland shall, on the first day of January 1801, and for ever after, be united into one kingdom, by the name of The United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland; and that the royal style and titles of the imperial crown, and the ensigns, armorial flags, and banners, shall be such as should be appointed by his majesty's royal proclamation.

Art. II. That the succession to the imperial crown shall continue settled in the same manner as the succession to the crown of Great Britain and Ireland stood before limited.

Art. III. That there shall be one parliament, stiled, The Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

Art. IV. That four lords spiritual of Ireland, by rotation of sessions, and twenty-eight lords temporal of Ireland, elected for life by the peers of Ireland, shall sit in the house of lords: and one hundred commoners, two for each county, two for the city of Dublin, and two for the city of Cork, one for Trinity College, and one for each of the thirty-one most considerable cities and boroughs, shall be the number to sit in the house of commons on the part of Ireland.

That questions respecting the rotation or election of the spiritual or temporal peers shall be decided by the house of lords, and in the case of an equality of votes in the election of a temporal peer, the clerk of the parliament shall determine the election by drawing one of the names from a glass.

That a peer of Ireland, not elected one of the twenty-eight, may sit in the house of commons; but whilst he continues a member of the house of commons, he shall not be entitled to the privilege of peerage, nor capable of being elected one of the twenty-eight, nor of voting at such election, and he shall be sued and indicted for any offence as a commoner.

That as often as three of the peerages of Ireland, existing at the time of the Union, shall become extinct, the king may create one peer of Ireland; and when the peers of Ireland are reduced to one hundred by extinction, or otherwise, exclusive of those who shall hold any peerage of Great Britain subsisting at the time of the union, or created of the united kingdom since the union, the king may then create one peer of Ireland for every peerage that becomes extinct, or as often as any of them is created a peer of the united kingdom, so that the king may always keep up the number of one hundred Irish peers, over and above those who have an hereditary seat in the house of lords.

That questions respecting the election of the members of the house of commons returned for Ireland, shall be tried in the same manner, as questions respecting the elections for places in Great Britain, subject to such particular regulations as the parliament afterwards shall deem expedient.

That the qualifications by property of the representatives in Ireland, shall be the same respectively as those for counties, cities, and boroughs in England, unless some other provision be afterwards made.

Until an act shall be passed in the parliament of the united kingdom, providing in what cases persons holding offices and places of profit under the crown of Ireland, shall be incapable of sitting in the house of commons, not more than twenty such persons shall be capable of sitting; and if more than twenty such persons shall be returned from Ireland, then the seats of those above twenty shall be vacated, who have last accepted their offices or places.

That all the lords of parliament on the part of Ireland, spiritual and temporal, sitting in the house of lords, shall have the same rights and privileges respectively as the peers of Great Britain; and that all the lords spiritual and temporal of Ireland shall have rank and precedency next and immediately after all the persons holding peerages of the like order and degree in Great Britain, subsisting at the time of the union; and that all peerages hereafter created of Ireland, or of the united kingdom, of the same degree, shall have precedency according to the dates of their creations; and that all the peers of Ireland, except those who are members of the house of commons, shall have all the privileges of peers as fully as the peers of Great Britain, the right and privileges of sitting in the house of lords, and upon the trial of peers only excepted.

Art. V. That the churches of England and Ireland be united into one protestant episcopal church, to be called, The United Church of England and Ireland; that the doctrine and worship shall be the same; and that the continuance and preservation of the united church as the established church of England and Ireland, shall be deemed an essential and fundamental part of the union; and that, in like manner, the church of Scotland shall remain the same as is now established by law, and by the acts of union of England and Scotland.

Art. VI. The subjects of Great Britain and Ireland, shall be entitled to the same privileges with regard to trade and navigation, and also in respect of all treaties with foreign powers.

That all probibitions and bounties upon the importation of merchandize from one country to the other shall cease.

But that the importation of certain articles therein enumerated, shall be subject to such countervailing duties as are specified in the act.

Art. VII. The sinking funds, and the interest of the national debt, of each country, shall be defrayed by each separately. And, for the space of twenty years, after the union, the contribution of Great Britain and Ireland towards the public expenditure in each year, shall be in the proportion of fifteen to two, subject to future regulations.

Art. VIII. All the laws and courts of each kingdom shall remain the same as they are now established, subject to such alterations by the united parliament, as circumstances may require; but that all writs of error and appeals shall be decided by the house of lords of the united kingdom, except appeals from the court of admiralty in Ireland, which shall be decided by a court of delegates, appointed by the court of chancery in Ireland.

The statute then recites an act passed in the parliament of Ireland, by which the rotation of the four spiritual lords for each sessions is fixed; and it also directs the time and mode of electing the twenty-eight temporal peers for life; and it provides that sixty-four county members, two for each county, two for the city of Dublin, two for the city of Cork, one for Trinity College, Dublin, and one for each of thirty-one cities and town: which are there specified, which are the only places in Ireland to be represented in future. One of the two members of each of those places, was chosen by lot, unless the other withdrew his name to sit in the first parliament, but at the next elections, one member only will be returned.

ISLAND or ISLE, (insula) is land inclosed in, and environed with the sea or fresh water.

And according to the civil law, an island in the sea, that has no owner, by the law of nations, belongs to him that first finds it. Justin. Inst. lib. 2.

But by the law of England, if an island arise in the middle of a river, it belongs in common to those who have lands on each side thereof; but if it be nearer to one bank than the other, it belongs only to him who is proprietor of the nearest shore: which is agreeable to, and probably copied from, the civil law (Inst. 2. 1, 22.) Yet this seems only to be reasonable, where the soil of the river is equally divided between the owners of the opposite shores: for if the whole soil is the freehold of any one man, as it usually is, whenever a several fishery is claimed (Salk. 637.), there it seems just (and so is the constant practice) that the eyotts or little islands, arising in any part of the river, shall be the property of him who owneth the piscary and the soil. However, in case a new island rise in the sea, though the civil law gives it to the first occupant (Inst. 2. 1, 18.), yet ours gives it to the king. Bract.

ISLET, a small island.

ISSUABLE TERMS. Hilary and Trinity terms are usually called issuable terms, from the making up of the issues therein, for the trial of causes out of Middlesex and London.

ISSUE, (exitus, from the Fr. issuer, i. e. emanare) hath divers significations in law; sometimes it is taken for the children begotten between a man and his wife, sometimes for profits growing from amerciaments and fines; sometimes for the profits of lands and tenements: but it generally signifies the point of matter, issuing out of the allegations and pleas of the plaintiff and defendant in a cause, to be tried by a jury of twelve men. 1 Inst. 126. 11 Rep. 10.

The issues upon matter of fact, are, whether the fact is true or false, which are triable by a jury only, and they are either general or special.

General, when it is left to the jury to try whether the defendant hath done any such thing as the plaintiff lays to his charge; as when he pleads non assumpsit on the contract, or not guilty on a tort.

Special, when some special matter, or material point alledged by the defendant in his defence, is to be tried; as a justification of the right of assault upon the ground that the first assault, was committed by the plaintiff, or in an action for slanderous words, that the facts justify the slanderous words.

If the plaintiff does not proceed to try the issue after joined, in such time as he ought by the course of the court, the defendant may give him a rule to enter it; which if he does not, he shall be nonsuit, &c. 2 Lil. 84.

ISSUES ON SHERIFFS, are for neglects and defaults, by amercement and fine to the king, levied out of the issues and profits of their lands: and double or treble issues may be laid on a sheriff for not returning writs, &c. But they may be taken off before estreated into the exchequer, by rule of court, on good reason shewn. 2 Lil. Abr. 89. Issues also may be levied on jurors for non-appearance. 35 Hen. 8. cap. 6. See 1 Keb. 475.

ITINERANT, (itinerans) travelling or taking a journey: and those were anciently called justices itinerant, who were sent with commission into divers counties to hear causes. 3 Black. 59. 4 Black. 411, 422.

The king's courts were formerly itinerant, being kept in the king's palace, and removing with his household. The common pleas is now fixed by magna charta; but though the court of king's bench is constantly held in Westminster-hall, yet there is nothing but custom to fix it there, as it is supposed to be before the king, and if actually so must be itinerant. Ibid.

ITINERARY, (itinerarium) a commentary concerning things fallen out in journies. Law Lat. Dict.

JUBILEE, (annus jubilæus) an ancient solemn but happy time of festival at Rome, when the pope gives his blessing and remission of sins. It was first instituted by Boniface the 8th, in 1300, who granted a plenary indulgence and remission of sins to all who should visit the churches of St. Peter and St. Paul at Rome in that year, and stay there fifteen days; and this he ordered to be observed once in every hundred years; which pope Clement the 6th reduced to fifty years, anno 1350, and to be held upon the day of circumcision of our Saviour: and Urban the 4th, in the year 1389, ordained it to be kept every thirty-three years, that being the age of our Saviour: after which, pope Sixtus the 6th, reduced it to twenty-five years. In imitation of the grand jubilee of Rome, the monks of Christ-Church in Canterbury, every fiftieth year invited great concourse of people to come thither, and visit the tomb of Thomas Becket. And king Edward III. in the fiftieth year of his age, which was 1362, caused his birth day to be observed at court, in the name of a jubilee, giving pardons, privileges, and other civil indulgencies. Cowel. Blount.

JUBILÆUS, signified afterwards a man one hundred years old, and likewise a possession or prescription for fifty years. Ibid.

JUDAISM, (judaismus). See Jews.

Judaismus is also taken for the mansion or dwelling-place of the Jews in any town; as Wigorniam cepit et intrarit, et judaismum evertit. Rishangor, p. 668. And it sometimes signifies usury: as, empta fuit grangia, &c. domus obligata in magnis debitis in judaismo. Mon. 1 tom. p. 834.

JUDGER. In Cheshire, to be a judger of a town, is to serve on the jury there. Leicester's Hist. Antiq. 302.

JUDGES. Although it is probable, and almost certain, that in very early times, before our constitution arrived at its full perfection, our kings in person often heard and determined causes between party and party. Yet at present, by the long and uniform usage of many ages, our kings have delegated their whole judicial power to the judges of their several courts; which are the grand depositaries of the fundamental laws of the kingdom, and have gained a known and stated jurisdiction, regulated by certain and established rules, which the crown itself cannot now alter but by act of parliament (2 Hawk. P. C. 2.) And, in order to maintain both the dignity and independence of the judges in the superior courts, it is enacted by the statute 13 W. 3. c. 2. that their commissions shall be made (not, as formerly, durante bene placito, but) quamdiu bene se gesserint, and their salaries ascertained and established; but that it may be lawful to remove them on the address of both houses of parliament. And now, by the noble improvements of that law in the statute of 1 Geo. 3. c. 23. enacted at the earnest recommendation of the king himself from the throne, the judges are continued in their offices during their good behaviour, notwithstanding any demise of the crown, which was formerly held (Ld. Raym. 747.) immediately to vacate their seats, and their full salaries were absolutely secured to them during the continuance of their commissions; his majesty having been pleased to declare, that "he looked upon the independence and uprightness of the judges, "as essential to the impartial administration "of justice; as one of the best securities of "the rights and liberties of his subjects; and "as most conducive to the honour of the "crown (Com. Journ. 3 Mar. 1761.)"

When his majesty was pleased to make this memorable declaration, he introduced it by observing; that "upon "granting new commissions to the judges, "the present state of their offices fell naturally under consideration. In consequence "of the late act, passed in the reign of my "late glorious predecessor William the third, "for settling the succession to the crown in "my family, their commissions have been "made during their good behaviour; but "notwithstanding that wise provision, their "offices have determined upon the demise of "the crown, or at the expiration of six "months afterwards, in every instance of "that nature which has happened."

JUDGMENT, (judicium, quasi juris dictum.) Judgments are the sentence of the law, pronounced by the court upon the matter contained in the record; and are of four sorts.

First, where the facts are confessed by the parties, and the law determined by the court; as in case of judgment upon demurrer:

Secondly, where the law is admitted by the parties, and the facts disputed; as in case of judgment on a verdict:

Thirdly, where both the fact and the law arising thereon are admitted by the defendant, which is the case of judgments by confession or default:

Or, lastly, where the plaintiff is convinced that either fact, or law, or both, are insufficient to support his action, and therefore abandons or withdraws his prosecution; which is the case in judgments upon a nonsuit or retraxit. 3 Black. 395.

The judgment, though pronounced or awarded by the judges, is not their determination or sentence, but the determination and sentence of the law. It is the conclusion, that naturally and regularly follows from the premises of law and fact, which stand thus: against him, who hath rode over my corn, I may recover damages by law; and as A hath rode over my corn; therefore I shall recover damages against A. If the major proposition be denied, this is a demurrer in law: if the minor, it is then an issue of fact: but if both be confessed (or determined) to be right, the conclusion or judgment of the court cannot but follow. Which judgment or conclusion depends not therefore on the arbitrary caprice of the judge, but on the settled and invariable principles of justice. The judgment, in short, is the remedy prescribed by law, for the redress of injuries; and the suit or action is the vehicle or means of administering it. What that remedy may be, is indeed the result of deliberation and study to point out, and therefore the style of the judgment is, not that it is decreed or resolved by the court, for then the judgment might appear to be their own; but, "it is considered," consideratum est per curiam, that the plaintiff do recover his damages, his debt, his possession, and the like: which implies that the judgment is none of their own; but the act of law, pronounced and declared by the court, after due deliberation and inquiry. 3 Black. 396.

All these species of judgments are either interlocutory or final. Interlocutory judgments are such as are given in the middle of a cause, upon some plea, proceeding, or default, which is only intermediate, and does not finally determine or complete the suit. Of this nature are all judgments for the plaintiff upon pleas in abatement of the suit or action: in which it is considered by the court, that the defendant do answer over, respondeat ouster; that is, put in a more substantial plea (2 Saund. 30.) It is easy to observe, that the judgment here given is not final, but merely interlocutory; for there are afterwards farther proceedings to be had, when the defendant hath put in a better answer. Ibid.

But the interlocutory judgments, most usually spoken of, are those incomplete judgments, whereby the right of the plaintiff is indeed established, but the quantum of damages sustained by him is not ascertained: which is a matter that cannot be done without the intervention of a jury. As by the old Gothic constitution the cause was not completely finished, till the nembda or jurors were called in "ad executionem decretorum "judicii, ad æstimationem pretii, damni, lu- "cri, &c. (Stiernhook de jure Goth. l. 1 c. 4.)" This can only happen where the plaintiff recovers; for when judgment is given for the defendant it is always complete as well as final. And this happens, in the first place, where the defendant suffers judgment to go against him by default, or nihil dicit; as if he puts in no plea at all to the plaintiff's declaration; by confession or cognovit actionem, where he acknowledges the plaintiff's demand to be just: or by non sum informatus, when the defendant's attorney declares he has no instructions to say any thing in answer to the plaintiff, or in defence of his client; which is a species of judgment by default. If these, or any of them, happen in actions where the specific thing sued for is recovered, as in actions of detinue or debt for a sum or thing certain, the judgment is final and absolutely complete. And therefore it is very usual, in order to strengthen a bond-creditor's security, for the debtor to execute a warrant of attorney to any one, empowering him to confess a judgment by either of the ways just now mentioned (by nihil dicit, cognovit actionem, or non sum informatus) in an action of debt to be brought by the creditor for the specific sum due: which judgment, when confessed, is absolutely complete and binding. But, where damages are to be recovered, a jury must be called in to assess them, unless the defendant, to save charges, will confess the whole damages laid in the declaration: otherwise the entry of the judgment is, "that the plaintiff ought to "recover his damages, (indefinitely) but, "because the court know not what damages "the said plaintiff hath sustained, therefore "the sheriff is commanded, that by the oaths "of twelve honest and lawful men he inquire "into the said damages, and return such "inquisition (when taken) into court." This process is called a writ of inquiry: in the execution of which, the sheriff sits as judge, and tries by a jury, subject to nearly the same law and conditions as the trial by jury at nisi prius, what damages the plaintiff hath really sustained; and when their verdict is given, which must assess some damages (but to what amount they please) the sheriff returns the inquisition into court, which is entered upon the roll in manner of a postea; and thereupon it is considered, that the plaintiff do recover the exact sum of the damages so assessed. In like manner, when a demurrer is determined for the plaintiff upon an action wherein damages are recovered, the judgment is also incomplete, till a writ of inquiry is awarded to assess damages, and returned; after which the judgment is completely entered. Ibid.

Final judgments are such as at once put an end to the action, by declaring that the plaintiff has either entitled himself, or has not, to recover the remedy he sues for. In which case, if the judgment be for the plaintiff; it is also considered that the defendant be either amerced, for his wilful delay of justice in not immediately obeying the king's writ by rendering the plaintiff his due (5 Rep. 49.); or be taken up, capiatur, to pay a fine to the king, in case of any forcible injury. Though now by statute 5 & 6 W. & M. c. 12. no writ of capias shall issue for this fine, but the plaintiff shall pay 6*s.* 8*d.* and be allowed it against the defendant among his other costs. And therefore, in judgments in the court of common pleas, they enter that the fine is remitted, and in the court of king's bench, they now take no notice of any fine or capias at all (Salk. 54. Carth. 390.) But if judgment be for the defendant, then it is considered, that the plaintiff and his pledges of prosecuting be (nominally) amerced for his false suit, and that the defendant may go without a day eat sine die, that is, without any farther continuance or adjournment; the king's writ, commanding his attendance, being now fully satisfied, and his innocence publicly cleared.

JUDGMENT IN CRIMINAL CASES. When upon a capital charge the jury have brought in their verdict guilty, in the presence of the prisoner, he is either immediately, or at a convenient time soon after, asked by the court, if he has any thing to offer why judgment should not be awarded against him. And in case the defendant be found guilty of a misdemeanor, (the trial of which may, and does usually, happen in his absence, after he has once appeared,) a capias is awarded and issued to bring him in to receive his judgment; and if he absconds he may be prosecuted even to outlawry. But whenever he appears in person, upon either a capital or inferior conviction, he may at this period, as well as at his arraignment, offer any exceptions to the indictment, in arrest or stay of judgment; as for want of sufficient certainty in setting forth either the time, the place, or the offence. And if the objections be valid the whole proceedings shall be set aside, but the party may be indicted again (4 Rep. 45.) And we may take notice, 1. That none of the statutes of jeofails for amendment of errors extend to indictments or proceedings in criminal cases; and therefore a defective indictment is not aided by a verdict, as defective pleadings in civil cases are. 2. That, in favour of life, great strictness has at all times been observed in every point of an indictment. Sir Matthew Hale indeed complains "that this "strictness is grown to be a blemish and "inconvenience in the law, and the ad-"ministration thereof; for that more of-"fenders escape by the over-easy ear given "to exceptions on indictments than by their "own innocence." (2 Hal. P. C. 193.) And yet no man was more tender of life than this truly excellent judge. 4 Black. 375.

A pardon also, may be pleaded in arrest of judgment; and it has the same advantage when pleaded here as when pleaded upon arraignment, viz. the saving the attainder, and of course the corruption of blood, which nothing can restore but parliament, when a pardon is not pleaded till after sentence. And certainly upon all accounts, when a man hath obtained a pardon he is in the right to plead it as soon as possible. Ibid.

Praying the benefit of clergy may also be ranked among the motions in arrest of judgment. Ibid.

If all these resources fail the court must pronounce that judgment which the law has annexed to the crime. Of these some are capital, which extend to the life of the offender, and consist generally in being hanged by the neck till dead; though in very atrocious crimes other circumstances of terror, pain, or disgrace, are superadded, as in treasons of all kinds, being drawn or dragged to the place of execution; in high treason affecting the king's person or government, embowelling alive, beheading, and quartering, and in murder, a public dissection. And in case of any treason committed by a female, the judgment was formerly to be burned alive; but this is now altered by 30 Geo. 3, c. 48, and such offender is to be punished as for murder.

The humanity of the English nation has, however, authorized by a tacit consent, an almost general mitigation of such part of these judgments as savours of torture or cruelty; a sledge or hurdle being usually allowed to such traitors as are condemned to be drawn; and there being very few instances (and those accidental or by negligence) of any persons being embowelled or burned, till previously deprived of sensation by strangling.

In præmunire, the party offending is to be out of the king's protection, and his body to remain in prison during the king's pleasure, &c. And for misprision of felony, fine and imprisonment is inflicted. 2 Hawk. 443, 444.

For crimes and misdemeanors of an infamous nature, perjury, or forgery at common law, gross cheats, conspiracy, keeping bawdy-houses, &c. the judgments are discretionary in the court, by fine, pillory, whipping, &c. 2 Hawk. 445.

JUDGMENT ARRESTED, in civil and criminal cases. See Arrest of Judgment.

JUDGMENT OR TRIAL BY THE HOLY CROSS, was a trial in ecclesiastical cases, anciently in use among the Saxons. Cowel. Blount.

JUDICATORES TERRARUM, are persons in the county palatine of Chester, who on a writ of error out of Chancery, are to consider of the judgment given there, and reform it; and if they do not, and it be found erroneous, they forfeit 100*l.* to the king, by the custom. Dyer 348. Jenk. Cent. 71.

JUDICES FISCALES, Empson and Dudley, who were employed by Hen. 7, for taking the benefit of penal statutes, and were put to death by Hen. 8, were so called. Cowel.

JUDICIAL decisions, opinions or determinations, are of three kinds. Hale's Hist. c. 2, 68, 69.

1st, They are either such as have their reasons singly in the laws and customs of this kingdom, as who shall succeed as heir to the ancestor, or the like.

Or 2dly, They are such decisions, as by way of deduction and illation upon those laws are formed or deduced; as for the purpose, whether of an estate thus or thus limited the wife shall be endowed.

3dly, Or they are such as seem to have no other guide but the common reason of the thing, unless the same point has been formerly decided, as in the exposition of the intention of clauses in deeds, wills, covenants, &c. where the very sense of the words, and their positions and relations, give a rational account of the meaning of the parties.

An extra-judicial opinion given in or out of court is no more than the dictum or saying of him who gives it, nor can be taken for his opinion, unless every thing spoken at pleasure must pass as the speaker's opinion. Vaugh. 382.

So an opinion given in court is not necessary to the judgment given of record, but that it might have been as well given if no such or a contrary opinion had been broached, is no judicial opinion, nor more than a gratis dictum. Ibid.

JUDICIAL POWER. By the long and uniform usage of many ages our kings have delegated their whole judicial power to the judges of their several courts, which are the grand depository of the fundamental laws of the kingdom, and have gained a known and stated jurisdiction, regulated by certain and established rules, which the crown itself cannot alter but by act of parliament. 1 Black. 267. 2 Hawk. P. C. 2.

And there is great propriety in separating the judicial from the legislative and executive power of the state. Montesquieu L'Esprit des Loix, Liv. 11, c. 6, fol. 208.

JUDICIAL WRITS. The capias and all other subsequent to the original writ, not issuing out of chancery, but from the court into which the original was returnable, and being grounded on what has passed in that court in consequence of the sheriff's return, are called judicial, not original writs; they issue under the private seal of that court, and not under the great seal of England, and are tested, not in the king's name, but in that of the chief justice only. 3 Black. Com. 282.

JUDICIUM DEI, the judgment of God, so our ancestors called those now prohibited trials of ordeal, and its several kinds. Cowel.

JUDICIUM PARIUM, a trial by a man's equals, i. e. peers by peers, commoners by commoners. See JURY.

JUG, a watery place. Cowel. Blount.

JUGULATOR, a cut-throat, or murderer. Ibid.

JUGUM TERRÆ, a yoke of land, containing half a plough-land. Gale 760.

JUNCARE, to strew rushes, as was of old the accommodating the parochial church, and even the bed-chambers of princes. Ibid.

JUNCARIA, or JONCARIA, (from juncus, Lat. a rush,) is a place or soil wherein rushes grow. Ibid.

JUNCTUM JUNCTA, a measure of salt. Ibid.

JURA REGALIA. See Regalia.

JURATS, (jurati) are in nature of aldermen, for the government of many corporations.

JURE DIVINO, right to the throne, a doctrine long since exploded, and now universally denied. 1 Black. 191.

JURE DIVINO, right to tithes. The title of the clergy to tithes does not stand upon any divine right, though such right certainly commenced, and as certainly ceased, with the Jewish Theocracy. Yet an honourable and competent maintenance for the ministers of the gospel is undoubtedly jure divino, whatever the particular mode of that maintenance may be. 2 Black. 25.

JURIDICAL DAYS, (dies juridici) days in court, on which the law was administered. Cowel.

JURISDICTION, (jurisdictio) is an authority or power to do justice in causes of complaint.

Thus the courts and judges at Westminster have jurisdiction all over England, and are not restrained to any county or place; but all other courts are confined to their particular jurisdictions, which if they exceed, whatever they do is erroneous. 2 Lill. Abr. 120.

JURIS UTRUM, is a writ which laid for the parson of a church whose predecessor had alienated the lands and tenements thereof. F. N. B. 48.

JURNALE, the journal or diary of accounts in a religious house. Cowel. Blount.

JURNEDUM, a journey, or one day's travelling. Cowel. Blount.

JUROR, (jurator) is one of those persons who are sworn on a jury.

JURY (jurata, Lat. jurare, to swear). The subject of the trial by jury, called also the trial per pais, or by the country, the great bulwark of every Englishman's liberties is secured to him by the great charter, 9 Hen. 3. c. 29: "Nullus liber homo capiatur, vel imprisonetur "aut exulet, aut aliquæ, alio modo destruatur, "nisi per legalem judicium parium suorum "VEL per legem terræ;" a trial that has been used time out of mind in this nation, and seems to have been coeval with the first civil government thereof. Some authors have endeavoured to trace the origin of juries up as high as the Britons themselves, the first inhabitants of our island; but certain it is, that they were in use among the earliest Saxon colonies, their institution being ascribed by bishop Nicolson (De jure Saxonum, p. 12,) to Woden himself, their great legislator and captain. Hence it is, that we may find traces of juries in the laws of all those nations which adopted the feodal system, as in Germany, France, and Italy, who had all of them a tribunal composed of twelve good men and true, "boni "homines," usually the vassals or tenants of the lord, being the equals or peers of the parties litigant; and as the lord's vassals judged each other in the lord's courts, so the king's vassals, or the lords themselves, judged each other in the king's court. (Sp. L. b. 30, c. 18. Capital. Lud. pit. A. D. 819, c. 2.) In England we find actual mention of them so early as the laws of Ethelred, and that not as a new invention (Wilk. LL. Angl. Sax. 117). Stiernhook (De jure Sueonum. l. 1, c. 4,) ascribes the invention of the jury, which in the Teutonic language is denominated nembda, to Regner, king of Sweden and Denmark, who was cotemporary with our king Egbert. Just as we are apt to impute the invention of this, and some other pieces of juridical polity, to the superior genius of Alfred the great; to whom, on account of his having done much, it is usual to attribute every thing; and as the tradition of ancient Greece placed to the account of their one Hercules whatever achievement was performed superior to the ordinary prowess of mankind. Whereas the truth seems to be, that this tribunal was universally established among all the northern nations, and so interwoven in their very constitution, that the earliest accounts of the one give us also some traces of the other. Its establishment, however, and use, in this island, of what date soever it be, though for a time greatly impaired and shaken by the introduction of the Norman trial by battle, was always so highly esteemed and valued by the people, that no conquest, no change of government, could ever prevail to abolish it. In Magna Charta it is more than once insisted on as the principal bulwark of our liberties; but especially by c. 29, that no freeman shall be hurt in either his person or property, "nisi per legale "judicium parium suorum vel legem terræ." A privilege which is couched in almost the same words with those of the emperor Conrad 200 years before (LL. Longob. l. 3, t. 8, l. 4,) "nemo beneficium suum perdat, "nisi secundum consuetudinem antecessorum "nostrorum et per judicium parium suorum." And it was ever esteemed in all countries a privilege of the highest and most beneficial nature. 3 Black. 350.

Trials by jury in civil causes are of two kinds, extraordinary and ordinary. 3 Black. 351.

The first species of extraordinary trial by jury is that of the grand assise, which was instituted by king Hen. 2, in parliament, by way of alternative offered to the choice of the tenant or defendant in a writ of right, instead of the barbarous and unchristian custom of duelling. For this purpose a writ de magna assisa eligenda is directed to the sheriff, (F. N. B. 4.) to return four knights, who are to elect and choose twelve others to be joined with them, in the manner mentioned by Glanvil, (l. 2, c. 11—21.) who having probably advised the measure itself, is more than usually copious in describing it; and these all together form the grand assise, or great jury which is to try the matter of right, and must consist of sixteen jurors. Finch L. 412. 1 Leon. 303.

Another species of extraordinary juries is the jury to try an attaint, which is a process commenced against a former jury for bringing in a false verdict. This jury is to consist of twenty-four of the best men in the county, who are called the grand jury in the attaint, to distinguish them from the first, or petit-jury, and these are to hear and try the goodness of the former verdict.

With regard to the ordinary trial by jury in civil cases the order and course of the proceedings are as follow:

When an issue is joined by these words, "and this the said A prays may be inquired of by the country," or, "and of this he puts himself upon the country, and the said B does the like," the court awards a writ of venire facias upon the roll or record, commanding the sheriff "that he cause to come here on such a day twelve free and lawful men, liberos et legales homines, of the body of his county, by whom the truth of the matter may be better known, and who are neither of kin to the aforesaid A, nor the aforesaid B, to recognize the truth of the issue between the said parties." And such writ is accordingly issued to the sheriff.

Thus the cause stands ready for a trial at the bar of the court itself: for all trials were there anciently had, in actions which were there first commenced; which never happened but in matters of weight and consequence, all trifling suits being ended in the court-baron, hundred, or county-courts; and all causes of great importance or difficulty are still usually retained upon motion, to be tried at the bar in the superior courts. But when the usage began, to bring actions of any trifling value in the courts of Westminster-hall, it was found to be an intolerable burthen to compel the parties, witnesses, and jurors, to come from Westmorland perhaps, or Cornwall, to try an assault at Westminster. Therefore the legislature took into consideration, that [illegible] usually twice in the year into the several counties, ad capiendas assisas, to take or try writs of assise, of mort d' ancestor, novel disseisin, nuisance, and the like. The form of which writs was that they commanded the sheriff to summon an assise or jury, and go to view the land in question; and then to have the said jury ready at the next coming of the justices of assise (together with the parties (to recognize and determine the disseisin, or other injury complained of. As therefore these judges were ready in the country to administer justice in real actions of assise, the legislature thought proper to refer other matters in issue to be also determined before them, whether of a mixed or personal kind. And therefore it was enacted by statute Westm. 2. 13 Edw. 1, c. 30, that a clause of nisi prius should be inserted in all the aforesaid writs of venire facias; that is, "that the sheriff should cause the jurors "to come to Westminster (or wherever the "king's courts should be held) on such a "day in Easter and Michaelmas terms, "nisi prius, unless before that day the "justices assigned to take assises shall "come into his said county." By virtue of which the sheriff returned his jurors to the court of the justices of assise, which was sure to be held in the vacation before Easter and Michaelmas terms, and there the trial was had. 3 Black. 353.

An inconvenience attended this remedy; principally because as the sheriff made no return of the jury to the court at Westminster the parties were ignorant who they were till they came upon the trial, and therefore were not ready with their challenges or exceptions. For this reason, by the stat. 42 Edw. 3, c. 11, the method of trials by nisi prius was altered; and it was enacted that no inquest, except of assise and gaol delivery, should be taken by writ of nisi prius till after the sheriff had returned the names of the jurors to the court above. So that now the clause of nisi prius is left out of the writ of venire facias, which is the sheriff's warrant to warn the jury, and is inserted in another part of the proceedings. Ibid.

For now the course is to make the sheriff's venire returnable on the last return of the same term wherein issue is joined, viz. Hilary or Trinity terms, which from the making up of the issues therein are usually called issuable terms. And he returns the names of the jurors in a panel (a little pane, or oblong piece of parchment) annexed to the writ. This jury is not summoned, and therefore, not appearing at the day must unavoidably make default. For which reason a compulsive process is now awarded against the jurors, called in the Common Pleas a writ of habeas corpora juratorum, and in the King's Bench a distringas, commanding the sheriff to have their bodies, or to distrain them by their lands and goods, that they may appear upon the day appointed. The entry, therefore, on the roll or record is, "that the jury is respited "through defect of the jurors till the first "day of the next term, then to appear at "Westminster, unless before that time, viz. "on Wednesday the fourth of March, the "justices of our lord the king, appointed "to take assises in that county, shall have "come to Oxford, that is, to the place "assigned for holding the assises. There- "fore the sheriff is commanded to have "their bodies at Westminster on the said "first day of next term, or before the "said justices of assise, if before that "time they come to Oxford, viz. on the "fourth of March aforesaid." And, as the judges are sure to come and open the circuit commissions on the day mentioned in the writ, the sheriff returns and summons this jury to appear at the assises, and there the trial is had before the justices of assise and nisi prius, among whom are usually two of the judges of the courts at Westminster, the whole kingdom being divided into six circuits for this purpose. And thus we may observe that the trial of common issues at nisi prius was in its original only a collateral incident to the original business of the justices of assise, though now by the various revolutions of practice it is become their principal employment, hardly any thing remaining in use of the real assises but the name. 3 Black. 354.

If the sheriff be not an indifferent person, as if he be a party in the suit, or be related by either blood or affinity to either of the parties, he is not then trusted to return the jury, but the venire shall be directed to the coroners, who in this, as in many other instances, are the substitutes of the sheriff, to execute process when he is deemed an improper person. If any exception lies to the coroners the venire shall be directed to two clerks of the court, or two persons of the county named by the court, and sworn (Fortesc. de Laud. LL. c. 25). And these two, who are called elisors, or electors, shall indifferently name the jury, and their return is final. Ibid.

In these first preparatory stages of the trial this constitution is admirably adapted and framed for the investigation of truth, beyond any other method of trial in the world.

For, first the person returning the jurors is a man of some fortune and consequence; that so he may be not only the less tempted to commit wilful errors, but likewise be responsible for the faults of either himself or his officers: and he is also bound by the obligation of an oath faithfully to execute his duty.

Next, as to the time of their return; the panel is returned to the court upon the original venire, and the jury are to be summoned and brought in many weeks afterwards to the trial, whereby the parties may have notice of the jurors, and of their sufficiency or insufficiency, characters, connections, and relations, that so they may be challenged upon just cause, while at the same time by means of the compulsory process (of distringas or habeas corpora) the cause is not like to be retarded through defect of jurors.

Thirdly, as to the place of their appearance, which in causes of weight and consequence is at the bar of the court, but in ordinary cases at the assise held in the county where the cause of action arises, and the witnesses and jurors live, a provision most excellently calculated for the saving of expense to the parties. For though the preparation of the causes in point of pleading is transacted at Westminster, whereby the order and uniformity of proceeding is preserved throughout the kingdom, and multiplicity of forms is prevented; yet this is no great charge or trouble, one attorney being able to transact the business of forty clients. But the troublesome and most expensive attendance is that of jurors and witnesses at the trial, which therefore is brought home to them in the country where most of them inhabit.

Fourthly, the persons before whom they are to appear, and before whom the trial is to be held, are the judges of the superior court, if it be a trial at bar; or the judges of assise, deleguted from the courts at Westminster by the king, if the trial be held in the country; persons whose learning and dignity secure their jurisdiction from contempt, and the novelty and very parade of whose appearance have no small influence upon the multitude. The very point of their being strangers in the county is of infinite service in preventing those factions and parties, which would intrude in every cause of moment were it tried only before persons resident on the spot, as justices of the peace, and the like. And, as this constitution prevents party and faction from intermingling in the trial of right, so it keeps both the rule and the administration of the laws uniform.

These justices, though thus varied and shifted at every assises, are all sworn to the same laws, have had the same education, have pursued the same studies, converse and consult together, communicate their decisions and resolutions, and preside in those courts, which are mutually connected, and their judgments blended together, as they are interchangeably courts of appeal or advice to each other. And hence their administration of justice and conduct of trials are consonant and uniform, and by that confusion and contrariety avoided which would naturally arise from of uncommunicating judges, or from any provincial establishment. 3 Black. 356.

As to the assises here spoken of.

When the general day of trial is fixed, the plaintiff or his attorney must bring down the record to the assises, and enter it with the proper officer, in order to its being called on in course. If it be not so entered it cannot be tried; therefore it is in the plaintiff's breast to delay any trial by not carrying down the record; unless the defendant, being fearful of such neglect in the plaintiff, and willing to discharge himself from the action, will himself undertake to bring on the trial, giving proper notice to the plaintiff. Which proceeding is called the trial by proviso, by reason of the clause then inserted in the sheriff's venire, viz. "proviso, provided, that if two writs "come to your hands, (that is, one from "the plaintiff and another from the de-"fendant) you shall execute only one of "them." But this practice begins to be disused since the stat. 14 Geo. 2, c. 17, which enacts, that if, after issue joined, the cause is not carried down to be tried according to the course of the court, the plaintiff shall be esteemed to be nonsuited, and judgment shall be given for the defendant as in case of a nonsuit. In case the plaintiff intends to try the cause he is bound to give the defendant (if he lives within 40 miles of London) eight days notice of trial, and if he lives at a greater distance, then fourteen days notice, in order to prevent surprise; and if the plaintiff then changes his mind, and does not countermand the notice six days before the trial, he shall be liable to pay costs to the defendant for not proceeding to trial, by the same last-mentioned statute. The defendant, however, or plaintiff, may upon good cause shown to the court above, as upon absence or sickness of a material witness, obtain leave upon motion to defer the trial of the cause till the next assises. 3 Black. 357.

When the cause is called on in court the record is then handed to the judge, to peruse, and observe the pleadings, and what issues the parties are to maintain and prove, while the jury is called and sworn. To this end the sheriff returns his compulsive process, the writ of habeas corpora, or distringas, with the panel of jurors annexed, to the judge's officer in court. The jurors contained in the panel are either special or common jurors. Special juries were originally introduced in trials at bar, when the causes were of too great nicety for the discussion of ordinary freeholders, or where the sheriff was suspected of partiality, though not upon such apparent cause as to warrant an exception to him. He is in such cases, upon motion in court, and a rule granted thereupon, to attend the prothonotary, or other proper officer, with his freeholders book, and the officer is to take indifferently forty-eight of the principal freeholders in the presence of the attornies on both sides; who are each of them to strike off twelve, and the remaining twenty-four are returned upon the panel. By the stat. 3 Geo. 2. c. 25, either party is entitled upon motion to have a special jury struck upon the trial of any issue, as well at the assises as at bar; he paying the extraordinary expence, unless the judge will certify (in pursuance of the stat. 24 Geo. 2, c. 18,) that the cause required such special jury. 3 Black. 358.

A common jury is one returned by the sheriff according to the directions of the stat. 3 Geo. 2, c. 25, which appoints that the sheriff shall not return a separate panel for every separate cause, as formerly, but one and the same panel for every cause to be tried at the same assises, containing not less than 48, nor more than 72, jurors; and that their names, being written on tickets, shall be put into a box or glass; and when each cause is called, twelve of these persons whose names shall be first drawn out of the box, shall be sworn upon the jury, unless absent, challenged, or excused; and unless a previous view of the lands, or tenements, or other matters in question, shall have been thought necessary by the court: in which case six or more of the jurors returned, to be agreed on by the parties, or named by a judge, or other proper officer of the court, shall be appointed to take such view, and then such of the jury as have appeared upon the view, if any, (4 Burr. 252) shall be sworn on the inquest previous to any other jurors. These acts are well calculated to restrain any suspicion of partiality in the sheriff, or any tampering with the jurors when returned. Ibid.

When the jurors are called, and appear, they shall be sworn, unless challenged. See Challenges.

And if by means of challenges, or other cause, a sufficient number of unexceptionable jurors do not appear at the trial, either party may pray a tales, which tales is a supply of such men as are summoned upon the first panel, in order to make up the deficiency.

When the jurors are sworn the opening counsel briefly informs them of the names of the parties, the nature of the action, the declaration, the plea, replication, and other proceedings, and lastly, upon what point the issue is joined. The nature of the case, and the evidence intended to be produced, are then next laid before them by the leading counsel on the same side; and when their evidence is gone through, the counsel on the other side opens the adverse case, and supports it by evidence; and then the commanding the sheriff to have their bodies, or to distrain them by their lands and goods, that they may appear upon the day appointed. The entry, therefore, on the roll or record is, "that the jury is respited "through defect of the jurors till the first "day of the next term, then to appear at "Westminster, unless before that time, viz. "on Wednesday the fourth of March, the "justices of our lord the king, appointed "to take assises in that county, shall have "come to Oxford, that is, to the place "assigned for holding the assises. And if by means of challenges, or other cause, a sufficient number of unexceptionable jurors do not appear at the trial, either party may pray a tales, which tales is a supply of such men as are summoned upon the first panel, in order to make up the deficiency.

When the jurors are sworn the opening counsel briefly informs them of the names of the parties, the nature of the action, the declaration, the plea, replication, and other proceedings, and lastly, upon what point the issue is joined. The nature of the case, and the evidence intended to be produced, are then next laid before them by the leading counsel on the same side; and when their evidence is gone through, the counsel on the other side opens the adverse case, and supports it by evidence; and then the party which began is heard by way of reply; but if no evidence is gone into on the part of the defendant, the counsel for the plaintiff can make no reply.

When the evidence is gone through on both sides, the judge, in the presence of the parties, the counsel, and all others, sums up the whole to the jury, omitting all superfluous circumstances, observing wherein the main question and principal issue lies, stating what evidence has been given to support it, with such remarks as he thinks necessary for their direction, and giving them his opinion in matters of law arising upon that evidence. 3 Black. 375.

The jury, after the proofs are summed up, unless the case be very clear, withdraw from the bar to consider of their verdict; and in order to avoid intemperance and causeless delay, are to be kept without meat, drink, fire, or candle, unless by permission of the judge, till they are all unanimously agreed. But if our juries eat or drink at all, or have any eatables about them, without consent of the court, and before verdict, it is fineable; and if they do so at his charge for whom they afterwards find, it will set aside the verdict. Also if they speak with either of the parties or their agents, after they are gone from the bar, or if they receive any fresh evidence in private, or if to prevent disputes they cast lots for whom they shall find, any of these circumstances will entirely vitiate the verdict. And it has been held that if the jurors do not agree in their verdict before the judges are about to leave the town, (though they are not to be threatened or imprisoned, Mirr. c. 4, sec. 24) the judges are not bound to wait for them, but may carry them round the circuit from town to town in a cart (Lib. Ass. fol. 40, pl. 11). This necessity of a total unanimity seems to be peculiar to our own constitution, (see Barrington on the Statutes, 17, 18, 19,) for at least in the nembda or jury of the ancient Goths there was required, even in criminal cases, only the consent of the major part, and in case of an equality, the defendant was held to be acquitted. Stiernh. l. 1, c. 4.

When they are all unanimously agreed the jury return to the bar, and before they deliver their verdict the plaintiff is bound to appear in court, by himself, attorney, or counsel, in order to answer the amercement to which by the old law he is liable, in case he fails in his suit, as a punishment for his false claim to be amerced, or à mercie, that is, to be at the king's mercy with regard to the fine to be imposed; in misericordia domini regis pro falso clamore suo. This amercement is disused, but the form still continues; and if the plaintiff does not appear no verdict can be given, but the plaintiff is said to be nonsuit, non sequitur clamorem suum. Therefore it is usual for a plaintiff, when he or his counsel perceive that he has not given evidence sufficient to maintain his issue, to be voluntarily nonsuited, or withdraw himself; whereupon the crier is ordered to call the plaintiff, and if neither he, nor any body for him, appears, he is nonsuited, the jurors are discharged, the action is at an end, and the defendant shall recover his costs.

The reason of this practice is, that a nonsuit is more eligible for the plaintiff than a verdict against him; for after a nonsuit, which is only a default, he may commence the same suit again for the same cause of action; but after a verdict had, and judgment consequent thereupon, he is for ever barred from attacking the defendant upon the same ground of complaint. But in case the plaintiff appears the jury by their foreman deliver in their verdict.

When the jury have delivered in their verdict, and it is recorded in court, they are then discharged; and so ends the trial by jury, a trial which, besides the other vast advantages in its progress, is also as expeditious and cheap as it is convenient, equitable, and certain; for a commission out of chancery, or the civil law courts, for examining witnesses in one cause, will frequently last as long, and of course be full as expensive, as the trial of an hundred issues at nisi prius; and yet the fact cannot be determined by such commissioners at all; no, not till the depositions are published and read at the hearing of the cause in court. Black. 379.

Upon these accounts the trial by jury has been and ever will be looked upon as the glory of the English law. It is the most transcendent privilege which any subject can enjoy or wish for, that he cannot be affected either in his property, his liberty, or his person, but by the unanimous consent of twelve of his neighbours and equals. A constitution that has under Providence secured the just liberties of this nation for a long succession of ages. Ibid.

JURROCK, a kind of cork, mentioned in 1 Ric. 3, c. 8. Cowel.

JUS, law or right, authority and rule. Lit. Dict. Cowel.

JUS ACCRESCENDI, the right of survivorship between joint-tenants. Lit. 280. 1 Inst. 180.

JUSTA, a certain measure of liquor, quasi justa mensura, as much as was sufficient to drink at once. Cowel.

JUSTS, (Fr. jousta, i. e. decursus) were exercises between martial men and persons of honour, with spears, on horseback, and different from tournaments, which were military contentions, and consisted of many men in troops, whereas jousts were usually between two men singly.

JUSTICE, (justicia) the rendering to every one his due, or the act of doing what is right and just. Johnson.

And by Mag. Chart. 9 Hen. 3, c. 29, justice and right shall not be sold, denied, or delayed. Also right shall be done to all without respect. Stat. West. 1. 3 Edw. 1, c. 1. JUSTICE, (justiciarius) signifies an officer deputed by the king to administer justice, and do right by way of judgment, and is called justice, because in ancient time the Latin word for him was justitia, and for that he has his authority by deputation, and not jure magistratus. Glanv. lib. 2, c. 6. See JUDGES.

JUSTICE OF THE FOREST, (justiciarius forestæ) is also a lord by his office, and hears and determines all offences within the forest, committed against vert or venison: of these there are two, whereof one has jurisdiction over all forests on this side Trent, the other of all beyond it. Charta de Foresta, anno 9 Hen. 3. Cambd. Brit. p. 214. The court where this justice sits and determines is called "The justice-seat of the Forest;" held once in every three years. Manwood, cap. 24. He is also called justice in eyre of the forest. 33 Hen. 8, c. 35.

JUSTISEMENTS, from justitia, all things belonging to justice. Cowel. Also the effects of the execution of justice or of jurisdiction. Co. on Westm. 1, fol. 225.

JUSTICES OF ASSISE, (justiciarii ad capiendas assisas) were such as were wont by special commission to be sent, as occasion was offered, into this or that county, to take assises for the ease of the subjects; for as these actions pass always by jury, many men could not without damage and charge be brought to London, therefore justices for this purpose, by commission particularly authorized, were sent to them.

These commissions ad capiendas assisas, have of late years been settled and executed only in Lent, and the long vacation, (called now the Lent and Summer assises) when the justices, and other learned lawyers, may be at leisure to attend those controversies. By these means, the justices of both benches being worthily accounted the fittest of all others, and their assistants, were employed in these affairs. But no justice of either bench, or any other, might heretofore be justice of assise in his own county, or in the county where he was born or inhabited. Anno 8 R. 2. c. 2, and 33 Hen. 8. c. 24.

However, by 12 Geo. 2, c. 27, the judges may act as justices of oyer and terminer, or gaol delivery, notwithstanding they were born or inhabitant in that county without being liable to any penalty.

And by 49 Geo. 3. c. 91. notwithstanding

8 Ric. 2. c. 2. and 33 Hen. 8. c. 24. justices of either bench, or barons of the exchequer, or other persons appointed justices of assise may exercise the office in any county, though they were born or do inhabit therein.

JUSTICES OF BOTH BENCHES, are the judges of the courts of king's bench and common pleas.

JUSTICES IN EYRE, (justiciarii itinerantes.) These in ancient time, were sent with commission into divers counties to hear such causes especially, as were termed pleas of the crown. They differed from the justices of oyer and terminer, because they were sent upon one or few special causes, and to one place; whereas the justices in eyre were sent through the provinces and counties of the land, with more indefinite and general commission. Bracton, lib. 3. c. 11, 12, 13. and Britton, cap. 2.

JUSTICES OF GAOL DELIVERY, (justiciarii ad gaolas deliberandas) are those who are sent with commission, to hear and determine all causes appertaining to such, who for any offence are cast into gaol. Cowel. See Assizes.

JUSTICES OF THE JEWS, (justiciarii ad custodiam Judæorum assignati,) king Richard I. after his return out of the Holy Land, anno 1194, appointed particular justices, laws, and orders, for preventing the frauds, and regulating the contracts and usury of the Jews. Cowel. Blount.

JUSTICES OF LABOURERS, were justices heretofore appointed to redress the frowardness of labouring men, who would either be idle, or have unreasonable wages. 21 Ed. 3. c. 1. 25 Ed. 3. c. 8. and 31 Ed. 1. c. 6. Cowel.

JUSTICES OF NISI PRIUS, are all one at this time with justices of assise; the common adjournment of a cause to put it off to such a day, being nisi prius justiciarii venerint ad eas partes ad capiendas assisas; and upon this clause of adjournment, they are called justices of nisi prius, as well as justices of assise. Cowel.

JUSTICES OF OYER AND TERMINER, (justiciarii ad audiendum & terminandum) justices deputed upon some special or extraordinary occasions. And Fitzherbert in his Nat. Brev. saith, that the commission d'oyer and terminer is directed to certain persons upon any great riot, insurrections, heinous misdemeanors, or trespasses committed. 2 Ed. 3. c. 2. See F. N. B. f. 110.

JUSTICES OF THE PAVILION, (justiciarii pavilionis) are judges of a pie-powder court, of a most transcendant jurisdiction, held under the bishop of Winchester at a fair on St. Giles's Hill, near that city.

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE, (justiciarii ad pacem) are those who are appointed by the king's commission to keep the peace of the county where they dwell; of whom some of the greater quality are of the quorum, because business of importance may not be dispatched without the presence of them, or one of them.

The general commission of the peace, began by stat. 1 Ed. 3. though before that time, there were particular commissions of peace to certain men, in certain places; though not throughout England.

The power of constituting them is only in the king; though they are generally made at the discretion of the lord chancellor or lord keeper, by the king's leave; and the king may appoint in every county in England and Wales, as many as he shall think fit. 1 Inst. 174, 175.

These justices possess both at common law and by different statutes vast powers, and are particularly protected in the execution of the duties of their office by the following statutes:

By stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 44. no writ shall be sued out against any justice of peace, for any thing done by him in the execution of his office, until a notice in writing shall be delivered to him one month before the suing out of the same, containing the cause of action, &c. within which month he may tender amends, and if the tender be found sufficient, he shall have a verdict. No such plaintiff shall recover against the justice, unless such notice shall be proved at the trial.

If the justice shall neglect to make such tender, or shall make an insufficient tender, he may, before issue joined, pay into court such sum as he shall think fit.

Where an action is against a justice and constable, if there be a verdict against the justice, and the constable be acquitted, the plaintiff shall recover such costs against the justice, so as to include the costs the plaintiff shall be obliged to pay to the constable. If plaintiff in any such action shall recover against a justice, and the judge shall certify that the injury was wilfully and maliciously done, the plaintiff shall recover double costs.

No action shall be brought against a justice for any thing done in the execution of his office, unless commenced within six months after the act committed.

And by stat. 26 Geo. 2. c. 27. no action lies against the justice, who backs or indorses a warrant, but only against the justice who granted it.

Also by 43 Geo. 3. c. 141. in actions against justices of the peace for any conviction or levying any penalty; the plaintiff, besides any penalty levied, shall recover only 2*d.* damages, unless malice and want of probable cause be expressly alleged, nor shall the penalty be recovered if the plaintiff be proved to have been guilty of the offence.

JUSTICES OF PEACE WITHIN LIBERTIES, (justiciarii ad pacem infra libertates) are such in cities, and other corporate towns, as the others are of the county.

But if the king grant to a corporation, that the mayor and recorder, &c. shall be justices of peace within the city; if there be no words of exclusion, justices of the county have concurrent jurisdiction with them; and the king, notwithstanding his charter, may grant a commission of the peace specially in that city or county. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 47.

JUSTICES OF TRAIL-BASTON, were justices appointed by king Edward I. during his absence in the Scotch and French wars. They were so stiled, says Holingshead, of trailing or drawing the staff of justice; or for their summary proceeding, according to sir Edward Coke, who tells us, they were in a manner justices in eyre; and it is said, they had a baston, or staff delivered to them as the badge of their office, so that whoever was brought before them was traile ad baston, traditus ad baculum: whereupon they had the name of justices de trail-baston, or justiciarii ad trabendum offendentes ad baculum vel baston. Their office was to make inquisition through the kingdom on all officers and others, touching extortion, bribery, and such like grievances; of intruders into other men's lands, barretors, robbers, and breakers of the peace, and divers other offenders; by means of which inquisitions, some were punished with death, many by ransom, and the rest flying the realm, the land was quieted, and the king gained great riches towards the support of his wars. Mat. Westm. anno 1305. A commission of trail-baston was granted to Roger de Grey, and others his associates, in the reign of king Edw. 3. Spelm. Gloss.

JUSTICE SEAT, is the highest court that is held in a forest, and is always held before the lord chief justice in eyre of the forest, upon warning forty days before; and there fines are set for offences, and judgments given, &c. Manwood, cap. 24.

JUSTICIAR, or JUSTICIER, (Fr. justicier) a justice, or justicier. The whole jurisdiction of which is now distributed among the several courts of Westminster-hall. 2 Hawk. P. C. 6.

JUSTICIATUS, judicature, prerogative. Cowel.

JUSTICIES. The sheriff cannot hold plea of debt in his county-court, except for sums under 40*s*. F. N. B. 117. Kitch. 74.

But by a writ of justicies, which is a writ directed to and empowering the sheriff for the sake of dispatch, to do the same justice in his county court, as might otherwise be had at Westminster; he may hold plea in his county court of many real actions, and of all personal actions to any amount.

JUSTIFIABLE HOMICIDE. See Homicide.

JUSTIFICATION, (justificatio) is a maintaining or shewing good reason in court why one did speak or write such a thing which he is called to answer. Broke. And pleas in justification are to set forth some special matter whereby the party justifies what he hath done. Shep. Epit. 1041. 3 Salk. 218. 2 Mod. 70. 2 Nels. Abr. 1067. Cro. Elis. 667. 5 Rep. 85. 3 Black. Com. 306.

JUSTIFICATORS, (justificatores) are a kind of compurgators, or those that by oath justify the innocence, or oaths of others; as in the case of waging of law. Cowel. Blount.

JUSTIFYING BAIL. If a man is arrested and puts in bail, the defendant's attorney may except against the bail, as being, in his opinion, insufficient. In such case, the bail (or other bail in their place) must justify themselves in court, or before a commissioner (for taking bail) in the country, by swearing themselves house-keepers, and each of them to be worth double the sum for which they are bail, after payment of all their debts. Harrison. Tidd. Sellon.

JUSTITIA, was anciently used for a judge, and sometimes for a statute, law, or ordinance.

It is also often taken for jurisdiction, or the office of a judge. And the justitiarius was formerly called justitia, i. e. a judge. Cowel. Blount.

JUSTITIAS FACERE, is to hold plea of any thing. Ibid.

JUSTITIUM, a ceasing from the prosecution of law, and exercising justice in places judicial. Ibid.

K

KAIA, a key or wharf. Spelm. Cowel.

KAIAGIUM. The toll-money paid for loading or unloading goods at a key or wharf. Ibid.

KALENDÆ, rural chapters or conventions of the rural deans and parochial clergy, so called because formerly held on the kalends, or first day of every month. Ibid.

KALENDAR MONTH, consists of thirty or thirty-one days, (except February, which hath but eight and twenty, and in leap year nine and twenty) according to the kalendar; twelve of which months make a year. Stat. 16 Car. 2. c. 7. 24 Geo. 2. c. 23. 25 Geo. 2. c. 30.

KALENDS, the beginning of a month, &c. See Culenda.

KANTREF, one hundred towns, which the Welsh call cwmmwd, and signifies provincia or regio, and consisteth of twelve manors or circuits, and two townships. Cowel. Blount.

KARITE, CARITE, the religious called their best conventual drink, or their strong beer, by this name. Cowel.

KARLE, (Sax.) a man, and with any addition a servant or clown; a domestic servant. Cowel.

KARRATA FŒNI, a cart-load of hay. Cowel.

KAY. See Key.

KEBBARS, (or Cullers) the refuse of sheep drawn out of a flock. Cowel.

KEELAGE, (killagium) a privilege to demand money for the bottom of ships resting in a port or harbour. Cowel.

KEELMEN, mariners, seamen, &c. employed in the North on the collieries.

KEELS, to carry coals, &c.

KEEP. A strong tower or hold in the middle of any castle or fortification, something of the nature of that which is called a citadel. Cowel.

KEEPER OF THE FOREST, (custos forestæ) or chief warden of the forest, hath the principal government over all officers within the forest; and warns them to appear at the court of justice seat, on a general summons from the lord chief justice in eyre. Manwood, par. 1. p. 156.

KEEPER OF THE GREAT SEAL, (custos magni sigilli) is a lord by his office, stiled lord keeper of the great seal of England, and is of the king's privy council.

The lord keeper of the great seal, by statute 5 Eliz. c. 18. hath the same place, authority, pre-eminence, jurisdiction and execution of laws, as the lord chancellor of England hath, and he is constituted per traditionem magni sigilli, &c. and by taking his oath. 4 Inst. 87.

The lord chancellor, or lord keeper, is superior, in point of precedency, to every temporal lord. 3 Black. 71.

KEEPER OF THE PRIVY SEAL, (custos privati sigilli) is that officer through whose hands all charters, pardons, &c. pass, signed by the king, before they come to the great seal. 4 Inst. 55.

KEEPER OF THE TOUCH, 12 Hen. 6. 14. seems to be that officer in the king's mint, at this day called the Master of the Assay. Cowel. See Mint.

KENNETS, a sort of coarse Welsh cloth, mentioned in 3 Hen. 8. c. 6. Cowel.

KERHERE, signifies a custom to have a cart-way; or a commutation for the customary duty for carriage of the lord's goods. Cowel.

KERNALLARE DOMUM, (from Lat. crena, a notch) to build a house formerly with a wall or tower, kernelled with crannies or notches, for the better convenience of shooting arrows, and making other defence. Cowel. Blount.

KERNELLATUS, fortified or embatteled. Ibid.

KERNES, idle persons, vagabonds. Ord. Hiber. 31 Ed. 3. m. 11, 12. Ibid.

KEVERE, a cover or vessel used in a dairy house for milk or whey. Ibid.

KEY, (kaia & caya, Sax. leg, Teut. kay) sometimes quay, from the Fr. quai, a wharf to land or ship goods or wares at. Cowel.

KEYAGE, (kaiagium) the money or toll paid for loading or unloading wares at a key or wharf. Ibid.

KEYLES, or KEELS, (ciuli or ciules) a kind of long-boats of great antiquity, mentioned in stat. 23 Hen. 8. c. 18. Spelm. Cowel.

KEYING, five fells, or pelts, or sheepskins with their wool on them. Cowel.

KEYUS, KEYS, a guardian, warden, or keeper. And in the Isle of Man, the twenty-four chief commoners, who are, as it were, conservators of the liberties of the people, are called keys of the island. Ibid. See MAN, ISLE OF.

KICHELL. It was an old custom for godfathers and godmothers, every time their god-children asked them blessing, to give them a cake; which was called a god's kichell. Cowel.

KIDDER, a badger, or carrier of corn, dead victual, or other merchandize, up and down to sell. 5 Eliz. c. 12. 13 Eliz. cap. 25.

KIDDLE, KIDEL, or KEDEL, (kidellus) a dam, or open wear in a river, with a loop or narrow cut in it, accommodated for the laying of wheels or other engines to catch fish. 2 Inst. fol. 438. Cowel.

KIDNAPPING, is the forcible abduction or stealing away of a man, woman, or child, from their own country, and sending them into another. This is unquestionably a very heinous crime, as it robs the king of his subjects, banishes a man from his country, and may in its consequences, be productive of the most cruel and disagreeable hardships; and therefore, the common law of England has punished it with fine, imprisonment, and pillory (Raym. 474. 2 Show. 221. Skin. 47. Comb. 10.) And also the statute 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 7. though principally intended against pirates, has a clause that extends to prevent the leaving of such persons abroad, as are thus kidnapped or spirited away; by enacting, that "if any captain of a merchant vessel shall (during his "being abroad) force any person on shore, "or wilfully leave him behind, or refuse to "bring home all such men as he carried out, "if able and desirous to return, he shall suffer three months imprisonment."

Also where a child is stolen for the sake of its cloaths, it is the same species of felony, as if the cloaths were stolen without the child. But it cannot be considered a felony, where a child is stolen, and not deprived of its cloaths. This crime would in general, be an aggravated species of false imprisonment; but without referring it to that class of offences, stealing a child from its parents, is an act so shocking and horrid, that it would be considered the highest misdemeanor, punishable by fine, imprisonment, and pillory, upon the same principle on which it was decided to be a misdemeanor to steal a dead body from a grave. Chr. N. 4 Black. 218, 219.

KILDERKIN, the eighth part of an hogshead.

KILKETH, an ancient servile payment made by tenants in husbandry. Cowel.

KILLAGIUM, keelage. Cowel.

KILLING. See Homicide.

KILLYTH-STALLION, is where lords of manors were bound by custom to provide a stallion for the use of their tenants mares. Spelman's Gloss. Cowel.

KILTH, ac omnes annuales redditus de quadam consuetudine in, &c. vocat'. kilth. Pat. 7 Eliz. Cowel.

KINDRED, are persons of kin or related to each other. And there are three degrees of these in our law; one in the right line descending, another in the right line ascending, and the third in the collateral line.

Lineal consanguinity is that which subsists between persons, of whom one is descended in a direct line from the other, as between John Stiles and his father, grandfather, great-grandfather, and so upwards in the direct ascending line; or between John Stiles and his son, grandson, great-grandson, and so downwards in the direct descending line. Every generation, in this lineal direct consanguinity, constitutes a different degree, reckoning either upwards or downwards: the father of John Stiles is related to him in the first degree, and so likewise is his son; his grandsire and grandson in the second; his great-grandsire and great-grandson in the third. This is the only natural way of reckoning the degrees in the direct line, and therefore universally obtains, as well in the civil (Ff. 38. 10. 10.) and canon (Decretal. l. 4. tit. 14.), as in the common law (Co. Litt. 23.)

The doctrine of lineal consanguinity is sufficiently plain and obvious; but it is at the first view astonishing to consider the number of lineal ancestors which every man has, within no very great number of degrees; and so many different bloods is a man said to contain in his veins, as he hath lineal ancestors. Of these he hath two in the first ascending degree, his own parents; he hath four in the second, the parents of his father and the parents of his mother; he hath eight in the third, the parents of his two grandfathers and two grandmothers; and by the same rule of progression, he hath an hundred and twenty-eight in the seventh; a thousand and twenty-four in the tenth; and at the twentieth degree, or the distance of twenty generations, every man hath above a million of ancestors, as common arithmetic will demonstrate.* 2 Black. 202.

* This will seem surprising to those who are unacquainted with the increasing power of progressive numbers: but is palpably evident from the following table of a geometrical progressing, in which the first term is 2, and the denominator also 2: or, to speak more intelligibly, it is evident, for that each of us has two ancestors in the first degree; the number of whom is doubled at every remove, because each of our ancestors has also two immediate ancestors of his own.

KING, (from the Sax. Cyning, or Coning, a cunning or wise man,) is a monarch or potentate, that has the highest power and rule in the land. Bract. lib 1, c. 8.

And the supreme executive power of these kingdoms is vested by our laws in a single person, the king or queen; for it matters not to which sex the crown descends, but the person entitled to it, whether male or female, is immediately invested with all the ensigns, rights, and prerogatives of sovereign power, as is declared by stat. 1 Mariæ. st. 3, c. 1.

The executive power of the English nation being vested in a single person, by the general consent of the people, the evidence of which general consent is long and immemorial usage, it became necessary to the freedom and peace of the state, that a rule should be laid down, uniform, universal, and permanent; in order to mark out with precision, who is that single person, to whom are committed (in subservience to the law of the land) the care and protection of the community; and to whom, in return, the duty and allegiance of every individual are due. 1 Black. 190.

And according to Blackstone the grand fundamental maxim upon which the jus coronæ, or right of succession to the throne of these kingdoms, depends, is this: "that the crown is by common "law and constitutional custom, hereditary; and this in a manner peculiar to "itself: but that the right of inheritance "may from time to time be changed or "limited by act of parliament; under "which limitation the crown still continues hereditary."

First, it is in general hereditary, or descendible to the next heir on the death or demise of the last proprietor.

All regal governments must be either hereditary or elective; and as there is no instance wherein the crown of England has ever been asserted to be elective, except by the regicides at the infamous and unparalleled trial of K. Charles I. it must of consequence be hereditary. Yet this must not be intended to be a jure divino title to the throne: such a title may be allowed to have subsisted under the theocratic establishments of the children of Israel. But though the founders of our English monarchy might, perhaps, if they had thought proper, have made it an elective monarchy, yet they rather chose to establish originally a succession by inheritance. This has been acquiesced in by general consent, and ripened by degrees into common law; the very same title that every private man has to his own estate. Lands are not naturally descendible any more than thrones: but the law has thought proper, for the benefit and peace of the public, to establish hereditary succession in the one as well as the other. 1 Black. 192.

Secondly, it is hereditary in a manner peculiar to itself.

As to the particular mode of inheritance, it in general corresponds with the feodal path of descents, chalked out by the common law in the succession to landed estates, yet with one or two material exceptions. Like estates, the crown will descend lineally to the issue of the reigning monarch. As in common descents the preference of males to females, and the right of primogeniture among the males, are strictly adhered to. But among the females the crown descends by right of primogeniture to the eldest daughter only, and her issue, and not, as in common inheritances, to all the daughters at once; the evident necessity of a sole succession to the throne having occasioned the royal law of descents to depart from the common law in this respect; and therefore queen Mary on the death of her brother succeeded to the crown alone, and not in partnership with her sister Elizabeth. Again: the doctrine of representation prevails in the descent of the crown as it does in other inheritances, whereby the lineal descendants of any person deceased stand in the same place as their ancestor, if living, would have done. Lastly, on failure of lineal descendants the crown goes to the next collateral relations of the late king, provided they are lineally descended from the blood royal, that is, from that royal stock which originally acquired the crown. But herein there is no objection (as in the case of common descents) to the succession of a brother, an uncle, or other collateral relation of the half blood, that is, where the relationship proceeds not from the same couple of ancestors (which constitutes a kinsman of the whole blood) but from a single ancestor only; as when two persons are derived from the same father, and not from the same mother, or vice versa; provided only, that the one ancestor from whom both are descended be that from whose veins the blood royal is communicated to each.

Thirdly, this inheritance is subject to limitation by parliament.

The doctrine of hereditary right does by no means imply an indefeasible right to the throne, for it is in the breast of the supreme legislative authority of this kingdom, the king and both houses of parliament, to defeat this hereditary right; and, by particular entails, limitations, and provisions, to exclude the immediate heir, and vest the inheritance in any one else. This is strictly consonant to our laws and constitution, as may be gathered from the expression so frequently used in our statute-book, of "the king's majesty, his heirs and successors;" in which we may observe, that as the word "heirs" necessarily implies an inheritance or hereditary right, generally subsisting in the royal person, so the word "successors," distinctly taken, must imply that this inheritance may sometimes be broken through, or that there may be a successor, without being the heir, of the king. And this is so extremely reasonable, that without such a power, lodged somewhere, our polity would be very defective. For if the heir apparent should be a lunatic, an idiot, or otherwise incapable of reigning: miserable would be the condition of the nation if he were also incapable of being set aside. It is therefore necessary that this power should be lodged somewhere; and yet the inheritance, and regal dignity, would be very precarious indeed if this power were expressly and avowedly lodged in the hands of the subjects only, to be exerted whenever prejudice, caprice, or discontent should happen to take the lead. Consequently it can no where be so properly lodged as in the two houses of parliament, by and with the consent of the reigning king, who it is not to be supposed will agree to any thing improperly prejudicial to the rights of his own descendants. And therefore in the king, lords, and commons, in parliament assembled, our laws have expressly lodged it. 1 Black. 195, 196.

Fourthly, however the crown may be limited or transferred, it still retains its descendible quality, and becomes hereditary in the wearer of it. Hence in our law the king is said never to die, in his political capacity, though, in common with other men, he is subject to mortality in his natural; for immediately upon the natural death of the king, the kingly office survives in his successor.—For the right of the crown vests, eo instanti, upon his heir; either the hæres natus, if the course of descent remains unimpeached, or the hæres factus, if the inheritance be under any particular settlement. So that there can be no inter-regnum, but, as sir Matthew Hale (1 Hist. P. C. 61,) observes, the right of sovereignty is fully invested in the successor by the very descent of the crown. (1 Hist. P. C. 61.)

Thus the statutes passed in the first year after the restoration of Car. 2, are always called the acts of the twelfth year of his reign; and all the other legal proceedings of that reign are reckoned from the year 1648, and not from 1660. And therefore, however acquired, it becomes in him absolutely hereditary, unless by the rules of the limitation it is otherwise ordered and determined. In the same manner as landed estates are by the law hereditary, or descendible to the heirs of the owner; but still there exists a power by which the property of those lands may be transferred to another person. If this transfer be made simply and absolutely the lands will be hereditary in the new owner, and descend to his heir at law; but if the transfer be clogged with any limitations, conditions, or entails, the lands must descend in that channel, so limited and prescribed, and no other. 1 Black. 196.

The first instance in point of time wherein the parliament has asserted or exercised this right of altering and limiting the succession to the crown since the reigns of Hen. 4, Hen. 7, Hen. 8, 2. Mary, and 2. Eliz. in which that right had been before exercised, is the famous bill of exclusion, which raised such a ferment in the latter end of the reign of Cha. 2. The purport of this bill was to have set aside the king's brother and presumptive heir, the duke of York, from the succession, on the score of his being a papist; it passed the house of commons, but was rejected by the lords, the king having also declared beforehand that he never would be brought to consent to it. And from this transaction we may collect two things, first, that the crown was universally acknowledged to be hereditary, and the inheritance indefeasible, unless by parliament, else it had been needless to prefer such a bill. Secondly, that the parliament had a power to have defeated the inheritance, else such a bill had been ineffectual. The commons acknowledged the hereditary right then subsisting, and the lords did not dispute the power, but merely the propriety of an exclusion. However, as the bill took no effect, king James II. succeeded to the throne of his ancestors, and might have enjoyed it during the remainder of his life but for his own infatuated conduct, which (with other concurring circumstances) brought on the Revolution in 1688. 1 Black. 210.

The ground upon which that memorable event proceeded was an entirely new case in politics, which had never before happened in our history, the abdication of the reigning monarch, and the vacancy of the throne thereupon. It was not a defeasance of the right of succession, and a new limitation of the crown, by the king and both houses of parliament; it was the act of the nation alone, upon a conviction that there was no king in being. For in a full assembly of the lords and commons, met in a convention upon the supposition of this vacancy, both houses (Comm. Journ. 7 Feb. 1688,) came to this resolution, "That K. James 2, "having endeavoured to subvert the constitution of the kingdom, by breaking "the original contract between the king "and people, and by the advice of jesuits, "and other wicked persons, having violated "the fundamental laws, and having withdrawn himself out of this kingdom, has "abdicated the government, and that the "throne is thereby vacant." Thus ended at once, by this sudden and unexpected vacancy of the throne, the old line of succession. This abdication did not only affect the person of the king himself, but also all his heirs, and rendered the throne absolutely and completely vacant. 1 Black. 210.

It is worthy of observation that the convention in this their judgment avoided with great wisdom the wild extremes into which the visionary theories of some zealous republicans would have led them. They held that this misconduct of James amounted to an endeavour to subvert the constitution, and not to an actual subversion, or total dissolution, of the government, which would have reduced the society almost to a state of nature; would have levelled all distinctions of honour, rank, offices, and property; would have annihilated the sovereign power, and in consequence have repealed all positive laws; and would have left the people at liberty to have erected a new system of state upon a new foundation of polity. They therefore very prudently voted it to amount to no more than an abdication of the government, and a consequent vacancy of the throne; whereby the government was allowed to subsist, though the executive magistrate was gone, and the kingly office to remain, though king James was no longer king. (Law of forfeit. 118, 119.) And thus the constitution was kept entire; which upon every sound principle of government must otherwise have fallen to pieces had so principal and constituent a part as the royal authority been abolished, or even suspended.

The vacancy of the throne being once established, the rest that was then done followed almost of course. For if the throne be at any time vacant, (which may happen by other means besides that of abdication, as if all the blood-royal should fail, without any successor appointed by parliament,) if a vacancy by any means whatsoever should happen, the right of disposing of this vacancy seems naturally to result from the lords and commons, the trustees and representatives of the nation. For there are no other hands in which it can so properly be intrusted; and there is a necessity of its being intrusted somewhere, else the whole frame of government must be dissolved and perish.

The preamble to the bill of rights expressly declares, that "the lords spiritual and temporal, and commons, assembled at Westminster lawfully, fully and freely represent "all the estates of the people of this realm." The lords are not less the trustees and guardians of their country, than the members of the house of commons. And it was justly said, when the royal prerogatives were suspended during his majesty's illness, "that the two "houses of parliament were the organs by "which the people expressed their will."

The lords and commons having therefore determined this main fundamental article, that there was a vacancy of the throne, they proceeded to fill up that vacancy in such manner as they judged the most proper: and this was done by their declaration of 12 Feb. 1688, (Com. Journ. 12 Feb. 1688) in the following manner: "That "William and Mary, prince and princess "of Orange, be, and be declared, king "and queen, to hold the crown and royal "dignity during their lives, and the life "of the survivor of them; and that the "sole and full exercise of the regal power "be only in and executed by the said "prince of Orange, in the names of the "said prince and princess during their joint "lives, and after their deceases the said "crown and royal dignity to be to the "heirs of the body of the said princess; "and for default of such issue to the "princess Anne of Denmark, and the heirs "of her body; and for default of such "issue to the heirs of the body of the "said prince of Orange."

They thus settled the crown, first on king William, and queen Mary, king James's eldest daughter, for their joint lives; then on the survivor of them, and then on the issue of queen Mary: upon failure of such issue it was limited to the princess Anne, king James's second daughter, and her issue; and lastly, on failure of that, to the issue of king William, who was the grandson of Charles 1, and nephew as well as son-in-law to James 2, being the son of Mary his eldest sister. This settlement included all the protestant posterity of Charles 1, except such other issue as James might at any time have, which was totally omitted through fear of a popish succession. And this order of succession took effect accordingly.

These three princes, therefore, William, queen Mary, and queen Anne, did not take the crown by hereditary right or descent, but by way of donation, or purchase, as the lawyers call it, by which they mean any method of acquiring an estate otherwise than by descent. The new settlement did not merely consist in excluding James, and the person pretending to be the prince of Wales, and then suffering the crown to descend in the old hereditary channel: for the usual course of descent was in some instances broken through; and yet the convention still kept it in their eye, and paid a great, though not total, regard to it. If no abdication had happened, and king James had left no other issue than his two daughters queen Mary and queen Anne, it would have stood thus: queen Mary and her issue; queen Anne and her issue; king William and his issue. Therefore these princes were successively in possession of the crown by a title different from the usual course of descent.

Towards the end of king William's reign, when all hopes of any surviving issue from any of these princes died with the duke of Gloucester, the king and parliament again exerted their power of limiting and appointing the succession, in order to prevent another vacancy of the throne, which must have ensued upon their deaths; as no further provision was made at the Revolution than for the issue of queen Mary, queen Anne, and king William. The parliament had previously by the stat. of 1 Will. & Mar. st. 2, c. 2, enacted, that "every person who "should be reconciled to, or hold communion "with, the see of Rome, should profess "the popish religion, or should marry a "papist, should be excluded and for ever "incapable to inherit, possess, or enjoy "the crown; and that in such case the "people should be absolved from their allegiance, and the crown should descend "to such persons, being protestants, as "would have inherited the same, in case "the person so reconciled, holding communion, professing, or marrying, were "naturally dead." To act therefore consistently with themselves, and at the same time pay as much regard to the old hereditary line as their former resolutions would admit, they turned their attention to the princess Sophia, electress and duchess dowager of Hanover. For, upon the impending extinction of the protestant posterity of Charles the first, the old law of regal descent directed them to recur to the descendants of James the first; and the princess Sophia, being the youngest daughter of Elizabeth queen of Bohemia, who was the daughter of James the first, was the nearest of the ancient blood royal, who was not incapacitated by professing the popish religion. On her therefore, and the heirs of her body, being protestants, the remainder of the crown, expectant on the death of king William and queen Anne without issue, was settled by stat. 12 & 13 W. 3. c. 2. And at the same time it was enacted, that "whosoever should hereafter come to the "possession of the crown should join in "the communion of the church of England "as by law established."

These several actual limitations, from the time of Henry 4 to the present, clearly prove the power of the king and parliament to new-model or alter the succession. And it is now made highly penal to dispute it: for by the stat. 6 Ann. c. 7, it is enacted, that if any person maliciously, advisedly, and directly, shall maintain, by writing or printing, that the kings of this realm with the authority of parliament are not able to make laws to bind the crown and the descent thereof, he shall be guilty of high treason; or if he maintains the same by only preaching, teaching, or advised speaking, he shall incur the penalties of a præmunire.

The princess Sophia dying before queen Anne, the inheritance thus limited descended on her son and heir king George the first; and, having on the death of the queen taken effect in his person, from him it descended to his late majesty king George the second; and from him to his grandson and heir, his present majesty, king George the third.

Hence it is easy to collect, that the title to the crown is at present hereditary, though not quite so absolutely hereditary as formerly: and the common stock or ancestor, from whom the descent must be derived, is also different. Formerly the common stock was king Egbert; then William the conqueror; afterwards in James the first's time the two common stocks united, and so continued till the vacancy of the throne in 1688: now it is the princess Sophia, in whom the inheritance was vested by the new king and parliament. Formerly the descent was absolute, and the crown went to the next heir without any restriction: but now, upon the new settlement, the inheritance is conditional; being limited to such heirs only, of the body of the princess Sophia, as are protestant members of the church of England, and are married to none but protestants. 1 Black. 217.

KING, ACTS RELATING TO.] By 26 Hen. 8, c. 1, the king shall be deemed the only supreme head on earth of the church of England.

By 1 Mar. stat 3. c. 1, the kingly office may be exercised by male or female.

By 1 Eliz. c. 1, foreign authority was abolished, and ecclesiastical jurisdiction annexed to the crown; and maintenance of foreign authority is for the first offence forfeiture of goods and chattels, or a year's imprisonment, for the second a præmunire, and the third high treason.

By 1 Ann. stat. 1. c. 7, no grant of crown lands shall be made unless for 31 years, or three lives, the tenant to be punishable for waste, and the ancient rent reserved.

But grants of repairing or building leases may be in like manner of such tenements for fifty years, or three lives. Ibid.

No grant of office shall cease on the demise of the sovereign, but continue for six months after, unless avoided by the successor, nor shall any writ, plea, or process, be discontinued thereby. Ibid. c. 8.

No commission of assise, oyer and terminer, writs of admittance, si non omnis, assistance, or commission of the peace, shall be determined by the sovereign's death, but continue for six months after, unless avoided by the successor; nor shall any writs or process be discontinued thereby; and this act is to extend to Ireland, Jersey, Guernsey, and America. Ibid.

By 6 Ann. c. 7, the privy council, and places of the great officers of state, shall not be dissolved by the death of the sovereign, but continue for six months, unless sooner discharged.

The great seal, and other public seals in being, shall continue to be the respective seals of the successor until order to the contiary. Ibid.

By 2 Geo. 3. c. 1, the king may grant an annuity of 100,000*l. per ann.* to the queen, to commence at his demise, payable quarterly out of the hereditary and other revenues carried to the aggregate fund, and in case of deficiency, to be made good in preference to all future charges thereon.

By 5 Geo. 3. c. 27, the king may appoint a guardian to his successor, if the crown descends to any of his children under eighteen years of age. See Regent.

By 15 Geo. 3. c. 53. Buckingham House was settled on the queen in lieu of Somerset House, to be called the queen's royal palace.

By 18 Geo. 3. c. 31, an annuity of 60,000*l.* is settled on the bishop of Osnaburgh, and his five next brothers, and the survivor of them, to commence on the king's demise, payable quarterly tax free, out of the hereditary duties (now part of the consolidated fund, 27 Geo. 3. c. 13,) but none of them to have more than 15,000*l. per ann.* each.

An annuity of 30,000*l.* to the king's five eldest daughters, and the survivor of them, in the same manner, and upon the death or marriage of any one with a portion of 40,000*l.* her share to go to the others; and if a second die, or marry with a like portion, her share to go to the other three; and if a third die, or marry with a like portion, the other two to have 20,000*l. per ann.* and if either of them die or marry, the other to have 12,000*l. per ann.* which is to cease on her death or marriage. Ibid.

By 22 Geo. 3. c. 82, the following offices were suppressed. The office of secretary of state for the colonies; the board of trade and plantations; the lords of police in Scotland; the board of works; the principal officers of the great wardrobe, and of the jewel office; the treasurer of the chamber: the cofferer of the household; the six clerks of the board of green cloth; the paymaster of the pensions; the offices of master of the harriers and fox hounds, and of the stag hounds.

Any similar office hereafter established shall be deemed a new office. The court of verge, with all its lawful jurisdictions and powers, is preserved. His majesty's buildings and gardens shall be under the direction of a surveyor or comptroller, to be appointed by his majesty. Ibid.

Estimates of new buildings or repairs exceeding 1000*l.* must be laid before the lord chamberlain, and by him referred to the treasury, who are to authorize the execution thereof. Ibid.

The treasury before payment for any such works may order the same to be surveyed. Where expences shall be under 1000*l.* vouchers shall be produced to the lord chamberlain. Clerks and workmen in the royal palaces shall be paid monthly; and no new works in his majesty's parks or gardens above 500*l.* shall be undertaken without an order from his majesty. Ibid.

Furniture, plate, and moveables, shall be under the management of the lord chamberlain. Ibid.

Work formerly under the direction of the great wardrobe shall be executed by the surveyor of the buildings; and the business heretofore done by the board of trade shall be executed by a committee of the privy council. Ibid.

No pensions above 300*l. per ann.* to one person, nor more than 600*l. per ann.* in the whole shall be granted in one year; lists whereof are to be delivered to parliament in 20 days after the beginning of each session, till the pension list is reduced to 90,000*l.* and then it is not to exceed 5000*l.* more; nor shall any pensions be then granted to one person of more than 1200*l. per ann.* unless to the royal family, or on a parliamentary address. Ibid.

This is not to extend to persons who have served the crown in foreign courts, if they have no other place. Ibid.

All pensions on the civil list shall be paid at the exchequer; but the treasurer may with the king's consent take away from the private list the names and pensions of persons therein entered, and he may return into the exchequer any pension, without the name of the pensioner, on swearing that it is not for a member of the house of commons, or to corrupt elections, which pension shall be paid to his order; but when any secret pension shall continue in the list more than five years, oath of the party's life shall be made. Ibid.

The payment of home secret service money is restricted to 10,000*l. per ann.* and foreign secret service money is to be sent to the minister or commander abroad, who shall account for such money within a year after their arrival in Great Britain, and swear to the disposition thereof; the secretaries of state making payment of any such secret service money shall be sworn as to the disposal thereof. No stated sum shall be allowed for secret service money to the secretaries of state, but the same shall be annexed to their salaries. Sums issued for any special service shall be entered in a book. Grants of royal bounty more than once in eight years shall be deemed pensions. The payments of the civil list revenues shall be divided into regular classes. No pension shall be paid out of course. Salaries in arrear for two years shall be extinguished. Fees payable shall be disposed of by the treasury. Books shall be kept for the charges of each class. Ibid.

By 25 Geo. 3, c. 61, all bounties already given by his majesty to persons in low and indigent circumstances, or which shall hereafter be given, may continue to be paid by the lord steward, the lord chamberlain, the master of the horse, the master of the robes, and the lords of the treasury.

By 32 Geo. 3, c. 13, the king may grant to the duke and duchess of York annuities not exceeding 18,000*l.* and 8000*l.* to the duchess, to commence from the decease of the duke.

By 35 Geo. 3, c. 130, his majesty was authorized to grant to the princess of Wales an annuity of 50,000*l.* from the decease of the prince, payable quarterly out of the revenues, for the support of the household, to be free from taxes; paid without fee, and be in bar of dower.

By 39 Geo. 3, c. 30, his majesty was enabled to settle on the five royal princesses Augusta, Elizabeth, Mary, Sophia, and Amelia, instead of the annuity mentioned in 18 Geo. 3, c. 31, an annuity of 30,000*l.* to commence from the demise of his majesty, and to be payable out of that part of the hereditary revenues of the crown, as by 27 Geo. 3, c. 13, were made part of the consolidated fund; and on the marriage of any one or more of the princesses, with portions of 40,000*l.* each, the whole annuity to go to the remaining unmarried princesses.

By 39 and 40 Geo. 3, c. 88, none of the provisions in stat. 1 Ann. st. 1, c. 7, s. 5. 1 Geo. 3, c. 1, s. 3, or 34 Geo. 3, c. 75, relating to crown lands, shall from the time of the king's birth extend to estates purchased out of monies from the privy purse, or not appropriated to any public service, nor to lands coming to his majesty, his heirs, or successors, from any person not being kings or queens of the realm. s. 1.

Copyholds or leaseholds so purchased, or to be purchased, to be vested in trustees for the crown. s. 2, 3.

His majesty, his heirs, and successors, may sell or devise such estates, in like manner as his subjects may like estates belonging to them: and trustees shall convey such estates as the crown shall direct. s. 4.

If no disposition of such estates be made by the crown, or a disposition be made which shall not exhaust the whole, the estate undisposed of shall descend as if this act had not been made, subject to the provisions herein contained, and the restrictions of the said acts as to such as are freeholds. s. 5.

Estates so vested in the crown, or in its trustees, shall be subject to all taxes, and taxes charged upon such estates shall be paid out of the privy purse. s. 6, 7.

Her present majesty, or any queen of the realm, during the joint lives of their majesties, by deed, or by will, may dispose of estates purchased by, or in trust for, or that may vest in her majesty, or in trust for her, and also bequeath all her chattels and personal estate as if she were sole. s. 8, 9.

But this act is not to enable her majesty or any queen consort, to dispose of any palace or lands belonging to the king, in right of the crown, vested in her for life; or to make any grant but such as she might make if sole. s. 9.

Monies for the privy purse, or not appropriated to any public service or effects which shall not come to the crown, shall be deemed personal estate, and subject to disposition by will, or writing under the sign-manual, and shall be liable to all debts payable out of the privy purse—in default of such disposition such personal estate shall go as before this act was made. s. 10.

Any will made by his majesty before this act shall be valid. s. 11.

And the crown may by warrants under the sign-manual direct the execution of any trusts to which lands becoming vested by escheat would have been liable, in case they had not escheated, and restore such lands, or reward persons discovering such escheats. s. 12.

By 42 Geo. 3, c. 48, his majesty was authorized to grant to the duke of Sussex and the duke of Cambridge annuities of 12,000*l.* each, payable quarterly out of the consolidated fund.

By 43 Geo. 3, c. 26, his majesty was authorized to grant to the prince of Wales an annuity of 60,000*l.* payable quarterly out of the consolidated fund.

By 46 Geo. 3, c. 145, his majesty may by his sign-manual grant the following annuities, viz. to the dukes of Clarence, Kent, Cumberland, Sussex, and Cambridge, 6000*l.* each during pleasure; to the princess Charlotte of Wales 7000*l.* during the life of the king and prince of Wales; to the duchess dowager of Gloucester 4000*l.* during pleasure; to the duke of Gloucester 14,000*l.* during pleasure, in lieu of 8000*l.* under 18 Geo. 3, c. 31; and to the princess Sophia of Gloucester 5000*l.* during pleasure, in lieu of 4000*l.* by the same act; and 2000*l.* additional after the death of the duchess of Gloucester, all payable quarterly at the exchequer out of the consolidated fund. s. 1, 2.

By 47 Geo. 3, sess. 1, c. 39, the annuities charged by 46 Geo. 3, c. 145, on the consolidated fund to the duke of Gloucester, and the princess Sophia of Gloucester, shall be payable during their lives. s. 1.

And all annuities granted to the other branches of the royal family under 18 Geo. 3, c. 31, shall be payable during their respective lives. s. 2.

By 47 Geo. 3, sess. 2, c. 24, in amendment of 39 Geo. 3, c. 88, in cases where his majesty shall become entitled to freehold or copyhold premises by forfeiture, he may direct the execution of any trusts or purposes wherein they may have been directed to be applied, and may make grants thereof.

By 47 Geo. 3, sess. 2, c. 45, his majesty is enabled to grant to her majesty the queen a capital messuage, called Frogmore, and divers lands and hereditaments, in the parishes of New Windsor and Old Windsor, in the county of Berks, and a piece of land in Wyrothsbury, in the county of Bucks, for a term of 99 years, if her majesty and the princesses, her five younger daughters, or any of them, shall so long live, for and in lieu of her majesty's present term and interests therein, and also to make exchanges.

By 48 Geo. 3, c. 59, his majesty was enabled to settle an annuity of 10,000*l.* on the duchess of Brunswick Wolfenbuttle. And by 50 Geo. 3. c. . an annuity of 7,000*l.* on the duke of Brunswick.

KING's COUNSEL. His majesty's counsel learned in the law are usually selected from barristers, and serjeants at law, the two principal of whom are called his attorney and solicitor-general. These king's council, who are now the sworn servants of the crown, with a standing salary, answer in some measure to the advocates of the revenue, advocati fisci, among the Romans: for they must not be employed in any cause against the crown without special license.

A custom has also of late years prevailed of granting letters patent of precedence to such barristers as the crown thinks proper to honour with that mark of distinction; whereby they are entitled to such rank and pre-audience (see Pre-audience) as are assigned in their respective patents; sometimes next after the king's attorney-general, but usually next after his majesty's counsel then being. These (as well as the queen's attorney and solicitor-general, Seld. tit. hon. 1. 6, 7,) rank promiscuously with the king's counsel, and together with them sit within the bar of their respective courts, but receive no salaries, and are not sworn, and therefore are at liberty to be retained in causes against the crown.

KING's GRANTS. The king's grants are matters of public record: for the king's excellency is so high in the law that no freehold may be given to the king, nor derived from him, but by matter of record. And to this end a variety of offices are erected, communicating in a regular subordination one with another, through which all the king's grants must pass, and be transcribed and inrolled, that the same may be narrowly inspected by his officers, who will inform him if any thing contained therein is improper, or unlawful to be granted. These grants, whether of lands, honours, liberties, franchises, or aught besides, are contained in charters, or letters patent, that is, open letters, literæ patentes, so called because they are not sealed up, but exposed to open view, with the great seal pendent at the bottom, and are usually directed or addressed by the king to all his subjects at large; and therein they differ from certain other letters of the king, sealed also with his great seal, but directed to particular persons, and for particular purposes; which, therefore, not being proper for public inspection, are closed up, and sealed on the outside, and are thereupon called writs close, literæ clausæ, and are recorded in the close rolls, in the same manner as the others are in the patent rolls. 2 Black. 346.

KING's HOUSEHOLD. See statute 22 Geo. 3, c. 82, under head King, acts relating to, and King's Revenue.

KING's PALACE. The limits of the king's palace at Westminster extend from Charing Cross to Westminster Hall, and shall have such privileges as the ancient palaces. Stat. 28 Hen. 8. See Misprisions. Palaces.

KING's REVENUE. The king's revenue is either ordinary or extraordinary; 1st. The ORDINARY REVENUE is such as has either subsisted time out of mind in the crown, or else has been granted by parliament by way of purchase or exchange for such of the king's inherent hereditary revenues as were found inconvenient to the subject. 2ndly, The EXTRAORDINARY REVENUE consists of those taxes authorized by parliament to be raised and levied upon the subject, which are now carried to and compose what is called the consolidated fund, for which see title Funds.

As to the ordinary revenue of the crown great part thereof will appear to consist of what lords of manors and other subjects look upon to be their own absolute inherent rights, because they are and have been vested in them and their ancestors for ages, though in reality originally derived from the grants of our ancient kings. 1 Black. 281.

1st. The first of the king's ordinary revenues is of an ecclesiastical kind, viz. the custody of the temporalities of bishops till such time as a successor is appointed, with power of taking to himself all the intermediate profits, without any account to the successor, and with the right of presenting (which the crown very frequently exercises) to such benefices and other preferments as fall within the time of vacation. Stat. 17 Edw. 2, c. 14. F. N. B. 32.

This revenue of the king, which was formerly very considerable, is now by a customary indulgence almost reduced to nothing; for at present, as soon as the new bishop is consecrated and confirmed, he usually receives the restitution of his temporalities quite entire, and untouched, from the king *; and at the same time does homage to his sovereign; and then, and not sooner, he has a fee-simple in his bishopric, and may maintain an action for the profits. Co. Litt. 67. 341.

2. The king is entitled to a corody, as the law calls it, out of every bishopric, that is, to send one of his chaplains to be maintained by the bishop or to have a pension allowed him till the bishop, promote him to a benefice. F. N. B. 230. This is now fallen into total disuse, though sir Matthew Hale says that it is due of common right, and that no prescription will discharge it. Notes on F. N. B. above cited.

3. The king also is entitled to all the tithes arising in extra-parochial places. 2 Inst. 647.

4. The next branch consists in the first-fruits and tenths of all spiritual preferments in the kingdom. See First-fruits.

These were originally a part of the papal usurpations over the clergy of this kingdom, but in the reign of Henry 8, when the papal power was abolished, and the king was declared the head of the church of England, this revenue was annexed to the crown by stat. 26 Hen. 8, c. 3, (confirmed by stat. 1 Eliz. c. 4,) and a new valor beneficiorum was then made, by which the clergy are at present rated.

This stat. of 26 Hen. 8. c. 3, enacted that commissioners should be appointed in every diocese, who should certify the value of every ecclesiastical benefice and preferment in the respective dioceses; and according to this valuation, the first-fruits and tenths were to be collected and paid in future. This valor beneficiorum is what is commonly called the king's books; a transcript of which is given in Ecton's Thesaurus, and Bacon's Liber Regis.

5. The next branch of the king's ordinary revenue consists in the rents and profits of the demesne lands of the crown.

6. The advantages which used to arise to the king from the profits of his military tenures, to which most lands in the kingdom were subject till the statute 12 Car. 2, c. 24, which in great measure abolished them all, was also one of the ordinary branches of the royal revenue.

7. A seventh branch also formerly arose from wine licenses; or the rents payable to the crown by such persons as were licensed to sell wine by retail throughout England, except in a few privileged places. But this revenue was abolished by the stat. 30 Geo. 2, c. 19, and an annual sum of upwards of 7000*l.* per annum, issuing out of the stamp duties settled on the crown in its stead.

8. An eighth branch of the king's ordinary revenue is usually reckoned to consist in the profits arising from his forests. 1 Jones, 267—298.

9. The profits arising from the king's ordinary courts of justice make a ninth branch of his revenue. And these consist not only in fines imposed upon offenders, forfeitures of recognizances, and amercements levied upon defaulters, but also in certain fees due to the crown in a variety of legal matters, as for setting the great seal to charters, original writs, and other forensic proceedings, and for permitting fines to be levied of lands in order to bar entails, or otherwise to ensure their title. These in process of time have been almost all granted out to private persons, or else appropriated to certain particular uses; so that though our law proceedings are still loaded with their payment, very little of them is now returned into the king's exchequer, for a part of whose royal maintenance they were originally intended. All future grants of them, however, by the stat. 1 Ann. st. 1. c. 7, are to endure for no longer time than the prince's life who grants them.

10. A tenth branch of the king's ordinary revenue, said to be grounded on the consideration of his guarding and protecting the seas from pirates and robbers, is the right to royal fish, which are whale and sturgeon; and these, when either thrown ashore, or caught near the coast, are the property of the king on account of their superior excellence. And this right being the prerogatives of the kings of Denmark and dukes of Normandy, is expressly claimed and allowed in the statute de prærogativa regis. (Plowd. 315. Stiernh. de jure Sueonum, lib. 2, c. 8. Gr. coustom. cap. 17. 17 Edw. 2, c. 11.) And the most ancient treatises of law now extant make mention of it, though they seem to have made a distinction between whale and sturgeon.—Bracton. l. 3. c. 3. Britton. c. 17. Fleta. l. 1. c. 45 & 46. Memorand. Scacch. H. 24 Edw. 1. 37, prefixed to Maynard's year book of Edward 2.

11. Another maritime revenue, and founded partly upon the same reason, is that of shipwrecks, which are also declared to be the king's property by the same prerogative stat. 17 Edw. 2, c. 11, and were so long before, at the common law, upon general principles of policy and convenience; for if every person was permitted to carry home what he found upon the sea-coast, the true owner would stand a very poor chance of recovering back his property: therefore, for the benefit of the owner, the law places it in the custody of the sheriff or a public officer of the crown, where it will be preserved safely and honestly, and to whom the owner is directed to make inquiries for the property he has lost.—And at a time when a rightful claimant is despaired of, it is very properly applied to the augmentation of the public revenue.

12. A twelfth branch of the royal revenue, the right to mines, has its original from the king's prerogative of coinage, in order to supply him with materials; and therefore those mines, which are properly royal, and to which the king is entitled when found, are only those of silver and gold. 2 Inst. 577. Plowd. 336.

13. To the same original may in part be referred the revenue of treasure-trove, (derived from the French word, trover, to find) called in Latin thesaurus inventus, which is where any money or coin, gold, silver, plate, or bullion, is found hidden in the earth, or other private place, the owner thereof being unknown; in which case the treasure belongs to the king: but if he that hid it be known, or afterwards found out, the owner and not the king is entitled to it. 3 Inst. 132. Dalt. of Sheriffs, c. 16.

14. Waifs, bona waviata, are goods stolen, and waived or thrown away by the thief in his flight, for fear of being apprehended. These are given to the king by the law, as a punishment upon the owner for not himself pursuing the felon, and taking away his goods from him; and therefore if the party robbed do his diligence immediately to follow and apprehend the thief, (which is called making fresh suit,) or do convict him afterwards, or procure evidence to convict him, he shall have his goods again. Cro. Eliz. 694. Finch. L. 212.

15. Estrays are such valuable animals as are found wandering in any manor or lordship, and no man knoweth the owner of them, in which case the law gives them to the king as the general owner and lord paramount of the soil, in recompense for the damage which they may have done therein, and they now most commonly belong to the lord of the manor by special grant from the crown.

16. The next branch of the king's ordinary revenue consists in forfeitures of lands and goods for offences and deodands.

17. Another branch of the king's ordinary revenue arises from escheats of lands, which happen upon the defect of heirs to succeed to the inheritance; whereupon they in general revert to and vest in the king, who is esteemed, in the eye of the law, the original proprietor of all the lands in the kingdom.

18. The last branch of the king's ordinary revenue, consists in the custody of idiots. For which see Idiots and Lunatics.

This is a short view of the king's ordinary revenue, or the proper patrimony of the crown; which was very large formerly, and capable of being increased to a magnitude truly formidable. But this hereditary land revenue, by a series of improvident management, is sunk almost to nothing; and the casual profits arising from the other branches of the census regalis, are likewise almost all of them alienated from the crown. In order to supply the deficiencies of which, we are now obliged to have recourse to new methods of raising money, unknown to our early ancestors; which methods constitute the king's EXTRAORDINARY REVENUE. For, the public patrimony being got into the hands of private subjects, it is but reasonable that private contributions should supply the public service. Individuals being, in common reason, bound to contribute a portion of their private gains, in order to support that government, and reward that magistracy, which protects them in the enjoyment of their respective properties; who, when properly taxed, contribute only some part of their property, in order to enjoy the rest. 1 Black. 307.

These taxes, which are raised upon the subject, and compose the king's extraordinary revenue, are carried to and form what is called the consolidated fund.

This revenue is subject to the payment of the interest of the public debt and other national charges. But, before any part of the fund can be applied to such purposes, it stands mortgaged by parliament to raise an annual sum for the maintenance of the king's household and the civil list. For his present majesty having, soon after his accession, spontaneously signified his consent, that his own hereditary revenues might be so disposed of, as might best conduce to the utility and satisfaction of the public; and having graciously accepted the limited sum of 800,000*l. per annum* for the support of his civil list; the said hereditary and other revenues (thus amounting to one million or more) were carried into and made a part of what was at that time called the aggregate fund, since converted into *the consolidated fund, and that fund was charged (stat. 1 Geo. 3. c. 1.) with the payment of the whole annuity to the crown of 800,000*l.* which being found insufficient, was increased in 1777 by 17 Geo. 3. c. 21. to 900,000*l. per annum*, since which, a further sum of 60,000*l.* has been added to the civil list, by 44 Geo. 3. c. 80. Hereby the revenues themselves, being put under the same care and management as the other branches of the public patrimony, produce more and are better collected than heretofore; and the public thereby gain near 100,000*l. per annum* by the disinterested conduct of his majesty.†

The expences defrayed by the civil list are those that in any shape relate to civil government; as, the expences of the royal

* By 27 Geo. 3. c. 13. the 800,000*l.* by 1 Geo. 3. c. 1. and 100,000*l.* by 17 Geo. 3. c. 21. payable out of the aggregate fund, shall be paid out of the consolidated fund.

† The revenue of the commonwealth under Cromwell, was upwards of 1,500,000*l.* which is a striking instance to prove, that the burdens of the people are not necessarily lightened by a change in the government. 2 Sinc. Hist. Rev. xiv.

household; the revenues allotted to the judges, previous to the year 1758; all salaries to officers of state, and every of the king's servants; the appointments to foreign embassadors; the maintenance of the queen and royal family; the king's private expences, or privy purse; and other very numerous outgoings, as secret service money, pensions, and other bounties: which sometimes have so far exceeded the revenues appointed for that purpose, that application has been made to parliament to discharge the debts contracted on the civil list.

And by 44 Geo. 3. c. 80 for the prevention of the accumulation of debt on the civil list in future, an account of the accumulation of arrears in any of the classes of the civil list, shall be laid before parliament within one month after the same shall have arisen if sitting: or if not within the first 14 days of the next session.

KING OF THE MINSTRELS, at Tutbury in com. Staff. His power and privileges appears by a charter of Rich. II. confirmed by Hen. VI. in the 21st year of his reign, to be to licence trumpeters and other minstrels. Cowel. Blount.

KING'S BENCH, (bancus regius) from the Sax. banca, a bench or form.

The court of king's bench is so called because the king used formerly to sit there in person (4 Inst. 73.), (the stile of the court still being coram ipso rege) is the supreme court of common law in the kingdom; consisting of a chief justice and three puisne justices, who are by the proffices, the sovereign conservators of the peace and supreme coroners of the land. Yet, though the king himself used to sit in this court, and still is supposed so to do; he did not, neither by law is he empowered (Dial. de Scacch. l. 1. c. 4. 4 Burr. 851.) to determine any cause or motion, but by the mouth of his judges, to whom he hath committed his whole judicial authority (4 Inst. 71.)

This court (which as we have said) is the remnant of the aula regia, is not, nor can be, from the very nature and constitution of it, fixed to any certain place, but may follow the king's court wherever it goes; for which reason all process issuing out of this court in the king's name is returnable "ubcunque fuerimus in Anglia." It hath, indeed, for some centuries past, usually sate at Westminster, being an antient palace of the crown; but might remove with the king to York or Exeter, if he thought proper to command it. And we find that, after Edward I. had conquered Scotland, it actually sate at Roxburgh (M. 20. 21 Edw. 1. Hale's Hist. C. L. 210.) And this moveable quality, as well as its dignity and power, are fully expressed by Bracton, when he says that the justices of this court are "capitales, generales, perpetui, et "majores; a latere regis residentes; qui omnium aliorum corrigere tenentur injurias et "errores (l. 3. c. 10.)" And it is moreover especially provided in the articuli super cartas (28 Edw. 1. c. 5.) that the king's chancellor, and the justices of his bench shall follow him, so that he may have at all times near unto him some that be learned in the laws.

The jurisdiction of this court is very high and transcendent. It keeps all inferior jurisdictions within the bounds of their authority, and may either remove their proceedings to be determined here, or prohibit their progress below. It superintends all civil corporations in the kingdom. It commands magistrates and others to do what their duty requires, in every case where there is no other specific remedy. It protects the liberty of the subject, by speedy and summary interposition. It takes cognizance both of criminal and civil causes; the former in what is called the crown-side or crown-office; the latter in the plea-side of the court. The jurisdiction of the crown-side is confined to pleas of the crown. But on the plea-side, or civil branch, it hath an original jurisdiction and cognizance of all trespasses, and other injuries, alleged to be committed vi et armis: which, being a breach of the peace, savour of a criminal nature, although the action is brought for a civil remedy; and for which the defendant ought, in strictness, to pay a fine to the king, as well as damages to the injured party (Finch. l. 198.) This court might likewise, upon the division of the aula regia, have originally held plea of any other civil action whatsoever, (excepting actions real, which are now very seldom in use) provided the defendant was an officer of the court; or in the custody of the marshall, or prison-keeper of this court, for a breach of the peace or any other offence (4 Inst. 71.) In process of time, by a fiction, this court began to hold plea of all personal actions whatsoever, and has continued to do so for ages (Ibid. 72.): it being surmised, that the defendant is arrested for a supposed trespass, which he never has in reality committed; and being thus in the custody of the marshal of this court, the plaintiff is at liberty to proceed against him for any other personal injury: which surmise, of being in the marshal's custody, the defendant is not at liberty to dispute. And these fictions of law, though at first they may startle the student, he will find upon farther consideration to be highly beneficial and useful: especially as this maxim is ever invariably observed, that no fiction shall extend to work an injury; its proper operation being to prevent a mischief, or remedy an inconvenience, that might result from the general rule of law (3 Rep. 30. 2 Roll. Rep. 502.) So true is it, that in factione juris semper subsistit æquitas (11 Rep. 51. Co. Litt. 150.) In the present case, it gives the suitor his choice of more than one tribunal, before which he may institute his action, and prevents the circuity and delay of justice, by allowing that suit to be originally, and in the first instance, commenced in this court, which after a determination in another, might ultimately be brought before it on a writ of error. For this court is likewise a court of appeal, into which may be removed by writ of error, all determinations of the court of common plea, and of all inferior courts of record in England. Yet even this so high and honourable court is not the dernier resort of the subject; for if he be not satisfied with any determination here, he may remove it by writ of error into the house of lords, or the court of exchequer chamber, as the case may happen, according to the nature of the suit, and the manner in which it has been prosecuted.

KNAVE, an old Saxon word, which at first, signified a boy; Sax. cnapa, hence a knave child, i. e. a boy distinguished from a girl; afterwards it was taken for a servant boy, and at length for any servant man: also it was applied to a minister or officer, that bore the weapon or shield of his superior, as scild knapa, whom the Latins called armiger, and the French escuyer. 14 Ed. 3. c. 3. And it was sometimes of old made use of as a titular addition; as Johannes C. filius Willielmi C. de Derby, knave, &c. 22 Hen. 7. c. 36. The word is now perverted to the hardest meaning, viz. a false and deceitful fellow. And Wickliff in his old translation, Exod. 1. xvi. if it be a knave-child, i. e. a son or male child. In the vision of Piers Plowman, cokes and her knaves cryden hotes pyes, hote, i. e. cooks and their boys, or skullions. Cowel.

KNIGHT, (Sax. cynt, Lat. miles, and eques auratus, from the gilt spurs he usually wore, and thence called anciently knights of the spur: the Italians term them cavalieri, the French chevaliers, the Germans ritters, the Spaniards cavallero's, &c.) In its original sense, it properly signified a servant; but there is now but one instance here where it is taken in that sense, and that is KNIGHT OF A SHIRE, who properly serves in parliament for such a county.

In all other instances, it signifies one who bears arms, who, for his virtue and martial prowess, is by the king, or one having his authority, exalted above the rank of gentleman to a higher degree of dignity. Cowel. Blount. 2 Black. 69 4 Black. 432.

KNIGHTEN-GYLD, was a gyld in London, consisting of nineteen knights, which king Edgar founded, giving them a portion of void ground lying without the walls of the city, now called Portsoken-ward. Stow. Cowel.

KNIGHTHOOD. Formerly when the heir came of full age, provided he held a knight's fee, he was to receive the order of knighthood, and was compellable to take it upon him, or else to pay a fine to the king. 2 Black. 69.

But this being considered in the reign of Charles I. as a great grievance, the stat. 16 Car. 1. c. 20. was passed, whereby it was enacted, "that none shall be compelled to take knighthood."

KNIGHTS BACHELORS, is the most ancient, though the lowest order of knighthood amongst us; for we have an instance of king Alfred's conferring this order on his son Athelstan. Wil. Malms. lib. 2. 1 Black. 404.

KNIGHTS BANERET, (milites vexillarii) are made only in the time of war, and is a high honour: and though knighthood is commonly given for some personal merit, which therefore dies with the person; yet John Coupland, for his valiant service performed against the Scots, had the honour of baneret conferred on him and his heirs for ever, by patent. 29 Ed. 3. See Baneret.

KNIGHTS OF THE BATH, (milites balnei) have their name from their bathing the night before their creation. This order of knights was introduced by king Henry IV. and revived by king George the first in the year 1725; who erected the same into a regular military order for ever, by the name and title of The Order of the Bath, to consist of thirty-seven knights, besides the sovereign. They have each three honorary esquires; and they now wear a red ribband across their shoulders; have a prelate of the order, who is the bishop of Rochester, several heralds, and other officers. Black. 404.

KNIGHTS OF THE CHAMBER, (milites cameræ) seem to be such knights bachelors as are made in time of peace, because knighted in the king's chamber, and not in the field. 1 Black. Com. 404.

KNIGHTS OF THE GARTER, (equites garterii, or periscelidis) are an order of knights, founded by king Edward III. who after he had obtained many notable victories, for furnishing this honourable order, made choice in his own realm, and all Europe, of twenty-five the most excellent and renowned persons for virtue and honour, and ordained himself and his successors kings of England, to be the sovereign thereof, and the rest to be fellows and brethren, bestowing this dignity on them, and giving them a blue garter, decked with gold, pearl, and precious stones, and a buckle of gold, to wear daily upon the left leg only, a kirtle, crown, cloak, chaperon, a collar, and other magnificent apparel, both of stuff and fashion; exquisite and heroical to wear at high feasts, as to so high and princely an order was meet. Smith's Repub. Ang. lib. 1. cap. 20. And, according to Camden and others, this order was instituted upon king Edward the Third's having great success in a battle, wherein the king's garter was used for a token: and it is the first personal dignity after the nobility.

It is also said, that the king in the height of his glory, the kings of France and Scotland being both prisoners in the Tower of London at one time, first erected this order, anno 1350, from the Countess of Salisbury's dropping her garter, in a dance before his majesty, which the king taking up, and seeing some of his nobles smile, he said, honi soit qui mal y pense, interpreted, evil (or shame) be to him that evil thinketh, which has ever since been the motto of the garter.

Charles I. as an addition to the splendor, ordered all the knights companions to wear on their upper garment, the cross incircled with the garter and motto. This honorable society is dedicated to St. George; and they are a college or corporation, having a great seal, &c.

The site of the college is the royal castle of Windsor, with the chapel of St. George, and the chapter-house in the castle, for their solemnity on St. George's day, and at their feasts and installations. Besides, the king their sovereign, and twenty-five companions, knights of the garter, they have a dean and canons, &c. and twenty-six poor knights, that have no other subsistence but the allowance of this house, which is given them in respect of their daily prayer to the honour of God and St. George; and these are vulgarly called poor knights of Windsor.

There are also certain officers belonging to the order; as prelate of the garter, which office is inherent to the bishop of Winchester, for the time being; the chancellor of the Garter who is the bishop of Sarum; register, always dean of Windsor; the principal king at arms, called garter, to manage and marshal their solemnities, and the usher of the garter, being likewise usher of the black rod.

A knight of the garter wears daily abroad, a blue garter decked with gold, pearl, and precious stones on the left leg; and in all places of assembly, upon his coat on the left side of his breast, a star of silver embroidery; and the picture of St. George, enamelled upon gold and beset with diamonds, at the end of a blue ribbon that crosses the body from the left shoulder; and when dressed in his robes, a mantle collar of S S. &c.

KNIGHTS COURT, is a court baron, or honour-court, held twice a year under the bishop of Hereford, at his palace there, wherein those who are lords of manors, and their tenants, holding by knight's service of the honour of that bishopriek, are suitors; which court is mentioned in Butterfield's Surv. fol. 244. If the suitor appears not at it, he pays 2*s.* suit-silver for respite of homage. Cowel.

KNIGHT'S-FEE, (feodum militare) is so much inheritance, as is sufficient yearly to maintain a knight with convenient revenue; which, in Henry the Third's days, was 15*l.* Cam. Britan. pag. 111. But sir Thomas Smith (in his Repub. Angl. lib. 1. cap. 18.) rates it at 40*l.* and by the statute for knights, 1 Ed. 2. cap. 1. such as had 20*l.* per ann. in fee, or for life, might be compelled to be knights; which statute is repealed by 17 Car. 1. cap. 20. Stow, in his Annals, p. 285. says, there were found in England, at the time of the conqueror, 60,215 knights-fees, according to others, 60,215; whereof the religious houses, before their suppression, were possessed of 28,015. *Oct. carucatæ terræ faciunt feodum unius militis. KNIGHTS OF ST. JOHN OF JERUSALEM, (equites sancti Johannis Hierosolymitani) were an order of knighthood, that began about the year 1120. They had their denomination from John the charitable patriarch of Alexandria, though vowed to St, John the Baptist their patron. Fern. 127. They had their primary abode in Jerusalem, and then in the isle of Rhodes, until they were expelled thence by the Turks, anno 1523. Since which time, their chief seat is in the Isle of Malta. They live after the order of friers. They had in England one general prior that had the government of the whole order within England and Scotland. Reg. Orig. fol. 20. and was the first prior in England, and sate in the house of lords. But towards the end of Henry the Eighth's days, they in England and Ireland, being found to adhere to the pope too much against the king, were suppressed, and their lands and goods given to the king, by the 32 Hen. 8. c. 24.

KNIGHT MARSHAL, (mareschallus hospitii regis) an officer of the king's house, having jurisdiction and cognizance of transgressions within the king's house, and verge of it; as also of contracts made within the same house, whereto one of the house is a party. See Marshalsea.

KNIGHTS OF RHODES. Knights of St. John of Jerusalem.

KNIGHTS OF ST. PATRICK, an illustrious order of knighthood instituted by his majesty K. Geo. III. 5 Feb. 1783, to consist of the sovereign, grand master, the lord lieutenant of Ireland for the time being, a prince of the blood royal, and thirteen knights.

KNIGHTS SERVICE, (servitium militare) a tenure whereby lands were held of the king; which drew after it homage, and service in war, escuage, wardship, marriage, &c. taken away by stat. 12 Car. 2. cap. 24.

KNIGHTS OF THE SHIRE, (milites comitatus) are two knights or gentlemen of worth, chosen on the king's writ, in pleno comitatu, by the freeholders of every county that can dispend 40*s.* a year; to represent them in the house of commons; but now notabiles armigeri may be chosen. 1 Hen. 5. c. 1. 10 Hen. 6. c. 2. 23 Hen. 6. c. 6. Their expences were formerly to be borne by the county, at the rate of 4*s.* per diem, during their sitting in parliament, by 35 Hen. 8. c. 11. And as to their qualifications, they are to have 600*l.* per ann. freehold estate.

KNIGHTS TEMPLARS, (milites templarii) were a religious order of knights, instituted in the year 1119, and so called, because they dwelt in part of the buildings belonging to the Temple at Jerusalem, and not far from the Sepulchre of Jesus Christ. They entertained Christian strangers and pilgrims, and in their armour, led them through the Holy Land, to view the sacred monuments of Christianity, without danger from infidels. This order was far spread in Christendom, particularly here in England, where it flourished in the time of Henry II. And had in every nation, a particular governor or master, but at length, some of them at Jerusalem falling away to the Saracens from Christianity, the whole order was suppressed by Clemens quintus, anno 1307. And their substance given partly to the knights of St. John of Jerusalem, and partly to other religious. Cassan. de Gloria Mundi, par. 9. These knights at first, wore a white garment; and afterwards, in the pontificate of pope Eugenius, it was ordained that they should wear a red cross: in ancient records, they were also called *fratres Militiæ Templi solomonis. LABINA, watery land. Ibid.

LABORARIIS, was an ancient writ against persons refusing to serve and do labour, who had no means of living; or against such as, having served in the winter, refused to serve in the summer. Reg. Orig. 189. Cowel. Blount.

LABOUR, is the foundation of property, and bodily labour bestowed upon any subject which before lay in common to all men, and subject to first occupancy, is universally allowed to give the fairest and most reasonable title to an exclusive property therein. 2 Black. 5.

LABOURERS. A species of servants who are only hired by the day or the week, and do not live intra moenia, as part of the family; concerning whom, the stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4. and some others, have made many very good regulations; 1. Directing that all persons who have no visible effects may be compelled to work: 2. Defining how long they must continue at work in summer and in winter: 3. Punishing such as leave or desert their work: 4. Empowering the justices at sessions, or the sheriff of the county, to settle their wages: 5. Inflicting penalties on such as either give, or exact, more wages than are so settled.

By 5 Eliz. c. 4. no person shall be hired or taken into service for less time than a year, in the mysteries or arts of a taylor, shoemaker, tanner, pewterer, baker, brewer, glover, cutler, smith, farrier, currier, sadler, spurrier, turner, capper, hatmaker, bowyer, fletcher, arrow-head makers, butchers, cooks, or millers.

Persons unmarried, and persons under thirty years of age, brought up in any of the said arts, may be compelled to serve. Ibid.

No person shall put away such servant, nor shall any servant depart from his master before the end of the time, unless for reasonable cause, to be determined by a magistrate. Ibid.

No such servant shall depart, or be put away at the end of his term, without one quarter's warning before given, the one to the other: Ibid.

Persons between the age of twelve years and sixty, not being apprentices, nor lawfully retained in any employment, nor worth 10*l.* may be compelled to serve by the year in husbandry. Ibid.

No such retained persons shall depart out of the parish after the time expired, without a testimonial of their liberty to serve elsewhere, nor shall they be retained without shewing such testimonial, on pain of 5*l.* on the master hiring, and imprisonment and whipping as a vagabond, on the servant not having the same, or forging one. Ibid.

Labourers, artificers, and others, shall continue at work during the proper hours, and not depart before it be finished, upon pain of imprisonment, and 5*l.* Ibid.

The wages of labourers, artificers, and servants, shall be assessed by the chief magistrates every year, on pain of 10*l.* and proclamation shall be made of the rates of the wages; and any master or labourer giving or taking more wages than allowed, shall be imprisoned, and the master moreover forfeit 5*l.* Ibid.

Every retainer contrary to this statute, shall be void. Ibid.

Servant assulting his master, mistress, or overseers, shall be imprisoned a year, or less. Ibid.

Artificers may be compelled to work in hay time and harvest, and if they refuse, they may be imprisoned in the stocks two days and one night. Ibid.

Persons unemployed, may go into other shires for work in harvest time, bringing a testimonial. Ibid.

Women may be compelled to serve that be above twelve, and under forty years old, unmarried and forth of service. Ibid.

This act does not extend to London or Norwich. The justices of the peace shall assemble twice in the year, for due execution of this statute, and shall be allowed 5*s.* a day out of the penalties thereof. Ibid.

Justices of peace may grant writs of capias against such servants as depart from their masters, and go into other shires. Ibid.

By 1 Jac. 1. c. 6. labourers, weavers, spinsters, and workmens' wages, may be rated by the justices, by the year, day, week, or month, or by the great, whereof proclamation is to be made by the sheriff in the county. And clothiers or others not paying the wages rated, shall forfeit to the workmen ten shillings. But no clothier, being a justice of peace, shall rate any wages in that branch of business.

By 20 Geo. 2. c. 19. differences between masters and servants in husbandry, artificers, handicrafts, miners, colliers, keelmen, pitmen, glassmen, potters, and other labourers, shall be determined by a justice of peace, who is to examine upon oath, and to make order for payment of wages, not exceeding the sum of ten pounds, with regard to servants, and not exceeding five pounds, with respect to the other persons, and on non-payment to be levied by distress.

Justices to hear master's complaint on oath, and to punish the offender by commitment, abatement of wages, or dismission; also to hear such servant's complaint on oath, and to summon the master, and, on satisfactory proof, to discharge the servant. Ibid.

This act was not to extend to the stannaries in Devon and Cornwall. Ibid. But this exclusion by the 27 Geo. 2. c. 6. was repealed without prejudice to the stannary courts.

And the 31 Geo. 2. c. 11. extended the act to all servants employed in husbandry, though hired for less time than a year.

LAGAN, Goods sunk in the sea, from the Sax. liggan cubare, when mariners in danger of shipwreck cast goods out of the ship, and because they know they are heavy, and sink, fasten a buoy or cork to them, that they may find and have them again. If the ship be lost, these goods are called lagan, and so long as they continue upon the sea belong to the lord admiral; but if they are cast away upon the land they are then a wreck, and belong to the lord entitled to the same. 5 Co. Rep. 106. At first lagan was that right which the chief lord of the fee had to take goods cast on shore by the violence of the sea, &c. Bract. lib. 3, c. 2. See WRECK.

LAMMAS-DAY, the first of August, so called quasi Lamb-mass, on which day the tenants that held land of the cathedral church of York, (which is dedicated to St. Peter ad vincula) were bound by their tenure to bring a live lamb into the church at high mass. It is otherwise said to come from the Sax. hlaffmæsse, viz. loaf mass, as on that day the English made an offering of bread made with new wheat. Cowel.

LANCASTER, was erected into a county palatine anno 50 Ed. 3, and granted by the king to his son John for life, that he should have jura regalia, and a kingly power to pardon treasons, outlawries, &c. and make justices of peace and assise within the said county, and all processes and indictments to be in his name; but these royalties were abridged by the statute 27 Hen. 8, c. 24, though still all writs are witnessed in the name of the owner thereof, and all forfeitures for treason by the common law accrue to them; (4 Inst. 205.) and the dukes of Lancaster hold them, but not as counties palatine, for they had not jura regalia over those lands, (2 Lutw. 1236. 3 Salk. 110, 111.) The stat. 37 Hen. 8, c. 16, annexes lands to the duchy of Lancaster for the enlargement of it. Fines levied before the justices of assise of Lancaster of lands in the county palatine, shall be of equal force with those acknowledged before the justices in the common pleas. (37 Hen. 8, c. 19.) And process against an outlawed person in the county of Lancaster is to be directed to the chancellor of the duchy, who shall thereupon issue like writs to the sheriff, &c. (5 & 6 Ed. 6. 26.) The stat. 17 Car. 2, concerning causes of replevin shall be of force in the court of common pleas for the county palatine of Lancaster (19 Car. 2, 5.) By the stat. 17 Geo. 2, c. 7, the chancellor or vice-chancellor may by commission empower persons to take affidavits in any cause, &c. depending in the chancery or courts of session, in any plea whatsoever, civil or criminal. 1 Black. 116. 3 Black. 78.

LAND-TAX. The ancient mode of charging lands by scutage, hydage, and talliage, was to all intents and purposes a land-tax; and the assessments were sometimes expressly called so. (Com. Journ. 26 Jan. 9 Dec. 1678.) But the land-tax as it now stands was first introduced in the reign of k. William 3, because in the year 1692 a new assessment or valuation of estates was made throughout the kingdom. And the method of raising it, is by charging a particular sum upon each county, according to the valuation given in, A. D. 1692: and this sum is assessed and raised upon individuals (their personal estates, as well as real, being liable thereto) by commissioners appointed from time to time by act of parliament, being the principal landholders of the county, and their officers.

The land tax up to the year 1798, was an annual tax: but by 38 Geo. 3, c. 60, after reciting "that it may materially conduce to "strengthening and supporting the public "credit, and to augmenting the nation's re- "sources at this important conjuncture, that "the duty now payable for one year on land "should be made perpetual, but subject to "redemption and purchase, on transferring "to the commissioners for the reduction of "the national debt a certain proportion of "capital stock, in manner therein stated," —it was enacted, that the land tax shall be raised and paid yearly to his majesty and his heirs FOR EVER, subject to redemption under certain rules and conditions. This act was afterwards amended by several other acts, all of which were repealed, and the provisions consolidated and amended by the statute 42 Geo. 3. c. 116. The consideration for redemption shall (generally speaking) be so much capital stock of the three pounds per centum consolidated annuities, or the three pounds per centum reduced annuities, as will yield a dividend exceeding the amount of the land tax redeemed by one tenth part thereof. This stock may be transferred by the purchaser all at once, or by instalments, and in certain cases, the redemption may be made by payments in money.

The regulations of this statute are far too numerous to be detailed at large.

The provisions, however, which are contained in this stat. of 42 Geo. 3. c. 116. as amended by subsequent acts, are in substance as follows:

1. Commissioners for redemption and sale of the land tax.]—By 42 Geo. 3, c. 116, his majesty may appoint commissioners of the land tax to be commissioners for selling the land tax, who are to be sworn, and they may examine and receive information on oath from persons desirous of advancing or purchasing any land tax, or relating to persons entitled in remainder, and may require inspection of any deeds relating to persons claiming preference, and they may receive affidavits made in or out of Great Britain, and two of the commissioners may contract for the redemption of the land tax, according to the assessment made under 38 Geo. 3, c. 5, for the year the contract shall be entered into. s. 5—8.

But his majesty is to appoint members of the privy council to be commissioners for regulating sales by corporations or tenants of the crown, two of whom may act, being sworn, which commissioners may require information and receive depositions as to sales, and employ a secretary, and the sales by corporations and tenants of the crown shall be made under the directions of such commissioners, two of whom shall be made parties. s. 72—76.

And such commissioners shall adjust all questions between corporations and their lessees, as to enfranchisement of lands. s. 84.

The prince's council may transfer stock to the commissioners for the reduction of the national debt, for the redemption of the land tax, and the lands of the duchy shall thereupon be exonerated from land tax, which shall be considered as rent payable by the lessees. s. 148, 149.

Where lessees of crown lands within the survey of the exchequer, may have improperly proceeded to redeem the land tax, the treasury may re-transfer to them the amount of any consideration, whereupon his majesty shall be entitled to land tax, and the parties shall acknowledge the transfer, which shall be registered as a contract, stamp duty free, but such lessees may receive the land tax up to the preceding quarter. s. 150.

Any one or more co-parceners or joint tenants may contract for redemption of their own proportion, and the proportion of others refusing, on three months notice, s. 11. [See also s. 93, under sec. 4 of this title.]

Where one or more co-parceners shall redeem their land tax, their allotments shall be exonerated immediately on partition. s. 39.

Where a co-parcener redeems his own proportion of the land tax and the proportions of others, their lands shall be chargeable to him for their proportions. s. 124.

Canal companies, and other works of public utility, are empowered to contract, or proprietors for their proportions of the land tax, as well in the tolls as on the lands. s. 12.

And they may redeem by calls under the respective acts by which they are authorised to raise money. s. 49.

Shares in water-works, insurance offices, lights, stock in king's printing-office, companies of merchants in London, and the bank, are empowered to contract. s. 13.

Committees, trustees, and guardians, are empowered to contract for those for whom they act. s. 14.

And they may sell lands for that purpose; but such sales shall be made in England under the authority of the commissioners for the place where the lands lie, and one month's previous notice of such sale shall be given to the commissioners with a schedule of the particulars. s. 53, 54, 55.

And the guardians of infants and trustees of married women, may transfer stock standing in the names of such infants, or femes covert, or jointly with themselves for redemption of the land tax. s. 128.

Governors of queen Anne's bounty may contract, where incumbents have not. s. 15.

And they may apply money in redeeming land tax on livings, and purchasing rent charges granted by incumbents under former acts. s. 44.

Trustees for poor clergy may contract, s. 16, and lay out trust money in redeeming land tax on livings. s. 45.

And the governors of charity for clergymens widows and orphans may sell lands with the consent of the special commissioners. s. 77.

And the governors of queen Anne's bounty and other trustees for poor clergy so empowered to redeem land tax, may purchase land tax, which shall issue as a fee farm out of the lands, and be annexed to the livings, and accept from others land tax so purchased. s. 161.

Colleges and other patrons of livings, may contract where incumbents have not redeemed. s. 17.

And they may redeem the land tax on livings belonging to them by sale of any of their lands, and shall be entitled to an equivalent rent-charge out of the living, unless they declare otherwise at the time of presentation. s. 78.

And by 45 Geo. 3, c. 77, the incumbent for the time being may purchase an assignment of the land tax redeemed, by the patron or former incumbent, for the benefit of the living, by sale or mortgage under the regulations of the acts, after which the land tax shall become merged, and the money arising by such sale need not be paid into the Bank, but shall be paid to the assignor. s. 1.

III. Property applicable to the redemption.] —By 42 Geo. 3. c. 116. personal property directed to be laid out in the purchase of lands in trust for any corporation or charitable institution, may be applied with the consent of the commissioners, (and of the court, under whose control it may be) in redemption of land tax. s. 41.

Trust property may be applied in redemption of land tax on settled lands, and the land tax so redeemed with trust property shall merge in the lands, and when the trust property is insufficient the deficiency may be supplied under this act. s. 42, 43.

Land tax on land settled for the benefit of any parish may be redeemed out of the poor or church rates, with the approbation of two justices. s. 46.

Such land tax may be redeemed by trust property, and the lands shall be charged with an annuity equal to the trust property so applied, with the like consent of justices. s. 47.

Donations to hospitals and charitable institutions may be applied in redemption of land tax. s. 48.

And money may be bequeathed to redeem land tax for charitable uses. s. 50.

Gifts of land tax redeemed, or purchased for augmentation of livings, shall be valid. s. 102.

Where money from sale of lands belonging to corporations, shall be insufficient to redeem the whole land tax, the Bank may receive the deficiency from them. s. 87.

Trust property may be laid out by corporations in purchase of land tax, as well as redemption, under s. 41 and 42, and the amount as a fee farm rent shall be settled subject to the same trusts. s. 159.

IV. Raising money for redemption.]—By 42 Geo. 3, c. 116, for redeeming land tax on lands belonging to individuals, the persons in possession, but not having the absolute estate, and persons beneficially entitled to rents, except tenants at rack rent and crown tenants, (see s. 71,) may sell part of such lands, or may mortgage the same, or grant any rent charge to the amount of the land tax, but no such sale shall be made but for redeeming land tax. s. 51.

But tenants for lives or years on fine, may not sell without the consent of the reversioners. s. 57.

Corporations may also sell or mortgage lands, or grant rent-charges to redeem land tax, and they may also enfranchise copyholds for that purpose. s. 69, 70.

Ecclesiastical rectors may redeem land tax on vicarages, by sale of part of the rectorial glebe, and the incumbent of the rectory shall be entitled to an equivalent rent-charge out of the vicarage. s. 122.

Where individuals or corporations have redeemed land tax by advance of money, or contracted for assignment, they may raise money as they might have done in the first instance. s. 91.

Money arising from lands sold for reimbursing sums advanced shall, under the order of the commissioners, be paid to the persons entitled, and the remainder into the Bank. s. 104.

Where any person having an estate, other than of inheritance, shall redeem the land tax with his own property, the estate shall be chargeable with the amount of the consideration and interest, equivalent to the land tax redeemed: reversioners shall be liable to interest only from coming into possession, and reversioners redeeming shall be entitled to such yearly equivalent, until the estate vest in them. s. 123.

Where purchasers die, without completing contracts, the instalments shall be paid out of the assets, and if deficient the contract may be sold, but if the person who shall be come into possession shall be desirous of taking the contract, it may be assigned to him, whether there are assets or not, and the assignees shall complete contracts on the original terms, but the time for payment of instalments may be enlarged by the court of exchequer, or commissioners of taxes. s. 166.

Where trusts, mortgages, or incumbrances, equally affect the whole of lands, part whereof shall be proposed to be sold, the court of chancery in England, or session in Scotland, may order such part to be conveyed to the purchaser discharged from such trusts. s. 58.

When such sale shall be by auction, ten days previous notice shall be given; when by private contract, an estimate of the value shall be made. s. 59.

Owners of manors in England, not being corporations, (see s. 70,) may enfranchise copyholds to redeem land tax. s. 60.

Possessors of lands granted under the crown, or any act of parliament, wherein his majesty hath any estate (except tenants for life, years, or from year to year, or during pleasure,) may sell or enfranchise lands for redeeming land tax. s. 71.

Timber may be cut down and sold by consent of court of chancery or session for redemption, which shall merge in the lands, unless otherwise ordered. s. 67.

Tenants in tail in England, may convey by deed enrolled, s. 52, and in Scotland, heirs of entail in possession, their tutors and like persons, may sell for redeeming the land tax, under the authority of the court of session; and money borrowed by such heirs on heritable security under the like authority of the court. s. 61, 62.

Owners of fee farm rents may bar the entail by deed enrolled. s. 157.

Where lands are sold at various times, situate in different counties, certificates of former sales shall be granted and produced, and parties may be examined on oath by commissioners. s. 56.

The whole of a farm which cannot be eligibly divided, may be sold, and the surplus disposed of by the court, as under s. 101, 102, and the expences of such sales to be ascertained by the court, may be defrayed out of the purchase money, and such sales shall be by public auction, under articles of sale settled by the court, and the price shall be paid to a trustee, and by him into the Bank. s. 63, 64, 65.

And such sales shall be as valid as if the estate had been unencumbered, saving to the mortgagee his principal and interest. s. 66.

In all cases the whole of lands usually occupied together may be sold, where they cannot be divided without loss. s. 90.

But no more of an estate, except as last-mentioned, shall be sold, nor more money raised than the commissioners shall think necessary for redeeming land tax and paying expenses. s. 95.

Surplus of stock, if any, after transferring sufficient to redeem the land tax from lands in England, shall be invested in the name of the accountant-general, and applied by order of chancery for the benefit of parties entitled to the lands. s. 100.

In Scotland such surplus stock shall be sold, and the produce placed in one of the public banks, and applied in like manner by authority of the court of session. s. 101.

But if the surplus do not exceed 200*l.* stock, the same shall be transferred to a trustee without application to the courts. s. 102.

And surplus stock, or monies arising from sale for redeeming land tax, may be applied in purchasing land tax as a fee farm rent. s. 160.

When any certificate shall be produced for entering into contract for redemption, by a money consideration, the clerk to the commissioners for redemption shall transmit to the tax-office and receiver-general, the amount of land tax proposed to be redeemed, and the terms whereupon the treasury may direct money to be advanced to the commissioners for reducing the national debt, to be applied in purchasing stock to complete contracts. s. 37.

And where purchase money is to be paid within the year, and at not more than six instalments, the treasury may, after payment of the first advance, procure money for the immediate completion of the contract. s. 106.

Purchasers receiving such advance shall enter into bonds (exempt from duty) to the king for repayment with interest. s. 107.

On failure of payment of principal or interest, the treasury or other lenders shall issue certificates to the proper officers of the crown, requiring them to proceed against such defaulters for the sum due, which shall be inserted in the writ, and the money, when recovered, paid into the bank, and no scire facias is necessary. s. 108.

But on payment, the purchaser's bond shall be delivered up: process may issue against the lands purchased: and persons receiving such advance shall be considered as having completed their contracts. s. 110—112.

No duty is payable on sales under this act by auction. s. 113.

V. Proceedings on redemption and sale.]—By 42 Geo. 3. c. 116, corporations and persons before described, shall have the preference till June 24, 1803; and corporations, trustees, and persons in possession (except tenants for years or lives on a fine) shall be preferred to those in reversion, till Dec. 25, 1802; and those in reversion to all, having no interest, till said 24th June, 1803. s. 18, 19.

After June 24, 1803, parties entitled to preference may redeem on the same terms, except as to periods of transfer, (see s. 25) if no other offer shall have been made, (see s. 157) and if parties interested give notice of their intent to redeem, the land tax shall not be sold to others for three months; and if parties in possession, viz. those receiving the rack rent give such notice, they shall be preferred to parties in reversion. s. 20.

Where corporations shall treat for sale of lands held under demise from them, and obtain a certificate from two commissioners appointed under the great seal, they may, during the period specified therein, be preferred to the beneficial lessees, on producing such certificate to commissioners of sale under this act. s. 21.

Parties claiming preference shall produce a description of the property to two commissioners of the land tax, who shall settle and certify the amount of the land tax, which certificate shall be produced to and examined by the commissioners for redemption, who may agree with the parties for the redemption of the land tax. s. 30.

Where the commissioners for redemption have copies of assessments of land tax transmitted to them, they may contract with the parties, although they do not produce certificates of the amount; but the description of the estate, and also a copy of the assessment, shall be transmitted to the commissioners, and inserted in the certificate of contract. s. 32.

Clerks to the land tax commissioners, when required by the commissioners for redemption, or whenever any alteration shall be made in the assessment, shall transmit copies of such assessment or alteration on pain of 30*l.* s. 33.

The consideration for redemption shall be so much stock in the 3*l. per cents.* as will produce a dividend exceeding the amount of the land tax redeemed by one 10th. s. 22.

The bank shall transmit weekly accounts of the price of the 3*l.* per cent. consols, or 3*l.* per cent. reduced, respectively to the commissioners for taxes, who shall publish in the Gazette, and transmit to the receiver-general an account of the price, to regulate the considerations for the redemption of land tax in money. s. 24.

[And the consideration for such redemption is to be settled according to certain tables set forth in 43 Geo. 3. c. 51.]

Where the land tax to be redeemed in any place, for which separate commissioners are appointed, shall not exceed 25*l.* per ann. the consideration may be paid in money to the receiver-general in England, or collector in Scotland. s. 23.

The consideration in money may be paid at once, or by instalments, not exceeding eight, payable in two years, according to the price of stock. s. 27.

The whole or part of such consideration may be paid in advance, on notice to the receiver-general, who shall transmit to the tax-office an account of such intended payments, which shall be made according to the price of stock ascertained in the week preceding. s. 28.

On making the next and subsequent instalments, interest shall be paid, but interests shall cease on payments in advance. s. 39.

On production of certificate of contract, and transfer of the consideration in stock, the cashier of the bank shall indorse a receipt on the certificate of contract, and on a money consideration, the receiver-general shall, on payment, indorse the receipt on the certificate. s. 38.

Where lands are sold or are charged for not more than 500*l.* and the consideration for redemption is in money, it may be paid to the receiver-general, and the surplus to a trustee. s. 103.

[Where the consideration for the redemption of the land tax by corporations and others entitled to preference, shall be in stock, the same may be transferred to the commissioners for reducing the national debt within sixteen years, by four equal instalments in each year. 46 Geo. 3. c. 133. s. 1.]

When any stock is transferred to the commissioners for the national debt, the dividends thereon shall cease. s. 186.

No contracts for redemption under this act, or the amount of the land tax redeemed, shall be any way affected by any appeal from assessment of land tax. s. 129.

But if land tax contracted for, shall have been fraudulently reduced within three years, before completion of the contract, it may be altered on appeal within one year. s. 130.

Where tythes free from rent or the like have not been, or not distinctly, assessed to the land tax, the commissioners of the land tax may adjust the proportions, and on their certificate the commissioners for redemption may contract; as may also the commissioners for redemption on application to them. s. 35, 36.

Mines shall not pass by conveyance of land sold, nor advowsons though appendant to the land. s. 80.

Land tax redeemed by bishops, and other ecclesiastical corporations, shall be considered as an additional yearly rent on all demises. s. 88.

As shall also land tax redeemed by corporations and charitable institutions on copyhold lands or on lease. s. 89.

When land tax on lands (except of bishops), let on beneficial leases, shall be redeemed by sale of part, the unsold parts shall be chargeable to such corporations, with an equivalent rent charge. s. 118.

And the interest, or rent charge, shall be payable at the periods when the land tax was. s. 125.

Where a tenant is bound to pay land tax, the amount of it, if redeemed by the person entitled to the rent, shall be payable as rent. s. 126.

And where the land tax shall be purchased by a tenant not bound to pay it, he may retain the amount out of the rent. s. 156.

Money arising from sale shall be paid, except otherwise directed, (see s. 95, 91, 104.) into the bank, to the account of the commissioners for the national debt, and invested in 3*l.* per cents. and on the cashier's receipt the land tax shall be redeemed, as if stock had been transferred by the parties. s. 98.

Purchase money may be agreed to be paid by instalments into the bank, and purchasers shall be liable to all penalties on default. s. 105.

When money is not paid into the bank, but invested in 3*l.* per cents. commissioners for the national debt, shall accept the transfer thereof, and grant a certificate, on the production of which at the bank a receipt shall be given. s. 117.

When money has been improperly paid into the bank, the commissioners under the great seal, or commissioners for taxes, may order the money to be repaid, or stock purchased therewith, to be retransferred. s. 121.

When stock has been improperly transferred, or money paid to the bank for interest, such stock may be re-transferred on certificate from the tax-office; which may also direct receivers-general to re-pay monies improperly paid. s. 171.

When stock shall be re-transferred, the dividends shall be issued, and payable, as if there had been no transfer to the commissioners for the national debt. s. 172.

Deeds shall be inrolled in England in one of the courts at Westminster, the counties palatine, or great sessions, within six months, and in Scotland, according to the law of Scotland; but when the consideration does not exceed 200*l.* with the registrar of land tax contracts, and on payment of money and enrolment, the deeds shall be valid. s. 114.

And proof of execution of the deeds by the commissioners, shall be evidence, that every thing required was rightly done. s. 120.

Contracts shall be registered, and three duplicates made of the amount of land tax redeemed, one for the receiver-general of the county, another for the commissioners of land tax, and another for the king's remembrancer. s. 164.

And copies of the registers shall be good evidence of the contracts. s. 165.

Where the whole of the land tax shall not before June 24, 1803, be redeemed by parties entitled to preference, the commissioners may contract with any other persons for sale of the part remaining unsold. s. 151.

And the consideration for the purchase of such land tax, shall not be less in stock or money than for redemption by parties entitled to preference, transferrable at once, or within one year, by not more than four instalments. s. 153.

Persons desirous of purchasing, shall produce to the commissioners of the land tax a statement of the amount of the land tax, which amount the commissioners shall ascertain and certify, and on producing such certificate to the commissioners for executing this act, (who may amend the same) they shall cause notice of the offer to be fixed on the church door for 14 days, and if within that time no offer higher by 1*l.* per cent. shall be made, they may contract for sale, but if such higher offer shall be made, the commissioners shall contract with the party making it, and upon production of the contract at the Bank, and transferring the stock over to the receiver-general, and payment of the consideration, the party shall be entitled to certificates, and on registry of the contract and certificate (see s. 38, 164), the lands shall be exonerated from the land tax, and the purchaser entitled to a fee farm rent out of the lands, equal to the land tax redeemed. s. 154.

On the desire of the person beneficially interested in the lands, the commissioners may order the whole fee farm rent to be paid out of any part of the lands, equal in annual value to three times the rent, and such part shall be separately described in the contract. s. 155.

On default of fulfilling contracts, the land tax shall revive, and the defaulter shall be subject to a penalty not exceeding 1-16th of the consideration. s. 167.

Where the penalty on default has not been prosecuted for, the commissioners for the national debt may recover the amount out of any instalments made, and retransfer the remainder. s. 170.

Collectors of the land tax in Scotland are to give security for paying to the receiver-general the monies received by such collectors. s. 174—176.

When lands of corporations or charitable institutions shall be sold which are subject to any charge, the commissioners shall direct how the same shall be paid in future—so, when part of lands usually demised together, are liable to an ancient rent. s. 82, 83.

When any allowance shall be made out of any fee farm rent or other rents, in respect to the land tax, they may be sold, subject to such allowance. s. 92.

Grantees of rent charges may recover the same as rents. s. 116.

Persons redeeming land tax on lands subject to any fee farm rent, may continue to deduct the proportion of land tax on such fee farm rent. s. 127.

Prior mortgages shall not be affected by mortgages under this act, except as to interest, and shall have preference to redeem the land tax. s. 114.

But no reversioner is liable to payment of more than one year's arrear of interest on such mortgages. s. 115.

Commissioners shall not vacate seats in parliament; nor shall the office of a commissioner be deemed a place of profit under his majesty. s. 185.

The investing of money in purchase of land tax under the act 39 Geo. 3. c. lxxiii. enabling his majesty to incorporate the Globe Company, and the said company's charter shall be regulated by this act. s. 198.

Persons claiming to vote for members of parliament for lands, the land tax whereon has been redeemed, shall be entitled to vote on proving such redemption. s. 200.

Penalties to the parties aggrieved, may be sued for in the courts of record with costs; and other penalties exceeding 50*l.* within six months: half to the king, and half to the informer, but the attorney-general, in the latter case, may stay proceeding where there was no fraud. s. 189.

Penalties not exceeding 50*l.* are recoverable before two justices. s. 190—192.

Persons swearing falsely to be guilty of perjury, s. 193—and forging any contract, agreement, certificate, or receipt, is felony without clergy. s. 194.

LAND-TENANT is he that possesses land let, or hath it in his manual occupation.

LANGEMANNI, lords of manors. 1 Inst. 5.

LANGEOLUM, an under garment made of wool, formerly worn by the monks, which reached down to their knees; so called because lanea fit. Cowel.

LANIS DE CRESCENTIA WALLIÆ TRADUCENDIS ABSQUE CUSTUMA, &c. an ancient writ that lay to the customer of a port, to permit one to pass wool without paying custom, he having paid it before in Wales. Cowel. Blount.

LANTERIUM, the lantern, cupolo, or top of a steeple. Ibid.

LAPIS MARMORIUS, a marble stone about twelve foot long and three foot broad, placed at the upper end of Westminster-hall, where was likewise a marble chair erected on the middle thereof, in which our kings anciently sat at their coronation dinner, and at other times, the lord chancellor. Over this marble table are now erected the courts of chancery and king's bench. Orig. Jurid. 37. Cowel. Blount.

LAPIS PACIS, the same with osculum pacis. Ibid.

LAPSE, (lapsus) is a slip or omission of a patron to present to a church, within six months after it becomes void; in which case we say, that benefice is in lapse or lapsed. 13 Eliz. c. 12. And lapse is defined to be a species of forfeiture, whereby the right of presentation to a church accrues to the ordinary by neglect of the patron, to present, to the metropolitan by neglect of the ordinary, and to the king by neglect of the metropolitan. For it being for the interest of religion, and the good of the public, that the church should be provided with an officiating minister, the law has therefore given this right of lapse, in order to quicken the patron; who might otherwise, by suffering the church to remain vacant, avoid paying his ecclesiastical dues, and frustrate the pious intentions of his ancestors. This right of lapse was first established about the time (though not by the authority, 2 Roll. Abr. 336. pl. 10.) of the council of Lateran (Bracton, l. 4. tr. 2. c. 3.), which was in the reign of our Henry the second, when the bishops first began to exercise universally the right of institution to churches (2 Black. Com. 23.) And therefore, where there is no right of institution, there is no right of lapse: so that no donative can lapse to the ordinary (Bro. Abr. tit. Quar. Imped. 3 Cro. Jac. 518.), unless it hath been augmented by the queen's bounty (St. 1 Geo. 1. st. 2. c. 10.) But no right of lapse can accrue, when the original presentation is in the crown (stat. 17 Edw. 2. c. 8. 2 Inst. 273.)

If a right of lapse accrues to the bishop and he dies, or is translated before he avails himself of it, the right of presentation to the lapsed benefice does not pass to the king, like the vacant patronage of the see, but to the guardian of the spiritualties. Gibs. 770.

The term, in which the title to present by lapse accrues from the one to the other successively, is six calendar months (6 Rep. 62. Regist. 42.), (following in this case the computation of the church, and not the usual one of the common law,) and this exclusive of the day of the avoidance. (2 Inst. 361.) But, if the bishop be both patron and ordinary, he shall not have a double time allowed him to collate in (Gibs. Cod. 769.); for the forfeiture accrues by law, whenever the negligence has continued six months in the same person. And also, if the bishop doth not collate his own clerk immediately to the living, and the patron presents, though after the six months are lapsed, yet his presentation is good, and the bishop is bound to institute the patron's clerk (2 Inst. 273.) For as the law only gives the bishop this title by lapse, to punish the patron's negligence, there is no reason that, if the bishop himself be guilty of equal or greater negligence, the patron should be deprived of his turn. If the bishop suffer presentation to lapse to the metropolitan, the patron also has the same advantage if he presents before the archbishop has filled up the benefice; and that for the same reason. Yet the ordinary cannot, after lapse to the metropolitan, collate his own clerk to the prejudice of the archbishop (2 Roll. Abr. 368.) For he had no permanent right and interest in the advowson, as the patron hath, but merely a temporary one; which having neglected to make use of during the time, he cannot afterwards retrieve it. But if the presentation lapses to the king, prerogative here intervenes and makes a difference; and the patron shall never recover his right till the king has satisfied his turn by presentation: for nullum tempus occurrit regi (Dr. & St. d. 2. c. 36. Cro. Car. 335.) And therefore it may seem, as if the church might continue void for ever, unless the king shall be pleased to present; and a patron thereby be absolutely defeated of his advowson. But to prevent this inconvenience, the law has lodged a power in the patron's hands, of as it were compelling the king to present. For if, during the delay of the crown, the patron himself presents, and his clerk is instituted, the king indeed by presenting another, may turn out the patron's clerk; or, after induction, may remove him by quare impedit: but if he does not, and the patron's clerk dies incumbent, or is canonically deprived, the king hath lost his right, which was only to the next or first presentation (7 Rep. 28. Cro. Eliz. 44.)

In case the benefice becomes void by death, or cession through plurality of benefices, there the patron is bound to take notice of the vacancy at his own peril; for these are matters of equal notoriety to the patron and ordinary: but in case of a vacancy by resignation, or canonical deprivation, or if a clerk presented be refused for insufficiency, these being matters of which the bishop alone is presumed to be cognizant, here the law requires him to give notice thereof to the patron, otherwise he can take no advantage by way of lapse (4 Rep. 75. 2 Inst. 632.) Neither shall any lapse thereby accrue to the metropolitan or to the king; for it is universally true, that neither the archbishop or the king shall ever present by lapse, but where the immediate ordinary might have collated by lapse, within the six months, and hath exceeded his time: for the first step or beginning faileth, et quod non habet principium, non habet finem (Co. Litt. 344, 345.) If the bishop refuse or neglect to examine and admit the patron's clerk, without good reason assigned or notice given, he is stiled a disturber by the law, and shall not have any title to present by lapse; for no man shall take advantage of his own wrong (2 Roll. Abr. 369.) Also, if the right of presentation be litigious or contested, and an action be brought against the bishop to try the title, no lapse shall incur till the question of right be decided. (Co. Lit. 344.)

LAPSED-LEGACY. A legacy will lapse and fall into the undisposed part of a testator's personal estate, if the legatee dies before the testator, or the period when the legacy is to vest, or become payable.

LARCINY, (Fr. larrecin, Lat. latrocinium) Larciny, or theft, by contraction for latrociny, latrocinium, is distinguished by the law into two sorts; the one called simple larciny, or plain theft unaccompanied with any other atrocious circumstance; and mixed or compound larciny, which also includes in it the aggravation of a taking from one's house or person.

Simple larciny, when it is the stealing of goods above the value of twelve pence, is called grand larciny; when of goods to that value, or under, is petit larciny.

Simple larciny then is "the felonious taking, and carrying away, of the personal goods of another."

And it must be a taking without the consent of the owner. Therefore no delivery of the goods from the owner to the offender, upon trust, can ground a larciny. But if a horse, or a carriage or the like be hired, and never returned, if the jury are of opinion from the circumstances, that the persons to whom they were delivered, intended at the time of hiring never to restore them, or that the intention to steal them or convert them to their own use existed in their minds at the time they gained possession, they are guilty of felony. Pear's case, and Major Semple's case, Leach. 189, 327. And it is now generally held, that if the possession of property is obtained by any contrivance animo furandi, as by pretending to find a valuable ring, cutting cards, or laying wagers, or by undertaking to exchange a note into cash, or gold into silver, it amounts to felony. Leach, 206, 226, 239.

But where the sale of a horse or any other article is complete, and possession is delivered to the buyer, who rides away with the horse, or carries off the article, without paying for it, no felony is committed. For the property, as well as possession, is in that case parted with, and the owner is defrauded not of the horse or article, but only of its price, and he has remedy by an action to recover it. Leach, 528.

Also it has been decided, that if a parcel is left by accident in a hackney coach, and the coachman instead of restoring it to the owner, opens it and embezzles part of its contents, he is guilty of larciny. Leach, 320.

And there must not only be a taking, but a carrying away; cepit et asportavit was the old law-Latin.

2. A bare removal from the place in which he found the goods, though the thief does not quite make off with them, is a sufficient asportation, or carrying away. As if a man be leading another's horse out of a close, and be apprehended in the fact; or if a guest, stealing goods out of an inn, has removed them from his chamber down stairs; these have been adjudged sufficient carryings away, to constitute a larciny (3 Inst. 108, 109.) Or, if a thief intending to steal plate, takes it out of a chest in which it was, and lays it down upon the floor, but is surprized before he can make his escape with it; this is larciny (1 Hawk. P. C. 93.)

Thus where a man snatched an earring from a lady's ear, and afterwards dropped it in her hair, it was held a sufficient carrying away to constitute a robbery. Leach, 264. The removal of a parcel from one end of a waggon to the other, with an intent to steal, amounted to a larciny. Ibid. 204.) But where a bale of goods was raised and placed upon its end in a perpendicular posture, this was thought not to be a sufficient carrying away, there not being a complete removal from the space it before occupied. Ibid. And where a man was stopped and ordered by the prisoner to put down upon the ground a parcel, which he was carrying, but which the prisoner did not afterwards take up, this was held not a sufficient asportation to complete the crime of robbery. Ibid. 266.

3. This taking and carrying away, must also be felonious; that is, done animo furandi: or, as the civil law expresses it, lucri causa (Inst. 4. 1. 1.) This requisite, besides excusing those who labour under incapacities of mind or will, indemnifies also mere trespassers, and other petty offenders. As if a servant takes his master's horse, without his knowledge, and brings him home again: if a neighbour takes another's plough, that is left in the field, and uses it upon his own land, and then returns it: if, under colour of arrear of rent, where none is due, I distrein another's cattle, or seise them: all these are misdemesnors and trespasses, but no felonies (1 Hal. P. C. 509.) The ordinary discovery of a felonious intent, is where the party doth it clandestinely; or, being charged with the fact, denies it. But this is by no means the only criterion of criminality: for in cases that may amount to larciny, the variety of circumstances is so great, and the complications thereof so mingled, that it is impossible to recount all those, which may evidence a felonious intent, or animum furandi: wherefore they must be left to the due and attentive consideration of the court and jury. 4 Black. 232.

4. This felonious taking and carrying away must be of the personal goods of another: for if they are things real, or savour of the realty, larciny at the common law cannot be committed of them. Lands, tenements, and hereditaments (either corporeal or incorporeal) cannot in their nature be taken and carried away. And of things likewise that adhere to the freehold, as corn, grass, trees, and the like, or lead upon a house, no larciny could be committed by the rules of the common law; but the severance of them was, and in many things is still, merely a trespass which depended on a subtilty in the legal notions of our ancestors. These things were parcel of the real estate; and therefore, while they continued so, could not by any possibility, be the subject of theft, being absolutely fixed and immoveable (2 Black. Com. 16.) And if they were severed by violence, so as to be changed into moveables; and at the same time, by one and the same continued act, carried off by the person who severed them; they could never be said to be taken from the proprietor, in this their newly acquired state of mobility,

(which is essential to the nature of larciny,) being never, as such, in the actual or constructive possession of any one, but of him who committed the trespass. He could not, in strictness, be said to have taken what at that time were the personal goods of another, since the very act of taking was what turned them into personal goods. But if the thief severs them at one time, whereby the trespass is completed, and they are converted into personal chattels, in the constructive possession of him on whose soil they are left or laid; and come again at another time, when they are so turned into personalty, and takes them away; it is larciny: and so it is, if the owner, or any one else, has severed them. But by several statutes, the stealing of certain things affixed to, or considered as part of the realty, is felony. See Felony.

Larciny also cannot be committed of such animals, in which there is no property either absolute or qualified; as of beasts that are feræ naturæ, and unreclaimed, such as deer, hares, and conies, in a forest, chace, or warren; fish, in an open river, or pond; or wild fowls at their natural liberty (1 Hal. P. C. 511. Fost. 366.) But if they are reclaimed or confined, and may serve for food, it is otherwise, even at common law: for of deer so inclosed in a park, that they may be taken at pleasure, fish in a trunk, and pheasants or partridges in a mew, larciny may be committed (1 Hawk. P. C. 94. 1 Hal. P. C. 511.)

Notwithstanding, however, that no larciny can be committed, unless there be some property in the thing taken, and an owner; yet, if the owner be unknown, provided there be a property, it is larciny to steal it; and an indictment will lie, for the goods of a person unknown (1 Hal. P. C. 512.) This is the case of stealing a shroud out of a grave; which is the property of those, whoever they were, that buried the deceased: but stealing the corpse itself, which has no owner, (though a matter of great indecency) is no felony, unless some of the graveclothes be stolen with it (2 Black. 429.)

The inferior species of theft, or petit larciny, is only punished by imprisonment or whipping at common law (3 Inst. 218), or, by statute 4 Geo. 1. c. 11. by transportation for seven years. But the punishment of grand larciny, or the stealing above the value of twelvepence, (which sum was the standard in the time of king Athelstan, eight hundred years ago,) is at common law regularly death. Which, considering the great intermediate alteration (2 Black. 509.) in the price or denomination of money, is undoubtedly a very rigorous constitution; and made sir Henry Spelman (above a century since) when money was at twice its present rate, complain, that while every thing else was risen in its nominal value, and become dearer, the life of man had continually grown cheaper (Gloss. 350.) It is true, that the mercy of juries will often make them strain a point, and bring in larciny to be under the value of twelvepence, when it is really of much greater value:* but this, though evidently justifiable and proper, when it only reduces the present nominal value of money to the antient standard (2 Inst. 189.), is otherwise a kind of pious perjury, and does not at all excuse our common law in this respect from the imputation of severity, but rather strongly confesses the charge. It is likewise true, that by the merciful extensions of the benefit of clergy by our modern statute law, a person who commits a simple larciny to the value of thirteenpence or thirteen hundred pounds, though guilty of a capital offence, shall be excused the pains of death: but this is only for the first offence. And in many cases of simple larciny, the benefit of clergy is taken away by statute: as from horsestealing in the principals, and accessories both before and after the fact (stat. 1 Edw. 6. c. 12. 2 & 3 Edw. 6. c. 33. 31 Eliz. c. 12.); theft by great and notorious thieves in Northumberland and Cumberland (stat. 18 Car. 2. c. 3.); taking woollen cloth from off the tenters (stat. 22 Car. 2. c. 5.), or linens, fustians, calicoes, or cotton goods, from the place of manufacture (stat. 18 Geo. 2. c. 27.); (which extends, in the last case, to aiders, assisters, procurers, buyers, and receivers;) feloniously driving away, or otherwise stealing one or more sheep or other cattle specified in the acts, or killing them with intent to steal the whole or any part of the carcase (stat. 14 Geo. 2. c. 6. 15 Geo. 2. c. 34. 1 Black. 88.), or aiding or assisting therein; thefts on navigable rivers above the value of forty shillings (stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 45.), or being present, aiding, and assisting thereat; plundering vessels in distress, or that have suffered shipwreck (stat. 12 Ann. st. 2. c. 18. 26 Geo. 2. c. 19.); stealing letters sent by post (stat. 7 Geo. 3. c. 50.); and also stealing deer, fish, hares, and conies under the peculiar circumstances mentioned in the Waltham black act (stat. 9 Geo. 1. c. 22.)

Mixed, or compound larciny is such as has all the properties of the former, but is accompanied with either one, or both, of the aggravations of a taking from one's house or person.

1st. Larciny from the house, though it seems to have a higher degree of guilt than simple larciny, yet is not at all distinguished from the other at common law (1 Hawk. P. C. 98.): unless where it is accompanied with the circumstance of breaking the house by night; and then it falls under the description of burglary. But now, by several acts of parliament, the benefit of clergy is taken from larcinies committed in an house in almost every instance, viz. First, in larcinies above the value of twelvepence committed, 1. In a church or chapel, with or without violence, or breaking the same (stat. 23 Hen. 8. c. 1. 1 Edw. 6. c. 12. 1 Hal. P. C. 518.): 2. In a booth or tent in a market or fair, in the day time or in the night, by violence or breaking the same; the owner or some of his family being therein (stat. 5 & 6 Edw. 6. c. 9. 1 Hal. P. C. 522.): 3. By robbing a dwelling-house in the day time (which robbing implies a breaking) any person being therein (stat. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 9.): 4. In a dwelling-house by day or by night, without breaking the same, any person being therein and put in fear (Ibid.); which amounts in law to a robbery: and in both these last cases, the accessory before the fact is also excluded from his clergy. Secondly, in larcinies to the value of five shillings, committed, 1. By breaking any dwelling-house, or any out-house, shop, or warehouse thereunto belonging in the day time, although no person be therein (stat. 39 Eliz. c. 15.); which also now extends to aiders, abettors, and accessories before the fact (stat. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 9.): 2. By privately stealing goods, wares, or merchandize in any shop, warehouse, coachhouse or stable, by day or by night (see Foster. 78. Bar. 379.); though the same be not broken open, and though no person be therein (stat. 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 23.): which likewise extends to such as assist, hire, or command the offence to be committed.* Lastly, in larcinies to the value of forty shillings in a dwelling-house, or its out-houses, although the same be not broken, and whether any person be therein or no; unless committed against their masters by apprentices under the age of fifteen (stat. 12 Ann. st. 1. c. 7.) This also extends to those, who aid or assist in the commission of any such offence.†

* In a prosecution for a simple larciny, in general, it is not very material to the prisoner, whether he is convicted of grand or petty larciny, as the court can transport for both. But upon a second conviction for grand larciny, he may be deprived of the benefit of clergy.

2. Larciny from the person is either by privately stealing, or by open and violent assault, which is usually called robbery.

The offence of privately stealing from a man's person, as by picking his pocket or the like, privily without his knowledge, was debarred of the benefit of clergy, by statute 8 Eliz. c. 4. But this severe statute has been repealed by 48 Geo. 3. c. 129. by which it is enacted, that persons feloniously stealing from the person of another, whether privily or not, but without force or putting in fear, and those present aiding and abetting, may be transported for life, or not less than seven years, or if the court think fit, be imprisoned only, or imprisoned and kept to hard labour for not exceeding three years.

Open and violent larciny from the person, or robbery, the rapina of the civilians, is the felonious and forcible taking from the person of another, of goods or money to any value, by violence or putting him in fear (1 Hawk. P. C. 95.), but there must be a taking, otherwise it is no robbery. See Highway Robbery.

LARDARIUM, the larder, or place where the lard and meat were kept. Cowel. Blount.

LARDERARIUS REGIS, the king's larderer, or clerk of the kitchen. Ibid.

* It has been held, that privately stealing money to the amount of five shillings, is not within the statute 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 23. Shops and warehouses when they are used merely as repositories of goods, and not as places of sale, are not within the act, and consequently a prisoner cannot be convicted of privately stealing in a shop an article, which is not exposed there for sale, but which happens to be left there to be repaired, or for some other similar purpose. And with regard to coach-houses and stables, the articles must be such as are generally deposited there. Fost. 78. Leach, 43, 235, 248, 274.—In prosecutions under this statute, it is held not to be privately stealing if any person whatever see or perceive the theft at the time it is committed. And where there are several shopmen employed in a shop, they must appear at the trial to prove they did not perceive the theft, or the judge will direct the jury to presume that the stealing was not done privately.

† A person cannot be convicted capitally for stealing to the value of 40*s.* in his own house, nor a wife in her husband's house. Leach, 277. Upon an indictment for burglariously breaking and entering a dwelling-house, and stealing therein property to the value of 40*s.* the prisoner may be acquitted of the breaking, and be capitally convicted of stealing in the dwelling-house. Ibid, 83.

If property is stolen immediately from the person of any one in a house, it is not within this statute, the judges having determined, that the statute was made to protect such property as might be deposited in the house, and not that which was on the person of the party. Campbell's and Owen's cases, Leach, 642, 652.

Stealing bank notes to the amount of 40*s.* in a dwelling-house, is a capital crime under this statute; the 2 Geo. 2. c. 25. having made the stealing of bank notes and other choses in action therein mentioned, a felony of the same nature, as stealing other property of the value of the money due upon the note. Dean's case, Leach, 798.

LARDING MONEY. In the manor of Bradford, the tenants pay to their lord a small yearly rent by this name; which is said to be for liberty to feed their hogs with the mast of the lord's woods, the fat of a hog being called lard; or it may be a commutation for some customary service of carrying salt or meat to the lord's larder. Called lardarium in old charters; and decimam lardarii de haga. Ibid.

LARONS, (Fr.) thieves. Ibid.

LASLATINUS, an assassin or murderer. Ibid.

LAST, (Sax. hlæstan, i. e. onus, Fr. lest) denotes a burden in general, and particularly a certain weight or measure of fish, corn, wool, leather, pitch, &c. As a last of white herrings, is twelve barrels, of red herrings, twenty cades or thousand, and of pilchards, ten thousand; of corn, ten quarters, and in some parts of England twenty-one quarters; of wool, twelve sacks; of leather, twenty dickers, or ten score; of hides or skins, twelve dozen; of pitch, tar, or ashes, fourteen barrels; of gunpowder, twenty-four firkins, weighing a hundred pound each, &c. 32 Hen. 8. cap. 14. 1 Jac. 1. cap. 33. 15 Car. 1. cap. 7.

LAST, in the marshes of Kent: a court held by the twenty-four jurats, and summoned by the bailiffs; wherein orders are made to lay and levy taxes, impose penalties, &c. for the preservation of the said marshes. Cowel.

LASTAGE, (lastagium) a custom, according to Rastal, exacted in some fairs and markets, to carry things bought where one will. But it is taken for the ballast or lading of a ship. Stat. 21 R. 2. cap. 18. And lastage, says another author, is properly that custom which is paid for wares sold by the last; as herrings, pitch, &c. Cowel.

LASTAGE AND BALASTAGE. See Harbours and London.

LAST HEIR, (ultimus hæres) is he to whom land comes by escheat for want of lawful heirs, that is, in the case of copyhold estates, the lord of whom they hold, but in other cases of freehold, the king. Bract. lib. 7. cap. 17.

LATERA, sides-men, companions, assistants. Cowel.

LATERARE, to lie side ways, in opposition to laying end-ways; used in the description of lands. Ibid.

LATHE, LETH, (læstum, leda, Sax. læthe) is a great part of a county, containing three or four hundreds, or wapentakes; as it is used in Kent and Sussex. Ibid.

LATHREVE, LEIDGREVE or TRITHINGREVE, was an officer under the Saxon government, who had authority over a third part of the county; and whose territory was therefore called Trithing, otherwise a Leid or Leithen, in which manner the county of Kent is still divided; and the Rapes in Sussex seem to answer the same. Cowel. Blount.

LATIMER, is used by sir Edward Coke for an interpreter. 2 Inst. 515. But according to Cambden and Cowell, the word is mistaken, and should be latiner, because heretofore, he that understood Latin, which in the time of the Romans was the prevailing language, might be a good interpreter. Camb. Britan. 393. Cowel.

LATIN. There are three sorts of Latin, 1. Good Latin, allowed by grammarians and lawyers. 2. False or incongruous Latin, which in times past would abate original writs; though not make void any judicial writ, declaration, or plea, &c. And 3. words of art, known only to the sages of the law, and not to grammarians, called lawyers Latin. 1 Lil. Abr. 146, 147. But now all law proceedings are to be in English. 4 Geo. 2. c. 26.

LATINARIUS, an interpreter of Latin, or latiner. 2 Co. Inst. 515.

LATITAT, is a writ which issues into all counties, except Middlesex, whereby all men are originally called to answer in personal actions in the king's bench, having its name upon a supposition, that the defendant doth lurk and lie hid, and cannot be found in the county of Middlesex, to be taken by bill, the usual process against parties residing there, but is gone into some other county, to the sheriff of which this writ is directed, to apprehend him there. F. N. B. 78. Terms de Ley.

The original of it is this: in ancient time, while the king's bench was moveable, when any man was sued, a writ was sent forth to the sheriff of the county where the court was resident, called a bill of Middlesex, to take him; and if the sheriff returned non est inventus, then a second writ was sued out, that had these words, cum testatum est quod Latitat, &c. and thereby the sheriff was commanded to attach the party in any other place, where he might be found.

LATRO, (latrocinium) he who had the sole jurisdiction de latrone in a particular place. See Infangthef. Cowel.

LAVATORIUM, a laundry, or place to wash in, applied to such a place in the porch or entrance of cathedral churches, where the priest and other officiating members were obliged to wash their hands before they proceeded to divine service. Ibid.

LAVERBREAD, in the county of Glamorgan and some other parts of Wales, they used to make a sort of food of a sea plant, the oyster green, or sea liver-wort; and this they call laverbread. Ibid.

LAVINA, for Labina, watry land. Ibid.

LAUDARE, to advise or persuade. Ibid.

LAUDUM, an arbitrament or award. Ibid.

LAUNCEGAYS, a kind of offensive wea-poena now disused, and prohibited by stat. 7 R. 2. c. 13. Ibid.

LAUND or LAWND, (landa) an open field, without wood. Blount.

LAURELS, pieces of gold coined in 1619, with the king's head laureated; the twenty-shilling pieces whereof were marked with XX. The ten-shillings X. and the five-shilling piece with V. Cowel. Blount.

LAW, (in Sax. lag, Lat. lex, from lego or legendo, choosing, or rather à ligando binding). Law, in its most general and comprehensive sense, signifies a rule of action; and denotes those rules by which man is commanded to make use of his faculties in the general regulation of his behaviour. 1 Black. 58.

And municipal or civil law is, the rule by which particular districts, communities, or nations are governed; being thus defined by Justinian, "jus civile est quod quisque sibi "populus constituit." It is called municipal law, in compliance with common speech; for, though strictly that expression denotes the particular customs of one single municipium or free town, yet it may with sufficient propriety be applied to any one state or nation, which is governed by the same laws and customs. 1 Black. 58-60.

Municipal law, thus understood, is properly defined to be "a rule of civil conduct "prescribed by the supreme power in a state, "commanding what is right, and prohibiting "what is wrong." Ibid.

And it is a rule: not a transient sudden order from a superior to or concerning a particular person; but something permanent, uniform, and universal.

And it is called a rule, to distinguish it from a compact or agreement; for a compact is a promise proceeding from us, law is a command directed to us. The language of a compact is, "I will, or will not, do "this;" that of law is, "thou shalt, or "shalt not, do it."

The municipal law of England, or the rule of civil conduct prescribed to the inhabitants of this kingdom, may be divided into two kinds: the lex non scripta, the unwritten or common law; and the lex scripta, the written, or statute law. 1 Black. 63.

The lex non scripta, or unwritten law, includes not only general customs, or the common law properly so called; but also the particular customs of certain parts of the kingdom; and likewise those particular laws, that are by custom observed only in certain courts and jurisdictions. Ibid.

As to the leges non scriptæ, viz. the unwritten or common law, these are properly distinguishable into three kinds: 1. General customs; which are the universal rule of the whole kingdom, and form the common law, in its stricter and more usual signification. 2. Particular customs: which for the most part affect only the inhabitants of particular districts. 3. Certain particular laws; which by custom are adopted and used by some particular courts, of pretty general and extensive jurisdiction. 1 Black. 67.

I. As to general customs, or the common law, properly so called; this is that law, by which proceedings and determinations in the king's ordinary courts of justice are guided and directed. This, for the most part, settles the course in which lands descend by inheritance; the manner and form of acquiring and transferring property; the solemnities and obligation of contracts; the rules of expounding wills, deeds, and acts of parliament; the respective remedies of civil injuries; the several species of temporal offences, with the manner and degree of punishment; and an infinite number of minuter particulars, which diffuse themselves as extensively as the ordinary distribution of common justice requires. Thus, for example, that there shall be four superior courts of record, the chancery, the king's bench, the common pleas, and the exchequer;—that the eldest son alone is heir to his ancestor;—that property may be acquired and transferred by writing;—that a deed is of no validity unless sealed and delivered;—that wills shall be construed more favourably, and deeds more strictly;—that money lent upon bond is recoverable by action of debt;—that breaking the public peace is an offence, and punishable by fine and imprisonment;—all these are doctrines that are not set down in any written statute or ordinance, but depend merely upon immemorial usage, that is, upon common law, for their support. Ibid. 68.

II. The second branch of the unwritten laws of England are particular customs, or laws which affect only the inhabitants of particular districts.

These particular customs, or some of them, are without doubt, the remains of that multitude of local customs before-mentioned, out of which the common law, as it now stands, was collected at first by king Alfred, and afterwards by king Edgar and Edward the confessor: each district mutually sacrificing some of its own special usages, in order that the whole kingdom might enjoy the benefit of one uniform and universal system of laws. But for reasons that have been now long forgotten, particular counties, cities, towns, manors, and lordships, were very early indulged with the privilege of abiding by their own customs, in contradistinction to the rest of the nation at large: which privilege is confirmed to them by several acts of parliament. (Mag. Cart. 9 Hen. 3. c. 9. 1 Edw. 3. st. 2. c. 9. 14 Edw. 3. st. 1. c. 1. and 2 Hen. 4. c. 1. 1 Black. 74.

Such is the custom of gavelkind in Kent and some other parts of the kingdom (though perhaps it was also general till the Norman conquest) which ordains, among other things, that not the eldest son only of the father shall succeed to his inheritance, but all the sons alike: and that, though the ancestor be attainted and hanged, yet the heir shall succeed to his estate, without any escheat to the lord.—Such is the custom that prevails in divers antient boroughs, and therefore called borough-english, that the youngest son shall inherit the estate, in preference to all his elder brothers.—Such is the custom in other boroughs, that a widow shall be entitled, for her dower, to all her husband's lands; whereas at the common law she shall be endowed of one third part only.—Such also are the special and particular customs of manors, of which every one has more or less, and which bind all the copyhold and customary tenants that hold of the said manors.—Such likewise is the custom of holding divers inferior courts, with power of trying causes, in cities and trading towns, the right of holding which, when no royal grant can be shewn, depends entirely upon immemorial and established usage.—Such, lastly, are many particular customs within the city of London, with regard to trade, apprentices, widows, orphans, and a variety of other matters. All these are contrary to the general law of the land, and are good only by special usage; though the customs of London are also confirmed by act of parliament (8 Rep. 126. Cro. Car. 347.)

To this head may most properly be referred a particular system of customs used only among one set of the king's subjects, called the custom of merchants, or lex mercatoria: which however different from the general rules of the common law, is yet ingrafted into it, and made a part of it; being allowed, for the benefit of trade, to be of the utmost validity in all commercial transactions: for it is a maxim of law, that "cuilibet in sua "arte credendum est." (Winch. 24.)

The lex mercatoria, or the custom of merchants, like the lex et consuetudo parliamenti, describes only a great division of the law of England. The laws relating to bills of exchange, insurance, and all mercantile contracts, are as much the general law of the land, as the laws relating to marriage or murder. But the expression has frequently led merchants to suppose, that all their new fashions and devices immediately become the law of the land: a notion which, perhaps, has been too much encouraged by the courts. Merchants ought to take their law from the courts, and not the courts from merchants: and when the law is found inconvenient for the purposes of extended commerce, application ought to be made to parliament for redress. This is agreeable to the opinion of Mr. justice Foster, who maintains, that "the "custom of merchants is the general law of "the kingdom, and therefore ought not to "be left to a jury after it has been settled "by judicial determinations." 2 Bur. 1226.

III. The third branch of them are those peculiar laws which by custom are adopted and used only in certain peculiar courts and jurisdictions. These are THE CIVIL and CANON laws.

By the CIVIL LAW, absolutely taken, is generally understood the civil or municipal law of the Roman empire, as comprised in the institutes, the code, and the digest of the emperor Justinian, and the novel constitutions of himself and some of his successors.

This consists of, 1. The institutes, which contain the elements or first principles of the Roman law, in four books. 2. The digests, or pandects, in fifty books, containing the opinions and writings of eminent lawyers, digested in a systematical method. 3. A new code, or collection of imperial constitutions, in twelve books; the lapse of a whole century having rendered the former code, of Theodosius, imperfect. 4. The novels or new constitutions, posterior in time to the other books, and amounting to a supplement to the code; containing new decrees of successive emperors, as new questions happened to arise. These form the body of the Roman law, or corpus juris civilis, as published about the time of Justinian; which, however, fell soon into neglect and oblivion, till about the year 1130, when a copy of the digests was found at Amalfi in Italy: which accident, concurring with the policy of the Roman ecclesiastics, suddenly gave new vogue and authority to the civil law, introduced it into several nations, and occasioned that mighty inundation of voluminous comments, with which this system of law, more than any other, is now loaded. 1 Black. 81.

The CANON LAW is a body of Roman ecclesiastical law, relative to such matters as that church either has or pretends to have, the proper jurisdiction over. This is compiled from the opinions of the antient Latin fathers, the decrees of general councils, and the decretal epistles and bulls of the holy see. All which lay in the same disorder and confusion as the Roman civil law: till, about the year 1151, one Gratian, an Italian monk, animated by the discovery of Justinian's pandects, reduced the ecclesiastical constitutions also into some method, in three books; which he entitled concordia discordantium canonum, but which are generally known by the name of decretum Gratiani. These reached as low as the time of pope Alexander III. The subsequent papal decrees, to the pontificate of Gregory IX. were published in much the same method under the auspices of that pope, about the year 1230, in five books; entitled decretalia Gregorii noni. A sixth book was added by Boniface VIII. about the year 1298, which is called sextus decretalium. The Clementine constitutions, or decrees of Clement V. were in like manner authenticated in 1317 by his successor John XXII.; who also published twenty constitutions of his own, called the extravagantes Joannis: all which in some measure answer to the novels of the civil law. To these have been since added some decrees of later popes, in five books, called extravagantes communes. And all these together, Gratian's decree, Gregory's decretals, the sixth decretal, the Clementine constitutions, and the extravagants of John and his successors, form the corpus juris canonici, or body of the Roman canon law.

Besides these pontifical collections, which during the times of popery, were received as authentic in this island, as well as in other parts of Christendom; there is also a kind of national canon law, composed of legatine and provincial constitutions, and adapted only to the exigencies of this church and kingdom. The legatine constitutions were ecclesiastical laws, enacted in national synods, held under the cardinals Otho and Othobon, legates from pope Gregory IX. and pope Clement IV., in the reign of king Henry III., about the years 1220 and 1268. The provincial constitutions are principally the decrees of provincial synods, held under divers archbishops of Canterbury, from Stephen Langton in the reign of Henry III. to Henry Chichele in the reign of Henry V.; and adopted also by the province of York in the reign of Henry VI. At the dawn of the reformation, in the reign of king Henry VIII. it was enacted in parliament, that a review should be had of the canon law; and, till such review should be made, all canons, constitutions, ordinances, and synodals provincial, being then already made, and not repugnant to the law of the land or the king's prerogative, should still be used and executed. And, as no such review has yet been perfected, upon this statute now depends the authority of the canon law in England.

The LEGES SCRIPTÆ, the written laws of the kingdom; are statutes, acts, or edicts, made by the king's majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal and commons in parliament assembled. The oldest of these now extant, and printed in our statute books, is the famous magna charta, as confirmed in parliament 9 Hen. 3.: though doubtless there were many acts before that time, the records of which are now lost, and the determinations of them perhaps at present currently received for the maxims of the old common law. 1 Black. 84.

Of these statutes there are several kinds: and they are either general or special, public or private. A general or public act is an universal rule, that regards the whole community: and of this, the courts of law are bound to take notice judicially and ex officio; without the statute being particularly pleaded, or formally set forth by the party who claims an advantage under it. Special or private acts are rather exceptions than rules, being those which only operate upon particular persons, and private concerns. And of these (which are not promulgated with the same notoriety as the former) the judges are not bound to take notice, unless they be formally shewn and pleaded.

Statutes also are either DECLARATORY of the common law, or REMEDIAL of some defects therein. Declaratory, where the old custom of the kingdom is almost fallen into disuse, or become disputable; in which case the parliament has thought proper, in perpetuum rei testimonium, and for avoiding all doubts and difficulties, to declare what the common law is and ever hath been. Remedial statutes are those which are made to supply such defects, and abridge such superfluities, in the common law, as arise either from the general imperfection of all human laws, from change of time and circumstances, from the mistakes and unadvised determinations of unlearned (or even learned) judges, or from any other cause whatsoever. And this being done, either by enlarging the common law where it was too narrow and circumscribed, or by restraining it where it was too lax and luxuriant, hath occasioned another subordinate division of remedial acts of parliament into enlarging and restraining statutes. Thus clipping the current coin of the kingdom was an offence not sufficiently guarded against by the common law: therefore it was thought expedient by statute 5 Eliz. c. 11. to make it high treason, which it was not at the common law; so that this was an enlarging statute. At common law also, spiritual corporations might lease out their estates for any term of years, till prevented by the statute of 13 Eliz. (see Leases) this was therefore a restraining statute.

These are the several grounds of the laws of England: over and above which, equity is also frequently called in to assist, to moderate, and to explain them. For, (besides the liberality of sentiment with which our common law judges interpret acts of parliament, and such rules of the unwritten law as are not of a positive kind) there are also peculiar courts of equity established for the benefit of the subject; to detect latent frauds and concealments, which the process of the courts of law is not adapted to reach; to enforce the execution of such matters of trust and confidence, as are binding in conscience, though not cognizable in a court of law; to deliver from such dangers as are owing to misfortune or oversight; and to give a more specific relief, and more adapted to the circumstances of the case, than can always be obtained by the generality of the rules of the positive or common law. 1 Black. 91.

This is the business of our courts of equity, which, however, are only conversant in matters of property. For the freedom of our constitution will not permit, that in criminal cases a power should be lodged in any judge, to construe the law otherwise than according to the letter. This caution, while it admirably protects the public liberty, can never bear hard upon individuals. A man cannot suffer more punishment than the law assigns, but he may suffer less. The laws cannot be strained by partiality to inflict a penalty beyond what the letter will warrant; but, in cases where the letter induces any apparent hardship, the crown has the power to pardon.

LAW OF ARMS, (lex armorum) is a kind of law among all nations, that in case of a solemn war, the prince that conquers, gains a right of dominion, as well as property over the things and persons he has subdued; and it is for this reason, because both parties have appealed to the highest tribunal that can be, viz. the trial by arms and war; wherein the Great judge and Sovereign of the world, in a more especial manner, seems to decide the controversy. Hale's Hist. L. 73, 74.

Common things concerning arms and war, are under the cognisance of the constable and marshal of England. 13 R. 2.

LAW-BOOKS. Books written upon the subject of the law, such as the Year Books; Treatises on distinct branches of law, Abridgments, and books of Reports, many of which are highly valued as authoritative.

LAW-DAY, (lagedayum) called also view of frank-pledge, or court-leet, was any day of open court; and commonly used for the courts of a county or hundred. Cowel.

LAWING OF DOGS, was the cutting off several claws of the fore-feet of dogs in the forest. 3 Black. 72.

LAWLESS-COURT, a court held on Kingshill as Rochford in Essex, on Wednesday morning next after Michaelmas day yearly, at cock-crowing; at which court, they whispered, and had no candle, nor any pen and ink, but a coal: and he that owed suit or service there, and appeared not, forfeited double his rent: this court is mentioned by Cambden, who says, that this servile attendance was imposed on the tenants, for conspiring at the like unseasonable time to raise a commotion. *Camd. LAY-CORPORATIONS, are of two sorts, civil and eleemosynary. The civil are such as are erected for a variety of temporal purposes. The eleemosynary sort are such as are constituted for the perpetual distribution of the free alms, or bounty, of the founder of them, to such persons as he hath directed. 1 Black. 470, 471.

LAY INVESTITURE OF BISHOPS. By stat. 25 Hen. 8, c. 20, it is enacted that at every future avoidance of a bishopric "the king may send the dean and chapter his usual license to proceed to election, "which is always to be accompanied with "a letter missive from the king, containing "the name of the person whom he would "have them elect; and if the dean and "chapter delay their election above twelve "days, the nomination shall devolve to the "king, who may by letters patent appoint "such person as he pleases." This election or nomination, if it be of a bishop, must be signified by the king's letters patent to the archbishop of the province; if it be of an archbishop, to the other archbishop and two bishops, or to four bishops, requiring them to confirm, invest, and consecrate the person so elected, which they are bound to perform immediately, without any application to the see of Rome. After which the bishop elect shall sue to the king for his temporalties, shall make oath to the king and none other, and shall take restitution of his secular possessions out of the king's hands only. 1 Black. 379, 380.

LAY-FEE, (feodum laicum) lands held in fee of a lay-lord, by the common services to which military tenure was subject, as distinguished from the ecclesiastical holding in frankalmoigne, discharged from those burdens. Kennet's Gloss. Cowel.

LAYMAN, is one that is not of the clergy. See Laity.

LEASE. A lease is properly a conveyance of any lands or tenements (usually in consideration of rent, or other annual recompense,) made for life, for years, or at will, but always for a less time than the lessor hath in the premises; for if it be for the whole interest it is more properly an assignment than a lease. 2 Black. 317.

The usual words of operation in it are demise, grant, and to farm let. By this conveyance an estate for life, for years, or at will, may be created, either in corporeal or incorporeal hereditaments; though livery of seisin is indeed incident and necessary to one species of leases, viz. leases for life of corporeal hereditaments, but no other.

By the common law all persons seised of any estate might let leases to endure so long as their own interest lasted, but no longer. Therefore tenant in fee-simple might let leases of any duration; for he hath the whole interest: but tenant in tail, or tenant for life, could make no leases which should bind the issue in tail or reversioner: nor could a husband, seised jure uxoris, make a firm or valid lease for any longer term than the joint lives of himself and his wife, for then his interest expired. Yet some tenants for life, where the fee-simple was in abeyance, might (with the concurrence of such as had the guardianship of the fee) make leases of equal duration with those granted by tenants in fee-simple, such as parsons and vicars with consent of the patron and ordinary. (Co. Litt 44.) So also bishops, and deans, and such other sole ecclesiastical corporations as are seised of the fee-simple of lands in their corporate right, might, with the concurrence and confirmation of such persons as the law requires, have made leases for years, or for life, estates in tail, or in fee, without any limitation or control. And corporations aggregate might have made what estates they pleased, without the confirmation of any other person whatsoever. Whereas now, by several statutes, this power where it was unreasonable, and might be made an ill use of, is restrained: and where in the other cases the restraint by the common law seemed too hard, it is in some measure removed. The former statutes are called the RESTRAINING, the latter the ENABLING statute.

FIRST, the enabling statute, 32 Hen. 8, c. 28, empowers three manner of persons to make leases, to endure for three lives, or 21 years, which could not do so before. 1st, tenant in tail may by such leases bind his issue in tail, but not those in remainder or reversion. 2dly, a husband seised in right of his wife, in fee-simple or fee-tail, provided the wife joins in such lease, may bind her and her heirs thereby. Lastly, all persons seised of an estate of fee-simple in right of their churches, which extends not to parsons and vicars, may (without the concurrence of any other person) bind their successors: but then there must many requisites be observed, which the statute specifies, otherwise such leases are not binding. (Co. Lit. 44.) 1. The lease must be by indenture, and not by deed poll, or by parol. 2. It must begin from the making, or day of making, and not at any greater distance of time *. 3. If there be any old lease in being, it must be first absolutely surrendered, or be within a year of expiring. 4. It must be either for twenty-one years, or three lives, and not for both. 5. It must not exceed the term of three lives, or twenty-one years, but may be for a shorter term. 6. It must be of corporeal hereditaments, and not of such things as lie merely in grant; for no rent can be reserved thereout by the common law, as the lessor cannot resort to them to distrein *. 7. It must be of lands and tenements most commonly letten for twenty years past; so that if they had been let for above half the time (or eleven years out of the twenty) either for life, or for years, at will, or by copy of court roll, it is sufficient. 8. The most usual and customary feorm or rent, for twenty years past, must be reserved yearly on such lease. 9. Such leases must not be made without impeachment of waste. These are the guards, imposed by the statute (which was avowedly made for the security of farmers and the consequent improvement of tillage) to prevent unreasonable abuses, in prejudice of the issue, the wife, or the successor, of the reasonable indulgence here given.

* By various acts of parliament, and also frequently by private settlements, a power of

Next follows, in order of time, the disabling or restraining statute, 1 Eliz. c. 19.) (made entirely for the benefit of the successor) which enacts, that all grants by archbishops and bishops, (which include even those confirmed by the dean and chapter; the which, however long or unreasonable, were good at common law,) other than for the term of one-and-twenty years, or three lives from the making, or without reserving the usual rent, shall be void. Concurrent leases, if confirmed by the dean and chapter, are held to be within the exception of this statute, and therefore valid; provided they do not exceed (together with the lease in being) the term permitted by the act (Co. Lit. 45). But by a saving expressly made, this statute of 1 Eliz. did not extend to grants made by any bishop to the crown; by which means queen Elizabeth procured many fair possessions to be made over to her by the prelates, either for her own use, or with intent to be granted out again to her favourites, whom she thus gratified without any expense to herself. To prevent which for the future, the stat. 1 Jac. 1, c. 3, extends the prohibition to grants and leases made to the king as well as to any of his subjects. 11 Rep. 71.

Next comes the stat. 13 Eliz. c. 10, explained and enforced by the statutes 14 Eliz. c. 11 and 14. 18 Eliz. c. 11, and 43 Eliz. c. 29, which extend the restrictions laid by the last-mentioned stat. on bishops, to certain other inferior corporations, both sole and aggregate. From laying all which together we may collect, that all colleges, cathedrals, and other ecclesiastical, or eleemosynary corporations, and all parsons and vicars, are restrained from making any leases of their lands, unless under the following regulations: 1. They must not exceed 21 years, or three lives, from the making. 2. The accustomed rent, or more, must be yearly reserved thereon. 3. Houses in corporations, or market-towns, may be let for forty years, provided they be not the mansion-houses of the lessors, nor have above ten acres of ground belonging to them, and provided the lessee be bound to keep them in repair: and they may also be aliened in fee-simple for lands of equal value in recompence. 4. Where there is an old lease in being, no concurrent lease shall be made, unless where the old one will expire within three years. 5. No lease (by the equity of the statute) shall be made without impeachment of waste. (Co. Litt. 45.) 6. All bonds and covenants tending to frustrate the provisions of the statutes of 13 & 18 Eliz. shall be void.

Concerning these restrictive statutes there are two observations to be made. First, that they do not by any construction, enable any persons to make such leases as they were by common law disabled to make. Therefore a parson, or vicar, though he is restrained from making longer leases than for twenty-one years or three lives, even with the consent of patron and ordinary, yet is not enabled to make any lease at all, so as to bind his successor, without granted of making leases in possession, but not in reversion, for a certain term; the object being that the estate may not be incumbered by the act of the party beyond a specific time. Yet persons, who had this limited power of making leases in possession only, had frequently demised the premises to hold from the day of the date; and the court in several instances had determined that the words from the day of the date excluded the day of making the deed; and that of consequence these were leases in reversion, and void: But this question having been brought again before lord Mansfield and the court of king's bench, that learned lord proved, with his usual ability, that from the day might either be inclusive or exclusive of the day; and therefore that it ought to be construed so as to effectuate these important deeds, and not to destroy them. Pugh v. Duke of Leeds, Cowp. 714.

* But now by the stat. 5 Geo. 3, c. 17, a lease of tithes or other incorporeal hereditaments, alone, may be granted by any bishop or any such ecclesiastical or eleemosynary corporation, and the successor shall be entitled to recover the rent by an action of debt, which (in case of a freehold lease) he could not have brought at the common law.

obtaining such consent (Co. Lit. 44). Secondly, that though leases contrary to these acts are declared void, yet they are good against the lessor during his life, if he be a sole corporation; and are also good against an aggregate corporation, so long as the head of it lives, who is presumed to be the most concerned in interest. For the act was intended for the benefit of the successor only; and no man shall make an advantage of his own wrong. Ibid. 45.

There is yet another restriction with regard to college leases, by statute 18 Eliz. c. 6, which directs, that one third of the old rent, then paid, should for the future be reserved in wheat or malt, reserving a quarter of wheat for each 6*s.* 8*d.* or a quarter of malt for every 5*s.*; or that the lessees should pay for the same according to the price that wheat and malt should be sold for in the market next adjoining to the respective colleges, on the market-day before the rent becomes due. This is said (Strype's Annals of Eliz.) to have been an invention of lord treasurer Burleigh, and sir Thomas Smith, then principal secretary of state, who observing how greatly the value of money had sunk, and the price of all provisions risen, by the quantity of bullion imported from the new found Indies, (which effects were likely to increase to a greater degree,) devised this method for upholding the revenues of colleges. Their foresight and penetration has in this respect been very apparent: for, though the rent so reserved in corn was at first but one third of the old rent, or half of what was still reserved in money, yet now the proportion is nearly inverted; and the money arising from corn rents is, communibus annis, almost double to the rents reserved in money *.

The leases of beneficed clergymen are further restrained, in case of their non-residence, by statutes 13 Eliz. c. 20. 14 Eliz. c. 11. 18 Eliz. c. 11, and 43 Eliz. c. 9, which direct, that if any beneficed clergyman be absent from his cure above fourscore days in any one year, he shall not only forfeit one year's profit of his benefice, to be distributed among the poor of the parish, but that all leases made by him, of the profits of such benefice, and all covenants and agreements of like nature, shall cease and be void: † except in the case of licensed pluralists, who are allowed to demise the living on which they are non-resident to their curates only, provided such curates do not absent themselves above 40 days in any one year. If the curate leases over, the lease will become void by his absence, but not by the absence of the incumbent. Gibs. 740. See Residence.

LEASES OF THE KING. See King, and King's Grants.

LEASE and RELEASE, CONVEYANCE BY, is a mode of transferring the possession, and right or interest in lands or tenements to another.

This conveyance by lease and release was first invented by serj. Moore, soon after the statute of uses, and is now the most common of any, and therefore not to be shaken; though very great lawyers (as, particularly, Mr. Noy, attorney-gen. to Cha. 1. formerly doubted its validity, 2 Mod. 252.) It is thus contrived: a lease, or rather bargain and sale, upon some pecuniary consideration, for one year, is made by the tenant of the freehold to the lessee or bargainee. Now this, without any enrolment, makes the bargainor stand seised to the use of the bargainee, and vests in the bargainee the use of the term for a year; and then the statute immediately annexes the possession. He therefore being thus in possession, is capable of receiving a release of the freehold and reversion; which must be made to a tenant in possession: and, accordingly, the next day, a release is granted to him. This is held to supply the place of livery of seisin: and so a conveyance by lease and release is said to amount to a feoffment. Co. Litt. 270. Cro. Jac. 604.

LEAT, a mill-leat, corruptly milleat. A

* The price of a quarter of wheat being at present near 50*s.* and the colleges receiving a quarter of wheat, or its value, for every 13*s.* 4*d.* which they are paid in money, it follows that the corn rent will be in proportion to the money rent nearly as four to one.

But both these rents united are very far from the present value. Colleges therefore, in order to obtain the full value of the term, take a fine upon the renewal of their leases. It was a great object to colleges to restrain those in possession from making long leases, and impoverishing their successors by receiving the whole value of the lease by a fine at the commencement of the term.

The corn rent has made the old rent approach in some degree nearer to its present value; otherwise it should seem the principal advantage of a corn rent is to secure the lessor from the effect of a sudden scarcity of corn.

† In a late case it was determined where an incumbent had leased his rectory, and had been afterwards absent for more than 80 days in a year, that his tenant could not maintain an ejectment against a stranger who had got into possession without any right or title whatever. 2 T. R. 749.

LEET. The court-leet or view of frankpledge is a court of record, held once in the year and not oftener (Mirror, c. 1. s. 10. 4 Inst. 261. 2 Hawk. P. C. 72), within a particular hundred, lordship, or manor, before the steward of the leet: being the king's court granted by charter to the lords of those hundreds or manors. Its original intent was to view the frankpledges, that is, the freemen within the liberty; who, according to the institution of the great Alfred, were all mutually pledges for the good behaviour of each other. Besides this, the preservation of the peace, and the chastisement of divers minute offences against the public good, are the objects both of the court-leet, and the sheriff's tourn: which have exactly the same jurisdiction, one being only a larger species of the other; extending over more territory, but not over more causes. All freeholders within the precinct are obliged to attend them, and all persons commorant therein; which commorancy consists in usually lying there: a regulation, which owes its original to the laws of king Canute (part 2. c. 19.) But persons under twelve and above sixty years old, peers, clergymen, women, and the king's tenants in ancient demesne, are excused from attendance there: all others being bound to appear upon the jury, if required, and make their due presentments. It was also antiently the custom to summon all the king's subjects, as they respectively grew to years of discretion and strength, to come to the court-leet, and there take the oath of allegiance to the king. The other general business of the leet and tourn, was to present by jury all crimes whatsoever that happened within their jurisdiction; and not only to present, but also to punish, all trivial misdemesnors, as all trivial debts were recoverable in the court-baron, and county-court: justice, in these minuter matters of both kinds, being brought home to the doors of every man by our antient constitution: as in the Gothic constitution, the hærade, which answered to our court leet, "de omnibus quidem cognoscit, non tamen "de omnibus judicat (Stiernh. de jur. Goth. "l. 1. c. 2.)"

The objects of their jurisdiction are, therefore, unavoidably very numerous: being such as in some degree, either less or more, affect the public weal, or good government of the district in which they arise; from common nusances and other material offences against the king's peace and public trade, down to eavesdropping, waifs, and irregularities in public commons. But both the tourn and the leet have been for a long time in a declining way: a circumstance, owing in part to the discharge granted by the statute of Melbridge, 52 Hen. 3. c. 10. to all prelates, peers, and clergymen, from their attendance, upon these courts; which occasioned them to grow into disrepute. And hence it is that their business hath for the most part gradually devolved upon the quarter sessions: which it is particularly directed to do in some cases by statute 1 Ed. 4. c. 2.

LEETS or LEITS, meetings appointed for the nomination or elections of officers. Spots. Hist. Chu. Scotl.

LEGA ET LACTA. Anciently the allay of money was so called. Cowel. Blount.

LEGABILIS, signifies what is not entailed as hereditary; but may be bequeathed by legacy in a last will and testament. Ibid.

LEGACY. (legatum) A legacy is a bequest, or gift, of goods and chattels by testament; and the person to whom it was given, is stiled the legatee: which every person is capable of being, unless particularly disabled by the common law or statutes, as traitors, papists, and some others. This bequest transfers an inchoate property to the legatee; but the legacy is not perfect without the assent of the executor: for if I have a general or pecuniary legacy of 100*l.* or a specific one of a piece of plate, I cannot in either case take it without the consent of the executor (Co. Litt. 111. Aleyn. 39.)* For in him all the chattels are vested; and it is his business first of all to see whether there is a sufficient fund left to pay the debts of the testator: the rule of equity being, that a man must be just, before he is permitted to be generous. (Bract. l. 2. c. 26.) And in case of a deficiency of assets, all the general legacies must abate proportionably, in order to pay the debts: but a specific legacy (of a piece of plate, a horse, or the like) is not to abate at all, or allow any thing by way of abatement, unless there be not sufficient without it (2 Vern. 111.) Upon the same principle, if the legatees have been paid their legacies, they are afterwards bound to refund a rateable part, in case debts come in, more than sufficient to exhaust the residuum after the legacies paid (Ibid. 205.) And this law is as old as Bracton and Fleta, who tell us, "si plura "sint debita, vel plus legatum fuerit, ad quæ "catalla defuncti non sufficiant, fiat ubique de- "falcatio, excepto regis privilegio." (Bract. l. 2. c. 26. Flet. l. 2. c. 47. s. 11.)

If the legatee dies before the testator, the legacy is a lost or lapsed legacy, and shall sink into the residuum. And if a contingent legacy be left to any one; as when he shall attain, or if he attains the age of twenty-one, and he dies before that time, it is a lapsed legacy (Dyer 59. 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 295.) But a legacy to one, to be paid when he attains, or at the age of twenty-one years, is a vested legacy; an interest which commences in præsenti, although it be solvendum in futuro. And, if the legatee dies before that age, his representatives shall receive it out of the testator's personal estate, at the same time that it would have become payable, in case the legatee had lived.† But if such legacies be charged upon a real estate, in both cases they shall lapse for the benefit of the heir (2 P. Wms. 601.); for, with regard to devises affecting lands, the ecclesiastical court hath no concurrent jurisdiction.‡ And,

* In Deeks v. Strutt, 5 T. R. 690, it was determined, that no action can be maintained in a court of law to recover a legacy, though it had before been decided, that an action of assumpsit might have been brought against an executor in his own right, if in consideration of assets in his possession he had promised to pay the legatee the legacy. Coup. 284, 289.

But if the executor assents, an action at law may be maintained for a specific legacy, as for a lease or any other chattel. 3 East, 120.

† But where a legacy is given to another, in case the first legatee dies under twenty-one or a certain age, the legacy must be paid upon the death of the infant. And where it is not given over to another, if it bears interest, his representative shall be entitled to it immediately; but if the interest allowed by the testator is less than the interest allowed by a court of equity, the executor of the testator, shall be entitled to the difference until the first legatee would have arrived at the age prescribed by the testator. 2 P. Wms. 478. 1 Bro. 105.

A bequest of a residue or fund to all the children of A, to be paid when they shall attain the age of twenty-one, must be divided among those only who are in existence, when the eldest attains that age. 3 Bro. 404.

Where a legacy was given to the eldest child of A upon the death of B, A had at the death of B only illegitimate children, but had afterwards a legitimate child, it was held that neither could take, the first not legally answering the description, and the second not existing when the legacy was to vest. 6 Ves. jun. 43.

‡ It is generally true, that both portions created by deed or will, and legacies which are to be raised out of real property, and to be paid upon a future day, shall never be raised if the person to whom they are given dies before the day of payment. But legacies and portions in a will shall be raised, if the time of payment is postponed on account of the circumstances of the testator's estate, and not on account of the circumstances of the legatee; or where it is the apparent intention of the testator, notwithstanding the death of the legatee prior to the time specified. If the portions are to be raised out of the land, and no time is limited, although in case of a vested legacy, due immed ately, and charged on land, or money in the funds, which yield an immediate profit, interest shall be payable thereon from the testator's death; but if charged only on the personal estate, which cannot be immediately got in, it shall carry interest only from the end of the year after the death of the testator (2 P. Wms. 26, 27.) And a pecuniary legacy given by a parent to a legitimate child, shall carry interest from the death of the testator; otherwise the child might perish within the year for want of maintenance. 1 Ves. 310.

Besides these formal legacies, contained in a man's will and testament, there is also permitted another death-bed disposition of property, which is called a donation causa mortis. And that is, when a person in his last sickness, apprehending his dissolution near, delivers or causes to be delivered to another the possession of any personal goods, (under which have been included bonds, and bills drawn by the deceased upon his banker,) to keep in case of his decease; but not of other promissory notes or bills of exchange, these being choses in action which cannot pass. 3 P. Wms. 357. and 2 Ves. 431. This gift, if the donor dies, needs not the assent of his executor; yet it shall not prevail against creditors; and is accompanied with this implied trust, that, if the donor lives, the property thereof shall revert to himself, being only given in contemplation of death, or mortis causa (Prec. Chanc. 269. 1 P. Wms. 406, 441. 3 P. Wms. 357.)

For the substraction, withholding, or detaining of legacies, (which is most apparently injurious, by depriving the legatees of that right with which the laws of the land, and the will of the deceased have invested them) the spiritual court administers redress, by compelling the executor to pay them. But in this last case, the courts of equity also exercise a concurrent jurisdiction with the ecclesiastical courts, as incident to some other species of relief prayed by the complainant: as to compel the executor to account for the testator's effects, or assent to the legacy, or the like. For, as it is beneath the dignity of the king's courts to be merely ancillary to other inferior jurisdictions, the cause, when once brought there, receives there also its full determination. 3 Black. 98.

LEGALIS MONETA ANGLIÆ, lawful money of England, is gold or silver money coined or made current here by the king's authority. 1 Inst. 207.

LEGATARY, (legatarius) the person to whom any thing is bequeathed; a legatee.

LEGATE, (legatus) an ambassador or nuncio from the people. And the popes of Rome had formerly in England, the archbishops of Canterbury their legatus natus; and, upon extraordinary occasions, sent over legatus a latere. Cowel. Blount.

LEGATEE or LEGATORY, the person to whom a legacy is bequeathed.

LEGATUM, in the ecclesiastic sense, a legacy given to the church or accustomed mortuary. Cowel.

LEGEM FACERE, to make law, or oath. Ibid.

LEGERGILD. (legergildum) See Lecherwite and Lairwite.

LEGIOSUS, litigious, and so subjected to a course of law. Cowel.

LEGISLATURE. The parliament, consisting of king, lords, and commons: in which the supreme and absolute power of the state is vested by our invaluable constitution.

LEGITIMATION, (legitimatio) a making lawful or legitimate: thus naturalization, &c. makes a foreigner a lawful subject of the state. Cowel.

LEIPA, a departure from service. Cowel.

LEIRWIT, (mulcta adulteriorum. Fleta, lib. 1. cap. 7.) is used for a liberty, whereby a lord challengeth the penalty of one that lieth unlawfully with his bond-woman. Ibid.

LENT, (from the Germ. lentz, i. e. ver, the spring fast) is a time for fasting for forty days, next before Easter.

LEP AND LACE, (leppe & lasse) is a custom in the manner of Writtel in the county of Essex, that every cart which goes over Greenbury within that manor (except it be the cart of a nobleman) shall pay 4*d.* to the lord. This Greenbury is conceived to have been antiently a market-place; on which account this privilege was granted. Blount.

LEPA, a measure which contained the third part of two bushels: hence a seed-leap. Cowel.

LEPORARIUS, a greyhound for the hare. Ibid.

LEPORIUM, a place where hares were kept together. Ibid.

LEPROSO AMOVENDO, an ancient writ that lay to remove a leper or lazer, who thrusts himself into the company of his neighbours in any parish, either in the church, or at other public meetings, to their annoyance. Reg. Orig. 237. New Nat. Br. 521.

LE ROY LE VEUT, words by which the royal assent is signified by the clerk of the parliament to public bills; and to a private bill the king's answer is, soit fait comme il est desire.

to a bill, presented to the king by his houses of parliament, are understood his denial of that bill. By this means, the indecency of a positive refusal to give the royal assent to a bill passed by the lords and commons is avoided.

LESCHEWES, trees fallen by chance, or windfalls. Broke's Abr. 341.

LESIA, a leash of greyhounds, now restrained to the number of three, but formerly more. Spelm.

LESPEGEND, (Sax. les pegen) baro minor, hominibus quos Angli lespegend, nun capant Dani vero young men vocant, &c. Constitut. Canut. de Foresta, Art. 2.

LESSA, a legacy; from this word also lease is derived. Cowel.

LESSOR AND LESSEE, the parties to a lease. See Landlord and Tenant.

LESTAGE, the same as lastage.

LESTAGEFRY, lestage-free, exempt from the duty of paying ballast money. Cowel.

LESWES, or LELVES, used in Domesday, to signify pastures. Ibid.

LETARE JERUSALEM, the customary oblations made on Midlent Sunday, when the proper hymn was Lætare Jerusalem, &c. by the inhabitants within a diocese to the mother cathedral church. From the ancient custom of processions at that time, began the practice, which is still retained in many parts of England, of mothering, or going to visit parents, distributing cakes, or making feasts on Midlent Sunday. Ibid.

LETTER MISSIVE FOR ELECTING A BISHOP. A letter from the king to the dean and chapter containing the name of the person whom he would have them elect. 1 Black. 379.

LETTER MISSIVE IN CHANCERY. If a peer is a defendant in the court of chancery, the lord chancellor sends a letter missive to him to request his appearance, together with a copy of the bill; if he neglects to appear, then he may be served with a subpœna; if he continues still in contempt, a sequestration issues out immediately against his lands and goods, without any of the mesne process of attachments, &c. which are directed only against the person, therefore cannot affect a lord of parliament. The same process issues against a member of the house of commons, except that the lord chancellor doth not send him any letter missive. 3 Black. 445. See Privilege.

LETTERS OF ABSOLUTION, (litera absolutoriæ) were such in former times, when an abbot released any of his brethren ab omni subjectione & obedientia, from his order, and made them capable of entering into some other.

LETTERS OF ATTORNEY, (litera attornati) is a writing, authorising an attorney to do any lawful act in the stead of another: as to give seisin of lands; receive debts, or sue a third person, &c. and these may be either general or special. But the authority must be strictly pursued. Plowd. 475. Preced. Chanc. 125. 2 Vern. 391.

LETTERS CLAUS, (literæ clausæ) close letters, opposed to letters patent; being commonly sealed up with the king's signet or privy seal; whereas the letters patent are left open and sealed with the broad seal.

LETTER OF CREDIT, is where a merchant or correspondent writes a letter to another, requesting him to credit the bearer with a certain sum of money. Merc. Dict.

LETTERS OF EXCHANGE, (literæ cambii) Reg. Orig. 194. See Bills of Exchange.

LETTER OF LICENCE, an instrument or writing made by creditors to a man giving him longer time for the payment of his debts, and protecting him from arrests in going about his affairs.

LETTERS OF MARQUE. See Marque and Reprisal.

LETTERS PATENT, (literæ patentes) sometimes called letters overt, are writings of the king sealed with the great seal of England, whereby a person is enabled to do or enjoy that which otherwise he could not; and so called, because they are open with the seal affixed, and ready to be shewn for confirmation of the authority thereby given. 2 Black. 346.

LETTERS OF SAFE CONDUCT. See Safe Conduct.

LEVANT AND COUCHANT, a law term for cattle that have been so long in the ground of another, that they have lain down and are risen again to feed.

LEVANUM, (from the Lat. levare, to make lighter) is leavened bread. Cowel.

LEVARE FOENUM, to make hay, or properly to cast it into wind-rows, in order ad tassandum, to cock it up. Ibid.

LEVARI FACIAS, a writ directed to the sheriff for levying a sum of money upon a man's lands and tenements, goods and chattels. Reg. Orig. 298. For which see Execution.

LEUCA, is a measure of land, consisting of 1500 paces. Ingulphus tells us, it is 2000 paces, pag. 910. In the Monastic. 1 tom. p. 313. it is 480 perches.

LEUCATA, is a space of ground, as much as a mile contains. De bosco, &c. continente unam leucatam in latitudine et dimidium in longitudine. Monast. 1 tom. p. 768. And so it seems to be used in a charter of William the Conqueror to Battle Abbey. Cowel.

LEVELLUS, a level, even or upon the level. Ibid.

LEVITICAL DEGREES, the degrees of kindred prohibited by the levitical law from intermarrying with each other, are set forth in the Book of Common Prayer.

LEVY, (levare) to collect, or exact; as to levy money, sometimes to erect, or cast up; as to levy a ditch, &c. And to levy a fine of land, is the usual term.

LEVYING MONEY WITHOUT CONSENT OF PARLIAMENT. No subject of England can be constrained to pay any aids or taxes, even for the defence of the realm or the support of government, but such as are imposed by his own consent, or that of his representatives in parliament. 1 Black. 140.

LEVYING WAR AGAINST THE KING. See Treason.

LEWDNESS, is punishable by our law by fine, imprisonment, and pillory, or either. 4 Black. 64.

LEX, a law for the government of mankind in society. See Law.

LEX AMISSA, or legem amittere, viz. one who is an infamous, perjured, or outlawed person. Bracton, lib. 4. cap. 19. per. 2.

LEX APOSTA, or LEGEM APOSTATARE, is to do a thing contrary to law. Cowel.

LEX BREHONIA, the Brehon or Irish law. See Ireland.

LEX BRETOISE, the law of the ancient Britons, or Marches of Wales. Cowel.

LEX DERAISNIA. Deraisnia est lex quædam in Normannia constituta, per quam in simplicibus querelis insecutus factum, quod. a parte adversa ei objicitur, se non fecisse declarat. And it is the proof of a thing, which one denies to be done by him, where another affirms it; defeating the assertion of his adversary, and shewing it to be against reason or probability. Ibid.

LEX HOSTILIA DE FURTIS, a law amongst the Romans, by which it was provided that a prosecution for the theft of goods belonging to a person unknown, might be carried on without the intervention of the owner. Gravin. l. 3. s. 6.

LEX JUDICIALIS, is properly purgatio per judicium ferri. Cowel.

LEX SACRAMENTALIS, purgatio per sacramentum. Ibid.

LEX TALIONIS, is juris positivi; and the talionis among the Jews, were converted into pecuniary estimates, so that the price of an eye, &c. lost was allowed to the person injured. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 12. 4 Black. 12.

LEX TERRÆ, the law and custom of the land. See Law.

LEX WALLENSICA, the British law or law of Wales. See Wales.

LEY, or LEYS, the French word for law. Cowel. Blount.

LEY, LEE, LAY, whether in the beginning or end of names of places, signifies an open field, or large pasture. Cowel.

LEY-GAGER, (1 Car. 1. cap. 3.) wager of law. See Wager of Law.

LIBEL, (libellus) signifies literally a little book.

With regard to libels in general, there are, as in many other cases two remedies; one by indictment, and another by action. The former for the public offence; inasmuch as every libel has a tendency to break the peace, or provoke others to break it: which offence is the same whether the matter contained be true or false; and therefore, the defendant, on an indictment for publishing a libel, is not allowed to alledge the truth of it by way of justification (5 Rep. 125.) But in the remedy by action on the case, which is to repair the party in damages for the injury done him, the defendant may, as for words spoken, justify the truth of the facts, and shew that the plaintiff has received no injury at all (11 Mod. 99.) The same rule holds in every particular with regard to libels by writing or printing, and the civil actions consequent thereupon, as in regard to words spoken, (see Slander;) but as to signs or pictures, it seems necessary always to shew, by proper innuendoes and averments of the defendant's meaning, the import and application of the scandal, and that some special damage has followed; otherwise it cannot appear, that such libel by picture was understood to be levelled at the plaintiff, or that it was attended with any actionable consequences.

These libels (libelli famosi) taken in their largest and most extensive sense, signify any writings, pictures, or the like, of an immoral or illegal tendency; they are malicious defamations of any person, and especially a magistrate, made public by either printing, writing, signs, or pictures, in order to provoke him to wrath, or expose him to public hatred, contempt and ridicule (1 Hawk. P. C. 193.) The direct tendency of these libels is the breach of the public peace, by stirring up the objects of them to revenge, and perhaps to bloodshed. The communication of a libel to any one person is a publication in the eye of the law (Moor. 815.); and therefore, the sending an abusive private letter to a man, is as much a libel as if it were openly printed, for it equally tends to a breach of the peace (2 Brown. 151. 12 Rep. 35. Hob. 215. Popk. 139. 1 Hawk. P. C. 195.) For the same reason it is immaterial with respect to the essence of a libel, whether the matter of it be true or false (Moor. 627. 5 Rep. 125. 11 Mod. 99.); since the provocation, and not the falsity, is the thing to be punished criminally:* though, doubtless, the falsehood of it may aggravate its guilt, and enhance its punishment. For though in a civil action, the truth of the accusation may be pleaded in bar of the suit; yet, in a criminal prosecution, the tendency which all libels have to create animosities, and to disturb the public peace, is the whole that the law considers. And therefore in such prosecutions, the only points to be enquired into are, first, the making or publishing of the book or writing; and, secondly, whether the matter be criminal: and, if both these points are against the defendant, the offence against the public is complete.

But, though it has been held for more than two centuries, that the truth of a libel * is no justification in a criminal prosecution, yet in many instances it is considered an extenuation of the offence; and the court of king's bench has laid down this general rule, viz. that it will not grant an information for a libel, unless the prosecutor, who applies for it, makes an affidavit, asserting directly and pointedly, that he is innocent of the charge imputed to him. But this rule may be dispensed with, if the person libelled resides abroad, or if the imputations of the libel are general and indefinite, or if it is a charge against the prosecutor for language which he has held in parliament. Doug. 271, 372.

A person may be punished for a libel reflecting on the memory and character of the dead, but it must be alleged, and proved to the satisfaction of the jury, that the author intended by the publication to bring dishonour and contempt on the relations and descendants of the deceased. 4 T. R. 261.

And it is not a libel to publish a correct copy of the reports or resolutions of the two houses of parliament, or a true account of the proceedings of a court of justice. "For "though (as Mr. Justice Lawrence has well "observed) the publication of such proceed-"ings may be to the disadvantage of the "particular individual concerned, yet it is "of vast importance to the public that the "proceedings of courts of justice should be "universally known. The general advan-"tage to the country in having these pro-"ceedings made public, more than coun-"terbalances the inconveniences to the pri-"vate persons, whose conduct may be the "subject of such proceedings." R. v. Wright, 8 T. R. 293.

It had frequently been determined by the court of king's bench, that the only questions for the consideration of the jury, in criminal prosecutions for libels, were the fact of publication, and the truth of the innuendoes, that is, the truth of the meaning and sense of the passages of the libel, as stated and averred in the record, and that the judge or courts alone were competent to determine whether the subject of the publication was or was not a libel. 3 T. R. 428. But the legality of this doctrine having been much controverted, the 32 Geo. 3. c. 60. was passed, intituled, An act to remove doubts respecting the functions of juries in cases of libels. And it declares and enacts, that on every trial of an indictment or information for a libel, the jury may give a general verdict of guilty, or not guilty, upon the whole matter in issue, and shall not be required or directed by the judge to find the defendant guilty, merely on the proof of the publication of the paper charged to be a libel, and of the sense ascribed to it in the record. But the statute provides, that the judge may give his opinion to the jury respecting the matter in issue, and the jury may at their discretion, as in other cases, find a special verdict, and the defendant, if convicted, may move the court as before the statute, in arrest of judgment.

The sale of the libel by a servant in a shop, is prima facie evidence of publication in a prosecution against the master, and is sufficient for conviction, unless contradicted by contrary evidence, shewing that he was not privy, nor in any degree assenting to it, Ibid. and 5 Burr. 2686.

When a person is brought to receive judgment for a libel, his conduct, subsequent to his conviction, may be taken into consideration, either by way of aggravation or mitigation of the punishment. 3 T. R. 432. Accordingly when Johnson the bookseller was brought up for judgment for having published a seditious libel, the attorney-general produced an affidavit that the defendant after his conviction, had published the same libel in the Analytical Review. M. T. 1798.

LIBERA, a livery or delivery of so much grass or corn to a customary tenant, who cuts down or prepares the said grass or corn, and receives some part or small portion of it as a reward or gratuity. Cowel.

LIBERA BATELLA, signifies a free boat.

LIBERA CHASEA HABENDA, was a judicial writ granted to a person for a free chase belonging to his manor; after proof made by inquiry of a jury, that the same of right belonged to him. Reg. Orig. 36.

LIBERAM LEGUM. On trial by battal, if either champion proved recreant, i. e. yielded and pronounced the word craven, he was condemned as a recreant, amittere liberam legem, that is, to become infamous, and not be accounted liber et legalis homo, being supposed by the event to be proved forsworn, and therefore never to be put upon a jury, or admitted as a witness in any cause. 3 Black. 340, 341.

LIBERA PISCARIA, a free fishery. 2 Salk. 637. See Fish and Fisheries.

LIBER CAURUS, a free bull. Cowel. Blount.

LIBERA WARA. See Wara.

* And as truth is a greater provocation than falsehood to an irritable mind, and has the greater tendency to produce a breach of the peace from the preclusion of any redress by a civil action which might be had in the case of a falsehood, the doctrine of the greater the truth, the greater the libel upon a criminal prosecution, is certainly well founded.

LIBERATE, a writ that lies for the payment of a yearly pension or sum of money granted under the great seal, and directed to the treasurer and chamberlains of the exchequer, &c. for that purpose. In another sense, it is a writ to the sheriff of a county, for the delivery of possession of lands and goods extended, or taken upon the forfeiture of a recognizance. Also a writ issuing out of the chancery directed to a gaoler for delivery of a prisoner that hath put in bail for his appearance. F. N. B. 132. 4 Inst. 116. This writ is most commonly used for delivery of goods, &c. on an extent; and by the extent the conusee of a recognizance hath not any absolute interest in the goods, until the liberate. 2 Lil. 169. See Extent.

LIBERATIO, is taken for money, meat, drink, clothes, &c. yearly given and delivered by the lord to his domestic servants. Blount.

LIBERTAS ECCLESIASTICA. Church liberty, or ecclesiastical immunities. Cowel.

LIBERTATE PROBANDA, an ancient writ that lay for such as being demanded for villeins offered to prove themselves free; directed to the sheriff that he should take security of them for the proving of their freedom before the justices of assise, and that in the mean time they should be unmolested. F. N. B. 77.

LIBERTATIVUS ALLOCANDIS, a writ lying for a citizen or burgess, impleaded contrary to his liberty, to have his privilege allowed. Reg. Orig. 262.

LIBERTATIBUS EXIGENDIS IN ITINERE, an ancient writ whereby the king commands the justices in eyre to admit of an attorney for the defence of another man's liberty. Reg. Orig. 19.

LIBERTIES or FRANCHISES. These are synonymous terms, and their definition is, a royal privilege, or branch of the king's prerogative, subsisting in the hands of a subject. The kinds of them are various, and almost infinite. 2 Black. 37. Bracton.

LIBERTY TO HOLD PLEAS, signifies to have a court of one's own; and to hold it before a mayor, bailiff, &c. See Franchise.

LIBERTIES AND RIGHTS. The absolute rights of man, considered as a free agent, endowed with discernment to know good from evil, and with power of choosing those measures which appear to him to be most desirable, are usually summed up in one general appellation, and denominated the natural liberty of mankind. This natural liberty consists properly in a power of acting as one thinks fit, without any restraint or control, unless by the law of nature; being a right inherent in us by birth, and one of the gifts of God to man at his creation, when he endued him with the faculty of free-will. But every man, when he enters into society, gives up a part of his natural liberty, as the price of so valuable a purchase; and, in consideration of receiving the advantages of mutual commerce, obliges himself to conform to those laws, which the community has thought proper to establish. And this species of legal obedience and conformity is infinitely more desirable than that wild and savage liberty which is sacrificed to obtain it. For no man, that considers a moment, would wish to retain the absolute and uncontrolled power of doing whatever he pleases: the consequence of which is, that every other man would have the same power; and then there would be no security to individuals in any of the enjoyments of life. 1 Black. 125.

Political or civil liberty, is therefore no other than natural liberty so far restrained by human laws (and no farther) as is necessary and expedient for the general advantage of the public (Inst. 1. S. 1.) Hence we may collect that the law, which restrains a man from doing mischief to his fellow-citizens, though it diminishes the natural, increases the civil liberty of mankind; but that every wanton and causeless restraint of the will of the subject, whether practised by a monarch, a nobility, or a popular assembly, is a degree of tyranny: nay, that even laws themselves, whether made with or without our consent, if they regulate and constrain our conduct in matters of mere indifference, without any good end in view, are regulations destructive of liberty: whereas, if any public advantage can arise from observing such precepts, the control of our private inclinations, in one or two particular points, will conduce to preserve our general freedom in others of more importance; by supporting that state of society, which alone can secure our independence. So that the laws, when prudently framed, are by no means subversive but rather introductive of liberty; for (as Mr. Locke has well observed, Locke. on Gov. p. 2. s. 57.) where there is no law there is no freedom. But then, on the other hand, that constitution or frame of government, that system of laws, is alone calculated to maintain civil liberty, which leaves the subject entire master of his own conduct, except in those points wherein the public good requires some direction or restraint.

The idea and practice of this political or civil liberty flourish in their highest vigour in these kingdoms, where it falls little short of perfection, and can only be lost or destroyed by the folly or demerits of its owner: the legislature, and of course the laws of England, being peculiarly adapted to the preservation of this inestimable blessing even in the meanest subject.

However, to excite discontent, and to stir up rebellion against all good order and peaceful government, a proposition has lately been industriously propagated, viz. that ALL MEN ARE BY NATURE EQUAL. If this subject is considered even for a moment, the very reverse will appear to be the truth, and that ALL MEN ARE BY NATURE UNEQUAL. For though children come into the world equally helpless, yet in a few years, as soon as their bodies acquire vigour, and their minds and passions are expanded and developed, we perceive an infinite difference in their natural powers, capacities, and propensities; and this inequality is still further increased by the instruction which they happen to receive. Christ. n. ed. Black. 407.

Independent of any positive regulations, the unequal industry and virtues of men must necessarily create unequal rights. But it is said that all men are equal because they have an equal right to justice, or to the possession of their rights. This is a self-evident truth, which no one ever denied, and it amounts to nothing more than to the identical proposition, that all men have equal rights to their rights; for when different men have perfect and absolute rights to unequal things, they are certainly equal with regard to the perfection of their rights, or the justice that is due to their respective claims. This is the only sense in which equality can be applied to mankind. In the most perfect republic that can be conceived in theory, the proposition is false and mischievous; the father and child, the master and servant, the judge and prisoner, the general and common soldier, the representative and constituent, must be eternally unequal, and have unequal rights. Ibid.

And where every office is elective, the most virtuous and the best qualified to discharge the duties of any office, have rights and claims superior to others. Ibid.

In this happy country, the son of the lowest peasant may rise by his merit and abilities to the highest stations in the church, law, army, navy, and in every department of the state. Ib. The doctrine, that all men are, or ought to be, equal, is little less contrary to nature, and destructive of their happiness, than the invention of Procrustes, who attempted to make men equal by stretching the limbs of some, and lopping off those of others. Ibid.

But the experiment, concludes the learned annotator, has been tried on the continent, and the result has hitherto been (an awful warning to the world) a rapid succession of assassinations, judicial murders, proscriptions, and usurpation. Ibid.

But to return; these absolute rights of every Englishman, (which, taken in a political and extensive sense, are usually called their liberties,) as they are founded on nature and reason, so they are coëval with our form of government; though subject at times to fluctuate and change: their establishment (excellent as it is) being still human. At some times we have seen them depressed by overbearing and tyrannical princes; at others so luxuriant as even to tend to anarchy, a worse state than tyranny itself, as any government is better than none at all. But the vigour of our free-constitution has always delivered the nation from these embarrassments: and, as soon as the convulsions consequent on the struggle have been over, the balance of our rights and liberties has settled to its proper level; and their fundamental articles have been from time to time asserted in parliament, as often as they were thought to be in danger. 1 Black. 127.

FIRST, by the great charter of liberties, magna charta, 9 Hen. 3. cap. 29. no freeman shall be taken and imprisoned, or disseised of his freehold, or of his liberties or free-customs, or be outlawed, banished, or otherwise destroyed; nor shall the king pass upon him, but by the lawful judgment of his peers, or by the law of the land. The king shall sell to none, or deny or delay to none, right or justice. See 25 Ed. 3. st. 5. cap. 4. and 42 Ed. 3. cap. 3.

Stat. confirm. chart. 25 Ed. 1. cap. 2. if any judgment be given contrary to the great charters, it shall be undone and holden for nought.

Stat. 2 Ed. 3. cap. 8. it shall not be commanded by the great seal or the little seal, to disturb or delay common right; and though such commandments come, the justices shall not cease to do right.

Stat. 5 Ed. 3. cap. 9. no man shall be attached by any accusation, nor forjudged of life or limb, nor shall his lands or goods be seised into the king's hands against the great charter and the law of the land.

Stat. 25 Ed. 3. st. 5. cap. 4. none shall be taken by petition or suggestion made to the king or his council, unless it be by indictment of lawful people of the neighbourhood, or by process made by writ original at the common law. And none shall be put out of his franchises or freehold, unless he be duly brought to answer, and forejudged by course of law; and if any thing be done to the contrary, it shall be redressed and holden for none.

Stat. 42 Ed. 3. cap. 3. no man shall be put to answer, without presentment before justices, or matter of record of due process, or writ original, according to the ancient law of the land. And if any thing be done to the contrary, it shall be void in law, and held for error.

By 3 Car. 1. c. 1. THE PETITION OF RIGHT, levying of money without consent of parliament, molesting the subject on that account, compelling them to receive soldiers and commissions of martial law, are declared to be contrary to the lawful liberties of the subject.

By 16 Car. 1. c. 10. the court of star-chamber and all its powers were abolished.

AND LASTLY by the important BILL OF RIGHTS. Stat. 1 Wil. & Mar. st. 2. cap. 2. sect. 1. whereas the lords spiritual and temporal, and commons assembled at Westminster, representing all the estates of the people of this realm, did upon the 13th of February 1689, present unto their majesties, then prince and princess of Orange, a declaration, containing that,

The said lords spiritual and temporal, and commons, being assembled in a full and free representation of this nation, for the vindicating their ancient rights and liberties, declare,

That the pretended power of suspending of laws, or the execution of laws, by regal authority, without consent of parliament, is illegal;

That the pretended power of dispensing with laws, or the execution of laws, by regal authority, as it hath been assumed and exercised of late, is illegal;

That the commission for erecting the late court of commissioners for ecclesiastical causes, and all other commissions and courts of like nature, are illegal and pernicious;

That levying money for or to the use of the crown, by pretence of prerogative, without grant of parliament, for longer time, or in other manner than the same is or shall be granted, is illegal;

That it is the right of the subjects to petition the king, and all commitments and prosecutions for such petitioning, are illegal;

That the raising or keeping a standing army within the kingdom in time of peace, unless it be with consent of parliament, is against law;

That the subjects which are protestants may have arms for their defence suitable to their conditions, and as allowed by law;

That election of members of parliament ought to be free;

That the freedom of speech, and debates or proceedings in parliament, ought not to be impeached or questioned in any court or place out of parliament;

That excessive bail ought not to be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted;

That jurors ought to be duly impannelled and returned, and jurors which pass upon men in trials for high treason ought to be freeholders;

That all grants and promises of fines and forfeitures of particular persons before conviction, are illegal and void;

And for redress of all grievances, and for the amending, strengthening and preserving of the laws, parliaments ought to be held frequently.

And they do claim, demand, and INSIST UPON all and singular the premises, as their UNDOUBTED RIGHTS AND LIBERTIES; and that no declarations, judgments, doings, or proceedings, to the prejudice of the people in any of the said premises, ought in any wise to be drawn hereafter into consequence or example;

Sect. 6. All and singular the rights and liberties asserted and claimed in the said declaration are the true, ancient and indubitable RIGHTS AND LIBERTIES of the people of this kingdom, and so shall be esteemed, allowed, adjudged, and taken to be; and all the particulars aforesaid shall be firmly holden as they are expressed in the said declaration; and all officers shall serve their majesties according to the same in all times to come.

Sect. 12. No dispensation by non obstante of any statute shall be allowed, except a dispensation be allowed of in such statute; and except in such cases as shall be specially provided for during this session of parliament.

Sect. 13. No charter granted before the 23d of October 1689, shall be invalidated by this act, but shall remain of the same force as if this act had never been made.

LIBERTY OF THE PRESS. Factious demagogues have ever exclaimed against the prosecutions for libels in matter of political controversy as endangering the liberty of the press; but although in all instances blasphemous, immoral, treasonable, schismatical, seditious or scandalous libels, are punished by the English law, some with a greater, others with a less degree of severity: yet by this, the LIBERTY OF THE PRESS, properly understood, is by no means infringed or violated. The liberty of the press is indeed essential to the nature of a free state, but this liberty consists in laying no previous restraints upon publications, not as foolishly imagined in a freedom from all censure for criminal matter when once published. 1 Black. 152.

For every freeman has, according to the law of England, an undoubted right to lay what sentiments he pleases before the public: to forbid, to prohibit this, is to destroy the freedom of the press: but if he publishes what is improper, mischievous, or illegal, he must take the consequence of his own temerity. Ibid.

To subject the press to the restrictive power of a licenser, as was formerly done, both before and since the revolution,* is to subject all freedom of sentiment to the prejudices of one man, and make him the arbitrary and infallible judge of all controverted points in learning, religion, and government. But to punish (as the law does at present) any dangerous or offensive writings, which, when published, shall on a fair and impartial trial be adjudged of a pernicious tendency, is necessary for the preservation of peace and good order, of government and religion, the only solid foundations of civil liberty. Thus the will of individuals is still left free; the abuse only of that free will is the object of legal punishment. Neither is any restraint hereby laid upon freedom of thought or inquiry: liberty of private sentiment is still left; the disseminating, or making public, of bad sentiments, destructive of the ends of society, is the crime which society corrects. A man (says a fine writer on this subject) may be allowed to keep poisons in his closet, but not publicly to vend them as cordials. And to this we may add, that the only plausible argument heretofore used for the restraining the just freedom of the press, "that it was necessary to "prevent the daily abuse of it," will entirely lose its force, when it is shewn (by a seasonable exertion of the laws) that the press can-duction, was looked upon (as well in England as in other countries) as merely a matter of state, and subject to the coërcion of the crown. It was therefore regulated with us by the king's proclamations, prohibitions, charters of privilege and of licence, and finally by the decrees of the court of star-chamber; which limited the number of printers, and of presses which each should employ, and prohibited new publications, unless previously approved by proper licensers. On the demolition of this odious jurisdiction in 1641, the long parliament of Charles I. after their rupture with that prince, assumed the same powers as the star-chamber exercised with respect to the licensing of books: and in 1643, 1647, 1749, and 1652, (Scobell. i. 44. 134. ii. 88. 230.) issued their ordinances for that purpose, founded principally on the star-chamber decree of 1637. In 1662 was passed the statute 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 33. which (with some few alterations) was copied from the parliamentary ordinances. This act expired in 1679, but was revived by statute 1 Jac. 2. c. 17. and continued till 1692. It was then continued for two years longer by statute 4 W. & M. c. 24. but though frequent attempts were made by the government to revive it, in the subsequent part of that reign (Com. Journ. 11 Feb. 1694. 26 Nov. 1695. 22 Oct. 1696. 9 Feb. 1697. 31 Jan. 1698.), yet the parliament resisted it so strongly, that it finally expired, and the press became properly free in 1694, and has ever since so continued.—But see Printers.

not be abused to any bad purpose, without incurring a suitable punishment; whereas it never can be used to any good one, when under the controul of an inspector. So true will it be found, that to censure the licentiousness, is to maintain the liberty of the press. 4 Black. 153.

LIFE, is the immediate gift of God, a right inherent by nature in every individual, and under the peculiar protection of the law. Wood's Inst. 11. See Homicide.

LIFE ESTATE. Estates for life, expressly created by deed or grant (which alone are properly conventional), are, 1. Where a lease is made of lands or tenements to a man, to hold for the term of his own life, or for that of any other person, or for more lives than one; in any of which cases he is styled tenant for life, only when he holds the estate by the life of another he is usually called tenant pur auter vie. These estates for life are, like inheritances, of a feodal nature, and they are given or conferred by the same feodal rites and solemnities, the same investiture or livery of seisin, as fees themselves are, and they are held by fealty, if demanded, and such conventional rents and services as the lord or lessor, and his tenant or lessee, have agreed on. Lit. s. 56.

Estates for life may be created, not only by the express words before mentioned, but also by a general grant, without defining or limiting any specific estate. As, if one grants to A. B. the manor of Dale, this makes him tenant for life. (Co. Litt. 42.) For though, as there are no words of inheritance, or heirs, mentioned in the grant, it cannot be construed to be a fee; it shall however be construed to be as large an estate as the words of the donation will bear, and therefore an estate for life. Also such a grant at large, or a grant for term of life generally, shall be construed to be an estate for the life of the grantee, (Ibid.) In case the grantor hath authority to make such a grant: for an estate for a man's own life is more beneficial and of a higher nature than for any other life; and the rule of law is, that all grants are to be taken most strongly against the grantor (Ibid. 36), unless in the case of the king.

Such estates for life will, generally speaking, endure as long as the life for which they are granted: but there are some estates for life which may determine upon future contingencies, before the life, for which they are created, expires. As, if an estate be granted to a woman during her widowhood, or to a man until he be promoted to a benefice; in these, and similar cases, whenever the contingency happens, when the widow marries, or when the grantee obtains a benefice, the respective estates are absolutely determined and gone. (Co. Litt. 42. 3 Rep. 20.) Yet, while they subsist, they are reckoned estates for life; because, the time for which they will endure being uncertain, they may by possibility last for life, if the contingencies upon which they are to determine do not sooner happen. And, moreover, in case an estate be granted to a man for his life, generally, it may also determine by his civil death: as if he enters into a monastery, whereby he is dead in law (2 Rep. 48. Co. Litt. 132); for which reason in conveyances the grant is usually made "for the term of a man's natural life;" which can only determine by his natural death. Ibid.

The incidents to an estate for life are principally the following; which are applicable not only to that species of tenants for life, which are expressly created by deed, but also to those, which are created by act and operation of law.

1. Every tenant for life, unless restrained by covenant or agreement, may of common right take upon the land demised to him reasonable estovers, or botes (Co. Lit. 41,); for he hath a right to the full enjoyment and use of the land, and all its profits, during his estate therein. But he is not permitted to cut down timber or do other waste upon the premises (Ibid. 53.) : for the destruction of such things as are not the temporary profits of the tenement, is not necessary for the tenant's complete enjoyment of his estate; but tends to the permanent and lasting loss of the person entitled to the inheritance. Co. Litt. 41. 53, 55.

But tenant for life, without impeachment of waste, has full power to cut timber as if he had an estate of inheritance, and is in the same manner entitled to the timber if owned by others. 1 Ter. Rep. 56. Harg. Co. Lit. but he cannot commit wilful spoil and deastation, as by pulling down houses, or destroying ornamental trees. 2 Vern. 738. 1 Bro. 166. 3 Bro. 549. 6 Ves. Jun. 107.

2. Tenant for life, or his representatives shall not be prejudiced by any sudden determination of his estate, because such a determination is contingent and uncertain. (Co. Lit. 55.) Therefore if a tenant for his own life sows the lands, and dies before harvest, his executors shall have the emblements, or profits of the crop : for the estate was determined by the act of God; and it is a maxim in the law, that actus Dei nemini facit injuriam. Co. Litt. 55.

3. A third incident to estates for life relates to the under-tenants or lessees. For they have the same and in some instances greater indulgences than their lessors, the original tenants for life.

THE SAME; for the law of estovers and emblements, with regard to the tenant for life, is also law with regard to his under-tenant, who represents him and stands in his place (Co. Litt. 55.): and GREATER; for in those cases where tenant for life shall not have the emblements, because the estate determines by his own act, the exception shall not reach his lessee who is a third person. As in the case of a woman who holds durante viduitate; her taking husband is her own act, and therefore deprives her of the emblements: but if she leases her estate to an under-tenant, who sows the land, and she then marries, this her act shall not deprive the tenant of his emblements, who is a stranger and could not prevent her. Cro. Eliz. 461. 1 Roll. Abr. 727. The lessees of tenants for life had also at the common law another most unreasonable advantage; for, at the death of their lessors, the tenants for life, these under-tenants might if they pleased quit the premises, and pay no rent to any body for the occupation of the land since the last quarter day, or other day assigned for payment of rent. (10 Rep. 127.) To remedy which it is now enacted. (by Stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. sec. 15,) that the executors or administrators of tenant for life, on whose death any lease determined, shall recover of the lessee a rateable proportion of rent, from the last day of payment to the death of such lessor.

This act is confined to the death of the landlord, who holds for his own life; and therefore, it seems if tenant pur autre vie leases, and the cestui que vie dies, the lessee is not compellable to pay any rent from the last day of payment before the death of cestui que vie. 10 Rep. 128.

LIFE-RENT, a rent which a man receives for term of life, or for sustentation of it. Skene.

LIGEANCE, LIGEANCY, (ligeantia) is such a duty or fealty as no man may owe or bear to more than one lord; and therefore it is used for that duty and allegiance which every good subject owes to his liege lord the king. Co. Lit. 129.

LIGHTERMEN, persons employed in the carrying of goods to and from ships, in barges or lighters on the river Thames. Cowel.

LIGHT-HOUSE, a building erected near the sea shore, wherein a fire, or large and strong light, is kept in the night-time, for direction to ships at sea. 1 Black. 264.

LIGHTS, stopping. If a man erect a house or other building so near to mine that it stops up my ancient lights and windows, this is a private nuisance, for which an action will lie (9 Rep. 58); but in this case it is necessary that the windows be ancient: that is, have subsisted there time out of mind; otherwise there is no injury done; for he has as much right to build a new edifice upon his ground usque ad cœlum, as I have upon mine; since every man may do what he pleases upon the upright or perpendicular of his own soil; and it was my folly to build so near another's ground. Cro. Eliz. 118. Salk. 459.

LIGNAGIUM, the right which a man had to cut fuel in woods; sometimes a tribute, or payment due for the same. Cowel.

LIGNAMINA, timber fit for building. Du Fresne.

LIGULA, a copy or transcript of a court-roll, or deed. Cowel.

LIGURITOR, a flatterer, sometimes a glutton. Ibid.

LIMBS. The limbs as well as the life of a man are of such high value, in the estimation of the law of England, that it pardons even homicide, if committed se defendendo, or in order to preserve them. 1 Black. Com. 130.

LIMITATION, (limitatio) is a certain time assigned by statute, within which an action must be brought.

1. In real actions.] By 32 Hen. 8, c. 2, it is enacted, "That no person shall from thenceforth sue, have or maintain any writ of right, or make any prescription, title or claim to or for any manors, lands, tenements, rents, annuities, commons, pensions, portions, corodies, or other hereditaments, of the possession of his or their ancestor or predecessor, and declare and allege any further seisin or possession of his ancestor or predecessor, but only of the seisin or possession of his ancestor or predecessor which hath been or now is, or shall be seised of the said manors, lands, tenements, rents, annuities, commons, pensions, portions, corodies, or other hereditaments, within three-score years next before the teste of the same writ, or next before the said prescription, title or claim so hereafter to be sued, commenced, brought, made or had. s. 1.

"That no manner of person shall sue, have or maintain any assise of mort d'ancestor, cosenage, ayle, writ of entry upon disseisin, done to any of his ancestors or predecessors, or any manors, lands, tenements or other hereditaments, of any further seisin or possession of his or their ancestor or predecessor, but only of the seisin or possession of his or their ancestor or predecessor, which was or hereafter shall be seised of the same manors, lands, tenements, or other hereditaments, within fifty years next before the teste of the original of the same writ hereafter to be brought. s. 2.

"That no person shall sue, have or maintain any action for any manors, lands, tenements, or other hereditaments, of or upon his or their own seisin or possession therein, above thirty years next before the teste of the original of the same writ hereafter to be brought. s. 3.

"That no person shall hereafter make any avowry or cognizance for any rent, suit or service, and allege any seisin of any rent, suit, or service, in the same avowry or cognizance in the possession of any other, whose estate he shall pretend or claim to have, above fifty years next before the making of the said avowry or cognizance." s. 4.

It is further enacted by the said st. par. 5. "That all formedons in reverter, formedons in remainder, and scire facias upon fines of any manors, lands, tenements, or other hereditaments, at any time hereafter to be sued, shall be sued and taken within fifty years next after the title and cause of action fallen, and at no time after the fifty years past.

By 1 Mar. c. 5, it is enacted, "That the 32 Hen. 8, c. 2, shall not extend to any writ of right of advowson, quare impedit, or assise of darrein presentment, nor jus patronatus, nor to any writ of right of ward, writ of ravishment of ward for the wardship of the body, or for the wardship of any castles, honours, manors, lands, tenements or hereditaments holden by knights service, but that such suits may be brought as before the making of the said act.

By the 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, for quieting mens estates, and avoiding of suits, it is enacted, "that all writs of formedon in descender, formedon in remainder, and formedon in reverter, at any time hereafter to be sued or brought of or for any manors, lands, tenements or hereditaments, whereunto any person or persons now hath or have any title, or cause to have or pursue any such writ, shall be sued and taken within twenty years next after the end of this present session of parliament; and after the said 20 years expired, no person or persons, or any of their heirs, shall have or maintain any such writ of or for any of the said manors, lands, tenements or hereditaments; and that all writs of formedon in descender, formedon in remainder, formedon in reverter, of any manors, lands, tenements or other hereditaments whatsoever, at any time hereafter to be sued or brought by occasion or means of any title, or cause hereafter happening, shall be sued, and taken within 20 years next after the title and cause of action first descended or fallen, and at no time after the said 20 years; and that no person or persons that now hath any right or title of entry into any manors, lands, tenements or hereditaments, now held from him or them, shall thereinto enter, but within 20 years next after the end of this present session of parliament, or within 20 years next after any other title of entry accrued; and that no person or persons shall at any time hereafter make any entry into any lands, tenements or hereditaments, but within 20 years next after his or their right or title, which shall hereafter first descend or accrue to the same; and in default thereof such persons so not entering, and their heirs, shall be utterly excluded, and disabled from such entry after to be made, any former law,' &c.

Provided, that "if any person be entitled to "such writs, or that hath such right or "title of entry, shall be, at the time of "the said right or title first descended, accrued, come or fallen, within the age of "21 years, feme covert, non compos mentis, "imprisoned, or beyond the seas, then such "person and his and their heirs shall, notwithstanding the said 20 years be expired, bring "his action, or make his entry, as he might "have done before this act, so as such "person or his heirs shall within 10 years "next after his full age, discoverture, coming of sound mind, enlargement out "of prison, or coming into this realm, or "death, take benefit of and sue forth the "same, and at no time after the said 10 "years." s. 2.

Also by 9 Geo. 3, c. 16, the crown is in like manner as a subject now disabled to sue for lands (except liberties or franchises) where the right has not first accrued within 60 years before the suit: and the subject is secured in the free enjoyment against the crown, and all others claiming by grant or on suggestion of concealment, if no judgment within 60 years before the suit.

2. In penal actions. By the 31 Eliz. c. 5, par. 5, it is enacted, "That all actions, suits, bills, indictments or informations, which shall be brought for any forfeiture upon any statute penal, made or to be made, whereby the forfeiture is or shall be limited to the crown, shall be brought within two years after the offence; and that all actions, suits, bills or informations, which shall be brought for any forfeiture upon any penal statute, made or to be made, except the statutes of tillage, the benefit and suit whereof is or shall be by the said statute limited to the queen, her heirs or successors, and to any other that shall prosecute in that behalf, shall be brought by any person that may lawfully sue for the same within one year next after the offence committed; and in default of such pursuit that then the same shall be brought for the queen's majesty, her heirs or successors, any time within the two years after that year ended. Where a shorter time is limited by any penal statute, the prosecution must be that time."

And the 18 Eliz. c. 5, requires a memorandum of the day of exhibiting an information, and 21 Jac. 1, c. 4, an oath from the informer.

3. In personal actions and suits. By the 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, it is enacted, That "all "actions on the case for words shall be "commenced and sued within two years "next after the words spoken, and not "after."

And by 27 Geo. 3, c. 44, "suits in eccle- "siastical courts for defamatory words shall "be commenced within 6 months."

By the 21 Jac. 1. c. 16, it is also enacted, "that all actions of trespass, of assault, "battery, wounding, imprisonment, or any "of them, shall be commenced and sued "within 4 years next after the cause of "such actions or suits, and not after."

Also by 27 Geo. 3. c. 44, "for fornica- "tion, or incontinence, or for striking or "brawling in any church or church-yard, "within 8 months, and there shall be no "prosecution for fornication after the par- "ties have intermarried."

By 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, it is also enacted, that "all actions of trespass quare clausum "fregit, all actions of trespass, detinue, ac- "tion sur trover and replevin for taking "away of goods and chattels, all actions of "account, other than such accounts as con- "cern the trade of merchandize between "merchant and merchant, their factors or "servants, all actions on the case, (other "than for slander), all actions of debt "grounded upon any lending or contract "without specialty, all actions of debt for "arrearages of rent within six years, next "after the cause of action."

Provision is made for femes covert, persons that are non-compos, imprisoned, or beyond sea, in case they bring the action within the same time after the disability removed.

4. On writs of error. By 10 & 11 Will. 3, c. 14, no fine, recovery, or judgment, shall be reversed unless a writ of error be brought within 20 years after obtained, but persons disabled by infancy, or otherwise, shall bring such writ of error within five years after the disability is removed.

LIMITATION OF THE CROWN. See King.

LIMITATION OF ESTATE. A limitation of estate, which Littleton denominates also a condition in law, is when an estate is so expressly confined and limited by the words of its creation, that it cannot endure for any longer time, than till the contingency happens, upon which the estate is to fail, this is denominated a limitation; as when land is granted to a man so long as he is parson of Dale, or while he continues unmarried, or until out of the rents and profits he shall have made 500*l.* and the like; in such case the estate determines as soon as the contingency happens (when he ceases to be parson, marries a wife, or has received the 500*l.*), and the next subsequent estate, which depends upon such determination, becomes immediately vested, without any act to be done by him who is next in expectancy. Lit. s. 380. 1 Inst. 234. 10 Rep. 41, 42.

LIVERY, (Fr. livre, i. e. insigne gestamen, or liverer, i. e. tradere) hath three significations: 1st. it is used for a suit of clothes, cloak, gown, hat, &c. which a nobleman or gentleman gives to his servants or followers, mentioned in 1 Ric. 2, c. 7, and other statutes.

2dly, Livery signifies a delivery of possession to those tenants who held of the king in capite, or knights service; as the king by his prerogative hath primer seisin of all lands and tenements so holden of him. Staundf. Prærog. 12.

3dly, Livery was the writ which laid for the heir of age to obtain the possession or seisin of his lands at the king's hands. F. N. B. 155. But by the statute 12 Car. 2, c. 24, all wardships are taken away.

LIVERY OF SEISIN, (liberatio seisinæ) is a delivery of possession of lands, tenements and hereditaments, unto one that hath a right to the same; being a ceremony in the common law used in the conveyance of lands, &c. where an estate of fee-simple, fee-tail, or other freehold passes. Bract. lib. 2, cap. 18. West. Symb. par. 1. lib. 2. And it is a testimonial of the willing departing of him who makes the livery, from the thing whereof the livery is made, and of the willing acceptance of the other party receiving the livery, first invented that the common people might have knowledge of the passing or alteration of estates from man to man, and thereby be better able to try in whom the right of possession of lands and tenements were, if the same should be contested, and they should be empanelled on juries, or otherwise have to do concerning the same. Ibid.

Of livery of seisin there are two kinds, 1st. a livery in deed; and 2dly, livery in law.

1. Livery in deed is when the feoffor takes the ring of the door, &c. and delivers the same to the feoffee, in the name of seisin of the whole. 1 Inst. 48. 6 Rep. 26. Wood's Inst. 237.

2. Livery in law is when the feoffor himself, being in view of the house or land, says to the feoffee, after delivery of the deed, "I give to you yonder land, &c. to you and your heirs; go into the same, and take possession accordingly." 1 Inst. 48, 52. 181. 3 Rep. 26.

But no person ought to be in the house, or upon the land, when livery is made, but the feoffor and feoffee. Cro. Eliz. 321. Dalis. Rep. 94.

Livery and seisin is necessary in a feoffment of leases for life or lives, or more properly speaking, years determinable upon a life or lives *, or a lease for years, remainder to another for life, in tail or in fee, particularly in the latter, for without livery and seisin nothing passes to him in remainder. Lit. 60. 1 Inst. 49. Wood's Inst. 238. 4 Leon. 67. 2 Rol. Rep. 109. Moor 14. 5 Rep. 91. 1 Inst. 52.

But since the introduction of the conveyance by lease and release, bargain and sale by deed inrolled, exchange, &c. by which a freehold passes without livery, (1 Inst. 49,) livery and seisin is not so commonly used as formerly. 29 Car. 2, c. 3. 2 Black. 311.

LIVERY AND OUSTER LE MAIN, is where, by inquest before the escheator, it was found that nothing was held of the king, then he was immediately commanded by writ to put from his hands the lands taken into the king's hands. Stat. 29 Ed. 1. 28 Ed. 3, c. 4. Vide Ouster le Main.

LOLLARDS, so called from one Walter Lollard, a German, at the head of them, who lived about the year 1315. They were certain heretics, (in the opinion of those times) that abounded here in England in the reigns of king Edw. 3, and Hen. 5, whereof Wickliff was the chief in this nation. Stow's Annals, 425. And their intent was to subvert the Christian faith, the law of God, the church, and the realm. 2 Hen. 5, c. 7; but this stat. was repealed by 1 Ed. 6, c. 12. 3 Inst. 41.

LOLLARDY, the doctrine and opinion of the Lollards. 1 & 2 Phil. & Mar. c. 6. 4 Black. Com. 47.

LONDON, the metropolis of that part of the united kingdom, called England, formerly called Augusta, has been built above 3000 years, and flourished for 1500 years. Stow.

It is divided into 26 wards, over each of which there is an alderman, and is governed by a lord mayor, who is chosen yearly, and presented to the king, or in his absence to his justices, or the barons of the Exchequer at Westminster. Chart. k. Hen. 3.

The lord mayor of London for the time being is chief justice of gaol delivery, escheator within the liberties, and bailiff of the river Thames. He is a high officer in the city, having all courts for distribution of justice under his jurisdiction, viz. the court of hustings, sheriffs court, mayor's court, court of common council, &c. 2 Inst 330.

The local privileges of the city of London are too numerous to be set forth, but the following is an accurate summary of the statutes relating to this vast city, and its domestic polity.

In general.] By Mag. Chart. 9 Hen. 3, c. 9. and 14 Ed. 3, st. 1. c. 1. the liberties of the city of London are confirmed.

By 13 Ed. 1, stat. 5, it is commanded that no person be found walking the streets of London with sword and buckler after curfew, unless great lords, or persons known, with lights. No tavern shall be open after curfew. No school of fencing and buckler shall be kept in London on 40 days imprisonment. Evil doers imprisoned shall not be delivered by the sheriff, but by award of the mayor and aldermen. No stranger shall keep inns in the city. Ministers in the city shall not be punished for imprisoning offenders, unless done for malice, and not for keeping the peace.

By 10 Edw. 2, stat. 1. lords of rents in London may recover them in the hustings by a writ of gavelet, and on default the lands in demesne.

By 28 Edw. 3, c. 10, misprision of the mayor, sheriffs, and aldermen of London, in not redressing errors, shall be tried by inquest of neighbouring counties, and they shall be fined 1000 marks for the first offence, 2000 for the second, and for the third forfeit the franchise.

But by 1 Hen. 4, c. 15, the penalties inflicted by the last act shall hereafter be according to the discretion of the justices.

By 1 Hen. 4, c. 10, merchants of London shall be as free to pack their cloths as other merchants.

By 3 Hen. 7, c. 9, citizens and freemen of London may carry their wares to any fair or market, and any bye-law to the contrary shall be void.

By 35 Hen. 8, c. 10, the mayor and commonalty of London may enter lands to lay and amend water-pipes, making recompense to the owner; not to withdraw any water that is brought to any person's house; shall pay to the bishop of Westminster a pound of pepper yearly as an acknowledgment for fetching water from Hampstead heath; but they are not to meddle with the enclosed spring at the foot of the heath.

By 3 Jac. 1, c. 18. and 4 Jac. 1, c. 12, the lord mayor and commonalty of London were empowered to lay out ground for making a trench for the new river, making recompense to the owners of ground. Also 12 Geo. 2, c. 32.

By 7 Jac. 1, c. 9, the corporation of Chelsea College were enabled to cut a drain out of the river Lee, at Hackney, to convey water to London in pipes.

By 2 Will. & Mar. stat. 1, c. 8, the judgment in quo warranto was reversed, and the corporation of London restored to all its rights and privileges.

By 8 Geo. 1, c. 26, the commissioners of Chelsea water-works were incorporated, saving the rights of the New-River company.

By 6 Geo. 2, c. 22, the lord mayor and citizens of London were empowered to fill up part of Fleet Ditch, and the inheritance of the ground was vested in them.

By 29 Geo. 2, c. 40, the mayor and common council were empowered to purchase and remove buildings, to improve, widen, and enlarge the passage over and through London bridge.

——— Aldermen.] By 17 Ric. 2, c. 11, the alderman shall not be elected yearly, but remain until put out for just cause.

——— Attaint.] By 11 Hen. 7, c. 21, attaint may be sued by bill in the hustings of London, upon any false verdict given in any of the courts of that city. If the petty jury be attainted, judgment shall be given against the defendant as at common law, and against the jury, to forfeit each of them 20*l.* If a debt be recovered in the first action, and that verdict be found false, the plaintiff shall have restitution, but if the verdict be affirmed, the plaintiff shall be imprisoned and fined.

By 37 Hen. 8, c. 5, persons worth 400 marks in goods may be impanelled in attaints in London, and attaints in London shall be tried there only.

——— Bakers.] By 34 Geo. 3, c. 61, no baker in London, or within 12 miles thereof, shall work on Sunday, except as hereinafter mentioned, on penalty of 10*s.* to be levied by distress and sale on complaint made within 6 days, to be paid over to the churchwardens and overseers of the parish. s. 1, 3, 4.

But bakers may sell bread, and bake meat, puddings, or pies, only between 9 in the forenoon, and 1 in the afternoon, so as the party carry the same to and from the place where they are baked. s. 2.

By 48 Geo. 3, c. lxx, so much of 31 Geo. 2, (see general title Bread) as relates to the weighing of bread, and punishing of persons for deficiency of weight within the weekly bills of mortality, and within 10 miles of the Royal Exchange, except as hereafter, is repealed. s. 1.

And if any person within such limits shall make, send out, sell, or expose to sale, any bread deficient in weight, the justice before whom any information shall be given on oath, and any peace-officer, under a warrant, may enter the premises in the daytime to search for and try all bread baked within 24 hours, and which may be weighed by the bushel, or in any larger or smaller quantity; and if any deficiency shall be found in its due weight in the average of the whole weight, to be proved on oath before such justice, then the offender shall forfeit not exceeding 5*s.* nor less than 1*s.* per ounce, and in proportion for less than an ounce; and all loaves so deficient shall be seized, unless it be proved that the deficiency arose from unavoidable accident. s. 1.

Bakers of bread are to keep scales and weights in their shops, that buyers may weigh if they think fit, on pain of not exceeding 20*s.* nor less than 5*s.* s. 2, 3.

No master or journeyman baker within London or 12 miles of the city, shall on the Lord's day make or bake bread, rolls, or cakes of any sort, or on any part of that day, except between 9 and 1, sell or expose to sale any bread, rolls, or cakes, or bake or deliver any meat, pudding, pie, tart or victuals except as hereinafter mentioned, or in any manner exercise the business of a baker, except in setting sponge for the next day, and any person offending or making any sale or delivery hereby allowed, otherwise than within his bake house or shop, shall on conviction, either upon view of the justice, or oath, forfeit for the first offence 10*s.* the second, 20*s.* and for every subsequent offence 40*s.* together with costs, and also an allowance to the prosecutor, for loss of time, of 3*s.* per day; the residue to be paid to the justice within 7 days, transmitted by him to the churchwardens and overseers, and if the whole be not paid within 14 days, the same may be levied by distress; and for want of sufficient, the offender is to be committed, for the first offence, to the house of correction for 7 days; a second, for 14 days, and for any subsequent one, for 1 month. s. 5.

But bakers within the limits aforesaid may deliver to their customers bakings until half past one. Ibid.

The rights of the city of London, the bakers company, Westminster, Southwark, and courts leet, are saved. s. 6.

——— Ballastage.] By 45 Geo. 3, c. xcviii, the acts 6 Geo. 2, c. 29, and 32 Geo. 2, c. 16, are repealed. s. 1. And the sole right of supplying with ballast, all ships and vessels that shall pass and repass in the river Thames between London bridge and the main, and of raising gravel, sand, and soil of the Thames, for that purpose, is vested in the corporation of the Trinity house. s. 2.

Persons supplying or taking ballast, except for the corporation, to forfeit 10*l.* s. 2, 3.

But king's ships are allowed to take sea ballast or any other ballast. s. 4.

Land ballast may be shipped eastward of Woolwich, on paying one penny per ton to the corporation; ballast-men are to be subject to bye-laws to be made by the corporation, but the rights of the corporation of London are saved. s. 37—41.

Ballast-men wilfully and maliciously attempting to destroy ships, lighters, or boats, or cutting cables, are guilty of felony, and to be transported for 7 years; or fined and imprisoned for not exceeding 2 years. s. 33.

——— Bargain and Sale.] By 33 Geo. 2. c. 30. bargains and sales of land, in London, enrolled in the hustings of the city, by virtue of the act for widening the streets, shall have the operation of a fine or recovery.

——— Blackwell Hall.] By 4 & 5 Phil. & Mar. cap. 5. cloth sealed shall not be searched in Blackwell Hall market during the time of such market.

By 39 Eliz. c. 20, northern cloths brought to London for sale shall be brought to Blackwell Hall to be searched dry, and out of market time, upon pain of 40*s.* for not carrying them there, and 5*l.* for searching them during the market.

By 8 and 9 Will. 3, c. 9, the public market of Blackwell Hall shall be held every Thursday, Friday, and Saturday. Factors selling cloth out of the market to forfeit 5*l.* Hall-keepers, clerks, and master porters, not keeping weekly registers of cloths bought and sold, to forfeit likewise 10*l.* Factors selling cloth in trust, and not transmitting to the owners the buyer's note for the money, in 12 days, liable to forfeit double the value. Buyers neglecting to give such note, on request, within 8 days, to forfeit 20*s.* for every cloth sold; and if the cloth is not returned within 8 days, the same to be deemed as approved by the buyer. All contracts allowing longer time void.

By 1 Geo. 1, stat. 2, c. 15, a table 30 yards in length, with an inch to each, shall be provided in Blackwell Hall, for measuring Medly broad cloth.

The buyer shall give notice to the seller when the cloth is to be wetted, and if he does not attend, the buyer may proceed to prove the cloth, and the keeper of Blackwell Hall shall measure the same, and his certificate thereof shall be the rule of payment to the buyer, and a conviction of the party offending. Ibid.

None but the owner of the cloth unsatisfied, shall sue the factor for not demanding notes pursuant to 8 & 9 W. 3, and the prosecutions must be in 12 months after the offence.

——— Bowyers.] By 8 Eliz. c. 10, every bowyer in London shall keep 50 bows of elm, witch, hazel, or ash, on pain of 10*s.* a bow.

——— Brokers.] By 13 Ed. 1. stat. 5, no brokers shall be in London but those who are admitted and sworn by the mayor and aldermen.

By 1 Jac. 1. c. 21, no pawn or sale to a broker in London, or within 2 miles thereof, shall alter the property of goods wrongfully taken; and broker on demand shall manifest what goods are come to his hands, on forfeiture of double the value.

By 6 Ann. c 16, brokers in London are to pay 40*s.* to the chamberlain of London on their admittance, and also 40*s.* yearly, on pain of 25*l.* to the corporation for acting without.

——— Buildings.] By 11 Geo 3, c. 26, the corporation may grant licenses to the owners of leases, whereof 35 years or upwards are to come, of houses adjoining to the late Bridewell Dock, to build, but not to others.

By 14 Geo. 3, c. 78, all buildings whatsoever, heretofore built, or to be built hereafter within London and Westminster, and bills of mortality, the parishes of St. Mary-le-bone, Paddington, Pancras, and Chelsea, shall be divided into the seven rates following, that is to say, churches, chapels, meeting-houses, or places of public worship; still-houses, brew-houses, soap-houses, houses for melting tallow, dying, sugar-houses, turpentine-houses, foundries of brass or iron, chymical glass-houses of all dimensions, warehouses and other buildings, not dwelling-houses (except of the 5th, 6th, or 7th rate) not exceeding three stories above ground, exclusive of rooms in the roof, of the height of 31 feet above ground, to the top of the blocking course; and dwelling-houses above the value of 850*l.* and above 9 squares of building of 100 superficial feet each, on the ground floor, shall be the first rate. s. 1.—4.

External walls, of the first rate, shall be at the foundation 2½ bricks, or 1 foot 9½ inches thick, and decrease on each side 2½ inches to the top of the footing of the wall, which is to be 9 inches high, and 2 bricks, or 17½ inches thick, to the under side of the one-pair-of-stairs floor; from thence 1½ brick thick, or 13 inches, to the under side of the plate under the roof; from thence 1 brick, or 8½ inches thick, to the under side of the blocking-course, except walls of stone of 14 inches thick below the ground-floor, and 9 inches above, and except recesses arched, and at the back 1 brick, or 8½ inches thick. Ibid.

Party walls of the first rate shall be 3½ bricks, or 2 feet 6½ inches thick at the foundation, and decreasing on each side 4½ inches to the top of the footing, 1 foot high, and below the pavement of the cellar story two inches; the wall shall be from the top of the footing 2½ bricks, or 1 foot 9½ inches thick, to the under side of the ground-floor, and thence 2 bricks, or 17½ inches thick to the under side of the floor of the rooms in the roof of the highest adjoining building, and thence 1½ brick, or 13 inches to the top. Ibid.

2. Warehouses, stables, and other buildings, not a dwelling-house, (except of the 1st, 5th, 6th, and 7th rates) exceeding two stories, and not more than three stories above ground, exclusive of rooms in the roof, or of the height of 22 feet, and not so high as 31 feet from the ground to the top of the coping; and dwelling-houses above 300*l.* value, and not more than 850*l.* and exceeding 5 squares, and not more than 9 squares of building, shall be the second rate of building. s. 5—7.

External walls of the second rate shall be at the foundation 2 bricks, or 17½ inches thick, and decreasing on each side 2½ inches to the top of the footing, which is to be 9 inches high, and below the cellar floor 2 inches; and from the top of the footing 1½ brick, or 13 inches thick, to the under side of the one-pair-of-stairs floor; from thence 1 brick, or 8½ inches thick, to the under side of the coping, except walls of stone above ground 9 inches thick, and recesses arched, and at the back 1 brick, or 8½ inches thick. Ibid.

Party walls of the second rate shall be at the foundation 3½ bricks, or 2 feet 6½ inches thick, and from thence decreasing on each side 4½ inches to the top of the footing, 9 inches high, and under the cellar floor 2 inches; and from thence 2½ bricks, or 1 foot 9½ inches thick to the under side of the ground-floor; and thence 2 bricks, or 17½ inches thick to the under side of the two-pair-of-stairs floor; and thence 1½ brick, or 13 inches thick to the top of the party wall. Ibid.

3. Warehouses, stables, and other buildings, not dwelling-houses (except of the 1st, 5th, 6th, and 7th rates) exceeding 1 story, and not more than 2 above ground, besides rooms in the roof, or 13 feet, and not more than 22 feet high from the ground to the coping, and dwelling-houses of the value of 150*l.* and not more than 300*l.* and exceeding 3 squares and an half, and not more than 5 squares, shall be the third rate of building. s. 8.

External walls of the 3rd rate shall be at the foundation 2 bricks, or 17½ inches thick, and thence regularly decreasing on both sides 2½ inches to the top of the footing, 9 inches high, 2 below the floor of the cellar story, and from the top of the footing, 1½ brick, or 13 inches thick, to the under side of the ground-floor, and thence 1 brick, or 8½ inches to the under side of the coping. s. 9.

Party walls of the 3rd rate shall be at the foundation 3 bricks, or 26 inches thick, and from thence regularly decreasing on each side 4½ inches to the top of the footing, 9 inches high, and 2 inches below the floor of the cellar story, and from the top of the footing 2 bricks, or 17½ inches thick, to the under side of the ground-floor, and from thence 1½ brick, or 13 inches thick, to the top of the wall. s. 10.

4. Warehouses, stables, and other buildings, not dwelling-houses (except of the 1st, 5th, 6th, and 7th rates) not exceeding one story above ground, exclusive of rooms in the roof, and not more than 13 feet high from the ground to the top of the coping, and dwelling-houses not more than 150*l.* value, and not exceeding 3½ squares of building, shall be the fourth rate of building. s. 11.

External walls of the 4th rate shall be at the foundation 2 bricks, or 17½ inches thick, and thence decreasing on each side 2½ inches, to the top of the footing, 6 inches, and 2 inches below the floor of the cellar story, and from thence 1½ brick, or 13 inches thick, to the under side of the ground-floor, and from thence 1 brick, or 8½ inches thick, to the under side of the coping. s. 12.

Party walls of the 4th rate shall be two bricks, or 17½ inches thick at the foundation, from thence gradually decreasing on each side 2½ inches to the top of the footing, 9 inches high, and 2 inches below the cellar floor, and from the top of the footing 1½ brick, or 13 inches thick, to the under side of the ground floor, and from thence 1 brick, or 8½ inches thick, to the top of the wall. s. 13.

All houses of the 1st, 2d, 3d, or 4th rate, contiguous to other buildings, shall have party walls between them, to extend to the outward surfaces of each, and those and all chimnies and chimney shafts shall be of brick or stone, or both together (except timber, wood, lead, or iron, laid in as after directed, and except piling, bridging or planking, necessary for foundation) and such party walls shall be topped with stone, tile, or brick, and of the dimensions before directed, and one half on the ground of each house, for which purpose, workmen may enter the ground of the other house, and all party walls above four stories high shall be built as of the 1st rate, and those of the fourth rate houses, four stories high, as if of the 3d rate. s. 14, 15.

Internal inclosures for separating buildings of the 1st, 2d, 3d, and 4th rate, shall be of brick or stone, or artificial stone or stucco, or all together (except timber, wood, lead, or iron work, laid in as after directed), and except necessary piling, bridging, or planking for foundation, and in ascertaining the rates, to estimate the value as if of good materials, and to take the squares of the level of the entrance, and an appeal allowed to the quarter sessions. s. 16, 17.

5. Dwelling-houses, warehouses, stables, and other buildings (except buildings not being dwelling-houses, and of the 1st rate) at the distance of 4 feet, and not 8 feet from any public road, street, or cause-way, and detached from any other building, not in the same possession, 16 feet at least and not 30 feet, or connected only by a fence-wall, shall be of the 5th rate, and may be built of any dimensions. s. 18.

6. Dwelling-houses, warehouses, stables, and other buildings (except such buildings not being dwelling-houses, and of the 1st rate) which are 8 feet from any public road, street, or causeway, and detached from any other building, not in the same possession, 30 feet, or connected only by a fence-wall, shall be of the 6th rate, and may be built of any dimensions, or of any materials. s. 19.

7. Crane-houses on wharfs or quays, shambles, wind or water mills, and all buildings out of London and Westminster, and liberties, and used for workshops, or drying places for tanners, fell-mongers, glue-makers, size-makers, calico-printers, whitsters, whiting-makers, curriers, leather-dressers, buckram stiffners, oil-cloth painters, wool staplers, throwsters, parchment and paper-makers, so long as used for those purposes, shall be of the 7th rate, and may be built of any dimensions; external enclosures of crane-houses shall be of stone, brick, slate, tile, oak, elm, steel, iron, or brass; but other buildings of the said rate may be of any materials, so that they be not covered with pitch, tar, or other inflammable composition, and not used for other purposes. s. 20, 21.

Detached offices, or if only connected by fence-walls, to be deemed of the rate such office would be of, if the same did not appertain to any other building, and old sound party walls to remain; if the adjoining building is rebuilt without making use of such wall, the owner of the other part shall have only one half of such old wall and ground when pulled down; if party walls are not of the thickness aforesaid, to be condemned as ruinous; and also if it shall have any timber through it, to be cut off, so as not to leave six inches of brick-work. s. 22, 23.

Timber partitions to remain till one of the adjoining houses be taken down, or condemned as ruinous, and no longer; and external walls not to become party walls, unless of the height and thickness and of such materials as before directed. s. 24, 25.

Party walls to be 18 inches above the buildings adjoining, and no recesses therein (except for chimnies, flues, girders, and beams, and ends of piers, as after) so as to reduce such wall under the thickness required; nor openings (except for communication between different stacks of warehouses, or between stables, and to have iron doors, and except necessary passages on the ground-floors, which shall be arched over with brick or stone, 13 inches thick in every building of the 1st and 2d rate, and 8½ inches thick in every building of the 3d and 4th rate, and if there is a cellar under, to be all arched in the same manner.) s. 26.

No timber to be in party walls (except bonds, templets, and chains, and the ends of girders, beams, and the like), and to have 8½ inches of solid brick-work between the ends and sides of every piece of timber, except opposite to other timbers, and then no part of such timbers to approach nearer than 4 inches to the centre of the said wall. Party walls not to be cut, except 9 inches from the front or back wall, to the centre of such party wall, for the purpose of inserting the end of such new front or back wall; and if a breast-summer and story-posts, 14 inches, and the same may be 4 inches wide in the cellar story, and 2 inches wide in the ground-story, or may cut the wall for railing of stone-stairs or landings, or timbers for wood stairs, not nearer than 8½ inches to a chimney, or 4 inches to the timbers of the next house, and may cut recesses for inserting the walls, not more than 15 inches wide, nor 4 inches deep, and not nearer than 10 feet to any other recess, and to make good all damages. s. 27, 28.

Chimnies shall be 13 inches thick in the cellar story, and 8½ inches in every other story, and if against another chimney in party wall of the 1st rate, 8½ inches, and of the 2d, 3d, and 4th rate, 6½ inches, and no flue opposite another in party walls (except 2 inches from the centre), and the breast to be 8½ inches thick in the cellar story, and 4 in the other stories; and all withs to be brick or stone, and ½ brick thick; the bricks, backs, and withs, to be pargetted within and without (except next to vacant ground) and then marked (except fronts), but chimnies may be placed in party walls, if desired by the owner of the adjoining house, on notice, which shall be deemed making use of such party wall, and the builder to pay a proportionate part of the expense thereof, with costs. s. 29, 30.

When buildings are mixed property the party wall shall be of the highest rate of building adjoining, with party arches of 1½ brick, or 13 inches thick in the 1st and 2d rates, and 1 brick, or 8½ inches thick in the 3d and 4th rates, between them, but not to extend to inns of court or chancery (except party walls of stair-cases). s. 31, 32.

Where owners are under any disability to contract or agree, a jury shall determine the expense of rebuilding; and sessions may give judgment thereon which is to be final; and in 14 days workmen may enter, and if interrupted the penalty is 10*l.* and builders are to be paid expenses according to the verdict. s. 33.

Old decayed party walls or arches may be pulled down on 3 months notice, as specified in this act, and surveyors to be appointed to view them; if the major part condemn them as ruinous, they are to certify the same, and the owner may appeal to sessions, whose judgment is to be final; if of the 1st, 2d, or 3d rates, to give three months notice of pulling down, or the same if wooden partitions; and the expense to be paid by the owner of the improved rent, and till payment the property of the wall vested in the builder: new walls to pay a moiety of building, and old also, for pulling down, removing furniture, and shoring, but not for clearing away rubbish, and the expense to be estimated at 7*l.* 15*s.* per rod, deducting 1*l.* 8*s.* per rod for the materials (if any) of the old wall, and 2*d.* per cube foot for materials (if any) of old timber partition; and in 10 days after built an account to be delivered of the expenses, and if not paid in 21 days may be recovered by action; if the plaintiff gives three months notice of such action, and recovers, he shall have double costs. s. 38—41.

Party walls to be of the thickness required for the highest rate of building adjoining, and may be raised above the other building, but if used by the other side to be paid for: party fence-walls may be likewise raised, but not to be used as party walls, unless of sufficient thickness, though either side may take it down and build a party wall: and if the other side use it, to contribute, and the first builder not to lose his right of the soil, if the party wall is not half on each ground. s. 42, 43, 44.

If the fore and back front be rebuilt as low as the one-pair-of-stairs floor, in five years from each other, the party walls to be subject to the regulations of this act; and chimnies, not in party walls of the 1st rate, to be 13 inches in the cellar story, to 12 inches above the mantle, and if of other rates, 8½ inches (except built against a wall, and then it may be half a brick thinner); and the backs of chimnies of the 2d, 3d, and 4th rates, and not in party walls, to be 8½ inches thick from the hearth to the mantle (except against a wall, and then half a brick thinner); and no timber over the opening of any chimney to support it, but brick, stone, or iron; and no timber under the hearth nearer than 18 inches, and to have slabs of tile, stone, marble, or iron, 18 inches broad; and no wood in the brick-work of any oven, stove, copper, still, boiler, or furnace, within two feet of the inside, nor of any chimney nearer than 9 inches to the opening, or 5 inches to the flue; nor wood to the front of chimnies except fastened by iron nails, not more than 3 inches in the wall, or nearer than 4 inches of the inside; and no chimney to be erected on timber-work, except below the foundation, and on brick or stone corbels, or iron shores. s. 45.

External walls to be of brick, stone, artificial stone, lead, copper, tin, slate, tile, or iron, or mixed, except necessary piling for foundation and templets, chains, and bond-timbers, and except doors, windows, and the frames thereof set in recesses, 4 inches from the front, and except breast-summers, and stallboards for shops in the ground story only; story posts to be 9 inches in party walls, and of oak or stone, and 12 inches square; and flats, gutters, and roofs, of the first five rates, and all turrets, are to be covered with glass, copper, lead, tin, slate, tile, or artificial stone, except doors and windows. s. 46, 47.

External decorations to be of brick, stone, burnt clay, or artificial stone, and also covered ways the same; and no water to drip into the streets, except from porticoes and entrances, but to be conveyed by pipes or trunks to the ground; no bow windows to project beyond the line of buildings (except decorations, shop windows, and stall-boards) in streets 30 feet wide, not more than 10 inches; in lesser streets 5 inches; and no cornice more than 18 inches in streets of 30 feet; and 13 inches in lesser streets: and materials of bow-windows and projections to be the same as external walls; but this is not to affect the commissioners of paving, or sewers, in London. s. 49, 50.

Old external walls may be repaired with the same materials as before, but if rebuilt to conform to this act; and no bow-window or projection to be rebuilt, unless originally built with the house, and in a line with the street; no stack of warehouses to be above 35 squares, or any communication through party walls, unless by stone door-cases, and iron doors, and no timber within 18 inches, no stables more than 25 squares, and the like doors. s. 51—54.

Buildings of the first 4 rates (except inns of court and chancery, Royal Exchange, companies halls, warehouses and dwelling-houses, under 25*l.* per annum rent) converted into two distinct tenures, to be deemed separate buildings, and to have party walls; but warehouses under 35 squares, and stables under 25 squares, may be divided. s. 55, 56, 57.

Buildings of the 5th and 6th rates, in distinct tenures, and not at requisite distances, deemed nuisances; and no funnel for smoke to be next the street in front of the first four rates, and not nearer than 14 inches of timber, nor any brick funnel to extend beyond the line of the street: every building contrary to this act is declared a common nuisance, and the builder may be bound to demolish the same in convenient time, if convicted in three months after being built: the lord mayor and justices may respectively order irregular buildings to be taken down, and materials sold to defray the expense. s. 59, 60, 61.

The lord mayor and aldermen, and justices in session, may respectively appoint surveyors, who are to be sworn, and leave notice of their place of abode with the clerk of the peace, and to whom notice is to be given 24 hours before the beginning of any building, who is to survey the same, and to be paid by the builder:

which may be levied by distress on the master workman, with costs, and on default of notice, treble satisfaction to the surveyor, and 20*l.* penalty. s. 63, 64.

Surveyor is to give information of irregular buildings, and the lord mayor and justices are to order the same to be demolished or amended, and 50*s.* penalty on the workman, or to be committed, not more than 3 months, nor under one. Houses and buildings are to be surveyed in 14 days after finished, and the surveyor in 14 days more to make oath, which is to be filed, that such house or building is duly built: and the builder neglecting to have the same done, forfeits 10*l.* and if not done in a month after conviction, he is to forfeit 10*l.* more, and so toties quoties every month; but the surveyor misbehaving shall be discharged, and incapable of acting again. s. 65—68.

Not to extend to the king's palaces. s. 69.

When buildings are presented as ruinous, a board is to be put up; if owners on notice neglect to take down the same, the court of lord mayor and aldermen, or churchwardens and overseers of the poor (out of the city), may order the same to be taken down, and the materials to be sold to pay the expense, and the surplus to be paid to the owner, if demanded in 6 years, and if deficient the owner or occupier is to make it good, and the landlord is to allow the tenant what is so paid. s. 70—71.

Fire engines and ladder shall be kept in known places, and the parish officers shall place on mains of water-works, stop-blocks, and fire-cocks, and shall mark the house near, and keep keys there; the fire-cocks to be kept in repair by the parish, and the plugs by the owners of the water-works; and if changed the same; and engines and ladders shall be kept in every parish, on penalty of 10*l.* on the officers, to be levied by distress. In case of fire, the turn-cock whose water comes first shall have 10*s.* paid by the parish officers. First engine 1*l.* 10*s.* second engine 1*l.* and third engine 10*s.* to be paid by the same; but no reward without the approbation of an alderman, or two common-council-men in London, and a justice out. Where officers pay rewards for fires in chimnies only, or first beginning there, they are to be reimbursed by the occupier, as the mayor or justice shall direct, who may examine the parties, or others, on oath, and if not paid in fourteen days may be levied by distress. United parishes shall be deemed one, and parishes may have more than one engine, under the like regulations. Rewards to be paid out of the poors rate. s. 76—81.

Watermen belonging to insurance offices shall not be impressed; and directors of insurance offices may, on request of any person interested in houses burnt, or on suspicion of fraud in the insurer, cause the money insured to be laid out in rebuilding, unless the party in sixty days, give security to lay out the same, or that the money be disposed of with the approbation of the directors. s. 82, 83.

Servants carelessly firing houses shall forfeit 100*l.* or be imprisoned eighteen months. s. 84.

Constables and beadles on notice shall repair to fires, and may seize misdoers. No action shall be brought against a person where the fire accidentally begins. (This clause extended to every part of England) And distress for penalties is not unlawful for want of form, but the party aggrieved may recover special damages; and the plaintiff shall not recover, if amends are tendered before action, or money is paid into court before issue joined. s. 85—88.

Irregular buildings erected since 12 Geo. 3, shall be made secure, and altered, though no prosecution, by order of the lord mayor and aldermen, or quarter-sessions, filed: and the same shall be reformed in nine months, on penalty of 50*l.* and the like every nine months till done. s. 93—100.

Prosecutions are not to be removed by certiorari, but appeal lies to the quarter-sessions, who may give costs, and the appellant shall give security for the same. Ibid.

Parishioners may be witnesses. Penalties may be sued for in 6 months, and actions against persons acting under the act in 3 months, and they may plead the general issue, and have treble costs. Ibid.

By 25 Geo. 3, c. 77, no person, either in London, or in any other part of England, shall distil or boil any turpentine or tar, or draw any oil of turpentine or rosin, by distilling turpentine, or drawing any oil of tar or pitch, by distilling or boiling tar, or boil any oil and turpentine, or oil and tar together, above ten gallons at one time, in any place which is not 75 feet distant from any other building, on penalty of 100*l.* and treble costs.

But this is not to prevent shipwrights, barge-builders, and such persons, from boiling or mixing oil, and other things, to pay ships, barges, and the like. Ibid.

The 27 Geo. 3, c. 48, reciting, that the East India company are possessed of, and building warehouses exceeding 35 squares, and that it is expedient that the said company should be allowed to continue their present warehouses, and build others, freed from the regulations in 14 Geo. 3, c. 78, enacts, that the warehouses of the said company shall be freed from the regulations of the said act.

——— Butchers.] By 4 Hen. 7, c. 3, butchers shall not kill beasts within the walls of London, or in any walled town, or in Cambridge. See also Leather.

——— Carts.] By 1 Geo. 1, stat. 2, c. 57, no carter, drayman, carman, waggoner, or other person, shall within the bills of mortality, ride on his cart, dray, car, or waggon, not having some person on foot to guide the same, on forfeiture of 10*s.*; in default of payment he is to be sent to the house of correction for three days. But this act does not take away the power of the mayor of London, or the governors of Christ's hospital.

By 18 Geo. 2, c. 33, carts, cars, or drays in London, may be drawn by three horses, and the name of the owner is to be placed thereon, and numbered, and registered with the commissioners for hackney coaches, under penalty of 40*s.* Using more than three horses is a forfeiture of the extra ones to the seizer.

Cart wheels, being full six inches broad, may be bound with iron, without rose-headed nails. Ibid.

By 24 Geo. 2, c. 43, the penalty on a carter for riding on his cart, within the bills of mortality, is extended to within ten miles thereof. s. 8, 9.

By 30 Geo. 2, c. 22, justices of the city may annually assess the rates of carriage of goods, and make rules for regulating carts and drivers, and for payment of their fare, and may annex reasonable penalties on breach of such rules: they may also alter and amend the same, or make new orders, but such rules must be printed and published. s. 3.

By 30 Geo. 2, c. 28, empty carts, obstructing the streets or highways, except while they are loading, forfeit a sum not exceeding 20*s.* s. 5, 7, 8.

No carts shall ply for hire in the streets leading to Westminster bridge. s. 6.

Every cart carrying goods for hire, shall be deemed a common stage, and have the owner's name thereon. s. 13.

By 7 Geo. 3. c. 44, any person may search the register of carts, cars, and drays, kept by the commissioners of hackney coaches, on paying 4*d.* See also 33 Geo. 3. c. 75. under article Paving, infra.

——— Cattle.] By 31 Geo. 2. c. 40, salesmen, or others employed to buy or sell cattle for others, are not to buy or sell on their own account, other than for provision in their own family, on penalty of forfeiting double the value.

By 14 Geo. 3, c. 87, and 21 Geo. 3, c. 67, any peace officer may secure persons driving cattle through the streets of London in an improper manner. If the party be convicted before a justice he shall forfeit from 5*s.* to 20*s.* to the prosecutor, or be committed to the house of correction for one month.

Persons not being drivers of cattle, who shall pelt them with stones, or set dogs at them without leave, may be taken before a justice, and shall be subject to the same penalties. Ibid.

Offender to pay the forfeit though the informer should neglect to attend. Ibid.

The court of aldermen may make orders for regulating drivers of cattle within London and Westminster, and impose fines, not more than 40*s.* but the time for keeping Smithfield market open shall not be shortened. Ibid.

Any justice within the bills of mortality may determine complaints of offences against any rules to be made by the court of aldermen, and if the party be convicted, may fine him. Offender not paying the penalty may be committed to the house of correction. Ibid.

Offenders who refuse to discover their names and places of abode shall be committed to the common gaol. And an abstract of the penalties contained in this act, and of all rules to be made by the court of aldermen, shall be printed, and posted up in the streets. Ibid.

Warrants may be executed on offenders, or their goods, out of the jurisdiction wherein they were granted. Prosecutions to be commenced in 14 days. Appeal lies to the quarter sessions, giving 14 days notice. Proceedings not to be quashed for want of form, nor removable by certiorari. Ibid.

——— Coals.] By 16 & 17 Car. 2, c. 2, all coals brought into the Thames shall contain 36 bushels to the chaldron, to be heaped; the hundred to weigh 112*lb.* Selling contrary hereto is a forfeiture of the coals, and double the value thereof.

The lord mayor of London, and the justices of peace, may set the rates on retailing them; and retailers refusing to sell at such rates, they may authorize persons, taking a constable, to enter by force, and make sale at the rates appointed.

By 9 Ann. c. 28, crimps, husbands, agents, or factors, for ship-masters, importing coals at London, vending coals to their own agents, in trust for themselves, are to forfeit 50*l.*

By 3 Geo. 2, c. 26, dealers in coals may use their own lighters on the river Thames; the lighters are to be entered, marked, and subject to the rules of the watermens company.

Buyers of coals for sale acting as crimps, and masters employing them, are to forfeit 200*l.* each. Ibid.

To further enforce the last act 9 Ann. c. 28, persons receiving gratuities for contracts from fitters, coal-owners, or masters of ships, and selling one sort of coals for another, shall forfeit 500*l.* but coal owners may employ fitters and crimps, not being lightermen or coal-dealers. Ibid.

Masters of vessels refusing to give yearly accounts to the owners forfeit 100*l.*

Coal sacks shall be sealed and marked with white paint at Guildhall, London, or at the exchequer, in Westminster. Consumers of coals may, for their own use, have such sacks as they think proper. Ibid.

By 4 Geo. 2, c. 30, a penalty of 100*l.* is inflicted on masters of coal ships keeping turn in delivering coals in the Thames.

Cocquets are to be delivered by the master within four days after the arrival of the ship at Gravesend, on penalty of 50*l.* Ibid.

By 11 Geo. 2, c. 15, buyers and sellers of coals at Billingsgate, or within the bills of mortality, shall sign all contracts made between them in the factor or crimp's book. See 47 Geo. 3, c. 68. s. 29.

By 7 Geo. 3, c. 37, a duty of 6*d.* per chaldron, and 6*d.* per ton, on coals imported into London, established by 5 & 6 Will. & Mar. c. 10, is continued for 46 years, from the 29th of Sept. 1785, for completing Blackfriars bridge, redeeming the tolls of London bridge, rebuilding Newgate, repairing the Royal Exchange, and embanking part of the north side of the river Thames, and then for paving the streets of Westminster and Southwark, to pay the orphans debt by 1803, and to do the other works by Michaelmas 1831. Further continued by 44 Geo. 3, c. 27, until the 5th of July 1837, to complete the improvements at Snowhill and Temple-bar.

By 10 Geo. 3, c. 53, coal undertakers are not to take reward for employing heavers, on penalty of 5*l.*

Victuallers are not to be undertakers on penalty of 5*l.* Persons discharging coal ships to be paid 1*s.* 6*d.* per score, subject to alteration by the court of lord mayor and aldermen; the money to be paid to the foreman of the gang in current coin. Ibid.

Leaving any ship before discharged punishable as servants in husbandry, except where otherwise directed; and the foreman may stop 6*d.* per pound till the charges of passing this act are paid. Ibid.

By 47 Geo. 3, sess. 2, c. 68, the coal exchange shall be a free, open, and public market, and held every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, from twelve at noon until two in the afternoon. s. 18, 19.

When coals are sold by weight, 112*lbs.* shall be deemed to be 1 cwt. and 20 hundred 1 ton. s. 23.

Masters of ships are to give an account of the coals in their ships within 24 hours after their arrival at Blackwall, and not before; and the clerk of the market is to register the same: and delivering false accounts, or making false entries, is a penalty of 50*l.* s. 24.

The said accounts are to be affixed in the market, on pain of 20*l.* on the clerk for default. s. 25.

Coals are to be sold in the market and during market hours only, on pain of 100*l.* s. 26.

But coals loaded and freighted on board any ships for government, may be unloaded and delivered without being put up to sale in the market, provided the ship-master first send to the clerk of the market a copy of the fitter's certificate, together with an affidavit stating the coals to have been so loaded and freighted. s. 27.

The sales of coals (see 11 Geo. 2. c. 15.) shall be entered by the factor or crimp with the clerk of the market, on pain of 100*l.* but persons may sell their own coals without the intervention of a factor or crimp. s. 29.

Coals may be purchased in the market in quantities of not less than 21 chaldrons. s. 31.

If any vender of coals shall knowingly sell one sort of coals for a sort which they really are not, within 25 miles from the Royal Exchange, he shall forfeit 20*l.* per chaldron, up to and not exceeding 25 chaldrons for the same offence.

No meter is to be appointed to a ship until part of the coals are sold: but coal ships damaged may be unloaded without waiting for a ship meter: and meters may appoint an assistant out of the fellowship porters. s. 34—36.

Meters and coalheavers, if unnecessarily detained on board a ship, are entitled to detention money; and money paid by the ship-master or owner for any detention occasioned by the default of the coal-buyer, is to be repaid by the coal-buyer, and enforced by one justice, who may levy the same by distress, or in default of payment commit for not exceeding 6 calendar months. s. 37, 38.

Coal-buyers, are not to be liable to detention-money for the day on which the meter is appointed, unless the meter attend on that day at his request. s. 39.

Coal buyers, or master or owner respectively, may appeal to sessions against the decision of the justice s. 40.

Ship-masters are not to bring actions against coal-buyers to recover money paid for detention. s. 41.

No person shall follow the trade of a coal undertaker, without a license from the court of aldermen, on pain of 10*l.* and the lord mayor or sitting alderman may suspend, and court of aldermen may erase the name of any coal undertaker misconducting himself; and acting after suspension or erasure is a penalty of 100*l.* wholly to the informer. s. 42, 43.

Victuallers are not to act as coal undertakers, or supply implements of any kind, on pain of 10*l.* s. 45.

Shovels and other implements for the unloading of coal ships, shall be provided by the ship-master; and any other person except a licensed coal undertaker or ship master letting the same out to hire, shall forfeit 10*l.* s. 46.

Coal undertakers are to receive from the ship-masters 1*d.* per chaldron, and coalheavers 3*s.* for every 20 chaldrons delivered, as their pay or wages. s. 47.

But the court of aldermen may increase such wages, when reasonable; and those who take or pay more, are to forfeit 10*l.* s. 48.

The wages of coalheavers shall be paid in money, and not in coals, goods, meat, drink, lodging, or apparel, on pain of 10*l.* nor at any alehouse, on pain of 20*l.* s. 49, 50.

Undertakers shall, during the time of the ship's delivery, advance to coalheavers requesting the same, between five and seven in the evening, one half of the wages then earned. s. 51.

Undertakers are, before seven o'clock of the next evening after each ship's delivery, to pay the coalheavers in full, on pain of 20*l.* s. 52, 53.

Undertakers are not to give, nor masters to take, any reward for giving any preference to any particular gang of coalheavers, on pain of 20*l.* s. 54.

Ship meters are to give certificates of the coals delivered into each lighter, on pain of 10*l.* and lightermen are to deliver such certificates to the wharfingers, on pain of 20*l.* s. 55, 56.

Ship meters are to keep accounts of the coals delivered by them, and deliver the same to the clerk of the market, to be open for inspection; and the clerk of the market refusing to receive the same, or to let them be inspected, shall forfeit not exceeding 20*l.* s. 57.

Preventing the vat from being filled, according to the directions of the meter, is a penalty not exceeding 20*l.* The spout or stage for shooting coals from ships, shall be provided by the master or owner, 5 feet 6 wide at the top, 4 feet 6 at the bottom, and 10 inches high at the sides, on pain of 10*l.* s. 58, 59.

When a cargo of coals is sold to different buyers, the same shall be delivered, in the turns settled between the parties, within one hour after the close of the market. s. 60.

Lightermen may carry on partnership with coal dealers. s. 61.

Not less than 5 chaldrons and 1 vat, or some multiple of that quantity, shall be delivered into any barge or room of a barge, on pain of 20*l.* But coals may be loaded in bulk s. 62, 63.

Meter is not to deliver coals into open barges or into rooms of barges having coals in them before, except into empty rooms, on pain of 20*l.* s. 64, 65.

And in case barges have the clearance of a ship on board, coals of the same sort may be put therein, on the production of the certificate from the former ship. s. 66.

Penalty on ship meters for delivering certificates without measuring the coals, 20*l.* s. 67.

Penalty on giving gifts to ship meters (except the sums specified in the schedule for wages and allowances), which are not to be deemed gifts, 100*l.* s. 68.

Coals by the vat may be remeasured on notice within one hour after delivery into the craft, and the meter is liable to certain penalties for deficiencies; ship meters may also be suspended from their offices if convicted of any penalty for delivering false measure. s. 69, 70.

When the coals are remeasured by desire of the vender, and the meter shall be found not to have incurred any penalty, the owner of the lighter shall have a compensation from the vender for the detention of his lighter, to be settled by a justice and levied by distress, or in default of payment, commitment for not exceeding three calendar months. s. 71.

The principal land meters already appointed for WESTMINSTER shall continue in their office. s. 72.

The principal land meters already appointed for LONDON and between TOWER DOCK and LIMEHOUSE-HOLE, shall continue in their office. s. 73.

But upon the death of any one of the present three principal meters for London, the number shall be reduced to two: and upon any vacancy happening hereafter, the court of common council shall have the appointment of the principal meters for London. s. 73.

The principal meters already nominated for SURREY shall continue. s. 74.

His majesty shall appoint principal land coal meters for Westminster upon any vacancy. s. 75.

And the principal land coal meters for Westminster are punishable by the justices for neglect, by a penalty not exceeding 20*l.* and costs. s. 76.

Labouring coal meters for Westminster are subject to the controul of the justices, on complaints, to be heard in a summary way. s. 77.

Land coal meters for the city of London are subject to the lord mayor and aldermen. s. 78.

The common council are to appoint the labouring land coal meters for London, who are not to be less than 45 in number, but the principal meters for London may suspend labouring meters, provided they report the cause of such suspension to the lord mayor or court of aldermen within seven days. s. 79, 80.

The principal and labouring meters for Surrey are subject to the controul of the quarter sessions. s. 81.

After the death of the survivor of the present principal meters for Surrey, the churchwardens of the different parishes shall have the election and appointment of the principal meters, and the principal meters may be re-elected when the times expire. s. 82, 83.

All the principal meter's offices shall be kept open every day, Sundays, Good-fridays, and Christmas, and fast days, only excepted, from 25th March to 29th September, from 5 till 9, and from 29th September to 25th March, from 6 to 6, on pain of 20*l.* s. 84.

The principal meters for Westminster and Surrey are to appoint a sufficient number of labouring meters for their respective districts, who are to be sworn before a justice to act truly. s. 86, 87.

Labouring meters are to attend at their stations during the same hours as the principal offices are open, and are to attend at wharfs and places on notice, on pain of 5*l.* s. 83.

The principal meters for Westminster are to pay not less than 20*s.* per week wages to each of their labouring meters, on pain of 20*l.* s 89.

Principal meters for Surrey are also to pay not less than 20*s.* per week wages to each of their labouring meters who shall serve at any station between Nine-Elms and Dock-Head both inclusive. s. 90.

Coal meters are not be interested in the sale of coals, on pain of 100*l.* on the principal, and 50*l.* on a deputy or labouring meter, and disability. s. 91.

The land coal meter may demand from a wharfinger a sight of the ship's certificate to be inspected, and when the coals are delivered from the craft, countersigned 'Delivered;' and if the wharfinger refuse to produce the same, he shall forfeit 5*l.* and the meter countersigning the certificate without first inspecting it and satisfying himself that the coals are of the sort described, shall also forfeit 5*l.* s. 92.

Coals sold by pool measure are to be loaded in sacks in the presence of one of the labouring meters, who may measure sacks, and direct the whole of any room to be entirely emptied and sent away, and if obstructed the penalty is 5*l.* s. 93.

The vender of pool measure coals, when sent by a waggon or cart, shall send a man with a ticket in the form prescribed by the act, on pain of 10*l.* and if the driver neglect to deliver the same to the purchaser or his servant, he shall forfeit 10*l.* s. 94.

The principal meter is to receive from the vendor for inspecting coals sold by pool measure 1*s.* for every 5 chaldrons and 1 vat. s. 95.

But purchasers of coals sold by pool measure may have the same delivered without the intervention of a meter, provided it be not at a wharf or meter's station. s. 96.

Purchasers of coals sent by water may have the same remeasured within two hours in case fraud is suspected, on notice to one of the offices, and the expences of remeasurement are to be paid, if the deficiency amount to 1 bushel, by the vender, and if not to 1 bushel, by the purchaser. s. 98.

But coals sold by pool measure are not to be measured by the bushel without the desire of the purchaser. s. 99.

Coals sold by wharf measure shall be measured in the presence of a land coal meter; and the meter suffering wharf measure coals to be sent out without being measured, as by this act is directed, is a penalty of 10*l.* s. 100, 101.

The coal meter's offices are to take 6*d.* per chaldron for wharf measure coals, and a meter's ticket, descriptive thereof, is to be sent with such coals, and the carman is to deliver the same to the purchaser or his servant; and the penalty on the meter for not giving such ticket is 10*l.* and on the carman for not delivering the same to the purchaser, 40*s.* s. 102.

Wharfingers giving bribes to meters, forfeit 20*l.* and meters receiving bribes or delivering false tickets 10*l.* with forfeiture of office. s. 103, 4.

Penalty on a vendor for not delivering a meter's ticket with wharf coals 10*l.* s. 105.

Sacks used within the limits shall be made of linen and marked with white paint at Guildhall or the exchequer office at Westminster, and measure in the inside 4 feet 2 inches at least in length, by 2 feet 1 in breadth; and the penalty for using sacks not so marked or of less dimensions, is not exceeding 40*s.* nor less than 20*s.* per sack; but coals delivered by gang labourers need not be put into such sacks. s. 107.

Meters permitting sacks of less dimensions to be used, are to forfeit 5*l.* s. 108.

No bushel shall be used but that described in 12 Ann. c. 17. and 36 of such bushels heaped shall be a chaldron; and vender using any other bushels, or diminishing the same, shall forfeit 20*l.* and if his servant shall use any other bushel, or diminish the same, he shall be committed to hard labour in the house of correction for not exceeding three calendar months. s. 109.

Measures of a smaller measure used within the limits are to bear the same proportion and be stamped, and venders using others shall forfeit 10*l.* s. 110.

Venders of coals sold as wharf measure, if dissatisfied, may have them remeasured, paying to the meter's office 6*d.* per chaldron; and if there is an excess of 2 bushels in any chaldron remeasured, the meter shall forfeit 40*s.* s. 111.

The carman is to carry a bushel measure in his cart, on pain of 10*l.* and on the vender 20*l.* but this does not extend to purchasers carting the coals themselves. s. 112.

Venders are to deliver tickets of coals sold by wharf measure, containing the particulars of the number of sacks and quantity of the coals to the carman, who is to deliver the same to the purchaser; and if the vender do not deliver such ticket to the carman, he is to forfeit 20*l.* and the carman not delivering to the purchaser forfeits 10*l.* s. 113.

The carman may be required to measure one sack gratis in such cart, and if the carman drive coals away without measuring the sack, he shall forfeit not exceeding 20*l.* nor less than 5*l.* s. 114, 115.

Coals sent by land carriage are to be remeasured if desired by the purchaser, and the carman is to remain till they are remeasured, and not drive the coals away, on pain of not exceeding 10*l.* s. 116.

But the purchaser is to send notice to the meter's office if he is desirous of having the coals remeasured; and the purchaser may at his option either have the contents of each sack separately remeasured, or else the contents of all the sacks sent taken together, paying to the meter's office for the attendance of the meter 6*d.* per sack. s. 117.

And if in remeasurement it shall appear, that any separate sack contains not 3 bushels, the vender shall forfeit 40*s.*; and if there is a deficiency in the whole, the forfeiture is 5*l.* per bushel, and of the coals for the use of the poor. Ibid.

Meters, in case of any coals sold for wharf measure proving deficient on such remeasurement, are to forfeit 20*s.* per bushel, and the coal porters 2*s.* 6*d.* Ibid.

But if such coals shall be sold for pool measure, then the vender for a deficiency exceeding 4 and not 10 bushels in 5 chaldrons and 1 vat, shall forfeit 40*s.* per bushel; and if the deficiency exceed 10 bushels, 5*l.* Ibid.

But no remeasurement is to take place after more than one sack shall have been shot. Ibid.

The meter, in case of coals sold for pool measure, proving deficient upon remeasurement, shall forfeit, for more than 4 bushels in 5 chaldrons and 1 vat, 20*s.* per bushel. s. 118.

If, on remeasurement, the deficiency on the whole quantity shall amount to, or exceed, 1 bushel, the vender is to repay to the purchaser the expences of remeasurement; and if one fourth of the number of sacks do not contain 3 bushels each, the vender shall repay the expences; but if the number shall not amount to one fourth, then the purchaser is to bear the expence. s. 119.

Principal meters, not sending a labouring meter to measure the coals, after notice, to forfeit not exceeding 10*l.* s. 120.

The carman is to be paid 3*d.* per hour for every hour when stopt for the purpose of having coals remeasured. s. 121.

Coals sold by weight shall be sold or weighed by the cwt. of 112lbs. and 20 cwt. shall be deemed 1 ton; and the same shall be weighed and loaded in the presence of one of the labouring land meters, for which 6*s.* per ton is to be paid to the meter's office. s. 122.

The vender is to send a ticket with all coals sold by weight, to be delivered by the carman to the purchaser, and the vender, not sending such ticket, shall forfeit 20*l.* and the carman, not delivering the same, shall also forfeit 20*l.* s. 123.

But coals may be sold either by weight, or by the chaldron or bushel, half bushel, peck, or half peck, of aliquot parts. s. 124.

Principal meters for London are to produce, upon oath, before the common council, their accounts of metage money received by them, and to pay the same into the city chamber, by which it is to be applied in payment of the principal and labouring meters, and all expences of the London meter's office. s. 125, 6.

Wallsend, Temples Walls, and Hebburn Main, Heaton Main, Biggs Main, South Hebburn, Willington, Killingsworth, and Percy Main coals, may be mixed together, and sold by the name of best coals mixed; and Harly, Blythe, and Coupens Main coals may be mixed together, and sold by either of those names. s. 127, 8.

Clearings of coal barges, when reduced to 5 chaldrons wharf measure, may be heaped up and mixed together in any warehouse; but the same shall be sold by wharf measure, and described in the vender's tickets as coals of different sorts mixed. Venders making default herein are to forfeit not exceeding 50*l.* s. 128, 9.

And no other coals are to be mixed, within the limits of the act, on pain of 20*l.* s. 130.

And nothing herein shall prevent qual-

sheds, or warehouses where coals are sold in quantities not exceeding half a chaldron, from mixing coals, so as they be sold for mixed coals. s. 132.

The court of aldermen may make bye-laws to regulate the coal market, to be approved by one of the judges, and printed and published. s. 134—145.

Fines and forfeitures, not exceeding 20*l.* to be recovered before a justice of the peace; and penalties above 20*l.* in any of the courts at Westminster. s. 146—153.

The act commenced 4th October, 1807 (see s. 155.) and is permanent.

——— Constables.] By 26 Geo. 2. c. 25. and 31 Geo. 2. c. 17. eighty constables are to be appointed yearly at a court-leet for the city and liberty of Westminster.

High constable of Westminster shall obey the orders of the court-leet, and petty constables are to be assisting, on pain of being amerced not exceeding 40*s.* but persons aged are exempted from serving as constables or as leet jurymen in Westminster. 31 Geo. 2. c. 17.

——— Coopers.] By 23 Hen. 8. c. 4. and 31 Eliz. c. 8. the wardens of the mystery of coopers shall search, mark, and guage, all vessels in London, and such as are brought from beyond the sea for ale and beer; and one halfpenny for other vessels, and the vessels may be detained till the fee is paid.

The said wardens shall come to the brewers' houses to guage vessels; but such as shall be filled with ale or beer, and directly exported, are exempt. 31 Eliz. c. 8.

——— Court of Requests.] By 3 Jac. 1. c. 15. citizens and freemen of London having debts under 40*s.* may cause the debtor to be summoned to the court of requests at Guildhall; and the debt there shall be summarily determined. Debtors refusing to appear, or pay, shall be imprisoned; but this shall not extend to debts for rent, or on real contracts.

The 14 Geo. 2. c. 10. extends the above act to all persons inhabiting the city.

By 23 Geo. 2. c. 27. and 24 Geo. 2. c. 42. the like in Westminster.

By 23 Geo. 2. c. 30. the like in the Tower Hamlets.

By 23 Geo. 2. c. 33. the like also in the county court of Middlesex.

By 39 & 40 Geo. 3. c. civ. so much of 3 Jac. 1. c. 15. and 14 Geo. 2. c. 10. as restrains the jurisdiction of the court of requests of the city to debts not exceeding 40*s.* shall be repealed. s. 1.

And a court of three of the commissioners shall have jurisdiction over debts not exceeding 40*s.* and seven shall have jurisdiction over debts not exceeding 5*l.* s. 2.

Debtors are to be summoned before commissioners, who may make such order therein, between the parties, as they shall see just; and orders and proceedings shall be registered. s. 5.

Where a debt shall be due from two partners, summoning one shall be sufficient. s. 6.

Beadles of the court shall summon witnesses, who if they refuse to give evidence shall forfeit 40*s.* and in default of payment may be committed for not exceeding one month; the penalty to go to the poor of the parish where the offender dwells. s. 7.

Persons giving false evidence, shall be punished as for perjury. s. 8.

Debts due by persons under age for necessaries, may be recovered: servants, though under age, may recover wages; and attorneys are subject to the processes of the court. s. 9, 10.

But this act does not extend to any debt where the title of premises may come in question, or to any specialty debt, or any debt concerning testament or matrimony, or any ecclesiastical matter, though it shall not exceed 5*l.* s. 11.

Verdicts in the superior courts, for debts which were recoverable in this court, are not to entitle to costs; and if a verdict be given for the defendant, and the judge certify that the debt ought to have been sued for in the court of requests, he shall have double costs. s. 12.

Nothing herein is to prevent persons from recovering rents by distress s 13.

The statute of limitations may be pleaded. s. 14.

Debtors are to be imprisoned for non-payment no longer than as follows, viz where the debt, exclusive of costs, does not exceed 20*s.* twenty days; not exceeding 40 forty days; not exceeding 3*l.* sixty days; not exceeding 5*l.* one hundred days: but the time of imprisonment shall extend separately and successively to each execution. s. 16.

The act 25 Geo. 3. c. 45. (see this act infra), as far as it respects the discharge of imprisoned persons without payment of fees, is extended to this act. s. 17.

By 46 Geo. 3. c. lxxxvii. the jurisdiction of the court for the recovery of small debts within the borough of Southwark, and certain parishes connected therewith, by 22 Geo. 2. c. 47. and 32 Geo. 2. c. 6. whereby debts under 40*s.* may be recovered in the court of conscience in Southwark, is extended, and three commissioners may determine debts not exceeding 40*s*, and five commissioners not exceeding 5*l.* s. 1, 2.

On verdicts in inferior courts, for debts recoverable under this act, the plaintiff shall not have costs; and on verdict for the defendant, and certificate of the judge, he shall have double costs. s. 13.

But persons may distrain or bring actions for rent, though it do not exceed 5*l.* s. 14.; and persons may sue in the palace court for sums above 40*s.* s. 24.: the rights of the city of London are also secured. s. 25.

By 46 Geo. 3. c. lxxxviii. the jurisdiction of the court for the recovery of small debts within the western division of the hundred of Brixton in Surrey, under 31 Geo. 2. c. 23. is in like manner extended to 5*l.* s. 11. and the regulations of 26 Geo. 3. c. 38. are extended to this act. s. 19.

By 19 Geo. 3. c. 68. commissioners of the Tower Hamlets may purchase ground and build a court house, and grant annuities; may take cognizance of debts for rent under 40*s.* if the complainant hath been in possession twelve months; and no recovery of rent in the said court shall be given in evidence in support of a title, nor shall this act extend to prevent a distress or action for rent.

If the defendant does not appear, judgment may be given in his absence, but he must have a day to shew cause. No victualler to act as a commissioner, nor is this act to extend to the liberty of the Tower within. Ibid.

By 25 Geo. 3. c. 45. debtors committed to prison by courts of conscience in London, Middlesex, or Southwark, for a debt of 20*s.* or under, shall not be confined more than twenty days, and not exceeding 40*s.* for more than forty days.

Such prisoners are to be discharged without paying gaol fees: and gaolers demanding or taking fees shall forfeit 5*l.* Two justices may determine offences against this act, levy the penalties by distress, or on non-payment commit the offender for two months. Ibid.

Courts of conscience are not to issue process against both body and goods of the same party; and no commissioner shall act unless he has a real estate of 20*l.* per ann. or a personal estate of 500*l.* on pain of 20*l.* Ibid.

——— Customs.] By 1 Ann. stat. 1. c. 26. no cocquet shall be required of masters of boys carrying corn or other goods on the Thames, whereon no duty is payable on exportation, but the same may be conveyed by transire, for which the officers shall not take more than 3*s.* 4*d.*

When there are not 50 quarters of corn, or 50 bags of hops in such vessels, the officers shall not take more than 1*s.* 8½*d.* Ibid.

Certificates on bonds transmitted into the exchequer shall be indorsed on the back of the bond on pain of treble damages and costs. But this act does not take away any tolls payable to the city of London, or the ports of Sandwich or Ipswich. Ibid.

——— Disseisin.] By 6 Ed. 1. c. 14. on disseisin in London damages shall be recovered with the freehold, and the disseisors shall be amerced before two barons of the exchequer, who shall once a year come into the city to do it.

——— Dyers.] By 23 Geo. 3. c. 15. dyers in London, or within ten miles thereof, shall be subject to the examination of the dyers' company, who are to appoint searchers; which searchers may enter dyers' houses to examine and take samples of cloths, bays, or the like, to be dyed black or blue; opposing them is a penalty of 10*l.* and in case the dyers' company neglect to appoint searchers, the quarter sessions may appoint them.

——— Elections.] By 11 Geo 1. c. 18. at all elections by the liverymen of London, and at the wardmotes, a convenient number of clerks shall be appointed by the presiding officer to take the poll; none shall be polled before sworn, that he is a freeman of London, and has not polled before.

If a poll be demanded, the presiding officer, on pain of 200*l.* shall begin at the same day, or the next day, and finish within seven days. If a scrutiny be demanded upon the declaration, scrutineers shall not exceed six on each side; to begin within ten days, and finish within fifteen. Ibid.

A true list shall be given of the voters disallowed, to any of the candidates desiring the same; and the mayor is to issue precepts to the city companies to bring in lists of their livery within three days. Ibid.

The election of aldermen and common councilmen shall be by freemen paying 30*s.* a year scot and lot, and paying 10*l.* per ann. rent, and partners in trade, or two inhabiting one house, may vote, each paying 10*l.* per ann. rent. Ibid.

Persons exempted from scot and lot, by act of parliament, charter, or privilege, may vote. Complainants about assessments may appeal to the mayor and aldermen. But none shall vote at elections who have not been upon the livery twelve months; nor shall they vote if they have received back their livery fines, or been excused paying the rates and taxes within two years. Ibid.

——— Estates personal.] By 11 Geo. 1. c. 18. freemen of London may dispose of their personal estates as they think fit, notwithstanding any custom to the contrary, unless they have made a marriage agreement that their personal estates shall be subject to the custom, or die intestate.

——— Fireworks.] By 9 & 10 Will. 3. c. 7. the artillery company of London may use any sorts of fireworks in the exercise of arms, as before the making this act. (See general title FIREWORKS.

——— Fire.] By 6 Ann. c. 31. churchwardens of each parish within the bills of mortality shall fix stop-blocks of wood, or fire-cocks, on the mains and pipes of any waterwork; shall fix a mark on the front of the opposite house. Every parish shall keep one large engine, one hand-engine, and one leather pipe, on pain of 10*l.* Gratuities shall be paid to turncocks, engine-keepers, and others first assisting to extinguish any fire.

Watermen belonging to insurance offices shall be free from impressing. Ibid.

Servants who through negligence fire any house shall forfeit 100*l.* or be sent to the workhouse for eighteen months. Ibid.

On breaking out of any fire, all constables and beadles shall give their utmost assistance; and no action shall be prosecuted against any person in whose house any fire accidentally begins, excepting any agreement between landlord and tenant.

By 7 Ann. c. 17. the vestries may order more engines than one to be kept in a parish. A key and pipe shall be left at the house where there is a notice of a fire-plug. The parish officers may assess rates for maintaining the engines, to be levied as poor rates, but subject to the like appeal.

In case of removal of mains or pipes, the like stock-blocks shall be fixed, and the key removed to the house where the fire-pipe is. Ibid.

Not above ten gallons of turpentine shall be boiled or distilled at one time in any place contiguous to other buildings (except in houses already built in Southwark,) on forfeiture of 100*l.* and treble costs. Ibid. (See Buildings.)

——Fish.] By 17 Ric. 2. c. 9. the mayor of London shall have the conservation of the statutes for preserving fish in the Thames to Staines and Medway.

By 2 Hen. 6. c. 15. he that fastens any nets, trunks, or the like, across the Thames, or other rivers, all night, shall forfeit 5*l.* every time.

By 39 Eliz. c. 10. the ordinances of the company of fishmongers in London to restrain the taking, selling, or buying of fish, shall be void: but

By 43 Eliz. c. 9. such clause was repealed, and they shall not restrain fishermen in taking, selling, or buying salted fish or herrings, being wholesome and sweet.

By 10 & 11 Will. 3. c. 24. Billingsgate market shall be free and open every day (except Sunday), for all sorts of fish.

No fisherman shall pay any other toll than as follows, viz. for every vessel with salt fish 6*d. per* day for groundage, and 20*d. per* voyage; for every lobster boat or vessel with sea-fish 2*d. per* day for groundage, and 13*d. per* voyage; and for every oyster boat 2*d.* a day for groundage, a halfpenny per bushel for metage, and 13*d.* a voyage. Ibid.

Fish bought at Billingsgate may be sold elsewhere. No person shall demand toll or sample of sea-fish contrary to 5 Eliz. c. 15. (see title Fish,) on pain of 10*l. Ibid.*

Fish shall not be bought there to be divided into shares, and afterwards retailed, or on behalf of other fishmongers, on pain of 20*l.* nor shall lobsters under eight inches be bought, on pain of 1*s.* each. Ibid.

By 9 Ann. c. 26. the court of assistants of the fishermen's company may make bye-laws, to be approved by the court of aldermen of London, and the water-bailiff is to be one of the wardens of the company.

No spawn shall be killed, nor fish caught out of season, nor salmon taken between the 24th August and 11th November, and the lord mayor may order stakes to be fixed in the Thames to preserve the fry. Ibid.

No fish shall be sold more than once within Billingsgate market; and none shall sell fish in the said market, or within 150 yards thereof, except free fishmongers, fishermen, importers, and the like. Ibid.

The said company shall pay the water-bailiff 30*l.* a year. No fish shall be sold in Billingsgate before three in the morning from Lady-day to Michaelmas, and five from Michaelmas to Lady-day. The offenders against this act are to forfeit not more than 10*l.* nor less than 5*s.* but it does not prejudice the authorities of the city of London, nor extend to fishermen in the Cinque Ports. Ibid.

By 22 Geo. 2. c. 49. fishermen forfeit the cargo for not selling the same within eight days after their arrival on the coast between North Yarmouth and Dover. s. 12.

By 29 Geo. 2. c. 39. fishing-vessels employed for the supply of London and Westminster markets, breaking bulk, or vending their fish, before their arrival in the river, or not entering their vessel, or not selling their fish within eight days, to forfeit vessel and cargo of fish. s. 1.

Twelve days are allowed for the sale of lobsters; and fishing vessels may remove their cargoes before their arrival at the Nore, so as not to make sale thereof. s. 2, 3.

Peter boats employed for serving towns near the banks of the river, may dispose of their fish as heretofore. s. 4.

The trustees of the market shall appoint inspectors of the fishing vessels, who are authorised to examine: 10*l.* penalty on persons on board not giving him the information he wants, or obstructing him in his office. Ibid.

Warrants of distress on fishing-vessels or cargoes may be executed in any part of the rivers Medway or Thames, between the Nore and the city of Westminster. Ibid.

By 30 Geo. 2. c. 21. the court of mayor and aldermen of London are impowered to make and enforce regulations of fishermen and dredgermen in the Thames and Medway.

The court may examine fishermen touching the fishery of the Thames and Medway; fishermen refusing, forfeit 40*s.* for the behefit of Greenwich hospital. Ibid.

The water-bailiff may enter into fishermen's boats, and seize all prohibited fish and nets. Ibid.

Fishermen are not liable to take out licences, or to pay any gratuity for liberty of fishing. Ibid.

By 2 Geo. 3. c. 15. any person, though not a fishmonger, may buy at any market, sea-coast, or river, any fish in season, and saleable, and may sell the same again in any fish or flesh market, Covent-Garden market and its precincts excepted.

Such fish not to be resold by the first purchaser before brought to London or Westminster, or where consigned, under penalty of 20*l*. Ibid.

And to be conveyed to the places consigned, without being liable to be stopped, and exposed to sale on the way. Ibid.

Carriages employed in the service are to carry fish only, and to be marked on the outside, fish machine only; and are to be entered at the office for licensing hackney coaches, paying 1*s.* for the registering; and numbered, on penalty of 40*s.*; and are not liable to be deemed common-stage waggons. Ibid.

They shall be permitted to travel with four horses in pairs, or with one horse, or three horses in length, though with narrow wheels; and shall only pay the like toll as post-chaises drawn by a like number of horses; and may travel on Sundays and holidays: and neither carriages nor horses, if returning empty, shall be liable to toll: and if any game, or other thing besides fish, and the necessary implements of carriages, be put therein for conveyance, the person putting in the same shall forfeit 5*l.*; and if the driver shall take up, or suffer any passenger, game, or other thing, to be carried therein, he shall forfeit 40*s.* or be imprisoned one month. Ibid.

If bulk shall be broke of any fish carriage consigned for London markets before brought within the bills of mortality, or sale made of the fish before they are exposed in the markets, the offender shall forfeit 10*l.* Ibid.

The fish, after brought up, is to be sorted, and exposed to sale in market next morning (Sundays excepted); and till so exposed no part thereof is to be sold by retail on pain of 10*l.* but mackarel may be sold on Sundays. Ibid.

Persons contracting for buying up fish, other than salmon and lobsters, before the same shall be first brought to market, and exposed to sale there, forfeit 50*l.* and the contract is void. Ibid.

No contract for British salmon and lobsters shall be in force longer than one year. Ibid.

No person may employ or be employed in buying at the markets, fish brought there for sale, to be afterwards divided amongst fishmongers, or others, to be sold; nor may any person buy in the said markets any fish, but what shall be for his own sale or use, on pain of 20*l.* Ibid.

By 7 Will. 3. c. 32, the inhabitants of Westminster are exempted from serving on juries for the Middlesex sessions.

By 3 Geo. 2. c. 25, jurors in London shall be householders within the city, and have tenements or personal estate to the value of 1*l.* 0*s.*

By 29 Geo 2. c. 19, persons summoned to serve on juries in London or any other town corporate, or franchise, not attending, shall forfeit not more than 40*s.* nor less than 20*s.* unless the court be satisfied with the cause of absence; such fine leviable by distress and sale.

——— Leather.] By 5 & 6 Ed. 6, c. 15, no sadler, girdler, cordwainer, or other artificer, who cuts leather in London, shall curry it at his house.

By 1 Mar. stat. 3, c. 8, the curriers of London and the suburbs thereof, shall use their own stuff.

By 13 and 14 Car. 2, c. 7, (see this act under the title Manufactures, s. Leather) the cordwainers, sadlers, girdlers, and curriers companies in London, may search and seize leather or hides intended to be transported; and in other places the officers of customs, or chief magistrates.

Leadenhall market shall be kept on a Tuesday. Ibid.

By 1 Will. & Mar. c. 33, all hides, skins, or tanned leather, shaved or liquored, shall be subject to the view, search, and seizure of the master and wardens of the said companies; but the master and wardens of the curriers company are not empowered to view, search, or seize any leather, hide, or skin, unless curried in London, by some members of their own company, nor in any place but an open market, or in the shops or warehouses of such curriers.

By 48 Geo. 3. c. lxxi, persons flaying hides and skins in London, Westminster, Southwark, or within 15 miles of the Royal Exchange, shall be subject to this act. s. 2.

Seven butchers named in this act, and their successors, together with seven persons to be annually appointed by the butchers company, seven by the curriers company, and seven by the cordwainers company, shall be commissioners for putting this act in execution, which commissioners are to be sworn to act impartially; and no act of theirs is to be valid unless at a meeting to be held in pursuance of this act, consisting of not less than five, the chairman of which is to have the casting vote, and vacancies are to be filled up in the first seven commissioners from time to time as they happen by a fresh nomination, by the remaining or surviving commissioners. s. 3, 13—19.

If the owner of any hide shall wilfully, negligently, or carelessly, gash any hide or skin, he shall forfeit not exceeding 2*s.* 6*d.* nor less than 6*d.* for the raw hide or skin of every ox, bull, cow, heifer, steer, stirk, or calf; not exceeding 1*s.* 6*d.* nor less than 6*d.* for every horse hide; not exceeding 3*d.* nor less than 3*d.* for every hog or pig skin; and ½*d.* for every sheep or lamb skin. but the penalties are not to be inflicted for unavoidable damage. s. 20, 21.

All hides and calf skins within 5 miles of the Royal Exchange shall be brought to Leadenhall; and sheep and lamb skins either to Woods-close, to the Borough, or Whitechapel markets; to be inspected, on pain of not exceeding 5*l.* nor less than 2*l.* s. 22, 23.

And places and hours of inspection are to be appointed for places beyond 5 miles from the Royal Exchange, within 3 months after 27th May, 1808; but nevertheless, butchers at any place within 15 miles, may bring their hides and skins to Leadenhall, or the other markets, on giving notice to the inspector of the district. s. 24.

Eight inspectors are to be annually appointed for Leadenhall—4 by the 7 commissioners, before named, in conjunction with the 7 nominees of the butchers' company, 2 by the 7 curriers, and the other 2 by the 7 cordwainers; 2 inspectors are also to be appointed for Woods-close—1 by the 7 commissioners and 7 butchers, and the other by the 7 curriers and 7 cordwainers; 2 are also to be appointed for the Borough, and 2 for the Whitechapel markets: and the commissioners have power to increase the number of inspectors, and make regulations for their attendance. s. 25, 26.

The inspectors are to be sworn before the lord mayor or an alderman, to act without favour, and they may take for inspecting the hide of every beast ½*d.* the skin of every calf, hog, or pig, ¼*d.* and for every score of sheep or lamb skins 3*d.*; but the commissioners may, if they see fit, increase the inspector's fees, not exceeding for beasts 1*d.* calves hogs, or pigs, ½*d.* and for the skin of every sheep or lamb, not exceeding ¼*d.* s. 27, 28, 29.

Persons imitating the inspector's mark, shall forfeit not exceeding 5*l.* s. 30.

Hours of the inspectors attendance on the market days, shall be at Leadenhall from 6 in the morning until 5 in the evening from 25th March to 29th September, and from 7 till 4 from 30th September to 24th March, and at the other markets for such hours as the commissioners may appoint. s. 31.

Inspectors are to provide stamps for marking hides and skins near the tail with the letter S if sound, and D if damaged; and if the penalty or fee be not paid, the inspector may seize the hide and sell it, unless notice of appeal be given to appeal to 2 arbitrators, who are to be appointed by the commissioners on the 1st Monday in June in every year, whose decision is to be final; and the party against whom such appeal shall be determined, shall pay not exceeding 5*s.* nor less than 2*s.* 6*d.* and if the arbitrators differ, they are to call in a third person, and the decision of such arbitrators and third person, or two of them, shall be conclusive, and the arbitrators are to attend on market days from the hour of 1 till the close of the market. s. 31, 35.

Arbitrators may also be appointed for the sheep-skin markets if found necessary. s. 36.

And if inspectors or arbitrators die, others are to be appointed in their room by the commissioners. s. 37.

The fees at each of the markets shall be weekly put together in one sum, together with one half of the fines for negligently gashing, and the remaining half with the whole of all other fines, shall be paid by the inspectors to the treasurers to be appointed by the commissioners. s. 40, 41.

The monies received by the treasurers shall be applied in payment of the expenses of carrying the act into execution; and the commissioners may direct such rewards as they think fit to be paid to working butchers for taking off hides and skins whole: and the surplus of the monies received by the treasurer shall be paid as follows: ¼th to the butchers company, ¼th to the curriers, ¼th to the cordwainers, to be applied to the use of the poor of the companies; and ¼th to the first-mentioned commissioners, to be applied to the use of the poor of the butchers who are not free of the company. s. 42.

Persons impeding inspectors, are to be liable to not exceeding 5*l.* nor less than 10*s.*; inspectors taking and persons offering bribes, are to forfeit not exceeding 20*s.* Salesmen are to give an account to their employers of fines imposed, on pain of 5*l.*; and workmen or servants gashing hides or skins are liable to repay one half of the fines to their principal. s. 43, 46.

Sellers of unstamped hides or skins within 5 miles of the Royal Exchange, and persons buying such, except in a public market, are to forfeit not exceeding 20*s.* nor less than 5*s.* for every hide; not exceeding 5*s.* nor less than 1*s* for every calf, hog, or pig skin; and not exceeding 1*s.* nor less than 6*d.* for every sheep or lamb skin. s. 48.

The penalties may be recovered before 1 justice, and levied by distress; and for want thereof to be committed for not exceeding 1 month: but an appeal is allowed to the sessions, and every information must be laid within 7 days.

The commissioners may issue precepts to the aldermen and common council of the wards, to cause the men to be raised, to whom they may give 10*l.* bounty, and they are to appoint a court to receive the returns of men provided. The aldermen are to desire the ward officers to give notice to the persons provided, to attend at the court, and on their appearance they are to be sworn to serve, and enrolled for five years; and the ward officers and constables guilty of default are to forfeit not exceeding 40*s.* s. 11.

In case of deficiency of men, the commissioners are to issue their precepts to the aldermen and common council to provide men, or pay 10*l.* for each man wanting; and if they neglect to do so, or if the men be not approved, the ward is to be charged with 10*l.* for each, to be applied by the commissioners in providing the men, and the surplus monies are to be applied as part of the regimental stock. s. 12.

The aldermen and common council are to make a rate in the different wards to defray the expences of raising the men: but an appeal may be made against the rates to the court of mayor and aldermen, and the rates may be levied by distress. s. 13, 14, 15.

But no distress is to be made out of the limits of the city, unless the warrant be backed by a magistrate of the place. s. 15.

The penalty for not making the distress, not backing the warrants, or not acting in aid in making the distress, is not exceeding 40*s.* s. 16.

Householders serving in their own right are exempted from the rate. s. 17.

Aldermen and common council to be the ward assessors, and to appoint collectors with an allowance. s. 18.

And if they neglect to provide men or pay for them, or levy rates, the commissioners may levy and apply such rates, and may call for the last assessment to the land tax from the clerk, who shall produce it and give copies, on penalty of 20*l.* s. 19.

Commissioners are to appoint an adjutant to each regiment, who, if from the army, shall preserve his rank, and may hold a subaltern's commission, and have brevet rank of captain without the requisite qualification. s. 20.

A surgeon, quarter-master, and regimental clerk, are to be appointed, but neither of them shall be a captain of a company, except that the regimental clerk may be captain-lieutenant. s. 21.

The pay of the adjutants, regimental clerks, quarter-masters, serjeant-majors, and other non-commissions, shall be the same as the regular militia forces, and for this purpose the commissioners may make civil appointments. s. 22.

The pay of the militia is to be issued to the treasurer in like manner as by the receiver-general of the land tax for the county militia. s. 23.

The regimental clerks are to give security as in other regiments, and pay balances to the treasurer; and all costs of suit shall be recoverable as by the general militia act. Ibid.

Officers on half-pay serving as subalterns, may continue to receive the same on the usual oath. s. 24.

There shall be three serjeants, three corporals, and two drummers, to each company, with the addition of one drummer to each of the flank companies; and the serjeants, corporals, and drummers, when not in actual service, shall be clothed once in two years, and be sworn to serve until discharged. s. 25.

The colonel of each regiment may appoint a serjeant-major and drum-major; and non-commissioned officers and drummers having received pay, are compellable to serve, to live within one mile, and shall not be publicans. Ibid.

The colonel may discharge non-commissioned officers and drummers, and the captain may fill up vacancies. s. 26.

Officers may keep musicians as extra drummers, paying the expence. s. 27.

The militia shall be exercised twenty-eight successive days annually, and be subject to the mutiny act. s. 28.

Notice of the time and place of exercise to be affixed on the church doors, and lists of the men enrolled are to be sent by the clerk to the colonel. s. 29.

Adjutants, serjeants, corporals, and drummers, shall be subject to the mutiny act, and the colonel may direct the holding of courts martial when the regiment is embodied, for their trial for previous offences. s. 30.

The arms, accoutrements, and clothing, shall be kept where the commissioners shall appoint, and the privates are to be clothed once in five years when not embodied. s. 32.

The pay of the militia shall be the same as in the regular militia, and the men may be put under stoppages. s. 33.

And the militia in lieu of quarters shall be allowed 1*s.* 9*d. per* week for each man, in addition to the pay to provide quarters; but the serjeants, corporals, and drummers, not residing within the limited distance of one mile, are not entitled to the allowance. s. 34.

The commissioners are to appoint treasurers and clerks, and an account of the trophy tax is to be delivered annually to the corporation before a new rate is made. s. 35.

And security is to be taken from the treasurer and clerks. s. 36.

In case of invasion or danger thereof, or rebellion, or insurrection, his majesty may order the militia to be embodied, subject to the mutiny laws. s. 37.

And his majesty within 12 months may draw out the militia, and when drawn out to be entitled to the same pay as other regiments of foot, and the non-commissioned officers and privates to Chelsea hospital. s. 38, 39.

When drawn out, his majesty may put one regiment under the command of general officers, to be led to the distance of 12 miles. s. 40.

The commissioners may appoint an agent. s. 41. The militia men to be subject to the general militia act, as far as relates to penalties for not attending annual exercise, for deserting, and the like; and maimed militia men, having served, may set up trade in any part of Great Britain. s. 42.

The militia when disembodied, are liable only to the orders they were subjected to before drawn out. s. 43.

The commissioners may order the militia, when not embodied, to be trained and reviewed, and to be kept in readiness to be put under the orders of the lord-mayor or magistrates, who may call the whole, or part out, for the suppression of riots, in which case a court of lieutenancy is to be summoned, to whom the reasons for so doing are to be reported. s. 46, 47.

If a sufficient number of commissioners to make a court shall not attend, a fresh summons shall be issued. s. 47.

Militia men not appearing when called out by the lord-mayor or magistrates, if a serjeant, corporal, drummer, or fifer, for two hours, 40*s.* four hours, 5*l.* and if not in six hours, to be deemed deserters; privates receiving pay, not appearing for two hours are to forfeit 20*s.* for four hours 50*s.* and if not within six hours to be deemed deserters; privates not receiving pay, not appearing at the time and place appointed, shall forfeit 10*s.* not within twelve hours 20*s.* and if not within twenty-four hours to be deemed deserters. s. 48.

The aldermen and common council are to divide the quota of men amongst the parishes, and specify for which each serves, that the parish officers may be resorted to for defraying the expences of their families. s. 49.

The allowances to families of militia men (see 39 Geo. 3. c. 82. infra) shall not compel them to be sent to workhouses, nor deprive the husbands of their legal settlement or right to vote for members of parliament. s. 53.

Adjutants are to have the same allowances as in other regiments: serjeants may receive their allowance on the establishment of Chelsea; and non-commissioned officers and drummers are entitled to the benefit of Chelsea hospital. s. 54.

Acceptance of commissions shall not vacate seats in parliament, and officers are not liable to serve the office of sheriff. s. 55.

Militia men who are voters are not punishable for going to elections. s. 56.

A state of the regiment when called out to annual exercise, is to be returned to the commissioners by the commanding officer, on pain of 100*l.* s. 57.

No serjeants, corporals, drummers, or fifers, are compellable to serve as peace or parish officers or in the navy. s. 58.

The act 24 Geo. 2. c. 44. to render justices safe in the execution of their offices, to extend to the mayor, aldermen, and other officers. s. 59.

No officer of the city militia shall sit on any court martial upon other than the militia forces; nor any officer, other than of the militia forces, sit on any offender in the city militia. s. 60.

The act is not to prejudice the rights of the city; and the militia is to enjoy all the rights of the antient trained bands. s. 61.

Fines exceeding 20*l.* are recoverable in the courts at Westminster, and under 20*l.* before the mayor or magistrate, in a summary way. s. 62, 63.

By 39 Geo. 3. c. 82. if deserters or absentees be not taken, or do not return, in three months, the commissioners of lieutenancy shall provide other men out of the trophy tax; and deserters, if taken, shall be compelled to serve. s. 3.

The commissioners shall provide out of the trophy tax, men to serve instead of those promoted. s. 4.

A serjeant-major, and a quarter-master-serjeant, shall be added to each regiment. s. 5.

Non-commissioned officers may be reduced to privates for not exceeding fifteen calendar months, and afterwards, if not regularly re-appointed, to be discharged. s. 6.

The pay, clothing, and incidental expences, of the militia to be paid by the commissioners out of the annual levy of 46661*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* for the month's tax, as hath been usual since 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 3.; and collectors of the month's tax neglecting their duty, may be fined not exceeding 20*l.* s. 7, 8.

If non-commissioned officers, drummers, or fifers, when ordered to march, leave families behind them, they shall be relieved by the parish officers out of the poor rates; and if the family does not belong to the parish, the treasurer to the commissioners shall reimburse the allowance to such parish. s. 10.

And the treasurer is to be reimbursed by the parish to which the men are allotted, 36 Geo. 3. c. 92. s. 51.

Families of men not residing within London, or three miles thereof, not entitled to relief; and of men hereafter enrolled, only for one child born previous to the enrolment. s. 11.

The commissioners, forty days before the time of service of any man is expired, shall issue a precept for providing another man in his room. s. 12.

Parish officers refusing to pay money ordered at the sessions, shall be liable as under the former act, for refusing to pay money under an order of a justice, viz. 10*l.* see 36 Geo. 3. c. 92. s. 52.; but if they feel aggrieved they may appeal to the next sessions. s. 13.

If the treasurer to the commissioners shall refuse to reimburse the parish officers' money, paid to any families not belonging to the parish, he shall forfeit not exceeding 10*l.* s. 14.

By 37 Geo. 3. c. 25. the constable of the Tower, and lieutenant of the Tower Hamlets, may arm and exercise the militia of the hamlets according to 26 Geo. 3. c. 107. [general militia act, since repealed, see Militia], the provisions of which shall extend to them and the 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 3. so far as repugnant to this act, is not to be applied to the Tower Hamlets. s. 1.

The men, in the whole amounting to 1120, shall be raised in the following proportions: s. 2.

Parish of Whitechapel	132
——— Christchurch	78
——— Norton Falgate	51
——— Old Artillery	11
——— Shoreditch	155
——— Hackney	84
——— Bethnal-green	122
——— Mile-end N. T.	22
——— Mile-end O. T.	57
——— Promley	6
——— Stratford	22
——— Poplar and Blackwall	26
——— St. Ann	26
——— Ratcliffe	44
——— Shadwell	71
——— St. George	110
——— St. John	45
——— East Smithfield	45
——— St. Catherine	11
——— Tower without	5
——— Minories	8
——— Welclose	9

The constable is to appoint a clerk and messenger, and officers who have been approved by the king. s. 3.

The residents in the hamlets, and peace officers, are subject to the like duties as in the counties at large. s. 5.

When embodied, his majesty may put one regiment under the command of general officers, to be led to a distance of twelve miles, for repelling invasion or tumult. s. 6.

The constable and lieutenancy are to continue to raise trophy money, and the qualification of officers shall be as follows: deputy lieutenants 100*l.* per annum, or heir to 200*l.*; colonel of 300*l.* per annum, or heir to 600*l.*; lieutenant-colonel, or major-commandant, of 200*l.* per annum, or heir to 400*l.*; major, or captain, of 100*l.* per annum, or heir to 200*l.*; lieutenant of 30*l.* per annum, or personal estate of 600*l.* value, or real and personal together of 1000*l.* value; an ensign of 15*l.* or heir to 30*l.* per annum, or possessed of personal estate to the amount of 400*l.* s. 8.

Estates granted for twenty years, of equal value to those required for qualifications, sufficient. s. 9.

No rank superior to a lieutenant to be given till the qualification be delivered to the clerk of the peace. s. 10.

The clerk of the peace is to enter qualifications in a roll, and insert the dates of commissions in the Gazette; and the deputy lieutenants and officers are, within six months, to take the oaths of allegiance, supremacy, and abjuration. s. 11.

Unqualified persons acting, or not delivering in their qualifications, are to forfeit 50*l.* half to the king, and half to the informer. s. 12.

Prosecutions are to be heard and determined by the general quarter sessions for the Tower liberties. s. 13.

Peace officers are to obey the orders of the justices of the said liberties;—justices may act though they are deputy lieutenants or officers—and an appeal lies to the sessions, within three months, giving ten days' notice. s. 14—16.

And by 37 Geo. 3. c. 85. his majesty was authorized to draw out and embody the said militia.

——— Nuisance.] By 12 Ric. 2. c. 13. none shall cause any annoyance in London or other cities or towns, by casting dung or filth in ditches, rivers, or waters, and if they do they shall be punished at the discretion of the chancellor.

——— Oil.] By 3 Hen. 8. c. 18. the mayor of London, with the master and wardens of the tallow-chandlers, may search and see that oils put to sale be not mixed or defective; and may destroy defective oil, and imprison offenders. Chief magistrates in other cities and towns have like power.

——— Orphans fund.] By 5 & 6 Will. & Mar. c. 10. the lands, markets, fairs, and aqueducts, belonging to the city of London (except such as belong to hospitals, and are liable to the repairs of London bridge), are chargeable for ever with 8000*l. per annum*, to be appropriated for a perpetual fund for the orphans and other creditors of the city.

Towards such fund the common council may assess 2000*l.* yearly upon the personal estates of inhabitants, and distrain for the same; and all profits on lighting the streets shall be applied to such uses. Ibid.

Every apprentice shall pay 2*s.* 6*d.* on his binding, and 5*s.* on his freedom, into the hands of the warden of the company; 4*s.* per ton was granted on all wine imported at London for the increase of the fund; and likewise a duty on coals of 4*d.* per metage, and 6*d.* per chaldron, and 6*d.* per ton, which duty on coals, by 7 Geo. 3. c. 37. was continued for forty-six years, from the 29th of September, 1785, for completing Blackfriars bridge, redeeming the tolls of London bridge, rebuilding Newgate, repairing the Royal Exchange, and embanking part of the north side of the river Thames; and then for paving the streets of Westminster and Southwark.

The fund shall be applied for payment of debts due to orphans and creditors, by interest, after the rate of 4*l.* per cent for ever; for which the orphans and creditors shall acknowledge satisfaction, 5 & 6 Will. & Mar. c. 10.

Books of receipts and disbursements shall be kept by the chamberlain, which are to be audited yearly, allowing the auditors 20*s.* for every 1000*l.* therein; and the chamberlain or others misapplying the money shall forfeit treble the sum. Ibid.

The chamberlain and common serjeant shall give a note of what is owing to orphans and creditors, which debts are transferrable. Ibid.

No persons are compellable to pay orphans' money into the chamber. Corporation lands are liable if the city misapply the money: all fines shall be levied to the above abuses, and are not dischargeable by pardon. Ibid.

Orphans, hereafter, may have the benefit of the provision in this act, on paying to the chamberlain any sum of money, who is therewith to pay off any other orphan so much, and to admit the orphan who has paid in the monies to the benefit of such share. Ibid.

This act is not to extend to the New River, Shadwell, or London bridge waterworks.

——— Oyer and Terminer, and Gaol Delivery.] By 25 Geo. 3. c. 18. the session of gaol delivery of Newgate for Middlesex, shall not be discontinued by the sitting of the court of king's bench.

And by 32 Geo. 3. c. 48. the session of the peace and of oyer and terminer for Middlesex, is not to be discontinued by the sitting of the court of king's bench.

——— Painters.] By 1 Jac. 1. c. 20. no plasterer shall use the art of painter-stainer in London, unless he has served seven years to a painter as an apprentice, on pain of 5*l.*

———Pharmacy and Surgery.] By 3 Hen. 8, c. 11, no person within the city of London, or seven miles thereof, shall exercise as a physician or surgeon, except examined and approved, on forfeiture of 5*l.* a month.

A physician or surgeon out of the precinct of London, seven miles, shall be approved by the bishop of the diocese, on like pain, but the rights of the universities are saved. Ibid.

By 5 Hen. 8, c. 6, the surgeons of London shall be exempt from bearing armour, parish offices, and inquests.

By 14 & 15 Hen. 8, c. 5, the king's charter for incorporating the college of physicians of London is confirmed; they are to choose a president, and have perpetual succession, a common seal, and ability to purchase lands and make ordinances. Eight of the chiefs of the college shall be called elects, who from amongst themselves are to choose a president yearly.

Physicians through England shall be examined by the president of the college, and three of the elects; graduates of the universities excepted. Ibid.

By 32 Hen. 8, c. 40, the president, commons, and fellows of physicians in London, are exempted from ward and parish offices.

Four physicians shall be chosen by the college to search apothecaries wares; and, in company with the warden of the mystery of apothecaries, they may destroy defective wares. Apothecaries refusing to be searched forfeit 5*l.* and physicians to act, 40*s.* Ibid.

Any of the physicians in London may practice surgery. Ibid.

By 32 Hen. 8, c. 42, the barbers and surgeons of London were united and incorporated, and exempted from bearing arms, or serving on inquests or offices.

The masters and governors of the surgeons of London may take yearly four condemned felons for anatomies. Ibid.

Barbers in and within 1 mile of London shall not use surgery or let blood, drawing of teeth except; and surgeons shall not be barbers. Surgeons shall have a sign at their doors. Ibid.

No one shall be a barber in London unless free of the company. Ibid.

Barbers and surgeons shall pay scot and lot; and any person may retain a surgeon or a barber in his house as a servant. Ibid.

By 34 & 35 Hen. 8. c. 8, any subject of the king having knowledge of the nature of herbs, may minister to any outward sore, wound, or disease.

By 1 Mar. sess. 2. c. 9, the president of the college of physicians may commit offenders to any prison within London except the Tower.

By 6 Will. 3, c. 4, apothecaries free of the company in London, practising there, or within 7 miles thereof, are exempted from the offices of constable, scavenger, or overseer, or any other parish, ward, or leet offices, and from serving on juries, producing a testimonial of their freedom.

Apothecaries in other parts, brought up in such art, or having served an apprenticeship of 7 years, shall also be exempted. Ibid.

By 18 Geo. 2, c. 15, the union of surgeons and barbers of London was dissolved, and the surgeons of London were made a separate corporation, with power to enjoy the same privileges as by former acts or grants.

Candidates to serve as surgeons in the army and navy shall be examined by the surgeons company. Ibid.

By 25 Geo. 2, c. 37, the bodies of murderers, convicted and executed in London or Middlesex, shall be delivered to Surgeons Hall; and in any other county to such surgeon as the judge shall direct.

The 14 Geo. 3. c. 49, regulates the keeping of madhouses, and is noticed under title Lunatics.

——— Police Offices.] By 2 Geo. 3. c. 28, persons using, living, or navigating bumboats on the Thames, unless entered at the office of the Trinity-house, unlawfully receiving goods, stores, or the like, from vessels in the river, may be convicted before a justice of peace of a misdemeanor, and forfeit the boat.

By 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 87, his majesty may cause a public office to be established at or near Wapping New stairs, and appoint 3 special justices for determining complaints of offences committed on the river Thames. s. 1.

One of whom shall attend every day from 10 until 8, and 2 from 11 till 1, and from 6 until 8. s. 2.

An account of the fees taken at the office is to be delivered monthly to the receiver, and the amount paid to him. s. 3.

All penalties (except to informers and parties aggrieved) received at this office shall be paid to the receiver. s. 4.

His majesty, by the advice of his privy council, may direct salaries to be paid to the justices. s. 5.

The salary to each to be 400*l.* clear, and the whole expence of the office not to exceed 8000*l.* Ibid.

His majesty may appoint a receiver of all fees at such salary as his majesty shall appoint, and to possess the same powers as the receiver under the other police act (see 42 Geo. 3, c. 76. infra); and if the monies applicable by the receiver shall not amount to 8000*l.* the deficiency shall be supplied out of the consolidated fund, and if they exceed he shall pay the surplus into the Exchequer. s. 6.

The justices may employ a sufficient number of sworn constables, and may suspend or dismiss them; and also any number of men not exceeding 30, under the name of Thames police surveyors, for inspecting the conduct of the constables and persons employed in and about ships and vessels on the river. s. 7, 8.

But the court of assistants of the Trinity-house may dismiss such constables or surveyors. s. 9.

The receiver is to pay the constables and surveyors such salaries as the justices shall appoint with the approbation of the Secretary of State. s. 10.

The inspectors may at all times by day or night enter every ship, boy, barge, lighter, boat, or other vessel (not in his majesty's service), in the river, to inspect the conduct of the constables and all other persons on board, for providing against fire, preserving peace, preventing felonies or misdemeanors, or detecting offenders. s. 11.

Suspected persons and reputed thieves, frequenting the river and the quays and warehouses adjoining, with a felonious intent, may be apprehended by the constables or surveyors, and conveyed before the special justices, or any other justice, and if it shall appear that there is just ground to suspect such was their intent, they shall be deemed rogues and vagabonds within the meaning of 17 Geo. 2, c. 5; but persons thinking themselves aggrieved may appeal to the quarter sessions; if the conviction be affirmed, the justices may proceed against the offender as if he had been committed until the sessions; but persons convicted are not liable to any other punishment than imprisonment not exceeding 6 months. s. 12.

Persons damaging boats belonging to the justices are to forfeit not exceeding 15*l.* or be imprisoned for not exceeding 3 months. s. 13.

Persons breaking packages with an intent that the contents may be spilled, to forfeit not exceeding 40*s.* nor less than 10*s.* to be paid on conviction, or be committed for not exceeding one calendar month. s. 14.

Persons letting fall any articles for the purpose of preventing the seizure or discovery of any unlawfully obtained, guilty of a misdemeanor; and if any of apparent value shall be let fall from any ship, into any boat, or from any boat over wharf, without the privity of the owner, the boat may be seized, and every person therein, or any suspected person near, conveyed before the special justice or justices of the jurisdiction, and if not made appear that it did not proceed from a fraudulent design, the parties shall be deemed guilty. s. 15.

If on information on oath it shall appear to the justices that there is reasonable cause for suspecting that any part of the cargo of any vessel, or any of his majesty's stores, have been unlawfully obtained, and are concealed, they, or any justices in their jurisdictions, may cause the place to be searched by day or by night, and by force, if necessary; and if any are found, and it be not made appear by what lawful means they came deposited, the person in whose house found, and the persons appearing to have been privy to the depositing, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor. s. 16. See 2 Geo. 3, c. 28.

Every person who to prevent any articles from being seized, on suspicion of being stolen, or being produced in evidence, shall frame any false bill of parcels, shall be adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor, and may be advertised. s. 17.

When the production of the party from whom any goods have been bought, would, under 2 Geo. 3, c. 28, s. 6, 7, exempt any person from being adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor, such production shall not be deemed sufficient, unless the account given be satisfactory to the justice, who otherwise may examine all purchasers, and adjudge the party guilty of a misdemeanor. s. 18.

Misdemeanors under this act are punishable, first, by a penalty not exceeding 5*l.* nor less than 20*s.* or by imprisonment not exceeding eight weeks nor less than two; or secondly, by a penalty from 40*s.* to 10*s.* coupled with imprisonment from four weeks to one; and if penalty be not paid or secured, the offender may be committed for not exceeding 8 weeks; and the penalties are to go either wholly to the informer, or be distributed to such as shall have contributed to the conviction, and the informer may be an evidence. s. 19.

Complaints of offences declared misdemeanors, or for which pecuniary penalties are appointed, shall be heard and determined either by the special justices at their office, or by any justice in his jurisdiction; if in London by the lord mayor or aldermen. s. 20

Misdemeanor under 2 Geo. 3, c. 28, s. 16, may be punished either under that act or under this. s. 21.

Persons guilty of offences under 2 Geo. 3, c. 28, s. 12 (See Felony), are punishable by transportation for 14 years, shall plead to indictments without having time to traverse. s. 22.

Nothing herein to deprive the city magistrates of any of their rights s. 23.

The act shall continue in force until 25th March 1807. s. 26. But it is further continued by 47 Geo. 3, sess. 1, c. 37, infra.

By 43 Geo. 3, c. 115, coffee, tea, and all other exciseable articles, stopped under 2 Geo. 3, c. 28, and 39 and 40 Geo. 3, c. 87. by reason of forfeiture, shall be conveyed to the Excise office within 24 hours. s. 1.

And such articles being stopped on suspicion of being stolen, shall be deposited in the office of the Thames police till produced at the trial; but notice of such detention shall be given to the Excise office within 24 hours; and after trial the goods shall be conveyed to the Excise office. s. 2—4.

If such goods shall not be conveyed to the Excise office in manner hereby required, they may be seized, and persons making default are to forfeit 20*l.* and for obstructing the officers 200*l.* to be recovered as Excise penalties. s. 5—7.

By 47 Geo. 3, sess. 1, c. 37, the acts 39 and 40 Geo. 3, c. 87, and so much of 42 Geo. 3, c. 76, infra, as amend the same, are continued until 25th March, 1814. s. 1.

The Thames police surveyors may enter ships, boys, barges, lighters, boats, or other vessels, on suspicion of felony having been committed, or being about to be committed. s. 2.

Boats forfeited may be destroyed, or restored, or sold, at the discretion of the justices. s. 3.

The magistrates are empowered to settle disputes relating to wages between captains and owners of ships, wharfs, or quays, and their labourers, s. 4, whose orders shall be final. s. 5.

Persons destroying or damaging any boat belonging to the justices, to forfeit 30*l.* instead of 15*l.* under the first-mentioned act. s. 6.

And all forfeitures for injuring packages may be recovered before one justice of the peace. s. 7.

All penalties in the first act as to framing fraudulent bills of parcels, are extended to persons knowingly producing the same. s. 8.

One justice may convict under the first act, and the offenders may be severally adjudged to different fines, and different periods of imprisonment. s. 9.

The jurisdiction of the justices not to extend to the city of London, or the suburbs and liberties thereof, or any vessel between the Tower and the western extremity of the Temple adjoining Essex-street. s. 10.

The jurisdiction of the corporation of London over Southwark not affected. s. 11.

Penalties under 39 Geo. 3. c. 69, for rendering more commodious the port of London, not affected. s. 12.

Privileges of the Trinity, and of St. Clement's, Deptford Stroud, not affected. s. 13.

By 42 Geo. 3, c. 76, the former acts of 32 Geo. 2, c. 53, and 36 Geo. 3, c. 75, as to the Middlesex and Surrey police offices, are repealed. s. 1.

The seven public offices now established, and the justices acting therein, shall be continued. s. 2.

His majesty may appoint justices to fill up vacancies; and one of such justices shall attend at each of such offices every day from ten in the morning until eight in the evening, and two shall attend together from twelve till three, and from six till eight, but the attendance of one may be supplied by any other justice. s. 3.

No justice shall take any fees but at such public offices, on pain of 100*l.* except fees for licensing alehouses, or fees taken at the public office in Bow-street. s. 4.

An account of the fees taken at the seven offices shall be delivered monthly to the receiver, and the amount of fees paid to him, and all penalties (except to informers, and parties aggrieved) received at such public offices, shall be paid to the receiver; and if such fees and penalties are not accounted for, the receiver may sue for the same in any court of record at Westminster. s. 5, 6, 7.

The receiver may sue for money left in the hands of deceased receivers, and recover from their representatives. s. 8.

His majesty may in council order salaries of 500*l.* per ann. each to the justices, but the whole expences are not to exceed 18,000*l.* s. 9.

The present receiver is to continue in office, and in case of death or resignation his majesty may appoint another. s. 10.

The duty of the receiver is to pay all salaries, expences, and charges, out of his receipts; and he is to account on oath to the Treasury; and have an allowance of 400*l.* per annum for his trouble, to be made good, if the monies received by him are deficient, out of the consolidated fund. s. 10, 11.

His majesty in council may alter the situation of the offices. s. 12.

Acts directed to be done by the nearest justice, may be done by a justice of the next police office. s. 13.

The justices are rendered incapable of sitting in parliament. s. 14.

And no justice, receiver, or constable, under this act shall interfere in elections of members, on penalty of 100*l.* except in discharge of their duty. s. 15.

The justices may employ not exceeding 8 constables in each office, and dismiss such as they think fit. s. 16.

The receiver shall pay the constables (47 Geo. 3. sess. 2. c. 42.) 18*s.* a week and extraordinary expenses. s. 17.

Constables may apprehend any suspicious person frequenting places of public resort, and streets or highways, and carry him before a justice, and if it appear upon oath that he is a person of evil fame and a reputed thief, he shall be deemed a rogue and vagabond within 17 Geo. 2. c. 25, and no certiorari is allowed; but such persons thinking themselves aggrieved may appeal to the sessions, where, if the conviction be affirmed, the justices may proceed as if the party had been committed to the house of correction till the next sessions, but the punishment shall not exceed six months' imprisonment. s. 18.

The jurisdictions of London and Southwark, and of the dean or high steward of Westminster, are saved. s. 19, 20.

Instead of 400*l.* allowed by 39 & 40 Geo. 3. c. 87. s. 5, to each of the Thames police magistrates, 500*l.* shall be paid, but the whole expence of that office shall not exceed 8000*l.* per annum.

By 47 Geo. 3. sess. 2. c. 42, the act 42 Geo. 3. c. 76, is continued until 1st June, 1810, s. 1.; and 18*s.* per week shall be paid to the constables in lieu of 16*s.* s. 2.

——— Poor.] By 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 12, there shall be one or more corporations or workhouses in London, Westminster, and the bills of mortality; the lord-mayor shall be president, with fifty-two assistants, chosen by the common council, who are to choose subordinate officers; and in Westminster the lord chancellor is to appoint the president and assistants, and approve of the officers.

The president and governors, or two of them, may apprehend beggars and vagrants, and cause them to be kept and set to work in the said workhouses. Ibid.

If they want money for the above purposes the common council in London, and the burgesses and justices in Westminster, and within the bills, may tax the inhabitants, and levy the same by distress. Ibid.

The president and governors may make bye-laws; and all sheriffs and officers shall assist the corporations Ibid.

By 22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 18, officers of the above corporations shall account quarterly, and no assessment shall be made on any of the parishes after September 29, 1675. But the powers in London are not hereby vacated.

By 2 Geo. 3, c. 22, and 7 Geo. 3, c. 39, a regular, uniform, and annual register of all parish poor infants shall be kept within the bills of mortality, according to the forms in these acts.

By 7 Geo. 3, c. 39, in the several parishes within the bills of mortality children born in, or received into, any workhouse or parish-house there, are to be nursed and taken care of as follows, viz. those under six years of age are to be sent into the country three miles off; those under two years, not suckled by the mother, not less than five miles off; and those above two and under six, not less than three miles off.

Weekly rates to be paid for their nursing and maintaining till apprenticed, or returned to the workhouse, viz. until six years old 2*s.* 6*d.* a week, afterwards 2*s.*; and nurses may, for their care, have an annual reward of 10*s.*: clothing to be furnished, and all other incidental expences defrayed, by the parish, and separate accounts to be kept thereof. Ibid.

Five guardians of the parish poor children to be chosen out of each parish. Where any shall refuse to act, or shall resign, or die, a further choice to be made. Ibid.

Guardians to remain in office three years. Ibid.

Churchwardens and overseers, disqualified from being elected guardians, who are to visit the children, make enquiries, and report evils to the churchwardens, who are to redress the same, or, on their default, the guardians may. Ibid.

A meeting of the guardians to be summoned every six weeks, two to make a quorum, with power, singly or jointly, to call in the churchwardens or overseers. Ibid.

Parish poor children, under six years of age, may be sent to the Foundling hospital, upon such terms as shall be agreed on; the charge to be defrayed out of the poor rates; and if not duly paid, any justice may summon the overseers, and compel them to pay. Ibid.

The death, discharge, or apprenticeship of and child, to be certified to the vestry clerk of the parish. Ibid.

Hospital account to be kept with each parish distinct. Ibid.

Parish children and foundlings to be apprenticed for not more than seven years, or till twenty-one years of age. Apprentice-fee not to be less than 4*l.* 2*s.* and 40*s.* to be paid in seven weeks, and the remainder in three years, after the indentures are executed. Ibid.

An annual list to be made out by each parish of the children apprenticed, and delivered to the company of parish clerks; abstracts thereof to be printed, and delivered to each parish, commencing January 1st, and ending December 31st. Ibid.

General expences, not otherwise provided for, to be paid out of the poor rates, and parish officers or others neglecting their duty forfeit 5*l.* Ibid. See general title Poor.

By 5 Geo. 3. c. 13. and 26 Geo. 3. c. 102. for paving the streets of the city and liberty of Westminster, and parts adjacent, a street toll on Sundays, as before, shall be paid at the following turnpike gates, viz. that near Westminster-bridge in Surrey, nearest St. James's Park at Pimlico, at Kensington, nearest the entrance into Hyde Park, that at Hyde Park corner, the several gates at Tyburn, those near St. Mary-la-bonne, at Portland-street, at the Green Man, on the road from Paddington to Islington, on the said road eastward of Tottenham-court, at Tottenham-court, on the northern road, and that nearest the end of Gray's-inn-lane.

And by 49 Geo. 3. c. 171. (local act) the same tolls are authorised to be taken on Sundays at Blackfriars-bridge.

——— Taylors.] By 7 Geo. 1. stat. 1. c. 13. all contracts between journeymen taylors in London and Westminster, or within five miles thereof, for advancing their wages, or lessening their hours of work, are declared illegal and void; making such agreement, to be sent to the house of correction for two months.

By 8 Geo. 3. c. 17. journeymen taylors shall work from six in the morning till seven at night, at 2*s.* 7½*d.* a day, except during one month on a general mourning, and then at 3*s.* 1½*d.* a day.

Masters giving, or journeymen taking, more wages than hereby allowed, shall be sent to the house of correction, for not more than two months, nor less than fourteen days; and justices may call witnesses before them, on suspicion that the above regulation is broken through. Ibid.

The general sessions in London may alter the wages and hours, and make regulations in future, according to circumstances. Ib d.

This act is not to extend to taylor's foremen, or men working over hours, at 6*d.* per hour in general mournings, and 3*d.* an hour at other times. Ibid.

Masters employing men out of the limits, to evade the act, shall forfeit 500. and persons aggrieved may appeal to the quarter sessions. Ibid.

Journeymen taylors refusing to work at the wages allowed, or departing before the work is finished, may be sent to the house of correction for two months; and their wages may be recovered before a justice. 7 Geo. 1.

——— Thames.] By 4 Hen. 7. c. 15. the lord mayor of London shall have like conservation in creeks and breaches, ebbing and flowing out of the river Thames, as touching unlawful engines and annoyances.

By 21 Hen. 8. c. 18. annoying the Thames, or digging to make shelps, or casting rubbish therein, or undermining the banks, is a forfeiture of 5*l.*

Persons taking, for ballast, any gravel or sand, but off the shelps between Greenhithe and Richmond, shall be imprisoned and forfeit 5*l.* but any one may take ballast from such shelps. Ibid.

By 13 Eliz. c. 18. the city of London, by a new cut, were empowered to make the river Lee navigable from Ware.

By 3 Jac. 1. c. 14. ditches, sewers, streams, and watercourses, falling into the Thames, within two miles of London, shall be subject to the commission of sewers.

The 11 Geo. 3. c. 34. embanked the Thames opposite Durham-yard, Salisbury-street, Cecil street, and Beaufort-buildings, and the city of London and dean and chapter of Westminster were at liberty to try their right.

For improving and completing the navigation of the Thames from London to Cricklade, in Wiltshire, c. 45. repealed as to the commissioners and their authority. 14 Geo. 3. c. 91.

By 14 Geo. 3. c. 91. no towing-paths shall be through gardens, orchards, yards, parks, paddocks, inclosed lawns, or planted avenues, without the consent of the owner; and the committee may fix the price of carriage, and hire of horses; and taking more, penalty of 20*l.*; and no vessel shall moor in Taplow mill stream,

By 15 Geo. 3. c. 11. on the river Thames, vessels shall draw three feet of water from May 1st to November 1st, and three feet eight inches the rest of the year; and to have metal marks instead of white lines; and when the water is above the high mark, the gates to be opened; and no lock-owner to be a commissioner.

By 17 Geo. 3. c. 18. the city may purchase the tolls for navigating the Thames westward from London bridge in their liberty, and in lieu thereof, may take per ton—

The rulers of the watermen's company shall appoint two officers to attend at Billingsgate at high water, and at Gravesend at the first flood, who shall ring the tide bell; and if the watermen do not put off they shall forfeit 5*l.* Ibid.

The watermen's company not setting up such bells, or appointing persons to ring them, shall forfeit 50*l.* and the persons appointed neglecting to ring them, forfeit 40*s.* Ibid.

By 34 Geo. 3. c. 65. so much of 2 & 3 Phil. & Mar. c. 16. as subjects persons taking more than their fare to penalties, repealed. s. 1.

The court of mayor and aldermen of London are empowered to make rules for regulating the conduct and demeanor of watermen, wherrymen, and lightermen, upon the river Thames; which rules are to be approved and allowed by one or more of the judges, who may allow or alter the same. s. 2.

Copy of intended alterations and new rules to be sent to the watermen's company thirty days before allowed by the judges, and the company may submit their objections. s. 3.

The rules are to be printed and published. s. 4.

Power vested in the lord mayor, aldermen, and justices, to summon and apprehend watermen, and examine witnesses upon oath, and punish offenders by fine and imprisonment; but constables are not to take watermen out of boats or craft until moored, and notice hereof to be inserted in the warrant. s. 5, 6.

Power to summon parties on refusal of payment of fares, and apprehend them on non-appearance, and examine witnesses upon oath, and order payment. s. 7.

Persons refusing to pay fares, or to give their names and residence, or giving fictitious names or places of abode, shall forfeit not exceeding 5*l.* and may be summoned for the same, and also the loss of time and costs of the waterman. s. 8.

Overseers or rulers of the watermen's company to hear and determine complaints between waterman and waterman. s. 9.

Apprentices are to serve, in addition to the seven years for which they are bound, the space of time they shall be respectively imprisoned. s. 11.

The mayor, aldermen, and justices, may administer oaths, and on complaint may proceed to convict offenders, and apply within one month after levied, the whole thereof to the poor freemen and widows of the company, rewarding the informer with not exceeding one half thereof; but persons injured may appeal to the quarter sessions, from whence there is no certiorari. s. 12, 13, 14, 15.

But the prosecution must be commenced within six days. s. 16.

The act 24 Geo. 2. c. 44. for protecting justices, shall extend to justices and others acting under this act: notice to be given to peace officer before commencing suit against him: tender of amends may be made by him and pleaded in bar: if none or insufficient tender has been made, the plaintiff upon a verdict to recover. s. 18.

The act not to abridge the late duke of Richmond's right of holding a court at Gravesend, called Curia Cursus Aquæ, nor to lessen the liberties of the inhabitants of Gravesend, relating to the ferry from Gravesend to London, nor to abridge the powers of the master of the Trinity-house in licensing mariners, nor to affect the present laws, unless hereby expressly repealed. s. 19—21.

But persons convicted under this act not to be otherwise punished, and offenders not to be twice punished for the same offence. s. 22, 23.

——— Weights and Measures.] By 11 Hen. 6. c. 8. the mayor of London shall have power to execute the statutes touching weights and measures, and shall be sworn so to do.

The 1 Ann. stat. 1. c. 15. does not extend to sealed measures allowed by the fruiterer's company in London. See title Weights and Measures, post.

By 31 Geo. 2. c. 17. weights and measures within the city and liberty of Westminster shall be sized, sealed, and marked; otherwise may be destroyed as unlawful, and the owners amerced, not exceeding 40*s.* See general title.

——— Westminster.] By 7 & 8 Will. 3. c. 32. inhabitants of Westminster are exempted from serving on juries at the sessions of the peace for the county of Middlesex.

None may serve as high constable for more than three years together; refusing to serve the office forfeits 20*l.* Ibid.

A jury shall be summoned twice a year to enquire of and remove annoyances. Ibid. and 31 Geo. 2. c. 17.

By 31 Geo. 2. c. 17. repairs of pavements in Westminster, and removal of annoyances belonging to churches and public buildings, shall be done by the churchwardens; if belonging to markets, by the proprietors.

——— Wine.] By 6 Ed. 1. c. 15. the mayor and bailiffs of London shall enquire of wines sold against the assize.

By 26 Geo. 2. c. 12. no wine exceeding ten gallons, imported into the outports, shall be brought to London, or within twenty miles of the Royal Exchange, without paying the London duty and certificate. See titles Importation, &c. Excise, &c. Wine.

——— Wood.] By 23 Eliz. c. 5. no wood or underwood, growing within twenty-two miles of London, shall be employed for fuel for iron-works, on pain of 40*s.* a load: and no new iron-works shall be built within twenty-two miles of London, fourteen of the Thames, nor within four miles of the Downs, or Romsey, Winchelsea, Hastings, or Rye, on pain of 100*l.*

LONGELLUS, a coverlet. Cowel.

LONGITUDE of a place, in geography, is an arch of the equator intercepted between the first meridian, and the meridian passing through the proposed place, which is always equal to the angle at the pole, formed by the first meridian, and the meridian of the place. Cowel.

The first meridian may be placed at pleasure, passing through any place, as London, Paris, Teneriffe, &c. but with us it is generally fixed at London; and the degrees of longitude counted from it, will be either east, or west, according as they lie on the east or west side of that meridian. Ibid.

In other words, to explain the subject in a familiar manner, to those wholly unacquainted with it, as by the latitude we learn the distance north or south, so by knowing the longitude, we know the distance from any given place, east or west, allowing for the difference of a degree of longitude at the equator (or middle of the globe) and at the arctic circle, &c. Ibid.

The longitude is, as before described, in other words, the distance of a place, east or west, from that imaginary line drawn from north to south, through a place fixed on for that purpose, and called the first meridian, i. e. the meridian or boundary from whence we reckon, east or west, so that by ascertaining the latitude and longitude of a place, its situation on the natural or artificial globe, with respect to all other places, is known. Ibid.

For the discovery of the longitude at sea the following acts have been passed:

The 12 Ann. sess. 2. c. 85. and several subsequent acts, appointed commissioners of longitude to determine rewards to be given to persons making useful discoveries.

But 14 Geo. 3. c. 66. repealed all such acts (except as to the appointment of commissioners), and directed certain rewards to be given to discoverers of the longitude.

The first discoverer of a method to find the longitude, if by a time-keeper not yet discovered, shall receive 5000*l.* if it determines the same, to one degree of a circle; 7,500*l.* if it determines to two thirds of that distance; and 10,000*l.* if it determines the same to one half of a degree. Ibid.

And if by means of improved solar and lunar tables, the discoverers shall have 5000*l.* if they shew the exact distance of the moon from the sun and stars, within fifteen seconds of a degree, answering to about seven minutes of longitude, allowing half a degree for errors of observation. Ibid.

The commissioners are to receive proposals for discovering the longitude, and certify the same, with the names of the authors, to the commissioners of the navy. Ibid.

Persons making useful discoveries shall receive less rewards, agreeably to the judgment of the commissioners, so as the sums do not exceed 5000*l.* and no person is to receive more for discoveries than the greatest sum hereby provided. Ibid.

The commissioners may administer oaths for carrying the act into execution. Ibid.

By 30 Geo. 3. c. 14. the secretaries of the admiralty are to be commissioners of the longitude. s. 3.

By 43 Geo. 3. c. 118. five commissioners of longitude may construct nautical almanacs (the president of the Royal Society and the royal astronomer being two); and grant licences for printing and publishing them, which being signed by such five commissioners, is valid. s. 1, 2.

The penalties of 20*l.* for each pirated copy, shall be sued for by the secretary of the commissioners. s 3.

The commissioners shall certify the amount of debts incurred by them to the commissioners of the navy, who shall make out bills for their discharge s. 4.

The commissioners shall certify to the navy-board, the fitness of trying experiments for discovery of the longitude; and also whether in their judgment any person is entitled to a less reward than under 14 Geo. 3. c. 68. for improvements; and the treasurer is to pay the bills made out by the navy board. s. 5.

But all such rewards shall not exceed 5000*l.*—rewards not exceeding 1000*l.* shall be certified by the longitude commissioners to the navy-board; and if above 1000*l.* the same must be certified by the first lord of the admiralty. the first commissioner of the navy. the president of the Royal Society, the royal astronomer, and the comptroller of the navy. s. 6, 7.

But by 46 Geo 3. c. 77. the commissioners of longitude, are to certify the probability of success, of any proposal for discovering the longitude, to the commissioners of the navy, who are to order rewards to such persons, so as the sums paid exceed not 5000*l.* s. 1, 2.

LOQUELA, an imparlance. Cowel. Blount.

LORD, (dominus) is a word or title of honour, such as lords of parliament, and peers of the realm: by courtesy, as the eldest sons of peers. or lord chief justice, lord of the manor, lord paramount, and lord mesne, very lord, &c. Ibid.

LOT, or LOTH, the thirteenth dish of lead in the mines of Derbyshire, which belongs to the king. Ibid.

LOTHERWITE, or LEYERWIT, was a liberty or privilege to take amends of him that defiled a bond-woman without license. Cowel.

LOTTERIES. By 10 & 11 Will. 3. c. 7. lotteries are declared public nuisances, and patents for the same void and against law.

Any person keeping a lottery to draw or throw at by lots, dice, cards, or otherwise, shall forfeit 500*l.* and any person who shall play, throw, or draw at such lottery, shall forfeit 20*l.* Ibid.

By 9 Ann. c. 6. magistrates and peace officers are to suppress such lotteries; and any person publishing schemes to draw, shall forfeit 100*l.*

By 10 Ann. c. 26. persons setting up offices for insurances on marriages, births, and christenings, under the denomination of sale of goods, for the improvement of small sums, shall forfeit 500*l.* and printers advertising the same shall forfeit 100*l.*

By 5 Geo. 1. c. 9. selling chances of any ticket in any public lottery, not having the original ticket, shall incur the forfeitures inflicted on private lotteries, and 100*l.* more.

By 8 Geo. 1. c. 2. persons setting up offices for sale of houses, lands, goods, or other things, by way of lottery, shall forfeit 500*l.* besides the other penalties; and the contributors to such sales shall forfeit double the sum contributed.

By 9 Geo. 1. c. 19. and 6 Geo. 2. c. 35. persons publishing, selling, or delivering tickets in any foreign lottery, shall forfeit 200*l.* over and above the penalties in former acts.

By 12 Geo. 2. c. 28. sales of houses, lands, or goods, by lottery or chance, shall be void, and the lands and goods forfeited.

Not to extend to any games in palaces where the king resides; nor to affect right to any lands held by partition, by lots. Ibid.

By 42 Geo. 3. c. 119. all games or lotteries called LITTLE GOES, are declared public nuisances. s. 1.

Persons keeping any office or place for any game or lottery, called a little go, or any other lottery not authorized by law, shall forfeit 500*l.* and be deemed rogues and vagabonds, within the meaning of 17 Geo. 2. c. 5.; and offenders not proceeded against for the penalty, shall be punishable as rogues and vagabonds. s. 2, 3.

Justices, on information of suspected places, may authorize persons to break open doors of places (but if at night, with a peace officer) where such offences are committed and apprehend the offenders; and persons obstructing the officers in the execution of their duty, shall be deemed offenders against the law, and, on conviction, fined, imprisoned, and publicly whipped; and persons, though not discovered in such places, who may employ others in the transaction, shall be deemed rogues and vagabonds. s. 4.

No person shall agree to pay money or deliver goods on any event relative to such game or lottery, or publish any proposal, on pain of 100*l.* s. 5.

Offenders may be apprehended on the spot by any one, and carried before a justice, who shall, on the penalty not being paid, commit them for six months, or till payment, without appeal; and one third of the penalty is to go to the king, one third to the informer, and one third to the person apprehending. s. 6.

The regulations of the acts 22 Geo. 3. c. 47. and 27 Geo. 3. c. 11. respecting STATE LOTTERIES, have been repealed; and the provisions relating to such lotteries now depend on the clauses contained in the act, which annu- ally passes on the establishment of a State Lottery: the most material of which in the last, are the following:

No persons are to take down the numbers at the drawing, unless they be employed as clerks to the managers, or licensed so to do by the commissioners of stamps, who are to grant such licences only on account of licensed offices; and if any person unlicensed shall take down or publish the numbers drawn, he shall forfeit 5*l.* and on complaint thereof, the magistrates of London, or any justice, may grant warrants for apprehending the offenders: or persons in the actual commission of the offence may be apprehended by any person, and carried before a magistrate, who may commit the offender for not exceeding fourteen, nor less than five days, if the penalty be not paid, which penalty is to go between the informer and the constable apprehending the party; and persons summoned as witnesses not appearing are to forfeit 50*l.*: but the penalties may be mitigated, not less than one half besides costs, and the conviction is not removeable by certiorari. s. 21—24.

Persons before dealing in lottery tickets shall take out a stamp licence either in Great Britain or Ireland, and pay 50*l.* over and above all other duties as brokers or otherwise, which licence is to continue in force till the expiration of the drawing of the lotteries. s. 25, 26.

No licence is to be granted for any lottery office within the universities of Oxford and Cambridge. s. 27.

Licensed persons are to deposit and divide in shares thirty tickets in each of the lotteries, or the licence shall be void. s. 28.

Persons sharing tickets contrary to their licence, are to forfeit 100*l.* s. 29.

Persons to whom licences are granted, are to give security by bond in 1000*l.* to observe the provisions of the act. s. 30.

Upon death, the personal representatives may be authorized to carry on the business for the residue of the term of the licences. s. 31.

And persons convicted of offences, whether on a prosecution on the bond, or as rogues and vagabonds, shall forfeit their licence. s. 32.

Persons counterfeiting licences, or using such as are counterfeit, shall forfeit 500*l.* s. 33.

No chances of any tickets for any less time than the whole time of drawing shall be sold, or insurance made for or against the drawing of any ticket; nor shall any person publish any proposal for such purpose, on penalty of 50*l.* and if he be not licensed, he shall also be deemed a rogue and vagabond, and punished as such. s. 34.

If any person shall sell any shares divided otherwise than into halves, quarters, eighths, and sixteenths, he shall forfeit 50*l.* and be also deemed a rogue and vagabond. s. 3[illegible].

Persons counterfeiting shares, or selling the same, to be guilty of felony. s. 39.

Tickets intended to be sold in shares, are to be deposited with the commissioners of stamps, who are to stamp the shares, on payment to the receiver-general of 2*d.* for each share; and persons selling shares otherwise than on stamped paper, are to forfeit 50*l.* and be deemed rogues and vagabonds. s. 40—45.

Tickets, so deposited, shall continue in the hands of the receiver-general until three days after drawn, if not entitled to a greater prize than 50*l.* or until the expiration of fourteen days after drawn, if entitled to a greater prize than 50*l.* s. 46.

On complaint, on oath, of offences against the act, whereby the parties may be liable to punishment as rogues and vagabonds, the justices may authorize constables and others to break open doors; and persons discovered, in such places, carrying on illegal transactions, are to be punished as rogues and vagabonds; and if any person obstruct the officers, the justices, on conviction, may order the offender to be fined, imprisoned, and publicly whipped: and all persons employing or aiding others to carry on such illegal transactions, are to be deemed rogues and vagabonds. s. 52.

Penalties (not otherwise directed) may be recovered in the courts of exchequer in England, Scotland, and Ireland, in the name of the attorney-general, or advocate-general if in Scotland, and not in any other person's name. s. 54.

And in every such suit the offender may be held to bail, specifying in the copies the amount of the penalty, and so as the bail required exceed not 500*l.*; but when the amount of the penalty is not inserted in the writ, the defendant is only to be served with a copy. s. 54, 55.

Two justices may commit offenders, adjudged rogues and vagabonds, to the house of correction for not exceeding six calendar months, nor less than one, and until the final drawing of the lottery in which the offence shall be committed, which proceedings are not removeable by certiorari. s. 56.

MAIDEN ASSISES. When no person is condemned to die at a circuit-town, it is termed a maiden assise.

MAIDEN RENTS, a noble paid by every tenant in the manor of Builth, in Com. Radnor, at their marriage; anciently given to the lord for his omitting the custom of Marcheta, whereby he was to have the first night's lodging with his tenant's wife; but it was more probably a fine for a licence to marry a daughter. Cowel. Blount.

MAIGNAGIUM, (Fr. maignen, i. e. faber ærarius) a brazier's shop, though some say it signifies a house. Ibid.

MAIHEM, or MAYHEM, (maihemium, from the Fr. mehaigne, i. e. membri mutilationem) signifies a maim, wound, or corporal hurt, by which a man loses the use of any member, that is or might be of any defence to him: As, if a man's skull be broke, or any bone broken in any other part of the body; a foot, hand, finger, or joint of a foot, or any member be cut off, if by any wound the sinews be made to shrink; or where any one is castrated; or if an eye be put out, any fore-tooth broke. &c. Glanv. lib. 4, cap. 7. Bract. lib. 3, tract. 2. Britton, cap. 25. S. P. C. lib. 1, cap. 41. See Assault, Battery, and Felony.

MAII INDUCTIO, an ancient custom for the priest and people of country villages to go in procession to some adjoining wood on a May-day morning, and return in a kind of triumph, with a may-pole boughs, flowers, garlands, and other tokens of the spring. This May-game, or rejoicing at the coming of the spring, was for a long time observed, and still is in some parts of England; but there was thought to be so much heathen vanity in it that it was condemned and prohibited within the diocese of Lincoln by bishop Grosthead. Cowel. Blount.

MAIL, (macula) a coat of mail, so called from the Fr. maille, which signifies a square figure, or the hole of a net. Ibid.

MAILE, anciently a kind of money; and silver halfpence were termed mailes. 9 H. 5. See Northern Borders.

MAIMING. See Maihem.

MAINAD, a false oath, or perjury. Cowel. Blount.

MAINE-PORT, (in manu portatum) was a small tribute, commonly of loaves of bread, which in some places the parishioners paid to the rector of their church, in recompense for certain tithes. Cowel.

MAINOVRE, (from the Fr. main, i. e. manus, and ouvrer, operari) handy work, or some trespass committed by a man's hand. Ibid.

MAINOUR, MANOUR, or MEINOUR, (from the F. manier, i. e. manu tractare) in a legal sense denotes the thing that a thief taken away, or stealeth: As to be taken with the mainour, (Pl. Cor. fol. 179) is to be taken with the thing stolen about him; or as if it were in his hand. Ibid.

MAINPERNABLE, that may be let to bail. See Bail.

MAINPERNORS, (manucaptores) are those persons to whom a man is delivered out of custody or prison, on their becoming bound for his appearing. See Bail.

MAINPRISE, (manucaptio, from the Fr. main, i. e. manus, and pris, captus) signifies in our law the taking or receiving of a person into friendly custody who otherwise might be committed to prison, upon security given that he shall be forth-coming at a time and place assigned; as to let one to mainprise is to commit him to those that undertake he shall appear at a day appointed. Old Nat. Br. 42. F. N. B. 249. And there is this difference between mainprise and bail: he that is mainprised is said to be at large, after the day he is set to mainprise, until the day of his appearance; but where a man is let to bail by any judge, &c. until a certain day, there he is always accounted by the law to be in their ward for the time; and they may, if they will, keep him in prison, so that he that is so bailed shall not be said to be at large, or at his own liberty. Manwood. p. 167.

But a man under mainprise is supposed to go at large, under no possibility of being confined by his sureties or mainpernors, as in case of bail. 4 Inst. 179.

MAINSWORN, in the North of England, is taken for as much as forsworn. Brownl. 4. Cowel.

MAINTAINORS, are those that maintain or second a cause depending between others, by disbursing money, or making friends, for either party, or the like, not being interested in the suit, or attornies employed therein. Stat. 19 Hen. 7, c. 14.

MAINTENANCE, (manutenentia) signifies the unlawful upholding of a cause or person.

Maintenance is an offence that bears a near relation to BARRATRY, (which see) being an officious intermeddling in a suit that no way belongs to one, by maintaining or assisting either party with money, or otherwise, to prosecute or defend it; (Hawk. P. C. 249) a practice that was greatly encouraged by the first introduction of uses. (Doct. & Stud. 203.) This is an offence against public justice, as it keeps alive strife and contention, and perverts the remedial process of the law into an engine of oppression. And therefore by the Roman law it was a species of the crimen falsi to enter into any confederacy, or do any act to support another's lawsuit, by money, witnesses, or patronage (Ff. 48, 10, 20). A man may however maintain the suit of his near kinsman, servant, or poor neighbour, out of charity and compassion, with impunity. Otherwise the punishment by the common law is fine and imprisonment (1 Hawk. P. C. 255); and by the stat. 32 Hen. 8, c. 9, a forfeiture of 10*l.* See also Buying and Selling pretended Titles, and Champerty.

MAJORITY. The only method of determining the acts of many is by a majority; and the act of a majority, however, or when collected, is the act of the whole.

MAIOR, a mayor, does not come from the Lat. major, but from an old English word maier, i. e. potestas. Cowel.

MAISNADA, signifies a family, quasi mansionata. Ibid.

MAN (ISLE OF). The isle of Man is a distinct territory from England, and is not governed by our laws; neither doth any act of parliament extend to it, unless it be particularly named therein, and then an act of parliament is binding there (4 Inst. 284. 2 And. 116). It was formerly a subordinate feudatory kingdom, subject to the kings of Norway; then to king John and Henry III. of England; afterw rd to the kings of Scotland, and then again to the crown of England; and at length we find king Henry IV. claiming the island by right of conquest, and disposing of it to the earl of Northumberland, upon whose attainder it was granted (by the name of the lordship of Man) to sir John de Stanley by letters patent, 7 Henry IV. (Selden. tit. Hon. 1, 3.) In his lineal descendants it continued for eight generations, till the death of Ferdinando earl of Derby, A. D. 1594, when a controversy arose concerning the inheritance thereof, between his daughters and sir William his surviving brother; upon which, and a doubt that was started concerning the validity of the original patent (Camd. Eliz. ann. 1594), the island was seized into the queen's hands, and afterwards various grants were made of it by king James I. all which being expired or surrendered, it was granted afresh, in 7 Jac. I. to William earl of Derby, and the heirs male of his body, with remainder to his heirs general, which grant was the next year confirmed by act of parliament, with a restraint of the power of alienation by the said earl and his issue male. On the death of James earl of Derby, 1735, the male line of earl William failing, the duke of Atholl succeeded to the island as heir general by a female branch. In the mean time, though the title of king had long been disused, the earls of Derby, as lords of Man, had maintained a sort of royal authority therein, by assenting or dissenting to laws, and exercising an appellate jurisdiction: yet, though no English writ, or process from the courts of Westminster, was of any authority in Man, an appeal laid from a decree of the lord of the island to the king of Great Britain in council (1 P. Wms. 329). But the distinct jurisdiction of this little subordinate royalty being found inconvenient for the purposes of public justice, and for the revenue, (it affording a commodious asylum for debtors, outlaws, and smugglers,) authority was given to the Treasury by statute 12 Geo. 1, c. 28, to purchase the interest of the then proprietors for the use of the crown, which purchase was at length completed in the year 1765, and confirmed by statutes 5 Geo. 3, c. 26, called the vesting act, and 39, called the regulating act; whereby the whole island, and all its dependencies, so granted as aforesaid, (except the landed property of the Atholl family, their manorial rights and emoluments, and the patronage of the bishopric *, and other ecclesiastical benefices) are unalienably vested in the crown, and subjected to the regulations of the British excise and customs.

MANA, signified formerly an old woman. Cowel. Blount.

MANAGIUM, (from the Fr. manage, a dwelling or inhabiting) a mansion-house, or dwelling-place. Ibid.

MANBOTE, (Sax.) a compensation or recompense for homicide; particularly due to the lord for killing his man or vassal. Ibia.

MANCA, was a square piece of gold coin, commonly valued at thirty pence, and mancusa was as much as a mark of silver, having its name from manu-cusa, being coined with the hand. Leg. Canut. Spel. Cowel. Blount.

MANCH, is sixty shekels of silver, or seven pounds and ten shillings; and one hundred shekels of gold, of seventy-five pounds. Merch. Dict. Cowel.

MANCIPLE, (manseps) a clerk of the kitchen, or caterer; and an officer in the Inner Temple was anciently so called, who is now the steward there, this officer still remains in colleges, in the universities. Cowel.

MANDAMUS, a writ of mandamus is, in general, a command issuing in the king's name from the court of king's bench, and directed to any person, corporation, or inferior court of judicature, within the king's dominions, requiring them to do some particular therein specified, which appertains to their office and duty, and which the court of king's bench has previously determined, or at least supposes, to be consonant to right and justice. It is a high prerogative writ, of a most extensively remedial nature, and may be issued in some cases where the injured party has also another more tedious method of redress, as in the case of admission or restitution to an office; but it issues in all cases where the party hath a right to have any thing done, and hath no other specific means of compelling its performance. A mandamus therefore lies to compel the admission or restoration of the party applying, to any office or franchise of a public nature, whether spiritual or temporal; to academical degrees; to the use of a meeting-house, &c. It lies for the production, inspection, or delivery of public books and papers; for the surrender of the regalia of a corporation; to oblige bodies corporate to affix their common seal; to compel the holding of a court; and for an infinite number of other purposes, which it is impossible to recite minutely. But it may suffice to remark, that it issues to the judges of any inferior court, commanding them to do justice according to the powers of their office, whenever the same is delayed. For it is the peculiar business of the court of king's bench to superintend all other inferior tribunals, and therein to enforce the due exercise of those judicial or ministerial powers with which the crown or legislature have invested them; and this, not only by restraining their excesses, but also by quickening their negligence, and obviating their denial of justice. A mandamus may therefore be had to the courts of the city of London to enter up judgment (Raym. 214); to the spiritual courts to grant an adminis-

tion, to swear a churchwarden, and the like. This writ is grounded on a suggestion, by the oath of the party injured, of his own right, and the denial of justice below; whereupon, in order more fully to satisfy the court that there is a probable ground for such interposition, a rule is made, (except in some general cases, where the probable ground is manifest,) directing the party complained of to show cause why a writ of mandamus should not issue: and if he shows no sufficient cause the writ itself is issued, at first in the alternative, either to do thus, or signify some reason to the contrary; to which a return or answer must be made at a certain day. And if the inferior judge, or other person to whom the writ is directed, returns or signifies an insufficient reason, then there issues, in the second place, a peremptory mandamus to do the thing absolutely, to which no other return will be admitted, but a certificate of perfect obedience and due execution of the writ. If the inferior judge or other person makes no return, or fails in his respect and obedience, he is punishable for his contempt by attachment. But, if he, at the first, returns a sufficient cause although it should be false in fact, the court of king's bench will not try the truth of the fact upon affidavits; but will for the present believe him, and proceed no farther on the mandamus. But then the party injured may have an action against him for his false return, and (if found to be false by the jury) shall recover damages equivalent to the injury sustained; together with a peremptory mandamus to the defendant to do his duty. 3 Black. 110. Com. Dig. tit. Man.

Mandamus was also a writ that laid after the year and day, where in the mean time the writ, called diem clausit extremum, had not been sent out to the escheator, on the death of the king's tenant in capite, &c. And was likewise a writ or charge to the sheriff to take into the hands of the king all the lands and tenements of the king's widow-tenant, who against her oath married without his consent. F. N. B. 253. Reg. Orig. 195. See F. N. B. 561. Dyer. 209. pl. 19, 248. pl. 81. Lamb. 36. See also Corporations, and Quo Warranto.

MANDATARY, (mandatarius) is he to whom a command or charge is given. Cowel.

MANDATE, (mandatum) Is a commandment judicial of the king, or his justices, to have any thing done for the dispatch of justice, of which there is great diversity. Reg. Judic. And we read of the bishop's mandate to the sheriff, &c. Stat. 31 Eliz. c. 9. A mandate may be issued by the King's Bench to swear a churchwarden, or parish clerk, &c. when refused to be sworn by the bishop's minister. March. Rep. 22, 101. But see Mandamus.

MANDATI DIES, (Mandie or Maunday Thursday) The day before Good Friday, when is commemorated and practised the command of our Saviour, in washing the feet of the poor, &c. And our Kings of England, to show their humility, long executed the ancient custom on that day, of washing the feet of poor men, in number equal to the years of their reign, and giving them shoes, stockings and money. Cowel.

MANDATO PANES, loaves of bread given to the poor upon Maunday Thursday. Ibid.

MANNER, (from the Fr. manier, or mainer, i. e. manu tractare,) to be taken with the manner, is where a thief having stolen any thing, is taken with the same about him, as it were in his hands; which is called flagrante delicto. S. P. C. 179. H. P. C. 201. S. P. C. 28. 2 Hawk. P. C. 211.

MANNING, (manopera) a day's work of a man, and in ancient deeds there was sometimes reserved so much rent, and so many mannings. Cowel.

MANNIRE, was where one was cited to appear in court, and stand to judgment there, and different from bannire; for though both of them signify a citation, one is by the adverse party, and the other by the judge. Leg. Hen. 1, c. 10. Du Cange. Cowel.

MANNOPUS, (manopera) goods taken in the hands of an apprehended thief. Cowel.

MANNUS, a horse, a pad, or saddle-horse. Cowel.

MANOR, (manerium) seems to be derived of the Fr. manoir, habitatio, or rather from manendo, of abiding there, because the lord did usually reside there.

Manors are in substance as antient as the Saxon constitution, though perhaps differing a little, in some immaterial circumstances, from those that exist at this day. Co. Cp. s. 2. & 10.

A manor therefore seems to have been a district of ground, held by lords or great personages; who kept in their own hands so much land as was necessary for the use of their families, which were called terræ dominicales, or demesne lands; being occupied by the lord, or dominus manerii, and his servants. The other, or tenemental, lands they distributed among their tenants: which from the different modes of tenure were distinguished by two different names. First, book-land, or charter land, which was held by deed under certain rents, and free-services, and in effect differed nothing from free socage lands (Co. Cop. s. 3.), and from hence have arisen most of the freehold tenants who hold of particular manors, and owe suit and service to the same. The other species was called folk-land, which was held by no assurance in writing, but distributed among the common folk or people at the pleasure of the lord, and resumed at his discretion. The residue of the manor being uncultivated, was termed the lord's waste, and served for public roads, and for common of pasture to the lord and his tenants. Manors were formerly called baronies, as they still are lordships: and each lord or baron was empowered to hold a domestic court, called the court-baron, for redressing misdemeanors and nuisances within the manor, and for settling disputes of property among the tenants. This court is an inseparable ingredient of every manor; and if the number of suitors should so fail as not to leave sufficient to make a jury or homage, that is, two tenants at the least, the manor itself is lost. Kitch. fo. 4. Brac. lib. 4, c. 31. Co. Lit. 58.

MANSE, (mansa) an habitation, or farm and land. Spelm. Cowel.

MANSER, a bastard. Cowel.

MANSION, (mansio a manendo) the lord's chief dwelling-house within his fee, otherwise called the capital messuage, or manor-place. Skene.

And it is taken in law for the dwelling of another. 3 Co. Inst. 64.

No person shall stain or dye any British hare-skins or coney-skins, on forfeiture thereof, with the machines, and also 20*l.* Ibid.

——— Iron and Steel.] By 25 Geo. 3. c. 67. no person shall put on board any vessel for exportation, "any hand stamps, "doghead stamps, pulley stamps, stamps "of all sorts, hammers and anvils, or screws "for stamps, iron rods for stamps, presses "of all sorts in iron, steel, or other metal, "cutting-out presses, beds and punches "used therewith; piercing presses, and beds "and punches used therewith iron or "steel dies to be used in stamps or presses; "rollers of cast iron, wrought iron, or steel, "for rolling of metal, and frames for the "same; flasks or casting moulds, and boards "used therewith; lathes of all sorts, whole "or in parts; lathe strings, polishing "brushes, scoring or shading engines, "presses for horn buttons, dies for horn "buttons, sheers for cutting of metal, rolled "steel, rolled metal, with silver thereon, "parts of buttons unfinished, engines for "chasing, stocks for casting buckles, buttons, and rings; cast iron anvils and hammers for forging mills for iron and copper; "rollers, slitters, beds, pillars, and frames "for slitting mills; die-sinking tools, engines for button shanks, laps, drilling engines, tools for pinching of glass; engines "for covering of whips; polishing brushes; "bars of metal covered with gold or silver; "iron or steel screw plates, pins, and stocks "for making screws, or any other tool or "thing which now is or hereafter shall be "used in the iron or steel manufactures," on penalty of forfeiture thereof; and if the offender shall not give a satisfactory account before the magistrate, he shall be bound to appear at the next assizes, or be committed for trial, and on conviction shall forfeit 200*l.* and be imprisoned twelve months.

Officers of the customs shall seize such articles laid or intended to be laid on board any outward-bound vessel, and the same shall be sold, and go half to the king and half to the officer. Ibid.

Masters of vessels permitting such things to be put on board, shall forfeit 200*l.* and be incapacitated. Ibid.

Officers of customs taking any entry outwards, for such articles, shall forfeit 200*l.* and be incapacitated. Ibid.

Any person having in possession any such things with intent to export the same, a magistrate may issue his warrant for seizing thereof, and bringing such person before him; and if he shall not give a satisfactory account thereof, such things may be detained, and the possessor bound over to appear at the next assizes, or he may be committed for trial; and if convicted, shall forfeit 200*l.* and be imprisoned twelve months. Ibid.

Persons enticing artificers in the iron or steel manufactures, to leave this kingdom, except to Ireland, shall forfeit for the first offence 500*l.* and may be imprisoned twelve months; and for the second, or other offence, they shall forfeit 1000*l.* and be imprisoned two years. Ibid.

But prosecutions hereon must be commenced within twelve months.

But by 26 Geo. 3. c. 89. from July 10, 1786, such tools used in the iron and steel manufactures may be exported, as might have been before passing the above act, except, "rollers, plain, grooved, or of other "form, of cast iron, wrought iron, or steel, "for the rolling of iron or metals; and "frames, beds, pillars, screws, pinions, and "tools thereof; rollers, slitters, frames, beds, "pillars and screws for slitting mills; presses of all sorts used with a screw above 1½ "inch in diameter, or any parts of these articles, or any model thereof, or any part "thereof, and engines for casting or boring "canon or artillery, or any model thereof; "hand stamps, dog-head stamps, pulley "stamps, hammers, and anvils for stamps; "cutting-out presses, their beds and punches; scoring or shading engines; presses "and dies for horn buttons; rolled metal, "with silver thereon; unfinished parts of "buttons; engines for chasing stocks for "casting buckles, buttons and rings; die-"sinking tools; engines to make button "shanks; laps, tools for pinching glass, "engines for covering whips, bars of metal "covered with gold or silver, and blood "stones rough or finished."

No person shall have in possession, with intent to export (except to Ireland), "any "wire moulds for making paper; wheels "made of metal, stone, or wood, for rough-

"ing, cutting, polishing, and engraving "glass; purcellas, pincers, sheers, and pipes "used in blowing glass; potters' wheels and "potters' lathes, for plain, round, and en-"gine turning tools, used by sadlers, har-"ness-makers, and bridle-makers, viz. can-"tle strainers, side strainers, point strain-"ers, creasing irons, screw creasers, wheel "irons, seat irons, pricking irons, bolstering "irons, clams, head snives." And the above act, as far as relates to exporters of articles therein enumerated, shall extend to exporters of articles specified in this act. Ibid.

This act was made perpetual by 35 Geo. 3. c. 38.

——— Lace.] By 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 13. foreign bone-lace, cut-work, embroidery, fringe, band, strings, buttons, or needle work made of thread or silk, shall not be imported or sold.

By 11 W. 3. c. 3. English bone-lace may be exported, custom free, to Scotland, Ireland, or the plantations.

By 5 Ann. c. 17. the 13 & 14 Car. 2. and all other acts restraining the importation, or selling of foreign lace, are repealed, as to thread-lace made in the Spanish Low Countries, or any other place not within the kingdom of France. But 27 Geo. 3. c. 13. allows the importation of bone-lace from France.

By 4 Geo. 1. c. 6. no maker or wholesale trader in English bone-lace, and selling the same by wholesale, shall be deemed a hawker and pedlar; but such persons may go from house to house to their customers who sell again.

By 19 Geo. 3. c. 49, all persons who shall employ any lace manufacturers, or shall purchase lace of them, shall pay them in money, and not with goods, or by way of truck, on penalty of 10*l.* to be levied by distress, and in default thereof to be imprisoned for six months.

Lace-makers may recover money due to them for lace sold, or for making thereof, before justices of peace: but persons aggrieved may appeal to the quarter sessions on giving fourteen days notice. Ibid.

By 46 Geo. 3. c. 81. foreign thread lace is subjected to a large duty on importation, in order to encourage the British lace manufacture (see title Importation); and the act directs that all foreign thread lace shall be sealed at one end of every piece, and shall not be imported in parcels of less than 12 yards, unless worth 2*l.* per yard, on pain of forfeiture thereof, and the same may be seized. s. 3.

Two justices may grant such warrants, on oath that there is reason to suspect the concealment of foreign lace, which has not paid the duty. s. 9.

And foreign thread lace found in any shop or warehouse, or other place upon land, not so sealed, shall be forfeited, and the person to whom the same shall belong, or in whose possession the same may be found, shall forfeit for the first offence 50*l.* and if the value exceed 50*l.* double the value; and upon a second conviction before two justices, double the sum forfeited on the first conviction; and for a third conviction, treble; one moiety to the king, and the other to the officer of customs. s. 10.

The penalty for counterfeiting the seals, is felony without clergy. s. 11.

Persons selling or offering any such thread lace, or having the same in their possession, with a counterfeit seal, shall forfeit 100*l.* half to the king and half to the officer of customs. s. 11.

Proof of lace not being foreign shall lie on the party. s. 12.

The commissioners of customs may alter their seals. s. 22.

And the penalties above 50*l.* are recoverable in the courts of record in Westminster, with costs, half to the king and half to the informer; and penalties not exceeding 50*l.* are recoverable before two justices; and if witnesses refuse to attend the latter, they are subject to a penalty of 10*l.* or two mouth's imprisonment. s. 23, 24, 25. See also Stamps.

——— Leather.] By 27 Hen. 8. c. 14. leather curried to be exported, shall be packed and told by a man appointed and sworn thereto.

No person having a tan-house shall export any manner of leather tanned or untanned. Ibid.

Captains of ships and masters of vessels going to Ireland, Dantzick, Norway, and the Straits, excepted. Ibid.

Hides untanned of beasts killed in Wales may be exported. Ibid.

Q. Whether this act continued in force after the expiration of the old subsidy?

By 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 15. tanned leather shall not be bought or engrossed to sell again, but by cordwainers, sadlers, girdlers, and other artificers, who may sell their necks, wombs, and shreds; but persons having licence to transport tanned leather, may buy so much as they are allowed to transport.

By 1 Mar. sess. 3. c. 8. curriers, shoemakers, girdlers, sadlers, budget makers, and all other artificers, may buy leather, but not convey the same beyond sea. Curriers are not to curry hides for shoemakers between St. James's day and March 25, unless the same have been twice dipped in the pan, upon pain of forfeiting the same; leather is to be curried within five days in summer, and within ten days in winter, upon pain of 10*s.* per hide; but this does not bind the currier to dress any leather which he cannot.

Repealed, and 5 Ed. 6. c. 15. revived by 1 Eliz. c. 8. which is repealed by 5 Eliz. c. 8. and 1 Jac. 1. c. 22. Quere, therefore which is in force?

By 5 Eliz. c. 22. no person shall take the wool off any sheep skin or lamb skin, or buy the skin of any buck, doe, or the like, unless to make leather or parchment, on pain of 2*s.* 6*d.* a skin.

None shall export sheep skins, or the skin of any stag or the like, on pain of forfeiture, and 2*s.* 6*d.* per skin. Ibid.

But by 8 Eliz. c. 14. tawed leather made of sheep skins may be exported.

By 18 Eliz. c. 9. shipping any leather, tallow, or raw hides, with intent to be exported, forfeits ship and goods, and treble value.

Q. If in force?

By 1 Jac. 1. c. 22. extended by 24 Geo. 3. c. 19. to every part of Great Britain, no butcher shall gash or cut any hide, upon pain of twenty-pence per hide; and he shall not water any hide, except in June, July, and August, or sell any one that is rotten, on pain of 3*s.* 4*d.*

No butcher shall be a tanner; nor shall any other person be a tanner except apprentices or hired servants in that mystery by the space of seven years, or the son or daughter of a tanner. Ibid.

No tanner shall be a shoemaker, currier, butcher, or other leather cutter. No persons shall buy rough hides, or calves skins, but such as may use tanning of leather, nor forestal, nor buy any hide, other than in open fair or market, unless such person as killed the same beast. Ibid.

None may buy tanned leather unwrought but those who work the same into made wares, who may buy the same at Leadenhall. Ibid.

Sadlers and girdlers may sell their necks and shreds. Ibid.

No persons shall let any hide be over-lined, or put the same into tan fats before the lime be well soaken; they shall use in tanning only ash-bark, oak-bark, tap-wort, malt, meal, lime, culver-dung or hen-dung; leather shall not lie wet in any frost, until frozen; it shall not be parched by fire or summer sun; sole leathers shall lie in the woozes a year, upper leather nine months; rotten hides are not to be tanned; hides are to be well worked in the woozes, and no leather, worked contrary hereto, shall be sold. Ibid.

Tanners are not to raise with any mixture, any hide, to be converted into sole leathers unless the same be fit. Ibid.

Sale of tanned leather, red and unwrought, except in markets, is a forfeiture thereof, and also 6*s.* 8*d.* per hide, and 3*s.* 4*d.* for every dozen of calves skins, or sheep skins. Ibid.

Leather not sufficiently tanned or dried, shall not be exposed to sale. Ibid.

Leather shall not be put to take unkind heat, upon pain to forfeit 10*l.* and stand in the pillory three market days. Ibid.

There shall be no regrating or ingrossing of oaken bark; and oaken trees to be barked, shall not be felled, but between the first day of April and the last day of June. Ibid.

Persons shall curry leather only in their own houses, they shall not curry leather, except it be well tanned, nor any hide, which is not dry after their wet season, when they shall not use any stale or false stuff. They shall curry outer sole leather with hard tallow only, and with as much of that as it will take, upper leather with fresh stuff, and thoroughly liquored; they shall not burn or scald any hide or leather in currying, nor shave any leather too thin, nor gash or hurt any leather, upon pain of forfeiting 6*s.* 8*d.*, and the value of every skin or hide, and for gashing double the sum injured. Ibid.

A currier shall not be a tanner, shoemaker, butcher, or leather-cutter, upon pain of 6*s.* 8*d.* per hide. Curriers shall curry leather brought to them by the cutter, if he brings stuff for liquoring the same, within eight days in summer, and sixteen in winter, upon pain of 10*s.* per hide. Ibid.

Curried leather shall be searched and sealed, by the wardens of the curriers, or the persons by them appointed, upon pain of 6*s.* 8*d.* per hide. Ibid.

No shoemaker shall make any shoes, boots, or the like, but of leather well and truly tanned and curried, and sewed with good thread, well waxed and refined, and the stitches hard drawn, with hand leathers, nor shall he put in any leather made of a sheep skin, bull-hide, or horse-hide, or sell any wares on a Sunday. Ibid.

The mayors, bailiffs, and other head-officers, in places out of London, shall yearly upon pain of 40*l.* half to the crown and half to the informer, appoint eight persons to search and seal all tanned leather, which, if insufficient, is to be seized. Ibid.

They are also, within six days after such seizure, to appoint six indifferent persons, to try and determine the goodness of such leather, upon pain of 5*l.* Ibid.

The forfeiture of a sealer or searcher neglecting to do his duty, is 40*s.*, taking of bribes, 20*l.*, and refusing to act 10*l.* Ibid.

No person shall buy any leather before it is searched, sealed, and registered, upon pain of forfeiting the same. Ibid.

Forfeited wares shall not be sold to him that will sell them again; upon pain of 3*s.* 4*d.* per parcel. Ibid.

The authority of the officers of Oxford and Cambridge for search of leather is saved. Ibid.

The hides of ox, deer, calf, steer, cow, bull, goats, and sheep, being tanned and tawed, and every salt hide, shall be deemed leather. Ibid.

Dry cutting and frizing of leather shall be construed currying after the Spanish manner; and all artificers, except shoemakers, may use the same. Ibid.

This act shall extend to Wales, to all intents and purposes. Ibid.

Customers or other officers suffering leather to be exported without seizing or disclosing it, forfeit for the first offence 100*l.*; for the second their office: making a false certificate of the arrival of leather, is a forfeiture of 100*l.* Ibid.

This act shall not extend to Scottish hides brought to Berwick. Ibid.

By 3 Jac. 1. c. 9. none but artizan skinners shall dress or export black coney skins.

No merchant shall buy any coney skins or lamb skins, called morkins, under the number of 1000 black coney skins, or 3000 grey coney skins, or 2000 lamb skins, nor utter the same again in small quantities, unless to the artizan skinner. Ibid.

No skinner shall take any to be his journeyman, unless he has served seven years as an apprentice therein. Ibid.

By 4 Jac. 1. c. 6. there shall be no penalty for housing or selling sheep skins unsealed; and no tanned leather shall be sold by weight.

By 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 7. no hides tanned or untanned of any ox, bull, cow, or calf, shall be exported, on pain of 300*l.*

But leather made into boots, shoes, or slippers, may be exported. Ibid.

Tanners shaving of leather shall forfeit the same. Ibid.

Leather for necessary use of ships in voyages, not exceeding six raw and three tanned hides, may be shipped. Ibid.

By 1 Wil. & Mar. c. 33. red tanned leather duly sealed and searched, and bought in an open fair or market, may be sold again in the buyer's shop.

Leather hides and skins may be bought and sold by weight, notwithstanding any act to the contrary. Ibid.

By 12 Geo. 2. c. 25. all persons who deal in leather, may bring all sorts of tanned leather curried or uncurried, in any open fair or market, being duly sealed; and may cut and sell the same in their open shops in any quantities.

But this does not licence any persons unqualified, to exercise the trade of shoemaker or cobler. Ibid.

Curriers neglecting to curry any leather within sixteen days, between 28th September and 25th March, and within eight days during the remainder of the year, shall forfeit 5*l.* on conviction before a magistrate. Ibid.

By 13 Geo. 2. c. 8. persons employed in manufacturing leather, who shall embezzle the same, shall forfeit double damages for the first offence, and quadruple damages after.

They shall be paid their wages in money, and not by any goods, and complaints are to be heard by two justices. Ibid.

They shall perform the business in which they are retained, and leaving it before completed, may be committed to the house of correction. Ibid.

This act to extend to Scotland. Ibid.

By 34 Geo. 3. c. 68. nothing in any act shall prevent Samuel Ashton or his assigns from tanning hides and skins in the manner mentioned in his letters patent.

By 39 Geo. 3. c. 54. so much of 2 Jac. 1. c. 22. as prohibits the buying hides of beasts slaughtered for the service of the navy, and not afterwards tanning or tawing them, or the buying of raw hides otherwise than in open market, is repealed. s. 4.

By 39 & 40 Geo. 3. c. 66. so much of 2 Jac. 1. c. 22. as prohibited the use of horse hides in shoes, and the like; and so much of the same act, and 9 Ann. c. 11. as related to the gashing of hides; were repealed. s. 1.

Mayors and head officers, or two justices of towns, are to appoint proper places and times for examining raw hides, and proper persons to be inspectors. s. 2.

If six or more manufacturers of leather, shall recommend to the persons authorized to appoint inspectors, two proper persons to be appointed, when one inspector shall be necessary, or four when two shall be requisite; then one or two of them, as the case may require, shall be appointed; and on complaint of misconduct or neglect in any inspector, he may be discharged, and another appointed in his room. s. 3.

If any person shall wilfully or carelessly injure any hide, so as to render it less valuable for making leather, and shall be convicted thereof before one justice, he shall pay not exceeding 10*s.* and not less than 1*s.* for the raw hide of every ox or like beast; not exceeding 5*s.* nor less than 6*d.* for the hide of every calf; not exceeding 5*s.* nor less than 1*s.* for the hide of every horse; and not exceeding 6*d.* nor less than 3*d.* for the hide of every hog, pig, sheep, or lamb. s. 4.

Inspectors are to be sworn, by those who appoint them, to act faithfully; and they are to examine and mark raw hides, and take for the hide of every ox, or like beast, or horse, 1*d.*; calf, hog, or pig skin, ½*d.*: and for every sheep, or lamb skin, ¼*d.*; and if any person, other than the inspector, shall mark any raw hide, he shall forfeit 20*l.* s. 5.

Inspectors may impose penalties, not exceeding half of the highest imposed by this act, for wilfully or carelessly cutting of hides without their being adjudged by a magistrate, subject to the determination of arbitrators. s. 6.

If any inspector shall deem any person liable to more than such half amount, he shall proceed for recovery thereof by information before a magistrate. s. 7.

The whole penalty to be paid to the inspector who shall impose or inform for it. s. 8.

Inspectors are to provide stamps for marking hides; and if penalty or fee for marking hides be not paid, any inspector may seize and sell them, unless notice be given of having the matter decided by arbitrators. s. 9.

If any person within any district where an inspector has been appointed, shall neglect to bring any raw hides to the proper place to be marked, or shall remove therefrom any that shall not have been marked, he shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding 5*l.* nor less than 40*s.* for each skin. s. 10.

If any person shall give notice to the inspector of his intention to carry his raw hides to any other place for inspection, for not less than a month, he may so do. s. 11.

In case of dispute whether hides have been injured, the magistrate shall summon five persons engaged in the working of leather, three of whom may finally determine the same: such persons are to take an oath to do equal justice, and the party against whom the decision shall be given shall pay all expences; to be ascertained by the magistrates. s. 12.

Persons summoned not attending, to forfeit 40*s.* s. 13.

And the penalties are to go half to the informer, and half to carry the act into execution. s. 14.

The act does not extend to London, Westminster, Southwark, or any place within 15 miles of the Royal Exchange. s. 15.

The penalties are recoverable before one magistrate by distress and sale; and for default of distress, the offender to suffer not exceeding one month's imprisonment. s. 16.

Persons aggrived by any judgment, when the penalty exceeds 10*s.* may appeal to the sessions; and no certiorari is allowed; and information for offences must be laid within three days after the offence. s. 17, 18.

By 41 Geo. 3. u. k. c. 53. mayors and others authorized by 39 & 40 Geo. 3. c. 66. may appoint proper places for examining raw hides, whether they shall be within cities or towns or not. s. 1.

So much of s. 3. & 14. of the above act as requires the recommendation of inspectors, and the approbation of the distribution of penalties to be by six tanners, is repealed; and from August 1, 1801, shoemakers, saddlers, or persons working or dealing in leather, may be joined with the tanners for those purposes. s. 2.

No recommendation of any inspector, nor approbation in regard to penalties, shall be good, unless three tanners, curriers, or manufacturers, join therein. s. 3.

Fines imposed by s. 4, of 39 & 40 Geo. 3. for wilfully or carelessly cutting raw hides or skins, shall not exceed for ox or like beast 5*s.* calf 2*s.* 6*d.* or horse 2*s.* 6*d.* s. 4.

And persons are not liable to penalty for flaying of hides not more than two inches below the knee. s. 5.

Raw hides shall be brought for examination within ten days from being flayed, under the penalty imposed by s. 10. of the above act. s. 6.

The whole of the penalty given by s. 8. of the said act shall be distributed, one half to the inspector, and the other half for better carrying the act into execution; and the inspector may receive a further reward out of the other half. s. 8.

Information for gashing raw hides shall be made within three days, and for other offences within fourteen days. s. 9. See s. 18. of act.

The former act and this (but see title London) shall extend to all raw hides flayed in Great Britain, found within the several districts, whether flayed within them or not. s. 9.

Magistrates may summon witnesses, though they shall not be within their jurisdiction; and witnesses not appearing shall forfeit 40*s.* but they are not obliged to travel more than six miles. s. 10.

By 48 Geo. 3. c. 60. no tanner shall by himself, or any other, use the trade of a shoemaker, currier, leather-cutter, or other artificer cutting or working of leather, upon pain of forfeiting every hide and skin by him wrought or tanned during the time, or the value thereof to be recovered by action, together with costs of trial. s. 7.

See also London.

——— Linen.] By 28 Hen. 8. c. 4. the contents of every piece of dowlas and lockeram shall be set upon the cloth, on pain of forfeiture.

By 1 Eliz. c. 12. linen cloth deceitfully stretched or used shall be forfeited, the offender imprisoned a month, and fined at the discretion of the justices.

By 29 Geo. 2. c. 15. altered by 10 Geo. 3. c. 38. and continued by 48 Geo. 3. c. 23. s. 3. until March 25, 1811, the following bounties are payable on exportation.

For every yard of diaper, huckaback, sheeting, and other species of linen, upwards of one yard English in breadth, and not exceeding 1s. 6d. the square yard - - - -	0.	0	1½

Any person affixing stamps on foreign linen, in imitation of the stamp used for that of Scotland or Ireland, or counterfeiting stamps on British or Irish linen, to forfeit 5*l.* for each piece: and for exposing such linens to sale knowingly, to forfeit such linens. 17 Geo. 2. c. 30. and 18 Geo. 2. c. 24.

British or Irish linens entered for exportation to receive the bounties at undervalue, fraudulently, to be forfeited, one half to the king, the other half to the informer. 17 Geo. 2. c. 31. 18 Geo. 2. c. 25. and 29 Geo. 2. c. 15.

Stamp masters to be sworn; no linens to be stamped before sworn to be of the manufacture of Scotland or Ireland. 18 Geo. 2. c. 24, and 29 Geo. 2. c. 15.

And by the same act no bounty shall be paid on exportation of such linens, before they are marked, numbered, and stamped.

By 18 Geo. 2. c. 27. whoever shall steal any linen, laid to be printed, bleached, or the like, or aid or hire another to commit such offence, shall be guilty of felony, and suffer death; and the court may order such offenders to be transported for fourteen years.

By 26 Geo. 2. c. 20. after the expiration of the bounties on exportation of British and Irish coarse linens, the annual sum of 3000*l.* shall be paid for nine years out of the duties in Scotland, for encouraging manufactures of linen in the Highlands.

By 19 Geo. 3. c. 27. the same bounty shall be allowed on the exportation of Irish linens the property of persons residing in Ireland, as on those the property of persons residing in America.

By 22 Geo. 3. c. 40. persons entering any house by force, with intent to cut or destroy any linen or cotton manufactures, or tools used therein, shall be deemed guilty of felony without benefit of clergy.

By 22 Geo. 3. c. 60. persons enticing workmen employed in printing calicoes, cottons, muslins, and linens, or in making blocks, plates, or implements used in such manufactory, to leave the kingdom, shall for the first offence forfeit 500*l.* and be imprisoned twelve months; and for the second offence 1000*l.* and be imprisoned two years: but prosecutions must be commenced within twelve months.

Exporting, or attempting to export, any blocks, plates, or implements, used in the said manufactory, is a forfeiture thereof, and of 500*l.* Ibid.

Officers of customs or excise may seize such blocks, plates, and implements, as shall be attempted to be exported: and captains or masters, who shall permit the same to be put on board their vessels, shall forfeit 100*l.* and if a king's officer, besides the penalty shall be disabled. Ibid.

Officers who shall take any entry outward for exporting any of the said articles, shall forfeit 10*l.* and be disabled. Ibid.

By 23 Geo. 3. c. 7¶. continued by 48 Geo. 3. c. 23. till March, 1810, the manufacturers of flax and cotton shall make oath before a proper officer, of the quantities of soap and starch consumed by them in each respective manufacture; and the collector, out of the money in his hands of the duty on soap, shall pay to such manufacturers a drawback on all soap so used, at the rate of three farthings per lb. (except it is used to whiten new linen for sale), and out of the money in his hands of the duties on starch, a drawback of three half pence per lb. on all starch so used (except for starch used for finishing linen for sale, and then threepence per lb.); and if the collector shall not have money sufficient in hand, he is to certify the same to the commissioners, who are to pay the same.

The manufacturer, or his chief workman, shall produce an account, upon oath, of the soap and starch used by him in his manufactory in the preceding year; and shall keep also a weekly account, to be produced to the officer on demand; and where there is a superintending owner and an overseer, each shall produce his accounts on oath before the collector. Ibid.

The importation duties on brimstone and saltpetre consumed in making oil of vitriol, shall be repaid; but manufacturers of flax and cotton, and makers of oil of vitriol, shall enter their names and places of abode with the collectors of excise and customs. Ibid.

Officers taking of manufacturers any fees, except 6*d.* for writing each oath, shall forfeit treble damages with costs. Ibid.

Manufacturers swearing falsely in the oaths before mentioned, shall forfeit 100*l.*; and for the second offence shall suffer as in cases of corrupt perjury. Ibid.

If any manufacturer, or his workman, keeping the account of the weekly consumption of soap and starch, shall swear falsely, he shall be committed for six months; and for a second offence, suffer as in cases of corrupt perjury. Ibid.

By 27 Geo. 3. c. 38. made perpetual by 34 Geo. 3. c. 23. the proprietor of any original pattern for printing linens, shall have the sole right of printing it for three months from first publication; 34 Geo. 3. c. 23.; and whoever shall within that period print the same, shall be liable to an action for damages: but any person purchasing plates from the proprietors may print therefrom.

——— Paper.] By 36 Geo. 3. c. 111. all contracts between journeymen paper-makers, for advancing their wages, lessening their hours of work, or the like, are declared void; and journeymen paper-makers and others entering into such contracts, are to be committed to the house of correction, to hard labour, for not exceeding two calendar months. s. 1, 2.

Vat men, if required by the master, shall be half an hour about each post, twenty of which shall be a day's work; and the day-worker, if required by the master, shall work twelve hours per day, with an interval of an hour for refreshments. s. 3.

Journeymen taking more wages, or entering into combinations to raise wages, or persons seducing or hindering them from working, are, on conviction, to be committed to hard labour for not exceeding two months. s. 4.

If any person shall attend or solicit any journeyman paper-maker to attend any unlawful meeting, or shall subscribe or pay any sum of money to support the same, he may, on conviction, be committed for two months. s. 5.

Offenders against this act may be admitted evidence, and shall be indemnified against penalties. s. 6.

Any justice may, on complaint, summon offenders, and hear, determine, and commit. s. 7.

——— Shoes.] By 9 Geo. 1. c. 27. on due proof of a journeyman's purloining boots, shoes, slippers, or any other wares, or any materials for making the same, a justice may convict him, and award satisfaction for damage sustained, which may be levied by distress, and in default thereof he is to be whipped. The second offence is imprisonment for one month, or not less than fourteen days. Confederates by buying, receiving, or taking in pawn, such articles, are liable to the same punishment.

Justices of peace, upon information, on oath, may issue warrants to search for such goods, and cause them to be restored to the owners. Ibid.

Persons suffering themselves to be employed by a new master, before the shoes, boots, or other work, delivered by a former is done, shall be sent to the house of correction. Ibid.

But the party aggrieved by order of such justices, may appeal to the next sessions. Ibid. See also Leather.

——— Silk.] By 19 Hen. 7. c. 27. no silk wrought by itself or with any other stuff out of the realm, in ribbons, girdles, corses, hauls, corses of tissues or point, shall be imported, on forfeiture thereof; other silks, as well wrought as raw or unwrought, may be imported.

By 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 15. none shall use the art of a silk thrower, unless he has served an apprenticeship of seven years, on pain of 40*s.* a month.

Persons embezzling any silk delivered to be wrought up, and also buyers and receivers, on conviction before a justice, shall make satisfaction, and on failure, be set in the stocks. Ibid.

By 2 Will. & Mar. sess. 1. c. 9. no thrown silk shall be imported, except of the produce of Italy, Sicily, or Naples, and in vessels navigated according to the act of navigation.

By 6 Ann. c. 19. clandestine importers of wrought silks, or silks mixed with gold or silver, shall forfeit 200*l.*; sellers and concealers forfeit 100*l.*; and the silks forfeited shall be sold at the custom house.

By 8 Geo. 1. c. 15. continued by 43 Geo. 3. c. 29. till June 24, 1808, and from thence to the end of the next session, exporters of ribbons and stuffs made in Great Britain of silk only, shall have an allowance of 3*s.* for every pound weight; of silk mixed with gold or silver 4*s.*; for every pound weight of silk stockings, gloves, fringes, laces, or sewing silk, 1*s.* 3*d.* per lb.; of stuffs of silk or grogram yarn, 8*d.* per lb.; of silk and cotton, 1*s.* per lb.; of silk and worsted 6*d.* per lb. (Additional bounties are allowed by 24 Geo. 3. c. 49.)

But there shall be no allowances for such manufactures mixed with gold or silver at the edges only. Ibid.

By 9 Geo. 1. c. 8. there shall be no allowances on exportation of such manufactures mixed with silk, unless two thirds of the warps at least be silk.

By 1 Geo. 2. c. 17. the securities given on exportation, where certificates cannot be obtained, may be discharged on the oath of the master.

There shall be no allowance on exportation of stuffs mixed with silk, unless the silk mixed in the warp be apparent to view, and double the value of the bounty. Ibid.

By 23 Geo. 2. c. 20. raw silk of the growth of the British colonies in America, may be imported duty free, so that the vessels be lawfully navigated, and entry made.

By 23 Geo. 2. c. 34. raw silk of the growth or produce of Persia purchased in Russia, may be imported into this kingdom, from any port or place belonging to the empire of Russia.

By 26 Geo. 2. c. 21. foreign silks, velvets, and the like, imported, shall be sealed before delivery from the custom-house at the end of the piece; notice to be given by the exporter, and found without seals, may be seized.

By Geo. 3. c. 21. foreign ribbons, laces, and girdles, imported, may be seized by any person; importer to forfeit also 100*l.* and persons assisting 50*l.*

By 5 Geo. 3. c. 48. foreign manufactured silk stockings, mits, and gloves, imported, may be seized, and the importer and vender to forfeit the goods, and also 200*l.* with costs.

After condemnation, may be publicly sold for exportation to foreign parts, on security so to do; and if a doubt as to the place of manufacture, the proof to lie on the defendant; and the person in whose custody the goods are found, on discovering the seller, excused the penalty; and the wearer thereof not liable to penalty. Ibid.

The penalty in the last act for importing foreign ribbons, laces, and girdles, increased to 200*l.* with costs; and not to be burnt, but publicly sold for exportation to foreign parts, on security as above: and if officer neglects to sue for the penalty one month after condemnation, any other may recover the same. Ibid.

By 6 Geo. 3. c. 28. made perpetual by 48 Geo. 3. c. 22. s. 3. foreign wrought silks or velvets imported, are forfeited, and also 100*l.* with costs, and to be sold as above; but not to extend to silks and velvets made and imported from the East Indies, or to silk crapes and tiffanies made in Italy.

By 6 Geo. 3. c. 40. silk goods to be exported to Africa, may be removed from one part of Great Britain to another, on security.

By 11 Geo. 3. c. 41. raw silk and mohair yarn imported from the Streights, or Levant, shall be deemed as if imported from the Grand Seignor's dominions, and aired according to 26 Geo. 2. c. 18.

By 22 Geo. 3. c. 40. persons entering by force into any house with intent to cut or destroy any woollen goods, or tools used in manufacturing thereof, or any silk goods, or tools used in manufacturing thereof, shall be deemed guilty of felony without benefit of clergy.

By 24 Geo. 3. c. 49. from March 1, 1785, additional bounties shall be allowed on exportation of the following articles of British manufactures, viz.

Silk ribbons and stuffs, 2*s.* per lb.; silks and ribbons mixed with gold or silver, 2*s.* 8*d.* per lb.; silk stockings, gloves, fringes, laces, stitching or sewing silk, 1*s.* 9*d.* per lb.; stuffs of silk and grogram, 6*d.* per lb.; of silk and cotton 8*d.* per lb.; and of silk and worsted, 4*d.* per lb. Ibid.

And by 25 Geo. 3. c. 69. a like bounty shall in like manner be allowed upon the exportation of silk gauzes.

And by 46 Geo. 3. c. 110. until six months after the ratification of a definitive treaty of peace, there shall be allowed an additional bounty on the amount of the allowances under 8 Geo. 1. c. 15. of 33*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* per cent.

——— Stockings.] By 6 Geo. 3. c. 29. all frame-work knitted pieces, and stockings (those made of silk excepted), containing three or more threads, are to be marked with the same number of oilet holes, and no more, but may use any materials or number of threads for the weit, and within three inches of the top. Not duly marking their goods, is a forfeiture thereof, and of 5*l.*; journeymen or servants not making such goods on their own account, excepted; who are liable to forfeit not exceeding 40*s.* nor less than 5*s.* unless they may make it appear that they acted according to the directions of the master; in which case they are exempted.

Persons who shall sell or expose to sale any such goods, not being duly and truly marked, forfeit 5*l.* per piece, and the goods; except they discover the vender, so as he shall be convicted, and become liable to the penalty; in which case they are exempted. Ibid.

The rights of the frame-work-knitters' company are saved. Ibid.

By 28 Geo. 3. c. 55. frame-work-knitters not delivering within fourteen days after notice, any stocking-frame to the person of whom it was hired, shall, before a justice, forfeit 20*s.* to the poor, and if not paid within six days, they may be committed for not more than three months, nor less than one.

Persons hiring stocking-frames, selling the same, shall, on conviction on indictment, be imprisoned for not less than three, nor more than twelve months; and persons receiving the same shall be liable to the same punishment. Ibid.

Persons entering by force to destroy goods in the frame, or destroying the same, or damaging any frame used in the hosiery or framework knitted manufactory, or breaking any machinery contained in any mill used in preparing of wool or cotton for that manufactory, is felony, and transportation for not more than fourteen, nor less than seven, years. Ibid.

——— Thread.] By 28 Geo. 3. c. 17. the reel used in making up ounce or nun's thread shall be one yard or thirty-six inches in circumference: and using a less reel is forfeiture thereof, and of 5*l.* to the prosecutor.

All ounce thread made in Great Britain shall be made up in hanks, ounces, quarters, and pounds, avoirdupois weight; the hank to contain thirty threads or rounds of the reel of the same quality and fineness; the ounce a particular number of such hanks entire, the quarter four such ounces, and the pound four such quarters; and the cover of each pound or smaller package shall be marked with a stamp, denoting it to be ounce thread, specifying the number of hanks in each ounce, and the manufacturer's name: reeling, or making up thread otherwise, or selling or offering to sell the same, is a forfeiture thereof, and of 10*l.* for each lb. to the prosecutor; but the act does not extend to thread of forty threads in the hank made prior to June 1, 1786. Ibid.

Counterfeiting the stamps, or stamping with one, or selling or offering to sell with a counterfeit stamp, is a penalty of 10*l.* to the person whose stamp is counterfeited, and the thread and stamps to be destroyed. Ibid.

The penalties are recoverable before two justices, who may mitigate a moiety thereof; and if the penalties are not paid, the offender may be committed for three months: witnesses are liable to 5*l.* for not attending on summons. Ibid.

The onus probandi that the thread is of foreign manufacture shall lie on the owner. Ib.

——— Woollen Cloth.] By 11 Ed. 3. c. 3. none shall import into England, Ireland, Wales, or Scotland, any foreign cloths, on pain of forfeiture.

But foreign cloth workers may come, and shall have sufficient franchises, cap. 5.

By 27 Ed. 3. stat. 1. c. 4. there shall be no forfeiture for defect of assize, but there shall be an allowance made to the buyer, for so much as it wants thereof.

By 50 Ed. 3. c. 7. and 7 Ed. 4. c. 3. woollen cloths shall not be exported before fulled.

By 3 Hen. 7. c. 11. no woollen cloth shall be transported, before it is barbed, rowed, and shorn, except vesses, rays, sailing cloths, and others, under 40*s.*

By 3 Hen. 8. c. 7. vesses, rays, sailing and other cloths, at four marks or less, may be exported unbarbed.

By 8 Eliz. c. 6. for every nine cloths unwrought, exported by licence, one cloth shall be wrought, of like sort, length, breadth, and goodness, on pain of 10*l.*

No Kentish or Suffolk cloth shall be exported unwrought by any licence, on pain of 40*s.* Ibid.

By 12 Car. 2. c. 22. bays, called four and fifties, sixties, sixty-eights, eighties, and hundred bays, within the town of Colchester, shall be carried to the Dutch bay hall, and there searched and allowed.

By 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 8. all clothes and stuffs woven at Kidderminster, shall be under the regulation of the president, wardens, and assistants, of the weavers there.

By 6 Ann. c. 8. white broad cloth intended to be exported, being shipped before duty paid, is a forfeiture thereof. And any person may export white woollen cloth made in Great Britain.

By 11 Geo. 1. c. 24. broad cloth in the West Riding of York, whether a half or a whole cloth, shall be five quarters and a half broad, and the half cloth shall not exceed in length twenty-four yards, nor the whole cloth forty-eight yards, on pain of forfeiting for every inch wanting in breadth, and for every yard exceeding in length, 20*s.*

Such broad cloth shall be measured at the fulling mill: the mill-man is to be sworn, and shall affix a seal of lead to the cloth, denoting the length and breadth, for which he is to be paid 2*d.* for a whole cloth, and 1*d.* for a half cloth; a moiety whereof is to be paid to the county treasurer, towards the salaries of the searchers under this act; but if the cloth be damaged in measuring, it may be measured again. Ibid.

Mill-man neglecting his duty, and persons forging or defacing the seals, shall forfeit 5*l.*: the buyer may wet the cloths, and measure the same, which, if deficient, is a forfeiture of the sixth part thereof by the seller, who is to be repaid by the mill-man. Ibid.

The mill-man is to affix new seals, and the measures are to be paid by the buyer, 6*d.* for every cloth measured. Ibid.

Merchant may return defective cloth to the clothier, who is to repay the money. Ibid.

Clothier shall affix his mark on his cloths, on pain of 5*l.*; and persons cutting out or altering the seals or marks, before sale, shall likewise forfeit 5*l.* Ibid.

Persons stretching cloth, over the measures in the seals, shall forfeit for every half yard more than one in length of a half cloth, and more than two in a whole cloth, and for every inch above one in a quarter in breadth, over-stretched, 20*s.*

Cloths shall be dressed in all parts alike, and the worker shall fix at the end his mark in lead, on pain of 5*l.* Ibid.

The lengths of yards shall be numbered on the tenters, on pain of 5*l.* Ibid.

The West Riding quarter sessions shall yearly, at Easter, choose searchers, conversant in the trade, to inspect the mills, who are to be sworn to execute the office truly. Ibid.

They may enter the houses, grounds, and warehouses, of clothiers, to search for frauds; and if refused, the penalty is 10*l.*; on discovery of frauds the owner shall forfeit 5*l.* Ibid.

Searchers acting against their oaths, forfeit 20*l.* They shall not examine cloths packed for exportation, but by warrant from a justice on an information laid, which, if groundless, the informer shall pay 5*s.* per cloth to the merchant. Ibid.

Cloth dresser, stretching the merchant's cloths, or altering the seals, shall repay the merchant the penalties; and cards with wire shall not be used in dressing cloth, on pain of 50*l.*

By 7 Geo. 2. c. 25. made perpetual by 14 Geo. 2. c. 35. owners of fulling mills, in the West Riding of York, shall stamp on a leaden seal, the true length and breadth of every broad cloth before it be carried from the mill, on penalty of 20*s.* for each offence.

Buyers suspecting the quantity, may put the cloth in water four hours, and cause the same to be measured by a sworn searcher, who is to make information on oath, of defective cloth, in five days after the admeasurement, on penalty of 20*s.* Ibid.

The seller in five days after notice, may examine the cloth complained of, and if refused by the buyer, the prosecution shall cease. Ibid.

There shall be no greater penalty than 10*s.* for the first inch, 15*s.* for the second, and 20*s.* for the rest, in cloth defective in breadth. And no penalties shall be incurred for white cloths, after put into hot water to be dyed. Ibid.

Stretching cloths more than one yard in every length of twenty yards, and one inch in every quarter of a yard in breadth, above the quantity marked, is a forfeiture of 10*s.* for every quarter of a yard in length, and 20*s.* for every inch in breadth. Ibid. and 5 Geo. 3. c. 51.

By 11 Geo. 2. c. 28. makers of narrow woollen cloth, in the West Riding of York, shall set the initial letters of their names at the head of every piece of cloth (except white kerseys and half ticks); and the same shall be measured and sealed at the fulling mill, on pain of 20*s.* by the maker, and 5*l.* by the mill-man.

Justices at quarter sessions are to appoint yearly, at Easter, searchers, conversant in the making of narrow cloths, who are to have salaries allowed, and be sworn to act truly; and in case of death or sickness, others are to be appointed. Ibid.

Cloths stamped wrong, shall be restamped, on penalty of 5*s.* and makers may stretch one inch in every yard in length, and two inches in every three quarters of a yard in breadth; but if that proportion is exceeded, the penalty is for the first half yard in length, or inch in breadth, 10*s.* and for the next 20*s.* Ibid.

A sum not above 3*d.* shall be paid to such persons as the justices appoint, by every maker for each cloth, before carried to the fulling mill, to pay the salaries of the searchers: and the mill-man, or persons appointed to receive the same, may detain the cloth till the money be paid. Ibid.

Prosecutions must be commenced against the mill-man or searchers within eight days, or against clothiers and dealers in cloth within one month, after the offence. Ibid.

Makers may make narrow cloth (except as before) of what length and breadth they think fit. Ibid.

Cloths made in the West Riding of York, and milled in adjacent counties, shall, before dry, be brought to the nearest mill-man in the said Riding, to be measured and marked. Ibid.

The 5 Geo. 3. c. 51. repealed 11 Geo. 1. c. 24. 7 Geo. 2. c. 25. and 14 Geo. 2. c. 35. relating to cloth made in the West Riding of Yorkshire. And the justices are to appoint searchers and measurers, and the maker shall pay for measuring and sealing,

	s.	d.
For whole cloth thirty-five yards long	0	6
If more than thirty yards	0	4
And less	0	3

and not to take cloths from the mill till measured and stamped. The cloths shall be sealed before they are put on the tenters; and the justices are to appoint inspectors of fulling mills, who are to visit mills and tenter grounds.

Inspectors, if they find cloths falsely stamped by the measurer, above two inches in breadth, and one yard in length, are to complain to a magistrate, who shall convict the offender in the penalty of 10*s.*: the inspectors may also enter shops where they shall suspect any undue stamped or stretched cloths, and if found, the offenders are to forfeit not more than 5*l.* nor less than 10*s.*; but they are not to inspect cloth packed for exportation. Ibid.

Where false seals are found, the inspector is to fix new seals, which are to be the rule of payment for the cloths; and the treasurer of the county, to whom the fees for searching are to be paid, for the purpose of paying the searchers and inspectors thereout such salaries as shall be allowed them at the Easter sessions, shall deduct the forfeitures out of the inspector's salaries. Ibid.

Persons charged with frauds may examine the cloths, and if refused, all prosecutions shall be void. Clothiers shall weave their names and places of abode in the heads of their cloth, on pain of 20*s.*; and defacing or counterfeiting seals, before the cloth is taken from the tenters, is a forfeiture of not more than 5*l.* nor less than 40*s.* Ibid.

There shall be paid for milling long cloths, for every yard above fifty-eight yards 1½*d.* above the usual price; and justices shall settle disputes between clothiers and millers. Ibid.

By 6 Geo. 3. c. 25. merchants may have cloths made wet and remeasured by an inspector; and if of less quantity than the seal denotes, the searcher shall forfeit—

For every inch in breadth, or half-yard in length, defective, 5*s.*

And for every other inch in breadth, or half-yard in length, deficient, 10*s.*

One moiety, deducting costs, to the informer, and the other to the treasurer of the West Riding.

False seals found, inspectors to put new ones, and the seller to forfeit double the deficiency, or take his cloth back, and pay expences. Ibid.

Inspector for sale stamping shall forfeit—

For the first inch in breadth, or half-yard in length, deficient, 1*l.* and if two inches in breadth, or one yard in length, deficient, to lose his office. If the inspector suspects fraud in the maker, he may wet and measure cloth. Ibid.

Power given to the sessions repealed; overstretching cloths to forfeit, for the first half-yard in length, or inch in breadth, 5*s.* and every other quarter of a yard in length, and inch in breadth, 10*s.*

To extend to all cloths made in the West Riding of Yorkshire, except narrow cloths described by 11 Geo. 2. c. 28. and blankets and striped duffel'd blankets. Ibid.

And by STAT. 49 Geo. 3. c. 109. whereby the ancient statutes relating to the manufacture of woollen cloths were repealed; it is ENACTED, that "persons who have served an "apprenticeship to any branch of the woollen "manufacture, and their wives and families "may set up and exercise any trade in any "place in Great Britain, but such persons "may be obliged by two justices to swear "as to their place of last settlement; an "attested copy of which oath is sufficient, "if summoned a second time. But the pri-"vileges of the city of London and two uni-"versities are saved."

MARLERIUM or MARLETUM, a marle pit. Cowel.

MARQUE and REPRISAL, letters of. Persons formerly aggrieved by spoliations at sea during a truce, were entitled to letters of marque and reprisal on application to the king, who could grant the same by virtue of his prerogative. See Prerogative.

But this manner of granting letters of marque has long been disused, and according to the statute 4 Hen. 5. c. 7. could only be granted to persons actually aggrieved.

If, during a war, a subject without any commission from the king take an enemy's ship, the prize will not be the property of the captor, but will be one of the droits of admiralty, and belong to the king, or his grantee the admiral. Carth. 399. 2 Wood. 443. Therefore, to encourage merchants and others to fit out privateers or armed ships in time of war, by various acts of parliament, the lord high admiral, or the commissioners of the admiralty, are empowered to grant commissions to the owners of such ships; and the prizes captured, shall be divided according to a contract, entered into between the owners and the captain and crew of the privateer. But the owners, before the commission is granted, shall give security to the admiralty to make compensation for any violation of treaties between those powers with whom the nation is at peace. And by 24 Geo. 3. c. 47, they shall also give security that such armed ship shall not be employed in smuggling. These commissions in the statutes, and upon all occasions, are now called letters of marque. 29 Geo. 2. c. 34. 19 Geo. 3. c. 67. Molloy, c. 3, s. 8. However the lords of the admiralty have sometimes this authority by a proclamation from the king in council, as was the case in December 1780, to empower them to grant letters of marque to seize the ships of the enemy.

MARQUESS, or MARQUIS, (marchio) is now a title of honour before an earl and next to a duke; a marquis is created by patent.

MARRIAGE, (maritagium) is a civil and religious contract, whereby a man is joined and united to a woman, for the ends of procreation; but our law considers marriage in no other light than as a civil contract; the holiness of the marriage state is left entirely to the ecclesiastical law; the temporal courts not having jurisdiction to consider unlawful marriage as a sin, but merely as a civil inconvenience, the punishment therefore or annulling of incestuous or other unscriptural marriages, is the province of the spiritual courts; which act pro salute animæ. Salk. 121.

Marriage, therefore, considered in a civil light, is treated by our law like all other contracts; allowing it to be good and valid in all cases where the parties, at the time of making it, were, in the first place, willing to contract. Secondly, able to contract, and lastly actually did contract in the proper forms and solemnities required by law.

1st, They must be willing to contract. "Consensus non concubitus, facit nuptias," is the maxim of the civil law in this case (Ff. 50, 17. 30): and it is adopted by the common lawyers (Co. Litt. 33).

2dly, They must be able to contract. In general, all persons are able to contract themselves in marriage, unless they labour under some particular disabilities, and incapacities. Now these disabilities are of two sorts: such as are canonical, and therefore sufficient by the ecclesiastical laws to avoid the marriage in the spiritual court; but these in our law only make the marriage voidable, and not ipso facto void, until sentence of nullity be obtained. Of this nature are precontract, consanguinity, or relation by blood; and affinity, or relation by marriage; and some particular corporal infirmities. These canonical disabilities are either grounded, upon the express words of the divine law, or are consequences plainly deducible from thence; it therefore being sinful in the persons who labour under them, to attempt to contract matrimony together, they are properly the object of the ecclesiastical magistrate's coercion; in order to separate the offenders, and inflict penance for the offence pro salute animarum. But such marriages not being void ab initio, but voidable only by sentence of separation, they are esteemed valid to all civil purposes, unless such separation is actually made, during the life of the parties. For, after the death of either of them, the courts of common law will not suffer the spiritual courts to declare such marriages to have been void; because such declaration cannot now tend to the reformation of the parties (Co. Litt. 33). And therefore where a man had married his first wife's sister, and after her death the bishop's court was proceeding to annul the marriage and bastardize the issue, the court of king's bench granted a prohibition quoad hoc; but permitted them to proceed to punish the husband for incest (Salk. 548.) These canonical disabilities being entirely the province of the ecclesiastical courts, our books are perfectly silent concerning them. But there are a few statutes which serve as directories to those courts, of which it will be proper to take notice. By statute 32 Hen. 8. c. 38, it is declared, that all persons may lawfully marry, but such as are prohibited by God's law;* and that all marriages contracted by lawful persons in the face of the church, and consummate with bodily knowledge, and fruit of children, shall be indissoluble. And (because in the times of popery a great variety of degrees of kindred were made impediments to marriage, which impediments might however be bought off for money) it is declared by the same statute, that nothing (God's law excepted) shall impeach any marriage, but within the levitical degrees;† the farthest of which is that between uncle and niece (Gilb. Rep. 158). By the same statute all impediments arising from pre-contracts to other persons, were abolished and declared of none effect, unless they had been consummated with bodily knowledge: in which case the canon law holds such contract to be a marriage de facto. But this branch of the statute was repealed by statute 2 & 3 Edw. 6. c. 23. How far the act of 26 Geo. 2. c. 33, (which prohibits all suits in ecclesiastical courts to compel a marriage, in consequence of any contract) may collaterally extend to revive this clause of H. VIII.'s statute, and abolish the impediment of precontract is uncertain.‡

The other sort of disabilities are those

* In this statute the prohibitions by God's law are not specified; but in the 25 Hen. 8. c. 22, and 28 Hen. 8. c. 7, the prohibited degrees are particularized, which see in the book of common prayer.

† The prohibited degrees are all which are under the 4th degree of the civil law, excepting in the ascending and descending line, and by the course of nature it is scarcely a possible case that any one should ever marry his issue in the 4th degree; but between collaterals it is universally true, that all who are in the 4th or any higher degree are permitted to marry; as first cousins are in the 4th degree, and therefore may marry, and nephew and great aunt, or niece and great uncle, are also in the 4th degree, and may intermarry; and though a man may not marry his grand-mother, it is certainly true that he may marry her sister. Gibs. Cod. 413.

The same degrees by affinity are prohibited. Affinity always arises by the marriage of one of the parties so related; as a husband is related by affinity to all the consanguinei of his wife; and vice versâ the wife to the husband's consanguinei: for the husband and wife being considered one flesh, those who are related to the one by blood, are related to the other by affinity. Gibs. Cod. 412.

Therefore a man after his wife's death cannot marry her sister, aunt, or niece. But the consanguinei of the husband are not at all related to the consanguinei of the wife. Hence two brothers may marry two sisters, or father and son a mother and daughter; or if a brother and sister marry two persons not related, and the brother and sister die, the widow and widower may intermarry; for though I am related to my wife's brother by affinity, I am not so to my wife's brother's wife, whom if circumstances would admit, it would not be unlawful for me to marry. Ibid.

‡ A contract per verba de præsenti tempore used to be considered in the ecclesiastical courts ipso matrimonium, and if either party had afterwards married, this, as a second marriage, would have been annulled in the spiritual courts, and the first con-which are created or at least enforced by the municipal laws.

1. The first of these legal disabilities is a prior marriage, or having another husband or wife living; in which case, besides the penalties consequent upon it as a felony, the second marriage is to all intents and purposes void (Bro. Abr. tit. Bastardy, pl. 8.)

2. The next legal disability is want of age. This is sufficient to avoid all other contracts, on account of the imbecility of judgment in the parties contracting; a fortiori therefore it ought to avoid this, the most important contract of any. Therefore if a boy under fourteen, or a girl under twelve years of age, marries, this marriage is only inchoate and imperfect; and when either of them comes to the age of consent aforesaid, they may disagree and declare the marriage void, without any divorce or sentence in the spiritual court. This is founded on the civil law (Leon. Constit. 109). But the canon law pays a greater regard to the constitution than the age of the parties (Decretal. l. 4. tit. 2. qu. 3); for if they are habiles ad matrimonium, it is a good marriage, whatever their age may be. And in our law it is so far a marriage, that, if at the age of consent they agree to continue together, they need not be married again (Co. Litt. 79). If the husband be of years of discretion, and the wife under twelve, when she comes to years of discretion he may disagree as well as she may: for in contracts the obligation must be mutual; both must be bound, or neither; and so it is, vice versa, when the wife is of years of discretion, and the husband under (Ibid).

3. Another incapacity arises from want of consent of parents or guardians. By the common law, if the parties themselves were of the age of consent, there wanted no other concurrence to make the marriage valid: and this was agreeable to the canon law. But by several statutes (6 & 7 Will. 3. c. 6. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 35. 10 Ann. c. 19), penalties of 100*l.* are laid on every clergyman who marries a couple without publication of banns (which may give notice to parents or guardians) or without a licence, to obtain which the consent of parents or guardians must be sworn to. And by the 26 Geo. 2. c. 33. s. 7, if any clergyman shall marry a couple out of a church or a public chapel, where banns had been usually published before 1754, unless by special licence from the archbishop; or shall marry them without a licence, or publication of banns; he shall be guilty of felony, and shall be transported for 14 years. And there have been instances of convictions for this offence. And by the stat. 4 & 5 Ph. and M. c. 8, whosoever marries any woman child under the age of sixteen years without consent of parents or guardians, shall be subject to fine, or five years imprisonment: and her estate during the husband's life shall go to, and be enjoyed by the next heir. The construction of the statute seems to be, that it shall also go to the next heir during the life of the wife, even after the death of the husband. 1 Brown. Ch. Rep. 23. But the contrary has been decided in the Exchequer. Amb. 73. The civil law indeed required the consent of the parent or tutor at all ages; unless the children were emancipated, or out of the parents power, (Ff. 23, 2, 2. & 18), and if such consent from the father was wanting, the marriage was null, and the children illegitimate (Ff. 1. 5. 11), but the consent of the mother or guardians if unreasonably withheld, might be redressed and supplied by the judge, or the president of the province (Cod. 5. 4. 1. & 20); and if the father was non compos, a similar remedy was given (Inst. 1. 10. 1), and it has lately been thought proper to introduce somewhat of the same policy into our laws by statute 26 Geo. 2. c. 33, whereby it is enacted that all marriages celebrated by licence (for banns suppose notice) where either of the parties is under 21, (not being a widow or widower, who are supposed emancipated,) without the consent of the father, or, if he be not living of the mother or guardian,* shall be absolutely void. A like provision is made as in the civil law, where the mother, or guardian is non compos, beyond sea, or unreasonably froward, to dispense with such consent at the discretion of the lord chancellor: but no provision is made, in case the father should labour under any mental or other incapacity.

Much may be, and much has been said, both for and against this innovation upon our antient laws and constitution. On the one hand, it prevents the clandestine marriage of minors, which are often a terrible inconvenience to those private families wherein they happen. On the other hand, restraints upon marriages, especially among the lower class, are evidently detrimental to the public, by hindering the increase of the people; tract enforced. 4 Co. 29. But as this pre-engagement can no longer be carried into effect as a marriage, we may now be assured that it will never more be an impediment to a subsequent marriage actually solemnized and consummated. 1 Black. 435, 6. n 3.

* That is the party under age marrying by licence, if a minor, and not having been married before, must have the consent of a father, if living; if he be dead, of a guardian of his person, lawfully appointed; if there be no such guardian, then of the mother if she is unmarried; if there be no mother unmarried, then of a guardian appointed by the court of chancery.

and to religion and morality, by encouraging licentiousness and debauchery among the single of both sexes, and thereby destroying one end of society and government, which is concubitu prohibere vago. 1 Black. 438.

4. A fourth incapacity is want of reason; without a competent share of which, as no other, so neither can the matrimonial contract be valid (1 Roll. Abr. 357). It was formerly adjudged, that the issue of an idiot was legitimate, and consequently that his marriage was valid. And the stat. 15 Geo. 2. c. 30. has provided that the marriage of lunatics and persons under phrenzies (if found lunatics under a commission, or committed to the care of trustees by any act of parliament) before they are declared of sound mind by the lord chancellor or the majority of such trustees, shall be totally void.

Lastly, the parties must not only be willing and able to contract, but actually must contract themselves in due form of law, to make it a good civil marriage. Any contract made, per verba de præsenti, or in words of the present tense, and in case of cohabitation per verba de futuro also, between persons able to contract, was before the late act deemed a valid marriage to many purposes; and the parties might be compelled in the spiritual courts to celebrate it in facie ecclesiæ. But these verbal contracts are now of no force, to compel a future marriage (stat. 26 Geo. 2. c. 33.) Neither is any marriage at present valid, that is not celebrated in some parish church or public chapel, unless by dispensation from the archbishop of Canterbury. For the marriage act, 26 Geo. 2. c. 33. requires, that the marriage shall be celebrated in some parish church or public chapel, where banns had been usually published; i. e. before the 25th of March 1754. But as there have been many marriages solemnized in chapels since erected, which are therefore defective, acts of parliament have been passed, to legalize all marriages celebrated in such churches or chapels, since the passing of the marriage act, up to 23d Aug. 1808. See 21 Geo. 3. c. 53. 44 Geo. 3. c. 77. 48 Geo. 3. c. 127. And in the chapel of Voylas, in Denbighshire, banns may be published and marriages solemnized, notwithstanding the marriage act. See 44 Geo. 3. c. lxxviii. It must also be preceded by publication of banns, or by licence from the spiritual judge. Many other formalities are likewise prescribed by the act; the neglect of which, though penal, does not invalidate the marriage. It is held to be also essential to a marriage, that it be performed by a person in orders (Salk. 119); though the intervention of a priest to solemnize this contract is merely juris positivi, and not juris naturalis aut divini: it being said that pope Innocent the third was the first who ordained the celebration of marriage in the church (Moor. 170.); before which it was totally a civil contract. And, in the times of the grand rebellion, all marriages were performed by the justices of the peace; and these marriages were declared valid, without any fresh solemnization, by statute 12 Car. 2. c. 33. But, as the law now stands, we may upon the whole collect, that no marriage by the temporal law is ipso facto void, that is celebrated by a person in orders, in a parish church or public chapel (or elsewhere, by special dispensation)—in pursuance of banns or a licence,—between single persons,—consenting,—of sound mind,—and of the age of twenty-one years;—or of the age of fourteen in males and twelve in females, with consent of parents or guardians, or without it, in case of widowhood. And no marriage is voidable by the ecclesiastical law, after the death of either of the parties, nor during their lives, unless for the canonical impediments of pre-contract, if that indeed still exists; of consanguinity; and of affinity, or corporal imbecility, subsisting previous to the marriage.

By marriage with a woman, the husband is intitled to all her estate real and personal; and the effects of marriage are, that the husband and wife are accounted one person, and he hath power over her person as well as estate. 1 Inst. 357.

As to the real estate the interest of the husband is only for her life, unless he has issue by her born alive that might inherit, and then he will be tenant by the curtesy, for his own life, if he survive her.

But in chattel interests, the sole and absolute property vests in her husband, to be disposed of at his pleasure if he chooses to take possession of them; but unless he reduces them to possession by exercising some act of ownership upon them, no property vests in him, but they shall remain to the wife or to her representatives after the coverture is determined; and if he assigns her choses in action for a valuable consideration in her life time, and she survives, she is bound only to her amount of the consideration, and the residue survives to her. 1 Atk. 207. Cox's P. Wms. 380. But if the husband before marriage makes a settlement upon the wife in consideration of the wife's fortune, the representative of the husband will be entitled to all her things in action. 3 Peere Wms. 199. But if it is in consideration of part of the estate only, the residue not reduced into possession will survive to the wife: and where there is a settlement made equivalent to the wife's fortune, though no mention be made of her personal estate, the husband's representative will be entitled to the whole. Butler's note to Co. Lit. 352. If the husband cannot recover the things in action of his wife but by the assistance of a court of equity, the court, upon the principle that he who seeks equity must do equity, will not assist him in recovering the property, unless he either has made a previous provision for her, or agrees to do it out of the estate prayed for; or unless the wife appears personally in court, and consents to the property being given to him. 2 Ves. 669. But the court will not direct the fortune in all cases to be paid to the husband, though the wife appears to consent, where no previous provision whatever is made upon her. 2 Ves. 579. Lord Thurlow has declared that he did not find it any where decided, that if the husband makes an actual assignment by contract for a valuable consideration, the assignee should be bound to make any provision for the wife out of the property assigned; but that a court of equity has much greater consideration for the assignment actually made by contract, than for an assignment by mere operation of law; for as to the latter, his lordship declared it to be his opinion, that when the equitable interest of the wife was transferred to the creditor of the husband by mere operation of law, (as in the case of an assignee under a commission of bankrupt,) he stood exactly in the place of the husband, and was subject precisely to the same equity in respect of the wife. Cox's P. Wms. 459. And it is determined, the wife shall have the same relief, under a general assignment by the husband of his estate for the benefit of his creditors. 4 Bro. 139. An assignee of a bankrupt in such cases generally allows the wife one half. 3 Ves. jun. 620.

The courts of equity at present are not inclined to make any distinction between an assignee by contract and an assignee by operation of law; but perhaps they would compel the former to make the same provision for the wife as the latter. 4 Bro. 326. 2 Ves. jun. 608.

But if the wife's fortune is paid to the husband, or he can receive it without applying to a court of equity, then it can give no relief to the wife. 2 Atk. 420. But. Co. Litt. 351. 1 Fonb. Tr. Eq. 304.

There is therefore a very considerable difference in the acquisition of this species of property by the husband, according to the subject-matter; viz. whether it be a chattel real, or a chattel personal: and, of chattels personal, whether it be in possession, or in action only. A chattel real vests in the husband, not absolutely, but sub modo. As, in case of a lease for years, the husband shall receive all the rents and profits of it, and may, if he pleases, sell, surrender, or dispose of it during the coverture (Co. Litt. 46.): if he be outlawed or attainted, it shall be forfeited to the king (Plowd. 263.); it is liable to execution for his debts (Co. Litt. 351.): and, if he survives his wife, it is to all intents and purposes his own (Ibid. 300.) Yet, if he has made no disposition thereof in his lifetime, and dies before his wife, he cannot dispose of it by will (Poph. 5. Co. Litt. 351.): for, the husband having made no alteration in the property during his life, it never was transferred from the wife; but after his death she shall remain in her antient possession, and it shall not go to his executors. So it is also of chattels personal (or choses) in action: as debts upon bonds, contracts, and the like: these the husband may have if he pleases; that is, if he reduces them into possession by receiving or recovering them at law. And, upon such receipt or recovery, they are absolutely and entirely his own; and shall go to his executors or administrators, or as he shall bequeath them by will, and shall not revest in the wife. But, if he dies before he has recovered or reduced them into possession, so that at his death they still continue choses in action, they shall survive to the wife; for the husband never exerted the power he had of obtaining an exclusive property in them (Co. Litt. 351.) And so, if an estray comes into the wife's franchise, and the husband seizes it, it is absolutely his property: but if he dies without seizing it, his executors are not at liberty to seize it, but the wife or her heirs (Ibid.); for the husband never exerted the right he had, which right determined with the coverture. Thus, in both these species of property the law is the same, in case the wife survives the husband; but, in case the husband survives the wife, the law is very different with respect to chattels real and choses in action: for he shall have the chattel real by survivorship, but not the chose in action (3 Mod. 186.); except in the case of arrears of rent, due to the wife before her coverture, which in case of her death are given to the husband by statute 32 Hen. 8. c. 37. And the reason for the general law is this: that the husband is in absolute possession of the chattel real during the coverture, by a kind of joint-tenancy with his wife; wherefore the law will not wrest it out of his hands, and give it to her representatives; though, in case he had died first, it would have survived to the wife, unless he thought proper in his life time to alter the possession. But a chose in action shall not survive to him, because he never was in possession of it at all, during the coverture; and the only method he had to gain possession of it, was by suing in his wife's right; but as, after her death, he cannot (as husband) bring an action in her right, because they are no longer one and the same person in law, therefore he can never (as such) recover the possession. But he still will be entitled to be her administrator; and may, in that capacity, recover such things in action as became due to her before or during the coverture. 2 Black. 434.

And by 29 Car. 2. c. 3. s. 25. the husband shall have administration of all his wife's personal estate, which he did not reduce into his possession before her death, and shall retain it to his own use: and if he dies before administration is granted to him, or he has recovered his wife's property, the right to it passes to his personal representative, and not to the wife's next of kin. 1 P. Wms. 378. But Co. Litt. 351.

Thus, and upon these reasons, stands the law between husband and wife, with regard to chattels real and choses in action: but, as to chattels personal (or choses) in possession, which the wife hath in her own right, as ready money, jewels, household goods, and the like, the husband hath therein an immediate and absolute property, devolved to him by the marriage, not only potentially but in fact, which never can again revest in the wife or her representatives. Co. Litt. 351.

And, as the husband may thus generally acquire a property in all the personal substance of the wife, so in one particular instance, the wife may acquire a property in some of her husband's goods; which shall remain to her after his death, and not go to his executors. These are called her paraphernalia; which is a term borrowed from the civil law (Ff. 23. 3. 9. § 3.), and is derived from the Greek language, signifying something over and above her dower. Our law uses it to signify the apparel and ornaments of the wife, suitable to her rank and degree; and therefore even the jewels of a peeress, usually worn by her, have been held to be paraphernalia (Moor 213). These she becomes entitled to at the death of her husband, over and above her jointure or dower, and preferably to all other representatives (Cro. Car. 343. 1 Roll. Abr. 911. 2 Leon. 166.) Neither can the husband devise by his will such ornaments and jewels of his wife; though during his life perhaps he hath the power (if unkindly inclined to exert it) to sell them or give them away (Noy's Max. c. 49. Grahme v. Ld. Londonderry, 24 Nov. 1716. Canc.). But if she continues in the use of them till his death, she shall afterwards retain them against his executors and administrators, and all other persons, except creditors, where there is a deficiency of assets (1 P. Wms. 730). And her necessary apparel is protected even against the claim of creditors, Noy's Max. c. 49.

The husband may dispose absolutely of his wife's jewels or other paraphernalia in his lifetime (3 Atk. 394). And although after his death they are liable to his debts, if his personal estate is exhausted, yet the widow may recover from the heir, the amount of what she is obliged to pay, in consequence of her husband's specialty creditors, out of her paraphernalia. 1 P. Wms. 730.

Marriage is dissolved by the natural death of the husband or wife, or by divorce; and where a marriage is dissolved by the death of the husband, dower, &c. survives to the wife, where no settlement is made of the husband's lands, &c. See Adultery, Baron and Feme, Divorce, and Elopement.

MARROW, a lawyer of great account in Henry VIIth's days. Lamb. Eirenarch, lib. 1. cap. 10.

MARSHAL, (marescallus) is a French word, signifying as much as tribunus militum, with the ancient Romans; and marescallus may also come from the German marschalk, i. e. equitum magister, which Hotoman in his feuds under verb. Marchallus derives from the old word march, which signifies a horse; and others make it of the Sax. mar, i. e. equus et scalch, præfectus. Cowel.

With us there are several officers of this name; the chief whereof is the earl marshal of England, stat. 1 Hen. 4. c. 7, and 13 R. 2. c. 2, whose office consists especially in matter of war and arms, as well in this kingdom as in other countries; this office is very ancient, having formerly greater power annexed to it than now; it has been long hereditary in the family of the duke of Norfolk. Ibid.

The next is the marshal of the king's house, otherwise called knight marshal; his authority is exercised in the king's palace, in hearing and determining all pleas of the crown, and suits between those of the king's house and other persons within the verge, and punishing faults committed there, 18 Ed. 3, c. 7. 21 Ed. 3, stat. 2, c. 6, and 2 H. 4. c. 13. Cromp. Jurisd. 192.

There are other inferior officers called marshals, as marshal of the King's Bench, Stat. 5 Ed. 3, c. 8, who hath the custody of the prison called the King's Bench Prison, in Southwark. Cowel.

There is also a marshal of the Exchequer, to whom that court commits the custody of the king's debtors, for securing the debts; he likewise assigns sheriffs, customers and collectors, their auditors, before whom they shall account. Stat. 51 Hen. 3, 5.

MARSHALLING OF ASSETS, is the distributive appropriation, by an executor or administrator, of the personal estate of the deceased; for the payment and satisfaction of his debts, according to their legal priorities, the order of which is set forth under title Executor.

MARSHALSEA (marescallia). The court of the lord steward of the king's household, or (in his absence) of the treasurer, comptroller, and steward of the marshalsea, (4 Inst. 133. 2 Hal. P.C. 7.) was erected by stat. 33 Hen. 8, c. 12, with a jurisdiction to inquire of, hear, and determine, all treasons, misprisions of treason, murders, manslaughters, bloodshed, and other malicious strikings, whereby blood shall be shed in, or within the limits, (that is, within 200 feet from the gate,) of any of the palaces and houses of the king, or any other house where the royal person shall abide. The proceedings are also by jury, both a grand and a petit one, as at common law, taken out of the officers and sworn servants of the king's household. The form and solemnity of the process, particularly with regard to the execution of the sentence for cutting off the hand, which is part of the punishment for shedding blood in the king's court, are very minutely set forth in the said stat. of 33 Hen. 8, and the several officers of the servants of the household in and about such execution are described, from the serjeant of the wood-yard, who furnishes the chopping block, to the serjeant farrier, who brings hot irons to sear the stump.

The court of the marshalsea, and the palace court at Westminster, though two distinct courts, are frequently confounded together. The former was originally holden before the steward and marshal of the king's house, and was instituted to administer justice between the king's domestic servants, that they might not be drawn into other courts, and thereby the king lose their service (1 Bulst. 211). It was formerly held in, though not a part of, the aula regis (Flet. lib. 2, c. 2), and when that was subdivided remained a distinct jurisdiction, holding plea of all trespasses committed within the verge of the court, where only one of the parties, is in the king's domestic service, (in which case the inquest shall be taken by a jury of the country) and of all debts, contracts, and covenants, where both of the contracting parties belong to the royal household, and then the inquest shall be composed of men of the household only (Artic. sup. cart. 28 Ed. 1, c. 3. Stat. 5 Ed. 3, c. 2. 10 Ed. 3, st. 2, c. 2). By the statute of 13 Ric. 2, st. 1, c. 3, (in affirmance of the common law, 2 Inst. 548,) the verge of the court in this respect extends for 12 miles round the king's place of residence *. And as this tribunal was never subject to the jurisdiction of the chief justiciary no writ of error lay from it (though a court of record) to the King's Bench, but only to parliament (1 Bulstr. 211. 10 Rep. 79), till the statutes of 5 Ed. 3, c. 2, and 10 Ed. 3, st. 2, c. 3, which allowed such writ of error before the king in his place. But this court being ambulatory, and obliged to follow the king in all his progresses, so that by the removal of the household actions were frequently discontinued (F. N. B. 241. 2 Inst. 548), and doubts having arisen as to the extent of his jurisdiction, (1 Bulst. 208.) king Charles the First, in the sixth year of his reign by his letters patent, erected a new court of record, called the curia palatii, or palace court, to be held before the steward of the household and knight marshal, and the steward of the court, or his deputy; with jurisdiction to hold plea of all manner of personal actions whatsoever, which shall arise between any parties within 12 miles of his majesty's palace at Whitehall (1 Sid. 180. Salk. 439.) The court is now held once a week, together with the antient court of marshalsea, in the borough of Southwark: and a writ of error lies from thence to the court of King's Bench. But, if the cause is of any considerable consequence, it is usually removed on its first commencement, together with the custody of the defendant, either into the king's bench, or common pleas, by a writ of habeas corpus cum causa: (see Habeas Corpus) and the inferior business of the court hath of late years been much reduced, by the new courts of conscience erected in the environs of London. 3 Black. 76.

MART, a great fair for buying and selling goods, holden every year. 2 Inst. 221.

MARTIAL LAW, is the law of war, which is built upon no settled principles, but is entirely arbitrary in its decisions, and is, as sir Matthew Hale observes (Hist. C. L. c. 2,) in truth and reality, no law, but something indulged rather than allowed as a law. The necessity of order and discipline in an army is the only thing which can give it countenance; and therefore it ought not to be permitted in time of peace, when the king's courts are open for all persons to receive justice according to the laws of the land. And it is laid down (3 Inst. 52), that if a lieutenant, or other, that hath commission of martial authority, doth in time of peace hang or otherwise execute any man by colour of martial law, this is murder, for it is against Magna Charta, cap. 29.

The petition of right (3 Car. 1, and stat. 31 Car. 2, c. 1,) also enact, that no soldier shall be quartered on the subject without his own consent; and that no commission shall issue to proceed within this land according to martial law. But by the annual mutiny acts, a standing army is now allowed, subject within itself to martial law and certain articles of war.

MARTILAGIUM, for martyrilogium. Monast. tom. 2. p. 324.

MARTYROLOGY, (martyrologium) a book of martyrs, containing the lives, &c. of those men who died for their religion. Cowel.

MASAGIUM, anciently used for messuagium, a messuage. Cowel. Blount.

MASKS. Formerly there was a penalty on selling or keeping visor-masks. 3 Hen. 8, c. 9,

MASS. See Papists.

MASSER, or MASS-PRIEST, a priest that says mass. Blount.

MAST, (glans, pessona) the acorns and nuts of the oak, or other large tree. Cowel.

* By the ancient Saxon constitution the pax regia, or privilege of the king's palace, extended from his palace-gate to the distance of 3 miles, 3 furlongs, 3 acres, 9 feet, 9 palms, and 9 barley-corns; as appears from a fragment of the textus Roffensis cited in Dr. Hickes's Dissertat. epistol. 114.

MASTER AND SERVANT

MASTER, (magister) signifies in general a governor, teacher, &c. and also in many cases an officer.

MASTER and SERVANT. The relation between a master and a servant, from the superiority and power which it creates on the one hand, and duty, subjection, and, as it were, allegiance on the other, is, in many instances, applicable to other relations, which are in a superior and subordinate degree; such as lord and bailiff, principal and attorney, owners and masters of ships, merchants and factors, and all others having authority to enforce obedience to their orders, from those whose duty it is to obey them, and whose acts, being conformable to their duty and office, are esteemed the acts of their principals. But the servants here to be considered in the relationship of master and servant are, 1st, menial servants, so called from being intra mœnia, or domestics. 1 Black. 423.

As to what a master or servant may respectively do: by reason of the relationship between them, it is observable, the master may maintain, that is, abet and assist his servant, in any action at law against a stranger, whereas, in general, it is an offence against public justice to encourage suits and animosities, by helping to bear the expense of them, and is called in law, maintenance. 2 Rol. Abr. 115.

A master also may bring an action against any man for beating or maiming his servant, but in such case he must assign, as a special reason for so doing, his own damage by the loss of his service, per quod servitium amisit; and this loss must be proved upon the trial (9 Rep. 113).

A master likewise may justify an assault in defence of his servant, and a servant in defence of his master: the master, because he has an interest in his servant, not to be deprived of his service; the servant, because it is part of his duty, for which he receives his wages, to stand by and defend his master. (2 Roll. Abr. 546).

Also if any person do hire or retain my servant, being in my service, for which the servant departeth from me, and goeth to serve the other, I may have an action for damages against both the new master and the servant, or either of them; but if the new master did not know that he is my servant no action lies, unless he afterwards refuse to restore him upon information and demand. The reason and foundation, upon which all this doctrine is built, seem to be the property, that every man has in the service of his domestics, acquired, by the contract of hiring, and purchased by giving them wages. F. N. B. 167, 168.

As for those things which a servant may do on behalf of his master, they seem all to proceed upon this principle, that the master is answerable for the act of his servant, if done by his command, either expressly given, or implied: nam qui facit per alium, facit per se (4 Inst. 109).

Therefore, if the servant commit a trespass by the command or encouragement of his master, the master shall be guilty of it, though the servant is not thereby excused, for he is only to obey his master in matters that are honest and lawful. If an innkeeper's servants rob his guests the master is bound to restitution; but it has been long established law, that the innkeeper is bound to restitution if the guest is robbed in his house by any person whatever, unless it should appear that he was robbed by his own servant, or by a companion whom he brought with him. 8 Co. 33.

And where an innkeeper had refused to take the charge of the goods, because his house was full, yet he was held liable for the loss, the owner having stopt as a guest, and the goods being stolen during his stay: (5 T. R. 273.) for as there is a confidence reposed in him, that he will take care to provide honest servants, his negligence is a kind of implied consent to the robbery; nam, qui non prohibit, cùm prohibere possit, jubet, (Noy's Max. c. 43.)

So likewise if the drawer at a tavern sells a man bad wine, whereby his health is injured, he may bring an action against the master; for although the master did not expressly order the servant to sell it to that person in particular, yet his permitting him to draw, and sell it at all, is impliedly a general command. 1 Roll. Abr. 95.

In the same manner, whatever a servant is permitted to do, in the usual course of his business, is equivalent to a general command. If I pay money to a banker's servant, the banker is answerable for it: If I pay it to a clergyman's or physician's servant, whose usual business it is not to receive money for his master, and he embezzles it, I must pay it over again. If a steward lets a lease of a farm without the owner's knowledge, the owner must stand to the bargain, for this is the steward's business. A wife, a friend, a relation, that use to transact business for a man, are quoad hoc his servants; and the principal must answer for their conduct; for the law implies, that they act under a general command; and without such a doctrine as this no mutual intercourse between man and man could subsist, with any tolerable convenience. If I usually deal with a tradesman by myself, or constantly pay him ready money, I am not answerable for what my servant takes up upon trust; for here is no implied order to the tradesman to trust my servant; but if I usually send him upon trust, or sometimes on trust, and sometimes with ready money, I am answerable for all he takes up, for the tradesman cannot possibly distinguish when he comes by my order, and when upon his own authority. Doct. & Stud. d. 2, c. 42. Noy's Max. c. 44.

And if I once pay for what my servant has bought upon trust, without expressing any disapprobation of it, it is equivalent to a direction to trust him in future; and I shall be answerable for all he takes up, upon credit, till an express order is given to the tradesman, not to give him further credit. Christian's 1 Black. 430.

If a servant, lastly, by his negligence does any damage to a stranger, the master shall answer for his neglect: as if a smith's servant lames a horse, while he is shoeing him, an action lies against the master, and not against the servant. But in these cases the damage must be done, while he is actually employed in the master's service; otherwise the servant shall answer for his own misbehaviour. Upon this principle, by the common law, (Noy's Max. c. 44,) if a servant kept his master's fire negligently, so that his neighbour's house was burned down thereby, an action lay against the master; because this negligence happened in his service: otherwise, if the servant, going along the street with a torch, by negligence sets fire to a house; for there he is not in his master's immediate service; and must himself answer the damage personally. But now the common law is, in the former case, altered by statute 6 Anne, c. 3, which ordains that no action shall be maintained against any, in whose house or chamber any fire shall accidentally begin; for their own loss is sufficient punishment for their own or their servant's carelessness. But if such fire happens through negligence of any servant, (whose loss is commonly very little) such servant shall forfeit 100*l.* to be distributed among the sufferers; and in default of payment shall be committed to some workhouse, and there kept to hard labour for 18 months.

A master is, lastly, chargeable if any of his family lays or casts any thing out of his house into the street or common highway, to the damage of any individual, or the common nuisance of his majesty's liege people; for the master has the superintendance and charge of all his household. And this also agrees with the civil law, which holds that the pater familias, in this and similar cases, "ob alterius culpam tenetur, sive servi, sive liberi." Noy's Max. c. 44. Ff. 9. 3. 1. Inst. 4, 5, 1.

The law which obliges masters to answer for the negligence and unskilfulness of their servants, though oftentimes severe upon an innocent person, is founded upon principles of public policy, in order to induce masters to be careful in the choice of their servants, upon whom both their own security and that of others so greatly depends. And to prevent masters from being imposed upon in the characters of their servants, it is enacted by 32 Geo. 3, c. 56, that if any person shall give a false character of a servant, or a false account of his former service; or if any servant shall give such false account, or shall bring a false character, or shall alter a certificate of a character, he shall, upon conviction before a justice of the peace, forfeit 20*l.* with 10*s.* costs. The informer is a competent witness. But if any servant will inform against an accomplice he shall be acquitted.

MASTER OF THE ARMOURY, (magister armorum et armaturæ regis) an officer who had the care of his majesty's arms and armoury. Stat. 39 Eliz. c. 7.

MASTER OF THE CEREMONIES, (magister admissionum) is one who receives and conducts ambassadors and other great persons to audience of the king, &c. instituted by Jac. 1. Cowel.

MASTER OF, or, IN CHANCERY, (magister cancellariæ). In the chancery there are masters, who are assistants to the lord chancellor or lord keeper, and master of the rolls: of these there are some ordinary, and some extraordinary; the masters in ordinary are 12 in number, of whom the master of the Rolls is chief; and some sit in court every day during term, and have referred to them interlocutory orders for stating accounts, computing damages, and the like; they also administer oaths, take affidavits, and acknowledgments of deeds and recognizances. The extraordinary masters are appointed to act in the country, in the several counties of England, beyond ten miles distance from London, by taking affidavits, recognizances, acknowledgments of deeds, &c. for the ease of the suitors of the court.

MASTER OF THE COURT OF WARDS AND LIVERIES, was the chief officer of that court, now abolished by stat. 12 Car. 2, c. 24.

MASTER OF THE FACULTIES, (Magister facultatum) an officer under the archbishop of Canterbury, to grant licences and dispensations, &c. Cowel.

MASTER OF THE HORSE, is he who hath the ordering and government of the king's stables; and of all horses, racers, and breeds of horses belonging to his majesty: the office is of high account, and always bestowed upon some great nobleman. He is the third great officer of the king's household; being next to the lord steward, and lord chamberlain. Ibid.

MASTER OF THE JEWEL OFFICE, an officer of the king's household, having the charge of all plate used for the king or queen's table, or by any great officer at court; and also of all the royal plate remaining in the Tower of London, and of chains and jewels not fixed to any garment. 39 Eliz. c. 7.

MASTER OF THE HOUSEHOLD, (Magister Hospitii Regis) otherwise called grand master of the king's houshold, now styled lord steward of the houshold. 32 H. 8.—And under him there is a principal officer still called master of the household, who surveys the accounts, and has great authority. Cowel.

MASTER OF THE KING's MUSTERS, was a martial officer in the king's armies, to see that the forces were complete, well armed and trained. Ibid.

MASTER OF THE MINT, an officer who receives the silver of the goldsmiths, and pays them for it, and oversees every thing belonging to the Mint; he is at this day called warden of the Mint; there is also an assay-master in the Mint. Ibid.

MASTER OF THE ORDNANCE, a great officer, to whose care all the king's ordnance and artillery is committed. 39 Eliz. c. 7.

MASTER OF THE POSTS. An officer of the king's court, who had the appointing, placing, and displacing of all such through England as provided post-horses for the speedy passing of the king's messages, letters, packets, and other business, since the establishment of the Post-office discontinued. Cowel.

MASTER OF THE REVELS, an officer to regulate the diversions of dancing and masking, used in the palaces of the king, inns of court, &c. and in the king's court is under the lord chamberlain.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS, (magister rotulorum) an assistant to the lord chancellor in the high court of chancery, and in his absence hears causes there, and also at the chapel of the Rolls, and makes orders and decrees. Cromp. Jurisd. 41. Ibid.

MASTER OF THE TEMPLE. The founder of the order of the Knights Templars, and his successors were called magni templi magistri, and probably from hence he was the spiritual guide and director of the Temple; as the chief minister of the Temple church in London is now called master of the Temple. Dugd. Warw. 706.

MASTER OF THE WARDROBE, (magister garderobe) is a considerable officer at court, who has the charge and custody of all former kings and queens ancient robes remaining in the Tower of London; and all hangings, bedding, &c. for the king's houses; he has also the charge and delivering out of all velvet or scarlet cloth allowed for liveries, &c. The lord chamberlain has the oversight of the officers of the wardrobe. Cowel.

MASTINUS, a great dog, called a mastiff. Cowel. Blount.

MASURA, an old decayed house. Ibid.

MASURA TERRÆ. Sunt in eisdem maneriis 60 domus plus quam ante fuerunt. Domesday. Cowel.

MATERIA, a great beam, or timber proper for building. Cowel.

MATERIA PRIMA. In the time of sir Tho. More the definition which the philosophers currently gave of their materia prima, the ground-work of all natural knowledge, was, that it is "neque quid, neque quantum, neque quale, neque aliquid eorum quibus ens determinatur;" or its subsequent explanation by Hadrian Heerebord, who assures us that "materia prima non est corpus, neque per formam corporeitatis, neque per simplicem essentiam: est tamen ens, et quidem substantia, licet incompleta; habetque actum ex se entitativum, et simul est potentia subjectiva." Philosoph. natural. c. 1, sec. 28, &c. 3 Black. 322

MATRICULA, a register; hence to be entered in the register of the universities is to be matriculated. Ibid.

MATRIMONIUM, is sometimes taken for the inheritance descending to a man ex parte matris. Cowel. Blount.

MATRIMONIAL CAUSES, or injuries respecting the rights of marriage, are a branch of the ecclesiastical jurisdiction.

MATRIX ECCLESIA, the mother church, and is either a cathedral, or a parochial church, with respect to the chapels depending on it. Leg. Hen. 1, c. 19.

MATRONS, JURY OF. When a widow feigns herself with child, in order to exclude the next heir, and a suppositious birth is suspected to be intended, then upon the writ de ventre inspiciendo, a jury of women is to be empanelled to try the question, whether with child or not. Cro. Eliz. 566.

Also where a woman is capitally convicted, and pleads her pregnancy, though this is no cause to stay judgment, yet it is to respite the execution till she be delivered:

In case this plea be made, in stay of execution, the judge must direct a jury of twelve matrons, or discreet women, to inquire the fact; and if they bring in their verdict quick with child, (for barely with child, unless it be alive in the womb, is not sufficient) execution shall be staid generally, till the next session, and so from session to session, till either she is delivered, or proves by the course of nature, not to have been with child at all. 1 Hal. P. C. 369.

MATTER IN DEED, and MATTER IN RECORD, are often mentioned in law proceedings, and differ thus: The first seems to be nothing else, but some truth or matter of fact, to be proved by some specialty, and not by any record; and the latter is that which may be proved by some record. Old Nat. Brev. 19. Kitch. 216.

MAUGRE, (from the Fr. mal, and gre, i. e. animo inigno) signifies as much as to say with an unwilling mind, or in despite of another. Lit. sec. 672.

MAUM, a soft brittle stone. Cowel. Blount.

MAUND, a kind of great basket or hamper, containing eight bales, or two fats: Ibid.

MAUNDY THURSDAY, the Thursday before Easter. See Mandati Dies.

MAUPIGYRNUM, an old sort of broth or pottage. Cowel.

MAXIMS IN LAW. Maxims are the foundations of the law, and conclusions of reason, so perfect, that they ought not to be impugned or disputed, but always admitted: yet they may, by reason, be conferred and compared, the one with the other, though they do not vary; or it may be discussed by reason, which thing is nearest the maxim, and the mean, between the maxim, and which is not; but the maxims can never be impeached or impugned, but ought always to be observed, and held as firm principles and authorities of themselves. Pl. C. 27. b.

These maxims are principles and authorities, and part of the general customs or common law of the land, and are of the same strength, as acts of parliament, when the judges have determined what is a maxim, which belongs to the judges, and not a jury. Terms de Ley. Doct. & Stud. Dial. 1, c. 8.

Maxims of the law are holden for law, and all other cases that may be applied to them shall be taken for granted. 1 Inst. 11, 67.

The maxims in our books are many and various, and too numerous to be inserted here.

MAY-DAY. See Mali Inductio.

MAYHEM. See Maihem.

MAYOR, (præfectis urbis, anciently meyr, comes from the Brit. mire, i. e. custodire, or, from the old English word maier, viz. potestas, and not from the Lat. major) is the chief governor or magistrate of a city or town, as the mayor of London, the mayor of Southampton, &c. See Corporations. Justices. Mandamus. Quo Warranto.

MEAL-RENTS, certain rents heretofore paid in meal by the tenants of the honour of Clun, to make meat for the lord's hounds, now payable in money. Cowel. Blount.

MEALS, the shelves of land, or banks on the sea-coasts of Norfolk, called meals, and males. Ibid.

MEAN, (medius) the middle between two extremes, and that, either in time or dignity. In time it is the interim betwixt one act and another, and applied to mean profits of lands, between a disseisin and recovery, &c. As to dignity there is a lord mean, or mesne, that holds intermediately of another lord. F. N. B. 135. 13 Ed. 1, c. 9. 7 Hen. 4, 12. 15 Hen. 6. New Nat. Brev. 330. Stat. West. 2, c. 9. 14 Ed. 3. Cowel. Blount.

MEASE, (messuagium) a messuage or dwelling-house. Kitch. 139. F. N. B. 2. Stat. Hibern. 14 Hen. 3, and 21 Hen. 8, 13. Also a measure of herrings, containing 500, from the half of 1000, being called mease or mese. Merch. Dict. Cowel.

MEASON-DUE, in French Maison de Dieu, Lat. Domus Dei, a house of God; a monastery, religious house, or hospital. 2 & 3 Phil. & Mar. c. 23. 39 Eliz. 5, and 15 Car. 2, 7.

MEASURE, (mensura) is a certain quantity or proportion of any thing sold. See Weights and Measures.

MEDERIA, was a mead-house, or place where mead or metheglin was made. Cartular. Abb. Glast. M. S. 29.

MEDFEE, a bribe or reward, or compensation where things exchanged were not of equal value. Cowel.

MEDIÆ ET INFIMÆ MANUS HOMINES, men of a mean and base condition, of the lower sort. Blount.

MEDIANUS, a word used for middle size, a man of middle fortune. Cowel. Blount.

MEDIATORS OF QUESTIONS, were six persons authorized by statute, who, upon any question arising among merchants, relating to unmercatable wool, or undue packing, &c. might before the mayor and officers of the staple, upon their oath, certify and settle the same, to whose order and determination therein, the parties concerned were to give entire credence, and submit. 27 Ed. 3, stat. 2, c. 24.

MEDIETAS LINGUA, or, medietate linguæ, jure de, signifies a jury or inquest empanelled, whereof the one half consists of natives, and the other of aliens, and is used in pleas wherein the one party is an alien. He that will have the advantage of trial per medietatem linguæ must pray it, for he cannot have the benefit of it by way of challenge. S. P. C. 158. 3 Inst. 127. Also in petit treason, murder and felony, medietes linguæ is allowed; but for high treason, an alien shall be tried by the common law, and not per medietatem linguæ. H. P. C. 261.—And a grand jury ought not to be de medietate linguæ, in any case. Wood's Inst. 263.

MEDIO ACQUIETANDO, a judicial writ to distrain a lord for the acquitting of a mean lord from a rent, which he formerly acknowledged in court not to belong to him. Reg. Judic. 129. See Mean.

MEDITERRANEAN, is that which passeth through the midst of the earth; hence the sea which stretcheth itself from West to East, dividing Europe, Asia, and Africa, is called the Mediterranean Sea. And the counterfeiting of Mediterranean passes for ships to the coast of Barbary, &c. or the seal of the Admiralty office to such passes is felony without benefit of clergy. Stat. 4 Geo. 2, c. 18.

MEDLEFE, (from the Fr. mesler, quarrelling or brawling. Bract. lib. 3. tract. 2, c. 35.

MEDLETA, a sudden scolding at and beating one another. Bract. lib. 3, c. 35.

MEDSYPP, a harvest-supper, or entertainment given to the labourers at harvest-home. Cowel. Blount.

MEER, (merus) though an adjective, is used as a substantive, to signify mere right. Old Nat. Brev. 2.

MEIGNE, the same with mainada. Cowel.

MEINY, (Fr. mesnia) the king's meiny, the king's family, or household servants. Ibid.

MELDFEOTH, (Sax.) was the recompense, due and given to him, who made discovery of any breach of penal laws, committed by another person, called the promoter or informer's fee. Leg. Inæ, cap. 20. Cowel.

MELIUS INQUIRENDUM, was a writ that laid for a second inquiry where a partial dealing was suspected; and particularly of what lands or tenements a man died seised, on finding an office for the king. F. N. B. 255.

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT, the representatives of the people in the house of commons, elected and deputed in the place of the people, to repeal old and useless laws, make new ones, and grant money when requisite, for the service of government. 1 Black. 153.

MEMORIES, are some kind of remembrances or obsequies for the dead, in injunctions to the clergy. 1 Ed. 6.

MEMORY, (time of) by the law, commences from the reign of Richard I. and any custom may be destroyed, by evidence, of its non-existence, in any part of the long period from his days to the present. 2 Black. 31.

MENACES. A menace alone (except in the case of sending a threatening letter, and the like, provided against by statute) without a consequent inconvenience, makes no real injury; but to complete the wrong there must be both together. Finch. 202.

MENAGIUM, a family, mentioned in Trivet's Chronicle, p. 677, and in Walsingham, p. 66.

MENDLEFE, quarrels, scuffling or brawling. Cowel.

MENIALS, (from mænia) the walls of a castle, house, or other place; hence menial servants are those who live under their lord or master's roof.

MENSA, all patrimony, or goods and necessaries for livelihood. Cowel.

MENSA ET THORO. See Divorce.

MENSALIA, such parsonages or spiritual livings as were united to the tables of religious houses, and called mensal benefices among the canonists. Cowel. Blount.

MENSURA, a bushel of corn, &c. Ibid.

MENSURA REGALIS, the king's standard measure kept in the Exchequer. Ibid.

MER, or MERE, words which begin or end with those syllables signify fenny places. Ibid.

MERA NOCTIS, midnight. Ibid.

MERCEN LAGE. The mercen lage, or Mercian laws, were observed in many of the midland counties, and those bordering on the principality of Wales, the retreat of the ancient Britons, and therefore very probably intermixed with the British or Druidical customs. Cowel.

MERCENNARIUS, a hireling or servant. Ibid.

MERCHANT, (mercator) is one who buys and trades in any thing. Lex Mer. 23.

The law of England, as a commercial country, pays a very particular regard to foreign merchants in innumerable instances. By Magna Charta, c. 30, it is provided, that all merchants (unless publicly prohibited beforehand) shall have safe conduct to depart from, to come into, to tarry in, and to go through England, for the exercise of merchandise, without any unreasonable imposts, except in time of war; and, if a war breaks out between us and their country, they shall be attached (if in England) without harm of body or goods, till the king or his chief justiciary be informed how our merchants are treated in the land with which we are at war; and if ours be secure in that land they shall be secure in ours. Ibid.

The custom of merchants is part of the common law of this kingdom, of which the judges ought to take notice; and if any doubt arise about the custom, they may send for merchants to know the custom. Per Hobart, Ch. J. Winch. 24.

The Lex Mercatoria is allowed, for the benefit of trade, to be of the utmost validity in all commercial transactions, for it is a maxim of law, that "cui libet in sua arte credendum est." 1 Black. 75. Bac. Abr. tit. Merchants.

MERCHENLAGE (Merciorum lex). See Mercen Lage.

MERCHET, (merchetum) a fine or composition anciently paid by inferior tenants to the lord, for liberty to dispose of their daughters in marriage. See Marchet, Maritagium.

MERCIA, used in many places for amerciament. Cowel. Blount.

MERCIMONIATUS ANGLIÆ, was of old time used for the impost of England upon merchandise. Ibid.

MERCY, the arbitrament of the king or judge, in punishing offences, not directly censured by the law. 11 H. 6. c. 2. Cowel. Blount.

MERE RIGHT. The mere right of property, the jus proprietatis, without either possession or even the right of possession, is frequently spoken of in our books, under the name of the mere right, jus merum; and the estate of the owner is in such cases said to be totally devested, and put to a right (Co. Lit. 345.) A person in this situation may have the true ultimate property of the lands in himself: but by the intervention of certain circumstances, either by his own negligence, the solemn act of his ancestor, or the determination of a court of justice, the presumptive evidence of that right is strongly in favour of his antagonist; who has thereby obtained the absolute right of possession. As, in the first place, if a person disseised, or turned out of possession of his estate, neglects to pursue his remedy within the time limited by law: by this means the disseisor or his heirs, gain the actual right of possession: for the law presumes that either he had a good right originally, in virtue of which he entered on the lands in question, or that, since such his entry, he has procured a sufficient title; and, therefore, after so long an acquiescence, the law will not suffer his possession to be disturbed without enquiring into the absolute right of property. Yet, still, if the person disseised or his heir hath the true right of property remaining in himself, his estate is indeed said to be turned into a mere right: but, by proving such his better right, he may at length recover the lands. Again, if a tenant in tail discontinues his estate-tail, by alienating the lands, to a stranger in fee, and dies; here the issue in tail hath no right of possession, independent of the right of property: for the law presumes, prima facie, that the ancestor would not disinherit, or attempt to disinherit, his heir, unless he had power so to do; and therefore, as the ancestor had in himself the right of possession, and has transferred the same to a stranger, the law will not permit that possession, now to be disturbed, unless by shewing the absolute right of property to reside in another person. The heir therefore in this case has only a mere right, and must be strictly held to the proof of it, in order to recover the lands. Lastly, if by accident, neglect, or otherwise, judgment is given for either party in any possessory action, (that is such wherein the right of possession only, and not that of property, is contested,) and the other party hath indeed in himself the right of property, this is now turned to a mere right; and upon proof thereof in a subsequent action, denominated a writ of right, he shall recover his seisin of the lands. 2 Black. 1.

Thus, if a disseisor turns me out of possession of my lands, he thereby gains a mere naked possession, and I still retain the right of possession, and right of property. If the disseisor dies, and the lands descend to his son, the son gains an apparent right of possession; but I still retain the actual right both of possession and property. If I acquiesce for thirty years, without bringing any action to recover possession of the lands, the son gains the actual right of possession, and I retain nothing out the mere right of property. Ibid.

And even this right of property will fail, or at least will be without a remedy, unless I pursue it within the space of sixty years.

And if a man has only in him the right of either possession or property, he cannot convey it to any other, lest precluded titles might be granted to great men; whereby justice might be trodden down and the weak oppressed. Co. Lit. 214. See Buying and Selling pretended Titles.—Limitation.

MERGER, is where a lesser estate in lands, &c. is drowned in the greater; as if the fee comes to tenant for years or life, lesser estates are merged in the fee: but an estate-tail cannot be merged in an estate in fee; for no estate in tail can be extinct, by the accession of a greater estate to it. 2 Rep. 60, 61. 2 Plowd. 418. Cro. Car. 275.

MERSE-WARE, (Sax. incola paludum) the inhabitants of Romney Marsh in Kent. Cowel.

MERTLAGE, a corruption of, or a law-French word for martyrology. A church kalendar or rubic. Cowel.

MESNALTY, (medietas) signifies the right of the mesne as the mesnalty is extinct. Old Nat. Br. 44.

MESNE, (medius) intermediate, signifies him who is a lord of a manor, and so hath tenants holding of him; yet himself holds of a superior lord. Cowel.

MESNE PROFITS. As the damages recovered in ejectment are now usually (since the title has been considered as the principal question) very small and inadequate; amounting commonly to one shilling, or some other trivial sum. To complete the remedy, when the possession has been long detained from him that has right, an action of trespass also lies, after a recovery in ejectment, to recover the MESNE PROFITS, that is, the actual value or rent which ought to have been paid. Which action may be brought in the name of either the nominal plaintiff in the ejectment, or his lessor, against the tenant in possession; whether he be made party to the ejectment, or suffers judgment to go by default. 3 Black. 205.

MESSARIUS, (from messis) the chief servant in husbandry, or harvest-time, now called a bailiff in some places. Mon. Angl. tom. 2. p. 832. Fleta, lib. 2. c. 75. Cowel.

MESSENGER, is a carrier of messages, particularly employed by the secretaries of state, &c. 1 Salk. 347. 2 Hawk. P. C. 118. Skin. 599.

MESSENGERS OF THE EXCHEQUER, are officers attending that court; they are four in number, and in nature of pursuivants to the lord treasurer. Cowel.

There are also MESSENGERS to the serjeant at arms in chancery; and MESSENGERS to the commissioners of bankrupts.

MESSE THANE, signifies a priest. The Saxons called every man thane, who was above the common rank; so messe thane was he who said mass; and mærules thane was a secular man of quality. Cowel.

MESSINA, reaping-time, harvest. Id. ib.

MESSUAGE, (messuagium) is properly a dwelling-house, with some adjacent land assigned to the use thereof. West. Symb. tit. Fines, sect. 26. Bract. lib. 5. cap. 28. Plowd. 169, 170. Co. Lit. cap. 8.

MESTILO, mesline, or rather mescellone, that is, wheat and rye mingled together. Cowel. Blount.

METECORN, a measure or portion of corn, given out by the lord to customary tenants, as a reward and encouragement for their duties of labour. Ibid.

METEGAVEL, (Sax. cibi gabulum, seu wectigal) a tribute, or rent paid in victuals. Ibid.

METHEGLIN, (Brit. meddiglin) an old British drink made of honey, still in repute in England. Ibid.

METTESHEP, METTENSCHEP, was an acknowledgment paid in a certain measure of corn; or a fine or penalty imposed on tenants, for their defaults in not doing their customary services, of cutting the lord's corn. Paroch. Antiq. 495. Cowel. Blount.

MEUM ET TUUM, Latin words used in law, for the proper guides of right. Ibid.

MEYA, a mey or mow of corn, as anciently used. Blount. Ten. 130.

MICEL-GEMOTES, MICEL-SYNODS, the great councils in the Saxon times of king and noblemen, were called witiena-gemotes, and after micel-synods and micel-gemotes, i. e. great and general assemblies. Cowel. 1 Black. Com. 147.

MICHEL SYNOTH, same with michel-gemote, or micel-gemote. 1 Black. Com. 147.

MIDDLESEX, BILL OF. The usual method of proceeding in the court of king's bench without any original, is by a peculiar species of process entitled A Bill of Middlesex; so entitled, because the court now sits in that county; for if it sat in Kent, it would then be a bill of Kent. This bill of Middlesex must be served on the defendant by the sheriff, if he finds him in that county: but, if he returns "non est inventus," then there issues out a writ of latitat to the sheriff of another county, as Berks; which is similar to the testatum capias in the common pleas, and recites the bill of Middlesex and the proceedings thereon, and that it is testified that the defendant "latitat et discurrit" lurks and wanders about in Berks; and therefore commands the sheriff to take him, and have his body in court on the day of the return. See Latitat.

MILE, (milliare) the distance or length of ground described to contain eight furlongs, every furlong being forty poles, and every pole sixteen foot and a half. Stat. 35 Eliz. c. 6.

MILES, a knight. Mat. West. p. 118. Cowel.

MILITARE, to be knighted. Ibid.

MILITARY CAUSES, are by statute 13 R. 2. c. 2. declared to be such as relate to contracts touching deeds of arms and war, as well out of the realm, as within it, which cannot be determined or discussed by the common law; together with other usages and customs to the same appertaining.

Under the words "other usages and customs," are comprehended, 1. Grievances in matters of honour; 2. The distinction of degrees and quality; or, matters of coat-armour, precedency, and other distinctions of families. 3 Black. 103.

MILITARY COURTS, the only court of this kind known to, and established by, the permanent laws of the land, is the court of chivalry, formerly held before the lord high constable, and earl marshal of England jointly. See Chivalry.

MILITARY FEUDS. See Feuds.

MILITARY OFFENCES. These are defined by our annual acts for punishing mutiny and desertion, and the articles of war.

MILITARY POWER OF THE CROWN. The king is considered as the generalissimo, or first in military command within the kingdom. See title Prerogative.

MILITARY STATE, includes the whole of the soldiery; or, such persons as are peculiarly appointed among the rest of the people, for the safeguard and defence of the realm. 1 Black. 408.

MILITARY TENURES, were abolished by stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 4.

MILITARY TESTAMENT. Soldiers in actual military service may make nuncupative wills, and dispose of their goods, wages, and other personal chattels without those forms, solemnities, and expences, which the law requires in other cases. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. 5 Will. 3. c. 21. s. 6.

MILITIA. (Lat.) King Alfred first settled a national militia in this kingdom, and by his prudent discipline made all the subjects of his dominion soldiers: but we are unfortunately left in the dark as to the particulars of this his so celebrated regulation. 1 Black. 409.

In consequence thereof, all the lands in the kingdom, were divided, into what were called knight's fees, in number above sixty thousand; and for every knight's fee a knight or soldier, miles, was bound to attend the king in his wars, for forty days in a year, in which space of time, before war was reduced to a science, the campaign was generally finished, and a kingdom either conquered or victorious. By this means the king had, without any expense, an army of sixty thousand men always ready at his command, until the feodal system was abolished at the restoration, by statute 12 Car. 2. c. 24.

After, the restoration of king Charles the second, in consequence of the military tenures being then abolished, it was thought proper to ascertain the power of the militia, to recognize the sole right of the crown, to govern and command them, and to put the whole into a more regular method of military subordination (13 Car. 2. c. 6. 14 Car. 2. c. 3. 15 Car. 2. c. 4.): and the order, in which the militia now stands by law, is principally built upon the statutes, which were then enacted. And all prior acts, relating to the militia, having been repealed in 1802, the chief regulations by which it is now governed, depend on the stat. 42 Geo. 3. c. 90. and several subsequent acts—the qualifications of the officers—and quotas are as follows:

By 42 Geo. 3. c. 90. his majesty shall appoint lieutenants of counties, who shall call out the militia yearly, and appoint deputy lieutenants and officers, to be approved by his majesty, who are to rank as youngest of the same rank of officers in the regulars. s. 2.

Three deputy lieutenants may act when the lieutenant is out of the kingdom. Commissions shall not be vacated by the removal or vacating of the commission of the lieutenant. And each county lieutenant shall have the chief command of the militia of his county, and shall appoint twenty deputies. s. 3, 4, 5.

Deputy lieutenants, except in Cumberland, Huntingdon, Monmouth, Westmorland, Ely, or Wales, must have 200*l.* per ann. or be heir to 400*l.*—colonel 1000*l.* per ann. or heir to 2000*l.* per ann.—lieutenant-colonel 600*l.* per ann. or heir to 1200*l.*—major 400*l.* per ann. or heir to 800*l.*—captain 200*l.* per ann. or heir to 400*l.* per ann. or the youngest son of a person worth 600*l.* per ann.—lieutenant 50*l.* per ann. or 1000*l.* personal estate, or real and personal value 2000*l.* or heir to 100*l.* per ann. or the son of a person worth 2000*l.* personal estate, or 3000*l.* real and personal—and an ensign 20*l.* per ann. or 500*l.* personal estate, or 1000*l.* real and personal, or the son of a person having 50*l.* per ann. or 1000*l.* personal estate, or 1500*l.* real and personal estate, and one moiety of such qualifications for deputy lieutenants, lieutenant-colonels, majors, and captains, shall be situate within the county. s. 6.

A deputy lieutenant, in the excepted counties, must have 150*l.* per ann. or be heir to 300*l.* per ann.—a colonel 600*l.* per ann. or heir to 1200*l.* per ann.—a lieutenant, or major-commandant, 400*l.* per ann. or heir to 800*l.* per ann.—a major 200*l.* per ann. or heir to 400*l.* per ann.—a captain 150*l.* per ann. or heir to 300*l.* per ann.—a lieutenant 30*l.* per ann. or 600*l.* personal estate, or 1200*l.* real and personal estate, or heir to 60*l.* per ann. or a person having 1200*l.* personal estate, or 2400*l.* real and personal—and an ensign 20*l.* per ann. or 300*l.* personal estate, or 600*l.* real and personal, or heir to one having 30*l.* per ann. or 600*l.* personal estate, or 1200*l.* real and personal; and one moiety (except for lieutenants or ensigns) must be in the county. s. 7.

Deputy lieutenants in Ely must have 150*l.* per ann. or be heirs to 300*l.* per ann.—a captain 100*l.* per ann. or heir to 200*l.* per ann. or son of one having 300*l.* per ann.—a lieutenant 30*l.* per ann. or personal estate of 600*l.* or son of one having 60*l.* per ann. or 1200*l.* personal estate—and an ensign 20*l.* per ann. or 300*l.* personal estate, or son of one having 30*l.* per ann. or 600*l.* personal estate, half, except as aforesaid, in the isle of Ely. s. 8.

Cities and places that are counties within themselves are liable to this act; and every deputy lieutenant must have 150*l.* per ann. or a personal estate alone, or that with a real one, of 3000*l.* amount: every field officer 300*l.* per ann. or a personal estate alone, or jointly with a real one, 5000*l.* amount—a captain 150*l.* per ann. or a personal estate alone, or jointly with a real one, of 2500*l.*—a lieutenant 30*l.* per ann. or a personal estate alone, of 750*l.*—and an ensign 20*l.* per ann. or a personal estate alone, of 400*l.* half, except as aforesaid, within such city or town. s. 9.

The immediate reversion in leases on lives of 300*l.* per ann. shall be deemed equal to a qualification as herein before specified of 100*l.* per ann. and so proportionally. s. 10.

Estates granted for twenty years, of an annual value equal to the value of the estates, herein required for qualification, shall be deemed good. s. 11.

No commission superior to a lieutenant shall be granted till the qualification is delivered in to the clerk of the peace, and transmitted to the county lieutenant. s. 12.

Qualifications shall be inserted in the Gazette; and lists shall be annually laid, by the secretary of state, before parliament: and deputy lieutenants and officers are to take the oaths within six months after appointment; and persons acting who are unqualified, or who have not delivered in their qualifications, forfeit 200*l.* if a deputy lieutenant, colonel, lieutenant-colonel, major; and if a captain, 100*l.*; one moiety to the informer; but peers, or their heirs apparent, may act though not qualified. s. 13, 14.

His majesty may at any time signify his pleasure to the county lieutenant to displace all or any of the deputy lieutenants and officers of the militia, which the lieutenant shall do, and appoint others. s. 17.

County lieutenants and deputies may appoint clerks for their meetings; and the following number of men [total 40,963] shall be raised in each county respectively. s. 18, 19.

Such numbers shall continue the quotas until June 25, 1805, and afterwards the numbers shall be appointed by the privy council. s. 20.

Constables shall make out yearly lists of the names of men between eighteen and fory-five, and affix a copy to the church-door with notice of the meeting for appeals, and return another copy to the deputy lieutenants. s. 28.

An appeal therefrom is allowed to the subdivision meetings, whose determination shall be final. s. 29.

Persons, endeavouring to prevail on constables, to make false returns, are to forfeit 50*l.* and for refusing to tell their names 10*l.* s. 31.

At the second subdivision meeting, deputy lieutenants shall appoint the number of men for each parish, and order notice thereof, and of the next meeting, at which they shall cause the persons to be balloted for and appoint another meeting, when the persons chosen shall attend, be sworn in, and enrolled for five years. s. 41.

But such persons may produce substitutes, who, if approved, shall be inrolled and sworn in. Ibid.

Volunteers may be received, with the consent of the inhabitants, of any place, and a rate established for paying them bounties, not exceeding 6*l.* each; but persons having served by themselves, or substitutes, are not liable to the rates, and the same may be appealed against. s. 42.

Peers—commissioned officers in the forces, castles, or forts—officers on half pay—non-commissioned officers or privates in the forces—commissioned officer serving, or who has served four years in the militia—members of the universities—clergymen, licensed teachers, whose grant of worship was licensed for twelve months before the annual meeting in October—constables and peace officers—articled clerks and apprentices—seamen—persons mustered in the dock yards at the Tower—Woolwich—the gun wharfs at Portsmouth—the powder mills—freemen of the watermen's company—poor men who have more than one child born in wedlock, are not liable to serve or find a substitute; nor shall any person who shall have served personally, or found a substitute, be liable until, by rotation, it comes to his turn. s. 43.

MILL, (molendinum) is a house or engine to grind corn, and either a water-mill, wind-mill, horse-mill, hand-mill, or the like. And besides corn and grist mills, there are paper-mills, fulling or tucking-mills, iron-mills, oil-mills, &c. 2 Inst. 621. The toll shall be taken according to the strength of the water, ordin. pro pistor. incerti temp. Art. cler. 9 Ed. 2. st. 1. c. 5.

And by 36 Geo. 3. c. 85. a balance and weights are to be kept in every corn mill which may be examined by the persons appointed under 35 Geo. 3. c. 102. (see Weights and Measures), on penalty of 20*s.* s. 1.

Millers are to weigh corn, if required, before and after ground, on pain of 40*s.* s. 2.

Millers are to deliver the whole produce of corn when ground, if required, allowing for waste and toll, on penalty of 1*s.* per bushel for the deficiency and treble the value. s. 3.

The toll is to be deducted from corn before it is put into the mill. s. 4.

No corn, but money, shall be taken for the toll, on pain of 5*l.* except where the party has no money. s. 5.

But this is not to extend to ancient mills, where a right to take toll has been established by custom and law. s. 5.

Millers are to put up in their mills, a table of prices, on penalty of 20*s.* s. 6.

The act does not extend to private mills. s. 7. And the penalties are recoverable before one justice, who, for want of distress, may commit for one month.

MILLEATE, (mentioned in stat. 7 Jac. 1. cap. 19.) a trench to convey water to or from a mill.

MILLET, (milium) a small grain so termed from its multitude. Cowel.

MINA, a corn measure of different quantity, according to the things measured by it: and minage was a toll or duty paid for selling corn by this measure. Cowel. Blount.

MINARE, to mine or dig mines. Ibid.

MINATOR CARUCAE, a ploughman. Ibid.

MINERAL, is any thing that grows in mines, and contains metals. Ibid.

MINERAL COURTS, (curiæ minerales) are peculiar courts for regulating the concerns of lead mines; as stannary courts are for tin. See Berghmote. Ibid.

MINES, (minerœ) quarries or places whereout any thing is dug; they contain the hidden treasures of the earth. The king by his prerogative hath all mines of gold and silver to make money; and where gold and silver mines is of the greater value; they are called royal mines. Plowd. But by statute, no mine of copper or tin shall be adjudged a royal mine, though silver be extracted. 1 W. & M. c. 30. And persons having mines of copper, tin, lead, &c. shall enjoy the same, although claimed to be royal mines; but the king may have the ore, (except in Devon and Cornwall) paying to the owners of the mines, within thirty days after it shall be raised, and before removed, 16*l.* per tun for copper ore, washed and made merchantable; for lead ore, 9*l.* per tun; tin or iron, 40*s.* &c. Stat. 5 W. & M. c. 6. If a man hath lands where there are some mines open and others not, and he lets the land with the mines therein, for life or years, the lessee may dig in the open mines only, which is sufficient to satisfy the words in the lease; and hath no power to dig the mines unopened: but if there be no open mine, and the lease is made of the lands, together with all mines therein, there the lessee may dig for mines and enjoy the benefit thereof; otherwise those words would be void. 1 Inst. 54. 5 Rep. 12. 2 Lev. 184. To dig mines is waste, where lessees are not authorised by their leases; though a mine is not properly so called till it is opened; being but a vein of iron or coals, &c. before. 1 Inst. 54. v. 2 Mod. 193.

If any person maliciously set on fire any mine, or pit of coal, he shall suffer death as a felon, by stat. 10 Geo. 2. c. 32. And damaging such mines, or any coal-works, by conveying water therein, or obstructing sewers from draining them, &c. shall forfeit treble damages. 15 Geo. 2. c. 21. 24 Geo. 2, c. 57.

Entering mines of black lead with intent to steal, is felony. 25 Geo. 2. c. 10. See Felony.

And lastly, by 39 & 40 Geo. 3. c. 87. if any person shall pull down or fill up any airway, or damage any road leading to or from any mine, or not having a right shall dig any mineral lying in any waste, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and may be imprisoned six months. s. 1.

But the act is not to extend to any damage done under ground by owners of adjoining mines in working the same. s. 2.

If any collier or miner shall work any coal or ore, different to his agreement, or contrary to the directions of the owner, or shall refuse to fulfil his engagement, he shall, on conviction before one justice, forfeit not exceeding 40*s.* and on non-payment may be imprisoned for not exceeding six months. s. 3.

If any collier or miner shall stack any coal or ore, in a fraudulent manner, to defraud his employer, or shall remove any iron stone to defraud his fellow-workmen, he may be imprisoned not exceeding three months. s. 4.

If any person shall steal any coal or materials, not more than 5*s.* value, from any place belonging to any manufacturer, or coal dealer, or out of any boat or carriage, or shall damage any carriage used for carrying coals, or damage any tools used for cutting coal or minerals, not exceeding 5*s.* value, he shall be liable to not exceeding 10*s.* or one month's imprisonment, for the first offence, 20*s.* or three months, for the second, and 40*s.* or six months, for the third and every other offence. s. 5.

The penalties go half to the informer, and half to the poor of the parish: the evidence of the parishioners shall be good; but prosecutions must be begun within nine months, and persons aggrieved may appeal to the quarter sessions (except in orders of commitment), and there is no certiorari allowed. s. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10.

MINES, in another signification, are caves or trenches dug under ground, whereby to undermine the walls of a city or fortification.

MINIMENTS, or MUNIMENTS, (mu-nimenta, from munio, to defend) are the evidence and writings concerning a man's possession or inheritance, whereby he is enabled to defend the title of his estate. Terms de Ley. Stat. 5 R. 2. c. 8. and 35 H. 6. c. 37.

MINISTERS, disturbing them in the execution of their office, see Church and Dissenters.

MINISTRI REGIS, judges of the realm; as well as those who have ministerial offices in the government. 2 Inst. 208.

MINOR, one under age. See Age—Infant.

MINORES, friars minorites, of the order of St. Francis, that had no prior; they washed each other's feet, and increased very much in the year 1207. Mat. West.

MINSTREL, (ministrellus et menestrallas, from the Fr. menestrier) a musician, fidler, or piper. By stat. 39 Eliz. c. 4. fidlers are declared to be rogues, yet there is a proviso therein, exempting those in Cheshire licensed by Dutton of Dutton. Cowel. 2 Black. 96.

MINT, (officina monetaria, monetarium) is the place where the king's money is coined; which is at present and long hath been in the Tower of London.

The officers belonging to the mint are now the following, viz. the warden, who is the chief of the rest, and is by his office to receive the silver and bullion of the goldsmiths to be coined, and take care thereof, and he hath the overseeing of all the other offices. The master worker receives the silver from the warden, and causes it to be melted, when he delivers it to the moniers, and taketh it from them again after made into money. The comptroller, who is to see that the money be made to the just assise, and controul the officers, if the money be not made as it ought. The master of the assay, who weigheth the silver, and examineth whether it be according to the standard. The auditor takes account of the silver, &c. The surveyor of the melting, who is to see the silver cast out, and that it be not altered after the assay master hath made trial of it, and it is delivered to the melters. The clerk of the irons, who seeth that the irons be clean and fit for working. The graver, whose office is to engrave the stamps for the money. The melters, who melt the bullion, &c. The blanchers do anneal and cleanse the money. The moniers, who are some to shear the money, others to forge and beat it broad, some to round and some to stamp or coin it. The provost to provide for all the monies, and oversee them, &c. Cowel.

MINT, a pretended place of privilege from arrests in Southwark, near the King's Bench, put down by statute 9 Geo. 1. c. 28. See Privileged Places.

MINUERE, to let blood; minutio, bloodletting. Cowel.

MINUTE TITHES, (minutæ sive minores decimæ) small tithes, such as usually belong to the vicar, as of wool, lambs, pigs, butter, cheese, herbs, seeds, eggs, honey, wax, &c. 2 Inst. 649.

MIRACULA, a superstitious sport or play, practised by the popish clergy for gain and deceit; prohibited by bishop Grosthead in the diocese of Lincoln. Cowel.

MIS: this syllable added to another word signifies some fault or defect; as, misprision. Cowel.

MISA, a compact or agreement, a form of peace, or compromise. Id. ib.

MISADVENTURE, (Fr. misadventure, i. e. infortunium) the killing a man, partly by chance. S. P. C. lib. 1. c. 8. See Homicide.

MISCASTING or MISCOMPUTING, formerly an assumpsit to pay 12*l.* if the jury found a promise to pay 7*l.* the judgment was reversed; because it was a miscasting or miscomputing not the same assumpsit. Dyer 219. b. Marg. pl. 11.

MISCHIEF, MALICIOUS. Malicious mischief, or damage; is an injury done to private property from a spirit of wantonness or black and diabolical revenge; and although this is in general only a trespass at common law, yet in many instances it is made penal in the highest degree by divers statutes.—Thus by stat. 22 Hen. 8. c. 11. perversely and maliciously to cut down or destroy the powdike, in the fens of Norfolk and Ely, is felony. —For this and other statutes relating to malicious mischief, see Felony, Damages wilful.

MISCOGNISANT, ignorant or not knowing.

MISCONTINUANCE, signifies the same with discontinuance. Kitch. 231.

MISDEMESNOR, or MISDEMEANOR. This word in the laws of England, signifies a crime.—Every crime is a misdemeanor, yet the law hath made a distinction between crimes of an higher and a lower nature, the latter being denominated misdemeanors, the former felonies, &c.

A crime or misdemeanor, is therefore an act committed or omitted, in violation of a public law, either forbidding or commanding it. This general definition comprehends both crimes and misdemeanors; which, properly speaking, are mere synonymous terms; though in common usage, the word "crimes," is made to denote such offences as are of a deeper and more atrocious dye; while smaller faults, and omissions of less consequence, are comprised under the gentle name of "misdemeanors." 4 Black. 3, 5.

MISE, (a French word, written in Latin missum, and sometimes mise) is a law term signifying expences, and it is so commonly used in the entries of judgments, in personal actions; as when the plaintiff recovers, that recuperet damna sua to such a value, and pro missis et custagiis, for costs and charges so much, &c. This word hath also another signification in the use made of it by law; which is where it is taken for a word of art, appropriated to a writ of right, so called because both parties have put themselves upon the mere right, to be tried upon the grand assise, so that what in all other actions is called an issue, in a writ of writ is termed a mise; but if in the writ of right, a collateral point be tried, there it is called an issue. To join the mise upon the meer right, is as much as to say, to join the mise upon the clear right, i. e. to join upon this point, which hath the more right, the tenant or demandant. 1 Inst. 294. 37 Ed. 3. c. 16.

MISE-MONEY, was money given by way of contract or composition to purchase any liberty, &c. Blount. Ten 162.

MISES, taxes or tallages, &c. An honorary gift or customary present, from the people of Wales to every new king and prince of Wales, anciently given in cattle, wine and corn, afterwards in money, 5000*l.* or more, was denominated a mise: so was the tribute or fine of 3000 marks, paid by the inhabitants of the county palatine of Chester, at the change of every owner of the said earldoms for enjoying their liberties. And at Chester they have a nise-book, wherein every town and village in the county is rated what to pay towards the mise And mise is sometimes corruptly used for mease, in law French mees, a messuage; as a mise place in some manors is such a messuage or tenement as answers the lord a heriot at the death of its owner. 2 Inst. 528.

MISELLI, leprous persons. Cowel.

MISERERE, nobis domine, the psalm of mercy.

MISERICORDA, is in law, used for an arbitrary or discretionary amerciament imposed for an offence; and where the plaintiff or defendant in any action is amerced, the entry is ideo in misericordia, &c. Bract. lib. 4. tract. 5. cap. 6. Kitch. 78. So called because it ought to be but small, and rather less than the offence, according to magna charta, c. 14. Sometimes misericordia is to be quit of all manner of amerciaments. Cromp. Judisd 196.

MISERICORDIA in cibis & potu, exceedings, or over-commons, or any gratuitous portion of meat and drink given to the religious above their ordinary allowance. Cowel. Blount.

MISERICORDIA COMMUNIS, is when a fine is set on the whole county, or hundred. Ibid.

MISEVENIRE, to succeed ill; as, where a man is accused of a crime, and fails in his defence, or purgation. Ibid.

MISFEASANCE, a misdeed or trespass. Cro. Car. 498.

MISFEASOR, a trespasser. 2 Inst. 200.

MISFORTUNE, or CHANCE, a deficiency of the will, or committing of an unlawful act, by misfortune or chance, and not by design. 4 Black. 26. See Homicide.

MISKENNING, (miskenninga) is derived from mis, and Sax. cennan, i.e. citare, and signifies a varying or changing one's speech in court. Leg. H. 1. c. 12. Iniqua vel injusta in jus vocatio; inconstanter loqui in curia, vel inviare. Cowel.

MISKERING, to be quit of amerciaments, hoc est quietus esse pro querelis coram quibuscunque in transumptione probata. The same as Abishering, which see.

MISNOMER, (compounded of the Fr. mes, signifying amiss, and nomer, i. e. nominare) is the using one name for another, a misnaming. 11 Rep. 20, 21. Ld. Raym. 304. Hob. 125. Poph. 57. 2 Lil. Abr. 199. 2 Cro. 67, 425. 1 Leon. 146. 1 Rol. Abr. 135. 1 And. 211. See Abatement and Addition.

MISPLEADING, if in pleading, any thing be omitted, that is essential to the action or defence, as if the plaintiff does not merely state his title in a defective manner, but sets forth a title that is wholly defective in itself, or if to an action of debt (i. e. on bond, contract, &c.) the defendant pleads not guilty instead of nil debet, these cannot be cured by a verdict for the plaintiff, in the first case, or for the defendant in the second. Salk. 365. Cro. Eliz. 778. 3 Black. 394.

But if a declaration or plea omits to state some particular circumstance, without proving of which, at the trial, it is impossible to support the action or defence, this omission shall be aided by a verdict. As if, in an action of tre pass, the declaration doth not allege that the trespass was committed on any certain day (Carth. 389); or if the defendant justifies, by prescribing for a right of common for his cattle, and does not plead that his cattle were levant and couchant on the land (Cro. Jac. 44.); though either of these defects might be good cause to demur to the declaration or plea, yet if the adverse party omits to take advantage of such omission in due time, but takes issue, and has a verdict against him, these exceptions cannot, after verdict, be moved, in arrest of judement.

MISPRISION, (misprisio contemptus). Misprisions (a term derived from the old French mespris, a neglect or contempt) are, in the acceptation of our law, generally understood to be all such high offences as are under the degree of capital, but nearly bordering thereon; and it is said, that a misprision is contained in every treason and felony whatsoever; and that, if the king so please, the offender may be proceeded against for the misprision only (Yearb. Ric 3. 10. Staundf. P. C. 37. Kel. 71. 1 Hal. P. C. 374 1 Hawk. P. C. 55, 56.) Misprisions are generally divided into two sorts: negative, which consist in the concealment of something which ought to be revealed; and positive, which consist in the commission of something which ought not to be done.

I. Of the first or negative kind, is what is called misprision of treason; consisting in the bare knowledge and concealment of treason, without any degree of assent thereto. See Treason.

Misprision of felony is also the concealment of a felony which a man knows, but never assented to; for if he assented, this makes him either principal or accessory.

There is also another species of negative misprisions: namely, the concealing of treasure-trove, which belongs to the king or his grantees by prerogative royal: the concealment of which was formerly punishable by death (Glanv. l. 1, c. 2); but now only by fine and imprisonment (3 Inst. 133).

II. Misprisions, which are merely positive, are generally denominated contempts or high misdemesnors; of which

1. The first and principal is the mal-administration of such high officers, as are in public trust and employment. This is usually punished by the method of parliamentary impeachment: wherein such penalties short of death, are inflicted, as to the wisdom of the house of peers shall seem proper; consisting usually of banishment, imprisonment, fines, or perpetual disability. See Impeachment.

2. Contempts against the king's prerogative. As, by refusing to assist him for the good of the public; either in his councils, by advice, if called upon; or in his wars, by personal service for the defence of the realm against a rebellion or invasion (1 Hawk. P. C. 59). Under which class may be ranked the neglecting to join the posse comitatus, or power of the county, being thereunto required by the sheriff or justices, according to the statute 2 Hen. 5. c. 8, which is a duty incumbent upon all that are fifteen years of age, under the degree of nobility, and able to travel (Lamb. Eir. 315). Contempts against the prerogative may also be, by preferring the interests of a foreign potentate to those of our own, or doing or receiving any thing that may create an undue influence, in favour of such extrinsic power; as, by taking a pension from any foreign prince without the consent of the king (3 Inst. 144). Or, by disobeying the king's lawful commands, whether by writs issuing out of his courts of justice, or by a summons to attend his privy council, or by letters from the king to a subject commanding him to return from beyond the seas, (for disobedience to which his lands shall be seised till he does return, and himself afterwards punished), or by his writ of ne exeat regnum, or proclamation, commanding the subject to stay at home. Disobedience to any of these commands is a high misprision and contempt; and so, lastly, is disobedience to any act of parliament, where no particular penalty is assigned; for then it is punishable like the rest of these contempts, by fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the king's courts of justice (1 Hawk. P. C. 60).

3. Contempts and misprisions against the king's person and government, may be by speaking or writing against them, cursing or wishing him ill, giving out scandalous stories concerning him, or doing any thing that may tend to lessen him in the esteem of his subjects, may weaken his government, or, may raise jealousies between him and his people. It has been also held an offence of this species to drink to the pious memory of a traitor: or for a clergyman to absolve persons at the gallows, who there persist in the treasons for which they die: these being acts which impliedly encourage rebellion. And for this species of contempt a man may not only be fined and imprisoned, but suffer the pillory or other infamous corporal punishment (Ibid): in like manner as, in the antient German empire, such persons as endeavoured to sow sedition, and disturb the public tranquillity, were condemned to become the objects of public notoriety and derision, by carrying a dog upon their shoulders from one great town to another. The emperors Otho I. and Frederic Barbarossa inflicted this punishment on noblemen of the highest rank (Mod. Un. Hist. xxix. 28. 119).

4. Contempts against the king's title, not amounting to treason or præmunire, are the denial of his right to the crown in common and unadvised discourse; for, if it be by advisedly speaking, it amounts to præmunire. (see Præmunire.) This heedless species of contempt is however punished by our law with fine and imprisonment. Likewise if any person shall in any wise hold, affirm, or maintain, that the common laws of this realm not altered by parliament, ought not to direct the right of the crown of England; this is a misdemesnor, by statute 13 Eliz. c. 1, and punishable with forfeiture of goods and chattels. A contempt may also arise from refusing or neglecting to take the oaths, appointed by statute for the better securing the government; and yet acting in a public office, place of trust, or other capacity, for which the said oaths are required to be taken; viz. those of allegiance, supremacy, and abjuration; which must be taken within six calendar months after admission. The penalties for this contempt inflicted by stat. 1 Geo. 1. st. 2. c. 13, are very little, if any thing, short of those of a præmunire: being an incapacity to hold the said offices, or any other; to prosecute any suit, to be guardian or executor, to take any legacy or deed of gift; and to vote at any election for members of parliament: and after conviction the offender shall also forfeit 500*l.* to him or them that will sue for the same. Members on the foundation of any college in the two universities, who by this statute are bound to take the oaths, must also register a certificate thereof in the college register, within one month after; otherwise, if the electors do not remove him, and elect another within twelve months or after, the king may nominate a person to succeed him by his great seal or sign manual. Besides thus taking the oaths for offices, any two justices of the peace may by the same statute summon, and tender the oaths to any person whom they shall suspect to be disaffected; and every person refusing the same, who is properly called a non-juror, shall be adjudged a popish recusant convict, and subject to the same penalties. See Oaths.

5. Contempts against the king's palaces or courts of justice have been always looked upon as high misprisions: and by the antient law, before the conquest, fighting in the king's palace or before the king's judges was punished with death (3 Inst. 140. LL. Alured. cap. 7 & 34). And at present, by statute 33 Hen. 8. c. 12, malicious striking in the king's palace, wherein his royal person resides, whereby blood is drawn, is punishable by perpetual imprisonment, and fine at the king's pleasure; and also with loss of the offender's right hand, the solemn execution of which sentence is prescribed in the statute at length.

But striking in the king's superior courts of justice, in Westminster-hall, or at the assises, is made still more penal than even in the king's palace. The reason seems to be, that those courts being antiently held in the king's palace, and before the king himself, striking there included the former contempt against the king's palace, and something more; viz. the disturbance of public justice. For this reason, by the antient common law before the conquest (LL. Inae. c. 6. LL. Canut. c. 56. LL. Alured, c. 7), striking in the king's courts of justice, or drawing a sword therein, was a capital felony: and our modern law retains so much of the antient severity as only to exchange the loss of life for the loss of the offending limb. Therefore a stroke or blow in such a court of justice, whether blood be drawn or not, or even assaulting a judge sitting in the court, by drawing a weapon, without any blow struck, is punishable with the loss of the right hand, imprisonment for life, and forfeiture of goods and chattels, and of the profits of his lands during life (Staund. P. C. 38. 3 Inst. 140, 141). A rescue also of a prisoner from any of the said courts, without striking a blow, is punished with perpetual imprisonment, and forfeiture of goods, and of the profits of lands during life (1 Hawk. P. C. 57), being looked upon as an offence of the same nature with the last; but only, as no blow is actually given, the amputation of the hand is excused. For the like reason an affray, or riot, near the said courts, but out of their actual view is punished only with fine and imprisonment (Cro. Car. 373).

Not only such as are guilty of an actual violence, but of threatening or reproachful words to any judge sitting in the courts, are guilty of a high misprision, and have been punished with large fines, imprisonment, and corporal punishment (Ibid. 503). And, even in the inferior courts of the king, an affray, or contemptuous behaviour, is punishable with a fine by the judges there sitting, as by the steward in a court-leet, or the like (1 Hawk. P. C. 58).

Likewise all such, as are guilty of any injurious treatment to those who are immediately under the protection of a court of justice, are punishable by fine and imprisonment: as if a man assaults or threatens his adversary for suing him, a counsellor or attorney for being employed against him, a juror for his verdict, or a gaoler or other ministerial officer for keeping him in custody and properly executing his duty (3 Inst. 141, 142): which offences, when they proceeded farther than bare threats, were punished in the Gothic constitutions with exile and forfeiture of goods (Stiernh. de jure Goth. l. 3. c. 3).

Lastly, to endeavour to dissuade a witness from giving evidence; to disclose an examination before the privy council; or, to advise a prisoner to stand mute (all of which are impediments of justice), are high misprisions, and contempts of the king's courts, and punishable by fine and imprisonment. And antiently it was held, that if one of the grand jury disclosed to any person indicted the evidence that appeared against him, he was thereby made accessory to the offence, if felony; and in treason, a principal. And at this day, it is agreed, that he is guilty of a high misprision (See Bar. 212. 27 Ass. pl. 44. s. 4. fol. 158), and liable to be fined and imprisoned (1 Hawk. P. C. 59).

MISPRISIONS OF CLERKS, relate to their neglects in writing, or keeping records; and here misprision signifies a mistaking. 14 Ed. 3. c. 6.

MISRECITAL, in an immaterial point, shall not avoid a grant. Cart. 149.

MISSA, the mass, at first used for the dismission or sending away of the people: hence it came to signify the whole church service or Common Prayer; but more particularly the communion service, and the office of the sacrament, after those who did not receive it were dismissed. Litt. Dict.

MISSAL, messale, the mass-book, containing all things to be daily said in the mass. Cowel. Blount.

MISSATICUS, a messenger. Ibid.

MISSÆ PRESBYTER, signifies a priest in orders. Ibid.

MISSURA, singing the Nunc Dimittis, and performing other ceremonies to recommend and dismiss a dying person. Ibid.

MISSURIUM, a dish for serving up meat to a table: hence a messe, or portion of any diet. Ibid.

MISTAKE, ignorance or mistake is a defect of the will: as when a man intending to do a lawful act, does that which is unlawful. 4 Black. Com. 27.

MISTERIUM. See Ministerium.

MIS-TRIAL, a false or erroneous trial; where it is in a wrong county, &c. 3 Cro. 284. And consent of parties cannot help such a trial, when past. Hob. 5. See Trial.

MISUSER, is an abuse of any liberty or benefit; as he shall make fine for his misuser. Old Nat. Br. 149. By misuser, a charter of a corporation may be forfeited: so also an office, &c. 1 Black. 153.

MITRED ABBOTS, were those governors of religious houses, who obtained from the pope the privilege of wearing the mitre, ring, gloves, and crosier of a bishop. Cowel.

MITTA, (from the Sax. mitten, mensura) an ancient Saxon measure; its quantity doth not certainly appear, but it is said to be a measure of ten bushels. Cowel. Blount.

MITTENDO MANUSCRIPTUM PEDIS FINIS, was a judicial writ directed to the treasurer and chamberlains of the exchequer, to search for, and transmit, the foot of a fine, acknowledged before justices in eyre, into the common pleas, &c. Reg. Orig. 14.

MITTER LE DROIT, is the passing a right: as if a man be disseised, and releaseth to his disseisor all his right; hereby the disseisor acquires a new right, which changes the quality of his estate, and renders that lawful which before was tortious or wrongful (Litt. s. 466.)

MITTER LE ESTATE, is the passing an estate, as when one of two coparceners releaseth all her right to the other, this passeth the fee-simple of the whole (Co. Litt. 273.) And in both these cases there must be a privity of estate between the relessor and relessee (Ibid. 272, 273.); that is, one of their estates must be so related to the other, as to make but one and the same estate in law.

MITTIMUS, a writ for removing and transferring of records from one court to another; as out of the king's bench into the exchequer, and sometimes by certiorari into the chancery, and from thence into another court: but the lord chancellor may deliver such record with his own hand. Stat. 5 R. 2. c. 15. 28 & 29 H. 8. Dyer 29, 32. Mittimus is also a precept in writing, under the hand and seal of a justice of peace, directed to the gaoler, for the receiving and safe keeping of an offender until he is delivered by law. 2 Inst. 590.

MITTRE A LARGE, is generally to set or put at liberty. Cowel. Blount.

MIXED ACTIONS, suits partaking of the nature of real and personal, wherein some real property is demanded, and also personal damages for a wrong sustained. See Ejectment.

MIXED LARCENY, or compound larceny. See Larceny.

MIXED TITHES, are those of cheese, milk, and young beasts, &c. 2 Inst. 649.

MIXTILIO. See Mestilo.

MIXTUM, sometimes signifies a breakfast, but always a certain quantity of bread and wine. Cowel.

MODELS. By 38 Geo. 3. c. 71. the sole right and property of making models or casts, shall be vested in the original proprietor for fourteen years; and persons making copies of any model or cast, without the written consent of the proprietor, may be prosecuted for damages by a special action on the case, except such persons who shall purchase the same of the original proprietor; but the action must be commenced within six calendar months after discovery of the offence.

MODERATA MISERICORDIA, a writ (founded on magna charta) which lays for him who was amerced in a court not of record, for any transgression, beyond the quality or quantity of the offence: directed to the lord of the court or his bailiff, commanding them to take a moderate amerciament of the parties. New Nat. Br. 167.

MODIATIO, was a certain duty paid for every tierce of wine. Mon. Angl. tom. 2. p. 994.

MODIUS, a measure, usually a bushel.

MODIUS TERRÆ VEL AGRI. This phrase probably signified the same quantity of ground as with the Romans, viz. one hundred feet long, and as many broad. Cowel. Blount.

MODO ET FORMA, are words of art in law pleadings, &c. and particularly used in the answer of a defendant, whereby he denies to have done the thing laid to his charge, modo & forma declarata. Kitch. 232.

MODUS DECIMANDI. There may be a discharge from the payment of tithes by custom or prescription; that is, where time out of mind such persons or such lands have been, either partially or totally, discharged from the payment of tithes. And this immemorial usage is binding upon all parties; as it is in its nature an evidence of universal consent and acquiescence, and with reason supposes a real composition to have been formerly made. This custom or prescription is either de modo decimandi, or de non decimando. 2 Rep. 47. 2 Inst. 490, 657, 659. 13 Rep. 159. Hob. 40. 1 Rol. Abr. 651. 1 Cro. 276, 446.

A MODUS DECIMANDI, commonly called by the simple name of a MODUS only, is where there is by custom a particular manner of tithing allowed, different from the general law of taking tithes in kind, which are the actual tenth part of the annual increase. This is sometimes a pecuniary compensation, as twopence an acre for the tithe of land: sometimes it is a compensation in work and labour, as that the parson shall have only the twelfth cock of hay, and not the tenth, in consideration of the owner's making it for him: sometimes, in lieu of a large quantity of crude or imperfect tithe, the parson shall have a less quantity, when arrived to greater maturity, as a couple of fowls in lieu of the eggs; and the like. Any means, in short, whereby the general law of tithing is altered, and a new method of taking them is introduced, is called a modus decimandi, or a special manner of tithing. 2 Black. 29.

To make a good and sufficient modus, the following rules must be observed. 1. It must be certain and invariable (1 Keb. 602.), for payment of different sums will prove it to be no modus, that is, no original real composition; because that must have been one and the same, from its first original to the present time (1 Keble 602.) 2. The thing given, in lieu of tithes, must be beneficial to the parson, and not for the emolument of third persons only: thus a modus, to repair the church in lieu of tithes, is not good, because that is an advantage to the parish only; but to repair the chancel is a good modus, for that is an advantage to the parson (1 Roll. Abr. 649.) 3. It must be something different from the thing compounded for: one load of hay, in lieu of all tithe hay, is no good modus: for no parson would bona fide make a composition to receive less than his due in the same species of tithe: and therefore the law will not suppose it possible for such composition to have existed (1 Lev. 179.) 4. One cannot be discharged from payment of one species of tithe, by paying a modus for another. Thus a modus of 1*d.* for every milch cow will discharge the tithe of milch kine, but not of barren cattle: for tithe is, of common right, due for both; and therefore a modus for one, shall never be a discharge for the other (Cro. Eliz. 446. Salk. 657.) 5. The recompense must be in its nature as durable as the tithes discharged by it; that is, an inheritance certain: and therefore a modus that every inhabitant of a house, shall pay 4*d.* a year, in lieu of the owner's tithes, is no good modus; for possibly the house may not be inhabited, and then the recompense will be lost (2 P. Wms. 462.) 6. The modus must not be too large, which is called a rank modus: as if the real value of the tithes be 60*l.* per annum. and a modus is suggested of 40*l.* this modus will not be established; though one of 40*s.* might have been valid (11 Mod. 60.) Indeed, properly speaking, the doctrine of rankness in a modus, is a mere rule of evidence, drawn from the improbability of the fact, and not a rule of law (Pyke v. Doxling, Hil. 19 Geo. 3. C. B.) For, in these cases of prescriptive or customary modus's, it is supposed that an original real composition was anciently made; which being lost by length of time, the immemorial usage is admitted as evidence to shew that it once did exist, and that from thence such usage was derived. Now time of memory hath been long ago ascertained by the law to commence from the beginning of the reign of Richard the first; and any custom may be destroyed by evidence of its non-existence in any part of the long period from that time to the present; wherefore, as this real composition is supposed to have been an equitable contract, or the full value of the tithes, at the time of making it, if the modus set up is so rank and large, as that it beyond dispute exceeds the value of the tithes in the time of Richard the first, this modus is (in point of evidence) felo de se and destroys itself. For, as it would be destroyed by any direct evidence to prove its non-existence at any time since that æra, so also it is destroyed by carrying in itself this internal evidence of a much later original (2 Inst. 238, 239.)

To constitute a good modus, it seems necessary that it should be such as would have been a certain, fair, and reasonable equivalent or composition for the tithes in kind, before the year 1189; and therefore no modus for hops, turkies, or other things introduced into England since that time can be good. Bunb. 307.

The question of rankness, or rather modus or no modus, is a question of fact, which courts of equity will send to a jury, unless the grossness of the modus is so obvious as to preclude the necessity of it. 2 Bro. 163. 1 Bl. R. 420. 2 Bl. R. 1257.

But in a suit brought to establish a modus they seldom decide upon the question of rankness without a reference to a jury.

A prescription de non decimando is a claim to be entirely discharged of tithes, and to pay no compensation in lieu of them. Thus the king by his prerogative is discharged from all tithes (Cro. Eliz. 511.) So a vicar shall pay no tithes to the rector, nor the rector to the vicar, for ecclesia decimas non solvit ecclesiæ (Cro. Eliz. 479, 511. Sav. 3. Moor. 910.) But these personal privileges (not arising from or being annexed to the land) are personally confined to both the king and the clergy; for their tenant or lessee shall pay tithes, though in their own occupation their lands are not generally titheable (Cro. Eliz. 479.) But it seems to be determined that the king's tenant for years, or at will, is not liable to pay tithes, on account of the dignity of the king, who cannot be presumed to have leisure or occasion to cultivate his own lands. Com. Dig. Dism. E. 7. 2 Woodd. 100. And, generally speaking, it is an established rule, that, in lay hands, modus de non decimando non valet (Ibid. 511.) But spiritual persons or corporations, as monasteries, abbots, bishops, and the like, were always capable of having their lands totally discharged of tithes by various ways (Hob. 309. Cro. Jac. 308.); as, 1. By real composition: 2. By the pope's bull of exemption: 3. By unity of possession; as when the rectory of a parish, and lands in the same parish, both belonged to a religious house, those lands were discharged of tithes by this unity of possession: 4. By prescription; having never been liable to tithes, by being always in spiritual hands: 5. By virtue of their order; as the knights templars, cis-tercians, and others, whose lands were privileged by the pope with a discharge of tithes (2 Rep. 44. Seld. tith. c. 15. s. 2.) Though upon the dissolution of abbeys by Henry VIII. most of these exemptions from tithes would have fallen with them, and the lands become titheable again: had they not been supported and upheld by the statute 31 Hen. 8. c. 13. which enacts, that all persons who should come to the possession of the lands of any abbey then dissolved, should hold them free and discharged of tithes, in as large and ample a manner as the abbeys themselves formerly held them. This provision is peculiar to that statute, and therefore all the lands belonging to the lesser monasteries, dissolved by the 27 Hen. 8. c. 28. are now liable to pay tithes. Com. Dig. Dism. R. 7. And from this original have sprung all the lands, which, being in lay hands, do at present claim to be tithe-free: for, if a man can shew his lands to have been such abbey-lands, and also immemorially discharged of tithes by any of the means before mentioned, this is now a good prescription de non decimando. But he must shew both these requisites: for abbey lands, without a special ground of discharge, are not discharged of course; neither will any prescription de non decimando avail in total discharge of tithes, unless it relates to such abbey lands. 2 Rep. 44. Selden tith. c. 13. s. 2.

Posterior usage is evidence of the antecedent, and has always been allowed so in cases of this nature; for what other evidence can be had? Ld. Hardw. 2 Atk. 137.

It has been argued in the court of exchequer, that a grant of the tithes might be presumed from a lay-impropriator; but the court held that there was no distinction between a spiritual and a lay rector, and that no grant could be presumed, which would amount to a prescription de non decimando. 3 Anstr. 702.

MONETAGIUM, signified a certain tribute paid by tenants to their lord every third year, that he should not change the money which he had coined, formerly when it was lawful for great men to coin money current in their territories; but not of silver and gold. Cowel. Blount.

MONEY, (moneta) is that metal, be it gold or silver, which receives authority by the prince's impress to be current; for as wax is not a seal without a print, so metal is not money without the impression. Co. Litt. 207. 1 Hale's Hist. P. H. 188.

MONOPOLY, (from Μόνος unus & πωλέω vendo) is an allowance of the king by his grant, commission, or otherwise, to any person or persons, for the sole buying, selling, making, working, or using of any thing, by which other persons are restrained of any freedom or liberty that they had before, or hindered in their lawful trade. 3 Inst. 181.

But by 21 Jac. 1. c. 3. all monopolies, grants, letters patent, and licence for the sole buying, selling, and making of goods and manufactures, are declared void, except PATENTS for fourteen years, for the sole working or making any new invented manufacture; and persons grieved by putting them in use, shall recover treble damages and double costs, by action on the statute; and delaying such action before judgment, by colour of any order, warrant, &c. or delaying execution after, incurs a præmunire: but this does not extend to any grant or privilege granted by act of parliament; nor to any grant or charter to corporations, or cities, &c. or to grants to companies or societies of merchants, for enlargement of trade; or to inventors of new manufactures, who have patents for the term of fourteen years; grants or privileges for printing; or making gunpowder, casting ordnance, &c.

Upon this statute it has been adjudged, that a manufacture must be substantially new, and not barely an additional improvement of any old one to be within the statute; it must be such as none other used at the granting the letters patent; and an old manufacture in use before, cannot be prohibited in any grant of the sole use of any such new invention. 3 Inst. 184.

MONSTRUM, the box in which relics were kept. Is also what we call corruptly mustering soldiers. Cowel, MONTH, or MONETH, Sax. MONATH, (mensis à mensione, lunæ cursûs) signifies the time the sun goes through one sign of the zodiac, and the moon through all twelve; properly the time from the new moon to its change, or the course or period of the moon, whence it is called month from the moon. Lit. Dict. A month is a space of time containing by the week twenty-eight days; by the kalendar sometimes thirty, and sometimes thirty-one days: and Julius Cæsar divided the year into twelve months, each month into four weeks, and each week into seven days. The month by the common law is but twenty-eight days; and in case of a condition for rent, the month shall be computed at twenty-eight days; so in the case of inrolment of deeds, and generally in all cases where a statute speaks of months without specifying calendar months: but where the statute accounteth by the year, half year, or quarter of a year, then it is to be reckoned according to the kalendar. 1 Inst. 135. 6 Rep. 62. *Cro. MORTMAIN, (manus, mortua; compoundmortua manu, into a dead hand, as it were never to revert to the donor, or any temporal or

By the common law any man might dispose of his lands to any other private man at his own discretion, especially when the feo-dal restraints of alienation were worn away.
Yet in consequence of these it was always, and is still, necessary for corporations to have a licence in mortmain from the crown, to enable them to purchase lands; for as the king is the ultimate lord of every fee, he ought not, unless by his own consent, to lose his privilege of escheats and other feodal profits, by the vesting of lands in tenants that can never be attainted or die. F. N. B.
121.

The foundation of all the statutes of mortmain was magna charta. By the 9 H. 3. c.
36. it is declared, "that it shall not be lawful for any to give his lands to any religious house, and to take the same land again to hold of the same house, &c. upon pain that the gift shall be void, and the land shall accrue to the lord of the fee."

But ecclesiastical persons found means to creep out of the statute, by purchasing lands holden of themselves, or by making leases for a long term of years, &c. wherefore by 7
Ed. 1. commonly called the STATUTE OF MORT-
MAIN, or de religiosis, "no persons religious,
"or others whatsoever, shall buy or sell any
"lands or tenements, or under the colour
"of any gift or lease, or by reason of any "other title, receive the same, or by any "other craft shall appropriate lands in any "wise to come into mortmain, on pain of "forfeiture; and within a year after the "alienation, the lord of the fee may enter;
"and if he do not, then the next immediate
"lord, from time to time may enter in a
"half year; and for default of all the lords
"entering, the king shall have the lands so
"alienated for ever, and may enfeoff others
"by certain services, &c."

As this statute extended only to gifts, alienations, &c. made between ecclesiastics and others, they found out an evasion also of this statute; for pretending a title to the land, which they meant to gain, they brought a feigned action against the tenant of the land, and he by consent and collusion was to make default, and thereupon they recovered the land, and entered by judgment of law:
so that the STAT. Westm. 2. 13 Ed. 1. c. 32.
was thought necessary; by which "it is to "be inquired by the country whether the "demandant had a just title to the land;
"and if so, then he shall recover seisin;

MOOT, (from the Sax. motian, placitare, to treat or handle) a term well understood in the inns of court, and signifies the exercise, or arguing of cases, which young barristers and students anciently performed at certain times, the better to enable them for the practice and defence of clients causes. The place where moot-cases were argued, was anciently called the Moot-hall: and in the inns of court there was a bailiff of the moot yearly chosen by the benchers, to appoint the mootmen for the inns of chancery; and keep accounts of the performance of exercises, both there and in the house. *Orig. MORT-DANCESTOR, a writ now seldom used. See Assise of Mort-Dancestor.

MORTGAGE, (mortgagium, vel mortuum vadium) is compounded of two French words, viz. mort, i. e. mors, and gage, i. e. pignus, and signifies a pawn of land or tenement, or any thing immoveable, laid or bound for money borrowed, to be the creditor's for ever, if the money be not paid at the day agreed upon; and the creditor holding land and tenement upon this bargain, he is called tenant in mortgage.

In this case the land, which is so put in pledge, is by law, in case of non-payment at the time limited, for ever dead and gone from the mortgagor; and the mortgagee's estate in the lands is then no longer conditional, but absolute. But, so long as it continues conditional, that is, between the time of lending the money, and the time allotted for payment, the mortgagee is called tenant in mortgage (Litt. s. 332.) But as it was formerly a doubt, whether, by taking such estate in fee, it did not become liable to the wife's dower, and other incumbrances, of the mortgagee, (though that doubt has been long ago over-ruled by our courts of equity,) it therefore became usual to grant only a long term of years by way of mortgage; with condition to be void on re-payment of the mortgage-money: which course has been since pretty generally continued, principally because on the death of the mortgagee such term becomes vested in his personal representatives, who alone are entitled in equity to receive the money lent, of whatever nature the mortgage may happen to be. (Litt. s. 357. Cro. Car. 191. Hardr. 466.)

As soon as the estate is created, the mortgagee may immediately enter on the lands; but is liable to be dispossessed, upon performance of the condition by payment of the mortgage-money at the day limited. And therefore the usual way is to agree, that the mortgagor shall hold the land till the day assigned for payment; when, in case of failure, whereby the estate becomes absolute, the mortgagee may enter upon it and take possession, without any possibility at law, of being afterwards evicted by the mortgagor, to whom the land is now for ever dead. But here again the courts of equity interpose; and, though a mortgage be thus forfeited, and the estate absolutely vested in the mortgagee at the common law, yet they will consider the real value of the tenements compared with the sum borrowed. And, if the estate be of greater value than the sum lent thereon, they will allow the mortgagor at any reasonable time to recall or redeem his estate; paying to the mortgagee his principal, interest, and expences: for otherwise, in strictness of law, an estate worth 1000*l.* might be forfeited for non-payment of 100*l.* or a less sum (Hard. 465. 1 Vern. 182, 193) But in general, if the mortgagee has been twenty years in possession, the court of chancery, in conformity to the time of bringing an ejectment, will not permit the mortgagor to redeem, unless during part of the time the mortgagor has been an infant or a married woman; or unless the mortgagee admits he holds the estate as a mortgage; or he has kept accounts upon it and treated it as redeemable within twenty years; or there is some other special circumstance, which forms an exception to the general rule. Eq. Ca.

Abr. 313. 2 Bro. 399. 2 Ves. jun. 83. And where two different estates are mortgaged by the owner to the same person, one cannot be redeemed without the other. Amb. 735. This reasonable advantage, allowed to mortgagors, is called the EQUITY OF REDEMPTION: and this enables a mortgagor to call on the mortgagee, who has possession of his estate, to deliver it back and account for the rents and profits received, on payment of his whole debt and interest; thereby turning the mortuum into a kind of vivum vadium. But, on the other hand, the mortgagee may either compel the sale of the estate, in order to get the whole of his money immediately; or else call upon the mortgagor to redeem his estate presently, or in default thereof, to be for ever foreclosed from redeeming the same; that is, to lose his equity of redemption without possibility of recall. And also, in some cases of fraudulent mortgages, the fraudulent mortgagor forfeits all equity of redemption whatsoever. By the 4 & 5 W. & M. if any person mortgages his estate, and does not previously inform the mortgagee in writing of a prior mortgage, or of any judgment or incumbrance which he has voluntarily brought upon the estate, the mortgagee shall hold the estate as an absolute purchaser free from the equity of redemption of the mortgagor. It is not however usual for mortgagees to take possession of the mortgaged estate, unless where the security is precarious, or small; or where the mortgagor neglects even the payment of interest: when the mortgagee is frequently obliged to bring an ejectment, and take the land into his own hands in the nature of a pledge (Inst. l. 4. t. 6. s. 7.) But, by statute, 7 Geo. 2. c. 20. after payment or tender by the mortgagor of principal, interest, and costs, the mortgagee can maintain no ejectment; but may be compelled to re-assign his securities.

The mortgagee is not, however, obliged to bring an ejectment to recover the rents and profits of the estate, for it has been determined that where there is a tenant in possession, by a lease prior to the mortgage, the mortgagee may at any time give him notice to pay the rent to him; and he may distrain for all the rent which is due at the time of the notice, and also for all that accrues afterwards. For the mortgagor has no interest in the premises, but by the mere indulgence of the mortgagee; he has not even the estate of a tenant at will, for it is held he may be prevented from carrying away the emblements, or the crops which he himself has sown. Moss v. Gallimore, Doug. 266.

N. B.* 121.

The foundation of all the statutes of mortmain was magna charta. By the 9 H. 3. c. 36. it is declared, "that it shall not be lawful for any to give his lands to any religious house, and to take the same land again to hold of the same house, &c. upon pain that the gift shall be void, and the land shall accrue to the lord of the fee."

But ecclesiastical persons found means to creep out of the statute, by purchasing lands holden of themselves, or by making leases for a long term of years, &c. wherefore by 7 Ed. 1. commonly called the STATUTE OF MORTMAIN, or de religiosis, "no persons religious, "or others whatsoever, shall buy or sell any "lands or tenements, or under the colour "of any gift or lease, or by reason of any "other title, receive the same, or by any "other craft shall appropriate lands in any "wise to come into mortmain, on pain of "forfeiture; and within a year after the "alienation, the lord of the fee may enter; "and if he do not, then the next immediate "lord, from time to time may enter in a "half year; and for default of all the lords "entering, the king shall have the lands so "alienated for ever, and may enfeoff others "by certain services, &c."

As this statute extended only to gifts, alienations, &c. made between ecclesiastics and others, they found out an evasion also of this statute; for pretending a title to the land, which they meant to gain, they brought a feigned action against the tenant of the land, and he by consent and collusion was to make default, and thereupon they recovered the land, and entered by judgment of law: so that the STAT. Westm. 2. 13 Ed. 1. c. 32. was thought necessary; by which "it is to "be inquired by the country whether the "demandant had a just title to the land; "and if so, then he shall recover seisin;

"but if otherwise, the lord of the fee shall "enter, &c."

And by 34 Ed. 1. "lands shall not be alienated in mortmain, where there are mesne "lords, without their consent declared under "hand and seal; nor shall any thing pass "where the donor reserves nothing to himself."

Notwithstanding all these statutes, ecclesiastical persons (not being able to get lands, by purchase, gift, lease, or recovery) procured lands to be conveyed by feoffment, or in other manner, to divers persons and their heirs, to the use of them and their successors, whereby they took the profits. 2 Inst. 75. To bar this, the STAT. 15 R. 2. c. 5. was made, which statute enacts, "that no "feoffment, &c. of any lands and tenements, advowsons or other possessions, to "the use of any spiritual persons, or whereof they shall take the profits, shall be made "without licence of the king, and of the "lords, &c. upon pain of forfeiture."

And as the statutes had been eluded by purchasing large tracts of land, adjoining to churches, and consecrating them by the name of church-yards, such "subtile imagination "is also declared to be within the compass "of the statutes of mortmain. And civil or "lay corporations, as well as ecclesiastical, "are also declared to be within the mischief, "and of course within the remedy provided "by those salutary laws." And, lastly, as during the times of popery lands were frequently given to superstitious uses, though not to any corporate bodies; or were made liable in the hands of heirs and devisees to the charge of obits, chauntories, and the like, which were equally pernicious in a well-governed state as actual alienations in mortmain; therefore, at the dawn of the reformation, the statute 23 Hen. 8. c. 10. declares, that all future grants of lands for any of the purposes aforesaid, if granted for any longer term than twenty years, shall be void.

But, during all this time, it was in the power of the crown, by granting a licence of mortmain, to remit the forfeiture, so far as related to its own rights; and to enable any spiritual or other corporation to purchase and hold any lands or tenements in perpetuity; which prerogative is declared and confirmed by the statute 16 Edw. 3. st. 3. c. 3. But, as doubts were conceived at the time of the revolution how far such licence was valid (2 Hawk. P. C. 391.), since the king had no power to dispense with the statutes of mortmain by a clause of non obstante, which was the usual course, though it seems to have been unnecessary (Co. Lit. 99.). and as, by the gradual declension of mesne signiories through the long operation of the statute of quia emptores, the rights of intermediate lords were reduced to a very small compass; it was therefore provided by the statute 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 37. that the crown for the future at its own discretion may grant licences to alienc or take in mortmain, of whomsoever the tenements may be holden.

After the dissolution of monasteries under Henry VIII. though the policy of the next popish successor affected to grant a security to the possessors of abbey lands, yet, in order to regain so much of them as either the zeal or timidity of their owners might induce them to part with, the statutes of mortmain were suspended for twenty years by the statute 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 8. and, during that time, any lands or tenements were allowed to be granted to any spiritual corporation without any licence whatsoever. And, long afterwards, for a much better purpose, the augmentation of poor livings, it was enacted by the stat. 17 Car. 2. c. 3. that appropriators may annex the great tithes to the vicarages; and that all benefices under 100*l.* per ann. may be augmented by the purchase of lands without licence of mortmain in either case; and the like provision hath been since made, in favour of the governors of queen Anne's bounty (stat. 2 & 3 Ann. c. 11.) It hath also been held (1 Rep. 24.), that the statute 23 Hen. 8. before-mentioned, did not extend to any thing but superstitious uses; and that therefore a man may give lands for the maintenance of a school, an hospital, or any other charitable uses. But as it was apprehended, from recent experience, that persons on their death-beds might make large and improvident dispositions even for these good purposes, and defeat the political ends of the statutes of mortmain; it is therefore enacted by the statute 9 Geo. 2. c. 36. that no lands or tenements, or money to be laid out thereon, shall be given for or charged with any charitable uses whatsoever, unless by deed indented, executed in the presence of two witnesses twelve calendar months before the death of the donor, and enrolled in the court of chancery within six months after its execution, (except stocks in the public funds, which may be transferred within six months previous to the donor's death,) *and unless such gift be made to take effect immediately, and be without power of revocation: and that all other gifts shall be void. The two universities, their colleges, and the scholars upon the foundation

* Lord Hardwicke has declared, since this last mortmain act, that "there is no "restriction whatsoever upon any one, from "leaving a sum of money by will, or any "other personal estate, to charitable uses; "provided it be to be continued as a personalty, and the executors or trustees are "not obliged, or under a necessity of laying "it out in land, by virtue of any direction "of the testator for that purpose." 2 Burn. Ec. 509. tit. Mortm.

Money left to repair parsonage houses, or to build upon land already in mortmain, is of the colleges of Eton, Winchester, and Westminster, are excepted out of this act; but such exemption was granted with this proviso, that no college shall be at liberty to purchase more advowsons, than are equal in number to one moiety of the fellows or students,* upon the respective foundations.

MORTUARIES (mortuarium, mortarium) are a sort of ecclesiastical heriots, being a customary gift claimed by and due to the minister in very many parishes on the death of his parishioners. A kind of expiation and amends to the clergy for the personal tithes, and other ecclesiastical duties, which the laity in their lifetime might have neglected or forgotten to pay. 2 Black. 525.

It was antiently usual in this kingdom to bring the mortuary to church along with the corpse when it came to be buried; and thence it is sometimes called a corse present: a term which bespeaks it to have been once a voluntary donation (Selden. Hist. of Tithes, c. 10.) This custom still varies in different places, not only as the mortuary to be paid, but the person to whom it is payable. In Wales a mortuary or corse-present was due upon the death of every clergyman to the bishop of the diocese; till abolished, upon a recompence given to the bishop, by the statute 12 Ann. st. 2. c. 6. And in the archdeaconry of Chester, a custom also prevailed, that the bishop, who is also archdeacon, should have, at the death of every clergyman dying therein, his best horse or mare, bridle, saddle, and spurs, his best gown or cloak, hat, upper garment under his gown, and tippet, and also his best signet or ring (Cro. Car. 237.) But by statute 28 Geo. 2. c. 6. this mortuary is directed to cease, and the act has settled upon the bishop an equivalent in its room. The king's claim to many goods, on the death of all prelates in England, seems to be of the same nature: though sir Edward Coke apprehends, that this is a duty due upon death and not a mortuary: a distinction which seems to be without a difference. For not only the king's ecclesiastical character, as supreme ordinary, but also the species of the goods claimed, which bear so near a resemblance to those in the archdeaconry of Chester, which was an acknowledged mortuary, puts the matter out of dispute. The king, according to the record vouched by sir Edward Coke, is entitled to six things; the bishop's best horse or palfrey, with his furniture: his cloak, or gown, and tippet: his cup and cover: his bason and ewer: his gold ring: and lastly, his mutа canum, his mew or kennel of hounds, as was mentioned. 2 Inst. 491.

MORTUARIUM, hath been sometimes used in a civil as well as ecclesiastical sense, being payable to the lord of the fee.

MORTUO VADIO, estate in. See Mortgage.

MOSS-TROOPERS, a rebellious sort of people in the North of England, that lived by robbery and rapine. The counties of Northumberland and Cumberland, were charged with a yearly sum, and a command of men to be appointed by justices of the peace, to apprehend and suppress them. Stat. 4 Jac. 1. c. 1. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 22. 30 Car. 2. c. 2. 6 Geo. 2. c. 37. See Felony and Northern Borders.

MOTE, (mota, Sax. gemote, curia, placitum, conventus) as Mota de Hereford, i. e. curia vel placita comitatus de Hereford. Hence Burgemote, curia vel conventus burgi; Swainmote, curia vel conventus ministrorum, scil. foresta, &c. From this also we draw our word mote and moot, to plead. The Scots say, to mute, as the Mute-hill at Scone, i. e. Mons placiti de Scona. Cowel.

We commonly apply the word moot to that arguing of cases used by young students in the inns of court and chancery.

MOTE also signifies a standing pool of water to keep fish in.

It likewise signifies a great ditch encompassing a castle or dwelling-house.

MOTE-BELL, or MOT-BELL, the bell so called, which was used by the English Saxons to call people together to the court. Cowel. Blount.

MOTEER, a customary service or payment at the mote or court of the lord. Ibid.

MOTHERING Sunday, a custom formerly prevailed of visiting parents on Midlent Sunday. Cowel.

MOTIBILIS, one that may be removed or displaced, or rather a vagrant. Fleta, lib. 6. c. 6.

MOTION IN COURT, is an occasional application to the court by the parties or their counsel, in order to obtain some rule or order of court, which becomes necessary in the progress of a cause; and it is usually grounded upon an affidavit, (the perfect tense of the verb affido) being a voluntary oath before some judge or officer of the court, to evince the truth of certain facts upon which the motion is grounded.

MOVEABLES. All sorts of things moveable are included under the name of things held not to be within the statute. 1 Bro. 444. But a legacy to the corporation of queen Anne's bounty is void: as by the rules of the corporation it must be laid out in land. 1 Bro. 13.

The bequest of personalty to establish a school has been held to be good; as it was not necessary to purchase land to give effect to the testator's design, for the master might teach in his own house or in the church. 4 T. R. 526.

* That is, of one moiety of the students in those colleges, in which there are no persons stiled fellows. The advowsons annexed to headships are not to be computed. S. 5.

personal, or are personal estate, i. e. all those things which may attend a man's person wherever he goes. 3 Black. 384.

MOULT, is an old English word for a mow of corn, or hay; mullo fœni, &c. Par. Antiq. 401.

MOUNTEBANKS, are public nusances, and may be indicted and fined. 1 Hawk. P. C. 198. See Gaming, and Lotteries.

MOWNTEE, an alarm or outcry, to mount and make some speedy expedition. Cowel. Blount.

MUFFULÆ, winter gloves made of ramskins. Ibid.

MULCT, (mulcta) a fine of money set upon one, for some fault or misdemeanor. Ibid.

MULIER, as used in our law, seems to be a word corrupted from melior, or the Fr. meliour; and signifies the lawful issue, born in wedlock, (though begotten before) preferred before an elder brother born out of matrimony. 9 Hen. 6. c. 11. Smith's Repub. Angl. lib. 3. c. 6. But by Glanvil, the lawful issue are said to be mulier, not from melior, but because begotten e muliere not ex concubina; for he calls such issue filios mulieratos, opposing them to be bastards. Glanv. lib. 7. c. 1.

If a man hath a son by a woman, before marriage, which is a bastard and unlawful, and after he marries the mother of the bastard, and they have another son, this second son is mulier and lawful, and shall be heir to his father, but the other cannot be heir to any man; and they are distinguished in our old books with this addition: bastard eigne, and mulier puisne. Co. Lit. 170, 243. See Eigne.

MULIERTY, the being or condition of a mulier, or lawful issue. Co. Lit. 352. b.

MULLONES FŒNII, cocks or ricks of hay; now a mow of hay or corn. Cowel. Blount.

MULMUTIN LAWS. See Molmution Laws.

MULTA, or MULTURA EPISCOPI, is derived from the Latin word mulcta, for that it was a fine given to the king, that the bishop might have power to make his last will and testament, and to have the probate of other men's, and the granting administrations. 2 Inst. 491.

MULTIPLICATION OF GOLD AND SILVER, was prohibited and declared to be felony by statute, 5 Hen. 4. c. 4. Which statute was made on a presumption that persons skilful in chymistry, could multiply or augment these metals, by changing other metals into gold or silver: repealed by 1 W. & M. c. 30. Dyer 88. 1 Hawk. P. C. 47.

MULTITUDE, (multitudo) according to some authors must be ten persons or more: but sir Edward Coke says, he could never find it restrained by the common law to any certain number. Co. Lit. 257. See Riot.

MULTO FORTIORI, or A MINORI AD MAJUS, is an argument often used by Littleton, and is framed thus: if it be so in a feoffment passing a new right, much more it is for the restitution of an ancient right, &c. Co. Lit. 253, 260. a. See Fortiori.

MULTO, MUTILO, MULTO, MUTO, MUTTO, a mutton or sheep, or rather a wether, quia testiculis mutilati. Cowel. Blount.

MULTONES AURI, pieces of gold money imprest with an Agnus Dei, a sheep or lamb on the one side, and from that figure called multones. Ibid.

MULTURE, (molitura vel multura) the toll that the miller takes for grinding corn. Cowel.

MUMMING, (from the Tuton. mummen, to minick) antick diversions in the Christmas holidays, to get money and good chear. Ibid.

Mummers, are those who now display diversions at fairs.

MUNDBRECH, (is derived from the Sax. mund, i. e. munitio, defensio, & brice, fractio) according to some an infringement of privilege; though of later times it was expounded clausarum fractionem, a breach of mounds. Ibid.

MUNDE, is peace, and mundebrece, a breach of it. Ibid.

MUNDEBURDE, (mundeburdum, from the Sax. mund, i. e. tuteta, and bord or bork, i. e. fidejussor. Defensionis vel patrocinii fidejussio & stipulatio) a receiving into favour and protection. Ibid.

MUNICIPAL LAW, is a rule: not a transient sudden order from a superior to or concerning a particular person, but something permanent, uniform and universal. 1 Black. 44. See Law.

MUNIMENT-HOUSE, (munimen) in cathedral and collegiate churches, castles, colleges, or such, is a house or little room of strength, purposely made for keeping the seal, evidences, charters, &c. of such church, colleges, &c. such evidences being called munimeuts, corruptly miniments, from munio, to defend; because inheritances and possessions are defended by them. 3 Inst. 170.

MUNIMENTS, (munimenta.) See Miniments.

MUNIMINA, the grants or charters of kings to churches. Blount.

MUNUS ECCLESIASTICUM, the consecrated bread, out of which a little piece is taken for a communicant. Cowel. Blount.

MURAGE, (muragium) a reasonable toll to be taken of every cart and horse coming laden through a city or town, for the building or repairing the public walls thereof, due either by grant or prescription: it seems to be a liberty granted to a town by the king, for the collecting of money towards walling the same. 3 Ed. 1. c. 30. 2 Inst. 222. Cowel. Blount.

MURALE, the city wall. Ibid.

MURATIO, a town or borough, surrounded with walls. Ibid.

MURDER, (murdrum, from the Sax. morth, whence (as it is said) comes the barbarous Latin mordrum, & murdrum; in Fr. meudre, though the word mardrare, evidently comes from the Latin morti dare) is a word in use long before the reign of king Canutus, which some would have to signify a violent death; and sometimes the Saxons expressed it by morthdæd & morthweorce, a deadly work. But the Sax. morth, relates generally to mors.

And this word murdrum, according to 3 Black 321. was necessarily framed to express a particular offence, since no other word in being was sufficient to express the intention of the criminal; or quo animo the act was perpetrated. See Homicide.

MURORUM OPERATIO, the service of work and labour done by inhabitants and adjoining tenants in building or repairing the walls of a city or castle. Cowel. Blount.

MUSICIANS. See Minstrels.

MUSSA, (Lat.) a moss or marsh ground; also a place where sedge grows; a place over-run with moss. Cowel. Blount.

MUSTER, (from the Fr. moustre) is to shew men, and their arms, that are soldiers, and inrol them in a book. Terms de Ley.

MUTA CANUM, (Fr. meute de caiens) signifies a kennel of hounds, in ancient records. Ibid.

MUTARE, to mew up hawks in the time of their molting or casting their plumes. Ibid.

And hence the mews (Muta Regia) near Charing-Cross, London, now the king's stables, was formerly the falconry or place for the king's hawks. Ibid.

MUTATORIUS, change of apparel. Ibid.

MUTE, (mutus) one dumb, who cannot or refuses to speak. And by our law a prisoner is said to stand mute, when, being arraigned for treason or felony, he either, 1. Makes no answer at all: or, 2. Answers foreign to the purpose, or with such matter as is not allowable; and will not answer otherwise: or, 3. Upon having pleaded not guilty, refuses to put himself upon the country (2 Hal. P. C. 316) If he says nothing, the court ought ex officio to impannel a jury to enquire whether he stands obstinately mute, or whether he be dumb ex visitatione Dei. If the latter appears to be the case, the judges of the court (who are to be of counsel for the prisoner, and to see that he hath law and justice) shall proceed to the trial, and examine all points as if he had pleaded not guilty (2 Hawk. P. C. 327.) But whether judgment of death can be given against such a prisoner, who hath never pleaded, and can say nothing in arrest of judgment, is a point yet undetermined (2 Hal. P. C. 317.)

If he be found to be obstinately mute, (which a prisoner hath been held to be, that hath cut out his own tongue, 3 Inst. 178.), then, if it be on an indictment of high treason, it hath been clearly settled, that standing mute is an equivalent to a conviction, and he shall receive the same judgment and execution (2 Hawk. P. C. 329. 2 Hal. P. C. 317.) And as in this the highest crime, so also in the lowest species of felony, viz. in petit larciny, and in all misdemesnors, standing mute hath always been equivalent to conviction. But upon appeals or indictments for other felonies, or petit treason, the prisoner was not, by the antient law, looked upon as convicted, so as to receive judgment for the felony; but should, for his obstinacy, have received the terrible sentence of penance or peine, (which, as was probably nothing more than a corrupted abbreviation of prisone) forte et dure.

Before this was pronounced the prisoner had not only trina admonitio, but also a respite of a few hours, and the sentence was distinctly read to him, that he might know his danger (2 Hal. P. C. 320.): and, after all, if he continued obstinate, and his offence was clergyable, he had the benefit of his clergy allowed him, even though he was too stubborn to pray it (2 Hal. P. C. 321. 2 Hawk. P. C. 332.) But if no other means could prevail, and the prisoner (when charged with a capital felony) continued stubbornly mute, the judgment was then given against him, without any distinction of sex or degree.

The English judgment of penance for standing mute was as follows: that the prisoner be remanded to the prison from whence he came; and put into a low, dark chamber; and there be laid on his back, on the bare floor, naked, unless where decency forbids; that there be placed upon his body as great a weight of iron as he could bear, and more: that he have no sustenance, save only on the first day, three morsels of the worst bread; and, on the second day, three draughts of standing water, that should be nearest to the prison door; and in this situation this should be alternately his daily diet, till he died, or (as antiently the judgment ran) till he answered (2 Hale's P. C. 319. 2 Hawk. P. C. 329. Britton. c. 4. & 22. Flet. l. 1. c. 34. s. 33.)

And it appears, by a record of 31 Edw. 3. that the prisoner might then possibly subsist for forty days under this lingering punishment (6 Raym. 13.)

The law was, that by standing mute, and suffering this heavy penance, the judgment, and of course the corruption of the blood and escheat of the lands, were saved in felony and petit treason, though not the forfeiture of goods; and therefore this lingering punishment was probably introduced, in order to extort a plea: without which it was held that no judgment of death could be given, and so the lord lost his escheat. But in high treason, as standing mute is an equivalent to a conviction, the same judgment, the same corruption of blood, and the same forfeitures always attended it, as in other cases of conviction (Year B. 8 Hen. 4. 1. 2 Hawk. P. C. 331.)

And now to the honour of our laws, it hath been enacted by statute 12 Geo. 3. c. 20. that every person who, being arraigned for felony or piracy, shall stand mute or not answer directly to the offence, shall be convicted of the same; and the same judgment and execution (with all their consequences in every respect) shall be thereupon awarded, as if the person had been convicted by verdict or confession of the crime.

However, two instances have occurred since the passing of this statute, of persons who refused to plead, and who in consequence were condemned and executed. One was at the Old Bailey, for murder, in 1777; the other was for burglary, at the summer assises at Wells, in 1792. Chris. N. on 4 Black. 329.

And to advise a prisoner to stand mute, is an high misprision, a contempt of the king's court, and punishable by fine and imprisonment. See Misprision.

MUTILATION, is the depriving a man of any member. And the law pardons even homicide, if committed se defendendo, in order to preserve even a member. 1 Black. 130. It renders void any deed executed through fear of mayhem, ibid. And among the defensive members, considered as such, by the common law, are reckoned not only arms and legs, but a finger, an eye, and a foretooth, and also some others. Fitch. L. 924. 1 Hawk. P. C. 111. The same remedial action of trespass vi et armis lies also to recover damages for this injury, an injury, (which when wilful) no motive can justify but necessary self-preservation. If the ear be cut off, treble damages are given by the stat. 37 H. 8. c. 6. though this is not mayhem or mutilation at common law. And here it may not be improperly observed, that exclusive of the civil remedy, an indictment may be brought; and frequently both are accordingly prosecuted; the one at the suit of the crown for the crime against the public; the other at the suit of the party injured, to make him a reparation in damages. 3 Black. Com. 121. See also Felony.

MUTINY ACT. An act that passes annually for the regulation of the army.

MUTUAL DEBTS. Mutual debts, though of different natures, may be set against each other. 2 Geo. 2. c. 22. 8 Geo. 2. c. 24.

MUTUAL PROMISE, is where one man promises to pay money to another, and he in consideration thereof promises to do a certain act, &c. Such promises are binding, as well on one side as the other; if both made at the same time. Hob. 88. 1 Salk. 21.

MUTUATUS. If a man oweth another 10*l.* and hath a note for the same, without seal, action of debt lies upon a mutuatus; but in this there may be a wager of law, which there may not be in an action upon the case, on an implied promise of payment, &c. Comp. Attorn. 6. 111.

MUTUO, in a legal understanding, signifies to borrow or to lend. 2 Sand. 291.

MUTUS ET MURDUS, a person dumb and deaf. 2 Cro. 105.

MYSTERY, (misterium, from the Fr. meistier, i. e. ars, artificium) an art, trade or occupation. Cowel. Blount.

N

NAB, (nappa, Swedish) to nab, or catch unexpectedly. Litt. Dict. Cowel.

NACELLA, a skiff or boat. Cowel. Blount.

NACKA, NACTA, a small ship, yacht, or transport vessel. Ibid.

NAM, or NAAM, (namium, from the Saxon niman, i. e. capere) signified the taking or distraining another man's moveable goods. Horn's Mirror, lib. 2. Spelm. Glos. Cowel. Blount.

NAMATION, (namation) a taking or distraining. Ibid.

NAME, (nomen, Fr. nomme, or nom) by which any person is known or called. See Abatement, Addition, Misnomer.

NAMIUM VETITUM, an unjust taking the cattle of another, and driving them to an unlawful place, pretending damage done by them. Cowel. Blount.

NAPPERA, (from the Ital. naperia, i. e. lintearnina domestica) linen cloth, or household linen. Ibid.

NARR, an abbreviation of narratio, used to signify a declaration in a cause. Ibid.

NARRATOR, (Lat.) a pleader or reporter: and formerly servicus narrator was a serjeant at law. Ibid.

NASSE or NESSE, (from the Sax. Næse, i. e. Promontorium) the name of the port or haven of Orford in Suffolk. Ibid.

NATALE, the state and condition of a man. Ibid.

NATHWYTE, seems to be derived from the Sax. nath, i. e. lewdness; and to signify the same with lairwite. Ibid.

NATIONAL DEBT, the money owing by government, for which it pays interest, and which forms our national funds. See Funds.

NATIVI DE STIPITE. In the survey of the duchy of Cornwall, there is mention of nativi de stipite, and nativi conventionarii; the first were villeins or boudmen, by birth or stock; the other by contract or agreement. LL. Hen. 1. cap. 76. Bract. lib. 4. c. 21, 22.

NATIVITY, (nativitas) birth, or the being born in a place. Cowel. Blount.

NATIVO HABENDO, a writ that lay to the sheriff for a lord who claimed inheritance in any villein, when his villein was run away, for the apprehending and restoring him to the lord: and the sheriff might seize the villein, and deliver him unto his lord, if he confessed his villeinage; but if he alledged that he was a freeman, then the sheriff ought not to seize him, but the lord was to sue forth a pone to remove the plea before the justices of C. B. &c. And if the villein purchased a writ de libertate probanda before the lord had taken out the pone, it was a supersedeas to the lord, that he proceeded not on the writ of nativo habendo. Reg. Orig. 7, 8. F. N. B. 77. New Nat. Brev. 171, 172.

NATIVUS. He who was born a servant, and so differed from him who suffered himself to be sold, of which servants there were three sorts, boudmen, natives, and villains. Ibid.

NATURAL AFFECTION, (naturalis affectio) is a good consideration in a deed; and if one, without expressing any consideration, covenant to stand seised to the use of his wife, child, or brother, &c. Here the naming them to be of kin, implies the consideration of natural affection, whereupon such use will arise. Cart. 138. See Consideration.

NATURAL BORN SUBJECTS, are such as are born within the dominions of the crown of England; that is, within the ligeance, or, as it is generally called, the allegiance of the king.

NATURALIZATION, (naturalizatio) is where a person who is an alien, is made the king's natural subject.

By the stat. 12 W. 3. c. 2. which was passed from a jealousy of king William's partiality to foreigners, naturalization cannot be performed but by act of parliament: for by this an alien is put in exact y the same state as if he had been born in the king's ligeance; except only that he is incapable, as well as a denizen, of being a member of the privy council, or parliament, holding offices, grants, &c. And by stat. 1 Geo. 1. c. 4. no bill for naturalization can be received in either house of parliament, without such disabling clause in it: nor by stat. 14 Geo. 3. c. 84. without a clause disabling the person from obtaining any immunity in trade thereby, in any foreign country; unless he shall have resided in Great Britain for seven years next after the commencement of the session in which he is naturalized. Neither by stat. 7 Jac. 1. c. 2. can any person be naturalized or restored in blood, unless he hath received the sacrament of the Lord's supper within one month before the bringing in of the bill; and unless he also takes the oaths of allegiance and supremacy in the presence of parliament. But these provisions have been usually dispensed with by special acts of parliament, previous to bills of naturalization of any foreign princes or princesses (stat. 4 Ann. c. 1. 7 Geo. 2. c. 3. 9 Geo. 2. c. 24. 4 Geo. 3. c. 4.)

NATURÆ PUDENDA, privities. Cowel. Blount.

NAVAGIUM, a duty incumbent on tenants to carry their lord's goods in a ship. Ibid.

NAVAL, signifies any thing belonging to the sea, or maritime affairs. Merch. Dict.

NAVAL STORES. See Stores.

NAUFRAGE, a sea term for shipwreck. Merch. Dict.

NAVIGABLE RIVERS. See Felony.

NAVIGATION, is the art of sailing at sea. And a navigator is one who understands navigation.

NAVIS ECCLESIÆ, the nave or body of the church. Cowel. Blount.

NAVIS, NAVICULA, a small dish to hold frankincense before put into the thuribulum, censer or smoking pot. Cowel. Blount.

NAVITHALAMUS, a ship or barge used for pleasure. Ibid.

NAVY, signifies the fleet or shipping of a prince or state; or an armament at sea. Ibid.

And for the regulation of the British navy, the stat. 22 Geo. 2, c. 33, contains the articles and orders following:

1. Officers are to cause public worship, according to the liturgy of the church of England, to be solemnly performed in their ships, and take care that prayers and preaching by the chaplains be performed diligently, and that the Lord's day be observed.

2. Persons guilty of profane oaths, cursing, drunkenness, uncleanness, &c. to be punished as a court-martial shall think fit.

3. If any person shall give or hold intelligence to or with an enemy without leave, he shall suffer death.

4. If any letter or message from an enemy be conveyed to any in the fleet, and he shall not in 12 hours acquaint his superior officer with it, or if the superior officer, being acquainted therewith, shall not reveal it to the commander in chief, the offender shall suffer death, or such punishment as a court-martial shall impose.

5. Spies and persons endeavouring to corrupt any one in the fleet shall suffer death, or such punishment as a court-martial shall impose.

6. No person shall relieve an enemy with money, victuals, or ammunition, on like penalty.

7. All papers taken on board a prize shall be sent to the court of Admiralty, &c. on penalty of forfeiting the share of the prize, and such punishment as a court-martial shall impose.

8. No person shall take out of any prize any money or goods, unless for better securing the same, or for the necessary use of any of his majesty's ships, before the prize shall be condemned, upon penalty of forfeiting his share, and such punishment as shall be imposed by a court-martial.

9. No person on board a prize shall be stripped of his clothes, pillaged, beaten, or ill treated, upon pain of such punishment as a court-martial shall impose.

10. Every commander, who upon signal or order of fight, or sight of any ship which it may be his duty to engage, or who upon likelihood of engagement shall not make necessary preparations for fight, and encourage the inferior officers and men to fight, shall suffer death, or such punishment as a court-martial shall deem him to deserve. And if any person shall treacherously or cowardly yield or cry for quarter, he shall suffer death.

11. Every person who shall not obey the orders of his superior officer in time of action, to the best of his power, shall suffer death, or such punishment as a court-martial shall deem him to deserve.

12. Every person who in time of action shall withdraw or keep back, or not come into the fight, or do his utmost to take or destroy any ship which it shall be his duty to engage, and to assist every ship of his majesty or his allies, which it shall be his duty to assist, shall suffer death, or such punishment as a court-martial shall deem him to deserve. 19 Geo. 3, c. 17.

13. Every person who through cowardice, &c. shall forbear to pursue the chase of any enemy, &c. or shall not assist or relieve a known friend in view to the utmost of his power, shall suffer death, or such punishment as a court-martial shall deem him to deserve. Ibid.

14. If any person shall delay or discourage any action or service commanded, upon pretence of arrears of wages, or otherwise, he shall suffer death, or such punishment as a court-martial shall deem him to deserve.

15. Every person who shall desert to the enemy, or run away with any ship, ordnance, &c. to the weakening of the service, or yield up the same cowardly or treacherously to the enemy, shall suffer death.

16. Every person who shall desert, or entice others so to do, shall suffer death, or such punishment as a court-martial shall think fit. If any commanding officer shall receive a deserter, after discovering him to be such, and shall not with speed give notice to the captain of the ship to which he belongs, or if the ship is at a considerable distance, to the secretary of the admiralty, or commander in chief, he shall be cashiered.

17. Officers and seamen of ships appointed for convoy of merchants ships, or of any other, shall diligently attend upon that charge according to their instructions; and whosoever shall not faithfully perform their duty, and defend the ships in their convoy, or refuse to fight in their defence, or run away cowardly, and submit the ships in their convoy to hazard, or exact any reward for convoying any ship, or misuse the master or mariners, shall make reparation of damages, as the court of admiralty shall adjudge; and be punished criminally by death, or other punishment, as shall be adjudged by a court martial.

18. If any officer shall receive or permit to be received on board any goods or merchandise, other than for the sole use of the ship, except gold, silver, or jewels, and except goods belonging to any ship which may be shipwrecked, or in danger thereof, in order to the preserving them for the owners, and except goods ordered to be received by the lord high admiral, &c. he shall be cashiered, and rendered incapable of further service.

19. Any person making or endeavouring to make any mutinous assembly shall suffer death. Any person uttering words of sedition or mutiny shall suffer death, or such punishment as a court-martial shall deem him to deserve. If any officer, mariner, or soldier, in or belonging to the fleet, shall behave himself with contempt to his superior officer, being in the execution of his office, he shall be punished according to the nature of his offence by the judgment of a court-martial.

20. Any person concealing any traitorous or mutinous practice or design, shall suffer death, or such punishment as a court martial shall think fit. Any person concealing any traitorous or mutinous words, or any words, practice, or design, tending to the hinderance of the service, and not forthwith revealing the same to the commanding officer, or being present at any mutiny or sedition, shall not use his utmost endeavours to suppress the same, shall be punished as a court-martial shall think he deserves.

21. Any person finding cause of complaint of the unwholesomeness of victuals, or upon other just ground, he shall quietly make the same known to his superior, who, as far as he is able, shall cause the same to be presently remedied; and no person upon any such or other pretence shall attempt to stir up any disturbance, upon pain of such punishment as a court-martial shall think fit to inflict.

22. Any person striking any his superior officer, or drawing or offering to draw or lift up any weapon against him, being in the execution of his office, shall suffer death. And any person presuming to quarrel with any his superior officer, being in the execution of his office, or disobeying any lawful command of any his superior officer, shall suffer death, or such other punishment as shall be inflicted upon him by a court-martial.

23. Any person quarrelling or fighting with any other person in the fleet, or using reproachful or provoking speeches or gestures, shall suffer such punishment as a court-martial shall impose.

24. There shall be no wasteful expense or embezzlement of any powder, shot, &c. upon penalty of such punishment as by a court-martial shall be found just.

25. Every person burning or setting fire to any magazine, or store of powder, shot, &c. or furniture thereunto belonging, not then appertaining to an enemy, shall suffer death.

26. Care is to be taken that through wilfulness or negligence no ship be stranded, run upon the rocks or sands, or split or hazarded, upon pain of death, or such punishment as a court-martial shall deem the offence to deserve.

27. No person shall sleep upon his watch, or negligently perform his duty, or forsake his station, upon pain of death, or such punishment as, &c.

28. Murder,

29. And buggery or sodomy, shall be punished with death.

30. Robbery shall be punished with death, or otherwise as a court-martial shall find meet.

31. Every person knowingly making or signing, or commanding, counselling, or procuring the making or signing, any false muster, shall be cashiered, and rendered incapable of further employment.

32. Provost-marshal refusing to apprehend or receive any criminal, or suffering him to escape, shall suffer such punishment as a court-martial shall deem him to deserve. And all others shall do their endeavours to detect and apprehend all offenders, upon pain of being punished by a court-martial.

33. If any flag-officer, captain, commander or lieutenant, shall behave in a scandalous, infamous, cruel, oppressive, or fraudulent manner, unbecoming his character, he shall be dismissed.

34. Every person in actual service and full pay guilty of mutiny, desertion, or disobedience, in any part of his majesty's dominions on shore, when in actual service relative to the fleet, shall be liable to be tried by a court-martial, and suffer the like punishment as if the offence had been committed at sea.

35. Every person in actual service and full pay committing upon shore, in any place out of his majesty's dominions, any crime punishable by these articles, shall be liable to be tried and punished as if the crime had been committed at sea.

36. All other crimes not capital, not mentioned in this act, shall be punished according to the laws and customs used at sea.

No person to be imprisoned for longer than two years.—Courts-martial not to try any offence (except the 5th, 34th, and 35th articles) not committed upon the main sea, or in great rivers beneath the bridges, or in any haven, &c. within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty, or by persons in actual service and full pay, except such persons and offences as in the 5th article—nor to try a land-officer or soldier on board a transport ship.

The lord high admiral, &c. may grant commissions to any officer commanding in chief any fleet, &c. to call courts-martial, consisting of commanders and captains. And if the commander in chief shall die, or be removed, the officer next in command may call courts-martial. No commander in chief of a fleet, &c. of more than five ships, shall preside at an court-martial in foreign parts, but the officer next in command shall preside.

If a commander in chief shall detach any part of his fleet, &c. he may empower the chief commander of the detachment to hold courts-martial during the separate service.

If five or more ships shall meet in foreign parts, the senior officer may hold courts-martial, and preside thereat.

Where it is improper for the officer next to the commander in chief to hold or preside at a court-martial, the third officer in command may be empowered to preside at or hold a court-martial.

No court martial shall consist of more than thirteen, nor less than five, persons.

Where there shall not be less than three, and yet not so many as five of the degree of a port captain or superior rank, the officer who is to preside may call to his assistance as many commanders under the degree of a port captain, as, together with the port captains, shall make up the number of five, to hold the court martial.

After trial begun, no member of a court martial shall go on shore, until sentence, except in case of sickness, upon pain of being cashiered.

Proceedings shall not be delayed, if a sufficient number remain to compose the court, which shall sit from day to day (except Sunday) till sentence be given.

Nor shall the proceedings of courts martial be delayed by the absence of any members, if enough remain to make a court, but no member shall be absent except on some extraordinary occasion. 19 Geo. 3. c. 17. s. 1, 2.

The judge advocate and all officers constituting a court martial shall be upon oath.

Persons refusing to give evidence may be imprisoned.

Sentence of death within the Narrow Seas (except in case of mutiny) shall not be put in execution till a report be made to the lord high admiral, &c.

Sentence of death beyond the Narrow Seas, shall not be put in execution but by order of the commander-in-chief of the fleet, &c.

Sentence of death in any squadron, detached from the fleet, shall not be put in execution (except in case of mutiny) but by order of the commander of the fleet, or lord high admiral, &c.

And sentence of death passed in a court martial, held by the senior officer of five or more ships met in foreign parts (except in case of mutiny) shall not be put in execution but by order of the lord high admiral, &c.

The powers given by the said articles shall remain in force with respect to crews of ships wrecked, lost, or destroyed, until they be discharged or removed into another ship, or a court martial shall be held to inquire of the causes of the loss of the ship. And if upon inquiry it shall appear, that all or any of the officers and seamen did their utmost to save the ship, and behaved obediently to their superior officers, their pay shall go on: as also shall the pay of officers and seamen taken by the enemy, having done their best to defend the ship, and behaved obediently. If any officer shall receive any goods on board, contrary to the 18th article, he shall further forfeit the value of such goods, or 500*l.* at the election of the informer; one moiety to the informer, the other to Greenwich Hospital.

NE ADMITTAS, a writ directed to the bishop for the plaintiff or defendant, where a quare impedit or assise of darrein presentment is depending, when either party fears that the bishop will admit the other's clerk during the suit between them: it ought to be brought within six calendar months after the avoidance, before the bishop may present by lapse; for it is in vain to sue out this writ when the title to present is devolved unto the bishop. Reg. Orig. 31. F. N. B. 37.

NEAT, or NET, the weight of a pure commodity alone, without the cask, bag, dross, &c. Merch. Dict.

NECESSITY. The law charges no man with default where the act is compulsory, and not voluntary, and where there is not a consent and election; therefore if there be an impossibility for a man to do otherwise, or so great a perturbation of the judgment and reason, as in presumption of law he cannot overcome, such necessity carries a privilege in itself. Bac. Elem. 25. See Homicide.

NE EXEAT REGNO, is a writ to restrain a person from going out of the kingdom without the king's licence. F. N. B. 85. It may be directed to the sheriff to make the party find surety, that he will not depart the realm; and on his refusal, to commit him to prison: or it may be directed to the party himself; and if he then goes, he may be fined. 2 Inst. 178. And this writ is granted on a suit being commenced in chancery, when the plaintiff fears the defendant will fly to some other country, and thereby avoid the equity of the court; which hath been sometimes practised: when thus granted, the party must give bond to the master of the rolls in the penalty of 1000*l.* or some other large sum, for yielding obedience to it; or satisfy the court by answer, affidavit, or otherwise, that he hath no design of leaving the kingdom, and give security therefore.

But from the court of exchequer, no such writ issues, but only an order in the nature of the writ ne exeat regno.

NEGATIVE, is a proposition by which something is denied. Plowd. 206. b. 207. a.

A negative cannot be proved or testified by witnesses, only an affirmative. 2 Inst. 664. But though a negative is incapable of being proved directly, yet indirectly it is otherwise: for in case one accuses B. to have been at York, and there had committed a certain fact, in proof of which he produces several witnesses; here B. cannot prove that he was not at York, against positive evidence that he was; but shall be allowed to make out the negative by collateral testimony, that at that very time he was at Exeter, &c. in such a house and in such company. Fortescue 37.

NEGATIVE PREGNANT, (negativa preg- mans) is a negative, implying also an affirmative: as if a man being impleaded to have done a thing on such a day, or in such a place, denieth that he did it modo & forma declarata, which implieth nevertheless, that in some sort he did it. Dyer 17. num. 95. and Brook hoc titulo, and Kitchen 232. and Terms of the Law.

A negative pregnant is a fault in pleading; and there must be a special demurrer to a negative pregnant plea, &c. for the court will intend every pleading to be good, till the contrary doth appear. 2 Leon. 248. *Bro. NEGGILDARE, signifies to claim kindred.

NEGLIGENCE, is where a person neglects or omits to do a thing which he is by law obliged to. And where one has goods of another to keep till such a time, and hath a certain recompence or reward for the keeping, he shall stand charged for injury by negligence, &c. But if he hath nothing for keeping them, he is not bound to answer. Doct. & Stud. 269. A man who finds another's goods, if they are after hurt by wilful negligence, it is held he is chargeable to the owner; though it is otherwise when they are lost by casualty, as in case they are laid in a house that is accidentally burnt, or if he deliver them to another to keep, who runs away with them, &c. Ibid. It is held if an accountant be robbed, and it is without his default and negligence, he shall not be answerable for the money. 1 Inst. 89. A right may be lost by negligence; as where an action is not brought in the time appointed by the statute of limitations, &c. 21 Jac. 1. c. 16. 2 William's Rep. 665. Cowper v. *Earl Cowper. NEW ASSIGNMENT. In many actions the plaintiff, who hath alleged in his declaration a general wrong, may in his replication, after an evasive plea by the defendant, reduce that general wrong to a more particular certainty, by assigning the injury afresh with all its specific circumstances in such manner as clearly to ascertain and identify it, consistently with his general complaint; which is called a new or novel assignment. 3 Black. 310, 311.

NEWS. Persons reporting false news or tales, are punishable by statute 3 Ed. 1. c. 34. See Scan. Mag. 4 Black. 149.

NEWSPAPERS. By 38 Geo. 3. c. 78. no person shall print or publish a newspaper until an affidavit be delivered at the stamp office, specifying the names and abode of the printer, publisher, and the proprietors, if they do not exceed two, exclusive of the printer and publisher; and if they do, then of two proprietors and their proportional shares; and the description of the printing-house and title of the paper: and where the proprietors exceed two, the names of the two of the greatest proprietors, exclusive of the printer and publisher, shall be specified in the affidavit. s. 1—3.

An affidavit is to be made as often as the printers, publishers, or proprietors, named therein, or their respective abodes, shall be changed, or as often as the commissioners for stamps shall require. s. 4.

The affidavit shall be signed by the parties, and taken by a commissioner or officer specially appointed. s. 5.

Where the printers, publishers, and proprietors, required to be named in the affidavit, do not exceed four, the whole shall swear; and when they do not exceed that number, four are to swear and give notice to the parties not swearing, on pain of 50*l.* each. s. 6.

Persons printing, publishing, or vending a newspaper without such an affidavit, shall forfeit 100*l.*; and persons making false or imperfect affidavits, are liable to the penalties of perjury. s. 7, 8.

The affidavits are to be filed; and they, or certified copies, are to be admitted in all proceedings, civil or criminal, as evidence of the truth of their contents, against the persons swearing, and all mentioned therein, unless proved to the contrary; but if any person shall have delivered, previous to the publication of the paper to which the proceedings relate, an affidavit that he has ceased to be the printer, publisher, or proprietor, he shall not be so deemed after the delivery. s. 9.

In newspapers there shall be printed the names and abode of printers and publishers, on pain of 100*l.*; and proof, as before mentioned, that the party is the printer of the newspaper shall be sufficient, unless proved to the contrary. s. 10.

After production of the affidavit, or copy, and a paper entituled as therein mentioned, it shall not be necessary for a prosecutor for penalties under this act to prove the purchase of the paper. s. 11.

Service at the printing-house mentioned in the affidavit, shall be sufficient notice to all persons named therein; but if any person shall have delivered, previous to the publication of the party to which the proceedings relate, an affidavit that he has ceased to be printer, publisher, or proprietor, he shall be not so deemed after such delivery. s. 12.

Certified copies of such affidavits are to be delivered from the stamp office on payment of 1*s.* s. 13.

And copies of affidavits, so certified by the commissioners, or officers in whose custody they shall be, are to be sufficient evidence. s. 14.

Unauthorized persons giving certificates, forfeit 100*l.* s. 15.

Persons falsely certifying that affidavits were sworn to, or that false copies are true, shall forfeit 100*l.* s. 16.

A copy of every newspaper shall be delivered within six days of its publication to the commissioners of stamps, or their officer, on penalty of 100*l.* which paper is to be paid for by the commissioners, and may, within two years after publication, be produced as evidence in any proceeding, civil or criminal. s. 17.

Persons printing or publishing newspapers not duly stamped, are to forfeit 20*l.*; and persons taking or receiving a newspaper not duly stamped, are also to forfeit 20*l.* s. 18, 19.

Persons sending or procuring newspapers to be sent out of Great Britain, not duly stamped, forfeit 100*l.* s. 20.

The names and abode of proprietors out of Great Britain are to be specified in affidavits. s. 23.

Persons printing or publishing any seditious matter, under colour of its having been printed in a foreign paper, on conviction, shall be committed to prison for not exceeding twelve, nor less than six, months, and also subject to other punishment as for a high misdemeanor; and proof of its having been so previously printed is to lie on the defendant. s. 22.

And if such proof be made, the publication is to be deemed of the same nature as it would have been before this act. s. 25.

None but the commissioners of stamps, or their officer, shall supply paper stamped for printing newspapers, until the person so supplying has given security to deliver, once in six weeks, an account of the quantities and kind sold, on penalty of 100*l.* s. 26.

Persons concerned in printing or publishing newspapers, not legally stamped, are to be debtors to his majesty in the sum that would have accrued if duly stamped. s. 27.

To bills for the discovery of proprietors, printers, editors, or publishers, of newspapers, the defendants shall not demur, but shall make the discovery requisite. s. 28.

Penalties exceeding 20*l.* (except where otherwise provided) may be recovered in any court of record; and not exceeding 20*l.* before one justice, by distress, and in default the party may be committed for three months. s. 29—31.

NEW STILE. See Calendar.

NEW TRIAL. Judgments in civil cases, are often suspended by granting new trials. The causes of suspending the judgment by granting a new trial, are at present wholly extrinsic, arising from matter foreign to, or dehors the record. 3 Black. 387.

Of this sort are want of notice of trial; or any flagrant misbehaviour of the party prevailing towards the jury, which may have influenced their verdict; or any gross misbehaviour of the jury among themselves: also if it appears by the judge's report, certified to the court, that the jury have brought in a verdict without or contrary to evidence, so that he is reasonably dissatisfied therewith (Law of Nisi Prius, 303, 4.); or if they had given exorbitant damages; or if the judge himself has mis-directed the jury, so that they found an unjustifiable verdict; for these and other reasons of the like kind, it is the practice of the court to award a new, or second trial (Comb. 357.) But if two juries agree in the same or a similar verdict a third trial is seldom awarded: for the law will not readily suppose, that the verdict of any one subsequent jury can countervail the oaths of two preceding ones (6 Mod. 22. Salk. 649.)

NICOL, anciently used for Lincoln. Cowel.

NIDERLING, NIDERING, or NITHING, a vile base person, a sluggard. Ibid.

NIENT COMPRISE, an exception taken to a petition, because the thing desired was not contained in that deed or proceeding whereon the petition was founded: for example; one desires of the court wherein a recovery is had of lands, &c. to be put in possession of a house, formerly among the lands adjudged unto him; to which the adverse party pleads, that this is not to be granted, by reason this house is not comprised amongst the lands and houses for which he had judgment. New Book Entries.

NIENT CULPABLE, (non culpabilis) the plea of not guilty.

NIENT DEDIRE, to suffer judgment by default. Cowel.

NIGHT, is when it is so dark, that the countenance of a man cannot be discerned. And what is reckoned night, and what day, for the purpose of convicting a man of burglary, is as follows: anciently the day was accounted to begin only at sun-rising, and to end immediately at sun-set; but the better opinion seems to be, that if there be daylight or crepusculum enough, begun or left, to discern a man's face withal, it is no burglary. But this does not extend to moonlight; for then many midnight burglaries would go unpunished: and besides, the malignity of the offence does not so properly arise from its being done in the dark, as at the dead of night; when all the creation, except beasts of prey, are at rest; when sleep has disarmed the owner, and rendered his castle defenceless. 3 Inst. 63. 1 Hal. P. C. 350. 1 Hawk. P. C. 101. 4 Black. 224.

NIGHTWALKERS, are such persons as sleep by day and walk by night, being oftentimes pilferers, or disturbers of the peace. 5 Ed. 3. c. 14. Constables are authorized by the common law to arrest nightwalkers and suspicious persons, &c. Watchmen may also arrest nightwalkers, and hold them until the morning: and it is said, that a private person may arrest any suspicious nightwalker, and detain him till he give a good account of himself. 2 Hawk. P. C. 61, 80. One may be bound to good behaviour for being a nightwalker; and common nightwalkers and haunters of bawdy-houses are to be indicted before justices of peace, &c. 1 Hawk. 132. 2 Hawk. 40. Latch. 173. Poph. 290. But it is held not lawful for a constable, &c. to take up any woman as a nightwalker, on bare suspicion only of being of ill fame; unless she be guilty of a breach of the peace, or some unlawful act, and ought to be found misdoing. Holt's MS. See 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 89. 2 Black. 289.

NIHIL CAPIAT PER BREVE, or per billam, is the judgment given against the plaintiff in an action, either in bar of his action, or in abatement of his writ or bill, &c. Co. Lit. 363.

NIHIL, or NIL DEBET, is a common plea to an action of debt upon simple contract: but it is no plea in covenant or upon any specialty, for then the proper plea is non est factum; and if a defendant does not observe this distinction in pleading, his plea may be demurred to. 3 Lev. 170.

NIHIL, or NIL DICIT, is a failing by the defendant to put in an answer to the plaintiff's plea by the day assigned; which being omitted, judgment is had against him of course, as saying nothing, why it should not.

NIHIL, or NIL HABUIT IN TENEMENTIS, the plea of nil habuit in tenementis, is an estoppel; and the plaintiff cannot reply generally quod habuit in tenementis, &c. that for the replication he ought to shew what estate he had; but after verdict, it is good. Cro. Jac. 312.

NIHILS, or NICHILS, are issues which the sheriff that is opposed in the exchequer says, are nothing worth, and illeviable, for the insufficiency of the parties from whom due. Practic. Excheq. pag. 101. Accounts of nihil shall be put out of the exchequer. Stat. 5 R. 2. c. 13.

NISI PRIUS, is a commission to justices of nisi prius; so called from a judicial writ of distringas; whereby the sheriff is commanded to distrain the impannelled jury to appear at Westminster before the justices at a certain day in the following term, to try some cause, nisi prius justic' domini regis ad assises capiend. venerint, viz., unless the justices come before that day to such a place, &c. 2 Inst. 424. 4 Inst. 159.

NIVICOLINI BRITONES, is used for Welshmen; because in Carmarthenshire and other northern counties of Wales, they lived near high mountains covered with snow. Cowel. Blount.

NOBILITY, (nobilitas) signifies a nobleness of birth, generosity or greatness of mind, excellence of virtue: but nobility as here understood, compriseth all degrees of dignity above a baronet; and is derived from the king, who may grant it in fee, or for life. 1 Black. 157, 396.

NOBLE, an ancient kind of English money, in use in the reign of Ed. 3. of six shillings and eightpence value, or a third part of twenty shillings. Merch. Dict.

NOCTANTER, was the name of a writ, issuing out of chancery, returnable in the king's bench, given by statute Westm. 2. 13 Ed. 2. c. 46. By virtue of which statute, where any one having right to approve waste ground, &c. makes and erects a ditch or an hedge, and it is thrown down in the night time, and it cannot be known by a verdict of assise or a jury, by whom; or, if the neighbouring vills will not indict such as are guilty, they shall be distrained to make again the hedge or ditch at their own costs, and to answer damages. 2 Inst. 476.

The word noctanter is also necessary in an indictment of burglary, and it is insufficient without it. Cro. Eliz. 483. See Trespass.

NOCTES ET NOCTEM DE FIRMA. Tot noctes de firma, or firma tot noctium; or entertainment of meat and drink for so many nights. Cowel. Blount.

NODFYRS or NEDFRI, (Sax. need, obsequium & fry, ignis) signified fires made in honour of the heathen deities. It is also said to come from the Saxon neb, that is necessary; and was used for the necessary fire. Cowel Blount,

NOLLE PROSEQUI, is where a plaintiff in any action will proceed no further, and may be before or after verdict; though it is usually before: and it is then stronger against the plaintiff than a nonsuit, which is only a default in appearance; but this is a voluntary acknowledgment, that he hath no cause of action. 2 Ld. 218. 8 Rep. 58. Cro. Jac. 439. Hob. 180.

But a nolle prosequi does not amount to a retraxit or release, where there are more defendants. Ld. Raym. 599.

The king may also enter a nolle prosequi on an information; but it shall not stop the proceedings of the informer. 1 Leon. 119. And if an informer cause a nolle prosequi to be entered, the defendant shall have costs, &c. by stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 18. Also the king may, by his attorney-general, enter a nolle prosequi on an indictment.

But the clerk of the crown cannot enter a nolle prosequi on an indictment, without leave of the attorney-general. Ld. Raym. 721.

NOMENCLATOR, one who opens the etymologies of names, interpreted Thesaurarius by Spelman. Cowel.

NOMINATION, (nominatio) is the power (by virtue of some manor or otherwise) of appointing a clerk to a patron of a benefice, by him to be presented to the ordinary. And the person who hath the nomination is in effect the patron of the church. Plowd. 529. Mon 47.

NOMINA VILLARUM. Edward II. sent his letters to every sheriff in England, requiring an exact account and return into the exchequer of the names of all the villages, and possessors thereof in every county, which being done accordingly, the returns of the sheriffs all joined together are called nomina villarum, still remaining in the exchequer. Anno 9 Ed. 2.

NOMINE PŒNÆ. If rent is reserved by the lease or agreement in writing, with a penalty, that is a nomine pœnæ on the non-payment of it at a certain day, and the rent be behind and unpaid, there must be an actual demand thereof made, before the grantee of the rent can distrain for it; the nomine pœnæ being of the same nature as the rent, and issuing out of the land out of which the rent doth issue. Hob. 82, 133. 2 Nels. Abr. 1182.

And when any sum nomine pœnæ is to be forfeited for non-payment of rent at the time, &c. the demand of the rent ought to be precisely at the day, in respect of the penalty: and debt will not lie on a nomine pœnæ, without a demand. 7 Rep. 28. Cro. Eliz. 383. Style 4. Lutw. 1156.

NON-ABILITY, is an exception taken against the plaintiff in a cause, upon some just ground, why he cannot commence any suit in law; as præmunire, outlawry, excommunication, &c. F. N. B. 35, 65. See Abatement.

NONÆ ET DECIMÆ, payments made to the church by those who were tenants of church farms. Blount.

NON-AGE, in general understanding is all the time of a person's being under the age of one-and-twenty. See Age.

NON-ASSUMPSIT, a plea in personal actions, whereby a man denies any promise made, &c. See Assumpsit.

NON ASSUMPSIT INFRA SEX ANNOS, is a plea where a defendant by virtue of the statute of limitations, 21 Jac. 1. c. 16. pleads that he did not undertake or promise within six years before the commencement of the action: which is the actual taking out of the plaintiff's writ. And the computation is to be made up to that day, though in vacation, and not to the teste of the writ.

NON-CLAIM, is an omission or neglect of one that claims not within the time limited by law, as within a year and a day, where continual claim ought to be made; or in five years after a fine levied, &c. By which a man may be barred of his right of entry. Stat. 4 H. 7. c. 24. 32 H. 8. c. 33.

NON COMPOS MENTIS, is where a person is not of sound mind, memory, and understanding. See Ideots and Lunatics.

NON-CONFORMISTS. Non-conformists are of two sorts. I. Such as absent themselves from divine worship in the established church, through total irreligion, and attend the service of no other persuasion. These by the statutes of 1 Eliz. c. 2. 23 Eliz. c. 1. and 3 Jac. 1. c. 4. forfeit one shilling to the poor every Lord's day they so absent themselves, and 20*l.* to the king if they continue such default for a month together. And if they keep any inmate, thus irreligiously disposed, in their houses, they forfeit 10*l.* per month.—II. The second species of non-conformists are those who offend through a mistaken or perverse zeal. Such were esteemed by our laws, enacted since the time of the reformation, to be papists and protestant dissenters: both of which were supposed to be equally schismatics in not communicating with the national church; with this difference, that the papists divided from it upon material, though erroneous, reasons; but many of the dissenters upon matters of indifference, or, in other words, upon no reason at all. Yet certainly our ancestors were mistaken in their plans of compulsion and intolerance. The sin of schism, as such, is by no means the object of temporal coercion and punishment. If through weakness of intellect, through misdirected piety, through perverseness and acerbity of temper, or (which is often the case) through a prospect of secular advantage in herding with a party, men quarrel with the ecclesiastical establishment, the civil magistrate has nothing to do with it; unless their tenets and practice are such as threaten ruin or disturbance to the state. He is bound indeed to protect the established church: and, if this can be better effected, by admitting none but its genuine members to offices of trust and emolument, he is certainly at liberty so to do; the disposal of offices being matter of favour and discretion. But, this point being once secured, all persecution for diversity of opinions, however ridiculous or absurd they may be, is contrary to every principle of sound policy and civil freedom. The names and subordination of the clergy, the posture of devotion, the materials and colour of the minister's garment, the joining in a known or an unknown form of prayer, and other matters of the same kind, must be left to the option of every man's private judgment. 4 Black. 52.

With regard therefore to protestant dissenters, although the experience of their turbulent disposition in former times occasioned several disabilities and restrictions to be laid upon them by abundance of statutes (23 Eliz. c. 1. 29 Eliz. c. 6. 35 Eliz. c. 1. 22 Car. 2. c. 1.), yet at length the legislature, with a spirit of true magnanimity, extended that indulgence to these sectaries, which they themselves, when in power, had held to be countenancing schism, and denied to the church of England. (The ordinance of 1645 inflicted imprisonment for a year on the third offence, and pecuniary penalties on the former two, in case of using the book of common prayer not only in a place of public worship, but also in any private family.) The penalties are conditionally suspended by the statute 1 W. & M. st. 1. c. 18. "for exempting their majesties' "protestant subjects, dissenting from the "church of England, from the penalties of "certain laws," commonly called the toleration act; which is confirmed by statute 10 Ann. c. 2. and declares that neither the laws above-mentioned, nor the statutes 1 Eliz. c. 2. s. 14. 3 Jac. 1. c. 4, 5. nor any other penal laws made against popish recusants (except the test acts) shall extend to any dissenters, other than papists and such as deny the trinity: provided, 1 that they take the oaths of allegiance and supremacy (or make a similar affirmation, being quakers, stat. 8 Geo. 1. c. 6.) and subscribe the declaration against popery; 2. that they repair to some congregation certified to and registered in the court of the bishop or archdeacon, or at the county sessions; 3. that the doors of such meeting-house shall be unlocked, unbarred, and unbolted; in default of which the persons meeting there are still liable to all the penalties of the former acts. Dissenting teachers, in order to be exempted from the penalties of the statutes 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 4. 15 Car. 2. c. 6. 17 Car. 2. c. 2. and 22 Car. 2. c. 1. are also to subscribe the articles of religion mentioned in the statute 13 Eliz. c. 12. (which only concern the confession of the true christian faith, and the doctrine of the sacraments) with an express exception of those relating to the government and powers of the church, and to infant baptism; or if they scruple subscribing the same, shall make and subscribe the declaration prescribed by statute 19 Geo. 2. c. 44. professing themselves to be christians and protestants, and that they believe the scriptures to contain the revealed will of God, and to be the rule of doctrine and practice. Thus, though the crime of non-conformity is by no means universally abrogated, it is suspended and ceases to exist with regard to these protestant dissenters, during their compliance with the conditions imposed by these acts; and, under these conditions, all persons, who will approve themselves no papists or oppugners of the trinity, are left at full liberty to act as their consciences shall direct them, in the matter of religious worship. And if any person shall wilfully, maliciously, or contemptuously disturb any congregation, assembled in any church or permitted meeting-house, or shall misuse any preacher or teacher there, he shall (by virtue of the same statute 1 W. & M.) be bound over to the sessions of the peace, and forfeit twenty pounds. But by statute 5 Geo. 1. c. 4. no mayor or principal magistrate, must appear at any dissenting meeting with the ensigns of his office, on pain of disability to hold that or any other office: the legislature judging it a matter of propriety, that a mode of worship, set up in opposition to the national, when allowed to be exercised in peace, should be exercised also with decency, gratitude, and humility. Dissenters also who subscribe the declaration of the act 19 Geo. 3. are excepted, (unless in the case of endowed schools and colleges) from the penalties of the statutes 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 4. and 17 Car. 1. c. 2. which prohibit upon pain of fine and imprisonment all persons from teaching school unless they are licensed by the ordinary, and subscribe a declaration of conformity to the liturgy of the church, and reverently frequent divine service established by the laws of the kingdom. See also Papists.

NON CULPABILIS, the plea of not guilty to any action of trespass, or tort, or to an indictment, &c.

NON DAMNIFICATUS, is a plea to an action of debt upon a bond, with condition to save the plaintiff harmless. 2 Lil. Abr. 224.

NON DECIMANDO. A custom or prescription: de non decimando is to be discharged of all tithes, &c. See Modus Decimandi.

NON DISTRINGENDO, a writ not to distrain. Cowel. Blount.

NONES, (nonæ) of every month is, the seventh day of March, May, July, and October; and the fifth day of all the other month. Ibid. See Ides.

NON EST CULPABILIS, or non cul. is the general plea to an action of trespass, whereby the defendant absolutely denies the fact charged on him by the plaintiff. And as the plea of non culp. is the general answer in actions of trespass, being actions criminal, civilly prosecuted; so it is likewise in all actions criminally followed, either at the suit of the king or any other, where the defendant denies the crime for which he is brought to trial. S. P. C. lib. 2. c. 63.

NON EST FACTUM, a plea where an action is brought upon a bond, or any other deed, and the defendant denieth that to be his deed whereon he is impleaded. Broke. See Nil Debet.

NON EST INVENTUS, the sheriff's return to a writ, when the defendant is not to be found in his bailiwick. Shep. Epit. 1129.

NONFEASANCE. An offence of omission of what ought to be done; as in not coming to church, &c. But nonfeasance will not make a man a trespasser, &c. 1 Hawk. 13. Hob. 251. 8 Rep. 146.

NON IMPLACITANDO ALIQUEM DE LIBERO TENEMENTO SINE BREVI, a writ to prohibit bailiffs, &c. from distraining or impleading any man touching his freehold, without the king's writ. Reg. Orig. 171.

NON INTROMITTENDO, QUANDO BREVE PRÆCIPE IN CAPITE SUBDOLE IMPETRATUR, was a writ directed to the justices of the bench, or in eyre, commanding them not to give one, who had, under colour of intitling the king to land, &c. as holding of him in capite, deceitfully obtained the writ called præcipe in capite, any benefit thereof, but to put him to his writ of right. Reg. Orig. 4.

NONJURORS, are persons who refuse to take the oaths to government, who are liable to certain penalties. See stat. 1 Geo. 1. c. 55. and Oaths.

NON MERCHANDIZANDO VICTUALI, a writ to justices of assise to inquire whether the magistrates of such a town sold victuals in gross, or by retail, during the time of their being in office, which was contrary to an ancient statute; and to punish them if they did. Reg. Orig. 184.

NON MOLESTANDO, a writ that lies for a person who is molested contrary to the king's protection granted him. Reg. of Writs 184.

NON OBSTANTE, (notwithstanding) was a clause frequent in statutes and letters patent, and was a licence from the king to do a thing which at the common law might be lawfully done; but being restrained by act of parliament, could not be done without such licence. Vaugh. 347. Plowd. 501.

But the doctrine of non obstante's, which sets the prerogative above the laws, was effectually demolished by the bill of rights at the revolution, and abdicated at Westminster-hall when king James abdicated the kingdom. 1 Black. 342.

NON OMITTAS, is a writ directed to the sheriff, where the bailiff of a liberty or franchise hath the return of writs within his sheriffwick, for the sheriff to enter into the franchise and execute the king's process himself, or by his officer. F. N. B. 68, 74. 2 Inst. 453.

NON PLEVIN, (non plevina) is defined to be defalta post defaltam; but by stat. 9 Ed. 3. c. 2. it was enacted, that none should lose his land, because of non-plevin, i. e. where the land was not replevied in due time.

NON PONENDIS IN ASSISIS ET JURATIS, a writ granted for freeing and discharging persons from serving on assises and juries; and when one had a charter of exemption, he might sue the sheriff for returning him. 2 Inst 127, 447. Comel. Bivant.

NON PROCEDENDO AD ASSISAM REGE INCONSULTO, a writ to stop the trial of a cause appertaining to one who is in the king's service, &c. until the king's pleasure be farther known. Reg. Orig. 220.

NON PROS, or NON PROSEQUITUR. If a plaintiff in an action, doth not declare against the defendant within reasonable time, a rule may be entered against him by the defendant's attorney to declare; and thereupon a non pros, &c. Practic. Solic. 232. See Nolle Prosequi, and Nonsuit.

NON RESIDENCE, is applied to those spiritual persons who are not resident, but wilfully absent themselves.

And by 43 Geo. 3. c. 84. and 43 Geo. 3. c. 109. every spiritual person who shall, without such sufficient cause as by 21 Hen. 8. 13. 25 Hen. 8. c. 16. 28 Hen. 8. c. 13. and 33 Hen. 8. c. 28. would exempt such spiritual person from the pains for non-residence, and who shall not have a licence for the purpose, according to this act, wilfully absent himself for three months together in one year, and reside at any other place, except at any other benefice, shall, when such absence shall exceed three and not exceeding six, months, forfeit one-third of the value of the benefice (deducting therefrom all outgoings, except the curate's stipend); if the absence exceed six and not eight months, one-half: if it exceed eight months, two-thirds; and if it be for the whole year, three-fourths; to be recovered in any court of record, with costs, and the whole to go to the informer; but no parsonage that hath a vicar endowed shall be deemed a benefice. s. 12.

And the court in which any action shall be depending may require the diocesan to certify the reputed annual value of benefices. s. 13.

No person having resided a year without absence for more than three months shall be commenced before he has so resided. s. 14.

Persons exempted by the acts mentioned in s. 12, the chaplain of the house of commons, the clerk of his majesty's closet and deputy, the chaplains of the army, navy, artillery, garrisons, and dock-yard, British factories, or household of ambassadors, spiritual persons belonging to ecclesiastical courts, or cathedral or collegiate churches or chapels royal, or the military or naval hospitals or asylums, the readers in the inns of court, tutors or chaplains in the universities, or Eaton or Winchester college, or Westminster school, shall be exempted. s. 15.

No penalty shall be levied personally, where it can be recovered by sequestration of the benefice in three years. s. 17.

Bishops in England may grant licences for non-residence, on oath before a surrogate, of actual necessity, in the following cases, viz. in case of actual illness or infirmity in himself—the want of a suitable place of residence in the same parish—having a small benefice, and serving as a curate elsewhere—any master or usher of any endowed school—masters or preachers of hospitals, or incorporated charitable foundation—persons holding any endowed lectureship, chapelry, or preachership—librarians of the British Museum—for which licence, a fee of 10*s.*, inclusive of the stamps, may be taken, and persons aggrieved by refusal of licences may appeal to the archbishop, the party appealing giving security for the expences thereof. s. 19.

In cases not enumerated bishops may grant licences, and assign salaries to curates employed; but the reasons for granting them shall be transmitted to the archbishop for examination and allowance. s. 20.

Licences shall not be void by the death or removal of the grantor, unless revoked by the successor. Ibid.

Archbishops, in their respective dioceses, may grant licences. Ibid.

Fees may be ordered to be paid by appellants, and the costs may be recovered by sequestration. Ibid.

Licences may be revoked, and none are to be in force for more than two years. s. 21.

Copies of licences or revocations shall be filed in the registry of the diocese, and a list kept for inspection; and copies of licences or revocations shall be transmitted to the churchwardens, and publicly read at the first visitation. s. 22.

A list of licences confirmed by the archbishop, or granted in his own diocese, shall be annually transmitted to his majesty in council, who may revoke the same; but between the grant and revocation of a licence it shall be deemed valid. s. 23, 24.

On or before March 25, annually, a return shall be made to his majesty in council of every benefice, and of the person who shall not have resided, and every non-resident by exemption, without licence, shall, within six weeks after Jan. 1, yearly, notify the nature of it to the diocesan; a duplicate whereof may be delivered to the registrar to be filed, and his certificate shall be evidence of its being made. s. 25.

Persons neglecting to make notifications shall not be entitled to exemption. s. 26.

Licences may be pleaded in bar of actions, and in case of nonsuit the defendant shall have costs. s. 27.

Licences may be granted while a see is vacant, or the prelate absented, by those who exercise his functions. s. 28.

The act shall not prevent ecclesiastical censures for non-residence without licence; but no censure for non-residence, not exceeding three months in one year, shall be put in force, nor any proceedings to be admitted, except at the suit of the bishop or archdeacon. s. 29.

If any unlicensed person does not sufficiently reside, the bishop may issue a monition to reside: returns shall be made to monitions, and, if required, upon oath: where returns shall not be made, or not be satisfactory, the bishop may order residence, and if disobeyed, may sequester the profits of the benefice, and direct the application thereof; but an appeal against sequestrations may be made to the archbishop, the appellant giving security for the expences thereof. s. 30.

Persons who shall return to residence on monition shall pay the costs. s. 31.

If any person returning to residence on monition, shall, before six months thereafter, absent himself, the bishop may, without motion, sequester the profits of the benefice. s. 32.

If a clerk shall continue under sequestration three years, or incur three years sequestration within that period, the benefice shall be void. s. 33.

Contracts for letting houses in which any spiritual persons shall, by order of the bishop, be required to reside, shall be void; and persons holding possession after the time appointed, shall be subject to a penalty of 40*s.* per day, and no spiritual person shall be liable to any penalty for non-residence while the tenant shall continue to occupy. s. 34, 35.

If any action be brought for non-residence before issuing a monition, a sum sufficient to satisfy the penalty and costs shall be retained out of the profits of the benefice; but if at the time of filling any monition no action shall have been commenced, none shall be afterwards brought. s. 36.

No oath relating to residence shall be required of any vicar. s. 37.

The act extends to all dignities, prebends, benefices, curacies, and chapelries. s. 38.

Archbishop, bishop, and archdeacon, within whose respective province, diocese, or jurisdiction, any benefice exempt shall be locally situate, shall have the same powers as if such benefice were not exempt; and when any such benefice shall be situate in more than one province, or between the limits of two, the archbishop or bishop to whose cathedral the parish church shall be nearest, shall have the like powers: and all peculiars shall be subject to the archbishop or bishop to whom they belong. s. 39.

The act shall not affect his majesty's prerogative in granting dispensations, nor clerks retained in his service under 9 Ed. 2. c. 8. s. 40.

No archbishop or bishop shall be liable to the penalties of non-residence. s. 41.

NON RESIDENTIA PRO CLERICIS REGIS, was a writ directed to the bishop, charging him not to molest a clerk employed in the king's service, by reason of his non-residence; in which case he is to be discharged. Reg. Orig. 58.

NON SANE MEMORY, (non sanæ memoriæ.) See Ideots and Lunatics. Non compos Mentis.

NONSENSE. Where a matter set forth is grammatically right, but absurd in the sense and unintelligible, some words cannot be rejected to make sense of the rest, but must be taken as they are. 1 Salk. 324. See Mistake.

NON SOLVENDO PECUNIAM, AD QUAM CLERICUS MULCTATUR PRO NON RESIDENTIA, a writ prohibiting an ordinary to take a pecuniary mulct, imposed upon a clerk of the king's for non-residence. Reg. of Writs, fol. 59.

NON-SUIT, (non est prosecutus, &c.) is a renunciation of the suit by the plaintiff or demandant. Cowel.

Thus where plaintiff is demanded and doth not appear, he is said to be non-suit; this usually happens, where upon trial, and when the jury are ready to give their verdict, the plaintiff discovers some error or defect in the proceedings, or is unable to prove a material point, &c. and thereupon the plaintiff may be demanded, (as he must be) his default is recorded, and the entry is in misericordia quia non prosecutus est breve suum; upon which defendant recovers his costs against him; but this arising from some supposed neglect or oversight, the plaintiff, except in some particular cases, is not barred from commencing a new action upon paying the costs. Cro. Jac. 213. 2 Leon. 177. 4 Mod. 86. 2 Salk. 456.

But a non-suit is no peremptory bar; but the plaintiff may, notwithstanding, commence any new action of the same or like nature, upon paying the costs of the first action. Ibid.

NON SUM INFORMATUS, is a formal answer made of course by an attorney, who is not instructed or informed to say any thing material in defence of his client; by which he is deemed to leave it undefended, and so judgment passeth against his client.

NON-TENURE, is a plea in bar to a real action, by saying, that he (the defendant) holdeth not the land mentioned in the plaintiff's count or declaration, or at least some part thereof. 25 Ed. 3. c. 16. 1 Mod. Rep. 250.

NON-TERM, (non terminus) is the vacation between term and term; formerly called the time or days of the king's peace. Lamb. Archa. 126.

NON-USER, of offices concerning the public, is cause of forfeiture. 9 Rep. 50. And if one have a franchise, and do not use it, he shall forfeit the same; which likewise may be lost by default, as well as non-user. Stat. 3 Ed. 2 c. 9. See Office.

NOOK OF LAND, (nocata terræ) about twelve acres and a half of land; but the quantity is generally uncertain.

NORROY quasi NORTH ROY, the Northern king at arms, mentioned in 14 Car. 2. c. 33. See Herald.

NORTHERN BORDERS. See Felony.

NORTH WALES. See Wales.

NOSE, slitting or cutting it off. See Felony.

NOTARY, (notarius) is a person (usually a scrivener) who takes notes, or makes a short draught of contracts, obligations, or other writings and instruments. Stat. 27 Ed. 3. c. 1. But now a public notary, is he who publicly attests deeds or writings, to make them authentic in another country; but principally in business relating to merchants: they make protests of foreign bills of exchange, &c. And noting a bill is the notary's going as witness, to take notice of a merchant's refusal to accept or pay the same. Merch. Dict.

By 41 Geo. 3. u. k. c. 79. no person in England shall act as a public notary unless duly admitted. s. 1.

No person shall be admitted a notary unless he shall have served as an apprentice to a notary or scrivener for seven years; and if bound after August 1, 1801, unless affidavit of the execution of the contract be made and filed in the proper court; and such affidavit shall be produced on the admission of the party bound as a notary, and the master of the faculties office shall be the place for taking and filling the same. s. 2—5.

The officer filing such affidavits shall enter the substance in a book, and take as a fee 5*s.* which book may be searched for 1*s.* s. 6.

No public notary shall have any apprentice but while he shall actually practise; and the apprentice shall be actually employed seven years in the business. s. 6, 7.

If any master shall die or leave off practice, or any apprentice shall be legally discharged, the apprentice may serve the residue of the seven years with another master, and an affidavit of such second contract shall be filed. s. 8.

Before admission, apprentices shall file affidavits that they have really served seven years. s. 9.

If any notary shall act or permit his name to be used for the profit of any person not entitled to act as a notary, he shall be struck off the roll on a summary application to the court of faculties. s. 10.

Persons acting as notaries for reward, without being admitted, shall forfeit 50*l.* s. 11.

Persons applying for a faculty to become notaries within the jurisdiction of the company of scriveners in London, shall previously take their freedom of the company. s. 12.

The act shall not extend to proctors, secretaries to bishops, or persons acting under government, except proctors being also notaries. s. 14.

The penalties may be recovered at Westminster by the party suing, with full costs. s. 16.

NOTE OF A FINE, is a brief of the fine made by the chirographer, before it is ingrossed. West. Symb. par. 2.

NOTES PROMISSORY. See Bill of Exchange.

NOT GUILTY, is the general issue or plea of the defendant in any action for a tort, wrong or injury, such as trespass, and the like; but not on a promise: the proper plea in which is non assumpsit. Palm. 393.

NOTICE, is the making something known that a man was or might be ignorant of before: and the party who gives the same shall have the benefit thereof. Co. Lit. 309.

Notice is required to be given in many cases by law, to justify proceedings where any thing is to be done or demanded, &c. But none is bound by law to give notice to another person of that which such other may otherwise inform himself, or ought to take notice, except such notice is directed by act of parliament.

A notice may not be pleaded upon issue joined; and in all writs of inquiry of damages, as well in real as personal actions, notice of trial and execution of such writs must be given to the other party to the suit. And want of notice is cause to set aside the judgment.

A month's notice is also to be given to a justice of the peace, before commencement of an action against him for any thing done in the execution of his office. 24 Geo. 2, c. 44.

NOVALE, signifies land newly ploughed or converted into tillage, that without memory of man had not been tilled; and sometimes it is taken for ground which hath been ploughed for two years, and afterwards lies fallow for one year, or that which lies fallow every other year; it is called novale, because the earth novâ culturâ proscinditur. Cowel. Blount.

NOVA OBLATA, mentioned in Claus. 12 Ed. 1, m. 7. See Oblatæ.

NOVEL ASSIGNMENT, (nova assignatio) is an assignment of time, place, or such like, in action of trespass, otherwise than as it was before assigned; or where it is more particularly in a declaration than in a writ, &c. (Bro. Tres. 122.) And if the defendant justifies in a place where no trespass was done, then the plaintiff is to assign the close where, to which the defendant is to plead, &c. Terms de Ley. See New Assignment.

NOVEL DISSEISIN (nova disseisina). See Assize of Novel Disseisin.

NOVELLÆ, those constitutions of the civil law which were made after the publication of the Theodosian code, were called novellæ by the emperors who ordained them, but some writers call the Julian edition only by that name. Blount. 1 Black. 81.

NUCES COLLIGERE, to gather hazel nuts, which was formerly one of the works or services imposed by lords upon their inferior tenants. Paroch. Antiq. 495.

NUDE CONTRACT, (nudum pactum) is a bare naked contract without a consideration. And where there is a want of consideration no action will lie for ex nudo.

NUDE MATTER, naked matter, a bare allegation of a thing done, &c. Cowel.

NUDUM PACTUM. A consideration of some sort or other is so absolutely necessary to the forming of a contract, that a nudum pactum, or agreement to do or pay any thing on one side, without any compensation on the other, is totally void in law; and a man cannot be compelled to perform it. 2 Black. 445.

NUL DISSEISIN, plea of, is a plea in real actions, of no disseisin, and is one species of the general issue. 3 Black. 305.

NUL TIEL RECORD, is the plea of a plaintiff, that there is no such record, on the defendant's alleging matter of record, such as a judgment recovered, in bar of the plaintiff's action.

NUL TORT, plea of, a plea in a real action, i. e. of no wrong done, and is a species of the general issue. 3 Black. 305.

NULLUM ARBITRIUM, the usual plea of the defendant prosecuted on an arbitration bond, for not abiding by an award.

NULLITY, is where a thing is null and void, or of no force. Litt. Dict.

NUMERUM. Civitas Cant. Reddit. 24 l. ad numerum, i. e. by number or tale, as we call it. Domesday. Cowel.

NUMMATA, signifies the price of any thing, generally by money, as denariata doth the price of a thing, by computation of pence, and librata by computation of pounds. Cowel. Blount.

NUMMATA, TERRÆ, is the same with denariatus terræ, and thought to contain an acre. Cowel. Blount.

NUMMUS, a piece of money or coin among the Romans. Ibid.

NUN, (nunna) a consecrated virgin or woman, who by vow hath bound herself to a single and chaste life, in some place, or company of other women, separated from the world, and devoted to the service of God by prayer and fasting, and such like holy exercises. Ibid.

NUNCIUS, a nuncio, or messenger, servant, &c. And the pope's nuncio was legatus pontificis. Ibid.

NUNCUPATIVE WILL, (testamentum nuncupatum) is a will by word of mouth: It is a verbal declaration of the testator's mind before a sufficient number of witnesses, which being reduced into writing either before or after the death of the testator, is good to dispose of his personal estate, but not his lands. (2 Nels. Abr. 1191.) Before the 29 Car. 2, c. 3, it was necessary, not only to put a nuncupative will in writing, but to prove it likewise by witnesses in the spiritual court, and to have it under the seal of the ordinary, until which it hath been decreed in equity that such will was not pleadable against an administrator. 1 Chan. Rep. 122.

The statute of frauds, 29 Car. 2, c. 3, hath laid them under many restrictions, except when made by mariners at sea, and soldiers in actual service. As to all other persons it enacts, 1. That no written will shall be revoked or altered by a subsequent nuncupative one, except the same be in the life-time of the testator reduced to writing, and read over to him, and approved; and unless the same be proved to have been so done by the oaths of three witnesses at least, who by statute 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16, must be such as are admissible upon trials at common law. 2. That no nuncupative will shall in any wise be good where the estate bequeathed exceeds 30*l.* unless proved by three such witnesses present at the making thereof, (the Roman law requiring seven, Inst. 2. 10. 4,) and unless they or some of them were specially required to bear witness thereto by the testator himself; and unless it was made in his last sickness, in his own habitation or dwelling-house, or where he had been previously resident ten days at the least, except he be surprised with sickness on a journey, or from home, and dies without returning to his dwelling. 3. That no nuncupative will shall be proved by the witnesses after six months from the making, unless it were put in writing within six days. Nor shall it be proved till fourteen days after the death of the testator, nor till process hath first issued to call in the widow, or next of kin, to contest it, if they think proper. Thus hath the legislature provided against any frauds in setting up nuncupative wills, by so numerous a train of requisites, that the thing itself has fallen into disuse; and is hardly ever heard of, but in the only instance where favour ought to be shown to it, when the testator is surprised by sudden and violent sickness. The testamentary words must be spoken with an intent to bequeath, not any loose idle discourse in his illness; for he must require the bystanders to bear witness of such his intention: the will must be made at home, or among his family or friends, unless by unavoidable accident, to prevent impositions from strangers: it must be in his last sickness, for if he recovers he may alter his dispositions, and have time to make a written will: it must not be proved at too long a distance from the testator's death, lest the words should escape the memory of the witnesses; nor yet too hastily, and without notice, lest the family of the testator should be put to inconvenience, or surprised. 2 Black. 500.

NUPER OBIIT, is a writ that lies for a sister or co-heir, deforced by her coparcener of land or tenements, whereof their father, brother, or any other common ancestor, died seised of an estate in fee-simple; for if one sister deforce another of land held in fee-tail, her sister and co-heir shall have a formedon against her, &c. and not a nuper obiit; and where the ancestor being once seised, died not seised of the possession, but the reversion, in such a case a writ of rationabili parte lies. Reg. Orig. 226. F. N. B. 197. Terms de Ley.

NURTURE, GUARDIAN FOR. There are guardians to infants, for nurture, which are, of course, the father or mother, till the infant attains the age of 14 years; and in default of father or mother the ordinary usually assigns some proper person. Co. Lit. 88. Moor 738. 3 Rep. 38. 2 Jones 90. 2 Lev. 163. 1 Black. 461.

NUSANCE, (nocumentum, from the Fr. nuire, i. e. nocere) Common nusances are of a species of offences against the public order and economical regimen of the state; being either the doing of a thing to the annoyance of all the king's subjects, or the neglecting to do a thing which the common good requires (1 Hawk. P. C. 197.) Common nusances are such inconvenient or troublesome offences, as annoy the whole community in general, and not merely some particular person; and therefore are indictable only, and not actionable; as it would be unreasonable to multiply suits, by giving every man a separate right of action, for what damnifies him in common only with the rest of his fellow subjects. Of this nature are, 1. Annoyances in highways, bridges, and public rivers, by rendering the same inconvenient or dangerous to pass: either positively, by actual obstructions; or negatively, by want of reparations. For both of these, the person so obstructing, or such individuals as are bound to repair and cleanse them, or (in default of these last) the parish at large, may be indicted, distreined to repair and amend them, and in some cases fined. And a presentment thereof made by a judge of assise, &c. or a justice of the peace, shall be in all respects equivalent to an indictment (stat. 7 Geo. 3. c. 42.) Where there is an house erected, or an inclosure made, upon any part of the king's demesnes, or of an highway, or common street, or public water, or such like public things, it is properly called a purpresture (Co. Litt. 277.) 2. All those kinds of nusances, (such as offensive trades and manufactures,) which when injurious to a private man are actionable, are, when detrimental to the public, punishable by public prosecution, and subject to fine according to the quantity of the misdemeanor: and particularly the keeping of hogs in any city or market town is indictable as a public nusance (Salk. 460.) 3. All disorderly inns or ale-houses, bawdy-houses, gaming-houses, stage-plays unlicensed, booths and stages for rope-dancers, mountebanks, and the like, are public nusances, and may upon indictment be suppressed and fined (1 Hawk. P. C. 198, 225.)* Inns, in particular, being intended for the lodging and receipt of travellers, may be indicted, suppressed, and the inn-keepers fined, if they refuse to entertain a traveller without a very sufficient cause: for thus to frustrate the end of their institution is held to be disorderly behaviour (1 Hawk. P. C. 225.) Thus too the hospitable laws of Norway punish, in the severest degree, such inn-keepers as refuse to furnish accommodations at a just and reasonable price (Stiernh. de jure Sueon. l. 2. c. 9.) 4. By statute 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 17. all lotteries are declared to be public nusances, and all grants, patents, or licences for the same to be contrary to law. But, as state-lotteries have, for many years past, been found a ready mode for raising the supply, an act was made, 19 Geo. 3. c. 21. to licence and regulate the keepers of such lottery-offices.† 5. The making and selling of fire-works and squibs, or throwing them about in any street, is, on account of the danger that may ensue to any thatched or timber buildings, declared to be a common nusance, by statute 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 7. and therefore is punishable by fine.‡ And to this head we may refer (though not declared a common nusance) the making, keeping, or carriage, of too large a quantity of gunpowder at one time, or in one place or vehicle; which is prohibited by statute 12 Geo. 3. c. 61. under heavy penalties and forfeiture. 6. Eaves-droppers, or such as listen under walls and windows or the eaves of a house, to hearken after discourse, and thereupon to frame slanderous and mischievous tales, are a common nusance and presentable at the court-leet (Kitch. of courts 20.): or are indictable at the sessions, and punishable by fine and finding sureties for their good behaviour (Ib. 1 Hawk. P. C. 132.) 7. Lastly, a common scold, communis rixatrix, (for our law-Latin confines it to the feminine gender) is a public nusance to her neighbourhood. For which offence she may be indicted (6 Mod. 213.); and, if convicted, shall (1 Hawk. P. C. 198, 200.) be sentenced to be placed in a certain engine of correction called the trebucket, castigatory, or cucking stool, which in the Saxon language is said to signify the scolding stool; though now it is frequently corrupted into ducking stool, because the residue of the judgment is, that, when she is so placed therein, she shall be plunged in the water for her punishment (3 Inst. 219)

Private nusances may be defined, any thing done to the hurt or annoyance of the lands, tenements, or hereditaments of another (Finch. L. 188.)

First, such nusances as may affect a man's corporeal hereditaments, and then those that may damage such as are incorporeal.

1. If a man builds a house so close to mine that his roof overhangs my roof, and throws the water off his roof upon mine, this is a nusance, for which an action will lie. (F. N. B. 184.) Likewise to erect a house or other building so near to mine, that it stops up my antient lights and windows, is a nusance of a similar nature. (9 Rep. 58.) But in this latter case it is necessary that the windows be ancient, that is, have subsisted there time out of mind; otherwise there is no injury done. For he hath as much right to build a new edifice upon his ground as I have upon mine: since every man may do what he pleases upon the upright or perpendicular of his own soil; and it was my folly to build so near another's ground.

* How stage-players are to be licensed, see the 28 Geo. 3. c. 30. under Theatres.

† State lotteries are now regulated by acts which pass annually.

‡ And if any person shall make or sell any squibs, rockets, or fire-works, he shall forfeit upon conviction before a magistrate, 5*l.* one half to the informer, and the other half to the poor. And if any person shall throw or fire them in any house, street, or highway, he shall forfeit 20*s.* in like manner. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 7.

(Cro. Eliz. 118. Salk. 459.) Also, if a person keeps his hogs, or other noisome animals, so near the house of another that the stench of them incommodes him, and makes the air unwholesome, this is an injurious nuisance, as it tends to deprive him of the use and benefit of his house (9 Rep 58.) A like injury is, if one's neighbour sets up and exercises any offensive trade: as a tanner, tallow-chandler, or the like: for though these are lawful and necessary trades, yet they should be exercised in remote places; for the rule is, "sic utere tuo, ut alienum "non lædas:" this therefore is an actionable nuisance (Cro. Car. 510). Thus nuisances which affect a man's dwelling may be reduced to these three, 1. Over-hanging it; which is also a species of trespass, for cujus est solum ejus est usque ad cœlum. 2. Stopping ancient lights; and 3. Corrupting the air with noisome smells; for light and air are two indispensable requisites to every dwelling. But depriving one of a mere matter of pleasure, as of a fine prospect, by building a wall, or the like; this as it abridges nothing really convenient or necessary, is no injury to the sufferer, and is therefore not an actionable nusance. (9 Rep. 58.)

2. If one erects a smelting-house for lead so near the land of another, that the vapour and smoke kills his corn and grass, and damages his cattle therein, this is held to be a nusance. (1 Roll. Abr. 89.) And by consequence it follows, that if one does any other act, in itself lawful, which yet being done in that place necessarily tends to the damage of another's property, it is a nusance; for it is incumbent on him to find some other place to do that act, where it will be less offensive. So also, if my neighbour ought to scour a ditch, and does not, whereby my land is overflowed, this is an actionable nuisance (Hale on F. N. B. 427).

With regard to other corporeal hereditaments: it is a nusance to stop or divert water that uses to run to another's meadow or mill; (F. N. B. 184.) to corrupt or poison a water-course, by erecting a dye-house or a lime-pit for the use of trade, in the upper part of the stream; (9 Rep 59. 2 Roll. Abr. 141.) or in short to do any act therein, that in its consequences must necessarily tend to the prejudice of one's neighbour. So closely does the law of England enforce that excellent rule of gospel-morality, of "doing to others, as we would they should do unto ourselves."

3. If I have a way, annexed to my estate, across another's land, and he obstructs me in the use of it, either by totally stopping it, or putting logs across in or ploughing over it, it is a nusance: for in the first case I cannot enjoy my right at all, and in the latter I cannot enjoy it so commodiously as I ought. (F. N. B. 183. 2 Roll. Abr. 140.) Also, if I am entitled to hold a fair or market, and another person sets up a fair or market so near mine that it does me a prejudice, it is a nusance to the freehold which I have in my market or fair. (F. N. B. 184. 2 Roll. Abr. 140.) But in order to make this out to be a nusance it is necessary, 1. That my market or fair be the elder, otherwise the nusance lies at my own door. 2. That the market be erected within the third part of twenty miles from mine: for Sir Matthew Hale (Hale on F. N. B. 184,) construes the dieta, or reasonable day's journey, mentioned by Bracton (l. 3, c. 16), to be 20 miles; as indeed it is usually understood, not only in our own law (2 Inst. 367), but also in the civil law (Ff, 2. 11. 1.), from which we probably borrowed it. So that if the new market be not within seven miles of the old one it is no nusance; for it is held reasonable that every man should have a market within one third of a day's journey from his own home, that the day being divided into three parts he may spend one part in going, another in returning, and the third in transacting his necessary business there. If such market or fair be on the same day with mine, it is prima facie a nusance to mine, and there needs no proof of it, but the law will intend it to be so: but if it be on any other day, it may be a nusance; though whether it is so or not, cannot be intended or presumed, but I must make proof of it to the jury. If a ferry is erected on a river, so near another antient ferry as to draw away its custom, it is a nusance to the owner of the old one. For where there is a ferry by prescription, the owner is bound to keep it always in repair and readiness, for the ease of all the king's subjects; otherwise he may be grievously amerced (2 Roll. Abr. 140.): it would be therefore extremely hard if a new ferry were suffered to share his profits, which does not also share his burthen. But where the reason ceases the law also ceases with it; therefore it is no nusance to erect a mill so near mine, as to draw away the custom, unless the miller also intercepts the water. Neither is it a nusance to set up any trade, or a school, in neighbourhood or rivalship with another; for by such emulation the public are like to be gainers; and if the new mill or school occasion a damage to the old one it is damnum absque injuria. Hale on F. N. B. 184.

The remedy which the law has given for this injury of nusance is as follows: 1st, No action lies for a public or common nusance, but an indictment only: because the damage being common to all the king's subjects, no one can assign his particular proportion of it; or, if he could, it would be extremely hard, if every subject in the kingdom were allowed to harass the offender with separate actions. For this reason no person, natural or corporate, can have an action for a public nusance, or punish it, but only the king in his public capacity of supreme governor, and pater-familias of the kingdom (Vaugh. 341, 342.). Yet this rule admits of one exception, where a private person suffers some extraordinary damage beyond the rest of the king's subjects, by a public nusance, in which case he shall have a private satisfaction by action. As if, by means of a ditch dug across a public way, which is a common nusance, a man or his horse suffer any injury by falling therein, there, for this particular damage, which is not common to others, the party shall have his action (Co. Litt. 56. 5 Rep 73.) Also if a man hath abated or removed a nusance which offended him, in this case he is entitled to no action; for he had choice of two remedies; either without suit, by abating it himself, by his own mere act and authority; or by suit, in which he may both recover damages, and remove it by the aid of the law: but, having made his election of one remedy he is totally precluded from the other. 9 Rep. 55.

The remedies for private nuisances by suit are, 1. By action on the case for damages; in which the party injured shall only recover a satisfaction for the injury sustained, but cannot thereby remove the nusance. Indeed every continuance of a nusance is held to be a fresh one (2 Leon. pl. 129. Cro. Eliz. 402.); and therefore a fresh action will lie, and very exemplary damages will probably be given, if after one verdict against him the defendant has the hardiness to continue it. Yet the founders of the law of England did not rely upon probabilities merely in order to give relief to the injured. They have therefore provided two other actions, the assise of nusance, and the writ of quod permittat prosternere, which not only give the plaintiff satisfaction for his injury past, but also strike at the root and remove the cause itself, the nusance that occasioned the injury. These two actions however can only be brought by the tenant of the freehold, so that a lessee for years is confined to his action upon the case. 9 Rep. 55.

NYAS (Nidarius accipiter) a hawk, or bird of prey. Litt. Dict. See Game.

O

O is an adverb of exclamation, calling, or interjection of sorrow.

OATH, (Sax. Eoth, Lat. Juramentum) is an affirmation or denial of any thing before one or more persons who have authority to administer an oath, and is the calling of God, or the Almighty Creator, according to the faith of the party. 3 Inst. 165.

The oaths allowed by our law are, 1st, Oaths upon the book of the holy evangelists; 2dly, upon the Pentateuch, or Old Testament, by Jews; 3dly, oaths taken according to the rules of faith amongst those who do not profess the Christian religion; (see Infidels,) but the affirmation of a Quaker, being an affirmation only, and not an oath, is not received in criminal cases; but is only permitted in civil cases by stat. 7 & 8 Will. 3, c. 34. Nor can such affirmation be administered to them as jurors.

OATH is a solemn calling or appealing to Almighty God as a witness of the truth of what we affirm or deny, in the presence of those who are duly authorized to administer it to us; and it is called corporal, because in taking it the party is obliged to lay his hands on, and kiss the holy gospel. 3 Co. Inst. 165.

It seems to be a high contempt at the common law to refuse to take the oath of allegiance to the king, which all laymen above the age of twelve years are bound to take at the torn or court-leet. 1 Hawk. c. 24. s. 3. Co. Lit. 68.

For allegiance is the tie, or ligamen, which binds the subjects to the king, in return for that protection which the king affords the subjects, and it is founded in reason, and the nature of government. 1 Black. Com. 366.

And surely, saith Hawkins, nothing can be more unreasonable than to deny the king, whose government we are happy under, all proper assurances of our fidelity to him: for how can we expect to enjoy the privileges of subjects from one to whom we refuse to acknowledge ourselves subjects, or hope for protection from one, whom we provoke to esteem us as his enemies, or blame that government for treating us as malcontents, to which we give so just a cause to suspect our fidelity? If we consult the law of God, that will tell us, that the powers that be are ordained of God. If we will hear the voice of reason that will convince us, that not only the peace and safety of the community, but also our own preservation requires us to pay a dutiful obedience to those who govern us: and can we, adds the learned author, think it unlawful to engage ourselves to do what it is our duty to do? 1 Hawk. c. 24. s. 3.

But besides this express engagement, the law also holds that there is an implied, original and virtual allegiance, owing from every subject to his sovereign, antecedently to any express promise, and although the subject never swore any faith or allegiance in form. For as the king, by the very descent of the crown, is fully invested with all the rights, and bound to all the duties of sovereignty, before his coronation; so the subject is bound to his prince by an intrinsic allegiance, before the superinduction of those outward bonds of oath, homage and fealty, which were only instituted to remind the subject of this his previous duty, and for the better securing its performance. 1 Black. Com. 368, 369.

The formal profession therefore, or oath of subjection, is nothing more than a declaration in words of what was before implied in law. 1 Black. Com. 869.

For as sir Ed. Coke very justly observes, all subjects are equally bounden to their allegiance, as if they had taken the oath; because it is written by the finger of the law in their hearts, and the taking of the corporal oath is but an outward declaration of the same. 2 Inst. 121.

And sir William Blackstone adds, the sanction of an oath, it is true, in case of violation of duty, makes the guilt still more accumulated, by superadding perjury to treason: but it does not increase the civil obligation to loyalty; it only strengthens the social tie by uniting it with that of religion. 1 Black. Com. 369.

This oath of allegiance, or rather the allegiance itself, is held to be applicable not only to the political capacity of the king, or regal office, but to his natural person and blood royal: and the same principle of personal attachment, and affectionate loyalty, which induced our forefathers, would doubtless, if occasion required, induce their sons to hazard all that is dear to them, life, fortune, and family, in defence and support of their liege lord and sovereign. 1 Black. Com. 371.

The oath of allegiance, as administered for upwards of six hundred years, contained a promise, "to be true and faithful to the "king and his heirs, and truth and faith to "bear of life and limb and terrene honour, "and not to know or hear of any ill or damage intended him, without defending "him therefrom." Upon which sir Matthew Hale makes this remark, that it was short and plain, not entangled with long and intricate clauses or declarations, and yet is comprehensive of the whole duty from the subject to his sovereign. 1 Black. Com. 368.

But at the revolution, the terms of this oath being thought perhaps to favour too much the notion of non-resistance, the present form was introduced by the convention parliament, and finally settled in the first year of the reign of Geo. 1. 1 Black. Com. 368.

For by stat. 1 Geo. 1. c. 13. s. 2. it is enacted, that the form of the oath of allegiance shall be as follows:

"I A. B. do sincerely promise and swear, "that I will be faithful, and bear true allegiance to his majesty king George.—So "help me God."

This oath, it is observed by sir William Blackstone, is more general and indeterminate than the former; the subject only promising "that he will be faithful and bear "true allegiance to the king," without mentioning "his heirs," or specifying in the least wherein that allegiance consists. However the oath of abjuration, afterwards introduced in the reign of Will. 3, and finally altered and settled in the sixth year of his present majesty, very amply supplies the loose and general texture of the oath of allegiance. 1 Black. Com. 368.

It is also enacted, by the aforesaid statute of 1 Geo. 1. c. 13. s. 2, that the form of the oath of supremacy shall be as follows:

"I A. B. do swear that I do from my "heart abhor, detest and abjure as impious "and heretical, that damnable doctrine and "position, that princes excommunicated or "deprived by the pope, or any authority of "the see of Rome, may be deposed or murdered by their subjects, or any other "whatsoever; and I do declare, that no "foreign prince, person, prelate, state or "potentate, hath or ought to have any jurisdiction, power, superiority, pre-eminence, or authority, ecclesiastical or "spiritual, within this realm.—So help me "God."

And by 6 Geo. 3. c. 53. s. 1, the oath of abjuration shall be administered in the form hereinafter prescribed; (that is to say),

"I A. B. do truly and sincerely acknowledge, profess, testify, and declare, in my conscience, before God and the world, that our sovereign lord king George is lawful and rightful king of this realm, and all other his majesty's dominions and countries thereunto belonging. And I do solemnly and sincerely declare that I do believe in my conscience, that not any of the descendants of the person who pretended to be prince of Wales, during the life of the late king James the second, and, since his decease pretended to be, and took upon himself the style and title of king of England, by the name of James the third, or of Scotland, by the name of James the eighth, or the style and title of king of Great Britain, hath any right or title whatsoever to the crown of this realm, or any other the dominions thereunto belonging: and I do renounce, refuse, and abjure, any allegiance or obedience to any of them. And I do swear, that I will bear faith and true allegiance to his majesty king George, and him will defend to the utmost of my power against all traitorous conspiracies and attempts whatsoever, which shall be made against his person, crown, or dignity. And I will do my utmost endeavour to disclose and make known to his majesty, and his successors, all treasons and traitorous conspiracies which I shall know to be against him or any of them. And I do faithfully promise, to the utmost of my power, to support, maintain, and defend, the succession of the crown against the descendants of the said James, and against all other persons whatsoever, which succession, by an act, entitled, 'an act for the further limitation of the crown, and better securing the rights and liberties of the subject,' is, and stands limited to the princess Sophia, electress and duchess dowager of Hanover, and the heirs of her body being protestants. And all these things I do plainly and sincerely acknowledge and swear, according to these express words by me spoken, and according to the plain common sense and understanding of the same words, without any equivocation, mental evasion, or secret reservation whatsoever. And I do make this recognition, acknowledgment, abjuration, renunciation, and promise, heartily, willingly, and truly, upon the true faith of a christian.—So help me God."

Having stated the form of the respective oaths of allegiance, supremacy, and abjuration, it will be proper in the next place to consider—1st, the offence of refusing the oaths of allegiance and supremacy.—2dly, the offence of refusing the oath of abjuration.—3dly, how such oaths may be tendered to suspected persons, by two justices of peace.

First, As to the offence of refusing the oaths of allegiance and supremacy.] It is enacted by 1 Will. and Mar. st. 1. c. 8, that every person who shall neglect to take the oaths of allegiance and supremacy shall incur the penalties of former statutes. s. 3.

That is to say, by 5 Eliz. c. 1, commissioners may be appointed by the lord chancellor to tender the same to such persons as by their commissions they shall be authorised to tender the same unto. s. 7.

And if any person appointed by such commissioners to take the said oaths, shall refuse to take the same on tender thereof, he shall incur a præmunire. s. 8.

And all persons having authority to tender the said oaths shall, in forty days after such refusal, if the term be open, and if not, then on the first day of the term next after the said forty days, make certificate of the names, places and degrees of the persons refusing, into the King's Bench, upon pain of 100*l.* to the king: and the sheriff of the county wherein the said court shall sit, shall impannel a jury, who shall inquire of such refusals in such manner as if they had happened in the same county. s. 9.

May impannel a jury, who shall inquire.] But it hath been resolved that the trial must be by a jury of the county, wherein the oaths were refused; for the statute only authorizes an indictment by a jury of the county wherein the court sits. Dyer, 234. 1 Hawk. c. 19. s. 35.

Also by 7 Jac. 1. c. 6, it shall be lawful for any of the privy council, and every bishop in his diocese, to require any baron or baroness of the age of eighteen years, or above, to take the said oaths—and for any two justices of peace (one of whom shall be of the quorum) to require any person of the age of eighteen years, under the degree of a baron or baroness, to take the same:—

And if any person of or above the said age and degree shall be presented or convicted for not coming to church, or not receiving the communion, before the ordinary or other having lawful power to take such presentment, three of the privy council, whereof the lord chancellor, lord treasurer, lord privy seal, or principal secretary to be one, shall require such person to take the said oaths.

And if any other person of the said age, and under the said degree, shall be presented or convicted for not coming to church or receiving the sacrament, or if the minister, constable, and churchwardens, or any two of them, shall complain to any justice of peace, near adjoining to the place where any person complained of shall dwell, and the said justice shall find cause of suspicion, any justice shall require such person to take the oaths. s. 26.

Any justice shall require such person to take the oaths.] In the construction hereof it hath been resolved, that the justices may send their warrant to bring the bodies of such persons before them, but that they cannot authorize the constables to break open the doors to take them. 12 Co. Rep. 130, 131. 1 Hawk. c. 19. s. 40.

And if any person of the age of eighteen years shall refuse to take the oaths, being duly tendered, the persons authorized may commit the offender to the common gaol until the next assizes or quarter-sessions, where the oaths shall be again required; and if the party shall again refuse to take them, every person so refusing shall incur the penalty of præmunire, except women covert, who shall be only committed to prison till they do take the same. 7 Jac. 1. c. 6. s. 26.

May commit the offender.] In the construction hereof it hath been holden, that the persons authorized to tender the oaths, may commit the party refusing though he be a lord of parliament, for the power to commit extends to all persons whatsoever. 12 Co. Rep. 131.

And moreover, every person refusing to take the oaths as above, shall be disabled to execute any public place of judicature, or bear any other office (being no office of inheritance or ministerial function), within England, or to practise the law, or physic, or surgery, or the art of an apothecary, or any liberal science for gain, until he shall receive the oaths. 7 Jac. 1. c. 6. s. 27.

It is also enacted, by 1 Will. and Mar. s. 1. c. 8. that if any person shall refuse to take the said oaths, being tendered to them by persons lawfully authorized to tender the same, the persons tendering shall commit the persons refusing to the common gaol or house of correction for three months, unless such offender shall pay down to the person tendering, such sum, not exceeding 40*s.* as he shall require such offender to pay; which money shall be paid to the churchwardens or overseers for the relief of the poor of the parish where such offender did last inhabit;—and if at the end of three months the person so refusing shall again refuse to take the oaths when lawfully tendered, the person tendering shall commit the person refusing to the common gaol or house of correction for six months, unless such person pay down to the persons tendering, such sum, not exceeding 10*l.* nor under 5*l.* as they shall require for his second refusal, to be disposed in manner aforesaid; and unless such offender become bound with two sureties, with condition to be of good behaviour, and to appear at the next assize, or gaol delivery: at which assizes or gaol delivery the oaths shall be again tendered by the justices; and if the offender then refuse to take the same, he shall be incapable of any office civil or military, and shall be bound to good behaviour until he take the same; and in case such person shall refuse also to make the declaration against popery in 30 Car. 2. st. 2. c. 1, such person shall suffer all penalties as a popish recusant convict. s. 9.

And moreover, by 7 & 8 Will. 5. c. 27, every person who shall refuse to take the oaths when tendered by persons lawfully authorised, or who shall neglect to appear when summoned in order to have the oaths tendered, shall, until he take the oaths, be liable to the penalties inflicted upon popish recusants convict; and the persons tendering the oaths shall upon every such refusal or default of appearance, record the names and places of abode of the persons refusing or not appearing, with the time of such tender or default, and certify the record to the justices of assize of oyer and terminer, or gaol delivery, at their next session, who shall certify the same into the exchequer. s. 1.

But the penalties to be incurred by any persons as popish recusants convict by this act for not taking the oaths, may be pardoned by the king under the privy seal. s. 15.

And no person who shall refuse to take the oaths (which oaths and subscription, the sheriff or chief officer taking the poll at any election of members to serve in parliament, at the request of any one of the candidates, are required to administer) shall be admitted to give any vote for the election of any knight, citizen, burgess, or baron, to serve in parliament. s. 19.

Hawkins says, it seems to be the intention of the above statute of Will. & Mar. to give the government an election to proceed either in the mild method therein prescribed, or the more severe one appointed by former laws, according to the circumstances of the case, and quality of the offender. 1 Hawk. c. 24. s. 5.

Secondly, as to the offence of refusing the oath of abjuration, it is by 13 Will. 3. c. 6. (which first introduced that oath) enacted, that it shall be lawful for any person authorised to administer the oaths appointed by 1 Wil. & Mar. st. 1. c. 8, to tender the oath of abjuration to any person; and if any person to whom the oath shall be tendered, shall neglect to take the same, the person tendering the oath shall certify the refusal to the next quarter-sessions; and the refusal shall be recorded, and certified by the clerk of the peace into the Chancery or King's Bench. s. 13.

And it was further enacted by 6 Anne, c. 14, that it shall be lawful for any two justices of peace (one of whom shall be of the quorum) or any other persons appointed by the crown by order of privy council, or by commission under the great seal, to summon all such persons as they shall suspect to be dangerous or disaffected, and tender the oath of abjuration, and at the next quarter-sessions certify the names and places of abode of all persons refusing to take the oath, to be certified by the clerk of the peace into the King's Bench; and if the person certified shall not within the next term or sessions appear in the Chancery or King's Bench, and take the oath, and enter his so doing upon the certificate returned, he shall be adjudged a popish recusant convict, and undergo the penalties as such. s. 7.

Thirdly, how such oaths may be tendered to suspected persons by two justices.] By 1 Geo. 1. st. 2. c. 13, it shall be lawful for two justices of the peace, or any other person or persons who shall be by his majesty for that purpose specially appointed, by order in privy council, or by commission under the great seal, to administer and tender the oaths of allegiance, supremacy, and abjuration, to any person or persons whatsoever, whom they shall suspect to be dangerous or disaffected to his majesty or his government; and if any person to whom the said oaths shall be so tendered, shall neglect or refuse to take the same, such justices, or persons aforesaid, shall certify the refusal to the next quarter-sessions; and the said refusal shall be recorded amongst the rolls of that sessions, and shall be from thence certified by the clerk of the peace into the court of Chancery or King's Bench, there to be recorded in a roll there to be kept for that purpose only; and every person so neglecting or refusing to take the oaths, shall be adjudged from the time of his neglect or refusal, a popish recusant convict, and as such to forfeit and be proceeded against. s. 10.

And to the intent that no person may avoid taking the several oaths above-mentioned, upon any pretence whatsoever, it is further enacted, that it shall be lawful for two justices of peace, or any other persons specially appointed as aforesaid, by writing under their hands and seals, to summon any person to appear before them to take the said oaths; which summons shall be served upon such person, or left at his usual place of abode, with one of the family there; and if such person shall not appear according to such summons, then, upon proof upon oath of the serving of the said summons, such justices, or persons, are to certify the same to the next general quarter-sessions, there to be entered upon the rolls of the sessions; and if such person so summoned shall not appear and take the said oaths at the said general quarter-sessions, the names of the persons so certified being publicly read at the first meeting of the said sessions, such person shall be adjudged a popish recusant convict, and as such, to forfeit and be proceeded against as if he had actually refused to take the said oaths; and the same shall be from thence certified by the clerk of the peace into the court of Chancery or King's Bench, there to be recorded in a roll to be kept for that purpose only. s. 11.

But any persons who shall become popish recusants convict, and shall afterwards take the oaths, shall be discharged from such conviction. 1 Geo. 1. st. 2. c. 13, s. 26.

And it seems that the oaths ought to be read, or offered to be read to the party, otherwise he cannot be said to refuse them. Read. on the stat. tit Oath.

OATHS UNLAWFUL. See Seditious Societies.

OATHS VOLUNTARY. The law takes no notice of any perjury but such as is committed in some court of justice having power to administer an oath; or before some magistrate or proper officer, invested by statute with a similar authority in some proceedings relative to a civil suit, or a criminal prosecution, for it esteems all other oaths unnecessary at least, and therefore will not punish the breach of them, for which reason no magistrate or officer of any court is justifiable in taking a voluntary affidavit in any extra judicial matter, as is now too frequent in many trivial cases, since it is more than possible, as Blackstone, (4 Com. 137.) elegantly and feelingly observes, that by such idle oaths a man may frequently in foro conscientiæ incur the guilt, and at the same time evade the temporal penalties of perjury.

Professor Christian, in a note on this part of Blackstone's Commentaries, truly observes, that where an oath is required by an act of parliament, but not in a judicial proceeding, the breach of that oath does not seem to amount to perjury, unless the statute enacts, that such oath, when false, shall be perjury, or shall subject the offender to the penalties of perjury.

OATHS IN PARLIAMENT. The House of Peers, as the supreme court of judicature in this country, has a general authority to administer oaths.

But the House of Commons, not participating in the judicature of parliament, has no power to administer an oath, except in those particular instances, in which that power is granted to them by express acts of parliament, such as in the case of a controverted election.

OBEDIENTIA, in the canon law is used for an office, or the administration of it: whereupon the word obedientialis, in the provincial constitutions, is taken for officers under their superiors. Can. Law, c. 1.

OBIT, (Lat.) a funeral solemnity or office for the dead, commonly performed when the corpse lay in the church uninterred, 2 Cro. 51. Dyer 313. The anniversary of any person's death was called the obit. The tenure of obit or chantry lands is taken away and extinct, by 1 Ed. 6. c. 14. and 15 Car. 2. c. 9.

OBJURGATRICES, scolds or unquiet women, punished with the cucking-stool. Cowel. Blount.

OBLATA, gifts or offerings made to the king by any of his subjects. Ibid.

OBLATIONS, (oblationes.) Formerly there were several sorts of oblations, viz. ob-

Istiones altaris, which the priest had for saying mass; oblationes defunctorum, which were given by the last wills and testaments of persons dying to the church; oblationes mortuorum, or funerales, given at burials; oblationes pœnitentium, which were given by persons penitent; and oblationes pentecostales, &c. Ibid.

OBLIGATION, (obligatio) is a bond whereby a man binds himself and his heirs, executors, and administrators in a penalty, with a condition subjoined or under-written, for payment of money, performance of covenants, or the like. (Co. Lit. 172.) Obligations may also be by matter of record: as statutes and recognizances, to which there are sometimes added defeasances, like the condition of an obligation. 2 Shep. Abr. 475.

OBLIGOR, is he who enters into a bond or obligation, and obligee, the person to whom it is entered into.

OBOLATA TERRÆ, according to some accounts, half an acre of land; others half a perch. Spelm. Gloss. Cowel.

OBSTRUCTING PROCESS, is an offence against public justice. This is at all times an offence of a very high and presumptuous nature; but more particularly so, when it is an obstruction of an arrest upon criminal process. And it hath been holden, that the party opposing such arrest becomes thereby particeps criminis: that is, an accessory in felony, and a principal in high treason, (2 Hawk. P. C. 121). Formerly one of the greatest obstructions to public justice, both of the civil and criminal kind, was the multitude of pretended privileged places, where indigent persons assembled together to shelter themselves from justice, (especially in London and Southwark); under the pretext of their having been ancient palaces of the crown, or the like (such as White-Friers, and its environs; the Savoy; and the Mint in Southwark): all of which sanctuaries for iniquity are now demolished, and the opposing of any process therein is made highly penal, by the statutes 8 and 9 Will. 3. c. 27. 9 Geo. 1. c. 28. and 11 Geo. 1, c. 22. which enact, that persons opposing the execution of any process in such pretended privileged places within the bills of mortality, or abusing any officer in his endeavours to execute his duty therein, so that he receives bodily hurt, shall be guilty of felony, and transported for seven years: and persons in disguise, joining in or abetting any riot or tumult on such account, or opposing any process, or assaulting and abusing any officer executing, or for having executed the same, shall be felons without benefit of clergy.

OBVENTIONS, (obventiones) are offerings or tithes; oblations, obventions, and offerings are generally the same thing. Cowel. Blount.

OCCASIO, a tribute which the lord imposed on his vassals or tenants; propter occasiones bellorum vel aliarum necessitatum. Fleta, lib. 1. c. 24.

OCCASIONARI, charged or loaded with payments, or occasional penalties. Fleta, lib. 1. c. 24. par. 7.

OCCASIONES, assarts, i. e. harrowing or breaking clods. Lib. Niger Scac. par. 1. c. 13.

OCCUPANT, (occupans) is he who first gets possession of a thing. An island in the sea, precious stones on the sea shore, and treasure discovered in a ground that has no particular owner, by the law of nations belong to him who finds them, and gets the first occupation of them. 2 Black. 3, 8, 258, 400.

OCCUPATION, (occupatio.) Use or tenure; such as in the tenure or occupation of such a man. Also it is used for a trade or mystery.

OCCUPAVIT, a writ that lay for him who was ejected out of his freehold in time of war; as the writ novel disseisin for one disseised in time of peace. Hengham.

OCTAVE, the eighth day after feast inclusive. See Utas.

ODHAL RIGHT. Odh proprietas, and all totum. The odhal right in Norway and other northern countries. Mac Doual. Inst. par. 2. Here by the transposition of these northern syllables, allodh, will give us the true etymology of the allodium, or absolute property of the feudists. 2 Black. 45. n.

ODIO ET ATIA, a writ antiently called breve de bono, et malo, directed to the sheriff to enquire whether a man committed to prison upon suspicion of murder, were committed on just cause of suspicion, or only upon malice and ill will: and if upon inquisition found not guilty then there was another writ to the sheriff to bail him. Reg. Orig. 133. Bract. lib. 31. cap. 20. Stat. 3 Ed. 1. cap. 11. Now taken away by stat. 28 Ed. 3. cap. 9. S. P. C. 77. 2 Inst. 42. 9 Rep. 506. See Habeas Corpus.

OECONOMUS, an advocate or defender. Cowel. Blount.

OECONOMICUS, the executor of a last will and testament. Ibid.

OFFENCE, (delictum) an act committed against a law, or omitted where the law requires it, and punishable by it. West. Symb.

OFFERINGS, are reckoned among personal tithes, payable by custom to the parson or vicar of the parish, either occasionally, as at sacraments, marriages, christenings, churching of women, burials, &c. or at constant times, as at Easter, Christmas, &c. Cowel. Blount.

The four offering-days are Christmas, Easter, Whitsuntide, and the feast of the dedication of the parish-church. Gib. 739.

OFFERINGS OF THE KING. All offerings made at the holy altar by the king and queen, are distributed amongst the poor, by the dean of the chapel. There are twelve days in the year, called offering days, as to these offerings, viz. Christmas, Easter, Whitsunday, All Saints, New Year's day, Twelfth day, Candlemas, Annunciation, Ascension, Trinity Sunday, St. John Baptist, and Michaelmas day: all which are high festivals. Lex Constitution. 184.

OFFERTORIUM, a piece of silk, or fine linen, to receive and wrap up the offerings or occasional oblations in the church. Cowel. Blount.

OFFICE, (officium) signifies that function by virtue whereof a man hath some employment in the affairs of another, as of the king, or of another person. Cowel.
